Pocket Trott

Pocket Trott 1.0 4 of 1338

Chronological Location Table

Contents Pocket Tott ...

rocket fott	1
Chronological Location Table	4
CALM REPLY	21
Absolute Predestination No. 1	89
The Withdrawn Circular	94
The Withdrawn letter 1/3	100
WITHDRAWN LETTER 2/3	107
OBITUARY DEACON HUGH GURLEY	113
Absolute Predestination No. 2	117
Absolute Predestination No. 3	122
Absolute Predestination No. 4.	127
A CALL TO THE PASTORATE.
A Dissent From Brother Beebe's Views On A Final Judgment.
A Dissent From Brother Beebe's Views On A Final Judgment.	146
NUMBER 1.
THE LAYING ON OF HANDS
A LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF THE DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE	165
Antinomianism Examined and Its Relation to Arminianism Shown
Zechariah 1:8	175
THE BEASTS AND THEIR IMAGE.	181
THE BEING AND NATURE OF ANGELS.	186
THE BENEDICTION.	196
Brother Burritt's Letter Against Beebe	202
BROTHERLY LOVE AND UNITY	210
Corresponding Letter.	214
CALUMNY	215
CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE	217
CHRIST'S BEING MADE UNDER THE LAW &c.	223
COMMENTS ON LUKE 16:19-31.	232
Communion with God.	240
CONCERNING ELECTION & CALLING.	249
CONCERNING HOLINESS.	258
CONCERNING SIN.
CORRESPONDENCE	269
Correspondence	272
Depravity And Sin	276

ANSWER TO BROTHER CRAIG	282
DID CHRIST PURCHASE HEAVEN FOR HIS PEOPLE?	287
Strictures	29 €
DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE TWO HEADS	303
Duty Faith & Repentance.	307
REMARKS ON DANIEL 8-12	321
Narration of a Little Affair	330
ELDER OSBOURN: HIS CHARGE OF SABELLIANISM, &c	334
Elder Osbourn - His Charge of Sabellianism Number 2	346
ON THE SONSHIP OF CHRIST NO. 5	355
CIRCULAR LETTER CORRESPONDING ASSOCIATION HELD AT FRYINGPAN CHURCH	362
THE END OF THE WORLD.	367
ENQUIRIES CONCERNING THE SABBATH AND THE LORD'S DAY	374
COMMENTS ON BEEBE'S INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS VOL. 7	384
HAPPENINGS OF ELDER JOHN CLARK	386
DUDLEY'S LETTER ON JUSTIFICATION	390
MORE THOUGHTS ON JUSTIFICATION	391
Remarks on Ephesians 1:3.	400
ETERNAL JUSTIFICATION?	408
EXPERIMENTAL DARKNESS.	411
EXPLANATION OF THE TERMS: NATURAL & CARNAL.
EXPOSITION OF COL. 1:12.	417
THE FOUR CHARIOTS FROM BETWEEN TWO MOUNTAINS OF BRASS	423
MR. WALLER'S DISCOVERIES	429
MR. WALLER AGAIN	431
FURTHER NOTICE OF BROTHER PARKER'S THIRD DOSE
GNOSTICISM.
SON OF GOD & GODHEAD.
On the Sonship of Christ.
IOB - INTRODUCTION	473
IOB - LETTER I	475
IOB - LETTER II	480
IOB - LETTER III	486
IOB - LETTER IV
IOB - LETTER V	502
IOB - LETTER VI
IOB - LETTER VII	513

On the Sonship of Christ. (Concluded)	26 36 43 47 53
THE WORD WAS MADE FLESH	36 43 47 53 57
GOD'S GRACE	47 53 57
	53 57
GOSPEL ORDER5	57
THE GOSPEL MINISTRY5
THE GROUND OF CHRIST'S GLORY5	65
VIEWS ON II PET.3:12-13	0
APOSTOLIC DIRECTION FOR DEALING WITH HERETICS, AND ON HERESY IN GENERAL 5	71
AN INQUIRY #15	78
AN INQUIRY #25	80
NO.1, ON ISAIAH 20th	82
NO.2, ON ISAIAH 20th	87
REMARKS ON ISAIAH 51:15	95
REMARKS ON JAMES 5:14-15	00
Laborers Together With God	09
ANOTHER ARTICLE ON THE ON AND THREENESS GOD6	13
REMARKS ON EXODUS 10.16	15
CORRESPONDING CIRCULAR ELK RUN ASSOCIATION6	21
THE LAW	27
THE LIGHT OF GOSPEL SIMPLICITY6	31
THE LORD SHALL COMFORT ZION6	34
Corresponding Letter
THE LORD THY GOD WHICH TEACHETH THEE TO PROFIT6	40
Is Love the Bond of Union?	47
MATTHEW 24:27, CONSIDERED. 6	52
Missionary Priestcraft	60
Moreover the Law Entered	67
Mr. Giddings's essay on the modern mission system	71
MR. GIDDING'S ESSAY ON THE MODERN MISSION SYSTEM6	80
An examination of Matthew 2.23, "and he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets; He shall be called a Nazarene."
CIRCULAR ADDRESS OF THE DELAWARE OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST ASSOCIATION (TROTT) 183	93

"BELOVED BRETHREN- Your attention is called to the nature and use of means in religion, Relative to the nature and use of means, we do not wish to be understood as speaking of anything to be used concerning merit, but of those appointments which have been established for the accomplishment of the Divine Purposes, in the observance of which we are solely to rest on the Divine munificence for the blessing.

We are to view the means not as the fountain, but as golden pipes let down from Heaven, which convey to us the salutary waters of life. Nor are we insensible that the great and majestic Creator, who spake and all things sprang from nonexistence into being in obedience to his omnific fiat.-He who fills the immeasurable extension of space, with inexhaustible stores of light, and upholds from age to age the stupendous fabric of the Universe, could have accomplished all his purposes without means But we have reason to bless God that for the good of man, and the glory and exaltation of our Redeemer's great name, means have been appointed. He uses builders and watchmen, yet it is the Lord that builds the house and keeps the city. (Ps. cxxxii.) Paul may plant and Apollos 'water; but God giveth increase. Indeed the systems of Nature, Providence, and Grace are all carried on by means, nor can any person expect the approbation of his own conscience, the respect of friends, or the smiles, of approving Heaven while they are neglected. Some have argued that the Divine decree supersedes the necessity of means. But the means .have been as certainly appointed as the end, In nature, while the Earth remains there is a promise of seedtime and harvest, yet no one is so preposterous as to think on account of this appointment, that he is exempted from the duty of preparing for seed time by breaking up the fallowground or so much as dream of a plentiful harvest when the proper means have been neglected.......693

The period of human life is represented as being an appointed time, or stated period, vet where is the man that refuses the use of means in this case; is anyone ready to relinquish the use of food because his days are appointed? That our Divine Parent generally works by them and thereby displays his - glorious perfections fully illustrated in the sacred Scriptures. When the Israelites were bitten by the serpents in the wilderness, Moses was commanded to lift up a serpent of brass, and the people were to look to it and be healed; wonderful -as it may appear, those that obeyed were made whole." They were commanded to look that their faith and submission might be manifest, and only to look that it might be evident their cure was' not effected by natural means, but by the miraculous interposition of God, in the same manner, sensible sinners are commanded to look unto Christ who has been lifted up on the cross for the salvation of wounded sinners, 'with the assurance that they shall be healed of their wounds. Look unto me and be ye saved all ye ends of the earth, for I am God (saith the Lord by the Prophet Isaiah) and it is a very consolatory consider ration that vast numbers in every age since the Christian era, have found peace and salvation in the Cross of Christ, and in opposition to the frowns of tyrants-the punishment of crucifixion and the flaming faggots, the doctrine of the Cross has made

At the close of the Antediluvian period "when all flesh had corrupted his way on 'the Earth" and the Almighty had determined to sweep them away by a deluge, At this awful period the Lord appointed Noah to prepare an Ark. Although the profane world scoffed at the preacher of Righteousness, yet he attended to the means, and himself, his family, and of living creatures, two of every sort were saved, (Gen. 6, 7,8,9) 694

We have also a very striking view of Abraham's strict attention to God's command in offering up his son; and his approbation of the same. Observe also the obedience of Gideon arid his army to God's commands in the use of the appointed means; although at the first view trifling, especially to, those who look only at the outward appearance; consult Judges, 7, 8, and you will perceive the blessed and salutary .consequences.

Hence we find our blessed Lord, the Holy Spirit, and an, Angel, the means of God's appointment in sending Men to the ministry for instruction, (see Acts, chapters 8, 9 & 10.) In the overthrow of Jerico, the means were to encompass the walls seven days, blowing with trumpets of rams horns-s-in this', vay the city was was demolished; nothing could be better calculated to manifest that the efficacy was all from God and cause his Israel to confide in him for the blessings of time and eternity. He who engulfed the Egyptians in the Red Sea, slew by his angel 185,000 of the Assyrians in one night, and smote others with blindness, when they were sent to apprehend his Prophet, could have accomplished their downfall, independent of such means. So under the present 'dispensation, Chris.. tians are to encompass the fortress of Infidelity, blowing the Gospel trump is a means under God for demolishing the strongholds of Satan. We have reason to thank God that through these means the Empire of Satan has been depopulated to the confusion of the enemies of truth, the rejoicing of Saints and Angels, and the glory of God. The means and instruments under the Gospel are such as exalt the name of the adorable Sovereign. He has not commissioned the holy Angels, who stand near the ineffable glory of his throne....... 695

Furthermore, permit us to mention in behalf of the use of means, that our blessed Lord when on earth used them; by duly attending our Lords appointed means, the hideous deformity of the lukewarm disappears, the dark cloud withdraws, and the light of Heaven bursts upon the scene and illuminates the abodes of men with the splendor of immortality. Those who steadily adhere to their duty, unmindful of the scoff of the infidel or the cavils of the Libertine. Jareen couraged with the prospects of " an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Those that have suffered privations for the sake of the Gospel, have the promise of eternal life." Does our profession expose us to outward poverty? He promises in reversion his "unsearchable riches, even the tried gold of his kingdom." Those that are called to take up the cross, have the promise of an incorruptible crown. Those that are instant in season and out of season will be rewarded with an eternity of rest from all labor, What a glorious promise; "He that overcometh and keepeth my word unto the end, to him, will I give power over the nations; To him that overcometh I will give to sit down with, me on my throne," and I will give him the morning Star. Let us for a moment contemplate the last scene of one who has been faithful to his Lord's commands, and how dignified his triumph is, "I have fought a good fight: I have finished my course: I have kept the faith. Henceforth, there is laid up for 'me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge,

Pocket Trott	1.0	11 of 1338
shall give me at that day, and appearing."		(0.6
in the use of means, Math xx saying, all power is given to r all nations, baptizing them in Ghost, teaching them to obse	viii, 18, 19, 20. And Jesus me in Heaven and in earth. the name of the Father, arerve all things whatsoever,	• atmosphere is contaminated, darkness Issue forth to devouthe enemy is busily employed when .our Lord shall appear a are addressed with "come ye you from the foundation of the thirsty and you gave me drin	nd infidelity stalks abroad we the Sun withdraws her shinger. For while the harmless and in sowing tares. In the contact as judge of all, we learn the blessed of my Father, inhere world, for I was hungerek, I was a stranger and you	with a brazen front, the moral ning, and the beasts of and unsuspecting are asleep, assummation of human events, at all those on the right hand exit the kingdom prepared for and yo gave Inc n eat, I was that the caution the Lord gav	s In the observance[of e e Moses, is applicable to al	every duty, we must remember to time, manner, and ends, 8	kc.; otherwise it will but rec of Nadab and Abihu offerion 0, 1.;) and also Korah and	ng strange fire before the Lord his company; Numbers 16, not to use exertions to send t RESPONSE TO BROTHER CLARE	t sprinkling, and as all nation the Gospel as far as Provide K'S COMMUNICATION TOUCH	ons are mentioned, it is wrong ence opens the way 697 HING THE SUBJECT OF
*
	~_

1 CONCL TION	1.0	12 of 1338
		821
		829
,
MINUTES OF A CORRESPONDING 855
		xc864
		T) 1836917
		927
published in the city of New 'Covenant" with an appendix to prove that Hebrew 6.2, do under the law, which, by the of hands disputes, he makes	York, entitled "A summary of by the author. In appendix bes not refer to laying on of by, I should suppose no ju a digression of two or three	#2, in which the author labors hands under the gospel but dicious advocate for laying on
"that no nation or people can without access directly or ind testaments; The former bein Messiah; And the latter, the	lirectly, to the inspired bool g the record of promises ar	ks of the old and new
From this conclusion, he infe	rs to following:	927
	t in furnishing them with th nguages which they shall be
He refers to Ephesians 2.12, having no hope and without them with the gospel and its	God in this world was the re	esult of men's not furnishing

Pocket Trott nigh by the blood of Christ was scriptures, being furnished to	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	13 of 1338 Jospel, together with the 927
	ek copy of the scriptures, w	osition. There is no proof that which as we shall shortly show927
as an able, sound gospel prea containing a consistent summ platform as broad as the who	the scriptures to read, to hele connection, Paul ascribe nsider the respectable stand scher, and the general tenor ary of gospel truth and the le extension of the foreign r	ner being brought to receive es dare to receive the gospel ding this author has sustained of the pamphlet as slipping in thus edgewise, a
I commenced some remarks of West, last winter, but being to and decided to let the thing p	oo much occupied then to fi	•
But at the late Ketocton associargument advanced in favor of for the order of publishing the consistent, mostly outside out	of the mission scheme of thi e gospel, observe the Aposto	s amount; That if we contend
Christians to furnish to heather to it, as being quite equal to the referred to above, assuming the scriptures and the preaching of divine appointment; And the whether one Bible was printed	vine appointment; Or alike, as he appears to suppose, en with the scriptures, and that of preaching the gospel he position as granted that of the gospel, stood upon the erefore as we admitted that or written, or how printed	left subject to the device of the obligation devolving upon the importance of attending to them; and the speaker the circulating of the similar ground as to being t it was a thing indifferent
I have been led to think that the with preaching the gospel, was many persons who admitted that nothing must be said again.	s pretty general; and that the should be shoul	this is the reason why so
Hence I've considered it a ma by the revelation and by the F trouble your readers with som	Providence of God upon this
1st what the scriptures teach $% \left(1\right) =\left(1\right) \left(1\right) \left($	us upon this subject	929
If we look into the New Testar scriptures as the only correct of course shall not find fault we desire to know the truth shou be made the only test in ever But of how we are to procure others, the New Testament sa	standard in religious concer with any for insisting strongled ld search the scriptures dilig ything pertaining to that rel copies of the scriptures, or,	rns abundantly manifest. We y that all who have any gently, and that they should ligion which is from heaven.

And even if we examine the Old Testament, we shall find no law among all the writings of Moses prescribing in what way copies of the law are to be procured or making it a duty of any individuals, or any tribe, to furnish others or the nation at large with copies. There is a law requiring him, who should be set as king over Israel, to write out a copy of the law in a book that it should be with him, Deuteronomy 17.18, 19. There is another law requiring Israel generally, to lay up the words which Moses had spoken to them in their hearts, and in their souls, and to bind them for a sign upon their hands, and to teach them to their children, speaking of them when they set in their houses and when they walked by the way, and to write them upon them the posts of their doors, Deuteronomy 6 6, 9, and 11.18, 20, thus requiring them to be familiar with the law. And thus teaching typically, spiritual Israel to be alike familiar with the words of Zion's lawgiver; the church to talk of them, by the ministry, to let her children also among themselves, to bind them as signs upon her hands, and as frontlets between her eyes that in all her acts she may reflect Jesus, and show that she has a thus said the Lord for what she does; And also to write them upon the posts of her doors, that none may obtain admission to her communion, but upon a professed subjection to the laws of the Lord.......929

The answer to these inquiries is plain to those acquainted with the scriptures. And that answer shows that once a deficiency in the provision which Christ made for his gospels being received, or the utter futility of the conclusions which I have quoted from the pamphlet. Is it a scriptural fact that the blessed master considered access to the scriptures of no account to those who should be discipled to his religion? No, by no means. But he well knew that nothing but human learning, and human art and exertion were necessary for furnishing copies of the scriptures, they haven't been

The early disciples, relying on the Providence of God to prepare the way for the scriptures to be acceptable to all who should have need of them, went everywhere preaching the gospel; not diverting their attention from the peculiar work to which they had been called, to copy out the scriptures beforehand for those who should be disciples, or to form Bible societies; and not even delivering any directions to the churches planted, to attend to the business, of supplying the destitute with the scriptures.

But according to the position taken in the pamphlet to which I have referred, that the inspired record of miracles, is to the ordinary gospel minister, what the gift of miracles were to the apostles; and as the apostles did work miracles and not to station of the truth of their testimony, it may be supposed that there was not the same necessity for the people to whom they came, being furnished beforehand with the scriptures, as since the cessation of miracles; Especially, according to another position contained in

But do matters of fact agree with this theory, however plausible it may appear? I think not. In the first place, I think it very evident both from scripture and experience, that it is to the quickened soul not the unregenerate, that the scriptures chiefly recommend themselves as the light that shines in a dark place. And when quickened, and not till then, persons come to the scriptures, searching them with a sincere desire to know the truth therein revealed. And thus the master has told us that he that does truth comes to the light, but everyone that does evil hates the light neither comes to the light lest his deeds should be reproved, John 3.20, 21. In the second place God has said, Speaking of his saved ones, "You are my witnesses said the Lord," Isaiah 43.10, 11, and 44.8. And in reference to the unbelieving world, I think in accordance with this divine declaration from Isaiah, that the change which takes place in a person when brought from darkness to light, and his after walk, then consistent with the gospel has much more effect in shaking the consciousness of the unbelievers and in giving them a rational conviction of the truth of the religion of Jesus Christ, then seeing the miracles performed by the apostles had, over reading of the inspired record of miracles has. 933

Thirdly, was it, child of grace, the miraculous testimony given to the gospel report, or was it the gospel itself, coming to you, in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, that constrained you to receive its joyful report, and made you feel that it was the revelation of God? If these things are sold, and if they only whose hearts have been opened, by the power of God, to attend to the word spoken, are the ones who truly feel their need of the scriptures, and who profit by them, then we may insist that the example of the primitive disciples in going everywhere preaching the word, without forming Bible societies, or sending persons beforehand to translate the scriptures, may be safely followed by the ministers of Christ, at this, or any future day, when, or were ever, the Holy Ghost moves upon their hearts to go; and that they may go, resting assured that, that providential government, which has ever harmonized with the purposes of grace and prepared the way beforehand for his gospels going to and being received in any place, still slumbers not, and is unrestrained in its operations. They may go, therefore, when, and where, the scent of God, not doubting but that all things are ready, even to providing access to the

We see that this all-wise and ever-vigilant Providence has in every age, down to the present, provided a supply of scriptures at hand, to meet any of the wants of his church. When the Reformation by Luther, was about to rise, seeing that the copies of the scriptures then extent were confined principally to the monasteries and that the suddenness with which the Reformation was spread, would call for a rapid and greatly enlarged circulation of the scriptures, how was it to be accomplished? Was the poor afflicted Church of Christ, as she lay hidden in the valleys of Piedmont to provide for this emergency? No; The Providence of God was all sufficient to make the necessary provision. This Providence led to the invention of the art of printing about 60 or 70 years before the Reformation and additions of both the Hebrew scriptures and the Vulgate Bible were printed ready at hand. And from that. Translations of the scriptures, into different languages, were undertaken by individuals upon their own responsibility, until the translations into English became so numerous with their

I also think it will be found that the establishment of the British power in the east, notwithstanding the cold-blooded and gold-speculating cruelty by which they extended their conquest in that country, especially under the administration of Lord Hastings, is as much a preparatory step towards the spread of the gospel there as is the present exertions to give them the scriptures. And although there may be many more religious persons engaged in the one enterprise than any other, yet to me, the spirit and power by which the one enterprise is undertaken, appears as far and from the gospel of Christ as was the other. At any rate, I cannot see how the undertaking to translate and print the Bible in Hindu or Burmese, should of itself entitle those engaged in it to Christian fellowship, any more than the king of Egypt's having the scriptures translated into Greek entitled him to religious fellowship. Both Ptolemy and the mission and Bible societies, are of God made instrumental in accomplishing his gracious purposes concerning his church, whilst Ptolemy was left to fill up the measure of his iniquity, and those combinations are maturing into the image of the beast, and a Rainer forces preparatory to oppressing and persecuting the Church of Christ. In the meanwhile, about the great event of the nations of the east being given to the church as children, she has but to await God's appointed time, his Providence in rolling on his glorious purpose, and by and by when the 6th Angel shall pour out his vial of the wrath of God upon the great river of Euphrates, and the waters thereof shall be dried up (Revelation 16.12) then shall the gospel preachers, truly be sent of God, among those nations, who showed their clear unto them that salvation which alone is in Christ, and those nations shall be seen flocking into the standard of Jesus as doves to their windows Isaiah 6.8. Then also shall it be known that the council of God has accomplished this, whilst the wisdom of bin has been brought to naught.......935

It is thus I think manifest that neither the scriptures nor the Providence of God make it the duty of the church to attend to giving the Bible to the heathen. And though god is making use of these moneyed combinations called bible and mission societies, it is by

Pocket Trott 1.0 18 of 1338
that over-ruling Providence by which he causes the wrath of men to praise him; knocked by their subjection to the institutions of the gospel
About the argument used by the speaker in the Ketocton association referred to would just ask can it be that any person who has ever read with any attention to New Testament and noticed the divine authority by which the preaching of the distinction is instituted, and the precision, both by precept and example, with which the wlorder respecting the gospel ministry is delivered, could place the gospel institut a level with the mere human art of printing bibles? Or if they could do it in argument what kind of candor must they possess?	o the gospel nole ion on ment,
Please do pardon the length of this communication, for I have tried to be as briccould, and for the sake of brevity have left out many important ideas that might been properly taken in connection with this subject	t have
S. Trott Fairfax CH, Va, October 13, 1835	936
MINUTES OF A MEETING HELD WITH THE OCCOQUAN CHURCH, OCTOBER 29-30, 1836 (TROTT, CLARK)
REGULATION OF GOSPEL CHURCHES	949
RELATION OF GOSPEL CHURCHES AND MINISTERS	959
REMARKS ON ELDER WILLIAMS' LETTER & QUERIES	971
REMARKS ON GEN. 6:6.	980
REMARKS ON I JOHN 1:3.	985
REMARKS ON PHIL. 3:21	991
REMARKS RESPECTING THE SABBAHH, &c	997
REMARKS ON ROMANS 8:28.	1005
REPLY TO BRETHREN: SONSHIP & UNION	1011
REPLY TO BRETHREN: THE NEW BIRTH	1022
PART I	1022
REPLY TO BRETHREN: THE NEW BIRTH	1033
THE RESURRECTION	1043
Reply To Elder Goldsmith On The Resurrection.	1043
THE RESURRECTION. # 2	1054
THE SABBATH	1058
THE SABBATH.	1077
THE SARDIS CHURCH STATE - REV. 3:1-5	1085
PART I	1085
THE SARDIS CHURCH STATE - REV. 3:1-5	1093
PART II	1093
SAVED BY THE LORD
SCRIPTURE: THE ONLY CERTAIN RULE & FINAL AUTHORITY	1112
THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE OF JUSTIFICATION	1119

Pocket Trott	1.0	19 of 1338

A BRIEF VIEW OF THE SEVERAL ANTI-CHRISTIAN BEASTS DESCRIBED IN REV
A BRIEF VIEW OF THE SEVERAL ANTICHRISTIAN BEASTS SPOKEN OF IN REVE 13,17
CONCLUDED	1136
THE SEALING OF THE SPIRIT	1145
VIEWS ON THE SEED OF THE SERPENT.	1150
SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST	1158
THE SIN UNTO DEATH	1163
SOME GENERAL OBSERVATIONS FROM GAL. 3:3	1168
SOME OBJECTIONS ADDRESSED.	1173
SOME OBJECTIONS NOTICED.	1179
SOME THOUGHTS ON HEB. 11:40.	1189
SOME VIEWS REGARDING MANASSAH: KING OF JUDAH.	1194
Sovereign Grace and Good Works.	1199
MYTHOUGHTS ON JUSTIFICATION	1210
THOUGHTS ON PREDESTINATION.	1226
AN INQUIRY #1	1229
AN INQUIRY #2	1232
Union of Christ with the Church.	1234
UNITY OF THE BRETHREN.	1241
REMARKS ON THE PARABLE OF THE UNJUST STEWARD	1246
VALIDBAPTISM.	1250
VIEWS ON ELDER PARKER'S TWO-SEED SYSTEM	1259
VIEWS ON GEN. 3:22.	1275
VIEWS OF HEBREWS 8:11.	1285
VIEWS ON ISAIAH 2:4	1292
VIEWS ON I JOHN 3:15	1299
VIEWS ON JUSTIFICATION DEFENDED	1303
VIEWS ON MARK 8:22-26.	1308
VIEWS ON MATTHEW 12:43-45.	1314
VIEWS ON I PETER 4:17,18.	1319
WHAT ARE THE CONDITIONS OF SALVATION?

CALM REPLY

TO A

COMMUNICATION OF ELD. JOHN CLARK

WRITTEN ORIGINALLY FOR THE "Signs"

BUT PUBLISHED IN THE "PRIMITIVE BAPTIST,"

APRIL 30, 1853,

WITH THAT COMMUNICATION INSERTED. BY. S. TROTT

PREFACE

The communication herein replied to, was written with more moderation than anything I had seen from Elder C's pen for a long time, besides containing strong professions of sincerity and honesty. Hence when a copy of the Primitive containing it was furnished me, some months since, by the kindness of a brother, I thought should its statements remain not contradicted, some well meaning brethren on reading it, might, from the sincerity professed, conclude that I was the base heretic I am there represented to be. After much hesitancy, arising from an unwillingness to engage further in a publication of this kind, I therefore concluded to write this reply. But it was not simply with view of answering Elder C. that I came to this conclusion. Any person accustomed to discussion, knows how difficult it is for a person engaged in an exciting and excited discussion, so to be on his guard as not to use expressions, and even form sentences, that might be construed to convey ideas different from what he intended, or his general declarations would warrant. An uncandid opponent will be sure to catch at such slips, and make the most he can of them to our disadvantage. But even in a more calm discussion, in following the course of argument pursued, we do not always attend to giving all that explanation to our views, which would be requisite for their being clearly understood. It is no wonder then, that in a discussion so diversified, and of a subject so vast, as was that which we had through the Signs, some years back, I should at times have darkened counsel by words without knowledge. If Job with all his patience, was led by the false charges and misrepresentations of his three former friends, to utter expressions, which subjected him to the reproofs both of Elihu, and of his God; is it any wonder, when subjected to similar uncandor and uncharitableness, when every opportunity was seized to misrepresent my views, and to brand me with heresy, that, irritable and impatient as I am, I should in such cases, utter things which I ought not, and leave the important point of advocating and illustrating truth for the more selfish object of rebutting the attacks of those I had to deal with? Elder Clark has boasted somewhat of having passed through wars before. I have known something of contests before, and of being particularly blamed for them, but I have met with more uncandor and more malignancy in this, than in all I have before been engaged in. I then, probably, have, from all these circumstances, left some of my sentiments, and important ones, somewhat obscured and liable to be misunderstood.

Hence the important object had in view, in making this reply, has been to give as clear an illustration of what I do believe, on those important points, concerning which I have been charged with heresy, as I could, as well as to sustain them by Scripture testimony.

Elder C.'s communication, together with other of his letters in connexion, has given me the opportunity to notice most of the points which have been in dispute: though in replying to his communication according to its order, I have had to notice those points in rather a disjointed manner, and to intermingle other remarks with them, more than I could wish.

The publishing of this reply, as has been the writing of it, may be somewhat delayed by circumstances. And the publishing of it will be rather an expensive concern, as from the unpopularity attached to my name, among the Baptists, as well as from not having much opportunity to make sale of the work, I shall probably not be able to dispose of it to any great extent. But still with these discouragements, I feel it duty to have it published, that I may leave it with the churches and brethren who have stood with me, and extended fellowship to my preaching; that they may be able to refer to it as a vindication of themselves, from the charge of having sustained one who had preached among them unscriptural sentiments. If this falls into the hands of any of those who have been led to believe me as a mischievous person, and a propagator of heresies, I would ask, as the only favor at their hands, that they would candidly examine my views and test them by the Scriptures. If they, according to that standard, find them erroneous, let them reject them; and in doing so, they will be able to show from the Scriptures a good reason for doing so. But if they do not find the Scriptures condemning them, or declaring that which is at variance with them, I pray God that for their own peace, they may not any longer denounce or reject them. And may my brethren be careful to know for themselves that they are holding the truth.

S.TROTT Fairfax, C.H., VA., Feb. 25th, 1854

A CALM REPLY TO A COMMUNICATION OF ELD. JOHN CLARK.

Before coming to Elder Clark's communication, there are two or three passages, in his letter to the Editor of the Primitive, introductory to his communication, which I wish to notice. On page 113, of the Primitive for April 30th, 1853, he says:

"It is an eventful period, Old Arius has arisen from the dead, and we are fighting the battle of the 3d and 4th centuries again."

From the many gross misrepresentations amounting to a direct falsifying of my views, which have been apparent before and which I shall have to notice in this reply, I have been led to reflect on the subject, and not being willing to believe that a man, who has sustained the standing he has among the Baptists, could, in his senses, deliberately perpetrate such falsities, I have in charity concluded, that in some way, some one of his bumps has been injured, producing some disorders of his brain. In accordance with this idea, his hallucination has apparently, led him to think that he is an Athanasius of this age. Of course, in order to attain to the celebrity of his prototype, he must either find, or manufacture an Arius, to contend with this he thinks he has done out of me. He, in a communication published in the Primitive, some months previous to the one I am now replying to, quoted some arguments I had used, relative to the Sonship of Christ, to show that his Sonship could not consist in his existence as God, seeing that as a Son, his existence must be derivative, and posterior to that of his Father who begat him. These arguments he placed parallel with certain of Arius expressions, thus representing that I had applied those arguments as Arius was supposed to do his expressions – that is, to the original and essential being and person of the Son. Yet, Elder C. knew that I applied those arguments only to the Sonship of the Son, insisting at the same time, that in his essential existence, he was as truly and equally the unbegotten and self-existing God as was the Father; because he and the Father are one: while Arius is supposed to have held that the Son no otherwise existed, than as he was begotten of the Father. As, Elder C., you now have your Arius full in view, in your fancy, if you could only with the same dexterity make another Constantine, who, by his imperial edicts and sword, would enforce your decrees against me, what glorious fightings you would have. But I must object to engaging with you in anything like the Arian controversy, independently of any doctrinal views. If you claim to belong to a Church that is descendant from the Church in which that controversy was waged, viz: the national establishment of Constantine, we do not belong to the same Church; for I claim for the Church with which I am connected, a descent through the Waldenses, from the Churches of the Novatians, which separated from what was called the Catholic Church years before the Athanasian scar.

If it was otherwise – if I could acknowledge a descent from the Catholic Church, as established by Constantine, then I would admit the authority of the decrees of councils and edicts of Emperors, in establishing doctrine and order: as it is, I am not disposed to acknowledge such authority even of the Baptist Churches in doctrine, for they evidently have bowed too much to the decrees of councils, and the opinions of schoolmen. Nothing but the Scriptures will answer me, for authority in religion. I though those who claimed to be O.S.Baptists were with me in this, when we took our stand: but in this I have been greatly disappointed, with regard to many.

Again, on page 114, Elder C., though he names no one in this letter, yet he evidently refers to those named in the accompanying communication, says:

"I have preached and written against their doctrine concerning the Son of God, and charged that it is Arianism – and I here repeat it."

In the foregoing paragraph, he speaks of being in readiness to prove upon us the sentiments with which he charges us: yes, just as he proved me an Arian, in the specimen I gave of his manner of proving it, on a preceding page. In that way of proving things, I could prove from the Scriptures that there is no God; for it stands in Psalms, 14:1 and 53: 1, if you throw away the connexion, "There is no God."

But we will come to the charge which Elder Clark boasts of having made against us. I entreat Elder C., and any others who unite with him in these charges, to follow me in the inquiry as to the truth of this charge, with candor. As to what Arius actually believed, I know not; but in speaking of Arianism, I speak of it as described by those who wrote of it. Elder C., and others with him, generally, will, I presume, admit that Athanasians, and Tripersonalists, generally, hold that the Son no otherwise exists as God, than as he is the Son of God, or than as he was begotten of the Father; that in his Godhead, therefore, as well as a person in the Godhead he was begotten of the Father; whilst they hold that he is of the same substance coequal and coeternal with the Father.

They will, also, I think, admit that Arius occupied exactly the same starting ground with the other party, viz: that the Son no otherwise existed than as he was the Son of God, or begotten of the Father. But here they split in their conclusions from this common position. Arius drew the conclusion, that as the Son only existed in his Sonship, he, from the nature of that relation to the Father, and from the fact that his existence was a begotten existence, must necessarily be posterior in his individual existence to the Father who begat him, and hence was not coequal and coeternal with the Father. I must confess, if I had not the Scriptures for my guide, but had to take the same leading position which Athanasius and Arius both occupied in the forming an opinion of the being of the Son of God, that I must take Arius' side of the question, as being far more consistent than the other. But I, and those with me, do not occupy the same original position with them, at all: hence, I have offered to prove, if any of those accusers would meet me in arguments on the point, that they are far more assimilated to Arianism than we are: but they have never consented to meet me on that point. The position which we occupy, and the ground on which we stand, is, that what God has revealed of himself in the Scriptures, we are safe in receiving as truth; what He has not revealed, it is presumption in mortals, and would be in angels, to attempt to inquire into; that God has revealed himself as three, as the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and that these three are one; that they are so three, that there are points of distinction by which they are severally declared in the Scripture; and so one, that to us there is but one God. Hence, when either of the three is spoken of as God, we understand it to be that one God in all his fullness of attributes and glory. Hence our conclusion is, that if God exists absolutely independent of any one, or of any act by which he is brought into existence, then each of the three must alike so exist as God: and as we find it not declared in the Scriptures that God exists as three distinct persons, or that one of these persons was begotten of the other, and that the third is breathed into existence, we reject the whole, as fabulous. Again: we find the Son of God declared in the Scriptures, and all those characteristics, or attributes of Sonship, so ascribed to him, that we feel bound to believe that he is actually the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father. We further find this Son of God so identified with the Word, that we believe that the Son is the Word, in all his fullness of the Godhead. Hence, as we believe the Godhead cannot be changed from its absolutely independent selfexistence, so as truly to sustain the relation and characteristics of Sonship, we believe the Word has that in himself, and has had from the beginning, which enables him fully to sustain this relation of Sonship, and of being begotten of the Father, without diminishing, or changing the attributes of his essential Godhead, or ceasing to be the one God. In reference to what his characteristics of Sonship consist in, I shall have to speak more fully in another place. But I have more summed up, in as definite and clear words I can, my belief of God, as existing in Trinity, for I do believe in a Trinity, but not in tripersonality; and in the Son of God, as being in his person, truly, both God and the Son of God.

Now, Elder Clark, compare the sentiments I have here avowed as mine, with the Arian sentiments on this point, and see if you can find any similarity between them, taking each in its connexion. And if you will look back into the past volumes of the Signs, you will find that in substance, these have been my declared views concerning God, and concerning the Son of God, from the first of my writing on the subject. And I cannot help thinking you will have to acknowledge, if you have the candor to do it, that you have slandered, and willfully slandered me, and those with me, in preaching that we are Arians.

I now come to Elder Clark's communication. It is headed "For the Signs of the Times.

"To the Churches of the Saints, and to the faithful brethren in Christ:

"As my name will cease to appear among the List of Agents for the Signs of the Times, from the date of the publication of the communication in that paper, it becomes me, and I feel it to be my duty, to present to you my reason for such decision.

"The first No. of the 1st Vol. of the Signs was issued on the 28th of Nov. 1832; just two months after the meeting at Black Rock, and the proceedings of that meeting, including the Address and Declaration of Principles, (which latter is preceded by a selected article upon justification, in which the date of justification is maintained to be eternal, which, of course, includes that view of the subject upon the 'Scriptural sentiments,' set forth in the declaration of principles,) dated 28th Sept., are published in that No."

It would seem, from Elder C.'s first sentence, that the design of this communication was to assign to the readers of the Signs his reasons for no longer allowing his name to stand as Agent for that paper, and to assign to Bro. Beebe the pleasant task of publishing his denunciation of his paper. But why so large a portion of his communication was written, with so direct a reference to me, and to my former writings in an article of this kind, he must hereafter reveal, or we must be left to guess.

In the latter paragraph of the above extract, he has included in a parenthesis, a most barefaced piece of sophistry, by which he would impress on his readers the conclusion, as legitimate, that because Bro. Beebe, as Editor of the Signs, published in the same No. of his paper in which he published the O. S. Address, and his declaration of principles, a borrowed article on the subject of eternal justification, the views in that article must therefore be considered, to use his expressions, Included upon the Scriptural sentiments set forth in the declaration of principles; and that this sentiment was, therefore, one of the points for which the O. S. Baptists contended in their first separation. Yet, he knows that not a work upon that point is to be found in the O. S. Address, nor uttered by Bro. Beebe in the declaration of principles, which he appended to the Signs. Besides, he knows that so far as I am concerned in this piece of sophistry, that I shortly followed the publication of that article on justification, taken from the World, with a communication over the signature of A. Waldensis, containing objections to the sentiments of that article, and inviting T. J. K., the author of it, to a discussion of the subject. See Signs, Vol. 1st, No. 5.

Elder C. goes on, in his communication thus:

"I became a subscriber for the paper in the beginning, and have continued so to this time; and have now in possession, I think, a copy of every Vol. that has been published. I did not sign the Black Rock Address, about which so much as said in the New School Journals, simply because I was not present at the meeting, but I approved of it then in the main, and do still, with the platform of principles accompanying it."

As there is nothing in the above worthy of a reply, I will give another extract:

"The cognomen of Old School was given us, and adopted by us; and the party advocating Benevolent Institutions, &c., were called New School. These epithets, Old and New were understood by us to be applicable on the one hand to those who adhered to the doctrine and order of the ancient school of Christ, who were seeking for the old paths, and were found walking therein; whilst on the other hand, the term New School was considered appropriate to all those of the Arminian tribe who were advocating new doctrine and measure, which had their origin in the wisdom of men. That this was the ground we then occupied in our original stand against new schemes and devices in religion, will appear abundantly clear to every one who (tho' he was not familiar with our stand and proceedings at that date,) will but consult the record of those proceedings and the correspondence through the Signs, as the following example will show for the present. See Eld. Trott's letter on the 17th page, Vol. 1st, introducing Eld. Leland's letter in the close of the letter he says: 'In these things it will be seen by the letter, Father Leland is with us: that indeed of considering new schemes, improvements, he considers them defection and apostacy.

But the letter will speak for itself.' Now brethren, upon this ground I stood, and will stand."

The distinction here laid down by Elder C., between the Old and New School, is as we understood it at the first, and as we still understand it. Why, if he was so fully with us formerly, has he now left us and denounced us as heretics? Perhaps the solution of this query will be found in the fact that we have been found to have different views of the ancient school of Christ, and of the old paths. As the term old paths is quoted from Jeremiah, I have understood those old paths to be the paths pointed out in the law and the preceding prophets of the Lord. Certainly he did not mean the paths marked out by Jereboam, the son of Nebat, or by any of the false prophets.

So, in reference to the school of Christ, I believe the Scriptures to be the only standard according to which his disciples are taught. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them," is the rule by which to determine whether what is presented as doctrine, or practice, has been learned in the school of Christ, or not; whether they are old or new paths pointed out. Hence the decrees of the Council of Nice are esteemed, as also all that have emanated from men since, as too new for us. But it appears that Elder C., and those with him, place great confidence in the decrees of that Council, and the opinions of certain men as pointing out old paths. Hence things which are new to us, as originating in the wisdom of men, are esteemed old by them; and things which did not pass current with the Baptists fifty or a hundred years ago, are called new by them, however clearly taught by the Apostles. It was in the sense in which I now understand new paths, or new schemes, that I used the term in reference to Elder Leland's letter.

Elder Clark says, again:

"But, as still farther preliminary to what I have to say in this communication, I beg leave here to introduce an extract from a letter of Eld. Trott, on pages 174 and 5 of the 1st Vol. Signs, which not only clearly expresses my sentiments, but is fully expressive of my feelings in the present undertaking. (The extract is his) 'Indeed, I cannot conceive how a person can be brought experimentally to know and love the truth as it is in Jesus, and not so feel his heart bound to that truth, that the setting up of anything in opposition to it, would be like rending his own soul. There is in this truth as it is known and felt by the believers, every thing to enlist all the better feelings of the soul. The glory of the Three-one God is involved in it. The sovereignty, glory, wisdom, love and mercy of the Father: the love, faithfulness and power of the Son, and the efficacy and completion of his work; the sovereignty, faithfulness, and divine energies of the Holy Ghost, are all so contained in, and connected with the truth of the gospel, that there never has been a system of doctrine contrived by men, but what has struck directly at one or more of these divine attributes. Again the believer knows that the whole Godhead as is known as Father, Word and Holy Ghost, is necessary to secure the salvation of the sinner; hence as any of the divine attributes are left out, or thrown into the back ground by any system introduced, he must, feel that the foundation of his hope and comfort is struck at; and at the same time he knows that as such system is received and rested upon, so his fellow men are deceived into a confidence in that which will leave them to perish at last; and knowing all this, can the christian refrain from manifesting his abhorrence of such a system, and his opposition to it? That christian who can turn from such divine glory and excellency as is in the truth as it is in Jesus, or who can approbate or even wink at any attempt to deface it, and that, from the mean desire of thereby securing a little worldly case and worldly applause."

I have met with may rebuffs for my former publications in the Signs; have heard of brethren groaning over the Signs being filled with my long pieces, and been told of brethren who, when they saw my name appended to a communication, did not pretend to read it; together with a great many other things said, and hints thrown out, calculated to dampen all my ardor for writing, and which, if I had not felt some of that warm regard for what I believed to be the truth as revealed in the Scriptures, which I spoke of in the above quotation, which Elder C. was pleased to make from me, and an earnest desire to hold it forth in opposition to those false systems, which for so many ages had prevailed, would have driven me from the Signs sooner than they did. But from such opposition, I was at length led to think, that for the prosperity of the Signs, and therefore, to spare the feelings of the Editor, I ought to withdraw from its columns. Now, to find Elder

C. hunting up my old writings and making extracts from them, with such declarations of approval, is quite calculated to cheer my drooping spirits; and, were it not that my judgment suggests that I ought not to place too much confidence in approvals coming, I will say, in that way, I might be led to draw the comfortable conclusion, that after all I have had to suffer in mind on this account, my labors in writing had not been altogether unprofitable.

Elder C. goes on to say, in reference to the extract just given from me:

"As the author of this, we might charitably hope, felt the full force of what he wrote; so did I feel in adopting it; and feel it as applicable in a good measure to him; and the conductors of the Signs, who have departed from the original ground assumed, as will appear from the following specifications: First on the doctrine of justification. This as I have shown, was viewed in the ancient creed as eternal; and as farther appears from the Nos. published in the 2d of the Signs, pages 163, 196 and 244, upon justification, with the Editorial sanction. But at a later date Eld. Trott introduced his new theory upon the subject, which after pretty full discussion, in which several participated, the subject was dropped, though the Editor was carried by the board, and came out a convert to the new theory. This I did not consider a sufficient cause to abandon the Signs and hence continued to patronize them."

Elder C. speaks of the conductors of the Signs; I know of but one. He speaks of the remarks in the last quotation he has given from me, as being applicable to me and to the conductor of the Signs. He has not said whether in a good or in a bad sense. I will say for myself, that I feel the importance of those remarks now, perhaps as strongly as when I wrote them originally. I find not a sentiment or idea therein that I wish to retract. I may not have the same energy of action as then, but still, with all my discouragements, I have enough, to undertake the publication of this pamphlet in defence of the same truths I there referred to.

Elder C. has, I think, wrongly charged us with departing from the original ground assumed. The ground assumed in our original stand, was, that the Scriptures were a perfect, and the only legitimate rule of faith and practice; and hence the only rule to be governed by in religion. So we professed to belong to the ancient school of Christ of course, being still learners therein - not to have graduated therefrom. Hence, in accordance with that profession, whatever we learn in that school, as being laid down in that perfect rule, we do not hesitate to receive and to advocate as truth, on account of any former opinions of our own, or of other men's being different from it. When Elder C. can show from the Scriptures that our present views are not sustained thereby, then he may charge us with leaving original ground; this he has not attempted to do in this communication. I, several years since, found to my grief, that some who professed to be of the same Old School with us, instead thereof belonged to the Old School, which our opponents meant, when they named us Old School; that is, what may be termed the School of the old English Particular divines, in distinction from the Fullerites school, which they then called a new school: Elder Clark was one.

In reference to being still learners, I further say, that those who have learned in the schools and from the writings of men, are not, with few exceptions of independent minds, still learners. The system of men are soon fathomed and exhausted. Those who have studied the system, of what they call divinity, in the schools, when they graduate, come forth with all the knowledge they ever have of the system they are to preach. It has been said of some preachers, that they were like young wasps; the biggest when they were first hatched. So those who, though not having been educated in the divinity school, yet depend mostly on expositors and other human authors, for their doctrinal views and understanding of the Scriptures, are confined in their knowledge of these things to very narrow limits, even to the limits of man's mind. By just reading their favorite authors you will have their whole system, all the doctrine they will ever preach; and it will be all old; nothing new. The Scriptures are not so, they are an inexhaustible fund of knowledge; we can never reach the bottom of that revelation which God has made of himself and of His salvation. Hence he who obeys the Apostle's injunction to "Study to show himself approved of God, (not of men,) a workman that needeth not to be ashamed rightly diving the word of truth," that is, who maketh the Scriptures alone his rule and study, depending on God's teaching to understand them, will be like him, (as our Lord said,) "Who is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."

The sophistry by which Elder C. attempts to force the notion of eternal justification into what he calls our O. S. creed, has been already exposed. He certainly cannot be ignorant of the fact that Editors frequently insert communications in their papers, without holding themselves responsible for the sentiments. He says at a later date Elder Trott introduced his new theory, &c. This is in keeping with the rest he says on this point; I have already showed, what he might have known, that early in the 1st Vol. of the Signs, page 67, I introduced my objections to that sentiment. As to its being a new theory, it is entirely a mistake. The idea that the elect were justified in eternity, justified before they were under law at all; for they were actually not under law until they were created under it in Adam, is comparatively a modern idea. Elder C. must know, if ever he inquired into the subject, that he cannot show either from the Scriptures, or the writings of men, that this sentiment had ever been advanced more than two hundred, or two hundred and fifty years back. Hence in rejecting it, I was only asking for the old paths. If we admit of such union between Christ and his people as taught by the Apostle, such as of husband and wife, of the hand and body, we shall see the inconsistency of such sentiment. What, the wife considered as justified, while her husband stands liable to be arrested and imprisoned for her debts? The body cleared from all liability to the law, whilst its head has to suffer the penalty for transgression?

Elder C. next says:

"Next came the war upon creeds and confessions of faith, which resulted in wiping out the creed of the Warwick Ass.; and which was succeeded by a controversy between Eld.

Beebe and the brethren of the Licking Ass. But to show how that accorded with first principles, I will give an extract from the letter of Eld. Trott from which the foregoing extract was made, page 275, Vol. 1st of Signs. 'I know that great exertions are making to put down all confessions of faith, by those who are afraid to have the principles see the light. I am surprised that any lover of the word should join them in the attempt. Let them succeed, and we shall see Unitarians and Trinitarians, Universalists and Methodiest, Presbyterians, Baptists, &c., all united in battle array against the truth. Let us separate ourselves from the whole mixed multitude.' He then advises to drop the name 'Philadelphia Confession,' because it has been abused, &c., but continues – 'Let us make an unequivocal declaration of what we believe to be the faith and practice taught in the word of God, as we have learned it in the school of Christ.' Comment upon this is unnecessary."

In reference to the quotation which Elder C. has here given from some of my early writings, I will remark that I recently read some remark made by Melancthon in reply to a charge made against him, of having changed his views on some points. In correspondence thereto, I will say, that I have lived, studied the Scriptures, and met the rebuffs, the cavils, and various complaints against my writings for these twenty years to very little profit, if I had not been corrected of one error, nor learned one new idea. I readily admit there are expressions in that extract which may be taken as conveying ideas which I cannot now approve. But still, that commingling of all sects together in one mass, by no one's insisting on any particular points of doctrine or order, as tests of fellowship, which had been much advocated, I as much disapprove of now as then. And I as fully approve now as then of churches and individuals making a full and candid declaration of what they receive as truth, and of what they reject as error.

Elder C.'s next paragraph reads thus:

"Next and last I shall notice is the doctrine of a created Son of God, and its concomitants as briefly touched on the Circular of the Corresponding Ass. of this year; and more at large in the Warwick Circular. The avowal of this doctrine – The life giving spirit of God is a created existence – was made by Eld. Trott in his controversy with the brethren about the Fort Mountain, though it must be admitted that he had on former occasion in letters to Bro. Barton and others, and his articles upon the Sonship of Christ, expressed himself in a way which now appears in harmony with the sentiment, 'such as the creature-ship of our Son in reference to his headship, &c.'"

In reference to this charge of holding a doctrine of a created Son of God, I will refer the reader to what I have already written in answer to the charge of Arianism, and to a further reply to this charge in noticing a following repetition of this charge. Elder C. has an avowal of this doctrine is in these words: The life giving spirit of God is a created existence. I would like to know how this is an avowal of the doctrine of created Son of God, unless it can be showed that this life giving spirit is the Son of God. The question asked by the brethren about the Fort Mountain was, "Is the quickening and life giving spirit of God a created existence?" See Signs, Vol.

17th, page 8. To this inquiry I answered, "Yes," and then gave some explanation showing that I intended the yes to be confined to the idea of a quickening spirit. But this is in keeping with all the rest of Elder C.'s representations of my views, to leave out the quickening and make me say the life giving spirit of God was a created existence. Elder C. must well know that I have two or three times given explanations concerning what my design was in answering that inquiry thus in the affirmative. In those explanations I have declared that I knew of no life giving spirit of God being revealed in the Scriptures, and therefore I could say nothing about it. But that the Second Adam was said to be made a quickening spirit as the first Adam was made a living soul; and if made, then created. See 1 Cor., 15:45. But there seems to be as great a propensity in Elder C. and his party to make a man an offender for a word as ever existed in the days of Isaiah. It was certainly an unguarded yes that I gave in answer. I did not properly regard the wise man's injunction, to "Answer not a fool according to his folly." For if those brethren acted the fool in the sense in which I understand the term to be here used, in asking a question about what the wisdom of God has never revealed, I should not have given any sanction to the inquiry. I know nothing of what Elder C. means by the expression, the creatureship of our Son. I, of course can say nothing about it.

Elder C. next adds:

"I need only add, in reference to the controversy which I had with him through the Signs, that after its close in the paper it was continued for a while privately, but with no better success than appeared upon the face of what was published."

I presume by the him in this paragraph he has reference to me; if so, this is as deceptive as the rest he has written. The points discussed through the Signs were not discussed by private correspondence. He wrote me and proposed a further discussion; I in answer to him accepted the proposition, and urged a calm investigation of the points of difference. The next was, I received from him a most abusive letter in reference to some correspondence I had had with Bro.

Dudley, varying but little from an exact copy of the one I had received from Elder Buck, published in my appeal to the churches of Ketocton. I then dropped correspondence with him. If I am not correct, let him publish the correspondence.

His next statement is this:

"From all I can gather from what they have written upon this point, and with an ardent desire to know the truth, and not to be found fighting against it, the doctrine is this: That Christ in his person and character as the Son of God, is the first production of divine power, that is the first creature that God made; which is proven as they think by the expressions – 'The beginning of the creation of God,' – 'The first born of every creature – created in eternity and his people created in him. That he is as the Son of God, inferior to the Father, because the Father begat him."

As he has divided his sketch of our views into paragraphs, so I take the liberty of noticing this paragraph by itself, especially as it relates wholly to one subject, the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. Elder C. professes a good deal of sincerity at the commencement. But I think he only wanted to know so much of the truth of our views as would suit his purpose. So far as it respects myself, he has in this paragraph given a more truthful description of my views than in any other part of his communication. But it is only divided parts of the truth, and hence is not a correct representation of the truth; for if the whole truth is not told, you are not correctly informed concerning it, he will not admit, it seems, that the person of our Lord Jesus Christ is a compound person; hence he will not admit of my believing it, but estimates my views according to his views of the person of Christ. This is as far from giving a correct representation of my views, as it would be in giving a description of my person and age by his own. In contemplating so vast and mysterious a subject as that of God manifest in the flesh, our minds are so limited, that what glimpses we get of it, has to be in parts. Hence in discussing the subject of his manhood, in describing that manhood, we should have to represent it in language that would present him to view as a creature of time, if the fact that he was God manifest in the flesh was not kept in view; so of that by which he is the actual head and life of his people. The part of candor would be to estimate our views of Emanuel as we represented him, as God and man in one person, and so in reference to his being the life of his people, as we have uniformly represented this life as existing in God, and as one with the Word, and not as though we had represented it as something existing as a person by itself.

How much soever of candor Elder C. may have with others, he is far from manifesting any in his treatment of my views.

But to come to the subject of this paragraph, and to give my views, if possible, so as to be understood, I will consider: First, the compound person of the Son of God as presented to view in the Scriptures. I presume that it will be admitted that with God there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning; if so, it ought to be admitted that as God is sovereign, independent and self-sufficient in one of His acts and ways, so He must be in all of His acts and ways. Hence if we find the Scriptures at one time ascribe to Christ a oneness with the Father, and the Godhead in its fullness, and at another time a dependence and subordination to another as his Father and his God, surely, if governed by candor and reflection, we must admit that there is in his person some element distinct in its nature from his Godhead, in which he can sustain this subordinate relation; for the Godhead cannot vascillate thus from a state of sovereignty to a state of dependence. In Heb. 1st, 8:9, we find quoted from the 45th Psalm, and addressed personally to the Son, these two different declarations, 1st: "Thy throne O God is forever and ever"; 2nd: "Therefore God even thy God hath anointed thee," &c. So Christ sends to his Disciples this message: "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." Again he saith: "I and my Father are one," John 10:30, and in John 14:23 this very same person says: "For my Father is greater than I." Again in Rom. 9:5 Christ is declared to be, "Over all, God blessed for ever, Amen." Yet in 1 Cor., 15:24-28, "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all and in all." Thus in the one text Christ is declared to be over all, God; and in the other to reign by a delegated power, in a kingdom which he must give up to God, even the Father, and ultimately must himself as the Son be subject to Him that put all things under Him. I know that many try to do away with the force of those texts by ascribing this subordination to his mediatorial office; but he does not so speak in the one, neither is it so represented in the other, in both he is personally spoken of. My Father is greater than I, personally of course, if language can express it. In the other, Then shall the Son also himself be subject. What can be more personal than this in expression? Indeed no person can read the Scriptures with a desire to have their opinions regulated by the testimony of Scripture, without discovering many instances, in which the independent

Godhead of Christ is presented to view as equal and one with the Father; and many other instances in which as Son he is represented as sustaining a subordinate relation to the Father. Some may suppose that these cases relate exclusively to his manhood. But even if it was admitted that only in his manhood, he could thus stand in a subordinate relation to the Father, yet as it is so manifest that he personally sustained this subordinate relation, it fully proves the correctness of our position that he exists in a compound person. That the manhood of Christ possessed all the requisites of a distinct person in itself, I admit; but as it was the Word that was made flesh, I must believe that his manhood only existed in personal union with the Word, and with the Word that life in him which is the light of men; so that in the same person he is God, is the Son of God and is man. Were it not so, we should have only a human sacrifice to rely upon. If he only suffered as man, then there was no God in the sacrifice, nor any representation of his people in it. The oneness of his people with him did not consist in his being made flesh, is evident because they were chosen in him, and therefore were in him, before the foundation of the world. And we have no authority for believing that his manhood existed before he was made of a woman, only as it might be considered as existing seminally in the seed of the woman or from Eve. But whatever some of our western brethren may thin, I cannot conceive that this seed of the woman can constitute a flesh and blood union of Christ and his people, for the very plain reason that they are of the seed of Adam, and therefore inherit from him depravity, but he being of the seed of the woman only, in his flesh, had no depravity, condemnation coming not through her. But that it was not of him, alone in his manhood that he is represented as sustaining a subordinate relation to the Father, appears from the following, among many texts of Scripture, - In John 3d, 16:17, we find Jesus himself testifying that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, &c.;" he adds, "For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, &c." Does not this clearly relate to an existence the Son had before he came into the world, as it speaks of his being sent into the world? And is there not a subordination here expressed concerning the Son, that he was given, was sent into the world? Surely there is not that sovereignty and independence in this passive obedience of the Son which belongs to him as God. So in John 6th, 38:39, Jesus says, "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me; And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, &c." Here he speaks of coming down from heaven, and therefore cannot speak of his manhood which was born of Mary, yet he speaks of being sent, and therefore in subordination to his Father's will. Again, in verse 51st of same chapter, he says, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: If any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever; and the bread which I shall give is my flesh, &c." Here he shows that his flesh is the bread of life, and that which he gives for the life of the world, yet he so identifies it with his person, as to represent it as the bread which came down from heaven. But I will not multiply texts, though I might produce many more to the same effect.

Has Elder C. and those with him, such an idea of the sovereign and independent Jehovah, as to believe that in His Godhead He can lay aside His sovereignty so as to be subject to be given and sent, &c.? If they have, I will think them not to measure my views of God by their standard. I so believe in the unchanging sovereignty of God, that I, must believe that the Word took that in to personal union with himself when was not God, that in that distinct existence he could be subject to be sent and given by the Father, as he had to be made flesh in order to be subject to the law.

Will Elder C. now see that my views of the person of Emanuel is, that it is so compounded that he could be a Son given, and a child born, and yet be the mighty God; that he could be the beginning of the creation of God, and yet be the I AM THAT I AM. If so he will see that he has fallen as far short of giving my views of the person and character of Christ as the earth is bellow the heavens. If he will look back through the Signs; he will see that these in substance are the views I have held and published for these many years.

I will now pass to notice the idea of creatureship as applied to Christ in the Scriptures, in distinction from his being made flesh. It will, I presume, be admitted that in God's Son being made of a woman, the idea of creatureship is ascribed to him in person, and that without derogating from his Godhead or making him a "created God;" strange, then, that such a general alarm should be produced at the idea of creatureship being applied to him, as he is the life of his people. But surely, if men inspired of God have, without reserve, in giving their testimony of Jesus, attached this idea to him, I think I need not be afraid to do it, though opposed by friends and foes. But I have never represented that as the Son he is inferior to the Father because God created him, as Elder C. has stated. I have based his subordination to the Father upon his relation as Son, as well as upon the testimony of Scripture, showing that he sustained such inferior relation.

Elder C. admits that we have such expressions as these: "The beginning of the creation of God," - "The first born of every creature," to sustain our views; but he appears not to admit them to be Scripture. They, however, will be found Rev. 3:14, and Col. 1:15. How is Christ The beginning of the creation of God, according to the proper import of the words, if he was not in some sense the first of God's creating? And how the first born of every creature, if not in some sense a creature? Some, in order to get rid of the idea of creatureship being applied to the Son, have suggested that the terms expressing that idea should be understood in some other sense; that of constitution, or institution, has been intimated. I should not know what sense to make of the sentence. The beginning of the institution of God, or of this, The first born of every constitution; because I should not know what was meant by the constitution or institution. So if Christ was instituted the Head and Life of his people instead of created, then Eph. 2:10 should read, For we are his appointment instituted in Christ Jesus, &c.; 2 Cor. 5:17, should read, if any be in Christ Jesus he is a new institution. And the new man is after God constituted in righteousness, &c. See Eph., 4:24. But unless there is something in the original or in the connexion which shows that a different translation would be more correct, I cannot sanction the idea of saying that the Scriptures do not mean what they say. If one may say that this word, and that, and the other are not to be understood according to their legitimate meanings, others may occupy the same ground, and all because the proper meaning does not suit their notions of things; so every man would be at liberty to construe the Scriptures according to his own opinion. Where, then, should we have any standard to test the truth of our various opinions? In the case under consideration, not only are the terms create, creature and creation decidedly a correct translation of the original words, but they also give a more definite sense to the texts in which they are used than the substitution of other words would; and what is more, in some instances at least, the connexion evidently calls for the very idea conveyed by these words. As in Eph., 2:10, the expression, "For we are his workmanship," evidently requires the idea of create, or make, to follow it, so that I think the text reads correctly. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, &c. Does not the expression, created in him, convey the idea of being created in him as a head, as the human family were created in Adam as a head? If so, he must have been created in that which constituted his headship. If in his headship he was self-existent, then his posterity as existing in him were self-existent, and therefore could not have been created; but if they were created in him, then he as their existence, as their life was created. So the new man which after God is created in righteousness, &c., (Eph. 4:24) can be no other than the Christ in you the hope of glory. If, then, the new man was created, then Christ as living in the believer was created. Hence, when we take into consideration the compound person of Christ, I can see nothing in the idea of Christ's being the beginning of the creation of God, that ought to alarm us.

But as some of my most esteemed brethren do not agree with me on this point, I wish to examine it still farther. And First, if Christ as the life of his people, is that spiritual life which lives in them, and that life is communicated to them personally, so that they are born of it, then Christ as their life becomes personally identified with them. And when we consider what God is, a perfect being of himself, a complete whole, a perfect unit, we cannot conceive that He can so communicate of Himself of His essence, to creatures, so as to be personally identified with them. Hence I conclude that He must have something in Himself distinct from His essence, which He could communicate to creatures so as to make them participants in it. This something, this communicable essence, I conclude is found in that life which is declared to have been in the Word. I think by carefully reading the 1st Chap. Of the Gospel according to John, a person will be convinced that John commences his Gospel without particular description of the person of Christ. He commences with the declaration that "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God," and that "All things were made by Him, &c." Now, this being with God, which John is so particular to affirm, must imply, unless we consider Him as making so particular an assertion without any meaning, that there was in the Word a distinction from God, while at the same time the Word was God. In verse 4 he goes on to tell wherein that distinction was: "In Him was life and the life was the light of men." - not that the Word was the light of men, but the life was the light of men. Surely this life must be something, it must be a distinct existence to have such an affirmation made distinctively of it. This is not all, but he goes on to speak particularly of that Light which this Life is, speaks of it as a person uses the pronouns he and him in particular reference to it. See on the 13th verse. In the 14th verse he returns to speak again of the Word, which we shall have occasion to notice again. This Light which is the lift of which John affirms so much, must be an existence of itself. If an existence, it must either exist independently of its own pleasure in the Word, in God and with God, or it must so exist dependently by the will of God. The first of these, I think no one will believe. If then it exists in the Word of God's will, it is as much in its existence there the production the creature of God's will as the natural light was the production of God's word. So that this was, I believe, the beginning of the creation of God, and as it is the life of his people, the light of men, they in that life were thus and then created in him, or brought into existence in the Word, by the will of God.

But then in thus contending for the creatureship of this life that was in the Word, I do not wish to place it upon a footing with those creatures which God has created exterior from Himself, neither am I authorized by the Scriptures to do so, any more than I am authorized to place that "Holy thing" which was born of Mary on a level with Adam. That Holy thing had he existed only as the Son of Mary would no doubt have existed as a perfect man, that the Scriptures teach that from his conception he so existed as one or in personal union with the Godhead that he was no other than Emanuel, than the Word made flesh. So of the life that was in the Word, as being that Light which John bare witness to, had evidently personal qualities, so that had he existed separately he would have been a distinct person, but he existed only in the Word. Hence the Word through God, having this life in him possessed such a personal distinction from God, that he could be said to be with God, and could sustain the relation of Mediator between God and men. And thus whilst in his person he could stand as Mediator between God and men, he in his person was also one with the Father and with the Holy Ghost, as it is written, "These three are one." Thus this created existence which is included in the person of the Son, for the Son is the Word with that life in him, does not make him as the Son a creature any more than the assumption of manhood did. He remains identically the Word and God manifest in the flesh, whilst through the whole of his mediatorial office, he sustains a personal distinction from God, as abundantly testified in the Scriptures.

But as creation is in idea distinct from begetting, the inquiry arises, how is Christ the begotten Son of God? Before proceeding with the inquiry, it will be well to notice what it is to be a son, what its relation is. First: a son, according to the uniform usage of the term, is one who derives his existence as such from another who begat him, and whim he is therefore bound to honor as his father, according to the 5th command. "Honor thy father and thy mother, &c." Second: a begotten son, partakes of the nature of the father; and, Third: in consequence of his being the first or only begotten son, he is entitled to be the heir to his father's honors, relation, and possessions, &c. When Christ is declared to be God, we understand by it, that he is the self-existent, great First Cause of all things, the sovereign Majesty of the universe. When he is declared to be a servant, we understand that he sustained the relation of a servant, was in servitude under the law. Why not then, when he is so often spoken of as a begotten Son, understand that he sustains the relation indicated by those terms, to another as his Father?

In coming to the first characteristic of Sonship, that of being begotten, as manifested in the Son of God, I would remark, that in formerly treating of this subject, whilst I have uniformly contended that the Son of God, was God coequal with the Father, I have, in speaking of his Sonship, in itself considered, and in opposition to the absurd idea of a begotten God, used expressions which in themselves considered were perhaps calculated to convey the idea that his Sonship belonged only to that life that was in the Word. This was wrong, though I still maintain that he never could have sustained the relations of a begotten Son, had he only existed as God, because I cannot believe that God who is so emphatically declared to be one, could be so divided in his person, as in his Godhead alone, to be both the Father and a Son, the progenitor and the descendant, the bestower and the recipient of an inheritance; neither can I conceive that God can so divest himself of his independent, self-existence, as to exist in a derivative existence; or of his absolute sovereignty as to owe honor to another as his Father. Hence I consider that life which was in the Word was as the seed of which he was begotten. His headship, of a posterity who were to proceed from him, is in that life of which they are born, though in his person he is God. My mistake in speaking of the Sonship of Christ, arose from the want of a clear idea of what is to be understood by his being begotten. I had merely taken the term as it stood in the Scriptures without having been particularly led till recently to reflect on its import as spoken in reference to God, and the Son of God.

How Christ is the begotten Son of God, may, I conceive, be illustrated by his second begetting as the Son of God; for there are evidently two begettings spoken of in the Scripture to him. John says, speaking of the Word being made flesh, "We beheld (not shall behold,) his glory, the glory as of the only begotten Son of the Father, &c." And at the baptism of Jesus, and in his transfiguration on the mount, the voice from heaven was, "This is (not shall be,) my beloved Son, &c." Thus he was declared to be already the begotten Son of God. But the begetting of which I speak as a second begetting, was an after event to these. It is named in Psalms 2:7, "Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee." This was spoken prophetically, and therefore though spoken in the present tense, had a future reference. So an inspired Apostle applied it (Acts 13:33,) when he said, "God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again, as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." The apostle makes this begetting to be the same with his being "The first begotten of the dead." Rev. 1:5. It is probable that it is from these texts, that persons have inferred that regeneration and resurrection are the same. Resurrection alone does not alter the standing of a person; if he dies under the law, he will be under it in his resurrection. As Christ died under the law, if there had been simply a resurrection of him from death, he would still have been under it. But according to Rom., 1:4, he was "Declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection of the dead." The Son in being made of a woman, was made under the law, and having by his death accomplished the object of his humiliation, the redemption of his people, by bearing the curse in their behalf, and thus exhausted the penalty death, as Peter said, "It was not possible that he should be holden of it," and therefore came out from under it in that nature in which he as the Life of his people had died, his own body, and brought out with him from under the law his spiritual body, the church. In being thus raised up, he was of God, in his manifest relation to his church invested with all the prerogatives of an only begotten Son; he was seated at the right hand of the Father, having all power given to him in heaven and in earth; was invested with the inheritance of all things, having all things put under his feet, Him only excepted who did put all things under him. Thus we see him of God brought into life from the womb of the grave, and invested with all the prerogatives of the Son of God, inheriting all things and sitting upon the throne and exercising all the power of God; Him only being excepted who did put all things under Him. He must thus be of the same nature of the Father, and is so recognized in that it is said to him, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c." See Heb., 1:8. None but God could sway the scepter of universal dominion, and yet as a Son it is in submission to the Father that he reigns, and hence the period is to come when he shall deliver up the kingdom unto God even the Father, and the Son himself be subject to Him that put all things under him. 1 Cor. 15:24-28. Thus it appears to me that the terms only begotten Son of God are according to their proper import, strictly descriptive of that relation which Christ as Mediator sustains to God. But as this exaltation of Christ was a being glorified with that glory which he as Son had with the Father before the world was, (See John, 17:1-5,) we may conclude that his relation as Son was the same before the world was. As there was nothing corresponding to a fleshly begetting in bringing forth the Son of God from under the law and its penalty, so we presume there was nothing like it, in his first being brought forth as the only begotten Son of God. If we look back to the beginning, we find the Word with that life in him which was the light of men. This Light, as we have showed from the connexion, is a distinct existence, and that from the nature of things must be a created existence; it is a something that is communicated to men; thus Jesus saith, "I am the light of the world, he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8:12. What is this light of life, but that life which is the light of men? Now this Life, though a created existence could never be involved in the relation of a servant; being in the Word, hid in God, no law could ever reach it, with its demands, but the glory and majesty of God must ever shine forth with, and around it.

But still, this life being in the Word imparted to him a distinct and compound personality, as has been noticed. This complex person could not as noticed, be in the station of a servant under the law, without being made under it, in an additional nature, neither could he in his complex person, though in that person he was God, sustain the relation of the absolute God, but was exactly adapted to sustain the relation of a Son, and was therefore set up, and brought forth in the everlasting covenant as the Son of God; and the same mighty power of God was manifested in thus bringing him forth as the Son of God and Head of his church and people, and they in him in that Life which was embraced in his distinct personality, as was manifested in raising Christ from the dead. See Eph., 1:19,20. It is no wonder that John said of him, when he the Word with this life in him as described, was made flesh, so that he could be beheld of mortals, "And we beheld his glory the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Here is the difference between the Word's taking this life into personal union with him, and his being made flesh, though both created existences; the life was in him as God, was hid in God, but the manhood was taken upon him, the Godhead was veiled in his flesh. Hence the law could not reach his manhood with its demands, without being intercepted by the intervening Godhead; not so with the life. Hence I can conceive how the law could inflict its penalty upon the Word as being the life of his people, in his manhood, whilst it could not touch the life itself. Again, the manhood of Christ was made of the seed of the woman; but we are not warranted to believe that the life was made of any created substance. The account we have is, that the new man, which must be the life, or Christ, in us, was After God created in righteousness and true holiness.

From the testimony of Scripture, I conclude that the Word as the Son, occupied the same exalted station at the right hand of the Father, having the immediate government in his own hands, before the foundation of the world as after his exaltation from the dead. Hence the glory which he now has is the same that he had with the Father before the world was; and the Word was with God. Hence it is declared, that "All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made." Every declaration made of God whether under, or before the law, must have been made by him; for it is written, "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." John 1:18. This must therefore embrace every manifestation made of God, to the fathers, and through the law and prophets. Hence he must be the God of Abraham, &c. But here as after his resurrection we see evidences, that whilst all things were put under him, He was excepted who put all things under him; that the Father retained the supremacy on the throne. Thus whilst all things were made by the Word, or Son, yet it is testified that "God made the worlds by him." Heb., 1:2 and that "God created all things by Jesus Christ." Eph., 3:9. And also in the fullness of time God sent forth His Son. &c. Thus showing the supremacy of the Father over him as the Son in all things, and his obedience to his Father's will.

Thus we see in Christ all the characteristics of a begotten Son. He is brought forth in that relation to God. Hence he acknowledges the obligation and willingness to honor and obey God as his Father. He says, John 8:49, "I honor my Father but ye do dishonor me," and he is represented as saying, "I delight to do thy will, O God, yea thy law is within my heart." See Psalms, 40:8, and Heb. 10:5-9. Again he is of the same nature with the Father; for the Word was God, and he was the express image of God's person. Again as the only begotten Son he is appointed heir of all things, and none others, none of the Angels does God recognize as Sons with Him, excepting that Christ's people are acknowledged as sons in him, and are therefore joint heirs with him.

This case of acknowledging one as a begotten Son distinct from the idea of a literal begetting, is not singular in the Scriptures. God directed Moses to say unto Pharaoh, "Israel is my son, even my first-born." Ex., 4:22. He evidently thus owns Israel as His son, because He had chosen him to be a peculiar people to himself, and had provided for him an inheritance. See Deut., 14:1, 2. Thus it is said of Abraham that he offered up his only begotten son. Heb., 11:17. Isaac could have been called his only begotten, only in the sense that he only was recognized as his heir.

I have thus given my views of the person, character and relation of the Son of God, as definitely as I can; however much Elder C., and those with him, may be opposed to these views, I do request him, no longer to so grossly misrepresent them. Let him present what argument against them, he can, but if he has any candor, let those arguments be against my views as they are.

Elder C. goes on with the catalogue of what he calls our views, thus:

"That God made the worlds by him (by the Son,) as Solomon made the Temple by Hiram, that is as his servant or instrument. That we are not quickened or regenerated by the Spirit of God or the Holy Ghost, and consequently are not the children of God in that sense, else we should be little Gods.

But we are quickened by the infusion of this created spirit, and hence our life is not in God, or God is not the life of the church. That this life is not in the Divinity of Christ, or in him as the essential Word, but in this undefined existence, and which life and his people with him died, arose again and ascended to heaven, &c. This condensed formula contains, what I am well satisfied I can prove from the record whenever called to it, as their sentiment upon the vital and fundamental point of doctrine – the character of the Son of God."

Elder C. says he is well satisfied he can prove these things are our sentiments. So he can, according to his manner of proving things, by taking a word here, and a word there, from our writings, and patching them together by some additions of his own. But I as confidently deny that I have ever held or advanced one sentiment as he has presented it, in this formula. In some instances at least, I think he must have known that he entirely misrepresenting me. But I will proceed to notice the several items.

The first, is, That God made the worlds by the Son of Solomon made the Temple by Hiram, thus far is a correct representation of my language. But the addition, as his servant or instrument, is a gratuitous supply by Elder C. Any person, anywise acquainted with agencies, knows that the idea of agency is very different from that of servitude. I have, already, in speaking of Christ's sustaining fully the relation of Sonship, referred to Heb., 1:2, and Eph., 3:9, as fully sustaining the idea, that all things were made by the Son or Word, yet that God made them by him. Thus showing that whilst all things were the Son's and in subjection to him, God as the Father held the supremacy on the throne, similar to the case of Joseph and Pharaoh. I referred to the case of Solomon and Hiram, as I have formerly explained, because I considered the building of the temple typical, and because similar expression are used as in this case, in relation to Solomon and Hiram. That I was not correct in the idea conveyed thereby, of God's supremacy over the Son as such, Elder C. cannot show, unless he can show the incorrectness of those two texts above referred to.

His next item is, That we are not quickened or regenerated by the Holy Ghost, and consequently are not the children of God in that sense, else we would be little Gods.

I used the term little Gods in my controversy with Elder Buck in relation to some position of his, implying that the Godhead was imparted in regeneration, which I stated would constitute the subjects of such regeneration little Gods. I have never named that as a conclusion to be drawn from the idea of being regenerated by the Holy Ghost. Why Elder C. so represented it, he knows better than I, though it looks suspicious of some uncandid design. In reference to regeneration by the Holy Ghost, I have said that if regeneration is to be ascribed to either of the Three, exclusively, to the Father, to the Word or to the Holy Ghost. I should suppose it would be ascribed to the Word as the regenerated are represented as the seed of Christ. I have further said, there is no Scriptural authority, or that I know of none, for supposing that the Holy Ghost was exclusively the agent in regeneration, that he was particularly described as the Comforter, &c., but not as the Regenerator. The truth is, regeneration is ascribed to God in the Scriptures, without designating either the Father, the Word or the Holy Ghost, as in such texts as these: "Born, not of blood nor of the will of flesh; nor of the will of man, but of God." Again, "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, &c." Unless this text may be considered as confining it to the essential Word, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth, &c." This position may appear strange to those who may have been accustomed to hear regeneration ascribed to the Holy Ghost exclusively, without having considered for themselves whether the Scriptures thus ascribe it to him. But if Elder C. could have refuted my position by the testimony of Scripture, would he have resorted to such misrepresentations to evade it? In reference to Elder C.'s using the word regeneration and guickening as synonymous; he may view them as synonymous, but he knows that I do not. In candor, therefore, he should not have so used them in speaking of my views. I deny their being synonymous, because both in their common use among men, and in the Scriptures they are used to convey quite different ideas. Generation is used to convey the idea of begetting an individual that had not before existed excepting seminally in its progenitor. So regeneration implies the begetting another and a spiritual existence in one who already had a fleshly existence; as being born again is the experiencing by a person of a new and distinct birth from his former fleshly birth. Therefore the person born again, now exists in a new and distinct life from his natural life, is a new creature. But quickening conveys the idea of stirring up, reviving, exciting, &c., that which already exists; its strongest idea is that of reanimating the dead, as in John, 5:21, "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Adam's begetting a son in his own likeness, is a very different idea from that of his raising up or quickening Abel who was dead. So from Elisha's having brought again to life, or quickening the Shunamite's son, no one would infer that he had begotten a son. When David prays, as he does repeatedly in the 119th Psalm, "Quicken thou me;" none, I presume understands him to be praying to be regenerated. Is it not strange that men, and even christians, will suffer their minds to be so enslaved by certain hackneyed expositions, as not to regard the proper meaning of words, in their explaining of Scripture; but will, to suit certain imbibed notions, divert words from their legitimate meaning, and thus represent that the Scriptures do not mean what they say, and therefore that the Holy Ghost in indicting them, either did not know, or did not regard the meaning of words! No wonder that there is confusion among us, whilst such is the case; for we thereby deprive ourselves of any definite standard of truth. Men cry up the scriptures, and yet treat them as some of the heathen do their household gods, wherein they displease them, they repudiate them. If the regeneration of the Scriptures is nothing more than a quickening, then both the soul- regenerationists, or rather soulquickenists, and the Arminians are right on this point: for both represent it as being only a bringing into religious action certain dead or dormant powers of man. The one class say that God only can quicken these dead powers of man; the other, that men can do it of themselves, or that the preacher can do it for them. I know not but the latter class are right, if a quickening of the powers or faculties which the natural man already possesses, is all that constitutes an experience of religion.

But is there not a quickening connected with the new birth? I answer, yes; corresponding spiritually, to that which belongs naturally to the natural birth. Persons knowing any thing about it, know that the quickening of the fetus, is a different thing from the conception. So I understand spiritual quickening to be a different thing from regeneration. But in this, as in many other points of comparison between natural and spiritual things, there is a correspondence, but not a parallel. In the natural world that which is implanted is the subject of the quickening; in reference to the spiritual birth, the receptacle or soul is that which is quickened. Hence while I have uniformly held and contended that regeneration is of God, that God alone implants in the soul or heart that life which is the light of men, or imparts to it that light of life; yet I do contend that it is through this light of the [*] life shining in the heart, the soul is quickened to any just conceptions of the spirituality of the law, and of that worship which is acceptable to God; and ultimately of those spiritual blessings which come through Christ. Thus the soul is guickened to the knowledge of sin, and to repentance, as also afterwards, to rejoice in the truth and consolations of the gospel. "For the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned;" and, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Thus while I contend that the soul is not changed from a natural to a spiritual soul, in regeneration, but remains after the new birth, with just the same faculties it had before, and reasons just in the same way as before; and that without the impartation in generation, of this life which is the light, without the new birth, or being born of a new life, or of the spirit of God's Son, the natural man could never know; nor relish spiritual things; yet that when this light of the life shines in him, he is made so to see the exceeding broadness and the spirituality of the law, and to know sin by it, that as a rational man, that is, with all his mind, he approves of the justice of his condemnation. So of salvation through Christ, when by faith he beholds it, it is no longer foolishness unto him, with every faculty of soul, he approves of it, as the wisdom and the power of God, and he is astonished at himself, that with all his reading of the Scriptures he never saw these things so, before. Yet the moment he is again left to reason upon the subject without the aid of this light, he concludes that because he is such a poor, guilty sinner, there can be no salvation for him; against when the light shines all is right. Brethren, is not this experience, and is it not consonant with Scripture? If so, is it not then manifest, that the soul of itself is not changed to a spiritual soul? and is it not equally manifest that the light of this life, when it shines does quicken the faculties of the soul, otherwise dead to spiritual things, to receive and rejoice in the things of the spirit of God? Thus Christ was made a quickening spirit; for this life is Christ in you. So in John, 6:63, Christ says, "It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, the words that I speak unto you are spirit, and are life." What words does our Lord here refer to? What he says to be sure, was true of most of his words; but there evidently is a reference in this declaration to the discourse he was holding with the people concerning his flesh being the true bread from heaven, and that his flesh was meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed, &c. We find the Jews reasoning on the subject, and saying How can this man give us his flesh to eat? Also some of his Disciples said, this is a hard saying, who can bear it, that is, understand it. It evidently was in reply to these murmurings that he said, It is the spirit that quickeneth, &c., and futher adds, There are some of you that believe not, and again, "Therefore said I unto you that no man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father." All this convinces me that he did not in that text break abruptly off from his discourse to teach what regeneration was, but was assigning the reasons in those several verses above quoted, why they could not receive or hear his words. First he lets them know that it was not of a literal eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood that he spake, that his words were spirit and were life, therefore the flesh profiteth nothing in this matter, whatever it may profit in natural things, no fleshly powers, or powers of the fleshly birth could comprehend him. They must believe, in order to believe or to trust in a crucified Jesus for life and acceptance with God, they must have that faith which God giveth. And this faith which is a fruit of the spirit, and belongs to the new man, is that, by which, as men we are enabled to trust in a crucified Jesus as the way of salvation. This being by faith on Christ crucified, is the eating his flesh and drinking his blood intended. It is this faith view, this light of life, that quickens the faculties of our souls to receive and relish the doctrine of Christ crucified, and to esteem his flesh as meat indeed and his blood as drink indeed. Thus I understand the spirit here, as contrasted with the flesh, to be Christ the quickening spirit, as contrasted with the fleshly Adam. The natural Adam has no power to quicken itself to the apprehension of spiritual things; but Christ, the spiritual life, can and does quicken the rational powers of the regenerate to receive and rest upon as truth, the doctrine imparted of spiritual things; if my experience does not deceive me.

There is another quickening spoken of in the Scriptures connected with salvation. That is, as they died representatively, or in Christ's dying, under the sentence of the law, so they were quickened together with him, and raised up together from under the penalty of the law. See Eph. 2:5, 6 and Col. 2:13. And again in experience, being killed by the law, they are again quickened to life, and raised up from under the sentence of the law, through faith in Christ.

I have been lengthy on this subject of quickening, and more so from having had to differ in my views from most of the brethren on this point. Whether or not I have said any thing that will convince any one of the correctness of my views; I think I have said enough, to show that Elder C. has done me great injustice in applying what I have formerly said of quickening, to regeneration.

Elder C., in connexion with the subject of guickening, further gives as my views, that the life is not in God, is not in the Divinity of Christ, is not in the essential Word, &c. Yet as in this pamphlet, so in all my discussions heretofore on this subject, I have repeatedly quoted John 1:1-4, and appealed to it as sustaining me in my belief, that there was in the Word who was God, and distinct in its nature from the Godhead, as being in the Word, that life which Christ is to his people, as he is their light, and therefore that life of theirs; which was hid with Christ in God. I have also contended that this life being in the Word, thus constituting the Son who is the Word with this life in him, both personally one with the Father, and personally one with his people as being their life, in a compound person, and thus making him a divinely fit person to stand as the Mediator between God and his people. Now I know that Elder C. knew that such in substance was my views, and has joined with others – not in trying to show by sound arguments and proofs that they were wrong – but in trying to ridicule the idea of there being in him before the foundation of the world, a nature distinct from the Godhead; yet in this publication he has made these positive assertions to the contrary. When I consider the standing Elder C. once had among us, I am disposed to look around for some excuse for his representing things so falsely, but really I find none more charitable than the one already hinted at. But of this, I will leave for those to decide, and to reconcile his course with the confidence they are placing in him, who have put him forward as their oracle.

As to the additional remark intermixed with the others, viz: that God is not the life of the Church, I will remark that I did not fully know they held that the Godhead was the life of the Church, that God was the life that was hid with Christ in God. I freely confess that I did not believe it.

Next following the paragraph which we have just noticed, are four or five paragraphs in Elder C.'s communication which relate wholly to the Editor of the Signs, which, of course, do not refer to me; I will therefore pass them over without copying them, or adding any remarks concerning them, as the Editor is fully able to take his own part.

The following paragraph to those omitted is this:

"I will now present in contrast what I understand to be the Scriptural doctrine upon these points. The most casual observer must have seen that this doctrine in relation to the character of Christ as the Son of God, is a denial of the equality of the Son with the Father, and is allied to the new theory of the life of the church dying and the church dying, rising, and ascending with that life, &c. The former branch of the scheme runs into Atheism and the latter into the grossest Arminianism, and is a denial of the substitution of Christ for or instead of his people, which I will show from the Signs is contrary to the doctrine formerly contended for by those who are now advocating it. First then, upon the first branch, and upon which I have now but little to say, I take this declaration as a fair statement of the doctrine – 'There is a priority of existence with the Father.' If this be true the Son cannot be equal to the Father, and it therefore would be robbery in him to claim that equality. Again, if this is true there was a period when the Son did not exist, and of course there could then have been no Father, for that is a relative term and cannot apply to God under such circumstances, and so we are into Atheism at once."

This, certainly, is a strange way of presenting in contrast the Scriptural doctrine, &c. I would like to know what Scriptural authority he has for the ideas he has advanced in this paragraph. However, we will notice some of the points he has taken. First he charges, to the representation he has given of our doctrine, a denial of the equality of the Son with the Father. He evidently means that we deny this equality, in any view of the person of the Son, and he bases the charge not upon any Scripture testimony, but upon the authority of the decrees of the Nicene Council, for that is the earliest authority he can produce for fixing the modus of God's existence as Three. According to that the Son no otherwise exists as God, than as he exists as the Son of God, and therefore in his Godhead, he is the begotten Son of God, and hence is, if God, upon this principle, a begotten God. But as showed in reply to his charge of Arianism, we reject this whole attempt to fix the modus of God's existing as Three, or in trinity, and we just receive the Scripture testimony that he does exist as Three; and as it is as God that he thus exists, we believe that with the same sovereign and absolute independence, that he exists at all, he exists as Father, as Word, and as Holy Ghost; that the Word is equally self- existent with the Father, and can no more have a begotten existence than the Father, for he is equally the Jehovah; and that the Word, with the life in him which is the light of men, in one person, is the Son. Hence he could say I and my Father are one. But as the Son, as I have abundantly showed, his Father is greater than he. And I have showed from 1 Cor. 15:24-28, as well as from other portions of Scripture, that in his present exaltation, as the Son of God with power, he is subordinate to the Father, and must ultimately deliver up the kingdom to Him. Elder C. admits that the term Father is a relative term; is no the term Son equally so? Several of the relations characteristic of a son I have before noticed.

Is it not equally characteristic of the relation of a son that he has descended as such from him whose son he is, or that he is a son by the act of his father? That art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, says God of him, as before noticed in reference to his present exaltation as Son. Does not this imply priority of existence in the Father, to him as Son? If Christ sustains the name and relation of Son, why not the characteristics? Who, without the greatest presumption, dare say he does not, when God claims him as His Son, because he had begotten him, and that on a certain day?

But says Elder C., this leads to Atheism, that is, that the Son could only exist as he existed as a Son, so the Father could only exist as he existed as a Father. Elder C. speaks of out Heroding Herod, but with what point I know not; but surely he has here out Athanasiused Athanasius himself with all his audacity. Athanasius made only the existence of the Son as God, to depend on the begetting and yet self-existent God, being, to use their terms, unbegottenly begotten; an absurdity I should think sufficiently large for any sane man to swallow; yet Elder C., here makes the existence of both Father and Son, as God, to depend on the Father's begetting the Son begat himself into existence as God. How else does he make out the charge of Atheism? When shall we be done with such absurdities? Not till men will be satisfied with the simplicity of Bible testimony, and not blindly follow the dictations of the Dragon. I admit the correctness of Elder C.'s position, that Father and Son are relative terms, and I contend that we are bound to believe, that God in thus making use of these terms, in the revelation of himself, meant to convey the idea that the relation indicated by these terms, did exist between Him and His Son. And everybody knows what is involved in the relationship of father and son. My contending for this is just the thing laid hold of by Elder C. as an occasion for splitting his spite against me by representing me as an Arian. Will he condescend to inform us, as these are relative terms, why they are used, if not to show that such relation exists; and will he further tell us why he spoke of them as relative terms, if he did not admit of the existence of such relation?

But these relative terms by no means imply that God did not exist antecedent to his being a Father; yea, the very relation implies that the Father had an existence independent of his paternity. Christ said to Mary, "But go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." The language of Christ here, cannot be construed otherwise than as conveying the idea that the relationship which he acknowledges to God as a Father, is mutual, and the same with that of his Disciples, without doing violence to the order and language of the text. Will Elder C., or any other disciple of Athanasius say that God had no existence until these brethren of Christ existed? It may be said that Christ is the elder brother; but it is also said that he is the only begotten of the Father, they therefore as sons, must have been begotten in his being begotten; as Adam's posterity were created in his creation. God has revealed himself by different names, some descriptive of his being, and of his attributes, and some relative. He has declared himself as the "God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, &c." Did he not exist until these men existed?

So of the Son, when we take into consideration the character given of him in the Scriptures, we must believe that he existed as God independently of his Sonship. He is declared as the Mediator, as the Redeemer, as the Messiah or Anointed, as Jesus or Savior, these are all relative terms as well as Son. In reference to his name Redeemer and Savior, the name God is applied to him as such as well as to him as Son, yet I presume Elder C. would not say that he did not exist as God until he redeemed or saved. The fact is, the assumption of the adherents to the Nicene Creed, that the Godhead of the Father and of the Son depended on the paternity of the one, and the Sonship of the other, is altogether a begged question, for which they can produce no direct authority from the Scriptures. If they will assume to be wiser than the Scriptures, I am not required to follow them, but rather to look for the old paths. And they have no right to denounce me as an heretic or schismatic for thus doing.

Elder C. goes on thus:

"Secondly, as to the second branch – Christ the Head and life of the Church. The Scriptures reveal that life as existing in Christ the essential Word – the true God and eternal life. For we read – "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God: in his was life, &c." that is, in God was life. John, 1st Chap. "If this life was in his humanity – that in which he suffered and died on the cross, then the church had no life until he took on him the seed of Abraham. But we read that, 'As the children were partakers of flesh and blood he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, &c.' They were children then anterior to his assumption of human nature – the children that the Father had given him, who were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, and predestinated to the adoption of sons, &c. As early as the existence of Christ which is without date - for, 'From everlasting to everlasting thou art God.' - so early his people existed in him, and had their life not only hid with him in God, but he was their life, for when Christ who was our life shall appear we shall appear with him in glory. This life the conclave of Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, and all the powers of earth and hell combined besides, could never reach nor destroy. These had their hour, when they came upon him to eat up his flesh, when his soul was made an offering for sin and when he cried out, my soul is troubled - my soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death. Here he suffered for sins the just for the unjust, being put to death in the flesh but guickened by the spirit. Here he bare our sins in his own body on the tree, and suffered for us in the flesh. It was here that the declaration of God by the prophet was accomplished - 'Awake, O, sword against my shepherd, against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of Hosts; smite the shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones.' Christ thus entered in with his own precious blood, which is the price of redemption, and in the sacrifice and offering we see the Priest, the Altar and the Lamb. But I cannot now enlarge upon the point without occupying too much space. It is enough to know that in the sufferings and death of Christ in which a full and complete atonement was made for his church; who stood related to him by an eternal and indissoluble tie; his divinity, though in union with his humanity, did not, it could not, either suffer or die; and that the atonement was vicarious, as Christ stood under the law as the substitute for his people."

In this lengthy extract, Elder C. has given us his views as in contrast with ours. There are in it some few expressions that I should object to, not more perhaps than I should formerly have found in his preaching, and as they do not materially affect the subject in dispute, I shall not stop to point them out. The doctrine expressed as far as it goes, is good, such as I approve of. The question arises, How can he in expressions advance the same sentiments which I hold and contend for, and yet condemn me for advocating them? So also the guestion has arisen, How was it that we so long got along and preached together in harmony each esteeming the other sound? I then preached the same sentiments I do now and he probably believed as he now does. The answer to these questions, so far as I can form an opinion from what has transpired in our discussions is this. When he and others preached that the people of God were the children of Christ, that from everlasting they existed in him, that their life was hid with in God, that he was their life, we supposed they spake of realities, that they meant what they said, we supposed that those who were his children seminally would be manifested as children in time, by existing personally in that very existence, that life in which they existed in Him before time, in their being actually born children, born of that life in a second birth. How else could any be known as ever having an existence in Him, but by being personally partakers of that life? And they preached about being born again. On the other hand when we preached in this way, they, I presume, thought that we used these expressions from general usage without intending to convey any definite, or at least any adequate meaning by them. Hence, when we came to contend that these several Scriptural expressions had a definite meaning according to their general use, and that we understood such meaning to be conveyed by them, they guarreled with us, and set up the cry against us of new things. Hence this dispute has been evidently different from some which have been said to be merely about words; for in this case both had used the same words, but it was the substance about which we differ.

But let us test the point, whether it is so or not. Elder C. has not directly said it in this communication, but he and those with him have been understood throughout this discussion to contend that the Son of God previous to his incarnation, existed only in his Godhead, and therefore existed only as God, and to us there is but one God; then as nothing but God existed before time, if the elect had then an actual existence in him they must of course have existed as God, must haven been God in their antemundane existence. Elder C. do not turn these conclusions off with contempt, for I am so weak minded, and some others perhaps are like me, that I cannot understand how it can otherwise be than, that if nothing but God existed before time, then all that did exist at that period, was God. If you can explain the matter otherwise, do so. But again, if this life, this existence of the children of Christ which God has given him, is ever communicated to the sons and daughters of men, so as to make them manifest as these children, they must be made personally participants of it, in being born of it, and if it was God in the head, it must be God in the members, in the children, for God changes not, he says "I am the Lord I change not." Matt. 3:6. What then can they be in the new man the new creature, but God manifested in the flesh. But as Elder Buck discarded this idea of his being personally God, as he was a son of God; and as the idea is so inconsistent with all that is revealed of God, or of the experience of the children of God, this surely cannot be the idea. What else then can he mean by his declarations of a life and existence in Christ, in God, from everlasting, but that they existed only in the purpose and grace of God; that is, that God had purposed to display his grace toward them, in making them live, and in giving them an existence in union with Christ? But the text reads "According to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." But that which is only a purpose to give life, is not the life; the purpose of God is sure, but the life itself till it is brought into actual being, in the subject of it, is a nonentity. So the existence which is only purposed to be hereafter, is not now, it is not an actual existence. Hence as before intimated, there is no reality in the existence in Christ, and the union with Christ, in the life in God, which they preach as being from everlasting. But Christ is their life; if then the life did not actually exist, Christ did not actually exist before time, and if not before time, then not till he existed in the flesh, or was conceived of Mary. Where then was there any Mediator, before Jesus was born? Were the Old Testament Saints saved at first by their own intercession, and afterwards by the mediation of Moses? Or were they not saved at all? Here then is Elder C.'s dilemma of denying the existence of any thing but the Godhead in the Son of God before time; and I have showed its two horns. He may hang to which of them he pleases; only it will be nothing but candid for him to inform us which horn he takes, that we may know in future how to understand him, and to meet him in argument. But certainly it must be more consistent with the Scriptures, and sound reason to believe that the life which is the light of men, and which was in the Word, was in the beginning a reality, and something which in the nature of its existence was distinct from God, as it is said to be in the Word, his us in God, &c. but never said to be God, or the Word, than to take either horn of Elder C's dilemma. The Psalmist says "LORD, thou hast been our dwelling place, in all generations; Before the Mountains were brought forth, &c." If the Psalmist was correct, the people of God must have had, as a people, an existence in the LORD, not as existing in his existence, but as existing in him, as their dwelling place, having a distinction from him, such as is indicated, by the distinction between the inhabitant and his dwelling.

Elder C. again says:

"And here I wish to present another extract from a letter of Eld. Trott, page 239, Vol. 1st Signs, which is well worth the labor of transcribing and republishing. Speaking of some sentiments advanced by Eld. Raymond, he says, 'He speaks of substitution as involving a separation between Christ and his people.' Do not the Scriptures teach a manifest separation in this respect? Was Christ created with his people in Adam? If so he is but a creature and a branch of a fallen stock. Or was he as the Head of his people set up under the law? If so the inheritance coming through him must fail. On the other hand, Christ being the Elder brother of his people in the everlasting covenant, it was his province to interpose himself as their Redeemer, that the law might not remain a barrier to their being put in possession of the inheritance bequeathed in the better Testament. Hence it said he was made sin – or rather a sin offering for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. See 2 Cor., 5th:21, and Gal., 3d:13. If I know any thing of the use of words, the doctrine of these texts, is the doctrine of substitution, and the word for is used in them, in the sense of instead of. He being made a curse for us, for what purpose? to deliver us from the curse of the law. Did he not then endure that curse which he would deliver his people from? And would they not have suffered the curse if he had born it? What is this but his bearing it in their stead? and what can that be but substitution? Again we are told that Christ laid down his life for the sheep. Now if he did not lay down his life in the place of his sheep, how will we find an atonement in the death of Christ? and how will we find a ransom in it? If he laid down his for us in any other sense than as suffering that punishment which was due to our transgressions: I repeat it, there was no ransom price in the death of Christ; for a ransom is an equivalent rendered for the demand against those to be ransomed, and consequently involves substitution? The Editorial endorsation of this is in the following note: 'The letter of our Bro. Trott in reply to Bro. Raymond on the subject of substitution is in accordance with our views on the subject.' Thus it appears that what was sound Old School doctrine 20 years ago, is not Old School now! Then it was for his people, or in their stead, now, it is with them."

Had Elder C. been so complaisant as to have transcribed the whole of my letter from which he made the above extract, he would have showed his readers that I at that period contended for the same life union, the same oneness of Christ and his people, as I now do. I will give an extract or two. On page 237, after quoting Heb. 2:11, "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one," I go on to say, "And so I believe I cannot conceive how the spotless Lamb of God could be made to bleed, or bleeding, how his blood could sanctify or cleans from their sins any of the family of Adam unless such a union previously existed between him and them as made their sins chargeable to him, and his suffering of death and enduring of the curse accounted as done by them." Again I say in that letter, "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, &c." This life which is "one in the Head and in the body, was in the only begotten of the Father from the beginning &c." Again on page 238, in speaking of Christ as the antitype of Adam, I say, "He must have been brought forth a perfect Christ, head and body, he and his bride in him. Hence his people were chosen in him (not into him) before the foundation of the world, and they were created in Christ Jesus unto good works; and as Christ - not as the essential Word - he is the "Beginning of the creation of God." Now this was then all good doctrine to Elder C. and even now he could refer to that letter as something good.

But when I advance the same sentiments now, it is heresy, Arianism. But I also in that letter noticed the relation of the people of God to Adam, and showed the distinction in their relations to the two Adams, to be the same a that between the two Adams, and that it was in their relation to the earthy Adam, that they were under the law and needed redemption, and upon this ground I contended then and do so now, for a substitution in the death of Christ. Does this puzzle Elder C. more now than it did when he first read that letter, that the elect should suffer the penalty of the law in Christ's suffering it; and yet that he suffered it as a substitute for them as the children of Adam? If it does how can he reconcile the 38th and 39th verse of Acts, Chap. 13th? "Be it known unto you, therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins. And by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Forgiveness, and justification are as opposite in idea, as are substitution and participation in the death of Christ. Forgiveness presupposes guilt in the person forgiven; on the contrary, justification is a legal clearance from all charge of guilt. How could these meet in the same persons and in reference to the same demands of the same law, except in their distinct relation to the two Heads? In their relation to their natural head, Adam, they were transgressors and needed forgiveness, which comes only through the blood of Christ being shed for them. In Christ their spiritual Head, they had magnified the law made it honorable, and were therefore made the righteousness of God in him, and justified by him from all things." &c. So as showed in that letter, in their relation to Adam he was not one with them, he being, holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, was the spotless Lamb of God, he was therefore substituted as an offering for their sins. But in their spiritual life they were so one with Christ, that he could be held amenable for their transgressions, and the sword of justice be commanded to awake against him; and their life was so in him, that it could be reached but through him.

Their life being hid in God, how could they die but as he their life died? Hence as he was so one with them as to be made to bear their sins in his own body, they must have been so one with him, as to have borne the penalty of the law in his bearing it. This is just in accordance with what I then wrote, and preached, and now believe and preach. Hence, if Elder C. had transcribed that whole letter, he would have saved me the trouble of this explanation; and have saved himself from the charge in this instance, of giving, and that knowingly, a one sided view of my sentiments, as a just representation of them. For he evidently had the letter before him when he made that extract.

Elder C. now comes forward with an argument, for a rarity, he says:

"If in the death of Christ there was a ransom price, and if a ransom is an equivalent rendered for the demand against those to be ransomed, and the church or sinners died with Christ, &c. Then they aided in the payment of that ransom, and in rendering the equivalent for the demand against them. Nothing is clearer than this, unless to get out of the difficulty, we contend that Christ died for one object and his people in him for another, which would be a greater absurdity and also inconsistent with the idea that they are one. Talk of Arminianism! Why this scheme out Herods Herod! Old Arminius, the Wesleys, Adam Clark and all the host of Arminian authors must surrender the palm. For none of them ever contended that the sinner could do any thing in making the atonement. They gave Christ the honor of that achievement without their cooperation, but that after the atonement was made, the sinner could help along a little by his effort, prayers, &c. Perhaps that poet who sung of Mingling his tears with Jesus' blood might have believed in this theory. It is strange that the passages of Scripture that represent the believers as suffering, dying, as crucified, &c., with Christ, all of which is accomplished under the reign of divine grace in them, should be carried to Calvary and made to apply to his death there. Paul said, I am - not, was - crucified with Christ, and I die daily. The believer is dead to the law by the body of Christ – dead to sin – crucified unto the world, and the world unto him."

I might pass Elder C's mares-nest which he has found and chuckles over so much, as he has done with some of my arguments; but I prefer calmly investigating his positions. His conclusions from his position in the argument, are, Then they aided in the payment of that ransom, &c. Not so fast, Sir. Let us notice some of the positions of Scripture before we fall before your logic. It is written, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Again, it is written, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned." In this latter text it is declared, That death passed upon all, for that all have sinned; yet in the former text it is laid down as an undeniable proposition, that In Adam all died, then of course all must have sinned in Adam, for all to die in him. How else could they have died in him but by being in him, and therefore being accounted as having transgressed and incurred the penalty death in his transgressing the command. Even so, in the same way, shall all be made alive in Christ, that is, of course by being in him, their Life, when by his obedience unto death, he exhausted the penalty death due his people, and thus conquered it. And they thus conquered it, in his conquering it. If, then all men in the first part of the text were in Adam, when he died under the penalty, they must have been with him. So if the other all were in Christ, they must have been with him in exhausting the penalty of death. Elder C. will not contend that, because Adam's all were in him, and therefore with him when he transgressed, they aided him in the transgression. If not, his argument falls to the ground, that because Christ's people were in him, and therefore with him in bearing the curse, yea, even bore the curse in his bearing it, that therefore they aided him personally in bearing it. If Christ is the life of his people, and they are by that, identified as the sons of God, are they not personally one with him as such, being even his body, and members in particular and the fullness of him, &c. did they not then in him the Head, do what he did in making the atonement, and yet he the Head did it alone? If by a member of my head I swallow a pill, did not I do it, and is not my body affected by it? If it said my hand put the pill to my mouth, what put the bitter pill of the curse to Christ but the transgression of the members of his body? Elder C. certainly does not hold to an actual union of Christ and his people, such as exist between the head and body, or he could not have formed such an argument. As to the charge of Arminianism, when he finds us denying the actual union of Christ and his people, then he may expect to find us secretly, if not openly, looking for something in our Adamic natures, something to be done by us, or in us, that will make us participants of the benefits of Christ's death. And then, and not till then, may he charge us with Arminianism in our doctrine.

Elder C's criticism upon Gal. 2:20, "I am crucified with Christ," &c. is as inconsistent as his charge of Arminianism. It is true, Paul there speaks of himself experimentally. But does experience produce a salvation; or is it a being brought experimentally to the knowledge of that salvation which is in Christ Jesus, and which he is? Faith brings nothing into existence, any more than common belief does. It leads us to know spiritual things, to know the truth as it is in Jesus Christ in being crucified was made a curse for us. Is repentance a bearing the curse or being crucified with Christ? Take the other text which Elder C. quotes in connexion, "I am dead to the law by the body of Christ." Does repentance produce a death to the law? Paul speaks of dying when sin revived, and again speaks of sins slaying him by the commandment. Children of God, in this, when you was thus slain, lying destitute of all hope of ever becoming any better, or of doing any thing to recommend you to the mercy of God, did you feel that you was dead to the law, that its demands against you had ceased? Or rather were you not more alive to its demands, so that you could see now way how God could be just and save you from its curse? And was not its demands so personal against you, that you saw that whosoever also might be saved, God would be just in assigning you over to everlasting punishment? How then have you since become dead to the law? Why as Paul did, not by repentance, faith, or any other exercise, but by the body of Christ. God gave you faith to behold his body as slain, and him as being made a curse, to redeem guilty sinners like you from the curse, and all the demands of the law. You may not all the time have inquired, or understood how this could be, but the substance of Christ's actually representing his people on the cross you felt; yea, as personal as the curse had stood against you, now you felt it exhausted and therefore as though you had borne it, in Christ's bearing it; and hence you was from this time so dead to it, that its thunders could no more alarm you. Elder C. may think as he pleased about our carrying these texts back to Calvary; but rest assured faith will carry the believer directly back there, for all his hope, and all his participation in the benefits of Christ's death, yea, he is made to now that if he was not with Christ there, and his sins personally were not expiated, he cannot be saved. We shall se now who comes the highest to Arminianism, our accuser or we. If he can tell the people of any other way of being delivered from the curse of the law, short of honoring the law, through Christ's honoring it, and therefore as being crucified with him, the Wesleyans would be as much pleased with his preaching, as they are of late with the preaching of his coadjutor in the war against us, Wm. Gilmore.

Elder C. once more:

"And now dear brethren shall this war about the prepositions with and for, with the opinion of a created life and Head of the church, be allowed to rend asunder and break the peace and fellowship of Zion? If this is to be done well may we take up the lamentation of David. Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Arkelen, lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph."

If Elder C. has reference in naming these fors and with to the doctrine whether the elect were one with Christ, so as their sins were legally accounted his, and his obedience to the law accounted theirs, or that their sins were charged to him and he made to suffer for them, by an arbitrary substitution of him in their law place, without any legal claim against him, such as was against them in consequence of their union with Adam, then I think the fors and withs of vast importance, involving no less a consequence, than the purity of violation of God's justice and truth. God said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Again he hath said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Hence the sinner must either suffer the penalty in his own person, or be so one with Christ as to suffer it in him, or the truth of God fails. And where is God's justice in making an innocent person a substitute for the guilty, if there is not such a union of the parties as to make them legally one; and if legally and truly one, where he is, they are with him, as being one. Elder

C. seems to have no other idea of the union of Christ and his people, than that of a combination of persons bound together by the ties of love. In that case, to be with him, they would have to be personally with him as man. But that is not the union we speak of. Those who have a conception of a spiritual man in the believer, can conceive of that spiritual existence being Christ in them; and not Adam reformed.

Hence they can believe in the idea of having ever been with Christ, and of his Godhead having ever been their dwelling place. But with what kind of grace does Elder C. talk about breaking the peace of Zion. Did we ever make our views a test of fellowship with them, or show a disposition to sever from them, until they drove us from them, by their slanderous misrepresentations of our sentiments, and denunciations of us as heretics, in a way that it would be understood who they meant, though they had not the candor either to name us, or to state truly our sentiments. If the difference were of so trivial importance as Elder C. here represents it to be, why all this persecution of us in their associations and from their pulpits, preaching us heretics, instead of preaching Christ and him crucified? I presume the point is, he thought we ought to yield our views, however conscientious we might be in holding them, and believing them to be according to the Scriptures, to accommodate ourselves to their feelings. But because we would dare to think and search for ourselves, and preach as we had learned from the Bible, and not from Doct. Gill, no denunciations of us can be too severe. But what will all this avail them. If they should blast my name, it will be but a short triumph; I shall soon be out of their way, and it may be I shall be at rest.

Besides God has others in the field whom he has nerved, naturally, and spiritually, for engaging in any contest they may meet for the truth's sake. You may enlist in your behalf your Gilmores, your Pitchers and Mansers, but will God own such as advocates for his cause? God will assuredly in the end, vindicate the integrity and honor of his revelation, against all the decrees of councils and systems of men that may be arrayed against us. "The word," says Christ, "that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12:48.

Elder C.'s concluding paragraph:

"Well would it have been for those who have been mainly instrumental in introducing these new doctrines and opinions and thereby causing divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine we have learned, if they had observed their own precepts, and followed the wise counsels which they gave in years past. See Signs, 1st Vol., page 255, where Eld. Trott says: - 'I think we have enough to do to face the opposers of the purpose and grace of God as revealed in his sacred word, with an unbroken front, without suffering ourselves to be divided into parties, by disputes about our individual peculiar notions concerning certain points. I could also bring forward peculiar notions of my own relative to certain minor points, and most of us could probably do the same, and thus introduce a continued sense of disputes, but what would it profit? If there ever was a time that called for unanimity among the willing subjects of Zion's King and a united firm stand in opposition to the encroachments of will worship and anti-christian delusions, that time is now.' Yes that time is still now as much so as it was 20 years ago. But I will now close. I have no unkind feelings towards any and would cheerfully aid in any way consistent with the truth as it is in Jesus to effect a reconciliation. It has not been my design to try to place any one in a false position or to misrepresent their views. What the record shows I am willing to abide by whether that will sustain what I have set down or not, and I want my testimony against these doctrines to go into history in a tangible form, and will cheerfully abide the issue that may ensue from the church of the living God, which is the pillar and ground of the truth.

"JOHN CLARK. "Nov. 8th,

1852."

Thus closes Elder C.'s communication. He has given in this paragraph another extract from my former writings with his communication. I think myself that the extract he has made contains wholesome advice. I will not say that I have in all instances lived up to it. I think in several instances I have erred from it. I am an erring mortal. I need daily forgiveness from God, and forbearance from my brethren. The advice therein contained is as important now, as when written, to the willing subjects of Zion's King; though the warfare is somewhat changed. Elder C., I presume, knows enough of war, to know that when the attack of the enemy is made from a new quarter, it is necessary to change our front. Then the combat was with the New Schoolism; now it is with nominalism, if I may be allowed to coin a word, in distinction from realities, as also with a servile submission to the opinions of certain fathers, and decisions of councils, as opposed to the integrity of the Scriptures as they stand.

What Elder C. says in conclusion, about having no unkind feelings, and about not having designed to try to place any in a false position,

&c., I leave as it stands. I wish I could believe in the sincerity of his declarations, that his misrepresentations were from an error of judgment, an undersigned misconception of our views; for I would rather think favorably of him than unfavorably. What he has written and said on the point, has, according to his wishes, gone into history. What I have formerly written has been read by some, and what I now write may fall into the hands of some who will, with candor, judge of the correctness or incorrectness of his representations of my views, and of the error or soundness of my views according to the true standard, the Scriptures.

I have thus replied, I think calmly, to Elder C.'s communication. I have used some 33 expressions harsher, than I wish to use towards one, who has a standing as a Baptist preacher, but not harsher than the occasion seemed to me to require.

In conclusion I will say, it cannot be expected but that Elder C. will reply in some measure to this; indeed I have called on him for a reply to some points; I would request that if he undertakes any further to give my views, he will give them in their connexion, candidly as I have declared them. I do not claim for them an exemption from error, and I am willing that they should be candidly examined and tested by the Scriptures, the only standard I admit. In my reply, so far as his attacks on me have brought them to notice, I have given my views on the points of difference between us, in a pretty full, and as far as I was able, in a candid and plain manner. It is not for me to say what course Elder C. shall pursue toward my views, but I will venture to give it as my opinion that it will in the end be more for his credit, if he will attack my views, to state them honestly, as I have declared them, then to carefully investigate them, and if he can, by sound argument and the testimony of the Scriptures show them to be heresy; than arbitrarily to denounce them as such, because they differ from certain creeds, and then to give countenance to his denunciations, falsify my views. But God will take care of his truth, and with this I would wish to be satisfied. Though I would desire that, if it is consistent to his will, he would soon make his truth manifest, whether Elder C. or myself fall before it.

S. TROTT. FOOTNOTE:

* So it reads in the original, John 8:12

APPENDIX

CONTAINING SOME REMARKS ON THE EDITORIAL IN "ZION'S PILGRIM," FOR MARCH, 1853, IN RESPONSE TO A LETTER OF ELDER CLARK, PUBLISHED IN THE SAME NUMBER. ALSO, REMARKS ON A LETTER OF ELDER LOUTHAN'S.

The part of Mr. Manser's Editorial which I shall notice, will be found on page 78th Zion's Pilgrim for 1853. It is this:

"We do not hesitate nor fear to declare, that men who from the pulpit or otherwise can treat with ridicule and can pour contempt upon such expressions as a Triune God, a Three- one God, &c., used by the servants of Christ and fully warranted by the Scriptures, are rotten at the core, with all their show of religion and pretended soundness, and are to be shunned by the children of God as enemies to the cross of Christ, and secret emissaries of Satan though coming in the garbs of professed friendship to the cause of truth.

"The church of the living God from the Apostles' days to the present time have embraced the doctrine of three divine persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost, having plain Scriptures to support it, and being led into it by a blessed and heartfelt experience; while those who have denied and caviled at this, have just been regarded as lacking that holy unction and anointing which teacheth all things, &c.!"

Thus this Editor, catching the fire from Elder C.'s letter, which was of a piece with it, goes on with what would appear a holy zeal to denounce all who do not receive every expression which he holds sacred. Yet he himself can treat with contempt the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, as King in Zion, by trampling under foot, what he has acknowledged to be the appointed ordinances of Christ, by publicly approving of extending fellowship to, and communion with those who pervert the ordinance of baptism by substituting sprinkling for immersion, and infants for believers. Yet is he hailed as a brother by Eld. C., and he with other characters are among those I presume whom he terms in his letter to this Editor, The living in Jerusalem. But for what has he denounced certain persons rotten to the core, and as deserving to be shunned by the children of God? For ridiculing, as he says, certain names by which those whom he calls the servants of Christ choose to designate God. As though the allwise God did not know by what names to reveal Himself, without men's inventing names for Him. It is this spirit which I wish to point out in this paragraph; a spirit which rejects persons from christian fellowship, because they will not reverence such names as men may invent for God, however religious and sound they may otherwise appear to be.

But who are they to whom Mr. Manser refers? Elder C., in his letter to which this is a response, names only myself, but speaks in connexion of the Editor of the Signs. It is therefore probably Mr. M. has reference to us, or to others with us. It is possible that some among us may have spoken slightly of the term Triune as being too pedantic for plain O.S. Baptists, though I have not heard them. But I know that Bro. Beebe, as well as myself, have repeatedly declared our belief in the sentiment intended to be conveyed by that name, that is, that God exists as three and one. I know of none among us who do not so believe. As to the term in English, the Three- One God, I have myself frequently used it for brevity's sake. I have often had occasion to speak of God as existing as Three and yet as being but one, in distinction from the tri- personal notion. For whilst I believe that God exists as three in unity, I cannot believe that there are three divine persons in the Godhead. The legitimate idea conveyed by the term person, and especially where the term persons in the plural is used, is that if individual beings. Hence three divine persons, would be three divine individuals, and what would that be but three Gods? I believe in the incomprehensibility of God, but I cannot believe in His being an absurdity, and to speak of three individuals, as one being, is to my apprehension an absurdity.

In his next paragraph, he goes on in the same spirit to unchristianite all who deny the doctrine of three divine persons in the Godhead, or who cavil at it. As this strikes directly at me, it becomes me to inquire particularly into the authorities he gives to this doctrine. I will take his authorities given inversely.

He speaks of the Church having been led into this doctrine by a blessed and heartfelt experience. I have read and heard related many experiences, and those of numbers of persons who were tripersonalists, but I have never known one to name this things as any part of what they were led into the knowledge of, in their experience. I have known those who have been led into their experience, to a heartfelt sense of the Godhead of Christ Jesus, as they had not known it before. But I have not known of any being led to the knowledge of three persons in the Godhead by any such experience as that by which they were led to the knowledge of salvation. So that Mr. M., I think, was indulging in the imagination of the poet, when he wrote this. It was just that kind of speculation which many have mistaken for christian experience.

His next point is that the church has plain Scripture to support this doctrine. I find plain Scripture for believing that God has revealed himself as three, as Father, as Word or Son, and as Holy Ghost, and that these three are one, so one that whenever God is named, we are bound to believe it to be that God in His whole person or being, who hath said, "I am the LORD (or Jehovah,) and there is none else, no God beside me." Isa. 45:5. But plain Scripture to support the idea of three divine persons in the Godhead, I have not seen, neither do I think it can be showed. The Son is said to be the express image of God's person. Heb. 1:1,2. He is such, in that, all that hath been declared of God or reflected of Him, has been by the Son. "No man hath seen God at any time, &c." Again, that God who in time past spake unto the Father by the Prophets (Heb. 1:1) can be no other than the who by the Prophets said, "I even I am the LORD and besides me there is no Savior." But the Son is the only Savior, therefore the Son as God, must be the same with him who spake by the Prophets. Hence I cannot think the expression person, here has any reference to different persons in the Godhead. But the declaration, the express image of his person, conveys to me the idea that God in all His attributes and fullness is represented by the Son, as Christ said to Philip, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Again, it has been supposed that tri-personality in the Godhead, is proved from the distinctive use of the personal pronouns in reference to the Father and Son, &c. But it must be borne in mind, that the Son as he is manifested, is the one Mediator between God and men. Paul says, "A mediator is not a mediator of one; but God is one," thus showing that a mediator must be personally distinct from God, as well as from men.

Consequently the Son in order to be a Mediator must possess a personality distinct from God, as well as one of the parties to be mediated between. A distinct personality in the Godhead, unless it made him distinct from God, would not meet the case. Hence says Paul again, "There is one God and one Mediator between God and men," - and who is he? God the Son? No; but "The Man Christ Jesus." If the Life that was in the Word from the beginning does not constitute the Son personally distinct from the Father and the Holy Ghost, in the estimation of others, yet surely if the Word in being made flesh, was made a perfect man, then in that manhood he possessed all the qualities of a distinct person; Jesus in Pilate's view was a person; then of course the Word or Son possessed in consequence of his assumption of manhood a distinct personality from the Father and Holy Ghost, who were not made flesh. But as the second man, or the man Christ Jesus, was the Lord from Heaven, so I believe he actually existed as the one Mediator from before the foundation of the world. But as I have above showed that no personal distinction in the Godhead would capacitate him for acting as Mediator between God and men, he must be personally distinct from God to stand in the relation of one. I think I find requisite personal distinction in the Word from his having in him that life which was the light of men. If that life was the life of Christ's people as I think no candid man can deny after considering what is said of it as the light of men, from the 4th to the 13th verse John, 1st Chap., then he was one with his people, being their life or existence, as he was one with God, being God, and at the same time had a personal distinction from each. He was thus distinct from his people because he was God, and distinct from the Father and the Holy Ghost because he was the life of his people. What a glorious person for a Mediator? One with God and one with his people, therefore securing the glory of the one and blessedness of the other; a Mediator in which both parties meet, and who is the antitype of the mercy seat which covered the Ark and the tables of the Law, and from which God communed with Moses and Israel, so in the Mediator God communes with His people and they behold His face in peace. Elder C. and his brother Manser, may pronounce the idea of such a Mediator, blindness and heresy; but with all their orthodoxy they cannot present to view a person so suitable to stand as Mediator between God and men, as is the man Jesus Christ in his compound person. Hence as we contemplate him as a Mediator it is no wonder the Scriptures present him to view in all the characteristics of a distinct person; so that we need not undertake to disturb the unity of the Godhead to find a solution of the use of the personal pronouns as found in the Scriptures from Gen. 1:26, and on.

Mr. Manser's first-named authority for three divine persons in the Godhead, and the last in our notice, is that the church from the Apostles' days to the present time have embraced that doctrine. If he could have showed us that the Apostles themselves taught this doctrine of three divine persons in the Godhead, there would have been no need of reference to the opinions of the church in after ages. If this doctrine of three persons were true, it is unaccountable that the Apostles should not have taught it in direct terms; especially if it be so important a point, that the believing, or not believing it constitutes the distinction between those who have been anointed with the holy unction and those who have not.

However, as Mr. M.'s assertion involves an important point in history, we will examine it. Our appeal will of course be to history for proof on the point. Mosheim's testimony, speaking of the introduction of the Arian controversy, in the early part of the 4th century, is this: "The subject of this fatal controversy which kindled such deplorable divisions throughout the christian world, was the doctrine of three persons in the Godhead, a doctrine which in the three preceeding centuries had happily escaped the vain curiosity of human researches and been left undefined and undetermined by any particular set of ideas. The church, indeed, had frequently decided against Savellians and others, that there was a real difference between the Father and the Son, and that the Holy Ghost was distinct from both; or, as we commonly speak, that three distinct persons exist in the Deity; but the mutual relation of these persons to each other, and the nature of that distinction that subsists between them are matters that hitherto were neither disputed nor explained, and with respect to which the church had, consequently observed a profound silence. Nothing was dictated to the faith of christian doctors entertained different sentiments upon this subject without giving the least offence, and discoursed variously concerning the distinctions between Father, Son and Holy Ghost; each one following his respective opinions with the utmost liberty." Well would it be if the church was brought to that ancient simplicity concerning the modus of God's existing as three. Notice that this learned historian, though himself a tri-personalist, does not represent the church at this time, as having adopted the idea of three distinct persons in the Godhead, but the reverse, only that the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost were distinct; that is, they held to a trinity in the Godhead, as myself and others with me have held it. It is true he attempts to define their notions of the distinction existing between the three as corresponding with, to use his words, "As we commonly speak, that three distinct persons exist in Deity." And yet he fully shows that the christian doctors (or teachers) discoursed variously concerning the distinction between Father, Son and Holy Ghost. That Mosheim in the above extract, meant to convey the idea that the notion of the Three, being a trinity of persons in the Godhead was not a defined or generally received idea is further evident from what he says relative to the Macedonian sect which arose in the latter part of this (the 4th) century. He says the council assembled by Theodosius (the Emperor) in A.D. 381, "Put a stop by its authority to the growing evil and crushed this rising sect before it had arrived at its full maturity. An hundred and fifty Bishops who were present at this council gave the finishing touch to what the Council of Nice had left imperfect, and fixed in a full and determinate manner, the doctrine of three persons in one God." Thus history assures us, that the doctrine of three persons in one God was not fixed as the orthodox doctrine until the year 381, fifty years after the great Council of Nice, assembled by the decrees of Constantine the Great. If we examine Jones' history of the Waldenses it will be found, that whilst he speaks of the doctrine of a trinity being held, that as, that God exists as three, yet he in no instance mentions the doctrine of three persons in the Godhead as being held up to the Council of Nice in the year 325. Neither in the Creed adopted by that Council, as given by him, from Eusebius, is there any mention of three persons in the Godhead. In some excellent remarks of this historian the presumption of mortals in attempting to define the modus of the Divine existence, or how God exists as three and one, he quotes even Athanasius as saying upon this point, and as he thinks correctly, "The Father cannot be the Son, nor the Son the Father, and the Holy Ghost is never called by the name of the Son, but is called the spirit of the Father and of the Son. The Holy Trinity is but one divine nature and one God. This is sufficient for the faithful, human knowledge goes no farther. The cherubims veil the rest with their wings." Thus, notwithstanding the presumption of Athanasius and the Council in defining the Trinity in which God exists, to be three in the modus of their existence, as he that begets, he that is begotten, and he that is breathed forth, they then had not pried so far under the wings of the cherubims, or into that which God has not revealed, as even to see that their own prescribing to men what they must believe, as to how God exists as three, would lead others in like presumption to constitute the three into three persons in one God. Thus Mr. Manser's historical assertion that the doctrine of three persons in the Godhead has been held by the church from the Apostles' days, and his candor, or intelligence, in making the assertion, are alike dissolved into air by coming in contact with history. But the arrogance of him, and others in making tripersonality a test of regeneration, and of fellowship, is more fully developed by the following circumstances: The Novatians separated from what was considered the Catholic or general church, A.D. 251, seventy- four years before the Council of Nice, wherein Athanasius' notion of the Sonship of the Son of God was established. The Donatists in Africa in like manner and for like cause had also separated from the Catholic church some years' before the Nicene Council. There was no charge against these separatists on account of doctrine. The complaints against them were that they were too rigid in discipline, especially in receiving members, that they had made a great split in the church, and that they would receive none from the Catholic church without rebaptizing them, on account of the corruptions in that church. They thus occupied then the same ground towards the Catholic church that the O. School Baptists do now towards the New School. These, though much persecuted by the Catholic church or the christian Emperors, as Heads of the church, were numerous for one or two centuries, but being ultimately driven from their homes by the Emperor Honorius, were lost sight of, until the Waldenses were discovered in the vallies of Piedmont. These being a people holding a like separation from the Catholic church with the Novatians and Donatists, are supposed to be a continuation of those ancient churches, thus hid from the Dragon and the Beats in the place which God prepared for the woman. So that if the Waldenses be considered the true church in distinction from the Catholic, then the Donatists and Novatians, the only separatists from the Catholic church, from which they could be likely to have descended, must have been the true church before the doctrine of the eternal generation of the Son, as God, and that of three persons in the Godhead, were brought in and established as the doctrine of that church. Hence we find no mention of these doctrines in the Confessions of Faith of the Waldenses. Again, as the Dragon is said to have given to the Beast that arose out of the sea, his power, his seat, and great authority, imperial Rome as christian, must have been intended by the Dragon, and not Rome pagan as I formerly thought. The Emperor's presuming to connect the kingdom of Christ with their State government, taking the control of its affairs and enforcing such doctrines and ceremonies as the Council called by their command decided on, and that by cruel persecutions, was certainly a monster deserving the name of Dragon, as the power which arose after him, is called a Beast in distinction. The distinction between the two being this, the Dragon based his ecclesiastical powers upon his imperial authority over State governments by virtue of his ecclesiastical authority. Rome pagan was nothing but a kingdom of this world, but the Dragon was first seen as a wonder in heaven, Rev. 12:3; and besides is represented as continuing, as he does in all the religious establishments of every age and country. See Rev. 12:17; which cannot with propriety be said of Rome pagan. Thus as Constantine by his imperial authority called the Council of Nice and presided on it, and afterwards enforced its decisions by the sword, whilst he also persecuted the Novatians and Donatists for separating from the Catholic church. And as the Council of Constantinople was called by the Emperor Theodosius, and its decisions, that there existed three persons in the Godhead, were enforced by his persecuting edicts. It is therefore evident from history that the doctrine of the eternal generation of the Son of God, and that of tri-personality in the Godhead had their origin as established doctrines of the church, from the Dragon. Yet strange to tell, these very doctrines having such origin, are made, not only by Mr.

Manser and the popular, so called evangelical churches, but also by professed O.S. Baptists, as tests of soundness in the faith, and of christian fellowship. And they are still attempted to be enforced in the same spirit from which they originated. That is, demanding arbitrarily implicit faith in them as they had been handed down. Whenever a person manifests a disposition to examine the divine testimony for himself, and declares his dissent from the decisions of those Councils, instead of attempting to explain and prove those points and to clear away the objections the enquirer may bring against them, he is at once denounced as a heretic, or as a disturber of the peace of the churches, by bringing in NEW THINGS.

Here I leave Elder Clark and his brother Manser to pay my respects to Elder Louthan.

In the pamphlet I published entitled "An Appeal to the churches of the Ketocton Ass., I had accasion to present Elder Louthan to view, in some of his movements. He afterwards wrote me a lengthy letter on the subject, which I concluded not to answer. Since that, I have understood that he furnished a copy or copies of his letter to some of the Lauck and Clark party, that they have been feasting on its abusive contents, until they are so excited with it, that one of them, a Baptist, has said Burning is too good for me. But this is only a letting off a little of the spirit of the Dragon.

In consequence of this, I have thought it best to notice some few sentences of his letter in which our veracities stand in opposition; leaving his abusive expressions and denunciations of me unmolested, for the further enjoyment of those who delight in such things, the first point in his letter I shall notice, is the following: Speaking concerning my notice of his course at the Corresponding Meeting of 1850, in a letter to Bro. Dudley, he says:

"Why were you not candid enough to tell all the truth and inform Bro. Dudley that the Doct. Klipstein had preached his D.'s views on the stand on Friday, and as Louthan preached on Saturday he felt constrained to notice them and to give Bro. D. as the author of them, as they originated with him.

Would this have been too much truth to have answered your purpose?"

To this my reply is, that Bro. Klipstein, in preaching on Friday, preached his own views, that he knew he was at a meeting and among brethren who in general agreed with him in sentiment, and that he therefore had no just ground to suppose in preaching thus, he would provoke any dispute; that you, previous to that meeting, had been with Elder Buck and among his churches, where you had undoubtedly learned our agreement in most points with Bro. Dudley in the views advanced in his Circular, that on Friday night, you and Bro. Beebe with other brethren staid at brother Leachman's; that you there made your attack upon brother D. and his Circular, and that the whole matter was gone over two or three times that night, brother Beebe meeting your charges, and refuting them, and exculpating Bro. D. from all blame in having the Circular brought to public notice, assuring you that he was attending the Licking Ass. at the time, and that it was through his proposition it was brought before the Association, and yet when your charges were once exhausted and refuted, you would fly back and reiterate them, and again Bro. Beebe would drive you from them. Yet the next day when you came to occupy the stand instead of preaching the gospel, you entertained your audience with a repetition of the same charges against Bro. Dudley and his Circular from which you had been thrice driven the night before. From all this I think I was warranted in the conclusion that you came to the Cor. Meeting determined to make this attack upon Bro. D. and through him, upon our sentiments, hoping there were some elements among us on which you might operate to foment a division. It was on this account that I represented you as coming on a mission for making a division. I have now perhaps given you more truth on the point than you want. But as you have drawn it out, it must stand, and as truth too with those acquainted with the affair. The next portion of Elder L's letter which I shall notice is this:

"Our first meeting was at Bailtimore Ass. in May, 18, 1850. You urged me to preach the introductory sermon, and after you heard me preach three sermons at that meeting unsolicited on my part you took me by the hand and with tears in your eyes, you observed, Bro. Louthan I wish you to know that I have fellowship for your doctrine, to which I made but little reply, for I then believed your friendship was not worth much."

After several other lines of like stamp with the last but increasing in vulgarity of abuse, he goes on to say:

"At that meeting you prevailed on me to let you make an appointment for preaching at the City of Washington, and insisted on my attending the Corresponding Meeting."

I appeal to the candid reader, Was there any thing uncivil or unchristian-like in my treatment to Elder Louthan at this interview taking his own statement of the matter? Any thing calculated to provoke him to make such a rough attack upon our sentiments through his attack upon our sentiments through his attack on Bro. Dudley, at the Cor. Meeting? He was at the Balt. Ass. rather as a stranger, and as it was my province to invite one to preach the Introductory, I invited him. Knowing that he had a regular standing among the O.S. Baptists, I was willing to treat him as a brother, though I presume from what I had seen through the Signs, that he had some prejudices against me, and against some of my views. He twice afterwards preached during the meeting, and I was generally pleased with his preaching; there was nothing particularly objectionable in his doctrine, and he appeared to aim at peace, as he touched on no points, on which we were known to disagree. When I am pleased I am quite as apt to give a token of it a when I am displeased.

Elder L. is not the first person who has for a time preached in conformity to the known views of those he was among till he gained their confidence. Neither am I the first that has been deceived in a person's preaching. I will relate an anecdote.

Our aged brother Abraham Cole, who, while living was a member of the Black Rock Baptist church, and was pretty extensively known as a correct, firm and discerning O.S. Baptist, was once traveling out west, and chanced to spend a Lordsday in the vicinity of a Presbyterian meeting which he attended, and being pleased with the soundness of the discourse, he concluded the preacher was one taught of God; going up to the preacher to express his approbation, he said to him "I perceive Sir, you have had a good teacher." Yes, replied the preacher, I studied under a good teacher, but he has been dead several years. Poor Bro. Cole, was taken all aback. So was I, when I heard Elder L's philippie at the Cor. Meeting.

The next portion of Elder L's letter which requires notice reads thus:

"As you know it was after Bro. Beebe had preached and placed me as I thought in an improper light before the people, I spoke a few words in reply, in which I stated a large portion of God's word on the subject of regeneration implied a change, that this was their meaning. At that time I looked at you and you shook your head and said I was mistaken. I then quoted the language of Paul who says, it is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. I stated that if that passage did not imply a change I did not know the meaning of language."

There is Elder L's statement, but I still feel confident that the statement I formerly made is correct although differing so materially from his. It is true that he had labored in discourse to prove that regeneration was a change of the soul. But when he arose to reply to Bro. Beebe, after blaming him for attacking his discourse, &c. He remarked, "Much has been said on the subject of regeneration, What is it? It is a washing, (or cleansing) that is its import in the Scriptures." He looked round to me as he spake those words, and as he says, I shook my head at him, and said with some emphasis, and loud, My brother, you are mistaken. And as he turned from me he quoted Tit. 3:5, as he mentions in the above extract, and probably added, "If this does not imply a change, &c." I feel confident that in this statement I am in substance correct; not only from the recollection I have of the matter, but also from the connecting circumstances. Elder

L. ought to recollect that when he arose that second time, he was much excited, and hence was not as sensible of what he said as though he had been calm. As to representing regeneration as a change, instead of a washing or cleansing whichever word be used, if he had so represented it, it would not have so surprised me as to lead me to interrupt him as I did, for I had often heard it so represented, and I do myself believe there is a change connected with regeneration both in the soul and life. In the soul in that it is quickened from its dormant state to a sense of its relation to God, &c. Here are the two versions of the matter; and there I leave it. If I am incorrect in the statement, it is from a wrong impression made on my mind at the time.

The last extract which I shall make from his letter, is this:

"In reference to the charge of the Ketocton Ass. It is true I laid down the position that faith was the result of testimony, and you must know my course of argument on that occasion. I spoke of a historical faith and the faith of miracles, as being entirely insufficient to make a man acquainted with Christ as his Savior; that a man in this respect might have all faith so that he could remove mountains, and without charity which could only flow from one who had been made alive from the dead it was nothing. You know that I contended in that sermon that faith was the gift of God and the fruit of the spirit; that I believed it to be one thing for a man to be born again, and another for him to have the evidence, &c."

Elder L. has once or twice stated in this extract that I know this and that, but I prefer stating for myself what I know. I know he is so far honest, as to confess that he laid down the position, That faith is the result of testimony. I know that being surprised at such a position from him my attention was fully aroused to see how he would carry it out, whether he would make faith out a mere natural belief or whether he would give it a turn so as to conform it more to what is generally received by O.S. Baptists. I know he went on to sustain his position at some length by a reference to our belief of natural things as being produced by evidence; and that whatever he may have said about historical faith, he said nothing to show that he meant any thing else than what the literal construction of his position implied. I know that at length he made these remarks; "It will be said that faith is the gift of God. So it is, because God gives the evidence by which it is produced." Or to that effect. Finding him thus wresting this text to suit his position, I turned to Bro. Beebe, who was sitting by the side of me, and said, If they are going to make a split, I care not how soon they do it, if such Campbellism as this is to be preached and received among them. After this I paid but little attention while I staid at the stand to what he said, so that if he mentioned faith's being a fruit of the spirit I know not what he said concerning it. But I think he is a man of sufficient sense to know that if he had quoted either of those texts and left them to stand as he has, in the above quotation from his letter, they would have stood in direct contradiction to his position. What, Faith absolutely the gift of God, and the fruit of the spirit, and yet like common belief, the result of testimony!!

I have thus given my statements on the several points on which the veracity of Elder Louthan and myself are in contact. I would have preferred, could I have been convinced that my impressions concerning his declarations were wrong, to have recalled what I had written; after receiving his letter, I wrote to several brethren who were present at the meetings requesting them to state what were their recollections on the points, but found that neither of them had a sufficiently clear recollection of the matter to state any thing decisive, two yeas having then elapsed; if any thing their impressions seemed to favor mine. Hence I must leave the matter as it is, until I can be convinced that I have not made a correct statement. Those who are pleased with the abusive parts of his letter will of course believe his statements correct and mine false. Others will probably conclude that there is some undersigned mistake on the one side, or the other. And this I would hope a correct view of the subject.

S. TROTT.

Absolute Predestination No. 1.

THIS sentiment as expressed in the Prospectus of the "Signs of the Times," has called forth so much invective from some, and so much ridicule from others of the popular Baptists of this region that one would conclude some strange and absurd idea had been advanced; some whim daringly promulgated as a part of the secret things of God.

It therefore, may not be amiss, to re-examine the subject, and enquire whether it be a revealed truth of God, or a visionary notion of man, which is calling forth such malicious sneers from those who profess to be the servants of God.

Predestination is the same in meaning, with fore-ordination or foreappointment; and is with God, one with pre-determination; for as God declares, so He determines, the end from the beginning; saying my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. Thus the predetermination of God, to admit sin into the world embraced in it the decreeing of the time, manner, result &c. of that event. And His predetermination to bruise His Son in the place of sinners included in it the instruments, time, place and manner of His death. Compare Acts 2:23 and 4th, 25-28, and John 13:1, and Heb. 13:11,12. The doctrine of predestination, then, is this, that God has so predetermined every event, as to fix with such precision its limits and bounds, its causes and effects, that with Him it is divested of all contingency. This Brother Beebe, is the monstrous doctrine, which you engage to maintain, in your Paper, and which we Old Fashioned Baptists, some of us, profess to believe, and which is drawing down upon you and us the reproaches and contempt of all the learned gentry among the Baptists.

The term absolute, has been prefixed by yourself and others to the word predestination, to distinguish the doctrine you hold from the idea of a conditional predestination. Strictly speaking, however, this is an unnecessary appendage. A conditional predestination, is no predestination; for the predestination of an event conditionally, is but a pre- determination to leave the event undetermined, and therefore excludes predestination altogether.

Having thus briefly explained what we mean by predestination, I will proceed to show that it is a doctrine taught in the Scriptures. In relation to the salvation of the Elect we have the doctrine of predestination expressed in direct terms, as in Rom. 8:29,30 - "For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son &c. - Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called &c." And Eph. 1:5 - "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ &c." and verse 11 - "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will." In these passages, we have not only the word predestination used in the translation, but in the original the Greek word employed is of a corresponding signification; being Proorizo, formed of Pro, before, and Orizo, to bound, or limit, to determine, to define &c., and is derived from the theme: oros = a bound or limit, or the end of a thing. Hence the literal signification of the word, used is, a fixing before, the bound or limit, of a thing or event.

If we look at the connection, we shall find the idea conveyed by the word, fully sustained by its use in these cases. In Rom. 8:29 & 30 the whole of the Apostles argument in these and the following verses of this chapter are in support of the declaration he makes. Verse 28, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." To this the inquiry might be made, How, Paul, can we know this? "For, or because," is the answer, "whom He did foreknow" that is as the objects of His purpose and call, "He did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the first born among many brethren." This did decree that they should be like Christ, should partake of His image; should as His brethren participate in that life that is in Him, in a justification from the demands of the law, in the Father's peculiar love and care, in the resurrection, and in that glory which the Father gave Him, &c. And this was no inefficient purpose, "Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called, and whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified; them He also glorified." Paul now retorts some inquiries to those who might doubt the assertion made in verse 28. He asks in verse 31, "What shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" Or more emphatically, "who against us," that is, who is it that is against us? He goes on to confirm his position by a series of inquires in which he shows that the predestination of God is firm against all the assaults of tribulation or distress, &c., and against death and life, and angels and principalities, and powers, and things present, and things to come, and height and depth, &c. Thus we see that the predestination of God in this case not only secures the leading purpose that the elect shall be conformed to the glorious image of His Son, but also fixes the limits, and determines the end of all things which transpire in relation to them.

Again, if we refer to the use of the word in Ephesians we shall find that the predestination and the determination or purpose of God go together. Thus Chapter 1, verses 4-6, "According as He hath chosen us in Him, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love: Having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, to Himself according to the good pleasure of His will. – To the praise of the glory of His grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the beloved." Predestination is here represented to be according to the good pleasure of His will, and is a decreeing of the objects of His choice unto the adoption of children by Christ Jesus, before the foundation of the world; but determines at that early period their being accepted in the Beloved; and of course decides with certainty their repenting, believing, and being sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise; things necessarily embraced in their experimental acceptance in Christ. Again, in verse 11 the Apostle speaks of having obtained an inheritance as the result of that predestination of God which is according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will. Here then we have in these and the connecting verses every part of salvation brought to view as the predestination of God. For He worketh all things, not according to the caprice of fallen men, nor according to any fortuitous circumstances which may transpire, but according to the counsel of His own will. If then it is a fact, as the Apostle declares, that God worketh all things after the counsel of His own will; then does the counsel of God's own will not only determine with certainty all the parts of salvation and fix the whole chosen race, blameless before Him in love in the possession of their inheritance, as heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, but also decrees the result of all events according to His good pleasure.

If all persons with whom we have to do were disposed, cheerfully, to submit to the decision of Divine Revelation, there would be but one question more to decide in order to determine whether all things, absolutely, or things in a limited sense, are predestinated, or worked according to the decision of the counsel of God's own will, & that question is, – how far does the government of God extend? If His government extends universally over matter and mind, then there is no movement either of matter or mind but what God works after the counsel of His own will, or determines the result thereof according to the good pleasure of His will. King Nebuchadnezzar evidently thought that God's Dominion was universal over Heaven and earth for he said of Him, "He doeth according to His will in the army of Heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, what doest thou?" Dan. 4:35. And the king was certainly correct in this, for Christ assured His Disciples in Matthew 28:18, that all power was given to Him in Heaven and in earth; that is as Mediator. If so, God had it in His own hands to give. Again, Christ says in John 17:2 "As thou hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as thou has given Him." Hence, His power is over the wicked as well as over those to whom He gives eternal life; and it being all power, it must extend to both matter and mind, as there can be no disposing influence, or power, besides, and therefore, the devices both of men and devils, as well as their actions, must be under His control.

Still, however many persons are unwilling to believe that the predestination of God has anything to do with the wicked actions of men or devils. They, in order to be consistent with themselves, ought to believe that wickedness is under the control of an opposite power, and that God exercises no control over wicked actions or thoughts, to limit their extent, or to overrule their results in accordance with His purposes; lest thereby He should be charged with being the author of sin.

I think, however, I shall be able to bring from the Scriptures of truth several facts which go to prove that the predestination of God determines the results, fixes the limits and so controls the actions and devices of wicked men and devils, so as to cause them to terminate in the furtherance of His own glorious purposes.

But as I wish not to be tedious, I will leave the further consideration of this subject for another number.

S. TROTT

Fairfax Court House, Va. Dec. 18th 1833.

93 of 1338

The Withdrawn Circular

Fairfax courthouse, Virginia, September 5th 1834 Concluded

What I have said on the supposition of churches supporting immoral practices (Although there was an apparent reference in the circular to a local case, yet it was designed to have a bearing, as it of course naturally would, on the situation of many of our brethren in different places, who are born down under the burden of corrupt doctrine, and a multiplicity of the schemes of men, and know not how to extricate themselves, being clogged with the present established order among our churches, I will here observe, that the course pursued by many of the Baptists for years passed in scheming to obtain majorities in the churches and associations, then bringing in their benevolent institutions, and taking advantage of the order that the right of transfer of membership is in the church, and the associational rules, to compel the minority to submit to their impositions, is to me a species of persecution of the meanest kind. It would be better, I think to live in a state of exclusion then to submit to it.) When one church may hold as a right of conscience another may claim. And the same liberty we would claim to ourselves we would award to those who may differ from us in doctrine or practice; Satisfied with the privilege of withholding, or withdrawing our fellowship from those whose faith or practice, we believe to be contrary to the word of God.

The view above, taken of this subject, has no tendency toward breaking down, or exposing to contempt the regular discipline of christ's house. Those churches deserving to be recognized as visible churches of Christ cannot be confined in their fellowship, their regard for the honor of Christ's cause or in their distress for the wounding of that cause, by the precincts of their own little bands. That which scripturally subjects a person to exclusion from one Church of Christ, will lend all churches that love the truth, and the pure and orderly walk marked out in the scriptures, to withhold their fellowship from the offender till he returns and gives satisfaction for his offense. The church that would countenance disorder and treat with contempt the regular discipline exercised by a sister church, by extending fellowship to the unrepenting excluded person, should, and would be disowned by all orderly gospel churches. From the whole view of this subject, it is evident that there may be difficulty in some cases, in deciding whether we ought or ought not to interfere with the discipline of another church, by receiving persons excluded or withdrawn from them. And truly the subject ought, at all times, to be approached with the spirit of meekness and candor, and with a firm regard to truth and order. And we ought to be satisfied from a clear careful inquiry, that the excluded person, has been excluded for truth's sake, and not for error, for a due regard to order and to the scriptures as to standard and not for disorder or immorality, before we extend to him the hand of fellowship; And the same in reference to a person who has withdrawn from a church, not having removed his residence beyond its bounds. No orderly church would knowingly receive a disorderly person into fellowship, though excluded or separate from even a seasonally church.

I will just add, for the sake of any, who may dread to act where duty calls to action; From the fear of subjecting themselves to the ill will of others, that any church or any individuals that will not adhere to and be governed by what, after careful and prayerful examination, they conscientiously believed to be the requisition of God's word, even at the expense of standing alone and being reviled, are not worthy of Christ. See Matthew 10.37 and 39.

Samuel Trott

Additional remarks

It is objected to the position I have laid down, that the established order is, that the right is in the churches of dismissing their members, and that to depart from this rule excepting in extraordinary cases, would throw confusion into the churches, as they would not know what become of their members, or who belong to them.

I will notice, first: the principle, that the right should be in the churches of dismissing their members, that is of transferring our membership to other churches. Do the scriptures contain a perfect rule for the order and government of the churches? If they do do not the king of Zion stand impeached with the want of faithfulness or with the deficiency of wisdom; And the churches are left to be subjected to all the confusion of Babel;

Everyone thinking his own device the best. If the New Testament does not contain a perfect rule by which the churches should be governed, then this order, general as it is, must fall to the ground; For there is neither precept nor example for it within the lids of the Bible. Surely if the great head of the church had intended to establish so important of regulation as this, there would have been some instance given us by the Holy Ghost, of its being acted upon in the Apostolic churches. As there is not, and there are manifestly are some instances of persons becoming members of one church after having been members of another, that conclusion is inevitable, that they gave themselves to the church in the second instance, as they had done in the first, that is after their baptism, and were received by the same independent voice of the church; And this too in the case of Barnabas and Saul, as has been shown, men guided by the holy ghost, and who therefore must have set correct examples. The order which the churches have adopted, shows in its operations the fallibility of a human contrivance.

First. It's direct tendency is to destroy the independency of the churches in one very important point, in the reception of their members, depriving them of the privilege of judging for themselves of the experience of the persons whose membership is transferred to them. For if the right is in the church, of removing the membership of her members, she of course has the right to give them a membership in another church, that is, her letters of dismission give them a title to be received in another church. And so in fact it is generally understood. It is true that when a person presents his letter to a church a vote is taken on his reception, but in most cases this is a mere form, as the general idea is, that to refuse receiving a person upon the regular letter of any church is a virtual declaration of non fellowship with that church. If one church may thus put one member into another church, she may put 50 or enough to constitute a majority of the church and thus by her members take the complete government of this other church; And all this without the other churches considering herself entitled to the privilege of inquiring into the experience of the members thus imposed upon her, to see whether she could have gospel fellowship with them or not. Known to you, brother Beebe, and probably to some of your readers, is an instance of a church in a certain city, wishing to avail themselves of the accommodation of a valuable meeting house owned by a sister church in the same city, and at the same time to enjoy the ministry of their present pastor. To accomplish this they dismissed enough of their members to the other church, to form with some of the members of that church, favorable to the plan, a majority of the church, and thus to enable them to dismiss the pastor of the church, and by whose exertions principally this meeting house had been built, and to call the other preacher; this done, that this preacher with the remainder of his flock went over to that church and now enjoyed the possession of the coveted meeting house. Certainly an order which can favor such schemes, cannot comport with the independency of the churches, or be infallible.

I have known one or two instances of churches having a standing rule, that they would receive no person by letter from any church without first examining him on his experience, the same as a candidate for baptism. These churches thus maintained their own independence in the reception of members, and had the satisfaction of knowing for themselves, that they had experimental fellowship with all they received. But by pursuing this course they had counted the letters of dismission brought to them, nothing more than letters of commendation.

Second. The fallibility of this order is manifest from the frequent instances in which churches find themselves under the necessity of departing from it. Often our Baptists, and coming from England to this country, though in good standing in their churches, obliged to come off without letters of dismission. And in some instances in removing to the far West, females have to start with or follow their husbands at an unexpected moment. Besides some extraordinary cases which my objector admits. Now if this was the order established by divine inspiration for the transfer of membership, then there would be but the two ways of receiving members consistently with the word of God, by letters of dismission and by baptism; and how many of the precious, conscientious followers of Christ would be thrown out from the privileges of church fellowship, where it so?

In reference to that part of the objection which supposes, that to admit the right of a transfer of membership, is to be in the individual, would throw confusion into the churches, as they would then not know what members they had; I would ask, is it a fact that this order will increase the difficulty of the common plan? And I am confident that every candidate brother on a little reflection will answer, no. It is a general received idea, that persons having letters of this mission remained members of the church from which they were dismissed, until they are received by some other church. How many members have been reported as dismissed, by most of our churches of whom those churches know nothing, as to their present situation, whether they are connected with any other church, or not; whether they are walking orderly or disorderly. Is it not a known fact that persons often obtain letters of dismission and then keep those letters for years? Churches on giving letters of dismission to their members very frequently make no farther inquiry about them; and the individuals dismissed are apt to think their relation with the church and consequent obligations to it, dissolved. I cannot think it would be so where the church is governed by what appears to be the scriptural order in this case. The churches would not think there watch care over their members as ended and consequently their inquiries after them would not cease until they found they had regularly given themselves up to assist her church, or had done so gone into error, or disorder, by joining a church for which they had no fellowship, or into the course of the world as to dissolve the fellowship of the church for them. Hence in due time they would report them either as removed or excluded as the case might be. And orderly members in going out of their neighborhood would feel no less solicitous to obtain letters of commendation from the church then they do to have letters of Dismission. And removing from the bounds of their church and in fellowship with it, they feel themselves under much stronger obligations to inform the church how they had disposed of themselves then that they had a letter of dismission. Much more might be set upon this ground; But I will just add, that the present order is the ground of much deception being practiced to obtain letters of this mission.

But here is the rub many in our day are in favour of a greater amalgamation of everything, rather than of a separation of the discordant parts of which the Baptist denomination is now composed, and at which I think the scriptural order, would have a tendency to facilitate this separation.

In conclusion; if it is not presuming in me, as an individual, to ask it, I would request all our old school churches to investigate this subject; And if they find the views I have taken on this subject; And that they find the views I've taken of this subject to be correct, that they would act upon them; If not they can but let them alone. If any of your correspondents or readers, find I am incorrect, I should be glad that they would set the subject in a correct scriptural light.

Yours, S. Trott 1834

The Withdrawn letter 1/3

Communication from the Ebenezer Baptist Church, Loudoun County Virginia

Brother Beebe: We are fully aware of the uninteresting nature of local, church difficulties to most brethren, at a distance from the scene of difficulty; and so we would, on this account, have willingly avoided intruding upon your readers the detail we are about to make, we are not from circumstances imperiously called upon to state our case, for the information of many who are readers of the Signs. And we feel justified in requesting a place in your paper, (the only periodical we would employ) from the fact that our difficulties have been noticed in the communications of others, without receiving a full explanation; and that false colorings therefore have been published in other periodicals, interspersed with which the "Signs"" circulated.

Indeed we think it will be found that most of the difficulties, that those churches that are on the old foundation, have to encounter, arise from attempts to lead or drive them off from their standing And to introduce new school preachers, and new school notions among them. A faithful explanation of such difficulties, therefore when not too tedious we think comport with the plan of your paper, as it is but an illustration of the arts intrigues, and spite of the man of sin in his varied guises. And whilst the little bands of suffering disciples, that are scattered around among the mass of opposers of the truth, esteem it a privilege, to have a medium through which, they can communicate a statement of their several difficulties to those, who they think will sympathize with them; Let us not be unwilling to listen to their tales of woe, nor to weep with those that weep. In fact, a faithful delineation of the signs of the times at this day must portray many dark scenes, many little scattered groups of oppressed and tried disciples. Hence although we approve of much in our brother "Louthan's Letter In the 11th number volume two of the signs, yet we think he carried us remarks too far, perhaps unintentionally made too great a sweep.

We therefore venture the following statements for your insertion in the Signs,

To the brethren of the Ketocton and Corresponding Associations.

Beloved brethren: although much has been said, written, and published among you, calculated to mislead your minds concerning our difficulties, we had intended not to publish anything ourselves on the subject, and should still have persisted in that intention, but for certain circumstances more recently transpired.

1st. It appears that those persons, who, as we trust, we shall clearly show, have been properly, and in the strictest sense, excluded from our fellowship; are flattering themselves that they are to be considered as a minority separated from the church; they appear to be so respected by several preachers, and many others accordingly appointments have been made for preaching for them. We are thus pained with seeing the discipline of the church in a measure trampled underfoot, by those whom we have respected as brethren, and seeing that exclusion which we were under the necessity of exercising, and which we would rejoice to see have its designed solitary effect in bringing those individuals to a proper sense of their improper conduct, counteracted by the intermeddling of those, who according to their profession, ought to be jealous for the Lord God of hosts, and for the honor of his cause.

2nd. The lot on which our meeting house stands, together with the burying ground was bequeathed to the Baptists for these purposes, 50-odd years ago, and has since that time been so occupied. The old house built on the lot, was for several years occupied by the Baptists then residing in the neighborhood, as a place of worship, they be considered a branch or arm of the old Ketocton church. In the year 1804, (30 years since closed parentheses these brethren were constituted into an independent church, under the pastoral care of elder William Fristoe, and received into the Ketocton Association. From that period to this has been recognized by this association as a regular Baptist Church. A new meeting House of stone was built on this lot in the year 1802, and enlarged in the year 1822. Since the exclusion of these persons or rather since their first dismissal from the church, they have denied the validity of the right by which this slot is held, and since their exclusion, doctor E. B. Grady, one of the excluded and a descendant of the testator, and Mr. John butcher, another descendant have applied to a Mr. butcher who lives in the western part of this state, a surviving son of the testator, and by such representations as they have made induced him to execute unto them a deed in trust, for the Baptist, to our house and lot, granting to those two persons the exclusive right deciding who may, and who may not as Baptist, occupy the house. Since obtaining this deed they have demanded the keys of the house and have talked of allowing us to occupy the house one part of the time, and those who have been excluded from us the other part. Many persons have been induced from misrepresentation of the proper state of things, and from representations given of this accommodating offer, to consider us as obstinate in not giving up our right to the house, and not consenting to occupy it as tenants at will, conjointly with those excluded persons, as fellow baptists; that is, so long as those two gentlemen may allow us to privilege. Whether we ought thus to consider these persons as Baptists and thus treat with contempt our own act of discipline, or exercise, we believe, in obedience to the word of God, our brethren may judge after hearing our statement of facts.

After the death of our beloved pastor, elder Francis Moore, we at our meeting in April 1831, went into the election of a pastor and decided on calling Elder J. H. Jones, doctor Grady only objected, and his objection was to restrain on finding himself alone. Elder Jones owing to other engagements did not accept the call but introduced to the brother waiting on him elder Charles Polkinghorn. On an invitation given, Brother Polkinghorn visited us in June and received the unanimous call of the church to become our pastor, which call he in July declared his acceptance of.

In the year, Brother Polkinghorn had occasionally to disappoint us; owing to the great distance of his residence from us, sickness in his family, his own ill health etcetera. Knowing these disappointments to be purely providential, most of the church was disposed cheerfully to acquiesce in them.

In the spring of 1832 doctor E. B. Grady complaining of a want of preaching, owing to the disappointments we had occasionally been subjected to, proposed to several of the brethren individually to have a special meeting got up to call Elders George and Baker one or both of them, to preach for us; Observing to some of them that he thought elder George could be obtained to preach for us once a month, on a weekday, an elder Baker 1 Lord's day in the month, and that if as the people said elder Baker was not strictly sound, elder George was; And a preaching of the one would counteract the errors of the other.

But the brethren being well pleased with Brother Polkinghorn, could not consent to other preachers being called over his head. And indeed they objected to the brethren named on other accounts. Doctor Grady therefore desisted for that time, from further pressing the subject, several of the brethren however thought they discovered in this affair a disposition and a design to introduce among us, the advocates of the new order of things among the Baptists. We will not say that there was a wish to get through going new school preachers among us; But such as would save appearances, and take away the reproach from among men, by appearing to lean to the popular side; And this the preachers named, showed a disposition to do by their attempt to sustain the course of Broaddus, and which constituted in the minds of our brethren, a material objection to them. We have therefore put on our guard against similar attempts; And when Brother Polkinghorn afterward spoke to some of the brethren of his thoughts of resigning his pastoral care, owing to the difficulties in the way of his attending as regularly as he could wish, they entreated him to continue on until such time as there was an opportunity for obtaining another preacher with whom the church would be suited. To this, he consented.

When up at our meeting in January 1833, Brother Polkinghorn again mentioned to the brethren his wish to decline to serve us and recommended it to us elder Samuel Trott, of Delaware, as a preacher with whom he thought we would be suited; and spoke of its being in contemplation by some of the churches in Fairfax, to invite him to remove into Virginia to take the pastoral care of them. He was requested to write to elder Trott and invite him to come on and visit us. Brother Polkinghorn did so, but owing as we have since learned, to his letter being missent, Elder Trott did not receive it until after he had received a letter from Elder Gilmore, advising him not to come on beforehand, as the churches and Fairfax would send him on a call forthwith; And his coming on a visit first, would delay his removal longer than was desirable.

Elder Gilmore had an appointment; By invitation at Ebenezer on Friday before the 1st lord's Day in February on his way to Upperville. After the meeting, the conversation took place in the yard relative Elder Trott, as Elder Gilmore has related it, in his letter addressed to Elder Trott, published in the Signs (volume one, #22), and the called meeting was agreed on for the next Wednesday, and he invited to attend. As are called meeting on the Wednesday after their first Lord's Day of February, has been noticed, and the proceedings correctly given by Elder Gilmore in his published letter above referred to, it will not be necessary to give a general detail. We will just say now, that Doctor Grady having objected to a proposition, made by one of the brethren, to unite with the Fryingpan and Mount Pleasant churches in sending on a call to elder trot, upon the recommendations received, and also objected to his being acted upon at that meeting, as it was not our regular meeting. The proposition to unite in calling was dropped, and the proposition was made to conclude the meeting. Doctor Grady then observed, "I will tell you, brethren, what we can do, we can invite him to commence preaching for us when he commences preaching for the churches below; As the invitation has been once and again published in the Signs." At the doctor's motion, elder Gilmore was requested to write this invitation and send it on to Elder Trott on behalf of this church. Although we consider Doctor Grady to be inclining to the popular side in religion, we had ever considered him to be a man of candor, and in his entire voluntary proposition to send on this formal and specific invitation to elder trot, we had not the most distant idea that it was that species of intrigue, which the then minority in their letter to elder Trottrepresentative to be. Neither can we now persuade ourselves that the proposition, at the time, was not made in sincerity. Everything indicated this to be the case; It was so received by the brethren, and acted on in good faith; the church generally preferring the plan of this proposition, to that of calling elder Trottwithout having heard him for ourselves.

Our brethren may judge of our surprise, when after Elder George had visited Ebenezer and preached early in March, doctor Grady came round to us, from house to house, trying to persuade us to unite, forthwith, and calling Elder George to the pastoral care of the church. When some of the brethren suggested to the doctor, that it would not be using elder Trottwell to call another preacher without waiting to hear him, after having sent on to him the special invitation, we had; He replied then it had better do it immediately, as he thought it would not hurt Elder Trott's feelings so much to call elder George before he came on, as afterward. He was however informed by some, that they would consent to call no man until they had heard elder Trott if he came on as was expected.

Elder George as we understand has denied having given his consent to accept the call from this church if it should be given a period of this we do not know or pretend to judge. We know that doctor Grady told several of the brethren, that elder George could be now had, or that he would come if he were called and referred to a conversation he had with him on the subject. The difficulty is between the two, not with us. Neither do we know how Doctor Grady after proposing the invitation in the very words in which it was given, was induced so to turn against his own proposition, and contrary to principles of common honesty. At our regular meeting in March, Brother Polkinghorn being present, doctor Grady, leaving Elder George out of the question, required of him a definite answer as to whether he would continue to serve the church or not. After considerable conversation and the doctor's saying he wished something to enter on the book relative to the subject, Brother Polkinghorn told him that he might make an entry that "he is willing to serve the church until they get in get a preacher to suit them." It stands the bus entered in Doctor Grey's handwriting. We noticed this subject because it has been represented, that Brother Polkinghorn was here and induced to commit himself, and to give a pledge that he would continue the pastoral care of the church. Whereas what was entered on the book by his consent, was no more than he had before told the brethren: that he would continue to serve us until we could be suited in another preacher. This pledge we say he redeemed.

At our regular meeting in April 1833, elder Trottagreeable to notice which he had sent on of his acceptance of our invitation, was with us, and preached several times to the general satisfaction of the brethren; Even those who had wished himself superseded acknowledged themselves pleased with his preaching.

He made, at our request, another appointment, to be with us on the 1st Saturday, and Lord's Day in May. He again attended, and a general satisfaction was expressed as to his preaching, And no objection made to him personally considered. In the meantime it was ascertained, that certain members were industriously engaged in making a party against him, to prevent his being called, without being able to bring any well-grounded objection to it; not being willing to mention what we think was the true one, that he was an old school Baptist. Having failed to substitute Elder George, and not being able to make any objection stand from the manner the invitation and answer were published in the Signs, (of April 10th, 1833) though they had said that according to that publication, Elder Trott was upon the church as a pastor; a simple reference however to elder trots answer showed that he considered it in no such light, but that the church was still left, fully to the direction of Providence, and to the conclusions of their own minds, whether he should in May, when that thing was brought up.

And indeed there was no additional strength given to the wording of the invitation in the printed copy, there was the part relative to pay left out. Their last resort was, to cling to Brother Polkinghorn, and to hold him as to pastor, and represented delete tempt was making a take away our pastor, although they had made two attempts as has been shown to call Elder George over his head without ever consulting him; and although it was known to be brother Polkinghorn's wish to resign, whenever he could see the church supplied with a pastor, or such as a church would approve of. The brethren we say seeing things going on thus, and concluding that at this rate we should become split all to pieces, and ultimately left without any preacher; Unless it should be, that by some undo advantage; And advocate for the new order of things should be brought in; It was concluded to be the most prudent to act decisively; And as no objection had been made to elder trot, as an individual, to go into an election of him as our pastor, if a majority should be found still in favor of it. Accordingly, a meeting of the church was appointed to be held at our regular time, the third Saturday in May, though we at that time expected no preaching, it being the time of the Baltimore association.

Understanding that Brother Polkinghorn was to be in Leesburg, on his way to the Baltimore association, on the Wednesday before our appointed meeting, and Brother Stringfellow having to be there, to attend court Brother Peugh concluded to accompany with Brother Polkinghorn, to know whether it was still his mind to resign and if so, to obtain from him a letter of resignation; That those who wish to throw confusion among us, and prevent the choice of elder trot, might not have as a handle, Elder Polkinghorn's still being our pastor. Our meeting was organized on the 3rd Saturday in May, the letter of resignation from Brother Polkinghorn was handed in and read after many conversations on the subject of going into the choice of Elder Trott our pastor, doctor Grady observed, that the only way to decide it, was to take the vote and submit it to the majority or words to that effect. The vote was therefore proposed and taken; When it was found that there were 16 votes for Elder Trott as pastor and four against him.

Doctor Grady, who acted as moderator, so far from thinking that there was anything, like a tie as F. W. Luckett Squire has represented it in his publication, evidently gave up the point at once, for immediately taking his hat without waiting for the meeting to be dismissed, said, "I am in fellowship with all the brethren present, but I see I can be of no further use to you, nor you to me. Farewell." Starting out, he got about halfway to the door and stopped, made some remarks relative to the house, intimating that the right of the church to it would be disputed, and then went off. However, to his starting, he threw down some papers on the table, which after he was gone, were examined, and found that contained the written expressions of the minds of four other female members, against choosing Elder Trott as our pastor, or in favor of continuing Elder Polkinghorn. From which it appears, that had these been present, the vote would have stood 16 to 8. A number were present who did not vote on the question.

At our regular meeting in June, Brother Trott again attended having been particularly requested to do so. Previous to the meetings commencing on Saturday, the son of Doctor Grady handed him a letter. After preaching and the meeting being organized for business, one of the brethren, on behalf of the church, informed Brother Trott, that he had chosen him as our pastor. He then stated that he had received a letter signed by ten of our members, in which they declared their dissent from the vote of the church, and their separating from it, and wished to read it, to us, which he did. He then requested us to reconsider the vote by which he had been thus chosen; And if, under present circumstances, we thought it advisable to take further time for consideration, or to recall the choice altogether, he wished us to do so. And that we might consult freely on the subject, he withdrew from the house.

After conversing on the subject, we by a unanimous vote, decided to persist in presenting to him the call, which had been previously voted. Brother Trott was then called in and informed of this decision. He observed to us, that as it was thus our wish, and as from the present state of things, and from the very face of that letter he could not see, that his declining to accept, could make our situation any better, or reconcile those disaffected members, to the church, he would accept the call; but with this understanding, that if at any time hereafter, there should be a prospect of the whole church being able to unite in the call of any preacher, he should not be considered as standing in the way, but as being ready to resign, on an intimation thereof of being given to him.

(To be continued in our next period)

WITHDRAWN LETTER 2/3

(Concluded)

Although the letter addressed to our pastor by this minority cast several harsh and unjust reflections upon us as a church, and upon certain individuals, yet as we did not then know their intention of circulating copies of it far and wide, to the injury of our pastor abroad, and as we entertained the hope that some if not all who signed it, would on reflection, be disposed to recall it, we thought it advisable not to notice it for a season. As to any reasons which they assigned for separating from us, we considered him perfectly nugatory; for they all center on the one charge of submitting to be blindly led by priestcraft; and this stands openly contradicted, by every transaction in the case, from the called meeting in February onto the regular meeting in June. Although at our called meeting in February

A proposition was made, by one of the members (not by Elder Gilmore) to unite with the two churches below in sending on a call to Elder Trott, it was dropped on objections being made to it. And the invitation afterward agreed upon, originated, has been shown, with doctor Grady, was in substance and form his own proposition, made us we then believed in candor, whoever or whatever, may have since induced him to pursue a different policy, as such it was unanimously adopted by the church, and became, of course, our transaction. And so far as there was any sincerity in the transaction, and in words, so far we stood pledged, if elder Trott came on and visited us, and we found him to be as he had been recommended to us, to settle a call with him in due form. There was therefore no room for priestcraft in the case unless Doctor Grady assumed the responsibility of having exercised it. We however cannot help believing rather, that priestcraft has been exercised towards him and others, by certain persons, to answer particular purposes. Hence we said in our letter to the association, that ten of our members had separated from us, without being able to give a reason for so doing.

After our Saturday meeting in July, several of the brethren being together and being informed concerning certain movements of some of the comma then minority, it was then concluded that it was time, their letter to our pastor was noticed, and those who continued to adhere to its contents, were taken under dealings. They therefore concluded to bring the subject before the church at our next regular meeting. We mentioned this to show that their letter to us in September was not the moving cause of the motion, then being made to cite them to attend our next meeting; Neither was the remarks of any attending brother, the cause.

Having no meeting in August, the meeting of our association interfering with our time, there was no opportunity to bring the case forward of the minority, until our meeting in September; at that time, as soon as the meeting was organized F. W. Luckett, Esquire. Although not a member, handed in a letter from eight of the minority, addressed to the church; In which they offered some explanation relative to their use of the term separate in their letter to our pastor, and denied using it, in the sense, that they considered themselves finally absolved and separated from the church; and requesting of our letters of dismission. But whilst they appeared disposed to give some satisfaction relative to having spoken of separating from us, they offered no recantation, nor explanation, of these base slanders which they had cast upon us, in their letters to our pastor, upon particular members, and upon brother Polkinghorn, our much esteemed former pastor, as well as upon elder Gilmore relative to his transactions in the case, and which day spread much abroad, by circulating copies of that letter, and especially by furnishing Broaddus with one to read at associations.

We should therefore have appeared regardless of all sense of propriety and of correct order, as well as our own characters, to have granted them letters upon this application. On the other hand by this letter they almost unequivocally acknowledged themselves still as members of this church; And consequently as subject to its discipline. Hence they were completely debarred from bleeding an exception from the authority of the church, and from her right of discipline, in consideration of their having previously separated from the church, and of standing as a separated minority.

The church on receiving this letter, entered the following resolves on her book.

- 1. "Received a letter from eight of our members, requesting letters of dismission. Resolved, that the church cannot grant them letters of dismission, because in their former letter to our pastor, they have made several accusations against the church."
- 2. Resolved, that brethren Peugh, Richards and Stringfellow, be a committee, to wait on said members to appear at our next meeting, to answer to charges against them growing out of their letter of June last, to our pastor, and for their conduct in other respects."

It was also concluded, that the committee should be furnished with specifications of the charges, to present to the person cited, if they should demand them. Those specifications 8 in number, stand recorded in our church book.

Two of the 10, who had been induced to sign a letter of June to our pastor, had returned back to their places in the church and had recalled their names and assent from that letter.

Our meeting on the Saturday before the 3rd Lord's Day in October is opened. The moderator called upon the committee, appointed at the last meeting, to report. They reported that they had seen the persons severely on whom they had been directed to call, and they were mostly now present. Doctor Grady then came forward and presented a paper containing the following remarkable address.

"To the members, the majority of the church at Ebenezer, greeting:"

"Whereas we the undersigned minority did ask for letters of dismission on the 3rd Saturday of September last (by letter) and our application being rejected, we do now recall it, for the following reasons: since that time we have learned from Brother Stringfellow that it was stated in a letter from the church to the association that ten of the members had withdrawn from the church without being able to give a reason for so doing. Under the impression that in that letter the church stands committed to immorality, we cannot receive letters from her as a Church of Christ until that impression shall be removed.

Neither can we consent to answer to the charges preferred against us, growing out of and addressing from the minority to Elder Trott, whilst the majority stand thus committed. When those difficulties are removed we stand ready as we have ever been to meet investigation before a proper tribunal.

We therefore intend to constitute ourselves into a separate church, and now claim our right to the meeting house at Ebenezer for worship. And that inasmuch as the majority occupied the house on the 3rd Saturday and Lord's day, and on the 4th Lord's day, we the minority will occupy on the 1st and 2nd, not wishing to interfere with the arrangements of the majority."

Signed,

Jane Bronaugh, Harriet Luckett, Martha Clayton, Abigail M. Furr, Edward B. Grady, Sarah Crady, Satah S. Luckett, Ury Grady. October, 1833

We have in this paper, one of those instances which occasionally occur, of persons who wish to shun the appearance of dreading an investigation, but who will yet resort to the most trifling subterfuges to evade it. And surely a much less hole to creep out at, could not be found, then these persons resorted to. We will not say that even a smaller than this has not been found within our knowledge. These persons did assign something as an excuse for separating as they said from us. But was there any recent in it?

Did it not stand contradicted on the very face of it, as we have already shown? If it would bear the test, why not come to the investigation? We charged them with willfully slandering their church in those things, which they assigned as excuses, and they could have shown that they were rational or correct, then we should have been convicted of stating in our letter to the association, that which was not correct; And had we refused to recall our assertions which was then convicted, they might with propriety have charged us as with immorality, in the thing.

After the above paper was read, and a few remarks upon the charge of immorality therein brought, the question was put to the church, whether we were conscious of anything immoral or false being contained in our letter to the association, and decided in a negative by a unanimous vote.

And on the ground of those persons refusing to answer before the church or charges preferred against them, a motion was made, that they'd be at once excluded from the connection and fellowship of this church; and by unanimous vote decided that they be thus excluded. They, therefore, stand excluded by us, not for having previously separated from the church, but as disorderly persons, in refusing to answer to charges which had been preferred against them, and which still stand unanswered.

We now appeal to the candor of every person acquainted with church discipline, whether, in the light of this statement of facts, upon any principle of gospel discipline, and order, those persons can be considered as a self-separated minority; or whether they must not be considered as persons correctly excluded from the fellowship of this church, of which they were members, and therefore from the fellowship as church members, or Baptist, of all orderly Baptists. And we appeal to our brethren preachers and others, to sustain us in maintaining the regular discipline of Christ's house. We appeal to the individuals who have been subjects of this discipline to say whether anything harsh or violent has appeared in our conduct towards them; anything contrary to that tenderness and moderation which ought to characterize the conduct of a church, in maintaining correct discipline towards erring members.

We disclaim any ill will towards the excluded, any wish to injure them, in this exposure which we have been constrained to make; We wish to manifest our respect for, and to and to see respected by those whom we would regard as preachers of the gospel, that discipline which our lord has in wisdom and love instituted through the ministry of his apostles; and we desire to see his discipline have its legitimate effect on those who have thus been by their own management, the subjects of it, in bringing them to a sense of their improprieties, in leading them to retrace their steps and to come back to the church in a proper spirit, disposed to adhere to that doctrine and order, on which this church was constituted, and which hitherto she has ever maintained in her ministry and her government; And to resist the propensity for going after popularity and new things in religion.

We know that persons in the higher circles in life, from the deference generally paid to them, are not apt to conclude, that their opinions and notions ought to have peculiar sway even in the church, and that it is peculiarly mortifying to them to be arraigned by their conduct, before a church composed, as most the churches of Christ, are, of the poor of this world; but we equally well know, however much certain persons are disposed to conform to this pride of man, then no such distinctions ought to be regarded in the House of God, where the poor disciple is exalted to the honor of being a son of God, and the rich and noble ought to feel themselves to be but worms before him with whom we have to do. And we hope that no such distinction ever be made, in administering the discipline of this church.

In our conclusion, permit us to offer some remarks on two or three circumstances connected with this affair.

1. As the then minority and their address to our pastor, have made several references to elder Joseph Jones, of the Baltimore association, apparently with a design to enlist his feelings on their side; we will remark in relation to the conversation in which they say doctor Grady had with him in August 1832, relative to becoming our pastor, in case brother polkinghorn should leave us, that, conversation was not communicated to us, neither did we know that he was in any more favorable circumstance for taking a pastoral care of this church, then when he rejected our call in 1831. And further, that there was no proposition made to us by the doctor or any other person, to call him until after had our invitation elder Trott had visited us, and we had made-up our minds in favor of him. Again they say in that letter, that "brother Jones could now be got to serve the church, and in him the wishes of the whole church would have been centered, and this brethren Gilmore and polkinghorn either knew or had reason to believe." We answer that we did not know this, neither do we know how elders Gilmore and polkinghorn knew it, or what reason they had to believe it. Elder Jones may thus judge whether in our choosing elder Trott to serve us, there was any disrespect shown to him or any undermining of him.

2. Those persons in their paper handed in to the church in October, saying that they are ready to meet investigation before a proper tribunal. We ask, who is to decide what is a proper tribunal? If the decision of the king of Zion upon this question, be admitted as proper authority, then the particular church of which the persons are members, whose cases are to be investigated, that church retaining its character as a church of Christ, is the only proper tribunal. For no other except the final judgment seat of Christ, is referred to, in the New Testament; Whilst abundant references are herein made of cases of discipline to the particular churches; C, for instances first Corinthians chapter 5, especially verses 12 and 13, and chapter 6, verses 1 and 5. We readily admit that there is an intimate connection between the different branches of Zion; they are but one body. There are therefore a cases in which for preserving the harmony of the hole, it is advisable for one branch to seek the assistance and advice of others. As for instance in ordaining elders so in cases of difficulty, were in a church may become divided and drawn into much confusion upon some disputed points, as the church at Antioch, it is proper for such, following the example, that, not only to appeal to the decision of the apostles, (in their writings of course at this day) but also to ask advice concerning that decision, as of the elders and brethren of the church at Jerusalem, and of Judas and Silas sent to signify this decision, in the case of the church at Antioch. And if there is such a connection, revealed in the scriptures between the visible churches of Christ, it is manifest that when one church having had such standing, has lost the characteristics of a Church of Christ, whether through corruption or neglect of gospel discipline, or through the introduction of another gospel, or a forms and schemes not known in a New Testament, it becomes the duty of other churches, for the honor of the word of God, and for their own characters, to make their appeal to the Apostolic decisions, and to disown fellowship with such departures from the word, and such church persisting in that departure, as well as to sustain the standing of individual brethren who may have separated from such church on account of her falling away. Now if our brethren, or sister churches, by an honest appeal to Apostolic decision, can show our departure from the word so as to prove that the golden Candlestick of a gospel church is removed from us and that for their regard to the gospel of Christ those persons have separated from us, let them disown us, if we are not reclaimed by such scriptural proof, and sustain them. Or if the dissenting of 1 male member, and of seven females, through family connection and the influence which of physician may exert over then be evidence of general confusion in the church, then may it be proper that some barabbas and silences be sent to us, to signify the Apostolic decision unto us in the case.

- 3. As certain remarks have been published relative to our meeting in October, and the attendance of certain persons on that occasion, by a gentleman whose general department as a man, we have therefore respected, although we cannot approve of his interference so much with the affairs of that Kingdom which is not of this world, however much it might be proper for him to feel for the honor of his wife, nor of his reflections on persons which had nothing to do with this affair, as on the editor of the Signs. We will say in reference to brother polkinghorn, that having been talking of visiting us, our pastor seeing him, invited him to attend at this time, under the impression that such statements as he could make relative to the case, would be calculated to remove much of the prejudice to those disaffected persons towards the church and towards him. The other persons named, were not invited, neither was it known to us or to our pastor the day intended being here, until they came. And without intending reflection on any, we say that seeing so many present who would probably have taken part in the debate had the charges been investigated, and by which most likely, feelings would have been irritated rather than softened, we did esteem it a kind interpretation of Providence, that the person cited before the church should be left to throw in the proper occasion for cutting them off, without going into an investigation of the charges. Although we would have been glad of a calm and dispassionate investigation, if such could have been had in hopes that some at least, of those excluded would have been convinced of their error.
- 4. We here leave our statement before our brethren, and to the disposal of him who works all things after the council of his own will. Read and approved that our meeting of business, at Ebenezer, Loudon county, Virginia, june 14th, 1834; And signed by order of the church.

Barton Richards clerk.

OBITUARY DEACON HUGH GURLEY

OBITUARY DEACON HUGH GURLEY

Brother Beebe

I send you the following notice of the death of our esteemed friend and brother, Deacon Hugh Gourley. If a more particular biography of him, has been prepared by anyone, this may be laid aside. What I have prepared, embraces a general notice of those circumstances in his religious life, which are peculiarly interesting to your readers, but it is from memory I have written, without having at hand those means of information which would enable me to be more particular as to age, dates Etcetera.

Brother Gourley died at his residence in Union Street Philadelphia, November 9th 1833, after having passed the extreme bound of four score years, during many of which he was an orderly and much respected member of the Baptist Church. He joined the first church in Philadelphia and appeared when the Philadelphia confession was not a mere password. His profession of the doctrinal sentiments contained in that confession was not an indifferent assent to them because others held them; but it was a candid declaration of what he has been taught by heartfelt experience of God's method of saving sinners. He was one of the minority which separated from the first church and 2nd St. several years since, and being one of the former deacons of that church his name was conspicuous in this division. Whatever motives may have induced others to withdraw, after events demonstrated that in leaving the house, where he had been accustomed to resort for worship, the congregation with whom in former days he had with pleasure assembled; in abandoning his seat to strangers, who had recently come in to crowd him and others of the old standards out, and him becoming an alien, to the graves of the former wife, and of all the children, (5 in number) which God had given him, brother Gourley Created by a conscientious regard to the gospel he had received. When this minority had been recognized by the Philadelphia association as the first church, and they had concluded on building them another house for worship, brother Gourley was found one of the foremost in furthering the building, and in contributing for its erection. But here again he was to be disappointed; after expending much money on this new house, a sufficiency to have built what would be considered a comfortable House of many of our country churches, he had not enjoyed the privilege of meeting in it but a few months, before a majority of this minority which had separated from the 2nd St. meeting professedly from love to the truth, brought in over his head another gospel, equally corrupt, to that they had separated from. With brother Gourley truth was truth, an error or, error, what therefore he had condemned as error in 2nd St. He could not sanction his truth in spruce St. But in this case, as all who had come out of Second Street with him, with the exception of two of the deacons, who had received our release from the troubles of this life, and a few perhaps who were not in the city, and his amiable consort, sister Gourley, ultimately settled down in acquiescence with this new gospel and as there was no other church within reach of him, in his infirm state, which had that gospel, clearly and discriminatively preached to them, on which his soul rested her hope, the second Church of which brother Kitts Is pastor, and on whose ministry he would have been delighted to attend meeting in a distant part of the city; he did not formally withdraw his name from the church in spruce St. He contented himself, with withholding his assent to that, which he could not receive as the gospel of Christ, by his non attendance upon it. Hence for the last three or four years of his life he remained secluded from the privilege of public worship.

Those who are accustomed to think, it better to attend with any professed worshippers, and to give countenance to anything which may be preached for gospel, or to any ceremonies which may be practiced for religion, however discordant with their religious views, then not to have the name of attending meeting; Will no doubt blame brother Gourley for the course he pursued. But he did not reason like them. It was not to him, a vain, indifferent thing, that the apostle had said, "if any man preach any other gospel unto you that you have received let him be accursed." The knowledge of salvation which had been communicated to him in experience, he received as taught him of God, and therefore upon divine authority. Hence had he sanctioned any other system of salvation, as the gospel of Christ, however plausible such system might be made, or however eloquently preached, or strongly sustained by human reasoning, he would have received the testimony of men as greater, then the witness of the Holy Ghost. But he had been taught that God was true though every man should be a liar. Again, he had been informed by the word, that the Church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth; therefore any congregation of people, however many Christians might be among them, which did not bear inscribed upon them, that is, in the public administration of the word and ordinances among them, that the gospel and that order which had been delivered by the apostles; And which did not bear up the same, by fateful testimony, he could not acknowledge as a Church of Christ, by assembling with them, and partaking of the ordinance of the supper among them. I do not say that brother Gourley expressed his thoughts on this subject in the words I have used, but this, I say, was in substance his view of it. All the work conversant with him, were convinced that his non attendance upon public worship, did not arise from his having sunken into a cold backslidden state. His debarring himself from assembling with those he had been used to fellowship as brethren, was evidently a sacrifice of feelings; but a sacrifice which he freely made from a conscientious regard to the truth of God. This being the case, the Lord did not leave him without a witness of his approbation. Brother Gourley repeatedly assured me, that in spending his Lord's days at home, in reading in private worship, he enjoyed as much comfort as he had been accustomed to from attending on the preaching of the word.

In the course of a kind Providence, it was my privilege to be with him, for the last two or three days of his life, till within a few hours of his decease. It was to me a matter of pleasing astonishment, to witness in one so much exhausted by disease such as strength of his intellectual faculties, his recollection and judgment so clear, and his senses in such lively exercise, remarkable in one of his age, even in health, accepting where some intervals of flightiness; and this until the morning I left him, when his senses seemed closing, preparatory to the departure of the soul from her clay tenement. He appeared fully sensible of his situation, and calmly waited for his departure. No anxious cares attaching him to the earth, no fears causing his mind to draw back from the prospect before him, no distressing doubts, disturbed the peace of his mind. He informed me that the text, Jeremiah 31.3, "I have loved you with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn you" had been so applied to him during his sickness, as to afford him great consolation in his support.

To his death, and to most of the surrounding multitude of professors, in the city where he dwelt, his apical the words of the prophet, the righteous perishes and no man lays it to heart, the merciful men are taken away, none considers that the righteousness taken from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace; they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness," Isaiah 57.1, 2.

His excellent, but now bereaved partner, who was his companion in faith, in hope and in his deprivations of religious privileges, is left much alone, amid surrounding religious societies. May the Lord be manifestly her confidence and support; May his grace sustain her in a steadfast adherence to the truth and order of the gospel, as she has hitherto received them.

S. Trott Fairfax Courthouse, Va. December 23, 1833

Absolute Predestination No. 2

Brother Beebe: - I proposed at the conclusion of the preceding number to show from the Scriptures of truth that the predestination of God extends to the wicked actions of men, that is, that God decreed or predestinated every wicked act, which He permits man to perform, so that man does not act out any part of the enmity or corruption of his heart further than God has predestinated to permit Him, and so that every act, however vile, has its allotted place in the government of God, and accomplishes the very purpose for which it was designed in the eternal council. - The first proof I shall bring in support of this position is the declaration of the Apostle, relative to the crucifixion of Christ as recorded in Acts 2:23, "Him being delivered by the determinate council and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." I know there are those who say that the event accomplished by the death of Christ was so glorious and of so great magnitude as to justify the making use of wicked men or predestinating their acts relative to it. But this is measuring the mind of God by our little contracted views. We are apt to be so dazzled by splendid events as to overlook the means by which the event may have been accomplished; whereas if the event had been less splendid, we should have condemned those means. But let us beware of attaching such imperfections to God. -As great as was the benefit accomplished by the death of Christ, it did not lead God to overlook the perpetrators of the act. - Judas received his marked punishment, and went to his own place, and the Jews are to this day receiving the punishment of their crime, as denounced upon them by Moses in Deut. 28. As great as was this event, there were many circumstances connected with it which were done with wicked hands and yet were foretold of God, and of course, had been determined. He was delivered up, that is to be slain, by the determinate council and fore-knowledge of God. Jesus says of His life, "No man taketh it from me but I lay it down of myself." John 10:18. Yet, in this laying down of His life was involved the wicked act of Judas in betraying Him to the Jews, of the Jews in delivering Him to Pilate, of Pilate sending Him to Herod, and His being sent back, and of Pilate's delivering Him up to be crucified though he found no fault in Him. Judas' act was evidently predestinated; for Christ said to His Disciples, "One of you shall betray me," and when asked of John who it was, He designated Judas by a sign; "And after the sop Satan entered into him," John 13:21-27. And even farther back than this, it was designated, compare Acts 1:15-20 with Psalms 41:9, and 109:8. Thus also Herod and Pilate's combining to deliver up Christ as also the Jews and Gentiles being united in that act was predestinated of God. See Acts 4:25-28, compared with Psa. 2:1,2. The circumstance of the Jews wagging their heads at Him and mocking Him, &c., their parting His garments among them were prophesied of. See Psalms 22:7, 8-18; and that these circumstances were not foretold upon the mere ground of God's foreknowing that they would do these things. See the circumstance of their giving Christ gall mingled with vinegar as prophesied of in Psalms 69:21, and the fulfillment as recorded in John 19:28-30; from which it is manifest that the prediction governed the event, hence that the prediction might be fulfilled, Jesus says, I thirst. Indeed it is altogether idle to attempt to separate the foreknowledge of God from His predestination; for How could God foreknow that certain persons would give to Christ vinegar and gall unless He had predestinated to bring those very persons into existence, to preserve them alive to that time, to give them health and strength sufficient to attend on the crucifixion, to leave them to the enmity of their hearts, and to give them the occasion to act out this enmity by Christ's saying, I thirst, and then suffer them to offer that insult? So of every event fore-known to God. If God then foreknows all things, all the circumstances necessary to bring those all things to pass must have been predestinated of God. It is said by the Apostle relative to what Herod and Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, did to Christ, that they did "whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." Acts 4:27,28.

Another proof in support of the doctrine that the wicked actions of men are predestinated of God is found in Isaiah 10:5,6 "O Assyrian; the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation, I will send him against an hypocritical nation and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." Here God in the clearest manner declares what use He will make of the Assyrian. Can any say that He did not predestinate the Assyrians taking the prey, &c.? Yet, these were acts of violence and cruelty in the Assyrians as is manifest from the connection, verse 7, "Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so, but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few." And verse 12, "Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed His whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria and the glory of his high looks." In perfect accordance with what God says of the Assyrians relative to their ambitions, murderous course, that they are the rod of His anger. The Psalmist in praying to be delivered from the wicked that opposed him, and from his deadly enemies, says, "Deliver my soul from the wicked which is Thy sword, from men which are Thy hand, O Lord, &c." Psalms 17:9-13,14. Can the wicked thus be God's sword and God's hand, and He not determine and govern their acts. And if their acts were fore- known to God, did He not predetermine or predestinate those acts? Hence it is said in Proverbs 16:4, "The Lord hath made all things for Himself, yea even the wicked for the day of evil." Some may suppose that by the day of evil, for which the wicked are made, we are to understand their own destruction. But such is not the faith of the Old School Baptists. They do not believe that God in bringing the wicked into existence had no higher object in view than their destruction. By the day of evil, we understand, the day in which God brings evil upon His people or upon others. It has pleased God to bring His church and people through great tribulations; from whence are their tribulations to arise but from the persecutions of the wicked? God will give those blood to drink who have shed the blood of saints and prophets; by whom will He do it? Not by the righteous. He has made the wicked for this day of evil; and so has He prepared instruments for every evil day. Thus says the Psalmist, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain," Ps. 76:10. What is this but a predestination, that limits and bounds even the wrath of man, letting it go just so far as to accomplish the purpose of God, and no further?

If the above is not sufficient to establish the fact that God predestinates the evil acts of men, we have additional proof from the history of Joseph and his brethren.

Joseph says to his brethren, "Be not grieved nor angry with yourselves that ye sold me hither, for God did send me before you to preserve life;" and again, "God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth and to save your lives by a great deliverance. So it was not you that sent me hither, but God." Gen.45:5-7,8. And in Gen.50:20, "But as for you, ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass as it is this day, to save much people alive." Thus we see that whilst Joseph's brethren thought evil against him and wickedly devised means to put him out of the way, in order to disappoint his dreams, God had determined that this very wickedness of theirs should be the means of bringing about the fulfillment of those dreams, and to terminate in His and their good. So also He employed the wickedness of Potiphar's wife, to bring about the ultimate exaltation of Joseph, and consequently to fulfill the purpose for which God sent him into Egypt. So full was Joseph in the belief of the predestination of God in that thing from the manifestation he had received that he said plainly to his brethren, It was not you that sent me hither, but God. And as full proof that this affair was determined on before-hand, or predestinated of God, we have not only the thing revealed to Joseph in dreams, but the dwelling of Israel in Egypt and the length of time they should be there was foretold to Abraham. See Gen. 15:13-16.

These several proofs which I have brought forward are not to be considered as so many peculiar instances in which God's government is exerted over the wicked actions of men; but rather as special illustrations of the universal government of God. They show how surely He will cause the wrath of man to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He will restrain. Ps. 76:10. The soldiers must not break the legs of Jesus though so commanded, but they pierce His side that the Scripture might be fulfilled; that is, that the foretold purpose of God should stand. See John 19:31-37. So Joseph's brethren could neither kill him, nor leave him to perish in the pit, nor could Reuben deliver him; but the company of Ishmaelites must needs come along at that juncture of time and they sell him to be carried down into Egypt. These several instances which are thus particularly recorded of God's making the wickedness of men and devils subserve His purpose, are sure pledges that in spite of the combined malice and rage of both, He will roll on His gracious purposes, accomplish all His promises, and fulfill every prophecy. He that could make the enmity of Joseph's brethren, and desire of gain in the Ishmaelities, the wickedness of Potipher's wife and the ingratitude of Pharoah's steward all combine to accomplish the exaltation of Joseph and the purpose God had in view, will while He causes judgment to begin at the house of God, surely accomplish at the appointed time, the complete destruction of the Man of sin, in all his branches.

And dear child of grace, however much men may revile you and hate you, or Satan may desire to have you, — you have a sure pledge both from the declaration of God, and from what you have seen of His overruling providence that all things work for your good, as they did for the good of Joseph when taken from his father, and for the good of David when hunted as a partridge upon the mountains. For as it is said in Prov. 16:9, "Man's heart deviseth his way, but the Lord directeth his steps." In the next number I purpose noticing some of the objections brought against this doctrine.

S. TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va. Jan. 7, 1834

Signs of the Times Volume 2, No. 5. February 5, 1834

Absolute Predestination No. 3

Brother Beebe: – I will now notice some of the objections, which are made to the doctrine under consideration.

The objection most frequently made is that this doctrine represents God as the author of sin. Most of those who make this objection will allow that God governs the world and that no event takes place but by His permission. Where is the difference between them and us? It appears to be something like this. We believe that God worketh all things after the counsel of His own will, that He has a wise design in every event which He either permitteth or causeth to take place, that each event and all the transactions of men, even the vilest, are as so many links in the great chain of that providence by which the eternal purposes of God are connected together, and drawn on to their ultimate and glorious consummation; that from eternity God drew the wondrous plan of His government, saw through the operations and bearings of every event, and assigned to each its place and use in the dispensation of His providence, His justice, or His grace. They, if I can comprehend their views, believe that God has not beforehand determined the wicked actions of men, that merely as a spectator He suffers the wicked to go on according to their own wills. Of course, if God has had no previous determination relative to their acts, He can have no design in permitting them unless it be simply the general design of leaving those persons to aggravate their condemnation. Now it would seem to me that if either of these systems makes God the author of sin it is the latter, for it makes God to be, in a most wanton manner, accessory to the vices of men. But why is such a system preferred?

Surely, only because it takes the government from God and gives it to the will of man.

But says one in the case of an assassin's way-laying a man and murdering him, it would be horrid to suppose that God had predestinated this barbarous act. Where is the preacher who talks thus, if called to preach on this funeral occasion, that would tell the afflicted relatives that God had nothing to do with this affair, and therefore instead of exhorting them to eye the hand of God in it, and to be submissive to His will, would direct them to regard only the hand of the assassin?

And yet he ought thus to tell them to be consistent.

The Master said to His disciples, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father? But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows." Mt.10:29-31. Christ had been telling them not to fear them that kill the body, &c., in reference to persecutors, and then brings in the case of the sparrows.

Would not the disciples naturally be led to think of the sparrows as exposed to the ravages of birds of prey? And when thus assured that the hawks could not seize their prey but by the will of God they would feel such confidence in the care of their heavenly Father, as to believe that their bloody persecutors could not take their lives until His gracious purpose was accomplished, and He for wise purposes saw fit to suffer them to be put to death.

If God thus taketh care for sparrows, can it be supposed that any human being will be left to fall by the hand of an assassin without our heavenly Father? If any can find comfort in believing that men's lives are thus left to the sport of chance, I envy them not that comfort.

Let us take another view of this subject. I think it more consistent with what God has revealed of His universal government to suppose that the days of this murdered man were numbered, that the designs of God in His existence on earth were accomplished, and the period had arrived for his being taken from it; and that God had determined to leave him who was the assassin thus to manifest the enmity and depravity of his heart, to be a warning to others, and to receive that open punishment which his depraved principles merited. Also that such afflictions as attended this affair God had seen fit to appoint unto the relatives, if not to result in their good, yet for wise and good purposes.

I do not see that this view of the subject any more makes God the author of sin that any other system would short of that of the Magi which supposed the existence of two gods, the one good and the other evil. Not any more than the Lord's having appointed to Peter the death by which he should glorify God made Him the author of the sin of his persecutors. See John 21:18-19.

But to give, if possible, a clearer illustration of this subject, I will offer a few remarks on the text, Luke 13:4-5, "Or those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." I have said in a former number there is no movement either of matter or mind but what has been so fixed by the counsel of God to work for His glory. In the text above quoted I think there is an illustration of this fact. In the case of the eighteen being slain by the fall of the tower of Siloam, are the following circumstances to be noticed.

First, the passage gives no statement of the special cause which produced the fall of the tower; neither is there any intimation that it was occasioned by anything miraculous. The whole account appears clearly to imply that it was what would be termed at this day a mere casual event. Second, the Jews having been taught by their lively oracles, to acknowledge the hand of God in every event, considered this a special visitation of God upon those who were slain and accounted for it by supposing that they were sinners above others. This latter idea the Master evidently designed to correct and to impress upon the minds of His audience that they were sinners equally with those eighteen, and like them, exposed to the judgments of God, unless they repented with that repentance which their law required of them as national Israelites.

Whilst we are left ignorant of the direct cause of the tower's falling, whether it was carelessness in building, negligence in repairing, the wear of time, or some other circumstances, the fact is evident that the materials of which it was built, having been undermined or in some other way removed from their proper balance one upon another, fell by the regular operation of the law of gravitation, and in their fall killed eighteen persons. Can any be so hardened in opposition to the sovereignty of God as to contend that He by whom alone the sparrow falls, had no hand in the death of these persons? Yea, is it not manifest from the improvement which the Saviour made of the event that it was designed as a warning to the inhabitants of Jerusalem of the impending judgments which hung over their heads? These impending judgments of which the Jews were thus warned were brought upon them, as the event shows, by the instrumentality of the Roman arms. That these impending judgments were limited and bound by the predestination of God is evident from Matt.

24:15-28, and Luke 21:17,24. It is equally manifest that it was the ambition and pride of the Romans which impelled them forward to the destruction of this devoted people.

Now if in the one case God could accomplish His purpose of cutting off those eighteen persons by the instrumentality of the effect of the law of gravitation upon the materials of the tower in Siloam without diverting that law from its regular course of operation, why could He not in the other case bring His threatened and defined judgments upon the Jews by the instrumentality of the Romans thirst for conquest and blood without being the author of their sin or without infringing upon their free-agency in the act? Some may say that God was the author of the law of gravitation. True, God did establish it in the original creation of matter; and so did He originally permit sin to enter into the world and man to become so depraved as that it is as natural for him to sin as it is for a heavy body to fall to the earth. And there was no more necessity for God, in the one case, to produce a new principle of depravity in the hearts of the Romans than, in the other case, to produce a new principle of gravitation or give a new bias to that heart. In the one instance God had only to permit the interposition of certain occasions to bring the law of gravitation into effect upon the materials of the tower and to bring those eighteen persons within its reach to accomplish His purpose concerning them. So in the other case, He had only to permit the Jews, by their turbulency and rebellion, to provoke the resentment of the Romans to be the occasion of their acting out their bloody cruelty, so far as God had determined to permit them.

What I have said upon this subject is probably not sufficient to satisfy the minds of some who may think they are honest inquirers after truth. But it is not dependent on me to vindicate the revelation and ways of God from the charge of sin. Let those who charge that doctrine which God has revealed, with a sinful tendency, answer to Him for it.

I will offer a few remarks for the consideration of those who think that God has too great affairs to manage to concern Himself with the smaller particles of matter, such as are seen floating in the air; for such professors there are. I would ask them whether they believe in the resurrection of the body? If so, whether they believe that God will raise the bodies of all or only of such whose bodies He can find on the resurrection morn? We know that the bodies of many have been burned to ashes, and those ashes scattered towards the four winds of heaven; the bodies of others have been left to molder to dust on the surface of the earth; the graves of many have been opened and the dust that once composed the bodies mingled with other particles of earth, not to insist upon the continual process through which matter is passing of decomposition and new organizations, by which that which was once the component part of an animal body becomes incorporated in a vegetable substance, &c. How can any person with these facts in view believe that God will or can raise the bodies of all persons unless they believe that He exercises infinite knowledge and that universal disposal of all things, that every particle of matter is present to His notice, passing through what process it may, filling by His direction the very place and accomplishing the very object He designed? Is this knowledge too wonderful for your comprehension? So it is for mine. But is it too extensive for our God whose understanding is infinite? Other objections I leave for another number.

S. TROTT Fairfax Court House, Va.

Signs of the Times Volume 2, No. 6. February 19, 1834.

Absolute Predestination No. 4

Another objection urged against the doctrine of predestination is that it would involve the notion of the fatalists and destroy the freeagency of man and consequently his accountability. These notions must arise from ignorance of the true character of God who, as an efficient intelligence, governs the world in wisdom and righteousness, causing everything to result in the greatest good. But in answer to the objection, suffice it to say that the universal experience of man and the sure word of prophecy both unite in establishing the fact that man in all his sinful transactions acts freely, and is accountable there for. I will notice a few instances in which the consciousness of guilt was manifested in persons, relative to transactions manifestly predestinated of God. We have an instance in the case of Joseph's brethren. Although Joseph declared that it was God who sent him into Egypt, yet when their father was dead his brethren sent unto him saying, "We pray thee forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy Father." Gen. 50:17. We have another instance in Judas who committed the very crime which had long been predicted, and which the Master pointed him out as the one destined to perform, yet when he had committed the base act, he in contrition said, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood." Matt. 27:4. An instance of acknowledged free-agency we have in the case of the Assyrian, who was the rod of God's anger against the Jews. God says of him, "I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks. For he saith, by the strength of my hand I have done it and by my wisdom, &c." Isa. 10:12,13. Thus it is that men and devils, instead of frustrating or retarding the righteous government of God by the acting out of their enmity, are, in their very acts of sinning against Him, made by His wise government to bring about His holy and eternal purposes. This view of the holiness and majesty of God, manifested in His overruling the sins of men to the promotion of His purpose of grace whilst it fills His enemies with wrath, constrains the believer to exalt Him and to worship at His footstool under a feeling sense that He is holy.

I now pass to the consideration of an objection made by the popular Baptists, more particularly against this doctrine as held by the Old School Baptists. Even those who profess to believe the doctrine of predestination make it, when professed by an Old School Baptist, to be a very Pandora's box from whence springs Antinomianism and everything which they are accustomed to consider as evil in us. It is, according to their representation, our belief in the Absolute Predestination of all things that keeps us from engaging in the Benevolent enterprises of the day and prevents us from preaching repentance and faith as conditions of salvation, and from making any efforts to convert sinners, and in a word that it makes us very idle and wicked professors. This is the most unhallowed of all the objections made against this doctrine. It is the very course pursued by the Jews against our Master, that by raising a prejudice in the public mind against Him and His doctrine that they might more easily accomplish His death. As they thus succeeded against Him to do with wicked hands, what the counsel of God had before determined to be done, so will they succeed against the two witnesses.

But let us, Dear Brethren, rejoice with His early disciples in being accounted worthy to suffer persecution for our Lord's name sake. This course pursued by the popular Baptists in reproaching this doctrine, and us for holding it, whilst they admit it even to be a Bible doctrine, is the most decisive testimony as to what manner of spirit they are of, that could be had. It is, I sometimes think, undeniably an instance of our being reviled and having evil said of us falsely for His sake. The christian knows ordinarily, owing to a sense of the corruptions of his heart, the instances are not many when he can clearly draw the conclusion that it is for Christ's sake he is reviled. Hence, how thankful ought we to be for the privilege granted us of having such an unequivocal testimony that the blessing recorded in Matt. 5:11 & 12 belongs to us.

It is not in one solitary instance, or two that we are reproached for holding this doctrine. There appears for a few months past to have been a general concert on the subject. Preachers whilst professing to preach the doctrine of predestination, have in the very same discourses, represented it to be Antinomianism and to have the most deadening influence when held by certain Baptists, meaning the Old School brethren. Others have given the same views of the subject in their publications in the religious papers: witness the Letter of a certain celebrated preacher in Virginia published in the Religious Herald, of Dec. 20th, 1833. But it is perhaps proper to answer the objection, however unprincipled it is. The objection seems to imply that the whole sum of our faith is the doctrine of predestination; that all our religious course is determined by our belief of this one point of revelation.

It is true that believing in the predestination of God, we have no idea of procuring or of being instrumental in producing the salvation of one individual not chosen of God unto salvation; nor that one of the travail of Christ's soul will die without experiencing the renewing of the Holy Ghost and thus being prepared for the society of Heaven, whether that individual die in infancy or in old age, whether he was born in New York, in Rome, in Mecca or in Peking. But we as firmly believe that God has chosen His people to salvation thro 'sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth; that: It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe, and that whilst the preaching of the Cross is unto them that perish, foolishness; unto us who are saved it is the power of God. –

Let those who think and speak of tracts and Sunday Schools as the more efficient means of converting the world ponder this text and think seriously on the distinction drawn between those who perish and those who are saved. The one class esteem the preaching of the Cross, or Christ crucified, as far surpassing any scheme of men as the power of God surpasses the weakness of man. But they do not consider the difference between the preaching of the Cross, and Sunday School teaching or reading of tracts to consist so much in any natural superiority of the one over the others, but simply in the fact that the one is the appointment of God delivered to us through the volume of eternal truth and that the others are not. Attendance therefore on the one calls for and authorizes the exercise of faith in God, that He will bless His own appointments, whereas there can be no authorized faith in relation to the others because God has made no revelation concerning them. And according to the Apostle's views of the subject, the reason why God has instituted the simple preaching of the Cross, unadorned with wisdom of words, is that by such preaching God might make foolish the wisdom of the world, and that the faith of His people should not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. See 1st Cor. 1:18-29 & 2:4,5. The above may suffice to show that it is not our belief in the doctrine of predestination alone that prevents us from uniting in the Benevolent enterprises of the day, as they are styled, but the fact that God has appointed the one institution and but the one has its due weight with us, and ought to have with all who have confidence in the wisdom of God. But again our belief in the predestination of all things gives us confidence to believe that not an instrument shall be wanting, or a circumstance fail, that God ever designed to employ, or ever would own for bringing an individual of the Election of God into the liberty of the Gospel, or for establishing him in the hope and consolations thereof. It also leads us to believe that Christ's people will be willing in the day of His power, according as they are called to believe in Him, to confide in Him, to profess His name, to enter the ministry, and that with just such gifts as He has bestowed on them, and to go and occupy these gifts wherever He in His providence directs; and that their willingness to these things will be from a manifestation of the day of His power to their souls, and not from any offered worldly accommodations.

Hence we have no confidence in the Divine call of any person to the ministry who enters it or goes forward in it only as some salary or mission fund is proffered for his accommodation. Neither when they go forth from these considerations can we believe that God will make their labors a blessing. Consequently we stand opposed to Missionary and Theological school systems. The preacher made willing in the day of Christ's power to enter the ministry does not need these proffered accommodations to stimulate him to action.

Neither does he need for this end the notion of becoming popular by a display of School polish or by multiplying converts. He has to preach to answer his own conscience. Being an earbored servant, he will desire to be found faithful. And feeling that he is a servant, he will feel it to be his province to follow the directions of his Lord, to keep strictly to his written orders; to preach the word, to be instant in season and out of season, and to leave it to his Master's will to accomplish his own purpose by the word preached. Thus the predestination of God has secured that belief in the Absolute Predestination of all things will not make His servants idle, but on the contrary, it becomes an incentive to active obedience. The same is the case, as might be shown from the word, with all His other children in their several relations.

It is true that the servant of the Lord may sometimes be left to seek his own accommodation, rather than do his Master's Will, but when this is the case, the Lord will assuredly send leanness into his soul, or otherwise so chastise him as to bring him back to a cheerful discharge of duty.

As to antinomianism, those who know the meaning of the word, when they use it certainly do know that it is a base calumny upon us. They know that what offends them in our preaching relative to the law is our contending so strongly for the spirituality and unchangeable nature of the law, and that nothing but that full and perfect righteousness, found in the obedience of Christ as the representative of His people, could release from condemnation. If instead of preaching the Apostles' doctrine which establishes the Law, we preached the abrogation of the eternal law and that man is, as they say, on pleading terms with God, and by which many seem to mean that man is on grounds for proposing terms of acceptance, with God, we should then in the estimation of the popular be very lawful and holy men.

In reference to the charge that our belief in the doctrine of predestination occasions our not preaching that men should repent and believe, I would remark in the first place that according to our understanding of the Scriptures, repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ are essential parts of that salvation to which the elect of God are predestinated. These things therefore we preach. But the repentance to which God has predestinated His people is a heart repentance, a godly sorrow for sin; a turning with heartloathing from self and all self-doings, as being defiled with sin. We do not, therefore, and dare not, preach a mere Ahab or Ninevite repentance, as that which characterizes persons as entitled to the consolations of the Gospel. There is the same corresponding difference between the one repentance and the other, that there is between the deliverance granted to Ahab & Nineveh, and that salvation which cometh by Christ. It is true that if we could satisfy our consciences by preaching the word repent instead of preaching that repentance which is the result of the regenerating operations of the Holy Ghost, we should much better please the unregenerate and popular professors as we should then preach a repentance of which they have some conception.

Again, Christ, by nailing the handwriting of ordinances to His cross, so took the Sinai covenant, as such, out of the way that it never after should, by all the contrivances of men, be introduced into the plan of God as any part of the system of salvation. Hence Christ, after His resurrection, made known to His Disciples that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name, among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. (Luke 24:47). The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. If therefore there is any meaning in the expression, In His name, it must mean something very different from preaching repentance and remission of sins in a legal form. So we understand it as fixed by the predestination of God, and therefore we do not preach repentance as a condition upon which salvation is suspended. But while we preach the manifested obligation of all, both Jews and Gentiles, as the creatures of God to return unto Him by repentance, or as the Apostle has it, But now commandeth all men everywhere to repent, and whilst we preach the absolute necessity of heart repentance as a predestined part of the salvation of God, we preach that Jesus Christ is exalted as a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance to Israel; and that no repentance short of that which He giveth in making His word as a fire and a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces, either manifests the person as entitled to, capacitates him for receiving the consolations of the Gospel. Hence that no other is of any avail.

Thus far our belief in the predestination of God effects our preaching repentance.

So faith, we preach, not as a condition of salvation, but as the gift of God. And the faith we preach is as distinct from any natural belief of the human mind as the internal revelation or testimony of the Spirit of God is distinct from the testimony of men: the one is external and natural, the other is internal and spiritual; the one is comprehended and received by the natural powers of the human mind, the other can be understood and relied on only by spiritual life imparted. In a word, we believe that the predestination of God has fixed eternally the point that none but that system of salvation which God has decreed, that truth which God has revealed, and that order which He has established, shall stand. We would, therefore, be wholly conformed in understanding, in feeling and walk to that system, be grounded in that truth, and bounded and defined by that order which God has revealed. Being thus established in the truth of God and sustained by His word, if persecution come, let it come, we shall feel the assurance that the two Beasts with their Image, and all their drilled and mustered forces, can go no farther in their rage than our God has determined to permit them, that they cannot afflict us, only as He has designed the affliction in mercy unto us, that they cannot take our lives one moment before our Father has accomplished His wise purposes with us in this vale of tears.

Such an established belief in the predestination of God serves to preserve us, amidst the various trials of life, and amidst the rage of persecution from that fretful, sullen, and heart- sunken spirit manifested by Saul when he said, "Hear now, ye Benjamites, will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vineyards, &c., - that all of you have conspired against me; and there is none that sheweth me that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, &c." I Sam. 22:7,8. But on the contrary, it will enable us to manifest that patient, resigned spirit which David manifested when he said to Saul, "The Lord judge between me and thee, and the Lord avenge me of thee, but mine hand shall not be upon thee," (I Sam. 24:12), and when he said of Shimei, "So let him curse, because the Lord hath said unto him, Curse David, who shall then say wherefore hast thou done so;" -"Let him alone and let him curse for the Lord hath bidden him, it may be that the Lord will look on mine affliction, and that the Lord will requite me good for His cursing this day." 2 Sam. 16:10-12. In the case of Saul we see manifested the genuine temper of that spirit which will not have the Lord to reign over him, and which therefore rejects the purpose of God; in the other that humility and meekness which is incident to a belief and acquiescence in the Sovereignty of God.

But David did not believe that God's having bidden Shimei to curse, or in other words, His having predestinated this act, exonerated him from guilt. Hence David's directions to Solomon, I Kings 2:8,9.

I will here leave the subject, praying that whilst others reproach us for believing in the Absolute Sovereignty of God, the Lord would bless us with more unshaken confidence in His universal predestination and with a more entire submission to His Sovereign Will in all things, and that whilst others indirectly charge God with revealing a doctrine that leadeth to licentiousness, God may manifest in us that the belief of His truth and the power of His grace can so overcome the corruptions of our nature as to enable us to lead quiet, peaceable and godly lives.

S. TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va. Feb. 24, 1834

Signs of the Times Volume 2, No. 8. March 19, 1834

A CALL TO THE PASTORATE.

BROTHER BEEBE: - Having been particularly requested to send you for publication the subjoined call and invitation, together with my answer, I, for the satisfaction of Brethren concerned, and for the sake of informing my numerous correspondents, that after the 8th of April, my residence and place of address will be near Fairfax Court House, Virginia, if providence prosper my intentions, comply with the request.

S.TROTT.

The Frying Pan & Mount Pleasant Churches Fairfax County, Va. – To Elder Samuel Trott, Pastor of the Welsh Tract Church, New Castle County, Del., send Greetings: –

VERY DEAR BROTHER: – This is to inform you that we have by an unanimous vote at our respective Church Meeting of business, chosen you as our Pastor; and you are to receive this as our joint call.

The Ebenezer Baptist Church, Loudoun County, Va. – To Elder Samuel Trott, &c., sendeth Greetings:

VERY DEAR BROTHER: – This is to inform you that at a special meeting, called for the purpose on Wednesday, March the 6th, we unanimously agreed to invite you to commence preaching for us, conjointly with your commencing to preach for the above named Churches, with the understanding that we will settle the call with you in due form, after you come on.

Signed, in behalf, and by order of the above named Churches, by: WM. GILMORE. February 7, 1833.

To the Frying Pan, and Mount Pleasant Baptist Churches, Fairfax County, Va.

BELOVED BRETHREN: – Having received your joint call, signed in your behalf by our beloved Brother Wm. Gilmore, and bearing date, Feb.7th, 1833, to become your Pastor, having from the commencement of a correspondence on this subject, endeavored to commit the case unto the Lord, and prayerfully to watch the unfoldings of his providence relative thereto, and having from thence been led to the conclusion that the Lord designed my coming among you – that he was teaching me to go in that way, and guiding me with his eye thereunto, agreeable to an application of Psalms 32:8, to me, in an hour of much agitation of mind on this subject; and having also laid the subject before the Welsh Tract Church, of which I was then Pastor, and obtained on Lord's day, March 3, their unanimous consent to resign my pastoral relation with them, that I might accept your call.

I therefore, hereby certify my acceptance of the call, you have been led, I hope through the influence of the Holy Spirit, to give me, praying that the presence of God may go with me, if he bring me to settle among you, and that his grace may enable me with faithfulness, and in love, to labor among you in words and doctrine, and to Minister unto you Spiritual comfort and edification, according to the measure of gifts he has been pleased to bestow upon me, for the work of the ministry.

To the Ebenezer Baptist Church, Loudoun County, Va.

BELOVED BRETHREN: – I hereby certify my acceptance of your invitation, through our much esteemed Brother Wm. Gilmore, the authorized organ of communication between us, to commence preaching stadely for you, on the days of your monthly meetings, connectively, with my commencing with the Frying Pan & Mount Pleasant Churches, leaving it with the Great Head of the Church to direct, as shall be most for your good, and his own glory, whether I shall in due time become regularly your Pastor or not.

I would further state, that if providence permit, I shall be with each Church on the Saturday, and Lord's day, of your respective monthly meetings in April, commencing with the Frying Pan Church, the second Lord's day.

In testimony whereof, I subscribe myself, though unworthy, your servant for Christ's sake.

S.TROTT.

Signs of the Times Volume 1, No. 10. April 10, 1833

FOR THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

A Dissent From Brother Beebe's Views On A Final Judgment.

BROTHER BEEBE: – In your editorial of July 15th, (No.14, Vol.9, of the SIGNS,) you propose a friendly discussion of the subject you there introduced; namely, A FINAL JUDGMENT; as I have to dissent from your views on some important points advanced by you, I will avail myself of your proposition, hoping the discussion will not prove un-important.

I will however first say, that from your remarks at the Delaware Association, particularly your concluding remarks, and from some things which afterwards transpired, I had looked forward with a good deal of anxiety for your explanation through the SIGNS, fearing you would extend your views so as to involve a denial of the resurrection of the bodies of the dead; and consequently that there would be a split between us, and perhaps one far more extensive. But I am much relieved since you have distinctly avowed your belief in the final resurrection of the bodies both of the saints and the wicked; that they will be raised, the one to the resurrection of life, and the other to the resurrection of damnation. This being the case, I would have it distinctly understood that, although I dissent from you, as before stated, in important points contained in your editorial; yet the difference is not such as does, or ought to mar my fellowship towards you, as I at present view it. Other brethren may, perhaps, differ further from you than I do; such I will leave to discuss their own points; hoping however it may be with a desire to vindicate truth, not to resent a difference of opinion.

In reference to the judgment of the saints, I differ nothing from the views advanced by you. Never, since I was brought, as I hope, to know Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, have I been able to acquiesce in the notion that the saints at a final day are to stand with the wicked and be again judged. You have justly said that the elect of God in reference to their relation to the law and to their being transgressors thereof, have been brought to judgment. Yes, all their sins have been brought forward and the sentence of the law, in strict justice, has been passed and executed in reference to their sins, upon their adorable Head, Husband and Surety, Christ Jesus. For, as said the prophet, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all;" again, "He was wounded for our transgression," &c. Isa. 53:5,6. Peter testifies thus, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed." I Pet. 2:24. Paul's testimony is, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law; being made a curse for us." Gal. 3:13.

Again it is said, "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." - Heb. 10:14. In view of the testimony of these two or three witnesses I cannot conceive how the elect can be made again to stand in judgment, upon the demands of the law. But this is not all; believers have been made individually to participate, or have fellowship with their Head, both in receiving the sentence of the law, and in being released from it; that is, in their being arraigned, convicted of the enormity of their guilt as transgressors of the law, made to feel their just condemnation, &c., in their experience, and then in receiving by faith the sentence of justification on account of the perfect satisfaction made to law and justice by Christ's obedience in the stead of his people. Having then had their justification declared from the throne of God by the resurrection of Christ Jesus as their Representative, from the dead, and the same being witnessed to them with their individual participation therein, by the Holy Spirit; how can the saints legally be made again to stand in judgment upon the demands of the law, unless the judgment of the court of heaven, thus sealed by the Holy Ghost, can be first set aside? And if such were to be the case, would it not involve Christ Jesus, the Head, and Husband, in a second judgment, as well as his body and bride? Again, I might show, that all the descriptions given in the New Testament of the events connected with the resurrection of the saints, indicate that they are on, that event, to be manifested as participants with Christ in his glory; rather than to be associated with the world in the final judgment thereof. But I will forbear at present.

But when you deny that there is to be a final judgment of the wicked, I decidedly dissent from you, because I believe that the scriptures as clearly declare such a judgment as they do the resurrection of the

I will first notice some of the grounds taken by you in support of your position, and then bring forward some of the testimonies in favor of the idea of a final judgment.

1st. You appear to place a final judgment of the wicked and of the saints upon the same grounds, blending both together, and opposing both by the same arguments. But I understand the case of the two to stand upon very different grounds. It appears to me evident, from the whole course of God's government as declared in the scriptures, that every act of the dispensation of his justice, is so ordered as to manifest his righteousness therein, even as his setting forth Christ Jesus to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, was, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past; and to declare it, that he might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. (See Rom. 3:25,26.) Now I cannot conceive but that God would have been equally just in acquitting from the demands of the law, all in whose stead Christ should have suffered the penalty of the law, had not Christ been thus publicly set forth to suffer before the world and his enemies, and without having his crucifixion published from age to age, as now, but his justice then would not, as now, have been made manifest in justifying him which believeth in Jesus. Even in the case of Christ himself, there appears to have been a summing up of the charges against him, as the Surety of his people, as well as an executing of judgment upon him, hence the laying on him the iniquities of us all, was, as represented by the High Priest's laying his hands on the head of the scape-goat, and confessing over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, &c., (Lev.

16:21,) an actual bringing to view, those iniquities for which he was to suffer. These texts also, "By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities," and, "though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered," (Isa. 53:11; Heb. 5:8,) seem to me to import that he not only had his work before him and knew for whom he was to suffer, but also that he was made to know in his own soul, his people's sins, and the guilt thereof, and the justice of the wrath to be inflicted. Hence his agony in the garden, and his saying, "My soul is exceeding

2nd. You admit that the regenerate are brought into judgment, that the mountains of their guilt are set in order before them, and that the law of God, in flaming precepts, bears testimony against them, &c. Why all this? God knew before that they were his people, that Christ had redeemed them, had been made unto them righteousness; he knew their sins, for he had laid them all on Christ. It was not then that God should acquire any clearer knowledge of their case, that they were thus brought to judgment at the bar of conscience; but that the justice of God should be made manifest to them, both in their condemnation as transgressors of the law, and in their justification through the obedience of Christ, &c.

3rd. If we examine the cases of natural judgments recorded in the scriptures, we shall find in connection with the execution of these judgments, a manifestation made of the justice of God therein. Take for instance the judgment of God upon Egypt. God had told Abraham, more than four hundred years before, that his seed should be afflicted by the Egyptians four hundred years, and also that this nation he would judge. Gen. 15:13,14. - Here then was a determination of the event beforehand, and this declaration may as well be called a passing of sentence upon Egypt as may the declaration of Christ, that, "He that believeth not shall be damned," be considered as a sentence passed upon the unbelievers eighteen hundred years ago. Yet Moses and Aaron must be sent to Pharaoh with message after message; and the rebellion and hardness of Pharaoh's heart is made manifest, and sentence was passed in consequence thereof in reference to each plaque, and the justice of God was thus made manifest in pouring his plagues upon Egypt.

In the case of the various judgments executed upon Israel, we find that in all the idolatry, disobedience, &c., of that people, the law of Moses condemned them and denounced the punishment, &c., as much as do the scriptures condemn the world for their course; and yet the execution of every particular judgment, was preceded by a prophet's being sent to them, to point out to them the sins for which they were to be visited, and to pronounce sentence in the case. And when Christ came to execute judgment upon the Jews, they were left so to manifest themselves, and the justice of the vengeance against them, that even Titus the Roman general said that he was only an instrument in the hands of heaven which manifestly declared its wrath against the Jews.

Here then is the difference between the case of the saints and that of the world. The saints have been brought to special judgment, both in themselves and in the Head, as you admit, and their condemnation and justification both have been made manifest, as being in accordance with strict justice. But are the unregenerate thus judged in this life, and their sins in their true colors, and the justice of their condemnation manifested to themselves and to others?

Certainly not; excepting that the saints know from their own experience, the justice of God in condemning the wicked; and excepting the instances of national judgments as such, which can only take place in this world, as all national relations are dissolved with this life. – Hence the reason for a future judgment in relation to the wicked, and in distinction from the saints, is, I think, fully manifested. But I do not understand this future judgment to involve that arminian mass of nonsense which you connect with it, and by doing which, you have not done justice to the sentiments of your brethren, who differ from you. Neither will it be a process of enquiry, to give Christ, the Judge, a knowledge of their characters and crimes. But it will be a summing up of the evidence of their guilt, as given in their lives, and thus making manifest the justice of the final sentence then to be passed and executed upon them.

This leads me, in the 3d place, to notice the fact, that you have in your editorial blended the legal enactments, the investigation of charges, and the giving judgment thereupon, all together in the idea of judgment. The term to judge, may in some instances be used to denote the whole of a trial; but more strictly its import is, to pronounce sentence according to the testimony elicited in the previous trial, or investigation. In this latter sense, I think the words to judge and judgment are generally rendered. Hence, from your advancing the idea that the wicked were judged in this life, those universalists who were present at Welsh Tract, were so highly pleased with your preaching, saying that you had advanced exactly their doctrine; inferring, and with much propriety, that if you held the wicked to be judged in this life, you would also hold that they received their punishment here. I hold as firmly as you do, that all have transgressed the law of God, and are therefore already condemned by the law; so the laws of man condemn every transgression thereof, and declare the penalty due the transgressor. But you I believe would not on that account approve of the murderer's being immediately lynched, or summarily executed, even by those who might have been eye witness to the murder, but would say that he should first have an impartial trial, and that judgment should be regularly passed, and then executed. Again, I admit that the wicked are in a measure tried in this life, - not that they are probationers, for when a person has once transgressed, he is no longer a probationer under the law transgressed. But that God in bearing long with the world, is giving occasion to the wicked to give evidence of their native enmity to God, both by their opposition to the gospel, and by their worldly deportment, and consequently of their being transgressors of the law. And judging from the experience of the regenerate, I believe this evidence given by each individual in his own case is recorded, though in many cases unnoticed by him, in the book of his conscience, and when this book in connection with the book of the law comes to be opened by the Judge, (and which are called books, Rev. 20:12,) the guilt of the sinner, and the justice of the sentence then pronounced against him, or the judgment given, will be manifested. Now I think that you, yourself, will not contend that the impenitent have in this life any just knowledge of the extent of their sinfulness and quilt, or of the justice of their condemnation. If so, does it not prove that they are not fully judged in this life, and consequently, the necessity of a judgment beyond this life?

3rd. In reference to the arguments brought forward in your editorial, they mostly tend, and were probably designed to prove, that the saints will not again be made to stand in judgment; they do not therefore require an answer. The one drawn from the fact of Christ's being seated on his judgment seat when he executed judgment on the Jews, is perhaps excepted from the above remark. But I cannot conceive that Christ's having assumed his judgment seat, - not when he came to execute judgment on Jerusalem, but thirty-six years before, is any proof that he will not retain that seat until he hath put all enemies under his feet. Remember, the last enemy to be destroyed is death. I Cor. 15:25,26. Neither is the fact that he judged and executed judgment on the Jews at the appointed time any proof that he will not at the set time judge the anti-christian nations among the Gentiles, for their persecution of the gospel, or that he will not before giving up the kingdom to the Father, bring to a righteous judgment all them "that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," according to II Thes. 1:5-8. But rather, I consider the former exemplary judgment a sure pledge that these other predicted judgments will be also fully executed. Your views on Matt. 25:31-46, I do not in general object to, provided that passage be understood to be a figurative representation of the genuine effect of the coming of Christ in his gospel, whether before, or after the destruction of Jerusalem, or after the two Witnesses shall be again raised up and Babylon destroyed. For whenever he thus comes in the clouds or on the white horse of the gospel,* the preached gospel will have that discriminating effect. But in this view of the passage, I should consider the last verse to be a summing up of the figure by a positive declaration, that as the gospel points out the characters of these two classes, so their final ends will be. One exception however I must make, I cannot agree with what you intimate, that the preached gospel distinguishes between nations as such; setting one nation on the right hand, the other on the left. Peter's view I think more correct, viz: - "That God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Acts 10:34,35. The declaration, "Before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats," &c., allowing for the brevity used generally in such figurative representations, does not necessarily require that the word them should have the word nations for its antecedent. The example referred to, that of a shepherd's dividing the sheep from the goats where they were all flocked together, leads to a different construction. The shepherd, we must conclude, must take his flock by individuals to make the separation.

The next thing in course would be to bring forward the testimonies of scripture in favor of a final judgment, but this I will reserve for another communication.

Your brother, S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax Co,, Va., Aug.17, 1841.

the Times Volume 9, No. 18. September 15, 1841

^{*} Matt. 24:30,31; and Rev. 19:11-16 Signs of

FOR THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

[CONTINUED FROM PAGE 139.]

A Dissent From Brother Beebe's Views On A Final Judgment.

BROTHER BEEBE: – In pursuing this subject in the order I proposed, my next point is, to show some scriptural testimony in favor of a future judgment of the wicked.

I shall select but a few of the passages pointing out such an event. I will commence with Acts 10:42: "And to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of the quick and the dead." If he is ordained to be the Judge of the dead, I think it a consistent conclusion that this judgment will not take place until they hear his voice and come forth. If you say by the quick here we are to understand those made spiritually alive, and by the dead, those in a state of unregeneracy, I would ask you to reflect a moment, and consider, whether this would not place both those classes at the same bar.

Acts 17:31, I also refer to: "Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." This passage I think cannot be made to harmonize with your views without wresting the words from their plain import and connection. In the first place the expression, Because he hath appointed a day, must mean some period then future, and therefore cannot be construed to mean the gospel day, or dispensation, which the Apostle refers to as then present, and as contrasted with the period going before, by the expressions, But now commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent. Besides the expression, hath appointed a day, clearly designates a specific set period, a day, for this object. And who are to be judged on that day? The world – not the saints. Again, how does the fact of God's having raised Christ from the dead, give assurance unto all men of this judging the world on a set day, except on the ground that his resurrection from the dead, is a sure pledge of the resurrection of the dead? – Consequently the judgment must be subsequent to that event. If we take Rom. 2:12 & 16, in connection with the above text, we shall find that the appointed day, is a day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ. And brother Beebe certainly will not contend that the secrets of men of the world are judged in this life, that every secret thing of the wicked is in this life, brought into judgment.

In reference to Acts 24:25, I will simply ask brother Beebe, what Paul could have meant by a judgment to come, if it was not a future or final judgment?

Heb. 9:27, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment," demands some attention. I am aware of the turn you attempt to give this text; namely, that the appointment unto men to die, was to die in trespasses and sins; or to die unto the law. In reference to the first of these ideas, I would ask, did it remain for the appointment to take effect in reference to a single individual of the human family, to become dead in trespasses and sins, when this text was written? Certainly not, all that died in Adam and come into the world, in this sense, dead. How then in reference to this death, can it be said, "It is appointed unto men once to die?" Or has brother Beebe adopted the idea that infants come into the world pure, and that they die when coming to years of discretion by contracting the disease of sin? In reference to the other idea, that of dying unto the law, I will only remark; 1st. That the word men is here clearly used as denoting the species universally, and certainly all mankind do not become dead to the law; and 2nd. That the experience of the children of God shows that their death to the law is in consequence of the judgment had in their case, the judgment therefore in this case precedes the death. No, my brother, the plain import of the text points to that appointment contained in the decree, Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. And the judgment being after this shows that it must be beyond this life. But you may say, that as it is appointed unto the saints, in common with others, the above construction of this text, would involve the idea, that they also shall be judged beyond this life. Not so. It is true, that in reference to their relation to Adam, the saints were in the same condemnation; the Apostle therefore notices this fact, in order to show their redemption from it through the substitution of Christ. For the very essence of his argument here, is, that as this appointment to death and judgment stood against all, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, (not all,) and unto them that look for him, (by faith,) shall he appear a second time, without sin unto salvation." His one offering then was as a substitute, to meet the judgment in their stead, to deliver them from it, and even from death as a penal evil. Hence when he comes a second time, it will be without sin, not to bring to remembrance again their sins; but, unto salvation, to the full experience of their salvation. One other scriptural testimony to this point I will notice; namely, Rev. 20:11-15. There is much diversity of opinion, and much absurdity afloat relative to the thousand years reign spoken of in the preceding part of this chapter, and which the judgment spoken of in the passage above quoted, shall succeed. - Of that thousand years reign I shall not express any opinion, save to notice certain facts stated in the account of it. 1st. This is expressly declared to be the first resurrection. 2nd. John saw as having part in it, those that "were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," and those that "had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, neither had received his mark, &c." These of course must include all those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. See Rev. 13:8. 3rd. It is declared that these lived, &c., by which I understand that they had been raised to life from the dead; else, what can be meant by that which immediately follows; namely, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished?" In reference to this judgment, John declares that he, "saw the dead, both small and great, stand before God, &c.," and the "dead were judged out of those things written in the books, according to their works." Now these dead thus judged were such as had been in the sea, and in death, and hell; and certainly they cannot be men living on the earth, and who are only dead in trespasses and sins. Now, my brother, I do think that on a calm reconsideration of this whole subject, with the proofs in favor of a future judgment, you will abandon the notion, which you perhaps took up and advocated too hastily.

But it is not alone in reference to your rejection of the idea of a final judgment, that I dissent from your editorial under consideration. Your quotation of, or rather reference to several texts of scripture, applying them to the coming of Christ in the destruction of Jerusalem; and thereby representing all those several comings of Christ spoken of in the New Testament, to have received their accomplishment in his judgment upon that city and people, must receive my decided dissent. On this point you are sustained by the expositions on Hebrews, by our esteemed and talented brother Klipstine; but though he or you or an angel from heaven advance the idea, if it is not according to the doctrine taught in the New Testament, I am required not to receive it. But to the point, you say, page 111, col. 2. He went to receive a kingdom, leaving with his saints the kind assurance that he would come to them again - that he would associate his little flock with him in that kingdom - that it was needful for them that he should go away, but that he would return before some of them should taste death. In these extracts connected as they are with these words – to take vengeance on the Jews, to break up and forever abolish the temple worship, &c., you clearly intimate that the promises of Christ's coming, &c., contained in the following texts in connection with others, are all to be referred to the one period, and all received their accomplishment when Christ poured his vengeance on the Jews. The texts are these, Luke 20:29,30; John 14:18-28; Matt.16:28; and Mark 9:1. Now, if the promises contained in these texts, of Christ's appointing to his Apostles a kingdom; of seating them upon twelve thrones; of Christ's coming to them again after his crucifixion; of the Son of Mans coming in his kingdom, and of the kingdom of God's coming with power, &c., received not their accomplishment until the destruction of Jerusalem, and if till then the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles was not broken down; then the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the disciples on the Day of Pentecost, and upon the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius, and the account we have of the church at Jerusalem, and of the planting of churches among the Gentiles, and of all that is contained in the Acts of the Apostles, and the death of all the Apostles, except John, all took place before these promises were verified, before the kingdom of God came with power, and of course all was under the legal dispensation. I do wonder if brethren Beebe and Klipstine will insist on a position so inconsistent, a position which with one sweep takes from us all pattern, all example, all apostolic authority for a gospel church, and its order, when freed from the bondage of the law by the overthrow of the legal dispensation, to borrow brother Klipstine's expressions. And if the Apostles were not seated upon their thrones, and Christ did not come in his kingdom, until after the death of all but John, who alone lived until Jerusalem was destroyed, I would ask what power that was which the Apostles were to tarry for in Jerusalem, until they were endowed with it from on high. See Luke 24:49.

There are also other texts which you, by your extracts, apply with equal indiscrimination to the taking vengeance on the Jews, and which I am about to show, clearly relate to future comings of our Lord Jesus; as in this passage, Nor was that coming, nor those signs to be deferred, &c., but should take place when he should descend with a shout as he went up, and come to be admired by all who waited for his appearing, but to take vengeance on the Jews, &c. I find but one text which speaks of the Lord's descending with a shout, that is, I Thes. 4:16,17, which reads thus, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, &c." Now, if anything like what is here declared took place at the destruction of Jerusalem, or has taken place from that day to this, I am ignorant of the history of it. The expressions, The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, can mean nothing less than his personal coming, such as the two men in white apparel told the Apostles should take place, when they said, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as you have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:11. Their seeing him go into heaven, was a personal, or bodily going into heaven; in like manner was he to come again. Such an event I have no idea took place when Jerusalem was destroyed. His coming then, as in several other instances, was only in his power. By the expression, come to be admired by all who waited for his appearing, I know not to what you can allude, except it be II Thes. 1:10, which reads thus, "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, [not by them,] and to be admired in, [not by,] all them that believe." I would ask brother Beebe to tell us what this text, or what the persecution this church was enduring (see vs.4,) had to do with the destruction of Jerusalem, or what that event had to do with this Gentile church which was not situated even in Asia? Or how he was at that period admired in all them that believe, when he was then, and for many years after, suffering, in them, persecution throughout the whole Roman empire. In the expressions, Destroy his enemies by the spirit of his mouth, and consume them by the brightness of his coming, you must have had reference to II Thes. 2:8, and thereby applied that prophecy to the destruction of Jerusalem. The text reads thus, "And then shall that Wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy by the brightness of his coming." – Now notice that, that man of sin, that son of perdition, that Wicked whom the Lord shall consume and destroy, was not revealed when the Apostle wrote this epistle, and there was a let which must be taken out of the way before he could be revealed, and also a falling away first, &c., verses 4-7. But certainly the Jewish nation and their wickedness also, had been fully manifested at that time; and of course this scripture had no relation to the destruction of that people. Other texts which you refer to, I will pass by. Hence it appears manifest that you referred on the one hand, to declarations and promises which relate to Christ's coming to his disciples from the dead, and his coming in the person of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost; and on the other hand, to texts which contain direct declarations concerning his coming to destroy that Wicked, the anti-christ among the Gentiles, and concerning his personal coming, when the dead in Christ shall be raised, and those saints alive shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air; and the whole you have applied to the one event, his coming in the destruction of Jerusalem, thus making that period and that event the center point of nearly all of the New Testament prophecies. If you and brother Klipstine are correct, I would like to be informed whether we have any good authority to expect any further coming of Christ, excepting as he has been coming in the preached gospel for the last eighteen hundred years. I know of no promise of his coming, which may not as consistently be made to apply to that favorite event of yours, and brother Klipstine's, viz: his coming in the instrumentality of the Romans in his judgment upon the Jews, as some of those promises you have so applied, or as the promises in the Epistle to the Hebrews may be made so to apply.

I should have liked to take a more particular notice of brother Klipstine's confining the application of the Epistle to the Hebrews to those Jews residing in Jerusalem or Judea, and particularly his so confining that precious ground of consolation to the heirs of promise, the spiritual seed of Abraham at large, contained in Heb. 6:13-20. And your views of Matt.24. Not that I do not believe the prophecy contained in that chapter, had a particular application to the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem; but that I also believe it, like several other prophecies, had a two-fold reference and that its ultimate accomplishment has not yet taken place, in answer to that part of the disciples enquiry relating to the end of the world. Also the idea advanced both by you and brother Klipstine, that the breaking down the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles, and the freeing of the gospel church from the bondage of the law, was accomplished in the destruction of Jerusalem. But I will let them for the present pass, excepting I will just say in reference to this latter point, that the Apostle ascribes the abolishing of the law contained in ordinances, and the partition wall, to the crucifixion of Christ. See Eph. 2:13-17; and Col. 2:13-23. If not so, and your views are correct, why does Paul charge the Galatians with being bewitched in submitting to circumcision?

Your brother, S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax Co., Va., Aug. 24, 1841.

Signs of the Times Volume 9, No. 19. October 1, 1841

For the Signs of the Times.

NUMBER 1.

Brother Beebe: Writing a few days since to a distant friend, on a subject which she had proposed, namely a hard heart; I was led, in speaking on it as a distinguishing trait of an unregenerate state, to refer to Pharaoh as a Scriptural instance illustrative of this subject. And in drawing a contrast between the heart of Pharaoh and the hearts of the children of Israel, as manifested under God's dealings with them, I was led to some ideas, which may perhaps, be edifying to some, who have not thought particularly on the subject. I therefore send them to you for publication, if you see fit to give them a place in the Signs.

In contemplating that portion of Sacred History which relates to God's bringing Israel out of Egypt, I find the fact prominent, that Moses' mission, he having Aaron for his mouth or minister, was directed both to Israel and Pharaoh; that whilst God's purpose in sending Moses into Egypt, as foretold, and as accomplished, was to bring Israel in particular, out of their bondage, yet that He had a demand upon Pharaoh and that demand was made through Moses.

From the fact that in the New Testament, the name of Moses is substituted for the law as given by him, see Luke 16:29 & Acts 15:21, we are scripturally authorized to consider Moses as prefiguring the Law. - And as Moses' message both to Israel and Pharaoh, was declared by Aaron as his mouth, see Ex. 4:15,16,30, so the true demands of the law, as spiritual, are brought to view only in the doctrine, the life and death of Christ. And it is the Law as thus established by the Gospel, and not the Sinai covenant, that speaks through our Spiritual Aaron, or in the gospel ministry, showing the just condemnation of all the human family, convincing the regenerated of sin, and producing in them a death to it, as the way of acceptance with God. I am aware that from Egypt's being denominated the house of bondage, Israel's bondage there, is thought to prefigure the situation of the sinner under the Law. To this I answer, that the Law is good and the commandment holy, just, and good; but the bondage of Egypt was unjust and oppressive. I therefore consider it more consistent with the tenor of divine revelation, to consider Moses as representing the Law. As Moses' mission to Israel, though the occasion of an increase of their oppression, for a season, was a gracious mission; so the Law, although the occasion of much bondage to the spiritual Israel whilst in their Egypt, was graciously given in reference to them, to convince them of sin, and to prostrate them at the feet of sovereign mercy. The fact is, the Law as given in thunder from Sinai, has no direct tendency to produce that slavish bondage under which men labour in seeking justification by their works; but on the contrary, by entering that the offense may abound, or in other words by searching out and bringing to our view the depravity of our hearts, its tendency is, to show us the folly of looking to our own works, for salvation, and to bring us to cry with the Publican for mercy. On the other hand the Egyptian bondage, prefigured that bondage under which the sinner labors, in consequence of his disbelief of the testimony of God borne through the Law, his predetermination to cling to legal principles for life; and above all, of his substituting the Sinai covenant as given nationally to Israel, for the Law, as the standard of individual justification before God. To these things the pride and self-will of man, has, in every age, predisposed him to; and his own consciousness of transgression, driving him from a confident reliance on the moral principles of the Law covenant, substituting since the gospel day, baptism for circumcision, and natural faith and repentance, reformation, profession, prayers, &c. for the titles, and offerings to which the Jews clung. This drudgery is frequently called legal obedience, but it is more properly termed illegal, for it certainly is not sanctioned by the law.

Having premised thus much relative to Moses' mission into Egypt, and the bondage of Israel, I proceed to the point in view; namely, to show by the different effects the message of Moses had, upon Pharaoh on the one hand, and Israel on the other; the evidence of that hardness of heart, which is characteristic of unregeneracy, as manifested in the course pursued by the unregenerate relative to the demands of the Law as published through the gospel ministry, and as contrasted with that conduct produced by the heart being regenerated. For Pharaoh notwithstanding his exalted station, stood manifestly in the relation of a creature of God, and bound to yield obedience to the divine will, although his exaltation tended the more to harden his heart.

As the demand of God was pointed upon Pharaoh, and so declared by Aaron, so the demands of the Law are equally pointed toward every child of Adam, requiring him to give up his heart to God, and bow to His sovereignty; and should be so published in the ministry of the gospel.

As Pharaoh in reply to the first delivery of Moses' message to him, said, "Who is the Lord that I should obey His voice &c.," so the unregenerate practically treat with contempt the demands of God's law, many of them living as though they knew not, that there is a Lord, whom they should reverence and obey. Again, as Pharaoh appealed to his magicians to invalidate the miracles of Moses by imitation, and as God permitted them in these cases to perform acts resembling those miracles He wrought by Moses; so the unregenerate, frequently, try to evade the manifestation of their obligation to God arising from His providential goodness to them, by ascribing their preservation, their health, prosperity &c. to their own prudence, exertions, &c. and so the Lord often permits those who disown His special government, to prosper in the world, whereby their hearts become the more hardened against Him, and they fill up the measure of their iniquities; and at the same time His purpose is accomplished by them, as it was in bringing about the occasion for manifesting His great power in bringing His people out from under the yoke of Pharaoh. They also seek to invalidate the truth of God's word, in which is revealed the helpless state of the sinner in reference to salvation, his necessity of being born from above, &c., by appealing to their power to reform their outward lives, to perform the outward forms of religion &c. Indeed there are, at this day, many who are fitly prefigured by Pharaoh's magicians, from the mock conversions, they are producing by their various acts; and the Lord is permitting them to succeed in drawing the multitude after them, under the impression that theirs is the great power of God, and all this that God's mighty power may be known, not only in sustaining His church, in opposition to the rage of the foaming current, but also in the complete, ultimate overthrow of the man of sin in all his entrenchments.

In other instances, Pharaoh finding himself pressed by the judgments of God, sends in haste for Moses and Aaron, and proposes a partial submission to the demand made, and in some cases promises compliance on condition of being relieved from the evil he dreaded, but when relief was had, he forgot his promises. We see much like this, at this day, in persons under those natural convictions which are produced, either by the fears of approaching death, or by excitements produced, whether with, or without the methodical forms of camp or protracted meetings. Many persons condemn death- bed repentances, who extol as a high state of religious exercise the very same kind of terror when produced at meetings by the preachers harrowing up the feelings of the afflicted or, as though it was his element, pouring forth torrents of hell-fire against those who have not as yet submitted to be converted by him; and this in a manner that would be considered insufferably coarse, if coming from any other source than his pulpit. But these slavish fears, excited by what they may be, are as void of pure religion as was Pharaoh's which was occasioned by seeing the fire and hail mingled. The unregeneracy of the subjects of these excitements is manifested, frequently in their sinning, like Pharaoh, yet more, in going back wherein they had reformed; if not in this, yet in manifesting a determination to adhere to their own terms for acceptance with God; saying with Pharaoh to those who would point to a finished salvation; look to it, for evil is before you, that is in depending as helpless condemned sinners, upon the free and sovereign grace of God in Christ for salvation, without having their prayers, and other performances, acknowledged, as good and acceptable in the sight of God. And when they professedly submit to acknowledge themselves to be lost sinners, and to give themselves up, as they say, to be saved by Christ, it is with the understanding, on their part, that in consideration of their doing so, Christ has bound Himself to save them. Thus instead of acknowledging and submitting to the righteous and unalterable demands of God's Law, and being willing to rely for salvation, as objects of mercy, upon the sovereign pleasure of God in Christ, they would have God to come to such terms as they according to their various systems, think are right. Who, that has eyes to see, does not see in this kind of religion, put on in order to be saved, a correspondence in principle and practice, with Pharaoh's attempts to escape the judgments of God? If his was the workings of a hardened heart, so must theirs be.

S. TROTT.

Fairfax C. H. Va. March 10, 1835.

Signs of the Times Volume 3, No. 7. April 1, 1835

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS

NUMBER 1

Remarks on the subject of the laying on of hands occasioned by the recent ordination in the Ebenezer Baptist Church at Utica, New York

In the 13th number of the Signs, we have the encouraging information that several of the poor of the flock have been gathered into a visible fold in Utica, New York. Notwithstanding the treading down of the pasture, and fowling of the waters by the heat goats in that vicinity. Though old school brethren, I am not convinced that the mode adopted by them and their help in ordinating Brother Hill is correct.

The subject of laying on of hands is one about which in its different bearings, brethren have been much divided In opinion. As the subject has been thus presented before us it may not be unprofitable to examine it and try to obtain a scriptural and uniform understanding of it. I have for some time thought the signs might be additionally profitable where a portion of them occupied with a calm discussion of these points, about which we know there is an honest difference of opinion among brethren, with a view to eliciting light on the subject. Hence I have once or twice introduced such views of my own as I suppose my brother might some of them differ with me, and solicited a discussion of them. They have not however been noticed. If the understanding is that we're in we differ, we must and will continue to differ; Then such points should be kept out of the signs.

The difference among brethren on the subject of laying on of hands, whether in receiving persons into church relation or in setting apart to office has not appeared to be a sufficient ground for a separation in feeling or in church fellowship. Hence I have not been disposed of bear and forebear on this point. Still, I cannot conceive that anything established by Apostolic example, as gospel order ought to be treated as an indifferent thing, or that about which we should be careless of obtaining a correct understanding, or of practicing as given in the pattern.

It is true then in the case before us, Brother Beebe in his editorial remarks, page 206-207, has used an expression which if designed as a preliminary to a discussion on this subject, and an accepted, would prevent me and I think most of us from entering upon it. Whatever the secret disposition of my heart may be, I do not wish to indulge in the feeling that would prompt me to say to my brother, I am taught of God, in the thing wherein you and I differ, and therefore I am certainly right, and you wrong. What I want to know is, whether these brethren or myself have the mind of Christ in this thing; and I know of no better way to come at this than to compare our different views with the scriptures. I, therefore, proceed to the proposed examination, without laying a claim Brother Beebe's You work with it in the case if he intended it as such, where he says, "may those who are instructed of God on this subject, let their light so shine." However he may have used the expression with a view to a different application than I at first sight supposed, I now come to the subject at hand.

Our first inquiry is into the use or design of laying on of hands, as we find the practice delivered to us in the scriptures. Brother Salmon, seems to think it quite certain, that the laying on of hands, was a prerogative only of the Apostolic office; And that its use was to confer gifts; That the apostles had such to bestow. And this he infers from the passages he quotes from the 1st and 2nd epistle to Timothy. Where these are the only passages in which we find this ceremony mentioned; And were not the scripture so explicit as to gifts, we might conclude there was some ground for his conclusion. But I think I shall be able to show that his quotation of these texts was altogether irrelevant to the subject to which he applies them.

We may if possible clear the ground as we pass, we will first notice what the scriptures teach us, asked to do the communication of gifts.

1st about those gifts more properly belonging to the work of the ministry. We read of Christ that when he ascended on high leading captivity captive, he received gifts for men, yea for the rebellious that the Lord God might dwell among them. Vide. Psalm 68.18. The apostle referring to this says, he gave gifts; "he gave some, apostle; And some prophets; And some evangelists; Some pastors and teachers." And the use of them, "for the perfecting of the Saints; For the work of the ministry." And for how long? "Till we all come in the unity of the faith," Ephesians 4.8, 13. Hence if I understand this matter: till the fullness of Christ, or the last member of the body of Christ is brought in Christ has gifts for the rebellious that the Lord God may dwell among them, and he has them in his own hands to give. Hence he did not tell his disciples to see to it, that they thrust plenty of laborers into his vineyard, as would have been proper if he had committed those gifts unto their hands, as apostles to distribute; But he tells them, "pray you the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Matthew 9.39. Brother Salmon says he has thought that gifts and miracles ceased with the apostles. If I thought so, then I should think with the Campbellites, then it is as much the duty of one disciple to preach as another; Of course setting particular persons apart for the work would be altogether an arbitrary thing period, or rather with the above text from Ephesians in view I should conclude that there was no further use for the ministry. For I must believe that so long as the work of the ministry is of any use Christ will continue to bestow gifts on the church suitable for it. Brother Salmon, I am inclined to believe, think so too; and that he did not exactly say what he meant. I think that special miracles and certain gifts ceased in the church with the apostles. If ministerial gifts then were to be continued, they could not have been committed into the hands of the apostles to distribute, seeing that they did not continue, nor have they left any successors in their peculiar office.

2nd the more extraordinary gifts. Paul Speaking of these in First Corinthians 13.3 enumerates them severally and points out particularly their source. He says, verse 8, 11, "for one is given by the spirit (not by the apostles) the word of wisdom; to another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same spirit; to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy; To another discerning of spirits; To another divers kind of tongues; To another the interpretation of tongues: but all these work that one and a self-same spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." Not giving out in a lump for the apostles to divide; neither dividing according to their own will; but dividing to every man severally as He will. What could be more pointed than the apostles' language here in ascribing the whole, of the imparting of gifts to the sovereign act and will of the Holy Spirit. I wonder if Brother Salmon could have been reflecting on this passage, when he wrote this sentence, "I understand that the apostles possessed gifts to bestow." If he did come I entreat him to do us the favor to point us to the text, where the gift of giving gifts is mentioned as possessed by any; Or if possessed by any human being, I wish him to explain why this gift is never mentioned, seeing it was so important a one.

3rd the baptism or descent of the Holy Ghost, in the gift of tongues This peculiar coming of the Holy Ghost upon the disciples, was as I understand the subject, a special testimony from heaven of the acceptance of Christ as the intercessor of his people, and consequently a confirmation of the fact that he had come as the true Messiah. Hence John gives this as a decisive testimony of his being the one of whom he was the forerunner, that he shall baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire. It must have been his peculiar act to administer this baptism. Hence Peter says (acts 2.33) in reference to the descent of the Holy Ghost, on the day of Pentecost, Speaking of Jesus, "therefore being by the right hand of God exalted and having received of the father the promise of the Holy Ghost he has shed forth this which you now see and hear." And also Speaking of the Holy Ghost coming upon Cornelius and his household, he says, "for as much then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto thus who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I that I could withstand God." Does this look as though the Holy Ghost in this special communication of him, was something which the apostles had in her hands to communicate? It is true that Simon of Samaria thought, from what he saw, as many do to this day, that Peter and John had the power to communicate the Holy Ghost by delaying on of their hands; He therefore wished to purchase of them this power with money. But Peter in reproving him not only points out the sin of offering money for a religious privilege, but also that of supposing, that what was peculiarly the gift of God, was a power that men possessed. The idea that the apostles had the Holy Ghost in their hands at their disposal, is so much like that degrading view in which the fashionable religionists represent him to this day; That I cannot away with it.

We will notice the instances in which the descent or baptism of the Holy Ghost is connected with the laying on of hands. The first is Acts 8. The apostles at Jerusalem hearing at Samaria had received the word of God sent unto them Peter and John. Who when they were come down, proceeded to confer the Holy Ghost upon these disciples? No, of this, they had no idea of possessing the power to do. But they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost. Then laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost. Now it is possible that the Holy Ghost directed them to act in connection with his coming upon these disciples, in order to honor them as the apostles of Christ. But I think it far more consistent with the view given of the baptism of the Holy Ghost in the preceding cases, to suppose that they laid their hands on them, to set them apart to walk together in church relation, or in our common language to constitute them into a church, and the Holy Ghost came upon them at this time to sanction and confirm this act. So in the other case acts 19, Paul coming to Ephesus found certain disciples who had been baptized into John's baptism. That is evidently by some disciples of John after Christ had been manifested as the Messiah. Hence on a false profession, of faith in him who shall come after, when Christ had come. When they were instructed by Paul and baptized in the correct profession. Paul laid his hands on them which constituted them into a church. And the Holy Ghost came upon them sanctioning the act. The very expression used, I should think was calculated to guard us against a notion of Paul's bestowing on them the Holy Ghost. It reads thus, verse 6: And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them. Then surely Paul's hands did not put him on them. There was the commencement of the church at Ephesus. I must defer all the remarks to another number.

S. Trott Fairfax CH Va, July 10, 1835

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF THE DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE.

BROTHER JEWETT: - I am pleased to learn that so many are being led, I trust by the Holy Spirit, to a more scriptural view of the important doctrine of Justification, and of the order of gospel churches; as being designed by their Great Head to be independent of all other religious ORGANIZATIONS or bodies; and that yourself among others have been thus led. As thou hast received the gift, my brother, so minister the same; freely and boldly impart the light given thee in the Scriptures; relative both to doctrine and practice. What is told thee in darkness that speak thou in the light; and what thou hearest in the ear, that preach, or publish, upon the house-top; whether in illustration of truth, or exposure of error.

I am truly rejoiced to find you where you are, on a little spot, surrounded by vast and diversified fields of error; and that the Lord has led you on step by step, to this spot, giving you an opportunity to examine each place as you passed along, and unfolding to your view the mystery of iniquity, as under the assumed garb of religious benevolence, it stalks abroad in various forms of doctrine and practice.

As to the trials you have experienced, in being constrained to renounce as error, that which you once held so sacred, having been taught in the schools of men, to receive and practice it as a zeal becoming the gospel of Christ; I think I have in my own case known something of the feelings you have endured in being thus stripped of so many good things, and being made to account them as loss, as real nuisances, for the sake of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, as the Savior of sinners, and King of Zion, as revealed to your mind by the gospel under the teachings of the blessed Spirit. I still occasionally find myself a learner in that lesson, and am conscious that to be right in sentiment, in feeling and in practice, I need to be taught much more of this lesson in that inimitable and divine way, in which the Holy Spirit imparts instruction. But, my Brother, if Socrates could with propriety say in reference to the fleshly wounds made by his chains, that the pleasing sensation felt in those parts when the pain subsided, fully compensated for what he suffered in being thus galled, well may the christian account it all joy; both in that he should be made to experience the pain and mortification of renouncing and loathing those errors which he held sacred as truths; and especially as by this operation of the Holy Spirit, he is led to behold the beauty and glory of that truth revealed in the gospel, as contrasted with the deformity of that which he had learned as truth from men, and which he now knows to be deception.

Again, you know the more mellow the ground is made, the deeper the seed sown therein, takes root; so the harrowing up of your feelings in having all that worldly wisdom and polish, which you had derived from the schools, stripped of its gaudy beauty, as compared with the simplicity of the doctrine of the cross, has but prepared you to have a deeper and more lasting impression made upon your mind by those truths imparted, to receive them with greater delight, and to hold them in higher estimation.

But then, having been associated with the admirers of the wisdom of this world, the advocates of scientific religion, in now taking a stand with the unlearned disciples of the Nazarene, you and others in like circumstances, must expect a peculiar share of reproach. This will be considered necessary to be heaped upon you, in order to hide the cause of your having departed the ranks of missionism. It will however do you no hurt. Being conscious that you have been led by the Holy Spirit to the understanding you now have of gospel doctrine and order, the reproaches heaped upon you on account of your embracing that doctrine and order, will but endear them to you, and give you the greater boldness in defending them.

And you, my brother, the more you are brought to see and feel the marked distinction there is between divine revelation and human science, will you be disposed to adopt a motto corresponding to our republican charge, that where liberty is, there is my country, and say that where gospel truth and christian experience is clearly presented to view, there is the composition which you admire, and the learning which you prize.

S. TROTT.

Centerville, Fairfax Co., Va., 1839.

For the Signs of the Times.

Antinomianism Examined and Its Relation to Arminianism Shown.

BROTHER BEEBE: – I received a letter a short time since, from Bro. P. Meredith, in which he requests me also to give my views of the text, Job 28:7,8, in reference to the enquiry whether there is not a path which passes between the sand bars of Arminianism and the granite rocks of Antinomianism.

Your answer to this enquiry as published under the editorial head in No.9 of present Vol., he says is very explicit in reference to Arminianism, but not so full in reference to Antinomianism as he wished. He gives as a further reason for requesting my views, that he has lately heard, "that to be a thorough going Old School Baptist, one must believe that it is not the duty of the unregenerate, to believe, repent, or pray." I will therefore add my testimony to yours on this point. The one may strengthen the other.

I will first examine the subject of Antinomianism and see whether "the path which no fowl knoweth, and the vulture's eye hath not seen" can be a middle track between that and Arminianism.

The signification of the term Antinomianism is, according to its etymology, against the law, as shown by Brother Beebe; and the charge evidently intended to be fixed upon those to whom this term is applied is that they are opposed to the law of God, or do it away by their doctrine. This charge, if the enemies of truth were admitted to be judges, would have been fixed upon the Master of the house, and upon those of His household in every age, from Paul down to Brother Meredith and myself, who preach a finished salvation in Christ. But I appeal from those would be judges to the scriptures of truth. I would stand at the judgment seat of Christ.

Those who anciently claimed to be disciples of Moses in distinction from Christ, evidently supposed that the letter of the Sinai laws, moral and ceremonial, together with the traditions of their fathers, constituted a code of law which supplanted the original law under which man was created; and that this was the standard by which man's acceptance with God, or rejection, was to be decided. Because Christ and His Apostles preached a doctrine adverse to this Pharisaical law, they were denounced as opposers of the law of Moses.

The modern Nomians or legalists also understand the original law of God to have given place to a milder law, compounded of the letter of the Ten Commandments and what they conceive to be certain requisitions and conditions of the gospel, and that this gospel law is the standard of righteousness, by which all men under the gospel are to be tried, and a want of conformity to it is the ground of condemnation; and according to some, a personal conformity to it, is the ground ofjustification. But no individual who has been brought truly to love the law of God, can admit of its being supplanted by such a medley of human contrivance, and when it is opposed, either as a standard of right or as a yoke of bondage attempted to be put upon the neck of disciples of Christ, its opposers are at once denounced as Antinomians.

In making my appeal from these partial Judges, I file the following answers to their charge: 1st. That God in creating Adam a living soul, laid him, and his posterity in him, under obligation to love the Lord his God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength; and to love his neighbor as himself; that this constituted the law of his creation, and the eternal standard of right, which no apostasy of man could make void. 2nd. That the revelation which God has made of His mind and will in the scriptures, the alone standard of truth, no where teaches that God has ever abrogated this law of man's creation, altered its requisitions, or abated its demands to suit the weakness of fallen man. This answer is sustained by Matt. 5:17-20 & Rom. 3:31. 3rd. That the prohibition given to Adam in the garden not to eat of the forbidden tree, was designed as a test of his subjection to God and to the law of his creation; his transgressing this prohibition was therefore the just ground of his being condemned and his posterity in him to a state of depravity or death in sin. And that the law of Ten Commands given from Sinai, in its general bearing upon all men, distinct from its special reference to Israel nationally, was not designed as a covenant of works and to lead men to depend on their obedience to it for their final acceptance with God, either Jews or Gentiles; but it "was added because of transgression, till the Seed should come to whom the promise was made, &c.;" (Gal. 3:19) it "entered that the offense might abound." (Rom. 5:20) In a word, it was given in its spiritual import, in the sense in which Paul says the law is spiritual, - (Rom. 7:14) as a schoolmaster to teach both Jews and Gentiles their entire depravity and guilt, and the impossibility of their being justified by the deeds of the law, and their need of just such a salvation as is revealed in Christ, a salvation from sin and sovereignly free. Hence it is written, "We know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped and all the world become guilty before God;" and again, "For by the law is the knowledge of sin." Rom. 3:19,20. Neither, I will add, was this law of Ten Commands given, in itself considered, to be a rule of life; it was designed to teach us what sin is, and its moral precepts are sanctioned by the New Testament as illustrating that which is a proper deportment toward God and toward man in a general and moral point of view. But a rule of life, to be correct must be an exact measure of all that is required of us to perform. - This law was not such to ancient Israel; other laws were given them, which they were required also to obey, and which were of course component parts of that rule by which their lives were to be squared, such as certain positive institutions of a ceremonial nature, &c. Neither is it a perfect rule to spiritual Israel; the life of a christian as such, must be upon a broader scale than the letter of the Decalouge, in order to its being squared with the gospel. Repentance toward God for his daily wanderings of heart, and living daily by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and an establishment in the truths of the gospel must enter into the composition of a christian's life or walk in order to his conformity to the gospel standard; and these things are beyond the compass of the Ten Commands, "For the law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them." Gal. 3:12. There are also positive institutions belonging exclusively to the gospel to be observed by the christian if he would "walk uprightly according to the truth of the gospel." If therefore the legalists call us Antinomians for denying that the law is a rule of life to the disciples of Christ, we may well call them anti-gospelers, or anti-newtestamenters for their attempts to make it a full rule to the christian's life. Thus much for our views concerning the much insisted upon further consideration of the answers I have filed.

1st. Whilst these answers stand, and they must stand according to the standard of eternal truth, it is evident that we are justified in opposing this law of conditions of which faith and repentance and various religious ceremonies, are the principal terms, being foisted into the place of that unchanging standard of right, the law under which man was created, as that by which man is to be judged before God, and consequently their charge against us of being Antinomians on this account will not stand. 2nd. So long as it is written, "Whosoever offendeth in one point is guilty of the whole," it must be evident that whoever sets up anything other than the spiritual or original law of God in its exceeding broadness as the standard by which man is to be tried before God, by which he is to be justified or condemned, opposes or makes void that law and is therefore an Antinomian in the strict import of the word. The teaching that the law will accept of anything short of perfect obedience to its everlasting demands, or that it will admit of any substitution in the place of this perfect obedience, such as repenting and believing the gospel and the like, is according to the above view of the subject Antinomianism.

Having thus shown what Antinomianism is, and the characters on whom the charge properly rests, I will briefly show its position in relation to Arminianism by a few questions. 1st. Who are they that are opposed to the enforcing the rigorous demands of the spiritual law of God? – The unregenerate, whether professors or not; – "for the carnal mind is enmity against God, not subject to the law of God," &c. But unregenerate professors more fully act out this opposition; they then are the practical Antinomians. 2nd. – Who are they that are fond of the Arminian, or do and live system? The unregenerate universally; but those of them who profess religion, more openly avow this system. Hence the Arminian in heart is an Antinomian in heart, and the professed Arminian stands in his doctrine opposed to the unchangeable demands and rectitude of the original law of God, and is therefore in truth an avowed Antinomian. Or thus: Those who make void the law of God by their traditions or systems must be Antinomians. What is Arminianism, but a system that teaches that men's acceptance with God depends on certain conditions to be performed by them, short of a perfect obedience to the original law of God? Christ having according to some taken away the original law, and according to others, made an atonement for sin abstractly considered, to make room for such conditions being accepted. Hence Arminianism and Antinomianism terminate at the same point, are two different names for the same system of opposition to the law of God. How then can the "path which the vulture's eye hath not seen" pass between the two? There is no middle ground there. But Brother Meredith is ready to ask, is there no system which opposes the obligations of the law of God, different from the systems of conditions? In answer I admit it has been said that there were those who held that the elect were never under the law, and that God never saw any sin in them &c. But such a sentiment would as completely do away redemption by Christ as it would the law. Besides this sentiment would be so irrational, so contrary to that sense of accountability which men have, that I cannot think such a sentiment ever existed in the breasts of any who believed there is a God and admitted the authenticity of the scriptures. The sentiment also that the elect as the children of Adam were actually justified from all demands of the law before time began, and were then, absolved from all charge of guilt, would, if carried out in its legitimate bearing, amount to an abrogation of the law in their behalf, and therefore be Antinomianism. But I know of none who contend for this sentiment that would admit of its being carried out to what I think its full implication; therefore, though they may be inconsistent, they are not Antinomians in the way they hold it.

Consequently, my brother, we in vain look for the granite rock of Antinomianism (where the charge of Antinomianism is just as implying opposition to the law of God) so severed from the sandbars of Arminianism as to admit of the path or way of holiness passing between them. – Indeed I may confidently ask, how would sandbars ever be found in the sea were there not a granite rock or something like it to form an eddy or obstruct the passage of the drifting sand and thus cause it to become a deposit? And how could any conditional or Arminian system ever get foothold were there not enmity in the human breast to the government and law of God; an Antinomian principle latent there, that would overturn the sovereignty of God, and bring down His perfect law from its pure and holy demands, to a level with the capacity of depraved mortals to obey?

I will notice that path which no fowl knoweth, that way of holiness in which the child of grace is led. And my brother, if you have eyes to see, as I think you have, and do not suffer men to put their fingers or systems into them, I shall show you that this path as Brother Beebe stated, leads directly off, alike from the ground of Antinomianism and of Arminian opposition to the truth.

The very first step in which a person is led in the christian life takes him off from that firm standing he before had on Arminian ground; regeneration being the implantation of that life in the soul which is love to God and to His law. Sin, instead of holiness and the divine law, now becomes the object of his hatred. Long and hard may he struggle to regain a standing on Arminian ground, or in other words, to feel a confidence in his own doings, but in vain, every struggle but removes him farther from this confidence; he is led to an enlarged view of the law in its spirituality, sees it to be holy, just and good, and his love to it makes him loathe every thing that comes short of its righteous demands, as all his acts and thoughts do; and his confidence in his doings and exercises is therefore more and more destroyed. He finds himself at last without any standing, lying upon the absolute mercy of God, having no good prayers, repentance or reformation to hold on to, and feeling that if mercy does not hold him up he must in justice sink eternally. Hence, love and reverence for the law of God instead of making a person pleased with his own righteousness, and giving him a desire to be accepted with God on the ground of his own doings, leads him to throw aside his own doings and makes him willing to be saved as a poor sinner; just in proportion therefore an Antinomian opposition to the law is eradicated from his mind. Arminian confidence in creaturely performances is destroyed. Here is the mystery of the christian's path that the culture's eye cannot see; no person, not taught of God, can comprehend how that love and subjection to the law of God should cause one to loathe his own righteousness, nor how a person who relies entirely on the mercy of God in Christ for salvation, can be zealous of good works. Yet such is the case. The same love to the law which leads a person to renounce all human works as the ground of his acceptance with God, makes him cling to and rely alone on the work of Christ for acceptance when that work in its completion is once revealed to him as having been wrought for such poor sinners as he. The reason is that the one would degrade the law whilst the other perfectly honors it. Hence he who rejoices in Christ Jesus, has no confidence in the flesh; (Phil. 3:3) and he who with Paul can say I.delight in the law of God after the inward man, would also with him, not have his own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. Rom. 7:22 & Phil. 3:9.

I think from what has been shown that Brother Meredith will be satisfied that the christian's path which is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day, cannot lead him in a middle way between Antinomian opposition to the law and Arminian love of human works, but that it leaves both in the background.

The other branch of Brother M's enquiry I will leave for another communication.

S. TROTT

Centreville, Fairfax Co., Va. July 5, 1839.

Signs of the Times Volume 7, No. 15. August 1, 1839

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pgs 158-164

Zechariah 1:8

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: – A sister has requested my views on the parable of the barren fig tree, and another sister has by letter requested my views on Zech. 1:8, through the SIGNS, and as I have not much to say on either, I will include my views of both in one communication.

1st. The parable, Luke 13:6-9. "He spake also this parable, A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard," &c. Christ had in the preceding verses, informed those who talked with him that those Galileans whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices were not sinners above the other Galileans, and that those eighteen on whom the tower of Siloam fell, were not sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem, and that excepting they repented they should all likewise perish. He then spake this parable, as I understand it, as illustrating those remarks. Hence I consider the parable as having a special reference to the Jews both of Galilee and Judea.

"Had a fig tree planted in his vineyard." Israel is often, in the Scriptures, represented as a vineyard, a fruitful field, &c., in distinction from the other nations, who were left uncared for, like a wilderness; whilst Israel was fenced in by the provisions of their law and by the providence of God, and cultivated by the teachings of the law and the prophets.

Judah or the Jews are represented as a fig tree planted in this vineyard.

"And he came and sought fruit thereon and found none. Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree and find none; cut it down," &c. Said the Lord unto Moses, "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words into his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass that whoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Deut. 13:18,19. Jesus was that prophet. Christ had sent, his messenger, John, to prepare his way before him with the message, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He afterwards sent forth his disciples, two and two, to the Jews only, with the same message. This then was the fruit he had been seeking for about three years from the commencement of John's ministry. Hence John said unto the Jews, "Bring forth fruit worthy of repentance." Luke 3:8.

Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground. From that time our Lord began to foretell the destruction of Jerusalem.

And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it; and if it bear fruit, well; and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down. This denoted that his ministry and that of his apostles was to be continued among them for another year, and if they repented of their self-righteousness and received the kingdom of heaven, well, if not, then their city and nation was left to destruction.

However much Satan, may throw this text at the children of God to worry them, and through his ministers, in their not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God, may apply this parable to the saints, it evidently does not belong to them.

As when a fig tree is properly planted and cultivated it is expected that from the resources it has it will produce fruit, so the Jewish nation were required to bring forth the fruit of obedience to the letter of the law, and therefore to receive that prophet or the Messiah when he came as a condition of their continuing to enjoy the good land which God had given to their fathers. Not so with the children of God; they are not under a conditional covenant. The Lord does not come requiring fruit of them to compensate him for their planting, but he comes to supply all their needs from his own abundant fulness. Hence it is said concerning Ephraim, "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him and observed him; I am like a green fir- tree. From me is thy fruit found." Hosea 14:8. So in reference to the fruit of repentance; Christ is exalted as a Prince and a Savior to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins.

Again, Israel is represented as saying, "But now, O Lord, thou art our father; we are the clay and thou our potter, and we all are the work of thy hand." Isaiah 64:8. Instead then of repining because we have nothing of our own, no fruit of the ground which we can bring as an offering to the Lord, let us be thankful and rejoice that we may come and receive of his fulness and trust in his righteousness.

Zech.1:8 – "I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, speckled and white." I have to inform sister Ball that I have no special light on this text; I will give her, if they will be of any use to her such general views as I have of it.

1st. Zechariah prophesied after the return of some of the Jews from Babylon and during the building of the second temple. The principal burden of his prophesying seems to have been to encourage the Jews under their difficulties. For this end he referred pretty fully through the types to the building of the antitype of that temple, the Gospel church, by "the man whose name is the Branch" - the antitype of Zerubbabel and Joshua - the Lord Jesus Christ, who is truly a priest upon his throne. And here, permit me to add, is the counsel of peace between them both; that is, in his having all power in connection with all prevalency of intercession founded upon the sacrifice of himself. Zechariah includes in his prophecy events connected with the type and antitype. Such I think is the prophecy in the text under consideration. By the red horse and his rider I conclude, from what is said in Rev. 6:4 of a similar representation, that war is intended. As a white horse and its rider is used to denote the conquests of the gospel of peace, (Rev.19:11 & 6:2,) I conclude that the red horses, speckled and white, or as it reads in the margin bay and white, intimated that there would be war, and after that unsettled times among or with the Jews, or as Daniel calls it, troublous times, (Dan.9:25,) yet that the temple and wall of the city should be built. My recollection of the history of the times will not admit of my attempting to designate what particular was intended by the red horse, and its rider. Yet, from what is said in Ezra and Nehemiah, we may learn that though all the earth (verse 11,) or the Persian empire, was then still and at rest, yet the Jews experienced troublesome times in their building the temple and walls of Jerusalem from the opposition of those nations occupying the country formerly inhabited by the ten tribes. History also, as well as some of the prophesies of Daniel, inform us that after the time of Nehemiah, under the reign of the Antiochuses or the Grecian empire, the Jews experienced much trouble before they became again established in the enjoyment of their national and religious rights. We learn from the context (verse 10,) that the war as well as peace horses were sent forth of the Lord. So in chapter 11, we are informed of four chariots, having in one bay horses, in the second white, in the third black, in the fourth grizzled and bay horses, coming out from between two mountains of brass. These mountains may denote God's purpose and grace; or, in other words, his predestination of all things in the government of the world and his special predestination to salvation. These are as immutable as mountains of brass. Here then is war, gospel, famine, (see Rev. 6:5 & 6,) and probably pesthence, called the spirits of the heavens, going forth from the Lord. We learn also from verse 16 and 17 of the context, that the Jews were ultimately prosperous and spread abroad.

If we turn to the antitype, the building of the gospel church, we shall find the same ideas holding good; wars and the spreading of the gospel have been connected in all ages. The Roman conquests by war of all the nations around, by which all the earth was brought to sit still and be at rest, at the time of our Savior's being manifested in the flesh, by bringing all those nations under one government, made those nations far more easy of access to the apostles, and therefore favored the spread of the gospel. The succeeding wars of the Romans, by forcing many of the christians into their armies, shielded those thus employed, from the persecutions raging among those remaining at home, and gave them an opportunity they would not otherwise have had, of bearing their testimony to the truth of the gospel of the grace of God, among their fellow-soldiers and among the nations whither they were sent. And their testimonies, no doubt, were blessed of God to the accomplishment of good.

Hence, no wonder that when Constantine came to the throne, he found the armies filled with christians. The conquest of the Romans by the Goths, &c., served to shield the true church in some measure from the persecutions of the Catholic church, and to favor their retreat to the wilderness or valleys of Piedmont. As the after war upon the Waldenses and driving them from those valleys scattered them, and therefore led them to disseminate their testimony among the several nations of Europe, our revolutionary war was the instrument by which the religious establishments, existing in several of the provinces, were broken down, and the way prepared for our free enjoyment of that religious liberty, which has since existed among us. The wars among the various kingdoms in Africa, and the selling of their captives into slavery, were the leading instruments of bringing many of the Africans among us, where thousands of them have been made to hear and rejoice in the gospel of Christ. Other instances might be mentioned, but these are sufficient to show how God has caused the red horse of war to lead the way for the going forth of the white horse of the gospel, and that the white horse has followed, and though it has been often speckled with opposition and divisions, yet it has held on its way. The gospel, where God has sent it, has had free course and been glorified. In Revelation, the 6th chapter, the white horse, is put forward, to show that the spread of the gospel or the cause of Christ was the first object in view, in God's predestination, and that many of the wars which should follow would be on religious accounts. We are not, my sister, to infer from these prophesies that the spirit of war and the spirit of the gospel in themselves harmonize. They are as opposite as are earth and heaven.

The spirit of the gospel is love and peace. The spirit of the world is war and contention. This spirit can no more be conquered by the wisdom and devices of men, than the Ethiopian can change his skin. It may be curbed for a time, but on the first occasion it will again break forth in all its rage. In Zech., the 6th chapter, these emblems of war, of famine, of the gospel of peace, and of pesthence, are all alike called the spirit of the heavens, not to show that they are alike heavenly any more than the evil spirit of the Lord which troubled Saul was the same as the spirit of the Lord. I Sam. 16:14. But to show that they are all alike sent forth from the Lord, and are under the entire control of his predestinating purpose without the earth's having any share in limiting or enlarging their movements. Says God by Isaiah, "I make peace and create evil; I, the Lord, do all these things." Isaiah 45:7. This is the reason why we Old School Baptists love the doctrine of God's absolute predestination of all things, because that according to this doctrine, instead of being left to the gloomy consideration that the evils which are in the world, any of them, come by chance, or are in anywise controlled by men or Satan, we believe that they are all confined by the predestinating purpose of God as between two mountains of brass, and can go forth only where God sends them, and only to accomplish his wise and goodpurpose; and that wherever they go, the white horse of the gospel, or, in other words, some gracious purpose of God concerning salvation, follows in this train. And this also is the reason why we have no confidence in the missionary operations, believing God will send his gospel just where he has a purpose for it, and that it will accomplish that whereunto he sends it; and that his gospel can go no where but as he sends it; and any spurious gospel which may be sent by men will accomplish no real good.

My sister, without noticing all the particulars in the text, I have written down such views as have been presented to my mind on the general subject. My reflections have, perhaps, been led in a different channel from what you anticipated; I certainly have extended them much beyond what I expected when I commenced; otherwise I should not have included the two texts in the one communication. What I have written, I have written; and I desire it may afford as much satisfaction to you and others in reading, as the contemplation of the subject has afforded pleasure to me. One remark more. When we feel that this predestinating, this God-governing – God of all events, is our Father, the sound of thunder and of the raging tempest, however terrific otherwise, is as music, and the lightning's flash is both grand and beautiful.

Yours, with christian regards, S.TROTT. Fairfax C. H. Va., Aug. 20, 1856.

Signs of the Times Volume 24, No. 18. September 15, 1856

THE BEASTS AND THEIR IMAGE.

DEAR BROTHER MEREDITH: - Having seen yours addressed to me through the ADVOCATE, on the subject of prophecy, I proceed briefly to notice it, at this time; though I have not your communication by me, my April number not having come to hand.

In reviewing my former letters on the "Beasts and their Image," the first point, on which you suggest a different view, is in reference to the second Beast, the two horned beast. Your idea appears to be, that the established church of England is that beast, and hence that the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of York are the two horns. My opinion was and still is, that this Beast represents the whole body of the Reformed, or Protestant churches, in all their subdivisions, including the church of England, all retaining the rudiments of the first beast, in retaining infant baptism, and in having been in themselves, or in those churches from which they came out, in one way or other, established by law. As the Lutheran church in some of the states of Germany, on its first formation; the Presbyterian church in Geneva and since in Scotland, and the branches of the Scottish church being but branches of that establishment; the Episcopal church in England, and the Methodists being but a branch from that, and so on of others. Hence as Luther and Calvin were the two distinguished leaders of the Reformation, I have considered them as intended by the two horns. Luther as being the horn or leading power of all those churches, which are but reformed branches of the church of Rome, retaining many of the ceremonies and forms as originally established in that church, such as the Lutheran and Episcopalian churches. And Calvin as being the horn or leading power of all those churches, which are built upon the principle, that there is no specific and binding form for the order and government of churches in the New Testament, but that these things were left to be changed and molded according to circumstances and the judgments of men; he having first taught this notion of church government, and carried it out in contriving and adopting the Presbyterian form of church government in his church at Geneva. Both of them also aimed to make their churches national establishments.

If I were to conclude, that any particular church was designed by the two horned Beast, I should as soon think the Episcopal church, and its branches to be intended, and Henry the VIIIth the one horn, and John Wesley the other; for if Wesley's church as a distinct horn of this beast has never been established by law, it is evidently aspiring after it in this country, and is manifesting a great deal of worldly wisdom in managing to get a control in civil affairs, wherever opportunity offers. At any rate, this church gives strong evidence of being the legitimate offspring of her mother, the church of England, and of her grandmother the church of Rome.

Your suggestion concerning the idea I had advanced, relative to the life to be given to the image of the beast, that it might refer to an establishment by law in this country, has certainly much weight in it. Such a combination of Church and State would in truth be a beast. And from year to year there are fresh developments, showing that this Image can have life in our country without any special Law, establishing a union between it and the civil government. We see it in the manner in which the actions of religious bodies are trumpeted forth in the political and miscellaneous papers. The awfully delusive ceremony also of taking the veil among the Catholics, is sounded forth with great seeming applause. And the proceedings of Conventions, missionary Meetings, associations, and even the discourses and prayers of individual preachers on special occasions, are taken down and reported for the newspapers; the same as the proceedings of legislative bodies and political meetings, as though they were all of a class. Some occurrences took place recently in the House of Representatives, showing how these things stand in the American Congress.

In the discussions on the Army Appropriation Bill, Sat., March 29th, Mr. Pettit, from Indiana, moved to strike out the Section providing for the pay of chaplains of the Army, on the ground that the Constitution forbids all interference in religion, and that whilst such was the provision of the Constitution, the government was paying annually for religious purposes $35,341.99, according to a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury; also that it was taking money from one class of persons to pay for the teaching of the religious sentiments of another, &c. But this brought down against him such a storm of denunciations, without one to back him, that he withdrew his amendment. It was denounced as Fanny Wrightism, as the Atheism of France &c. One thanked his god, that there was no chance in an assembly of gentlemen in this enlightened age for the adoption of such a resolution. Again in the discussion of the same Bill, Thurs., April 4th, Mr. Holmes of S. Carolina, the very man who thanked his god in the above case, offered an amendment to the effect, That no officer or private soldier in the Army of the U. S., shall be compelled to attend any public worship when the doctrines of the church to which he may be attached are opposed to such worship. He offered this, he said, on the ground that Catholics had frequently been compelled to attend on the worship of Protestant chaplains, and in some instances had been punished for refusing to attend. Mr. Hale of New Hampshire proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the latter part, so as to forbid absolutely their being compelled to attend religious worship.

He assigned for the reason of his amendment the following; that, The Constitution of the U. S. provided that Congress should pass no law respecting the establishment of religion, and believing that Congress had no power to compel anybody to attend any form of religious worship, he was opposed to the latter part of Mr. Holmes amendment and therefore had proposed to strike it out. That religion (he said) was true and acceptable, which came from the heart; and hence he was opposed to religion being a part of the soldier's drill. The christian religion did not depend on the aid of the sword or of legislation, and he was in consequence, opposed to its being made a part of military discipline. Mr. Hale here, I think, expresses the most correct views of true religion, that I have ever seen as advanced in Congress; it give me therefore peculiar pleasure to notice it, as coming from the state of my nativity. Mr. Hunt of New York, regretted that a proposition had been offered to the House which could serve as a pretext for the exhibition of blasphemy and the ridicule of the christian religion, to which they had been compelled to listen to from the gentleman of Indiana (Mr. Pettit,) whose remarks are not reported any further than that he spoke in opposition to a soldier being compelled to go to church at all. Mr. Hale's amendment was negatived and the proposition of Mr. Holmes rejected; so that the soldiers may still be compelled to attend public worship just where the commanding officer pleases, and that by the sanction of Congress; and religion is made a part of the soldier's drill, in order to make good soldier's according to the usage of the ancients, as expressed by some of the speakers.

Whilst Congress can legislate in this way and sanction such enforcement of religious worship, there is no need of a special law incorporating religion with the government. The same principle may carry them any length to enforcing a particular form of worship. It might have been added, that Mr. Carroll also of New York, took high ground in favor of enforcing religion upon the soldiers.

In reference to brother Meredith's request for my further views on certain prophecies, I would inform him that my present feelings on the subject of prophecy, brought about, probably in some measure, by being disappointed in the calculations made concerning the Turks, are that the fulfillment of every prediction, is in safe, unerring hands; that our speculations on them, or seeking to understand them before hand, any further than God may for wise and gracious purposes be pleased to give his people to understand them, cannot alter the accomplishment, nor profit any one. So far as prophecies which yet are not fully accomplished, in all their predictions, are fulfilled in some parts, or are being fulfilled, we may with propriety compare the events with the predictions, and thus trace the accomplishment as it progresses. Thus we may see the Ten-horned & Two-horned beasts and their Image, standing before us, and things apparently nearly ready for the accomplishment of the prediction that "no man may be allowed to buy or sell, save he that hath the mark or the name, or the number of the name" of the beast. The causing, "all, both small and great, rich and poor, to receive a mark in their right hands or in their foreheads," is evidently now progressing rapidly before us. Of these things we may with propriety speak; and so of other events as they transpire, we may watch their progress, and examine and speak of them as we discover their conformity to prediction and their place and period in prophecy. But in reference to events and periods which are manifestly yet future, I repeat, that it is safest, and most conformable with that wisdom which is from above, to leave them with God, who will accomplish everything in its place and season.

Yours with christian love, S.TROTT.

THE BEING AND NATURE OF ANGELS.

BROTHER JEWETT: - We can arrive at but little certainty on the testimony of Scripture concerning this and many other subjects, unless we can come to a conclusion, how we are to receive the words dictated by the Spirit of inspiration. If we go to the scriptures under the belief that the Holy Spirit of Truth, in condescending to employ the languages of men to declare what it has been the pleasure of God to reveal, has directed to those terms and forms of expression best calculated to convey intelligibly and distinctly the ideas intended to be conveyed; I cannot think, that there would be much difference of opinion on the subject of our enquiries, among the honest and humble enquirers after truth. But if we go to the Scriptures, believing that the spirituality of the revelation of God exists in the words employed as well as in the subjects treated of, and that the Spirit, and not the laws of language, must guide us to the import of the words used, we are then thrown loose upon the sea of God's word, without any compass, without any standard by which to try the spirits whether they be of God, and without any certainty in the case; because we are so liable to mistake a lively imagination for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, without some fixed rule by which to test the point.

In reference to prophecy, it is a generally admitted fact, that the words employed in prophetic declarations are generally used not in a literal, but in a figurative sense, and hence we have to wait the fulfillment of prophecies to understand clearly their import. Hence the inconsistency of taking words used in positive declarations according to their import in prophetic style, unless we suppose all Scripture alike figurative with prophecy. For I cannot believe that, unless God, in condescending to allow the Scriptures to be written in the languages of men, intended the words used to be understood according to their legitimate import, he would have suffered them thus to be written, but would have appointed a sacred language to be used.

Had the children of God taken the Scriptures as their own plain interpreter of the letter of them, and their own experience as the best expositor of the spiritual doctrine therein contained, they would not have found themselves as now in Babylon, or Confusion. You, Brother Jewett, seem to hope better things concerning our Old School Brethren, than I have expressed in my preceding communication. The view which I am compelled to take of their case, is, I assure you, to me, for the present, not joyous but grievous, nevertheless I am as fully persuaded that the prophecies in Isaiah, chapter 8, and Psalms 137, to which I referred in that communication, will have to be experienced by the spiritual Israel of God, as that they are recorded. Though I did not so fully realize their application to the gospel Church until very recently; when their import seemed clearly illustrated by the events through which the Old School Baptists are now passing. Hence, though I feel bound to bear my testimony against that which has been, and is, the occasion of this confusion among us; namely, a departure from the simplicity of Scripture declaration, yet I have no expectation of stopping the progress of the confusion. In fact, if this captivity must come and the Witnesses be killed, the sooner it takes place, the sooner will the church experience her promised deliverance. But on the other hand, as I cannot hasten on the event by anticipating these prophecies; so I would not wish to make the confusion and differences among us greater than they really are. You, my Brother, must however have entirely misapprehended my remarks concerning a Pope. I had no design of expressing a wish for a Pope, but to show the difference between Old School Baptists and others on this point; namely, that whilst others can appear united, because trained to think on religious subjects as do their leaders, true Old School Baptists will enquire for themselves, and speak as they believe; hence differences among us are more manifest. Whilst therefore I can agree with our Sister in the Oct. No. of the Advocate in the aspiration, "May Old School Baptists be of one heart and one mind," I cannot agree with her in the remark, "But if any difference of sentiment be found among them, let them not publish it to the world;" because in the first place, Old School Baptists have no business with religious sentiments which they are not willing to publish on the house top. And secondly, according to her plan, if one has published a sentiment, however erroneous, another must not expose it, lest the difference between them should become public. We might as well have a Pope at once to think for us, as to be debarred from expressing our dissent from what we conscientiously believe to be an error. I so far at least agree with Jefferson's view of toleration, as this. That if Error is tolerated to be published among us, Truth should be left free to combat it. But I do desire that our Old School Brethren would be careful to publish nothing, under the guise of Old School sentiments, but what is sustained by the plain declaration and construction of Scripture; then the occasion for dissensions among us would be removed, and our Sister's benevolent wish would be accomplished in a safe way.

I will now come to the subject proposed. My first position in describing the being, &c., of angels, is, That in the Scriptures, the term angels, when not used in the figurative language of prophecy or parable, is descriptive of a distinct order of Beings. This I prove from Heb.2:16. "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." Not to insist on the term nature in the least, as it is in italics, yet the expression that he took on him angels, in distinction from the seed of Abraham; that is, the promised seed, must exclude everything human to which the term has been applied, and we must therefore understand the Apostle as meaning a distinct order of beings distinguished by the term angels; and the term angel must therefore mean such a distinct order of beings in its proper Scriptural import. For he certainly took on him human nature, he took on him the office of Messenger, of Servant, of Apostle, Prophet and Priest; the apostle could not therefore mean human nature, nor any of these offices by the term angels, neither anything connected with the seed of Abraham, either natural or spiritual, because according to the flesh he was a Jew.

My second position is, that the angels are spirits and so made of God, therefore that they are the creatures of God. This I prove from Ps.104:4 & Heb.1:7. "Who maketh his angels spirits and his ministers a flame of fire." In reference to this passage as found in the 104th Psalm, could the order be changed without doing violence to the established usage of the Hebrew, so as to read, Who maketh spirits his angels, &c., or as some would construe the passage, winds his angels, then there might be a propriety in supposing the term angel to mean merely a messenger. But not only does the usage of the Hebrew require us to preserve the order in which it stands, but the quotation of the passages, Heb.1:7, in an argument showing the superiority of Christ as a Son, requires us to understand by angels here the highest order of created beings. To suppose with Dr. George Campbell that this text is quoted to show that the sonship of Christ is superior to the office of messengers, by showing that even inanimate things such as the wind, are God's messengers, is superlatively ridiculous. Not less so, than would be the idea, that man must be great because a worm is so insignificant. When we consider, that the Holy Ghost directed the Psalmist in the original declaration, and directed the Apostle to make the quotation in proof of the superiority of Christ, as Son, over all created beings, we shall understand by angels in this first chapter of Hebrews, that superior order of beings which Christ took not on him, and that which man, and Christ in his humiliation, was made a little lower. Psal.8:4-6 & Heb.2:5-9. If so, we must believe that, whilst God maketh his ministers, whether natural or spiritual, a flaming fire to communicate light and heat and to burn up all that would oppose, he also maketh his angels spirits, that in ministering to them who shall be heirs of salvation; they may perform their office without being discernable by the natural senses of man. But if God maketh his angels spirits; angels must be his workmanship, and therefore his creatures. What then becomes of the challenge of our western brother to me; to prove that angels are created beings?

My third position is, That angels are heavenly, not earthly beings. This I show from such texts as the following, in reference to the holy angels. "For I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matt.13:10. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven." Matt.24:26. "But are as the angels, which are in heaven." Mark 12:25.

The fourth position I shall lay down, is that the angels which have not left their first estate, have their standing secured by the purpose of God in election. This is proved, first from the fact that in Scripture they are repeatedly denominated holy angels. They cannot be in themselves independently holy; because as has been proved they are creatures of God; hence are dependent on him not only for their existence but also for existing as they are. Persons are, according to Scripture, sanctified or made holy, by being cleansed from pollution; as national Israelites, ceremonially, by water and blood; and saints, spiritually, by the blood of Christ. But we have no evidence, that these angels were ever polluted.

Again, saints are holy, by being partakers of the new man, which is created in righteousness and true holiness. In this they were created in Christ Jesus, and come into actual existence in this relation by being born of God. But only the saints are represented in Scripture as being created in Christ Jesus. The only other sense in which the Scriptures represent creatures as becoming holy, is by their being appointed or set apart of God to his special service. In this sense then it must be that the angels are holy, in being set apart by the electing purpose of God, in their innocency and uprightness, to be his messengers to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. But, secondly, this position is proved from I Tim. 5:21, "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels." Here a regular gradation is observed in the order of invisible beings, in whose sight Timothy is thus reminded, that he acts, whether seen of men or not. By the Apostle here, the purpose of God, by which these angels are set apart to holiness, is showed to be according to election by which they were chosen whilst others were passed by. But in reference to this text, we are met by an assertion, and a bare assertion it is, not having a particle of Scripture proof to sustain it, that the elect angels here mean men; namely, the presbytery who ordained Timothy. There are repeated instances in the New Testament in which the term angels is used in the figurative language of prophecy, to denote ministers, as in Matt.24, Rev.1 and the 12th chapters, but in no instance where the term is used in positive declaration, in the translation, is there anything in the connection, or any other authority for understanding it to mean anything else but angels in the proper sense of the term. Nor in the Greek, do we find the term used merely for messengers, excepting in cases where the connection shows them to be messengers of men; as in Luke 7:24, messengers of John, so Luke 9:52, and James 2:25. But further we have nothing in the New Testament sanctioning the idea of electing particular elders to officiate in ordaining any individual. There was no selection spoken of in the church at Antioch, Acts 13:1,2. In the case of Timothy, be it remembered, that he was an Evangelist, II Tim. 4:5, and therefore received his ordination to the work directly from apostolic authority. And though the laying on of the hands of the presbytery is spoken of in I Tim.4:14, yet this term does not necessarily involve the idea of plurality, it simply denotes the office of eldership; and to settle the point, Paul in II Tim.1:6, speaking of the gift in Timothy, the same gift undoubtedly that is mentioned in I Tim.4:14, speaks of it as being in him, simply by the laying on of his own hands.

Surely Paul would not thus connect himself with God and the Lord Jesus in his charge to Timothy. Hence in no view which can be taken of the subject, on Scriptural grounds, can we find any apology for the above noticed assertion. By the same rule that one may assert that the presbytery which ordained Timothy, is intended by the elect angels in this passage, another might assert another class was intended, and thus the language of the Scriptures would be rendered entirely indefinite. Besides, such a construction of the passage countenances the Arminian notion, that the Election of the New Testament, is merely an election to office. I think, therefore, that those, who are disposed with childlike simplicity to receive the language of Divine Inspiration, will believe, with me, upon the authority of this text, that the holy angels have their standing secured, not in their own strength, but by the purpose of God according to election; and that boasting is excluded from them, as well as from the saints; so that instead of raising, in heaven, the notes of self- glorying that their standing has been preserved by their own purpose and strength, they also will give God the glory of their being what they are.

My fifth and last position is, That some of those spiritual beings designated by the term angels, kept not their standing in uprightness, but sinned. My proof for this is found in II Pet.2:4, "For God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell and delivered them into chains of darkness," &c., and in Jude 6, "And the angels, which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." Attempts have been made, in order to get rid of the proof these texts afford of a future judgment, to make us believe, that these angels were Jews, or national Israelites. But where is the proof for such an idea? It is not found in the connection, not in the scriptural use of the term angel, nor in any corresponding passage of Scripture. As has been noticed, inferences drawn from prophetic language cannot be authority in construing terms used in positive declarations. Peter is showing the certainty of the punishment of the false teachers, who would arise after the manner of the false prophets among national Israel, though they might escape in this life, as is also Jude; this he proves from the judgment of God upon the angels that sinned, as being first in order. From them he passes to the old world, as the next signal instance of God's just judgment overtaking the wicked, and from that to the case of Sodom and Gomorrah. The punishment of the false prophets and teachers, is what these apostles are showing as certain, though they escape in this life, therefore they cannot be intended by the angels. These Apostles speak of angels, and what right have we to say they do not mean what they say; especially when, by representing them to mean something else, we turn the beauty and harmony of the order observed by Peter, into confusion? We are therefore warranted by these texts, taken in connection with I Tim.5:21, in the belief that whilst some angels were elected to holiness, others being passed by and left to themselves, sinned, and in sinning left their first estate, or that uprightness in which they were created. We are not directly informed that these sinning angels are the devils spoken of in Scriptures; but we know that like the devils they are wicked spirits, and are reserved in chains of everlasting darkness, or in everlasting opposition to God who dwells in light; and like the devils have hell for their habitation. What particular occasion occurred to lead them to sin, we are not informed, unless it be found in Heb.1:6. But we know, that they transgressed the law, under which they were placed; for "sin is the transgression of the law," and they sinned. Hence they cannot have been created with a wicked nature, because no law would require them to act contrary to their nature; neither could they have been self-existent, for then they would have been without law, and where no law is, there is no transgression.

The five positions, which I have laid down relative to the being, &c., of angels, are showed to be supported by the Scriptures I have quoted, if we will allow them their plain and natural import, and by others to which I might refer. Why not then let them stand as revealed truths? And why not be satisfied with the plain declarations of God's inspiration?

What is gained by launching out, without compass, into the ocean of speculation? What by torturing and wresting the Scriptures from their natural import to establish the belief of no future judgment? Or that of the Sadducees, that there are neither angels or spirits? I cannot believe that anything would be gained, but much lost.

Although no Scripture has been or can be brought to prove the contrary to these positions, yet certain ideas have been advanced against the possibility of spiritual beings having sinned, which in conclusion, I will notice.

The first is, That angels in heaven could not be subject to temptation and therefore would have nothing to lead them to sin. Whilst it is admitted that there is no account of their being tempted; yet the idea that angels could not sin without being tempted, wants proof both from reason and Scripture. We are informed that they sinned, they were of course as before noticed, under a prohibitory law; this is proof positive that they were liable to depart from the rectitude in which they were created, else why prohibited by law? And as a law only commands, without providing the principle of obedience in the subject, it would not remove their liability to disobey, if left to their own choice. And whilst God's having created them, involved them in an obligation to obey him, it involved on him no obligation to constrain them to obey. So that this argument has evidently nothing to stand upon.

A second idea which has been presented as an argument, is, That the angels existed in heaven, they must have been in the presence of God, where sin could not enter. In one sense I admit, that neither sin, nor sinful creatures can be in the presence of God. That is, as such can never receive his smiles or approbation. In another sense they can be, and are in his presence, for God fills immensity with his presence. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit; or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there, if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there, &c." Psal.139:7-12. And we are told, "There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord and Satan came also among them;" in another text it is added, "To present himself before the Lord." Job 1:6, 2:1. If those who use the above argument mean thereby to prove that angels could not sin with God's approbation, or that they would not be beholding the face of Christ's Father which is in heaven, as do the holy angels, they are attempting to prove what will not be denied. On the contrary Peter as quoted shows that God disapprobated the sin of the angels. But if they mean to deny, that the angels would have sinned, where God was present in his being, and under his notice, they cannot sustain their position; it would go to deny the possibility of Adam's having sinned, as well as that of the angels.

A third idea advanced, is, That if angels could sin and fall from heaven, saints might do so too when they get there. If those angels which have been established in holiness by God's electing purpose were to fall it might afford some plausibility to this argument. But even this would not establish the truth of their position. Nothing short of proof, that Christ is liable to fall, can prove the liability of the saints falling from heaven. This argument therefore shrinks away at the first touch. Nevertheless, as so much stress is laid on the idea of the angels being in Heaven, in these arguments, we will notice that idea a little. But no candid person would infer, that the terms heaven or heavens as found in the Scriptures, always denote the place of heavenly glory, where Christ in his glorified body is enthroned at the right hand of the Father.

Paul speaks of a man whom he knew being taken up to the third heavens; (II Cor.12: 2,) and Solomon says, That the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain God. I Kings 8:27. According to these texts there are more heavens than one; so that these angels might have been in heaven, without being where the glorified body of Jesus is. As to Milton's poetic phantasma, I have never quoted him as authority, and therefore no one has a right to charge his visions upon me. In speaking of the angels which sinned as being in their creation heavenly beings, I consider myself sustained by the fact that they were made spirits, and therefore not earthly, not serpents, nor any other beasts of the field, and as the Scriptures speak of but two regions or spheres which God created, the heaven and the earth, they must of course been heavenly. Thus much I of heavens.

If the view I have thus given of the being and nature of angels is sustained by the plainest and most natural construction of Scripture, it must be the best view we can have of them. I know of nothing which can be produced from the Scriptures according to the literal import of them, to forbid the idea of its being the correct view. And until it be clearly shown, that the Scriptures require a different view, I would entreat our brethren not to reject it for speculations.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Va., Nov. 23, 1842.

THE BENEDICTION.

BROTHER BEEBE: - There is so much uproar made about introducing discussions, and disputable points into the SIGNS, that I feel a hesitancy at introducing almost any subject, as discussion might grow out of it, unless I am requested to give my views. I had intended writing a remonstrance against the ground taken by several brethren, but your veto put a stop to the discussion then going on. I should have taken this text, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Phil.2:4. This is applicable both to things spiritual and things temporal. What if we do not want for ourselves either to receive, or give, any of these enlarged views on doctrine and order, or are so well instructed in the things of the kingdom, that we received no edification from the writings of our brethren on these subjects; or have got our opinions fixed and do not wish to be jostled from them, lest we should be charged with changing our views, and consequently of being wiser today than we were yesterday; ought we to wish to bind all the readers and writers of the SIGNS, down to those common place letters that would suit us. There are brethren among us who are solicitous of knowing the truth on every point of doctrine and of apostolic order; and they are glad to obtain light from any of their brethren on these subjects, and therefore wish to see such as have much disputed, discussed. Shall we look so much on our own things as to monopolize the whole of the SIGNS from them. Again, there are brethren, who become convinced that some opinions or some practice or order which has prevailed among us, is not according to the Scriptures, and so feel the importance of the error, and of a more strict conformity to what God has declared or enjoined that they are not satisfied without calling the attention of their brethren generally to the subject. Shall we because our minds have not been exercised on these points or because their views if sustained would impeach the correctness of the views handed down to us from those going before, on these points, shut them out from a place in the SIGNS; as though that paper was wholly for our gratification, and that it must be put down if anything is admitted that we do not wish agitated, lest our minds might be disturbed. Surely this is not christian liberty. I trust that no one will argue from these premises that the SIGNS should be opened to subjects which manifestly set aside the scriptures as our perfect standard, or do away with the plain testimony thereof; such subjects as have nothing but human reason; or a visionary construction of scriptures to support them. Some of us are apt to look a great deal more at having our minds disturbed by the agitation of points of order or of doctrine on which we have settled down without having examined carefully to know that we have scriptural authority to support them, than we do at the earnest desire of others to be informed for themselves on these points, or to eradicate errors from ourselves as well as to oppose them in the New School. Such will probably say in reference to the points on which brethren Burritt and Janeway have requested my views, away with these points of order from the SIGNS; let us have practical religion. But indeed, I do not know what deserves the name of practicing religion, more than a due observance of those institutions and that order which our Lord has appointed. If we respect not his authority, we give but poor evidence of supreme love to him. For myself, as these brethren have requested my views on these subjects of order, I feel it right I should give them, not knowing how much satisfaction I may be instrumental in imparting to them and others. Those brethren who do not wish their minds disturbed on the points, can, if they please, pass over what I write, there is surely matter enough in the SIGNS besides to pay them for their dollar, and postage. In reference to brother Woodward's request in the SIGNS, for April 1, 1848, concerning Rev.13:11-18, and which brother Beebe handed over to me, I have to say, that as I have had my views twice published on that subject; once in pamphlet, by brother Beebe, and again with some variation in the SIGNS, volume 7, pages 66 & 73, and having no additional light on that subject, I do not think it advisable to occupy the SIGNS with it. I hope brother Woodward will consider this a sufficient excuse for not further complying with his request.

Brother Burritt requests my views on the subject of pronouncing at the close of a meeting, what the Paedobaptists call the benediction, but which I, and I supposed, most of our O.S. Baptists consider merely as a dismissal, or salutation. If brother Burritt has been difficulted only on that point in the order generally observed in our worship, he has escaped much better than I have.

Soon after my first entering upon the ministry, my mind was considerably difficulted as to that order which was general among the baptists, in conducting their meetings for worship and preaching; not being able to find apostolic example for it. For some few years, the Scotch, or Waldanian Baptists, as they are called, had attracted some notice, by setting aside the prevailing forms, and professedly observing a strict regard to apostolic example in all the parts of their worship. In most of our cities, little companies had separated from the Regular Baptists, and met together on every first day to break bread, and preach, &c., according to what they considered strict New Testament order. I read some of their writings on the subject and endeavored to test the same by the New Testament. The result was, that I became satisfied, that the order which had obtained among us in the arrangement of singing, praying, and preaching, &c., was a mere assumed form; and among the Waldanians there were some points of order, not regarded by us, which evidently was according to established apostolic order, and there were other points on which they laid much stress, which were mentioned in the New Testament as mere incidental circumstances, and others again, in reference to the ministry of the word, which were important errors. The enquiry which next occupied my mind, was, whether I should continue to observe the formal course among us, or to endeavor to introduce where I worshipped a stricter regard to what appeared as New Testament order. Whilst unsatisfied on this point, and still hesitating, I was convinced from the ill success which attended the Waldanian attempt to reform, that the Lord did not favor it, and come to the conclusion that so far as real corruption was not involved it was better to bear with some departures from apostolic order, than to split off from those whom we believe to be saints of God and grounded in the truth, and to wait till God shall please to cleanse his church from all its impurities in doctrine and order; which, I am impressed with the idea, will not be whilst the church remains in its present wilderness state; that as he suffered Israel in the wilderness to neglect circumcision and some other of his appointments, so of his church, during the reign of antichrist. I did hope when the church, the O.S. Baptists, separated themselves from the human inventions of the Image of the Beast, as seen in the New School, to the standard of the Scriptures, that they would go on purging themselves at least from all those human devises, which had manifestly been productive of evil. But it seems it is not to be so, as a general thing, among the churches. Those therefore who see the evil must content themselves with purifying themselves from such evils so far as they can, without separating from the fellowship of their brethren, and to exhorting their brethren as occasion may offer to test their systems and practice by the Scriptures of truth. As to the arrangement of the parts to be attended to in the meetings of the church for worship, I am satisfied that this arrangement is left unestablished as a thing indifferent, provided all things be done decently and in order. This opinion I have derived from that particular direction which Paul gave to the church at Corinth touching the exercise both of the ordinary and extraordinary gifts. I Cor.14. There is no direction given when or how often they should sing and pray, though both are referred to; nor in reference to preaching or prophesying, excepting that two or three might speak, if so many were present having any message given them; and that one was not to continue speaking so long as to exclude the others from an equal opportunity, as is sometimes the case among us. So in reference to the Lord's supper, the Apostle, in I Cor.11:23-26, has given clearly what is essential in that ordinance. For he delivered to them, that which he had received of the Lord concerning it, and surely he must have received of the Lord all that is essential in that ordinance. But there is nothing in what he delivered them, specifying at what hour, nor how often they should observe this ordinance, as oft as ye do it, is the specification on this point; nor in what place, only that it was when the church were come together in one place. See verses 18 & 20. So that the circumstances of being in an upper room and at night on which some lay so much stress, are things indifferent. But here I do not mean by it that because such and such things are not forbidden, they are indifferent. For instance, infant sprinkling is not in direct terms forbidden, yet the appointing of believer's baptism to be observed, is itself a prohibition of the substitution of anything else in the place of it, and therefore not a thing indifferent. So the appointing of churches as the order by which the disciples are to be associated together in one visible body, and the committing of the administration of all the Lord's appointed order, to the churches severally, is a forbidding of the constitution of other religious bodies, and of such bodies assuming the management of any part of the affairs of the gospel. But in the arrangement of the parts of worship, the Apostle has enjoined that all things be done decently and in order; it is self evident that some arrangement is necessary to different things being done in order, otherwise, singing, praying, speaking, &c., might be going on at the same time; the very confusion which Paul objects to in that church. This arrangement is not specified in the New Testament, and is therefore left as a thing indifferent providing decency and order is observed. Hence I know not that the arrangement which generally prevails among us is not as good as any other would be; excepting that I have sometimes thought that the having always one uniform arrangement, is more likely to sink into a kind of formal thing, than would be the varying of that arrangement according to circumstances.

Pocket Trott 1.0 199 of 1338

What I have said above has only reference to the order of worship where the church be come together in one place. In reference to preaching to other congregations than when the church is met, there is on such occasions not only no authority for these forms in singing, praying, &c., but apostolic example is uniformly against their use. The order we observe in such appointments for preaching has grown out of infant baptism, whereby the posterity of professors are placed in circumstances to be considered acceptable worshippers. By conforming to this custom we so far sanction this principle. The same in full may be said of the practice of putting forward persons making no pretensions to religion, or for whose pretensions we have no fellowship, to lead in singing. Yet to both of these customs I have conformed rather than to single out from my brethren.

To come to the particular point of order to which brother Burritt refers, the form of dismissing the meeting; if this was considered as an attempt to impart a blessing to the people by any virtue there is in the lifting up of the hands, as our Lord blessed little children brought to him, I should shrink from the attempt too. But I do not, neither do I think our brethren generally, view it in that light. At most it is but a short prayer to God for a parting blessing upon the people. This appears to me a proper subject of prayer, and being offered at the close of the religious exercises in which we have been engaged. I should not consider it an infringement of that decency and order, which the Apostle enjoins. But I have rather looked at it as a parting salutation, and have considered the examples of the apostles Paul and Peter in closing their epistles, to be good authority. Paul does not call that close, a blessing, but a salutation. See II Thes.3:17, and other places. As I have thus viewed the subject for many years, I have felt no difficulty in conforming to that order, generally, though I have considered there was rather an impropriety in giving this salutation, when we were only adjourning for half an hour or so, expecting the same people again to come together and resume the exercises of the day. Paul speaks of blessing with the spirit, from his immediately calling it a giving of thanks, I conclude he refers to blessing God, rather than blessing the people. I Cor.14:15 & 16. So the blessing of the bread; (Matt.26:26,) and the cup of blessing, (I Cor.10:16,) as these cases are spoken of as giving thanks in Luke 22:19 & I Cor.11:24, I think refer to blessing or thanking God for them. I have thus given brother Burritt my experience and conclusion on this subject, if the relation shall afford him any satisfaction on the point about which he is difficulted, or any comfort from the consideration that others are constrained to conform to points, about the correctness of which they are not satisfied, I shall not have labored in vain. May I conclude with the salutation?

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with each of you, and all his saints. Amen.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., July 22, 1846.

Brother Burritt's Letter Against Beebe

Brother Beebe: Brother R. Burritt's letter, in the second number of the present volume of the Signs, contains so grave and severe a charge against you, in your editorial capacity, that I think the friends of the Signs are called upon to step forward and vindicate that paper from those charges, in self-justification, if nothing else, for patronizing it. if no other communication comes forward in its defense you may, if you please, publish the following. Although I feel ashamed of occupying so great a portion of the Signs as I shall do if all my communications recently sent out on our published.

Brother Burritt, I cannot think, would on reflection admit the correctness of the charge which his letter conveys against your editorial matter. The new school party, or rather, I believe more generally, the middle grounders, or as our southern brethren called them go-betweens, in order to prevent people from reading the Signs, as well As for an excuse for their not countenance seeing them, have charged them with being written and conducted in a bad spirit; and to avert the effect of the exposures therein made of the corruptions of new schoolism, they denounced such exposures as blackguardisms. Brother Burritt picks up these charges as he finds them bandied about among the enemies of truth, and brings him forward as being established by matters of fact, that his mouth is stopped from saying anything in the defense of the Signs.

As to the charge of blackguardism, anything published in the Signs meeting such a charge is certainly indefensible as a religious paper. But Brother Burritt requires examination. I do not suppose that Brother Burritt intended to convey by this expression what Brother Beebe seems to understand by it, and what some have not hesitated to affirm; That the communications are written and published by the instigation of the devil. His meaning probably is that the Signs, or some of the communications they're in, betray a spiteful, angry, or revengeful temper; that they reflect more of the fruits of the flesh than the fruits of the Spirit. That the corruptions of nature tincture all human compositions is readily admitted. I cannot consider even Brother Burritt's letter except from such a tincture, though he may not have been aware of being in bad humor. Neither will I deny that some communications in the Signs may have betrayed, or seemed to betray a bad humor. But the general charge coming from brother Burritt, is, I think, founded on the wrong view of the case. The occasion for an object of this publication is to be considered. The Signs were not governed as a business for making a living, nor even a vehicle for communicating merely general religious instruction. The Baptists had for some years before, as a denomination, been rapidly conforming to the views and practices of the popular denominations around. Scarcely a denominational barrier, by which the Baptist had as a people been so separated as to dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations, remained, with the exception of the ordinance of baptism, which had not been, directly or indirectly, broken up in upon, if not demolished; More in some sections than in others, but all within the general correspondence. Even the independence of the churches in reference to government was being fast destroyed, except in name, by the associations assuming powers not originally claimed, and by which associations were becoming like the higher ecclesiastical courts of their denominations. In addition to this change, the associations were bringing in all the new societies, in the very forms with their priestly powers in which they were devised by other denominations, and binding upon the churches and denomination the burdens thereof. Some few Baptists had borne with these things until they could go no further in fellowship and correspondence with those who were becoming anything but Baptists, excepting in the baptismal ordinance. Others were groaning under these burdens and knew not how to rid themselves of them. It was also believed that there were many scattered among the churches that were, as some were known to be, dissatisfied, unable from their experience to approve of this new order of things, and yet afraid to condemn it, because so many did approve, and such great things were said would be accomplished by these societies, and knowing perhaps of none but themselves that objected. It was to meet the exigency of this state of things that brother Beebe, which some few others in his vicinity, thought of the plan of publishing the "Signs of the Times" and that he, almost single-handed, step forward to incur the expense, and meet the reproach of throwing the gauntlet before the host of publications arrived to bring the churches and the world under tribute and quiet subjection to the image of the beast, which they were rearing. The object aimed at, and professed in the first start, and in continuation of the Signs, has been to hold forth the plain undisquised truth on both sides of the question. That is, on the one side to point out the simplicity of gospel truth and order as delivered by Christ and his apostles, and to advocate and to urge upon the Baptist the importance of a strict conformity in all things to the pattern shown in the mount. On the other hand to point out plainly the anti-scriptural nature and tendency of all these innovations which had been or still should be introduced among the Baptists. Hence the item in the prospectus for the Signs, "Waging war with the mother Arminianism and her entire brood of institutions." This has been thought by many to indicate a bad spirit perhaps Brother Burritt may think so. However it may be to him, to me it is manifest that Arminianism is the concubine, and the institutions of which she is the mother, or the children, of no better spirit than the Prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now works in the children of disobedience, or, if you wish to take another scriptural description of the personage, the great dragon, that old serpent, called the devil and Satan. Confident I am that no good spirit would lead us to form an alliance with this father of the children of disobedience and his family, nor even proclaim neutrality while Michael and his angels are fighting them. Consequently, a good spirit would lead us to enlist and fight at once in the ranks of Michael the Archangel. The idea of war is abundantly held forth in the New Testament.

But let us take another view of the subject. Brother Burt will admit that "Arminianism and her whole brood of institutions," called new schoolism, against whom Brother Beebe and his correspondence war through the Signs, are either supported by scriptural authority or they are not. If they are sustained by authorized institutions of the Kingdom of Christ, it must be a wrong spirit, and therefore a bad spirit that would lead any to oppose, or countenance opposition to them. Upon the ground of that supposition, Brother Burritt himself stands convicted of a bad spirit in common with all old-school Baptists. But if there is no scriptural authority, as there is not, for admitting this mother and her brood to belong to the gospel Kingdom, then the whole concern must be anti-Christian; for there is no neutrality no middle ground between the seed of Christ and the seed of the serpent. There are but two great religious interests in the world, Christ's and the antichrist's; the host of Michael, and that of the dragon. In Speaking of those who are getting up and supporting these institutions, and that interest, which the scriptures do not recognize as belonging to Christ's Kingdom, and which therefore must belong to the Kingdom of Antichrist, would Brother Burritt suppose that a good spirit would lead brother Beebe to speak of them, as "sheep in disguise," when the master declared set inwardly they are ravening wolves; Or lead him to speak of them as the circumcision, when Paul speaks of them as dogs as evil workers, as the concession; or again to speak of them as gospel preachers, or the ministers of Christ, when Paul calls them the ministers of Satan and another inspired apostle, pronounces them "false teachers who privately shall bring in damnable heresies;" and another, even Jude, calls them "ungodly men, spots in your feasts, clouds without water, trees whose fruit Withers, raging waves of the sea, wandering stars to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever,"? Certainly, the scriptures are indicted by a good spirit, it is not a bad spirit that leads us to speak of persons and things as Darren described, and it is not a good spirit that leads any to represent them as being better characters than the scriptures declared them to be, in order to shun opposition from the world.

Brother Burritt admits that Christ and his apostles used a different language towards false teachers and hypocrites from what they used towards weak brethren; But says, "we find no such language among their remarks as we often find in Gilbert Beebe's," whereby, I presume, he meant us to have us understand that Brother Beebe's remarks are much more severe. But he made this charge probably in haste, without proper examination. He cannot support it by matters of fact, as being applicable to anything like a general view of Brother Beebe's language. Brother Beebe Speaks of the new school leaders and party, as being what he and his correspondents generally believed them to be: as false teachers or the ministers of Satan "transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ," that under this guise they may more effectually build up a powerful interest in opposition to the Church of Christ; And I cannot think it just ground to charge him with a bad spirit for faithfully, in the face of the frowns of the world, pointing out these characters in their works as being what we have an abundant reason, as well as scriptural authority for believing them to be; And in a case, where deception is so injurious to the church and the saints of God, and to the liberties of our country. But Brother Burritt complained that Brother Beebe used too much sarcasm, and instances a case in the last volume were about the 17th number. Brother Beebe in conducting his paper on the principles of vowed, has of course drawn upon his paper repeated attacks from New England editors. Infrequent instances not to have noticed those attacks, would by many, have been construed as an acknowledgment by him, of the correctness of their charges against him, and yet to have attempted a refutation of their slang by sober reasoning, would have been to answer a fool according to his folly in a way that would have led him to be wise in his own conceit. And yet the direction again is, to answer him according to his folly, lest you be like unto him, proverbs 26.4-5. In such a case a little sarcasm by which the foolishness or inconsistency of their charges is exposed is perhaps the best way of answering them. It is employed on such occasions both by sacred and profane writers. I admit that this mode of treating a subject is very natural to Brother Beebe, more so than to many others, and that he may probably have sometimes indulged in it, to parry off attacks, both from friends and foes, when a different mode of answering them might have been better. I do not claim for him perfection of prudence, any more than for the correspondents of the Signs. An admonition in the spirit of moderation in such cases, by which the error had been placed in a true light might have been advantageous to him. But most of the censures which I have seen from his brethren, have been upon the supposition that he was really conducting the Signs in a bad spirit, or an attaching a blame to him, for not laying aside his own natural method of treating attacks, and borrowing their manner. But truly I cannot think that any more of a bad spirit, that is of bitterness, is manifested in his sarcasm, than in Brother Burrit's strong expressions. His sarcasm might be charged with having the appearance of too much levity, in treating religious subjects, rather than with bitterness.

There is an editorial article in the 16th number of the last volume noticing an attack of Mr. Peck of the banner, upon the old school Baptist, which is I presume the one brother Burritt wished to find. Let us therefore examine it a little. Mr. Peck came out in the banner in a lengthy article, charging the old school Baptists with forgery in taking that name to themselves, and claiming it for the new school folks, on the ground that some of the English and other Baptists something like 200 years ago, and some things departed from that simplicity of practice which we claim is marked out in the New Testament; and that the same was the case with the Philadelphia association 60 or 70 years ago. When we take into consideration the following known facts, we must be convinced that Mister Peck had no confidence himself in the justness of his charge; that it was a piece of sheer imposition that he was attempting to pass upon his readers. The facts I refer to are these. 1st the appellations new school and old school, we're in the first instance of the new school's own adapting and application. They applied the term old school to the old class of predestinarian Baptists, and boasting Ely claimed for themselves to be of the new school, and that they were not like the others, sticking to the old, antiquated, and stiff Baptist doctrine, but had adopted the new and more liberal views of Fuller and his class. 2nd we took the name old school not only because they had given it to those holding their doctrine from which we contend, but also because we, upon good grounds, claimed to be of the oldest school of Baptists, professing to be disciples of the school of Christ and his apostles, and disclaiming any acknowledgment of the authority of any other school, or subjection to the systems or practice of any later Baptists. Now as this ground had been so repeatedly taken and arguments adduced in support of it, through the Signs, Mr. Peck must himself have known, that arguments drawn from the practice of Baptists 200 years ago, would have no weight with us. Hence, after all that had been published through the Signs on that point, it must have been futile in the extreme to again meet that writer with sober judgment. Besides all of this, the ground of Mr. Peck's argument involved the complete overthrow of the ancient order of the Baptists as founded by Christ and his apostles, for they are of the old school of the Baptists, and date the first start of their order not quite 200 years back, they give the Baptists not so great an antiquity as the pedo Baptists do, when they ascribe their origin to the Mad Men of Munster. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, must it not be manifest even to Brother Burrtt, that the course of a sarcastic exposure of the absurdities and deception of Mr. Peck was the best brother Beebe could have adopted it. In pursuing this course he first exposes the inconsistency of the charges made by the new school, against the old, of vulgarity and a bad spirit, by selecting and repeating a number of those epithets which the new school Polish led Mr. Peck to heap so lavishly upon the old school Baptists. He next exposes Mr. Peck's claim to the antiquity of his order. To do this, he takes a remark, furnished to his hand, by one of the leading new school advocates, Baron Stowe, who speaking of the tract society, one of the oldest of the new school institutions, remarked that he had assisted in rocking the cradle of that society. Here then was a counterstatement of the antiquity of the new schoolism, Baron Stowe rocked its infantile cradle, while Staughton and Davis and others I suppose administered pap to it, and did the others offices of the nursery. I think it was with a good deal of propriety that Brother Beebe took hold of this sentence, as if both exposed the absurdity of their claims to antiquity, and also the true origin of their institutions, as being brought into existence, and sustained by human effort. Brother Beebe's Remarks were sarcastic, but however disposed Brother Burritt may to call it blackguardism, the new school could not so call it, for the leading idea of his remarks, that of rocking the cradle, was one which had been advanced in one of their public shows, by one of their speakers of boasted Polish.

In reference to Brother Saunders's letter; if Brother Burritt had waited to see his more recent communications in the Signs and in the doctrinal advocate, I think he would have felt that his censures on that head might have been spared.

In conclusion, I do hope that brother berrett may consider his letter, because of the answers therein contained for wicked men, to adopt Elihu's expressions. By wicked men here, I mean that class of Baptists who wish to keep up the appearance of not sanctioning a departure from the scriptures, and who yet would avoid the cross, and justify themselves in standing aloof from the exposure to reproach incident to opposing new schoolism, by misrepresenting the motives and acts of those who would endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, in manfully exposing the corruptions of the times among the Baptists.

Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax Co., Va., February 7, 1840

BROTHERLY LOVE AND UNITY.

Circular Letter & Corresponding Letter: The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Church at Black Rock, Baltimore County, Md., May 14th, 15th & 16th, 1856, to the several Churches of which she is composed, sends love in the Lord.

Beloved Brethren: - As an expression of fellowship, we again address you this our annual Circular, and on this occasion we have selected as our theme, the subject of Brotherly Love and Unity. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." - Psa.133:1.

First. The character and relationship of brethren; and secondly, the manner of their living together in unity. In the Scriptures, the words brother or brethren are used in a variety of senses. Some are so called in a proper sense, as by immediate descent, the children of the same parent or parents, according to the flesh, and some by affinity, kindred or nation, and also by common participation of our human nature, in which all men are brethren. But the saints of God are all brethren in a spiritual sense, by the grace of God, they all having God as their Father, and Christ as their Elder Brother. In this sense we were brethren in eternity, as the members of Christ's body. "Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned as when as yet there was none of them." Psa.139:16. Christ's incarnation is another proof of this brotherhood. "I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee." Psa.22:22. Again, "Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praises unto thee." Heb.2:12. "Wherefore in all things it behoved Him to be made like unto His brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." Heb.2:17. "For whom He (God) did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He (Christ) might be the first born among many brethren." Rom.8:29. "But go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and unto your Father; and to my God, and your God." John20:17. His death is a strong proof of His love to His brethren.

He was delivered for their offenses, and raised again for their justification. And He received gifts for men, to guicken whom He will. (See John 5:21.) And He said, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory," &c. John 17:24. "And you hath He quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Eph.2:1. "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father." Gal.4:6. In this way they are brought to view as brethren. Not like national Israel, under a covenant of works; but as the spiritual Israel, in the covenant of grace. National Israel was a separate people, and not reckoned among the nations, and in that sense they dwell alone. For Moses said, "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence; for wherein shall it be known here, that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us, so shall we be separated from the nations around about us." The brethren are separated from the world, for they are not of the world, as Christ was not of the world. Not that they chose Christ. No. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you out of the world;" therefore the world knoweth you not, because it knew Him (Christ) not. "For they neither know me nor my Father." So in dwelling together they are one body. "My dove, my undefiled is but one." Christ is the head, and they, the brethren, are His body, and members in particular; members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. Christ is the living Stone, as the Foundation, and the brethren are lively stones, to compose the spiritual house, the holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ. They, the brethren, dwell together in love. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love. Beloved, if God so loved us we ought also to love one another. God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as He is, so are we in the world. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" I John 4:7,8,19,20. "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

Another evidence of thus dwelling together in unity, is that we endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. "There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling: one Lord, one Faith, and one Baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph.4:3-6. So the life which the brethren live is a life by the faith of the Son of God, who has loved them and given Himself for them. As they are living members of Christ's living body, the church, so they have bowels of sympathy; if a brother is in bonds, as being bound with him, and with such as suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body. Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Make not a man an offender for a word, nor lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gates; nor turn aside the just for a thing of nought. Isa.29:21.

Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye, which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind, let each esteem the other better than himself.

As evidence of the unity of the brethren, they all have the same prospect in view, and are heirs alike to an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that cannot fade away; which is reserved in heaven for them, and they are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. I Pet.1:4,5. When we all shall have come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Eph.4:13. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father." Mt.13:43. And then shall they enjoy the presence of their God, and sing praises to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb, who is the light of the city forever. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there. And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lambs book of life. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" May grace, mercy and peace be with you all.

Corresponding Letter.

Dear Brethren: - By the indulgence of our Heavenly Father, we have been favored with another opportunity of meeting together, and have been favored by the visits of brethren from Maine to North Carolina, and from the Atlantic coast to the prairies of the West, all speaking the same things, and exhibiting a united and common interest in the things of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Why this interest, and why this unanimity of sentiment among those who were born in different climes, raised up under different circumstances, and subject to different influences? The answer can only be, that they have one common Teacher, who teacheth as never man taught; whose school is subject to no locality other than the hearts of His pupils. When thus assembled and thus united, may we not confidently call both upon the interested and the curious to come and behold our order? Or say to them, in the language of David: "Walk about Zion, go round about her; mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following." O, how delightful to contemplate that, exposed as we are continually to the envenomed shafts of the world, and the fiery darts of the wicked, that God has enclosed us in the invincible walls and bulwarks of salvation!

As it was only Him that dwelt in the bush, that preserved the bush from burning; only Him that walked in the midst of the heated furnace that kept the smell of fire from the garments of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego: so it is only by His appearing as a wall of fire round about Jerusalem, and the Glory in the midst, that Zion has ever been and still is preserved as a monument of the praise and glory of God's grace.

Our next Association will be held (the Lord willing) with the church at Hartford, commencing on Wednesday before the 3rd Sunday in May, 1857, when and where we hope to meet a goodly number of your messengers.

S.TROTT. Moderator.1856.

CALUMNY.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - In my late excursion into New Jersey, I was informed that a Mr. T.J., a Baptist Preacher, who had passed along a week or two before me, on his way to visit a certain Church in the Warwick Association, which is destitute of a Pastor, had represented the Welsh Tract Church with which I am connected, as being quite strict in disciplining its Members for departure from sound doctrine, but as paying no regard to their maintaining good works; that to his certain knowledge they had retained a Member in standing with them, who was a notorious drunkard, without ever calling him to account. Whether his intention was to give an unfavorable impression with regard to me as a Preacher, or to give this as an instance of the doctrines of grace tending to licentiousness, I feel bound to contradict the report as false. The only member of this Church since my acquaintance with it, who could by any fair construction of the terms be called a notorious drunkard, was several years since taken under dealings, but on professing repentance, and promising reformation, was restored to fellowship, and thus remained till shortly after I became the Pastor of the Church, reports having got to the ears of some of the Members, of his having given way to drunkenness again, a complaint was laid against him, and after waiting perhaps two months to give an opportunity to appear before the Church, and answer for himself, he was excluded. If Mr. J. knew of this man's sin before this, he was himself culpable, that he did not bring his case forward, he being a Member of this Church till the time of their agreeing to call me, when he took a letter. And in every other case, I take it upon me to say there has not, since my being with the Church, been a single known instance of a member's falling into that, or any other known sin, but that Gospel steps have been taken to reclaim him, and when these have failed, exclusion has taken place. And as to the general and known characters of this Church, previous to my coming into it, and that for considerably more than a century, I venture to say it will bear a comparison with any other Church existing in the United States, for anything like the same length of time, whether in reference to a constant succession of sound, able and esteemed Pastors, or in reference to a steadfast adherence to the faith, and covenanted order on which it was originally constituted. It is true that a conscientious adherence to that faith and order, which in years that are past, commanded the esteem of the Baptists of those days, exposes it to the reproach of modern Baptists; but this only shows that the Baptists are not what they once were.

Yours, S.TROTT. Iron Hill, New Castle County, Delaware, Jan.7th, 1833.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE

Brother Beebe: There have been occasionally communications in the Signs, written as relations of experience, which have occasioned in me a desire that something might be said in reference to them. And I now undertake it, although I am aware that either my former communications, or the remarks of some others, have raised in the minds of many of the brethren a prejudice against me, as though I wished to be thought a little more correct than any others on doctrinal points, and therefore that such will now think that I am setting myself up as better acquainted with experience than others. As I have heretofore tried to state in candor my reasons for opposing what I believe to be error in my brethren; I know of no better way than, if they will think thus without just cause, to let them think. Though I would not have it understood that I am, or wish to be, indifferent to the good or bad opinion of my brethren, or that I am so stoical as not to feel hurt at being the object of their prejudice. But what I mean is, that when a sense of duty, or inclination to enjoy my privilege, leads me to write, that I should not be deterred from it, because some will not receive what I advance, whilst there is a hope that others may be comforted or edified.

My objections to certain relations of experiences to which I have reference is not that I think the persons not subjects of grace, but that they have missed stating the exercises in which they were brought, first to exercise faith in Christ, and have stated other things as those which they look to as constituting their deliverance, which in themselves afford no evidence of faith in Christ. Take, for instance, the communication of Brother Burroughs in the last (or sixth) number of the Signs (1845). From some things which he states as being the ground of his trust, etc., I hope the Spirit has taught him and applied the gospel consolations to his mind. But I should not be able to draw any such conclusion from what he relates as constituting his change; namely: that he was greatly distressed, and from what he says, this distress mostly arose from an apprehension that the time was about to pass in which he could be saved, and that this distress went off and was succeeded by a pleasant and cheerful sensation. The magicians of Egypt can produce as great a miracle, or as good an experience as such would be. Mere natural men are capable of being excited to just such exercises. They can be so alarmed as to be greatly distressed at the idea that their supposed, or rather fictitious, day of grace is passed, or about to pass. And it requires but little attention to the workings of nature to know that these excited feelings are very apt to subside during a nap of sleep, or even from mere exhaustion, and that they are naturally succeeded, like any other pain, by a pleasant feeling; and it is easy for the imagination, as in the case of the front-bench converts, to draw the conclusion that this great change of feeling is an evidence that they have got religion. It is no wonder that this excites them to as great a pitch of joy as they were before to that of grief. I feel sorry to see such things given as a relation of experience among Old School Baptists:

First, because, as in the case above referred to, there being grounds to hope that they are subjects of grace, I feel sorry to see the children of God so bewildered as to their deliverance, and as having no clearer evidence to their minds, to refer to at times, of their having passed from death to life. I know how to pity them, having been in like situation; from not having been conversant with clear, experimental persons, and not having heard discriminating, experimental gospel preaching, when Christ was revealed in me to the apprehending of Him by faith as a savior suiting my case, I had no idea that the exercise I had at that time was a being born again, or a first believing in Christ with that faith which is the gift of God. The exercise was something new and made a deep impression on my mind, but I considered it only as an evidence given me that I was truly a subject of religion, as I had most of the time before for three or four years hoped I was. And when I went to offer to a Baptist church, I had no idea of relating this exercise as an evidence of my being a believer or a fit subject of baptism, though I think something of it was drawn from me in their questioning me. But my own statement was similar to what I had made to the church session when I joined the Presbyterians some years before; that I had been impressed with a desire to be religious and to serve God, etc., with the addition of some of my ups and downs since, and the manner of my being convinced concerning believer's baptism, etc. It was not under fifteen months after that I had an idea of that exercise being that in which I was first brought to know Christ crucified and to believe on Him; so completely had my mind been bewildered by the muddy preaching I had been accustomed to, but then it was so showed to me that the thing appeared plain. And from that day to this I have known when and how I was taught the way of salvation for poor, condemned, helpless sinners, as I then was, through a crucified Jesus; and I know that man had no hand in teaching it to me, that I never learned it from reading nor preaching.

Yet I have since passed through many dark seasons as to my interest in Christ, and to this hour have many doubts, from the awful corruptions within me, whether I can be a subject of grace, or whether my spot is the spot or exercises of God's children.

I feel sorry because such relations unnoticed make it appear as though the experience of Old School Baptists is nothing more than that of camp-meeting converts.

Because such unexplained statement are calculated to deceive inexperienced persons as to what an experience of grace consist in. Yet, I blame not this brother, nor others similarly circumstanced, seeing he is located where he can have but little intercourse with such as know what gospel experience is, for embracing the privilege of stating, through the Signs, what he had been led to look to as his conversion, doing it, as he evidently does, with a desire to be instructed in the way of God more perfectly, or, if he is deceived, to be undeceived. But in such cases I think it important that some one should be ready to act the part of Aquila and Priscilla; and my volunteering to do this is what may subject me to the charge of setting myself up as the standard of gospel experience. And it might have savored a little more of humility for me to have waited for some other one to step forward; in other similar cases which have occurred, I did wait, but in vain.

As to a standard, my wish is to make the Scriptures the standard of Christian experience, as I have ever aimed to set them forth as the only standard of gospel doctrine. As I have freely objected to the relation this brother gave of his experience, it is incumbent on me to show what it is that makes one manifest as a subject of salvation, according to the New Testament. For brevity's sake I shall touch only those points which might be questioned. A coming to Christ is admitted as necessary by all professors. I will, therefore, here show that Christ has said that none can come unto Him except they are taught of God. The words are, "No man can come to Me except the Father which hath sent Me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the Prophets: And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father cometh unto me, etc.," (John 6:44-45). Thus He evidently represents the drawing and teaching as the same thing.

Teaching has to do with the mind, not the animal feelings; it is an instructing of the judgment, or a giving of understanding to the thing taught. But God's teaching is not like man's, a mere enlightening of the head whilst the heart is untouched. It is a revelation of truth in the heart, so that the affections are arrested; there is a heart-feeling of the truth taught, and a heart-love for it. To come to Christ, or to be believers on Him, we must know Him in His true character as the Saviour of sinners; as said he that had been blind: "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on Him?" (John 9:36). Thus to know Him, we must know what it is to be sinners in God's account. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." "The law is spiritual." Spiritual life is, therefore, first imparted to give spiritual discernment or understanding, and the commandment then comes, that is, the person, under the divine teaching, is made to understand its force and special application to himself, condemning him and all his seeking and doing; and ultimately he is made to know (if not, as in some cases, at once) its spirituality and exceeding broadness to the thoughts and intents of the heart. He then knows why he is distressed; the curse of God's law stands against him; all his former hopes and expectations of doing anything to obtain the favor of God are cut off, and he lies helpless and dead under the righteous sentence of the law. Were it not that the Spirit in that case helpeth his infirmities, making intercession for him with groanings which cannot be uttered, that is, leading him to lift up his heart to God in desires for mercy, if it can be extended to a wretch so vile, he would be silenced in dead despair. Ask this person now what distresses him; his answer will be not that his time for obtaining salvation is passed, but that he is such a sinner against God that he sees not how any salvation can be for him, consistent with justice. Nothing which he has sever learned of Christ from reading or from hearing of preaching reaches his case.

He cannot believe on Him, for he knows not His fullness of grace and truth, neither can he know Him till God teaches him the knowledge of Him. But when the Father thus teaches him, or the Spirit takes of Christ's and shows to him, he understands the mystery of salvation through Christ crucified, views Him as the Lamb which God had provided for a sacrifice to His justice in the room of the guilty, condemned sinner. He now sees how he can be saved consistent with justice and how the mercy and promises of God can come to a wretch like him; and from this time his trust is fixed on a crucified, risen Jesus, and he has hope towards God and approaches Him as a Father (Ephesians 1:13 and 1 Peter 1:3). Now he will rejoice even unto tears, and knows what occasion he has for rejoicing in God his Savior. The knowledge he now has of Christ as the Way of salvation is altogether different from what he had before conceived of; and the purpose of God, as he now sees it, of saving polluted, helpless sinners, instead of such as can help themselves, and the salvation of Christ being so fully and exactly adapted to the case of such, is all new to him and all lovely and glorious, reflecting a glory upon all the ways and works of God around him. Can a man be taught these things of God and not know that his views of himself and his views of Christ and his expectations of acceptance with God are all new, all different, from what they once were, and that they are what he never learned of men?

The Spirit had probably implanted in Brother Burroughs the principle of life, causing a desire after God before the exercises he speaks of; but it may not have been till some time after this that he was truly drawn to Christ. I think if he will review his past experience there will be brought to his recollection a time when the awful depravity of his heart was so laid open to his view as to make him feel the justice of his condemnation, and the utter impossibility of anything good or acceptable to God coming from him; so that all idea of seeking salvation on his part was excluded; "Lord, save or I perish", was his cry in substance. Again, that in reading the Scriptures, or in hearing preaching, or in some passage of Scripture being presented and opened to his mind, he had a view of Christ crucified as a foundation just suited for such a condemned and helpless sinner to lean upon and trust to for salvation; and that since that time his hope of acceptance with God has not been from his determination to seek, but wholly through Christ and His finished work; and since then, it has been that he has known something of the God of Israel's opening rivers in high places, etc., for the poor and needy when everything else fails and they cry to Him. This revelation of Christ in him may have been at once by an opening up of the Scriptures to him, or it may have been more gradually that his mind was enlightened to understand the way of salvation.

The exercises which he related are such as are frequent with persons under a work of grace, by which Satan tries to settle them down on something short of Christ. Besides, being led by a way we know not, we are apt to look for a resting-place short of the proper one.

The position I have taken relative to this subject will, I think, be admitted by every reflecting Christian as the Scriptural one when he considers that the promises of salvation run alone through faith in Christ, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36 and Mark 16:16). And that faith implies a knowledge of Christ, and this knowledge evidently is only from being taught of God. "No man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son and he to whom the Son will reveal him" (Luke 10:22). I hope this brother, on a reexamination, will be able to tell us something of what he has learned of Jesus and of His saving power.

Yours; Elder Samuel Trott 1845 Centreville, Fairfax County, VA

CHRIST'S BEING MADE UNDER THE LAW &c.

EXPOSITION OF GALATIANS 4:4 & 5.

BROTHER JEWETT: - I saw in the ADVOCATE & MONITOR for June 1844, the request of brother Lowe of Missouri for my views on Gal.4:4 & 5. "When the fulness of time had come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." But various circumstances have occurred to prevent my complying with his request till now.

The main points, I presume, of Brother Lowe's enquiry, are in reference to redeeming them that were under the law; and as to the Son of God being made of a woman and made under the law. But in pursuing these enquiries, others at once arise; namely, whether Paul is here treating of the law given from Sinai, or some other law. And if of the Sinai law, whether the Gentiles were ever under it. The term law is used in the Scriptures in other senses than that of denoting the commandments, which God gave from Sinai; but in such cases the term is generally accompanied with some other identifying expressions. The definite expression, the law, as found in this text, I believe uniformly refers to the Sinai law. But should any doubt as to this being the law the apostle is speaking of, a little attention to the context will, I think, if they are candid examiners, convince them of the fact.

Beginning with the 3rd chapter, where Paul commences this particular argument, we find him in verses 2 & 5 contrasting the works of the law with the hearing of faith; here I presume none will dispute his meaning the law which was given by Moses. In verse 10, he asserts, that "as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse," and quotes from Deut.27:26, with a little variation of expression, in confirmation of this assertion; thereby showing clearly, that he is here speaking of the law of Moses. He then in verse 13 says, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Thus showing, that, in order to redeem from the curse of the law, He was himself made subject to the curse, of course must have been made subject to, or under the law that cursed, and that law, as proved above, was the Sinai law, or law of Moses. Here then is proof positive, without going further, that the law Christ was made under, was the Sinai law. But Paul goes on further to declare, that the law he is speaking of, was given four hundred and thirty years after the promise made to Abraham. What law will this apply to but the Sinai law? Surely I should think then, that this point is established beyond doubt.

And yet an objection is raised, in opposition to this proof, to the idea that the Sinai law is intended; because it has to be admitted that, if that law is intended, it would prove that both Jews and Gentiles are under it; and the expression, them that are under the law, would involve, they say, the idea that all of both Jews and Gentiles are redeemed. Hence it is supposed that some law, which the elect alone are under, is intended. But the truth is, the Apostle is not here treating of the extent of the redemption, but of the occasion of the redemption, that they who were redeemed had been under the law, and that they were redeemed, that they might be delivered both from the curse and servitude of it. And the expression, "them that were under the law," is not more general, than Paul uses in that faithful saying of his, "That Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," I Tim.1:15; nor than the words of our Lord, that, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19:10. So that I think this objection cannot militate against the proof we have showed.

We now pass to the other enquiry; namely, Whether the Gentiles were ever under the Sinai law. As above noticed, the establishing of the fact that the Sinai law is here intended, establishes also the point that the Gentiles are under it; else they had no part in that redemption, which God sent forth his Son to accomplish. But Paul writing to the brethren both at Ephesus and at Colosse, Gentiles of course included, connects them with himself in saying, "In whom we have redemption through his blood," &c. Eph.1:7, Col.1:14. And in the connection of our subject, chapter 3, verses 13 & 14, he speaks of Christ's being made a curse for us, &c., that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles; thus showing that the "curse of the law" stood in the way of the Gentiles experiencing the blessing of Abraham. And in chapter 4, verses 6 & 9, he says, "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts," &c., "Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son," &c. What can the Apostle mean here but to show these Galatian brethren, that they were interested in the redemption just spoken of, as evidenced by their receiving the spirit of sonship or of adoption, and that they ought not, therefore, any longer to consider themselves servants under the law? But as the law was given to national Israel, the difficulty with some is, how the Gentiles could be under it. In the mere letter, as a national covenant, the law was given exclusively to national Israel, and in that covenant form, it had nothing to do with the Gentiles, but to bar them from the worship and privileges which belonged to Israel; it was a separating wall between the two. This wall of partition Christ, by his crucifixion, broke down, so that the Gentiles now stand on the same footing with the Jews, as to the privilege of having the revelation of God's will published to them; and as to acceptance with him. But under the light of the Gospel, the law is manifested as a spiritual law, emanating from God who is a Spirit, and having a demand upon man as a rational being, having a soul as well as body alike derived from God.

Hence it shows, that nothing short of loving God with all the heart, with all the soul and with all the strength, and loving his neighbor as himself, is righteousness before God; and it proclaims that a falling short of this, in any point, is sin, and subjects to "the curse of the law." As our Lord informs us that all the law and the prophets hang upon this obligation thus to love God and our neighbor, it is evident this obligation existed before the giving of the law, and therefore was not limited by that wall of partition. Indeed the Decalogue is but a transcript of this obligation, illustrating its nature by distinct acts. Hence, "until the law, sin was in the world." As the letter of the law was proclaimed indiscriminately to all Israel; to those that fell in the wilderness, as well as to those that entered the promised land, showing the same standard of national righteousness to the one as to the other, and pronouncing the same thing to be sin in the one case, as in the other; so the law in its spirituality, is under the Gospel proclaimed alike to Jews and Gentiles, to those that perish, and to those that afterwards believe, as the one standard of righteousness, and that by which is the knowledge of sin. Hence Paul says, "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." Rom.3:19. According to Paul then, them who are under the law include no less than all the world.

Paul, in his figure of the schoolmaster, and of the heir being a child &c., seems to me to refer to that collective body of Christ, in which there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, &c. The childhood state of this body, or church, had its existence in the type, in the natural seed of Abraham, having the Messiah in it yet undeveloped. In this state it was in servitude "under the law," differing nothing from a servant; the law as a schoolmaster enforced its instructions by the rod; and tutors and governors, the priesthood, were enforcing and expounding the requisitions of the law, and directing the conscience. But since Christ, the object, the author and finisher of faith, has come, the church is no longer under a schoolmaster. He has taken the hand-writing of ordinances, the Sinai covenant, out of the way, and the church is brought into the liberty of sonship. But in the second place, as the body and members are one, and therefore the travel of the church and of the individual members correspond, so Paul shows by the same figures the experience of the elect in their quickened state; and how, when faith is come, or given, they have Redemption through Christ's blood, and receive the Spirit of God's Son. But the elect in their state of unregeneracy, like others, are aliens, living as having no hope and without God in the world. Eph. 2:12. Whatever educational knowledge they may have, they are like Paul alive without the law. But when quickened by the Spirit, like Israel when brought out of Egypt, they are put to work under the law, and differ nothing from a servant, toiling to obey and to be accepted upon their obedience; but are only learning more of the broadness of the law, of the infinite purity of that God they have to do with, and of the depth of their own pollution and depravity; so that the Law is continually wasting them and their hopes, as Israel was wasted in the wilderness. And like them they frequently murmur saying, "Behold, we die, we perish; we all perish; whosoever comes anything near unto the tabernacle of the Lord shall die." Or thus, "Wherefore have ye made us to come out of Egypt to bring us into this evil place? It is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink." Num.17:12,13 & 20:5.

Thus, though the law does not bring them to Christ, as the translators make the passage read, Gal.3:24, by adding the words to bring us; yet it was unto or until Christ; that is, it held its dominion over them, until they were stripped of all hope, condemned and just ready to be in justice forever banished, and thus made to know themselves to be in that desperate case, as to be just fit objects for the display of God's mercy, and of the power of Jesus to save; and when faith comes, they see that the salvation by Christ is just fitted and adapted to the case of such polluted, ruined, helpless sinners, as they are. By the application of this salvation they find themselves delivered from the law and brought into the relation of sons to God.

But probably, owing to the many speculations which have been set afloat by man's wisdom, brother Lowe may want to know my views concerning Christ's being made of a woman and made under the law.

First: The expression made of a woman, as well as that used by the Angel, (Luke 1:35,) "that holy thing which shall be born of thee," forbids my believing, that the body of Jesus was a super-human or previous existence, which dwindled itself down to pass through Mary in the form of a child. I believe, the child Jesus was born of Mary, the fetus receiving its nourishment and growth from her, the same as any other child is born of its mother. Some have objected, that as Mary was of the same depraved stock with the rest of the human family, if the child Jesus was made of her or received its growth from her, it must have partaken of her depravity. But not so; the depravity of the human family proceeded from Adam, not from Eve, and is therefore communicated by the father, not the mother. Besides, the depravity or sin is not inherent in the mere flesh and bones and blood of the body, that thing which was born of Mary, these in depraved man are instruments of unrighteousness, as Paul speaks; but it has its existence in that principle of life, which animates and gives life to that thing which is born of the woman; and this principle of life which in ordinary cases is communicated from the man, was, in the case of Jesus, the immediate and uncontaminated production of the Holy Ghost, which came upon her.

228 of 1338

he was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners; not conceived in sin.

Second: Christ's being made under the law, at the same time that he was "made of a woman," shows that he was made a rational being, and therefore we have proof in this of the error of another speculation; namely, that what was as a soul to the body of Jesus, was a preexistent being, which was the beginning (or first) of the creation of God, and which had existed from before the foundation of the world, as the Head and Representative of the Church or spiritual body of Christ. Now we know that the law has nothing to do with irrationality; that it was prescribed to man as a rational being, as having a soul or mind, as well as an animated body; Christ therefore in being made under the law, must have been made such a being. His assumption of a mere body could not have constituted him any more under the Law, than he was before. The declaration that he was made flesh, which is quoted to support the other notion, evidently means, that he was made man in distinction from his antecedent existence, as "the Word," and having that life in him, which was the life of men, and which he had as the Head of that life; just as the same term is used, "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit." It may be said, that Jesus in his human body existing in union with his preexistent life, rendered him as much a rational being, as though he had had a human soul.

Admitting this to be so, (of the correctness of it, however, I have no means of judging;) there is another difficulty, Christ as the Head of his people and fountain of that life, which manifests them as sons of God, was not like Adam, set up under the law, but under that everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure. This life never in the members, and of course never in the Head, for Christ is it, was in a state of servitude under the law, but always in a state of sonship; it is the Spirit of God's Son. Gal.4:6. He therefore, to come into the law place of his people, must be made of a woman and made under the law. In conformity with the idea I am contending for, it is written that, in taking upon him the form of a servant, he was made in the likeness of men, Phil. 2:7; he must of course been made with a soul as well as a body like men. In Rom.8:3, we read of God's sending forth his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh. There are other sinful beings, as I believe; namely, the devils; but as the design of the Son of God was not to represent them, "he took not on him the nature of angels;" and sinful flesh is not to be found, except as it exists in personal union with a human soul.

Christ therefore, to be in the likeness of sinful flesh, must have flesh in union with a human soul. But more clearly, if possible, to the point, we read in Heb.2:17, that "in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren." Now, his brethren exist as perfect men having souls and bodies, besides having the spirit of Christ, the spirit of God's Son, or Christ who is their life in them. The Son of God therefore, to be in all things made like unto his brethren, must not only be the Head of spiritual life, and as their Elder Brother have it in common with them as brethren, but he must also be a complete man having a human soul and body, and therefore human passions, though not swayed by depravity. Being such, he could know what his brethren suffer in mind, as well as body, from being tempted; and having been in like manner tempted, he knows how to succor them and have compassion on them. And having a human soul, he could know and feel in soul as well as body, the condemnation and curse of the law; and thus feeling it, he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Matt. 26:38.

Christ being thus made fully under the law, and being at the same time one with his people in that life of which he is the Head, and they are the members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones, he could fully represent them under the law; and being their Elder Brother he could claim the right to redeem according to law; and being at the same time God and having all the fulness of the Godhead dwelling bodily in him, He by his obedience could and did completely cancel the demands of the Law upon his people; and becoming the end of the law for righteousness unto them, he removed every barrier, which the law could present, out of the way of their being brought experimentally to a oneness with him, and to participate with him in the privilege of being sons of God and in the glory, which He had with the Father before the world began.

I have thus given my views on those points in this text, which brother Lowe most probably had in view. If there are other points which I have not so particularly noticed, on which he wishes my views more fully, and will signify the same through the ADVOCATE & MONITOR, I will try, if spared, to satisfy him.

S. TROTT. Sept.6, 1844.

COMMENTS ON LUKE 16:19-31.

BROTHER JEWETT: - After so long delay, I in conformity with the request of yourself and another, will now give you my views of that portion of Scripture contained in Luke 16:19-31.

This passage is, I believe, very generally understood to be a parable spoken by our Lord. The parables spoken by him are of different kinds; some are figurative illustrations, the figures being borrowed from natural things, of things spiritual and pertaining to the gospel and church of Christ; others seem only designed to enforce some important truth. The former class is known by being prefaced with such expressions as, The kingdom of heaven is like, &c. These expressions to me convey the idea, not only that the parable relates to the Gospel and things pertaining to it, but also that there is a likeness in the figure to the thing represented; as in the parable of the marriage of the king's son. Matt.

22:1-14. Some brethren, however, understand certain parables thus prefaced, as having special reference to the Jews; as those found in Matt.25:1-30. But, from the fact that the term, kingdom of heaven, is so manifestly used to denote the gospel church or dispensation, distinctively from the Jewish, the one about coming in, the other about being removed; the one heavenly, the other earthly; (see the 12 commissioned, Matt.10:7, "As ye go, preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand,") I cannot think, that we can apply the parables thus designated by our Lord, to the Jews as such, without doing violence to his words.

But the parable about to be considered is not said to be like the kingdom of heaven; I therefore consider it to be one of those used to enforce some important truth. Others however make it a figurative representation, and think they find a correspondency to the figure, by making the rich man represent the Jews, and Lazarus the Gentiles, &c.; but I find no authority in the parable or its connection for to so understand it. I therefore believe the design of the parable is primarily to enforce the truth contained in the last verse, in reference to the Jews, that "if they believed not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." Christ had before spoken of that people as a wicked and adulterous generation, seeking after a sign, and had said, "There shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas," &c. Matt.12:39,40, and Luke 11:29,30. And now by this parable he shows, that even that sign shall fail, so long as they believe not the testimony of Moses and the prophets. It 2ndly shows the important fact in every age, that so long as men believe not the testimony of Moses and the Prophets, concerning Christ and concerning themselves, they do not and cannot in truth believe the gospel. Christ's words on another occasion, are, "If ye believe not his (Moses) writings, how can ye believe my words." John 5:47.

But while I believe such to be the design of this passage, I do contend, that it is in itself a parable in distinction from the idea of a fable; that is, that the figure contains nothing inconsistent with the nature and order of things; nothing which might not be truly matter of fact. I cannot think of charging our Lord with using fabulous representations, when the Holy Ghost has through the apostles so fully cautioned the saints against turning to fables, giving heed to fables, &c. We have then, besides the general instruction designed by the parable, the following ideas presented by it as general truths: 1st. That the souls of the dead, both of the wicked and the righteous still have a distinct and active existence, either in a state of torment or of happiness. 2nd. The ministration of angels in reference to the dead. And 3rd. That the wicked still retain, after death, their ignorant, arminian notions. To these general heads, we shall endeavor distinctly to attend.

First. That the souls of the dead, both of the wicked and the righteous, still have a distinct and active existence, the one in a state of torment, the other in a state of happiness.

This position presents the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, independent of the spiritual life communicated to it in Regeneration; a doctrine which I understand to be denied by some in your region, and is, I see, denied by one writer in the PREDESTINARIAN BAPTIST, the No. for June 1st, pg. 117,

118. It seems to have been extensively supposed, that the burden of proof, relative to the immortality of the soul, must be borne by the advocates of that sentiment. This is a gross mistake; it involves a requisition to prove a negative, as I shall show. The scriptures do not take that ground. I shall lay down this position, controvert it who can; that we have no authority for believing anything that God in his providence has not made evident to the faculties of man, nor declared in the Scriptures. We believe that man's body is material, both because the Scriptures declare, that God made man of the dust of the earth, and speak of him as flesh, &c., and also because it is demonstrable to our natural senses. We know this fact. And those of us who believe in God, believe that he so made man. We all know, that man is mortal, that he is subject to death, and his body to become decomposed. How do we know it? Is it because we have, with vain philosophers, discovered that there is a natural necessity in matter to corrupt, and therefore that the nature of man was to be mortal? Or in other words, that we have discovered a defect in God's creating power, that he could not make matter incorruptible, or a necessary liability in God to change, to bring things into existence, and then bring them to destruction? No; the truth is, God never gave to proud man the opportunity to discover such defect in His creating power, or a natural necessity for man's mortality. God permitted man to offend, and sin to enter the world, for an infinitely wise purpose; and to illustrate the true nature of sin, and to punish man for his transgression, God gave him, the created lord of this world, and all his dominions up to its corrupting influence and effects. The sentence was passed, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, &c., cursed is the ground for thy sake &c., for dust thou art, and unto dust shall thou return." The whole history of man's mortality and of the world with all its changes from that day to this, is but the effect of the brief sentence's being carried out, which God passed upon man, upon the woman, and the serpent. Gen. 3:14-19. And the gospel of Christ alone develops the gracious purpose of God in permitting this corrupter to enter his creation. What then was left for man to discover in this matter? So far from the Scriptures leaving it to be correctly inferred, that the dissolution of man, and of nature is the effect of a deficiency in God's creating power, they in reference to the dissolution of the old world, represent it as the effect of repentance (figuratively,) in God. Gen.6:6. That is, God is here represented as turning about and exerting the same power to sweep man from the earth, which he had put forth in creating and sustaining him upon it; just as man would do, if he repented of any work he had made. Not that there was any change in the mind or purpose of God. So much for man as made of the dust of the ground. Is the soul material also, was it made of the dust of the ground? If so, then it is evidently subject to the same sentence, Dust thou art &c. If not, then it requires proof direct to believe it subject to that sentence. But have we a soul or spirit distinct from animal life? Yes, we know we have an existence within us called a living soul. 1st. Because the Scriptures declare, that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Gen.2:7. 2nd. Because we are conscious of its existence. We know it is not matter, because we cannot bring it to the test of any of our natural senses.

Pocket Trott 1.0 234 of 1338

We can neither taste, smell nor see it; neither can we hear or feel it, as we do the wind. Yet we know it is within us; an intelligent something which can think &c., a something which remains active whilst our natural senses are locked up in sleep. Besides it was the breath of God. It must therefore be a spiritual existence. We know that it exists, and that its existence is from God; what authority can we then have that it will ever cease to exist, unless God has declared his purpose, that it shall so cease, or we can prove that it necessarily must cease to exist? Have we any Scriptural testimony that the soul is mortal? None. Sensible evidence we of course have none, because we cannot bring it to the test of our senses. Have we an inward consciousness, that the soul will die with the body? How stands this point, you that deny the immortality of the soul? Have not some of the most hardened infidels given evidence in death of a consciousness of an existence beyond death? Upon what authority then does the declamation rest, that the soul which we know exists, and exists from God, will cease to exist?

There is no authority, either Scriptural, or rational for it. As rational beings we are then bound to reject it, till proof is brought to sustain it. But again, what is the mortality or death of the body? It is not annihilation; annihilation is not a doctrine of the Bible. Death is a cessation of animal life, and an ultimate decomposition of the particles of matter, of which it was formed, or a returning to its original element, dust.

Will the advocate for soul mortality, contend that the souls of wicked persons at death become decomposed and return with all their depravity to their native element, the breath of God? I think not.

The Scriptures I admit contain this sentence, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ez.18: 4 & 20. But the term soul is evidently used in these, as in many other texts of Scripture, to denote personality or individuality. The import is the same as if it had been said, The individual that sinneth he shall die.

There is another sense in which the Scriptures, as I understand them, speak of a death which has passed upon man, in which both soul and body are involved. "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," was the decree. "Dead in trespasses and sins," is the declaration of the decree having taken effect, whilst the individuals still retain a conscious existence both of body and soul. I do not understand this death to be a loss of any spiritual life which man originally had. But it is an extinction of that uprightness in which man was created, a sinking under the curse of God's law, and a dissolution of everything in him tending to his happiness, whilst he remains alive to everything sinful and tending to misery.

The writer in the PREDESTINARIAN BAPTIST, already referred to, has made a discovery which rather surpasses any made by philosophers going before. It is this, "If man was wholly natural in creation, then of necessity he was wholly mortal, nothing immortal about him." Whether he here by mistake used the word natural for material and meant thereby to convey the idea, that the breath of God, which he breathed into man, was matter, and of course, that the soul is something, which can be handled; or whether he used the word according to its proper meaning, and intended to convey the idea, that if man was wholly what God made him, then of necessity he was wholly mortal, &c., I cannot say. But it is astonishing to what extremities men, and even good men, will run, when they undertake to be wise above what is written. God expressly declares in his word that sin made man mortal, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned;" and "as sin hath reigned unto death." Rom.

5:12,21. And yet this writer has the presumption to say, that from necessity man was wholly mortal in his original creation; that is, that God from necessity so made him. He has also some wonderful discoveries, as to how it was, that man became capable of transgressing God's law, different from anything which the Holy Ghost has told us on the subject, in the Scriptures. But as I would prefer depending on what God has revealed, to trusting to his discoveries, I will leave him.

I have already said, the Scriptures do not take the ground of those, who suppose the burden of proof lies on the advocates for the immortality of the soul. God has declared that the soul was produced by him, and has made its existence manifest to every man; he has never declared his purpose again to take it out of existence, it would therefore have been something like supererogation for the Holy Ghost to have given express declarations in the Scriptures, that the soul will not cease to exist. But at the same time, whenever the Scriptures speak of the soul in connection with the death of the body; its language is such, as corresponds only with the idea of its separate existence after the death of the body. Thus in the case of Rachel, Gen.35:18, her dying is expressed by her soul's departing, not by its ceasing to exist. In the case of the son of the widow of Zarephath, Elijah prayed unto God, not to give the child a new soul, nor to revive his old one, but that his soul might come into him again; and we are told that, "The soul of the child came into him again, and he revived." I Kings 17:21,22. Again, Christ, cautioning his disciples against the fear of man, says, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, &c." Matt.10:28. Does he not here clearly teach that the soul is not subject to the same death, to be killed as the body is? It may be said that, Christ spoke this to his disciples. True he did; but it is equally evident that he said it not in reference to their regeneration, but spake to them as men, because he immediately speaks of God's being able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Besides it is expressly of the soul, and not of spiritual life that he speaks. Passing other texts which may be supposed to relate to the persons as saints, I will come to the case of the rich man in the parable under consideration. The rich man died and was buried, and yet in hell he lifted up his eyes &c., and he saw and knew Abraham and Lazarus afar off. Of course his rationality, his soul still existed in its full vigor and he was conscious of existence. As evidenced by preceding remarks, I do not understand this parable as designed to reveal the immortality of the soul, but I understand Christ as employing such ideas in his figure, as were familiar to his hearers, and such as he himself endorsed; for certainly none can think that the blessed Jesus would convey ideas, which in themselves were false. In this view of the parable, it fully sustains the doctrine of the immortality of the souls of the wicked, because it only accords with such doctrine.

In reference to the terms used to denote the locality of these souls; the expression Abraham's bosom, is a Jewish phrase, and appears designed more to convey the idea of the happy state of such souls, as partaking, as his spiritual seed, in the blessings of Abraham; than to designate any particular locality. The place where the rich man lifted up his eyes, in the translation called hell, in the Greek Ades, or Hades, in Hebrew Sheol, seems by its general use in Scripture designed not so much to denote the final place of everlasting punishment, as a general receptacle of souls after death. The Greek and Hebrew words denote a secret, hidden place.

According to the parable, as according to any notion we can have of the happiness of departed saints, the location of Lazarus is impassably separated from the place of misery. In accordance with this idea of Hades, or hell, both death and hell are represented as giving up their dead, when the final judgment, or judgment of those, who have not a part in the first resurrection, takes place. Rev.20:12-14.

The other two leading ideas in the parable, marked for notice, will necessarily have to be deferred for another communication. And although, when I commenced this, I designed expressing my views fully on them, yet circumstances, which have since transpired, have led me to conclude, that I, perhaps, may as well just let them pass with only the brief notice above taken of them.

Pocket Trott 1.0 239 of 1338 I subscribe myself affectionately, S.TROTT. July 22, 1842.

Communion with God.

Brother Beebe: - I some time since received a letter signed S., N.Y., requesting my views on the important enquiry, How far communion with God may be expected to be enjoyed by christians in this day.

Since receiving this letter, I have had much to prevent my earlier attention to it, which must be my excuse for so long neglecting the request of my unknown friend.

From the explanation given in the letter, it appears that the enquiry therein contained, refers more directly to the idea of receiving special and manifest answers to prayer for intimations of the Divine will, to be given us as a guide in cases of difficulty, that is, whether we may look for such answers in this day.

In reference to the general enquiry, I will here briefly remark, that communion with God in this, as in every other age, depends entirely on the pleasure of God. "For the preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord." Prov.16:1. To the same effect says the Psalmist; "Lord thou hast heard the desire of the humble; thou wilt prepare their heart; thou wilt cause thine ear to hear." Ps.10:17. It is the desire of the humble that God heareth; it is grace alone that can humble the heart, even of a believer, truly before God. - Again, John informs us that - If we ask anything according to His will, He heareth us. I John 5:14. "But the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." I Cor. 2:11. Hence if we ask anything according to the will of God, it must be alone by the influence and guidance of the Spirit of God, as says the Apostle again: "For we know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." Rom. 8:26, 27. Just so far therefore as the Spirit indites our petitions for us, so far will God answer our prayers. But to come to the special enquiry proposed; if my own experience in the case might be considered proper authority, I should unhesitatingly say that, in some instances, when God's children, in cases of difficulty, feeling their utter incapability to decide for themselves as to what is duty, are led to entreat of Him for some special intimation of His will as their guide in the case, He does in answer to their prayer, give them such intimations. In the early part of my life as a believer, I received in several instances, what I then considered to be, and still believe to have been special intimations as to what was duty in particular cases of difficulty; such as related to my engaging in the work of the ministry, and to some other instances of special anxiety of mind.

The method in which to receive an answer, that I was more generally led to ask for, and look to, was that I might open to some passage of Scripture which should be given to me as an answer. The idea was not, that I should take any text which I might chance to open to, as an answer - but that I might be directed to some passage which should convey to my mind a proper answer to my enquiry, and be impressed upon my mind as such. (Christians know the difference between merely reading a text, and having it applied by the Spirit of God.) I was probably first led to seek answers in this way, from having in some instances, when in deep distress concerning my salvation, on taking up the Bible, opened without any previous design, to texts which when they first met my eye, seemed to have something in them specially suited to my case, and were so applied to me as to give me instruction and comfort. I have in some instances on receiving answers as above mentioned, been led to admire the wonderful treasury which the Scriptures contain, and have thought that they contained a text suiting every case either of anxious enquiry, or of distress to which a child of grace may be subjected.

In the several instances to which I have referred of having received answers to my supplications, not only did the texts to which I opened, in their expressions, contain appropriate answers to my enquiries, and were so impressed upon my mind, and so rested upon, that my course was shaped accordingly; but in every such instance, the events thus promised or predicted have been exactly accomplished and that in a way independent of any plans or exertions of mine, manifesting the special providence therein. So that whoever else may doubt the fact of such special intimations of the Divine will being given, I have ground for confidence in them, unless I am altogether deceived in reference to having been called to the ministry. There have been some instances in which I expressed, by other modes than that above described, what I have received and rested upon, as special answers to my supplications for direction. But I would by no means have it supposed that my experience has led me to believe that I can command such special answers, whenever I am pleased to ask for them. On the contrary, many were the instances in my early experience, when under deep anxiety to know whether I was truly a subject of grace or not, and in other instances to know what was duty in particular cases, that I have spent hours together in some solitary place, in prayer and in turning over the Scriptures, to obtain some direct intimation from God to satisfy my doubts, and that, without receiving any answer. In other instances wherein the Lord ultimately granted an answer, it was not until my mind had been long burdened with the subject, and application had often been made for relief, that it was obtained.

I will here make a partial digression, which to some may not be uninteresting, to remark that christians, more especially in their early experience, are apt in seasons of doubts to be anxious to obtain some special intimation from God, to assure them of their interest in Christ, or of their being of the elect. But that which has been the pleasure of God to reveal in the Scriptures, is, Christ as the Saviour and complete salvation of His people under the character of lost, helpless sinners, the same He reveals in them when taught their just condemnation and helplessness. But He has not revealed that they by name or personal distinction are of the election of grace. It is therefore I conceive vain to expect that God will give us any special intimation to assure us particularly of our having been chosen in Christ, or that He died especially for us. It is the will of God that we should walk by faith and not by sight - by faith in Christ as He is revealed in the Scriptures the Saviour of helpless, ruined sinners. To rest our expectations for acceptance with God, on a special revelation made to us of our election, would be to walk by sight. It is true that God is pleased at times so to reveal Christ to His people, in His fullness as suiting their case, and so apply some of the promises which are yea and amen in Christ Jesus, that they then have all the assurance they can ask for, of their interest in Christ, and of course, of their election. But this is a revelation of Christ to them - not as adapted to their election: but to their ruined, helpless case, as sinners, and their knowledge of themselves as such, and of Christ's having undertaken and finished the salvation of such, is to them through faith the evidence of their salvation and ground of their hope.

But to return to the subject, before us; I have been led to the conclusion, whether correctly or not, that it is mostly in their early experience that God grants to His children communion with Him, in this special way of their seeking and receiving these sensible indications of His will concerning them, in particular cases. This conclusion is founded, 1st. On their then lamblike state, and the peculiar tenderness which our kind Shepherd is wont to exercise towards such, as we are informed by Isa.40:11 - "He shall feed His flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." - Again, upon the consideration that the repeated trials of a believer's faith which he passes through, worketh patience, and patience, experience; and experience, hope, &c., that is, his repeated experience of the faithfulness of God inspires him with hope, that God will grant him the guidance which he needs, if he but commit his way unto Him. And as Paul says in reference to salvation, "If we hope for that which we see not, then do we with patience wait for it;" so in this case the believer is led to a patient waiting for the openings of providence as his guide, without seeking these special intimations from God. But then I would not infer from this, that there are no instances in which an experienced believer may be led to seek and receive such special intimations of God's will concerning him. Neither would I have it inferred that it is not the privilege and the only safe course of every believer to commit all their ways unto the Lord, to seek direction from Him in all their changes and to submit to His guidance, in whatever way He may manifest it.

As I have dwelt thus long on my own experience in this case, I will further add that I have experienced the evil of engaging in enterprises merely from the impulse or inclination of my own mind, without specially seeking direction from God therein. Such for instance was the case in my removal to the West in 1815. The disappointments I met with in my expectations, and the reflection of having left the church I had been connected with in New Jersey, in an entire destitute situation, soon made me sensible of the error I had committed in undertaking this removal without especially seeking counsel from God in the case. The reflection thus occasioned, prevented my ever feeling settled or satisfied with that removal, and therefore when an opening in providence appeared to be made for my removal back, I readily embraced it; and returned after six years absence, to the church I had left. There was however much in the dispensations of providence toward me, during those six years, calculated as I thought to keep alive the recollection of my error. This may enable some satisfactorily to account for what has perhaps appeared to them a strange move. But my unknown friend will wish some higher authority than my own experience for the answer I have given to his enquiry.

1st. Then; We are abundantly authorized from Scripture, to ask for those things which are according to God's revealed will, in such texts as these: "Ask and it shall be given you." Mt.7:7. "But in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Phil.4:6. "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." John 14:13,14. But then this asking, to receive, must not only be in faith in Christ, as the Mediator, but also in faith to believe that God will for Christ's sake grant the thing asked, as shown by Mt.21:22 - "And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive" - also James 1:6; and I John 5:14,15.

2nd. The case of Gideon is one instance to the point left on record for our instruction; God condescended to grant special repeated signs to Gideon as an assurance of his being called to the work pointed out to him, and of his duty to engage therein. The Lord had shown Gideon one sign of his call of God to the work assigned him, in the consuming by fire from the rock, the flesh, of his offered kid, &c. Judges 6:18-21.

Yet Gideon's doubts still prevailed of the Lord's designing him for such a work, and he entreats for further confirmation, and specifies the sign once and again. The Lord grants it in the fleeces first being wet with dew, and then dry, verses 26 -40, same chapter.

Other instances might be pointed out in the Old Testament; but I will come to the case of Thomas in the New Testament, John 20:25-29. Thomas would not believe that his Lord had actually risen from the dead, without receiving a particular sign as confirmation, notwithstanding the testimony of his brethren. The sign is granted, he is permitted to put his hand into the wounded side of his Lord, and his fingers into the print of the nails in his hands. It is true that these doubts of Thomas was made the occasion for giving to him and the other disciples, a clearer testimony than they otherwise could have had of Christ's having actually risen in the same body in which He had entered the tomb; and that without having seen corruption. But it also stands on record as a testimony of the condescension of Christ to the doubts and weakness of His children; and is an encouragement to us - not to indulge in unbelief; but to seek Him in giving to us that evidence which is necessary to enable us to believe in any case; and of course, also to understand what is duty. This subject would open a still extended field were I to undertake to draw the mark of distinction between these instances of special communion with God, which we have noticed, and those impressions which are frequently made upon our minds, often, no doubt, by Satan, and which we are apt to mistake for intimations of the Divine will; and also to notice objections which might be raised to the position I have taken. But as I have already been so lengthy on the subject, I will pass these by for this time.

I however wish to be indulged a little further, to offer a few additional remarks on the general enquiry, how far the churches of Christ are at this day enjoying communion with God.

On this point I shall have to differ from those who talk so much about the present sickly state of the church. That this is a day of rebuke to the churches of Christ I readily admit. When we look at, and judge from outward appearances, the following scriptural complaints would also appear truly applicable to our case, namely: "We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth, neither have the inhabitants of the world fallen." And we might add, our enemies are deriding us for it. But then the gracious answer of God to this complaint, stands on record for our encouragement, in the same connection. "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise.

Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out her bread. Come my people enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast." &c. Isa.26:18-21. Thus is showed that notwithstanding the complaints which the church makes of herself, she is at that very time the object of the special recognition and care of her Lord; and that of which she complains is, in His gracious dealings, but the means of separating her from the multitude, against whom He has indignation, and who have shed the blood of the saints; and of preparing her to enter into the chambers He has prepared for hiding her from the storm during this indignation. And indeed I think those saints who complain so of the sickly state of the church take altogether a mistaken view of the subject. They think that truth is much fallen now to what it was thirty or forty years ago, and has much fewer advocates now than then. But the fact is, that truth, then, was at a much lower standard than now: scholastic divinity was then mostly the standard, and the truth as it is in Jesus was obscured by the glosses of men. Now the true churches of Christ are being led to renounce such standards of 'truth', and to take the Scriptures as their only standard; the consequence is, that with many these human glosses are stripped off and the truth and order of the gospel are preached and received by such in that plainness in which they are revealed in the Scriptures; and they are depending more on the teachings of the Holy Spirit, and less on the teachings of men. Hence carnal professors, instead now of professing love to the doctrine of the Scriptures in its plainness, come out in opposition to it, and openly advocate human teaching and human systems, contrary to that, to which the saints are led.

Again the churches, formerly through their general appearance of union, increased in worldly respectability and enjoyed more pleasant feelings. Now they experience much to mar these feelings, but have in exercise a much more conscientious and greater regard for the truth and order of the gospel, as delivered in the Scriptures, and from the glory they now discover in the simplicity of Scripture revealed, compared with the wisdom of men, they cheerfully meet reproach in their strenuous adherence to the former, and rejection of the latter.

Formerly their great increase in numbers and respectability, occasioned a manifest decrease in true spiritual strength; now the true churches of Christ are diminished in numbers, and by the religious world are considered the reverse of prosperous and respectable, but they experience much more of the sweets of spiritual union and fellowship, and rejoice that in the Lord alone is their righteousness and strength.

Formerly they were like a person increasing in corpulency, but becoming thereby gross and subject to disease; now under the management of their all skillful Physician, they are having that grossness purged from them, and though losing much of their corpulency, yet are becoming more healthy. So that whilst the churches have abundant reason to mourn their past too great conformity to the world, they have abundant reason for thankfulness, that their kind and all-wise Shepherd's care toward them has not diminished; and that although they are made to experience the pain of divisions, and much opposition and contempt; yet He is thereby separating them from that only, which was hurtful to them.

Upon the whole view therefore of the subject, I am led to the conclusion that the churches of Christ are at this daylooking more entirely to the guidance of the Holy Spirit and receiving more of His communications in being led to clearer views of divine truth in its original purity, and to greater love to it, than for a long period before, as manifested by their preferring God's truth, with reproach; to the systems and expositions of men, with worldly applause. But still, whatever just ground some few may have to boast of their deep experience in divine things, and to glory over their brethren on account thereof, the great body of the saints fall, (and feel sensible of it,) far short of the apostolic church, in purity of religion, in being of one heart and one soul, and in that strength of love to Christ and His cause which would lead them to count everything else as loss and pollution compared with Christ, and being found in Him. There is much traditionalism still among us, much of an inclination to consult the flesh, and the world, and to seek that honor which cometh from men; but our great Immanuel is now sitting as a Refiner and purifier of silver, and is skillful and faithful to temper the fire so as to purge away the dross, and that only. Being thus in the crucible it is not a time for great rejoicing and lively frames, but one which calls to taking up the cross, and to the exercise of strong faith in our gracious Leader and Commander. May He increase our faith and love to Him.

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia Nov. 22, 1839 S. Trott

From: SIGNS of the TIMES

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs 173-181

CONCERNING ELECTION & CALLING.

BROTHER JEWETT: - The third subject which I proposed examining is that of Election & Calling. I connect these together in my examination, not because there is not a distinction between them; but because that though election is the going forth of God in his eternal purpose, and calling is a time act, yet the latter is but a making manifest the individuals embraced in the purpose of election, and is that alone by which the objects of God's electing love, can be known by us in time. Thus the two are connected together in the Scriptures, as in II Tim.1:9, "Who hath saved us; and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Here calling is according to the purpose of God, and is therefore a manifestation of it. So Jude in verse 1, "Sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." Thus also the blessing us with all spiritual blessings, is "according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world;" that is, in Christ Jesus. Eph.1:3,4. Taking the doctrine of election and calling thus in connection, we shall, I think, find them uniting to lead us to the conclusion, that the purpose of God in Election, has to do with both the headships, Christ's and Adam's; that the subjects of it were chosen in Christ as a head, and from Adam as a head. But being aware of the ground on which I stand in this discussion, I shall not leave these positions, without bringing forward Scriptural proofs and illustrations, nor perhaps without a passing notice of an opposing sentiment.

The proof that the elect were chosen in Christ, is at hand, "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world." Eph.1:4. This is not a choosing them into Christ, a taking them out of another head to put them into him as their Head. There was no other headship before him, In all things he has the preeminence; being he, who is before all things, and by whom all things consist, as he is "the head of the body, the church." Col.1:17,18. But if in that nature, in which we were created in Adam as rational beings, the elect were put into Christ as a head, either in their whole nature or their souls only, it is evident that Adam must have been first viewed as a head, and that Christ was afterward set up as a head of those chosen from the predestined Adam. And I cannot understand the views of many in any other light, than as involving such a degradation of Christ as a head. Thus Watts, in these lines,

"Christ be my first elect, he said, Then chose our souls in Christ our head," implies one of two sentiments either of which I am bound to reject as an error; namely, either that the elect were created without souls in Adam, their souls being created in Christ, and of course that the non-elect are without souls; or else, as before observed, the elect must have been first viewed in their relation to Adam and their souls afterwards transferred by election to the headship of Christ. The election in Christ must have reference to that life, in which the saints eternally existed in him; of which they are born, when born again, and by which they are manifested as his seed and the sons of God.

Christ is spoken of as the elect, the chosen of God, but certainly not as God, and therefore not as having in him that life which is the light of men, as bearing them and carrying them all the days of old, and being their dwelling place in all generations, before the mountains were brought forth, &c. Isa.63:9 & Ps.90:1,2. It is in reference to his being manifested in the flesh, to his humanity that he is spoken of as chosen; it is a part of his being in all things made like unto his brethren, (Heb.2:14,17,) that is as his brethren. The children were partakers of flesh and blood, "he also himself took part of the same," so as they in their humanity were chosen out of the family of Adam, he in his humanity was "one chosen out of the people." See Ps.89:19, compared with the following verses to 27. In Isa.4:2, when Christ is called God's elect, he is called God's servant, which shows, as does the whole connection, that he is there spoken of in reference to his manifestation in the flesh. See also in connection, Matt.12:15-21. These texts, I think, are frequently quoted and applied to Christ in reference to his Headship; I have so quoted them, and thought it a correct application, until looking at them in reference to this subject, when I saw my mistake.

The other branch of my position; namely, that the elect were chosen from the headship of Adam; that is, out of his posterity, is more opposed by some of our brethren. Elder Parker and others with him contend, that only the elect were created in Adam; of course they suppose, that God in saving a part only of mankind, is only making a distinction between his own good creation and the devil's progeny. They would thus explain away the Sovereignty of God in election. If there had been this very rational excuse for hiding these things from the wise and prudent and for revealing them unto babes, it is a wonder our Lord had not assigned this reason instead of resolving it altogether into the sovereign pleasure of God, as he did in saying, "Even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." Matt.11:25,26. One of the proofs, which they would draw from the Scripture in support of their position, is that Adam was made in the likeness of God, or as Paul explains it, "was the figure of him that was to come." Gen.5:1 & Rom.5:14. Hence they say, that as Christ in being set up had only the elect in him, so Adam in being created in his likeness, must have had only the elect created in him. But Christ was set up with his bride in him, in this respect also Adam was a figure of him, being created with his bride in him; therefore by the same rule by which they come to the other conclusion, Eve must have been the church, the Lamb's wife! But this theory of theirs is altogether a new one, that a figure or likeness must be the very essence of the thing prefigured. Carry this out through all the types of the former dispensation, and where would it lead us? Aaron in officiating in the priest's office was a type or figure of Christ, the blood therefore of bullocks and goats, which the presented must, according to this theory, have been the blood of Christ, the holy place, into which he entered, must have been heaven; and the twelve tribes of Israel, whose names he bore on his breast-plate and on his shoulders, must have been the very people represented by Christ. Such ideas of the figures of Scripture, in which natural and earthly things are made to represent spiritual and heavenly things, are preposterous. Adam truly was created in the likeness or as a figure of Christ. 1st. In being created male and female with Eve in him, as Christ was set up with his church and all its gifts and graces in him. 2nd. In being created with a posterity in him, as Christ eternally existed with the elect in him, in that life, of which they are born, as the sons of God. But whilst Adam was thus a figure of Christ, there is this vast difference between them, the one was of the earth, earthy; the other is the Lord from heaven. And so of their distinct posterities, that which is born of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

Again, Elder Parker and those with him, attempt to prove their position, that only the elect were created in Adam, by God's declaration to the woman, that he would greatly multiply her sorrow and her conception. Though God claims the prerogative to himself alone, to give this multiplied conception, not allowing the serpent any part in it, his words being, "I will greatly multiply," &c., yet as some writers on that side still persist in ascribing that multiplied conception, somehow, to the Serpent's influence, though reminded, again and again, that God asserts his own authority in the case, I will propose some queries for their consideration.

First, Did God's original purpose of peopling the earth include in it the existence of all who have lived or shall live upon it; or did it not? If it did not, is it not manifest that he has changed his purpose, and is therefore a changeable Being; and hence that the doctrine of predestination cannot be maintained? If God's eternal purpose did include the existence of all who have lived, was his declaration to the woman anything other, than that of carrying out of that purpose? If God did originally purpose the existence of all mankind, did he not in finishing the work of creation in six days, provide for their being brought into existence in the creation of Adam? If you deny this, is it not incumbent on you to show wherein he made such provision? Or will you say that he left his work unfinished? Again, as we have God's testimony, that Cain, who gave as full evidence, as any have given, of being a seed of the Serpent, came into existence through Adam's intercourse with Eve, and therefore must have been seminally in the loins of Adam, (Gen.4:1,) if then he was not originally created in Adam, must he not have been either an after production of God, or in some way communicated by the Serpent? In either case, is it not evident, that God did not make of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and that the Apostle, therefore, bore a wrong testimony in Acts 17:26? In a word, brethren, if you admit the truth of the testimony of Scripture, that the heavens and the earth were finished and all the host of them in six days, and that on the seventh day God ended his work, and in that day rested from all his work which God created and made and that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth," Gen.2:1-3, and Acts 17:26, must you not give up your notion of the non-elect's not being created in Adam, and of their not being represented by him in his one offence?

I now proceed to the proof that the elect are chosen out of the posterity of Adam. And 1st, We are told, that "by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners," and that "by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation;" &c.; further that "by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom.5:12,18,19. And so death passed, &c., is there not a meaning in this word so? Is it not equivalent to in that way, or by that means; that is, that by the means of sin's entering by one man, death has passed upon all men, &c.? The Apostle is clearly sustained in this by the history of the affair. God said unto Adam, in consequence of his transgression, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This together with the whole sentence which God passed upon him (Gen.3:17,19,) has been visited upon all the family of man, excepting Enoch and Elijah. Is it not then a plain revelation of Scripture, that the sentence of death, under which all the generations of men have returned to dust, was passed originally upon Adam?

And hence, that as the sentence of death, passed through Adam upon all mankind, and death only passes upon them, because they have sinned, is it not equally a manifest Scripture doctrine, that all the human family were made sinners through Adam's one offence, and therefore were represented by Adam as a head?

Now, if in the face of the above testimony any will persist in denying, that all on whom the sentence of death has passed, and who were therefore viewed as sinners, were represented by Adam as a head; is it not manifest, that they prefer human speculation to God's revelation, seeing that they can show no declaration from God that there was any other head, through whom any part of mankind were made sinners and were sentenced to death? Seeing then, that as far as God's revelation is received as a guide in the matter, it is so conclusively evident, that all who are sinners and who die, came under this condemnation to depravity and death in consequence of their connection with Adam, as a head; and as, from the same revelation, it is so evident, that the elect were chosen to salvation, and therefore were foreknown as sinners; it is clear that the elect are of the posterity of Adam. And further as it is equally evident that some die in their sins, and who therefore are not of the elect, but who as above showed must be of Adam's posterity, it is demonstrated, that the elect were chosen out of Adam's posterity; that is, that whilst some who were represented by Adam as a head, were chosen to salvation, others thus represented were passed by and left to die in their sins. That the elect were chosen to salvation, and were therefore viewed as sinners, see II Thes.2:13, "Because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation," &c., and I Pet.1:2, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."

In saying that God viewed the subjects of his Election as sinners, I do not wish to be understood as asserting, that the creation and fall of Adam and his posterity, was first in the purpose of God. But I say this, that God in predestinating his people to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, in the same eternal purpose, predetermined their existence in an earthly nature, and therefore their creation in an earthly and fallible head, and through that head, their being left to fall and to be brought under the power of sin or depravity, that they might be objects of salvation, and through their salvation be delivered from under the law and be raised to the freedom and all the privileges of sons and heirs of God. Which had the precedence in the purpose according to which they are saved, the choice of the individuals who were to be born of God, or the determination to leave Adam and his posterity to become sinners, God has not revealed, and is not important for us to know.

Corresponding with the above proven position, is the uniform revelation of God concerning his election. Thus Christ says to his disciples, John 15:19, "But because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world," &c. If by the world is here to be understood Adam's posterity as such, then of course their being chosen out of it shows, that some of that posterity were not chosen. Or make the world here to mean the Jewish nation, or what you please, the disciples being chosen out of this world clearly proves them to have been of it, and some of that world not to be chosen, or not of the elect. Again our Lord, speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation, that very people, to whom he said on another occasion, "Behold, your home is left unto you desolate," Matt.23:38, said, "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt.24:22. So that there was, or still is, an elect to come out of the chaff of that nation, that very chaff which in itself was to be burned with unquenchable fire. Matt.3:12. Hence as an elect is to come out of that valley of dry bones, that nation after being pursued for ages with this unquenchable fire, what other conclusion can we come to, than that the elect and the nonelect are, according to the flesh, all of one blood, of one people? Thus the Apostle in Romans, the 9th & 10th chapters, speaking of those Jews who were going about to establish their own righteousness, and who were cast away, speaks of them as his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh, as the seed of Abraham &c., and prays to God for them that they might be saved. Surely the Holy Ghost had never revealed to him anything of that distinction between the elect and non-elect which it is said has been discovered to Elder Parker; namely, that the elect were created of God in Adam, whilst the non-elect are the devil's progeny or were brought into existence through sin; or he would not so have lamented over the fall of that people. But again Paul instead of wishing to set aside the sovereignty of God in election, delights to hold it forth in its clearest light. He brings forward the strongest possible figure to illustrate it, and to show that the difference between the elect and non- elect, is only what the purpose of God according to election has made. He takes the case of Jacob and Esau, children not only of the same parents, but also of the same birth, and shows that the decision of God concerning them was made before the children had done either good or evil, and before they were born. Again he brings to view, as illustrating this subject, God's declaration to Moses, saying, "I will have mercy, on whom I will have mercy," &c. So also Rom.11:5-7, where he shows, that the remnant which were saved, was according to the election of Grace, not according to God's creation in Adam. And further says, "the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Paul thus makes the whole distinction to rest in the sovereignty of God in election; very different his view from the notion, that the distinction consisted in one part's being God's good creation and the other the serpent's seed.

If we look at the Calling of God, as presented to view in the Scriptures or manifested in experience, we shall find it to be not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, therefore not in the creating us in Adam in the garden. It also shows that God is no respecter of persons, pays no regard to any natural or fleshly distinction. Hence the hope brother Jewett, that you and I have of being called of God; for when we came to see ourselves, we saw no fleshly distinction between us and those who were still indulging in sin, excepting that we felt ourselves more vile and brutish than any man; and that we inherited nothing from Adam, but sin and corruption.

As was Abraham called out from his own country and his kindred, (see Heb.11:8, compared with Acts 7:3,) so are the elect all called by grace; instead of being called to cleave to their father Adam's house and his portion, they are called to forget their own people and their father's house. Psa. 45:10.

In conclusion, it appears evident that, according to the revelation given in the Scriptures, the elect were chosen in Christ, not in Adam; that the election runs through that life which they derive from Christ, and not through that earthly life which was created in Adam. But that, as for the greater display of the glory of God, in multiplying the enjoyments of this life, by its being communicated to many individuated and crested beings, it was his purpose to create those individuals in an earthly and fallible head Adam; so those individuals (the elect,) were of him chosen to salvation out of the mass of individuals, which he in infinite wisdom and goodness (however it may appear to us) purposed should proceed from his creation in Adam. These chosen individuals were from everlasting foreknown as being manifested in time, as members of Christ's body, by being born of that life that was set up in him, the head of it, and were thus loved of God from everlasting and preserved in Jesus Christ, not in Adam. Christ's Bride being thus viewed in him, as the fulness of him, and as formed in her distinct manifestation out of him – not as she was created in her members in Adam – as being spiritually his body, his flesh and his bones (being thus the antitype of Eve,) was without any spot in her, and a chaste virgin. See Eph.1:23, 5:30 & I Cor.12:12; also Song 4:7.

Thus the priests under the Law, more fully to typify Christ, might marry only a virgin. Lev.21:7,13,14. But the individuals of Adam's posterity who were thus predestinated to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, viewed in their relation to Adam, had to be redeemed and justified from the demands of the law, through Christ's being made under the law and a curse for them.

I think I have succeeded in showing, that according to Scripture revelation the elect have stood related to two distinct heads; that from the one head, Adam, they have derived nothing but what is common to all mankind; namely, individuality, depravity and death; that from the other head, Christ, they have derived everything, which distinguishes them from others. Until therefore our Western brethren can show us from the same authenticated revelation of God, to the contrary, they surely must be willing to abandon their notion that the distinction between the elect and non-elect, originated or exists in God's creation in Adam, instead of existing in his everlasting love and sovereign purpose according to election in Christ Jesus.

Yours, &c., S. TROTT. January, 1844.

CONCERNING HOLINESS.

Whether those of our brethren, who in supporting their different systems, speak so much of the holiness of heaven, as though it afforded an unanswerable argument against the possibility of angels having sinned, do actually believe that there is a certain region, a mere locality, within the bounds of God's Creation, which is so essentially holy that sin cannot enter its bounds; or whether they only use it as a subterfuge, by which to confound their opponents, I cannot say. But certain I am, that the scriptural representation of Holiness affords no ground for any such argument, and that the idea is equally absurd with the notion, that there is a certain space, a bottomless pit, somewhere of course beyond God's existence, which is essentially a fountain of evil and spontaneously producing evil spirits! Such ideas of sin and holiness, arising from mere localities, set aside everything like a moral distinction between them, and make them mere qualities affixed by fate. This doctrine transfers the fountain of holiness from God to the mere locality, called heaven; and carried out it would lead to the conclusion, that God is holy because he inhabits heaven, and that Satan is sinful because he came from the bottomless pit, or hell. Of course there would be no virtue in the one, nor crime in the other.

In seeking after the Scriptural representation of holiness, we must bear in mind, that in our translation of the Bible, different words are used in relation to this subject. Thus, to convey the idea of making or becoming holy, as there is no English verb, to holify, the translators had to use the verb to sanctify; as in the text, "Both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified, are all of one," &c. The idea is, both he that maketh holy and they who are holy, &c. "Holy brethren" is the same as sanctified brethren, and saints are holy or sanctified persons &c. So in the Old Testament, the Hebrew word KADESH in its various formations is translated holy, holiness, to sanctify, sanctuary, saints &c.

In the use of these terms in the Scriptures we find them applied to God, the Father, the Son and the Spirit, to angels, to believers, to national Israel, to the priests as such and to their garments, to the tabernacle and temple, and to the vessels and apartments thereof &c. From this diversified use of these terms, we must discover, that they are used in relation to an external and an internal holiness, a ceremonial or typical and a spiritual holiness. Now if any external holiness, which can be attached to places, persons or things, could effectually bar sin, (and it is absurd to speak of internal or spiritual holiness as if belonging to heaven itself, as a locality;) then surely Nadab and Abihu could not have sinned as they did in offering strange fire before the Lord.

Lev.10:1. They had just been consecrated to the holy priesthood, as Moses had been commanded to sanctify them as priests to the Lord, and as God had said he would sanctify them, or make them holy, to the priest's office (Ex.28:41 & 29:44;) they were clothed with the holy garments and had the holy anointing oil upon them; (see Ex.30:25, Lev.8:30 & 10:7;) and they were in the holy place before the ark of the Testimony; yet they there conceived of offering strange fire before the Lord, and there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them! What greater holiness could belong to any mere locality, than was concentrated here? The Lord had manifested his presence in it by his glory filling it, when the tabernacle was reared, and again by consuming the sacrifice of Aaron and his sons; Ex.40:34,35 & Lev.9:24. It may be said, that SIN was then already in the world, and not so when the angels are supposed to have sinned. But it has been showed, that wherever created, living intelligences are, if left of God to themselves, they will think and act for themselves with a special reference to their own individualities. Even believers are not always restrained from the acting out their old nature and wounding their own consciences; though called to be saints and have formed in them a new man, created in righteousness and true holiness.

The primary idea of the Hebrew word, rendered holy, holiness, &c., is to set apart, to separate &c.; not that to be holy we must live as isolated beings, only to and for ourselves, but on the contrary, because that, to be holy, since sin has entered into the world, we must be separated from the world and from its spirit and principles. So in things and persons being sanctified, that is externally, they were set apart to be employed only in the service of God, according to his appointments; and thus ceremonially were taught the doctrine, that to be spiritually holy we must be entirely subject to God's will as the alone standard of true holiness.

Persons sanctify the Lord, not in communicating any holiness to him, as He does to us; but in setting him apart in our hearts and by our acts, as the supreme source of all authority; the one object of our love, trust and reverence, as the fountain of all good &c. Thus Nadab and Abihu did not sanctify the Lord, when they offered strange fire, nor Saul when he reserved of the cattle, because they set up their wills, instead of implicitly being subject to God's declared will. Thus Moses and Aaron did not sanctify the Lord in saying, "Must we draw water out of this rock," instead of ascribing to God's goodness and power the flowing of the water. So missionists do not sanctify the Lord, in resorting to their own plans, instead of trusting in the Lord to accomplish his own purpose of grace by his own appointments; and so of Arminians in depending on their own exertions, instead of coming empty to the Lord to receive out of that fulness that is in Him. And men generally do not sanctify Him, in "loving the creature more than the Creator."

As God's will is the standard of our holiness, so he is the pattern of it. Hence the exhortation, "but as he who hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy." I Pet.1:15,16. In all the manifestation which God has made of himself in the works of creation, providence and redemption, there is nothing of selfishness in it, nothing which He needed for himself, to increase his glory or happiness; but everything is for the sake of communicating happiness or good to others. Hence the holiness of the Law in requiring, that "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." God being the supreme good and the source of all good, to love the greatest good, the good of the whole, we must love God; and to be like God we must love our neighbor as ourselves and be as desirous of doing him good and only good, as of doing good to ourselves. Thus the law, if man could of himself have obeyed it, though it would have produced perfect harmony and peace in the world, would have been a constant restraint upon man's selfishness and individuality, and of course kept him in bondage. But as already remarked, I cannot think, that anything short of the communication of a distinct principle of holiness from God to angels and to men, could have enabled them so to overcome their individuality of will and desire, as to lose that individuality of feeling in a desire to live to the good of the whole. But in the glorious purpose of salvation it is provided for, that saints should be holy in heart by their deriving a new life from Christ in the heavenly birth. This life as flowing from Christ as its Head, and not being an individual creation, but being Christ formed in them, and being ONE SPIRIT in all the saints as they are ONE BODY, is essentially holy, or is the love of God instead of individual love. And so far as this love is brought into exercise in us by the indwelling Spirit of truth, we feel our self-love lost in love to God, and our selfgratification lost in the desire to glorify and obey God, and our individuality lost in feeling that WE ARE NOT OUR OWN and in a desire to feel and act as members of one body with our brethren; to live for the cause of Christ and for the good of others, and to esteem others better than ourselves. And were it not for the new creature's being "made subject to vanity," in having still to carry about our old man and its corruptions, we should reflect fully the image of Christ. Thus also the angels are holy, as I understand it, not only from their being "set apart" in election; but also from the love of God or a principle of holiness being communicated to them, by which their standing is confirmed in Christ, as the Head of all principality and power and HEAD OVER ALL THINGS TO THE CHURCH.

This view of holiness is very different from the Hopkinsian doctrine of "disinterested benevolence;" for that by being placed upon law grounds and being made a condition of salvation is absolute

One point more; ceremonial uncleannesses are often referred to in the Scriptures, and to cleanse from them was to sanctify. This may be thought not to correspond with the view I have taken of holiness. But I think it does; those uncleannesses being naturally loathsome, were well calculated to show how odious self-indulgences in all their various shapes are to God and to the new man of the believer; and as nothing but cleansing could remove the one, so nothing but an application of the blood of Jesus, can give peace to the believer. As frequent as were the occasions for ceremonial ablution or cleansing, more abundant are the occasions the believer has for applying to the blood of Christ. What a blessed privilege, that we have such an efficacious pool ready troubled, whenever faith is at hand to put us in; and such an Advocate we have with the Father in all our straits, whose intercession is all-prevalent, however impotent we may feel ourselves to be.

May the Lord "sanctify us wholly," that both our lives and our consciences may be freed from the pollution of sin.

The other subjects mentioned, are left for a future time. Yours,

&c., S. TROTT. Dec. 21st, 1843.

CONCERNING SIN.

BROTHER JEWETT: - In reading certain communications on subjects which have been, for some time past, agitated in Old School periodicals, I have been struck with the diversity of opinion there appears to be on several general, leading principles. Hence the difference about sin, Satan &c. The principles to which I refer, and which it is my design to examine, may be embraced in the following heads: 1st Sin, 2nd Holiness, 3rd Election and Calling, 4th The ground of Christ's glory as a Savior. These subjects would require, fully to illustrate them, the ample pages of a volume, instead of a few columns in a periodical; I shall of course but glance at them in these communications; though I may give a sketch of what I understand the Scriptures to reveal concerning them.

First: Sin. What is sin? Will the brethren allow the Scriptures to answer this enquiry? If so, the decision is made, that "sin is the transgression of the law." I John 3:4. Not to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy mind; and not to love thy neighbor as thyself. Matt. 22:37-39. The force of law must arise from obligation to obey. This obligation may arise spontaneously from the nature of things, or it may spring from either voluntary or forced subjection, as in different governments. Our obligation to obey God arises naturally from our relations to him as our Creator, and from what he is in himself. Thus God in giving the law from Sinai, declares his right to enforce it upon Israel, as resting on his having brought them out of the land of Egypt, &c. Exod.20:2. And in giving the covenant of circumcision to Abraham, he required subjection to it on the ground of what he is, "the Almighty God." Gen.17:1. So the obligation of Adam and of all his posterity to obey whatever law God was pleased to prescribe, arose from God's having brought them into existence, and is continued, by his still sustaining in existence, as well as from his being what he is. Hence in reference to the existence of sin in the world, it is evident, that to its existence there should be in existence creatures capable of intelligent obedience, having a law given them, founded upon their obligation to obey and prescribing the test of their subjection; "for where no law is, there is no transgression," and "sin is not imputed, when there is no law." See Rom.4:15 & 5:13. God's creating such intellective beings, and giving them a good law with the certain knowledge that they would by transgressing it become sinners, no more makes God the Author of sin or the fountain, whence it flowed, than would his creating such beings with the knowledge that there existed a wicked spirit, his opposite, which would certainly lead them into transgression; nor that Christ's setting up his kingdom in the world with the knowledge, that it would be the occasion of the enemy's sowing tares, makes him the Author of those delusions and persecutions, with which Antichrist has deluged the world and is overflowing the church even to the neck.

Many seem to think, that sin could not have gotten into the world by the good creation of God, unless either God created it, or it had a previous self-existence. These suppositions are contradictory to the testimony of Scripture; they imply, that there may be transgression and sin be imputed, where there is no Law. This notion of sin's being an existence by itself, though entertained by good and understanding brethren, is a manifest absurdity. Can we suppose the existence of theft or any other crime without supposing the existence of the perpetrator of such crime? This absurdity of supposing, that sin may exist independently of the existence of a sinner, is not confined to the system of Elder Parker; it is involved with equal fulness in the idea, that God created sin, or brought it into existence in his creation of intelligent beings. If God brought sin into existence, He must have been the first transgressor, as sin is a transgression of the law; an inference they would shudder at. The Fullerite notion of Christ's having made an atonement for sin abstractly, implies its having an existence distinct from the sinner, equally with Elder Parker's views; and therefore shows the two systems to be much nigher akin, than their respective advocates have supposed.

This notion of sin's having an existence antecedent to the transgression of Adam, or of the first transgressor, whether angel or man, and its previous existence being necessary to account for the creatures of God becoming transgressors, implies that man was not, and that angels could not have been, voluntary actors in first transgressing; but must have been acted upon; according to one, man was subjected to it by the creating hand of God, according to others, he was acted upon by the self existent spirit of wickedness. If this had been the case, and man in his original transgression, was not in circumstances to choose his course, with a view to the consequences, and to act voluntarily, he could have been no more justly accountable for the act, than would be your flock of sheep for trespassing on your field of grain, being let in by an enemy or driven in by yourself. God in making man a living soul, must have given a mind, active in all those powers belonging to the soul, such as those of reflecting, judging, choosing and rejoicing. And I must confess, that for myself, whatever others may be able to do, I cannot conceive of man's being thus brought into existence, as a distinct being, finding himself possessed of a mind to choose or reject for himself, and having individual feelings to gratify, without considering him liable, without any influence from without being exerted upon him, to prefer the gratification of his own will and choice even to that of his Maker's will, unless God, who alone is the fountain of holiness, has been pleased to communicate to him such a holy influence, as would lead him to prefer subjection to the will of God, to living to and for himself, as we see manifested in the holy Jesus, when he said to his Father, "Not my will, but thine, be done." Such communication of a principle of holiness, to man, God was under no obligation to make, in addition to having created him an intellectual, upright being. That man was thus liable to choose to live to himself and for himself, rather than live as the creature of God and the subject of his government, is evident from God having put him under the prohibition of a special command. On the other hand, without such prohibition there had been no transgression. The wise man evidently had so found the thing concerning man's sin, when he said, "Lo, this only have I found that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Eccl. 7:29. There is a reference here manifestly made to what is said in Gen.5:1,2, "In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God created he them," &c. So here God made man upright; but they have &c. God hath made man upright, of course he did not create in him any bias to sin; and they sought out many inventions, consequently it was their own act, the act of the male and female, in seeking out and doing what God had not commanded, but what they chose for themselves. So also says the apostle, "As by one man sin entered into the world." Rom.5:12. The advocates of the existence of sin as God's eternal opposite, have tried to make something out of the expression by one man, as though sin came into the world from some other source than man's transgression. If, as I contend, it was man's voluntary transgression that entailed sin upon the world of the human family, I know not what more definite expression to convey that idea the apostle could have used. But if sin was infused into the woman by the serpent, and she communicated it to the man as the cause of his transgressing, then it was by one serpent, not by one man, that sin entered into the world, whether that serpent was a created devil, or a self-existent devil.

What has been said of man's liability to choose his own course, or according to the wise man, to seek out inventions, may with equal propriety be said of angelic spirits, such as were not elected to be holy, only that we know not decidedly what particular command they were placed under as a test of their subjection to God, nor what occasion was given them to show a preference for their own choice over a subjection to God's will, or whether for this they needed such an occasion, as was presented to Adam in Eve's having been deceived, which at once tested whether he loved God best, or his own flesh as manifested in Eve. We however know of the angels, that some of them "kept not their first estate," the condition in which God created them, and which of course was that of uprightness; but left their own habitation, of course the one which God had especially assigned to them; for they could have had no claim to it, unless God had given it, unless we limit the Omnipresence of God! Hence we discover a choosing for themselves and a disobedience to God's appointment and a consequent entailing upon themselves chains of darkness, instead of light; and this is all that is necessary, to show that angels sinned and what angels as well as men are, left to themselves.

But it may be said, that man is represented as being under the reign and power of sin, which does not comport with the idea of his bringing sin into the world by a free and voluntary act of his own. Herein is where I think brethren, losing sight of Scriptural testimony upon the point, have strangely confounded things which are importantly distinct; namely, the introduction of sin into the world, and the infliction of the penalty of a death in trespasses and sins upon Adam and his posterity, in consequence of his revolting against the government of God by eating the forbidden fruit. I have already showed, I think conclusively from the testimony of the Scriptures, that "Sin is the transgression of the law," that sin could have no existence, had it not been that God pleased to create rational, or intellectual beings, &c., to prescribe to them a law or command, as a test of subjection. But the creating man and creating him in uprightness, unswerved, and prescribing to him, as a test of his subjection, a command that was holy, just and good, is one thing, and was an act of God's goodness and holiness; and God's inflicting upon Adam and his posterity in him the penalty, that was annexed to the command, the penalty of death, or total depravity, is another thing, it is an act of God's righteous judgment. So man's standing as he came from the hand of his Creator upright, in a state that was good is one thing; and his having fallen by voluntary transgression, and being justly condemned to a state of depravity, or subjection to the reign and power of sin, is another thing. And thus the scriptures, I think, clearly represent the case, that man's being under the dominion of sin or in a state of depravity, banished from the tree of life, was not the act of God's creating goodness, nor of Satan's power to mar God's good creation beyond himself; but was the act of God's just sentence of condemnation for transgression. The apostle speaks of death's reigning by one man's offence and of judgment coming upon all men to condemnation. What was this condemnation? Certainly not to the state of the second death in everlasting punishment, for then all men had been in that state; but to a state of death in sin, of subjection to its power.

Thus the Apostle evidently explains it, in the following verse by the use of different words, when he says, "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners," thus clearly and plainly showing that it was not by God's creating power, nor by Satan's infusing himself into them, that the many were made sinners, but by "one man;" that is, Adam's "disobedience," being the infliction of the penalty of the command. See Rom.5:17-19.

Thus Adam was made, in the day that God created him, in the likeness of God; that is, a correct figure of Christ, with his bride in him and as the head of his posterity. If Adam's act of disobedience, in which he represented the many, even all his posterity, had not been voluntary, the Law in justice could not have taken cognizance of it, and the many would not have been "made sinners;" neither would it have corresponded to Christ's voluntary act of obedience by which many, even all his posterity, were made righteous.

Yours, &c., S. TROTT. Dec. 21st, 1843.

CORRESPONDENCE

Fairfax Co., Va., Nov. 11, 1859.

Dear Sister Harriet: – Your interesting letter of Sept. 15th, came to hand in due time, but I have been much from home since, and have really had no time to attend to correspondence. Indeed, owing to infirmities of mind incident to age, writing has become a real task to me. When I get home after my journeys I feel more like resting or being composed, than using that exertion of mind which is necessary to writing.

You address me as father, and then ask my views upon the propriety of calling any man father. I am not partial to the term in addressing any man, or in being addressed by others. There is certainly a certain sense in which we should call no man father, or our Lord would not have forbidden it. In the very sense in which I understand him to forbid it, popular preachers in every age have been ambitious in being called father. This has tended to render my mind averse to the use of the term, excepting with relation to natural parentage, but the Scriptures justify the use of the term with respect to age, as 1 John ii. 13, 14, and as perhaps in the case you quote from 1 Cor. iv., where it is used to denote the persons having been instrumental in conveying gospel truth first to our mind, but when, by the use of the term, we would acknowledge any person or thing, such as Sunday Schools, Tracts or other things, as that which produced in us spiritual life and light, we entirely transgress our Lord's instruction, and contradict the truth of the case. For if we have over been begotten again, begotten to a spiritual existence, our God sovereignly and independently has done it, and not any preacher. Again, if we receive and rest upon anything as religious truth, because any man has taught it, and not because we have an internal evidence that it is God's revealed truth, we acknowledge that man as our father, or the father of such truth, or rather sentiment, and thus go contrary to our Lord's instruction.

Still further, our Lord's instruction upon this point was designed to guard his disciples from looking to men, or to any man, for spiritual instruction, instead of looking to God alone, that they might be taught of him. When God teaches us, though he may make man instrumental in conveying to us the truth taught, we shall receive it, not as the word of man, but as the word of God, and shall thus rest upon it as God's truth, feeling that God has enlightened our minds to know the truth.

You complain of feeling very sinful in all your ways, and express fears on this account that you may have been deceived. If you did not feel, and thus know your entire sinfulness, you might well doubt your having been taught or enlightened of God. We know from God's word that we are altogether depraved, that the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, and if therefore God has ever taught us the knowledge of ourselves, we shall not only know this to be the truth in theory, but we shall also feel it to be so. Where there is life there is feeling, as well spiritually as naturally. If there is anything good or lovely in us, it is the spiritual man or Christ in us, and not the old or natural man changed. Love to God, love to his people and cause, love to the truth, and a desire to be holy, and live to God, these things are good, as well as faith in Christ. And it is our having this knowledge of God, and his love shed abroad in our heart, that makes us truly feel our sinfulness, and loathe it. Hence it is that we have no confidence in ourselves, nor in our doings, and that we come to trust alone in Christ for acceptance with God. These are evidences to others, and ought to be to ourselves, that we are born of God, and are therefore his children.

There are thousands of religionists about us, whose religious knowledge is derived altogether from men and from books, and who look to these to be taught, these are therefore the disciples of men, and may well call men their fathers. These do not feel themselves to be sinful and vile, but have a good deal of confidence in themselves, and in their own doings, and think that they are better and more holy than others, who do not say their prayers, &c.

There is something mysterious in the ways of God toward your family, that your grandmother, mother and yourself, should be Old School Baptists, and yet have been located so far away from all with whom you can have fellowship. It must be that God had some use for witnesses to the truth there, either for condemnation, or for good to those around you, or he would not in his providence have placed you thus far from your brethren. It is at any rate a witness to the sovereignty of God's grace, that he can by his grace constrain whom he will to profess and to contend for the truth, how much soever alone they may be in their faith, and how much soever they may be surrounded with opposition. Surely it may be said, "what hath God wrought," in keeping your grandmother, and mother, in the faith, and in bringing you into it, under the circumstances in which you all have been placed. Had you followed the leadings of nature, or been influenced by worldly considerations, you would have embraced some of the systems of religion around you, and found plausible cause for it, rather than to have separated yourselves from all the influential and learned people around you. So God's placing you in this isolated condition, affords to you and to others, a strong testimony that your profession is not only sincere, but that you have been constrained by a higher influence than that of self, or the world, and that the love of God must have constrained you.

But I will close. Mrs. Trott wishes to be remembered to you. My love to you and the whole family. "Write again when you feel like it.

Yours, SAMUEL TROTT.

Signs Of The Times Volume 68, No. 15. AUGUST 1, 1900.

Correspondence

Middletown, N. Y., Dec. 27, 1880.

The following letter from our late venerable brother, Elder Trott, written to brother John Thorne, of Baltimore, when he was unsettled as to his duty in uniting with the church, contains of suggestions which may be useful to others in the same condition; therefore I have obtained the consent of brother Thorne to allow it to be published in the SIGNS. I am sure that very many readers will feel the revival of enduring memories that the sight of that once familiar name, as well as receive valuable instruction from the thoughts presented.

WM. L. BEEBE.

ESTEEMED FRIEND THORNE: - Your favor of the 9th inst. was yesterday received with pleasure, for I was glad to hear from you concerning your further exercises. I have been quite unwell for week or two from the cold, so much so that it is quite doubtful whether I get on to Black Rock in February; and therefore, lest I should not see you soon, I have concluded to write you in answer. It seems you have found that the Canaanites and Amalekites are still in the land. Yes, and the Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation; so that he must expect the warfare to continue. But having an altar with Jehovah-nissi (the Lord my Banner) written on it, you have nothing to fear. See Exodus xvii. 15, 16. I conclude from the few remarks you make about Sunday schools, and the like, that you are satisfied that human efforts can not make spiritual children, that to be spiritual they must be born of the Spirit, "Born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." In reference to missions, that if any feels, that is, has by faith the covenant in himself that the Lord has called him to go and preach to the destitute, live and go, and the Lord will prosper him; and let others whose hearts the Lord opens, by giving them to have fellowship for his call to the work, contribute to his wants as they would to him who preaches to them, and thus on the subject have one purse; this was apostolic practice, and will undoubtedly be the practice again among the saints when the Lord's time comes to send his gospel among the heathen. This is very different from men's selecting fields and sending missionaries there without knowing or asking whether the Lord has any people there, then to be gathered in, as is the mission plan. So that upon all these points you are a pretty correct Old School Baptist.

Now, dear friend, I come to the important inquiry which you have confidingly made of me, Had I better wait, or come out at once? I might answer you in a few words, and correctly, by referring you to the text, Eccles. ix. 10, "Whenever the hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," which you quoted to me, and gave your views on it, that is, Whatsoever you find pointed out in the word as your duty to do, do it with you might; and doing with your might, I should say would be doing it in the strength of the Lord, who is told you that his gray shall be sufficient for you. But I prefer enlarging a little on the subject. First. It certainly is the duty, according to the New Testament, for the disciples of Christ, or those taught of God, to be connected with his church. The more I have reflected on your exercises as she related them to me, the more I am satisfied that God has been teaching you, but in a way peculiar by displaying his own sovereignty; and that he had commenced his dealings with few at the time of your first exercises when you join the church. You're being left to wander in the desert of skepticism so long is no worse, as I can see, than for others to try, for the same length of time, to produce salvation from the sterile, barren Mount Sinai.

There appears to me to have been something of God's control in your skepticism, for was in itself consistent as I understand you, that you came to the conclusion to believe nothing that you did not for yourself know the truth of. In the affairs of this world such a position could not stand; it would be derangement if carried out, for we are dependent one on another for our knowledge; so that the most we know, we know from the teachings of others. But when we come to that spiritual religion which is of God it is very different; that can only be known by revelation from God. God has hid these things from the wise and prudent and has revealed them unto babes. Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Hence all the reasonings and searchings of men by human reason and human teaching to find out God and the truths of his religion, lead but into labyrinths of folly, for God has made foolish the wisdom of this world. Hence, the conclusion you was led to from the fact of God's having revealed himself to you as the one God in Christ, viz., that you was a child, was correctly drawn. You evidently was led to know your own ignorance and entire dependence on God to teach you. But from the relation ye first gave me, I was in doubt whether you had been fully led to a sense of your just condemnation as a transgressor of the laws of God, and to a corresponding view of the blood of Christ as that which alone with cleanse you from your sins, and be the ground of your acceptance with God. Hence I thought probably there was a lesson or two more necessary for you to learn in the school of Christ before you would be properly fitted as a member of the church of Christ; for the church is rightly composed of those who know themselves to be sinners saved by grace, if saved it all, and that alone to the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. When, therefore, you suggested keeping still a while, I rather recommended it. But from some questions I afterwards asked you, and from further reflections in the way you had been led, I must conclude that in substance you had been led to know your guilt and just condemnation as a sinner, and that alone through the atonement of Christ you can have hope of salvation. If such is the case, as I think it must be, there can be no advantage gained, nor is there in the scriptural ground for your waiting longer, however I would advise you to go before the church at their next meeting, and tell them what the Lord has taught you.

There's one more on which I think of offering a few remarks, though perhaps they may appear unnecessary in me. You have once been baptized, and baptized by a proper gospel administrator, your father; hence there could be no call for your being again baptized on that ground on which we require those have been baptized in the New School churches to begin baptized; that is, on the ground of their not having been baptized by a properly authorized administrator. It is probable the Ebenezer church would not require you to be baptized again in order to be received among them. Neither should I insist on it if I were with them, the church being satisfied, and you being satisfied for yourself that you have complied with the gospel requisition on this head, viz., To believe and be baptized; that is, believing first. But my opinion is, that to be strictly conformed to

New Testament order, it would be proper you should begin baptized, and I mention it for your reflection, hoping that he on whom to have been depending for direction, made direct you on this point to your satisfaction, if your mind is not satisfied about it. To constitute gospel baptism, there is required immersion in water; and administrator, one who has been called of God and fellowshiped by the church as a gospel minister; and as a candidate, one who believes in the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart. You were immersed by your father, and he was undoubtedly a gospel administrator, that his being a gospel administrator could no more make you a proper gospel subject, without faith, than a gospel subject could make a gospel administrator out of a man-made preacher. But there is another view to be taken of the subject and which I am not prepared to say is not the correct one; I think it probably is; for I know not how far a person may backslide, nor how along, and yet be a subject of grace; that is, you may have been a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ at the time you was baptized; that is, had had such a revelation of Christ made to you as the way of salvation, that you was enabled to rest on his blood alone for pardon in cleansing. If that be the case, there can be no ground for your been baptized again. All that can be required is for you to relate to the church your former experience, and shall them from your recent exercises that the Lord has healed your backsliding, and giving you repentance for them, for them to receive you into membership. May the Lord direct you to that which shall be your peace and establishment in the truth and consolations of the gospel, is my prayer for Christ's sake.

S. Trott.

Signs of the Times Volume 49, No. 2. January 15, 1881

For the Signs of the Times.

Depravity And Sin

BROTHER BEEBE: – I see, in the Signs and Advocate, for April 1, 1846, that brother Guice proposes certain questions to me concerning some items contained in a former communication of mine. He says he proposes them not for the purpose of entering into controversy. But if he has views differing from mine on the points embraced in his inquiries, why not give them and let them be discussed. Bitter controversy is not desirable, but brotherly discussion may be useful.

His first question relates to the idea which I advanced that our nature is depraved; is depravity itself, an idea which I still full believe. He asks, "Can human nature undergo any change?" Again, "If so, when such change is, or was effected, would the character on whom such change was effected be in possession of human nature?" In answer to these enquiries I reply that it is said, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Ecc. 7:29. I presume that brother Guice will admit, that so far, and so long as man acted in that state of uprightness, he would act uprightly; but that this uprightness was not inherent in him, so as to be the distinctive and established nature of men; but on the contrary, he was liable, being left to himself, to depart from that uprightness in which he was made. His nature then was that of a fallible, dependent creature, liable to depart from his state of rectitude, when left to himself, but at the same time having no bias inherent, no natural leaning to transgression, as the idea of uprightness implies. While in this state of uprightness, I presume he was not a subject of wrath. Now, Paul writing to the Ephesian brethren, and including himself with them, or rather, including both Jews and Gentiles, says, "Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past, in the lusts of the flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath even as others." Eph. ii. 3. It appears evident to me that they who by nature are children of wrath, must be by nature depraved or sinful. Now the inquiry returns, "Was there any change in the nature of man? I know of no other change than this, that from a state of uprightness, without any natural or fixed laws establishing him in that state, he became in consequence of transgression, fixed unalterably as death does fix, beyond the control of all but God, in trespasses and sins; or, if you please, in depravity. "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Eph. ii. 1. Now the Apostle calls this subjugation to wrath, nature, and so it is nature; for it is nature that everything should produce its like, that the stream should partake of the qualities of its fountain; and hence, the original fountain or head of the whole human family, as such, being established in trespasses and sins, or depravity, or alienation from God, or whatever you may call it, this depravity became the law under which all the human family exists naturally. So David, who, for all we know was brought into existence according to the same law of nature as others, says, "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." Ps. li. 5.

One remark more on this point. This fixed trait of man, of this natural depravity was established by the God of nature, not in the exercise of his creating power, but in the exercise of his sovereignty as the ruler of the world, in inflicting a righteous penalty for transgression; so says Paul, "As by the offense of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation." And, "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners." Rom. v. 18 & 19. Again; brother Guice, in view of my remark, that in regeneration there is no change in nature, asks, "If nature is depraved, would it not be necessary for it to be changed in regeneration?" If the purpose of God in Christ had been to reinstate men in the state in which Adam was created, then instead of being born again, born of the Spirit, there would have been a necessity, and only that, of their natures being changed from its corruptible state to its original upright state and perhaps a being confirmed in uprightness. But such is not the purpose at all. God having predestinated his chosen people, to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, he has prepared for them an inheritance suiting their relation to him in Christ Jesus, who is the Lord from heaven, and not of the earth, earthy. Therefore, in order for their being manifested in such relation, and being prepared for the enjoyment of such inheritance, a being born again of the flesh, and upright Adam being formed anew in them, does not meet the case; but they must derive a distinct existence direct from Christ, be born of the Spirit and have Christ, and not Adam, formed in them. It is true, that as it is entrusted to Christ to save his people wholly from their sins, and to present them faultless before the throne of his glory, it will be incumbent on him, ultimately to change their bodies from corruption to incorruption, and from natural to spiritual bodies. Yet as it is not the pleasure of God to translate his children immediately as they are regenerated, to their heavenly glory, but that many of them should for a season remain in the world, as witness of the power of Jesus to save, so as adapted to their existence in the world, and to their worldly relations, he leaves them in possession of their earthly nature unchanged. And thus not only are they capacitated for holding familiar intercourse with the world, but also by the workings of the two natures in them, the Spirit and the flesh, Christ and Adam, they and their brethren may have the clear evidence, that the change they have experienced is not a mere reformation, or change from their natural propensities, but that they have a new and spiritual nature formed in them, distinct from, and in opposition to, their old nature, and therefore that they are born of God.

I now pass to brother Guice's last inquiry, as being intimately connected with the above; namely, "Whether John was not deceived when he said, Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born of God." I John iii. 9. Differing some from brother Guice's quotation. John certainly was not deceived.

But others I think have been frequently mistaken in their understanding of this text, when they have inferred from it that if a person is born of God he is divested of all depravity and propensity to sin. An idea which is calculated to sink every child of grace who receives it, into despondency. John evidently speaks of that which is born of God, the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness; not of the *old man*which remains corrupt according to the deceitful lusts. See Eph. iv. 22 & 24. But as an illustration of this subject, and of the fact that the new creature is made subject to vanity, not willingly; and that this therefore is the creature intended, (Rom. viii. 20,) I will notice Paul's own experience in the matter. That Paul was born of God, and was therefore a new creature, I presume brother Guice will admit. Hear his complaint of himself! "For I know that in me, (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." What a perfect riddle this must be to a person who believes that nature is changed in regeneration, or that the nature of man is not depraved! Is not sin depravity? And if sin dwelled, made its home in Paul, was he not depraved?

But it certainly was not that I that would do good that was depraved, not that which was born of God, but the I that did that he would not, the sin that dwelled in him, the flesh, the me in whom dwelleth no good thing, that was depraved, and which of course must be his old nature, that which was born of the flesh. He goes on to say, "I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man. But I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." He concludes this declaration of his experience with saying, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin." Rom. vii. 18-25.

What was this law that was in his members, in his flesh, this law of sin, but the law of his nature? It was not the law of God which he served with his mind, nor the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." - Rom. viii. 2. With the mind I myself serve the law of God. Is not this as strong as John's assertion, "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not?" And yet Paul says in the next breath, what evidently amounts to this, "But with the flesh I serve the law of sin." Thus making this his act too. So there were two I's, two Pauls in this one person; Paul who was born of God, and Paul or Saul who was born of a Jew. Was not this being brought into captivity to the law of sin, this doing that he would not, this not finding how to perform that which is good, by the new creature, the regenerated Paul, a being made subject to vanity, to that which is void of good? And Paul's own testimony is, that it was not willingly that he was thus subject to the law of sin. As was Paul's experience in the case, so is the experience of all the children of God, if I know anything about it. It is no wonder then that the whole creation (in Christ Jesus) including the Apostles who had the first fruits of the Spirit, groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; waiting for the adoption; to wit, the redemption of our body, when they also shall be changed into the likeness of the glorified body of Jesus. See Rom. viii. 20-23.

I will now return to brother Guice's other inquiry. I having represented the sin which doth so easily beset us (Heb. xii. 1,) as being unbelief, he asks, "If the absence of faith is unbelief; and if so, and unbelief is sin, would not God's having created man without faith be equivalent to his being created a sinner?" - By faith, I presume brother Guice intends that faith which is the gift of God, and by which we receive and rely on Christ crucified as our whole salvation. I am not prepared to say that the absence of this faith is not in some instances intended by the term unbelief. But I am prepared to say that if that were the only sense in which unbelief is spoken of in the Scriptures, I could by no means consent to the idea that unbelief is sin. Sin is the transgression of the law. The law did not require of Adam in his original creation to believe in Christ as his righteousness and salvation, but it required him so to love and obey God as not to be a transgressor of the law, and therefore as not to be a subject for salvation, nor for having the righteousness of Christ imputed. Consequently, a want of this faith cannot be a transgression of the law. But there is an unbelief spoken of in the Scriptures which, according to my understanding thereof, is sinful. I will notice some instances. In I John v. 10, we read, "He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son." Here the faith in Christ which is connected with salvation, is expressed by a believing on the Son of God; the other belief is spoken of as simply a believing God, a believing the record, &c. thus making a manifest difference between the two. The same marked difference is observed in John iii. 36. Certainly that unbelief, or not believing, which makes God a liar, must be sinful. Do any ask how this unbelief can be a transgression of the law? I reply that the law under which Adam was created, evidently required of him to believe whatever declaration God made to him; otherwise, it would not have been sinful in him to disregard God's declarations concerning the tree of knowledge, &c. The declarations which God has made concerning man's condemnation, and concerning his Son

&c. are equally the words of him who cannot lie; and disbelieving them must therefore be equally a transgression of the law. Again, we are told that Christ appeared unto the eleven and "upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen." Mark xvi. 14. Their unbelief must, therefore, have been sinful, or I think he would not have upbraided them for it. Their not believing them which had seen him after his resurrection, included an unbelief of his own declarations beforehand made to them, that he should rise on the third day. In Rev. xxi. 8, the fearful and unbelieving are ranked with murderers, &c. as having a part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; hence they must be one class of sinners who are thus punished, as murderers are another class. The unbelief, on account of which the natural branches were broken off from the good olive tree, and which led the Jews to reject Christ as the Messiah, I think was sin; so, also, I think was the unbelief which prevented those Israelites from entering the promised land, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness, a sin. Heb. iii. 17-19. "The evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God," against which the Apostle cautions his brethren, (Heb. iii. 6,) appears to me is sin, and one to which, if my experience is a criterion, I should judge the children of God are very liable. So that I really do not see any just ground for retracting from either of those ideas to which brother Guice objects; and I have given, in answer to his enquiries, plainly my reasons for this conclusion, though I have not given them perhaps as concisely as he requested. If he is not satisfied with my views on these points, I should like for him to give his reasons for dissenting, as well as for him to give some more scriptural views.

Yours, &c. S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax County, Va. April 15, 1846. Signs of the Times Volume 14, No. 10. May 15, 1846

ANSWER TO BROTHER CRAIG

Brother Beebe: the remarks of Brother Hiram T. Craig on the subject of "justification," (No. 22, of the Signs) merits some notice. He has written in a very pleasant manner, and has not, like some others, brought forward arguments which have been answered again and again but has given us something original.

Brother Craig's first argument against excluding the term eternal from a connection with the word justification, or in the words, for Speaking of justification as an act that was passed before the foundation of the world, is in part founded on his criticism of the use of the particle unto. I think, according to the general use of this particle in the scriptures and by other writers, it denotes, not the cause nor effect, but the determination of an event or action. Thus in the text, "this sickness is not unto death," it was a plain intimation that the sickness was not to occasion ultimate death, though in that case, it might occasion it for a little season; that is in the case of Lazarus, "repentance unto life," (Acts 9.14) I do not understand as importing that repentance is the cause of life, nor do I understand the expression as designed to inform us that repentance is occasioned by the implantation of life, though that is a fact, but as importing the kind of repentance God had granted to them, not the sorrow which works death, but that which terminates in the enjoyment of life. Soul of the expression, "fruit unto holiness."

I really cannot see what authority Brother Craig derives from the above texts, or so entirely inverting the import of unto in the text, "Even so by the righteousness of one free gift came upon all men unto justification of life," as to make it the note that "justification of life," instead of the righteousness of Christ, is the cause of the "free gift coming." According to the plain English of this text, setting aside Brother Craig's criticism, it clearly supports the views of justification that I have been contending for. Let us examine the whole text, "as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men unto condemnation," is the first part of the apostles' comparison. How was it that "by the offense of one judgment came upon all men"? Evidently first by their being in him, and represented by him when the offense was committed. 2nd. The offense is committed, occasion to judgment to come upon all men. And third. The judgment came unto or terminated in what? Condemnation. Now for the other part of the comparison, even so, in the very same way, "by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." The comparison and contrast are thus complete. If this is not the plain deduction from the text, I must confess myself ignorant of the import of the expressions; And if I'm correct; The notion of the elects being justified collectively before Christ rose from the dead, must fall to the ground if tested by the scriptures.

Brother Craig goes on to say, "Now the same God who was manifested in the flesh in union with the church, was justified in the spirit in the same union, so that my view is, that in the relationship of the church to Adam the offender, she was condemned; But in her relationship to christ the quickening spirit, she was justified." I am not certain what Brother Craig's idea is concerning Christ's being justified in the spirit, and it is not necessary now to inquire what the true meaning of that expression of scripture is; suffice it to say that if the connection in which the expression is used, has any bearing on its application, his being "justified in the spirit." In a sense here intended, had immediate reference to his being "manifested in the flesh." First Timothy 3.16. If Brother Craig means as others have spoken, that the church was condemned in her relation to Adam, at the same time that she was justified in her relation to Christ, as must be the fact, if she ever was condemned, also was justified from eternity, I would ask him to inform us if he can, how she is ever to be delivered from that condemnation. For if that justification which the scriptures reveal, is the justification of the church, only in her relationship to Christ, and left her for any period condemned as related to Adam the righteousness of Christ of course had no effect in delivering her from this condemnation.

I will notice Brother Craig's observation that the tables of the law being laid in the art, "showed that the law existed eternally in Christ, the righteousness of which was the principle of justification." That the tables of laws being preserved in the ark and covered over with the mercy seat, was typical of the laws being preserved in Violet through the obedience of Christ, while its curse is averted from the Israel of God by his atonement, is an idea I can receive and do rejoice in. That the spirit of the law, the principle of eternal right and holiness, existed eternally both in Christ and in the father, I can conceive of; but that the principle of obligation and servitude arising from the law, existed eternally in Christ is a sentiment which I cannot receive as consistent with what the scriptures reveal of the glory which Christ had with the father before the world was, as the head of his church and the son and heir of God. Consequently the law, as such "existed eternally in him," I cannot admit.

There are circumstances connected with the making of the arc and the laying of the tables of the law in it, which, to me, forbid the idea of its being typical of the Messiah as set up an eternity, but rather show that it typified him as manifested in the flesh, under a transgressed law. I refer to the fact of the two tables being previously prepared by God, having the law written upon them by his finger, which tables Moses broke, (Exodus 32.15-19) and the tables which were put in the arc being afterward hewed out by Moses, exodus 34.1-4.

Again, Brother Craig says, "It seems to me that some brethren have two eternities in their minds, one passed and the other future, being cut in two by a little intervening space of time." "That the eternity to come will be a place (I would say a period) of greater happiness than the eternity past, owing to the regulations affected in time," I confess I am one of those people. I know nothing of happiness which I have not a consciousness of; And however it may be with brother Craig, I for one have no consciousness of having existed in a state of happiness before time commenced, nor any hope of happiness in an eternity to come, but what arises from the work accomplished by the Lord Jesus Christ, when he was made under the law, in the fullness of time.

To be more particular on this point, the eternity which God inhabits, is to him life like his existence, a perfect one; but we, whose existence began in time, and who are therefore creatures of changes and succession, have, according to our nature, to comprehend periods according to their succession. To us, God's eternity is divided into 3 periods. Looking backward through the telescope book of divine revelation, our faith describes the existence and purpose of God extending back unchangingly, beyond the commencement of time, into the fathomless abyss of eternity; Of which purpose and existence of God, we could have no conception, but for the various events of time which have developed them, and which are but the effects of the one eternal purpose and the workings of that one eternal existence. Looking forward through the same telescope, beyond time, and to the consummation of the eternal purpose of God, we by the eye of faith behold an eternity stretching forward beyond our conceptions, marked with its own peculiarities, the accomplishments of that same purpose.

Among these peculiarities, are these of the throne of God and a lamb being presented with the 100, 40, and 4000, and the great multitude which no man can number, having come out of the great tribulation, standing before them, ascribing salvation to God, and to the lamb, and singing that new song in which they say to the lamb, "you were slain, and you have redeemed us to God by the blood," revelation 7; 5.9-10. This is the way I have to look at eternal things, by parts, but if Brother Craig can view the parts of God's eternity in the whole, without having his vision obstructed, or the object of his sight broken by the intervention of time, he is blessed with a faculty which I now have not, and do not expect to have while I remain in the flesh. And I'm glad that in condescension to the weakness of those who like myself dwell in houses of clay, the scriptures in reference even to the existence of God, speak of eternity as to; as in Psalm 110.2, "even from everlasting to everlasting you are God." Everlasting is the same as eternal or eternity, hence in the New Testament we find the same Greek word aionion, rendered both everlasting and eternal, as in Matthew 25.46. And in this text, we have an eternity or everlasting duration, which Brother Craig, I think, will admit has a beginning in time; the everlasting punishment of the wicked.

I think Brother Craig on further reflection, will see that what he has brought forward will not suffice to do away with my objections to the use of the term "eternal" in connection with the word "justification," in the sense in which it is generally used, and as the Holy Spirit did not see proper to direct it to be used in the scriptures.

With my thanks to Brother Craig for the favorable opinion he entertains of what I was led to advance relative to the heavenly inheritance, and with hopes that he, and I, may yet see eye to eye with the scriptures, on the subject of "justification."

I subscribe myself, as ever,

Yours,

S. Trott Fairfax CH VA, November 23, 1838

DID CHRIST PURCHASE HEAVEN FOR HIS PEOPLE?

Brother Beebe: - I am aware that this, by many, may be considered as mere speculation; and it may not appear to any to have the same importance attached to it with some other subjects. There is, however, with me one consideration alone besides others which I shall notice, which renders it, I think, not an uninteresting nor an unimportant enquiry; that is, whether we as Old School Baptists will conscientiously carry out our professed stand by allowing the Scriptures to decide for us, on all points of doctrine, that is, receiving the doctrine as therein revealed, or whether, to carry out certain systems of the schools we will hold and contend for principles which subvert the plainest declarations of Scripture.

I have been led to this subject by the remarks of Brother Janeway, in his communication opposing my "Thoughts on Justification." He quotes the following passage therefrom. "It is, I think, a mistaken notion that justification is what entitles the saints to heaven. Equally erroneous is the notion that Christ, by His death, purchased heaven for His people. Their union to Christ as His bride, their being the children of God, is what entitles them to the heavenly glory." He then remarks: "I believe the above sentences to be egregiously false," and refers me to the arguments, which he quotes at some length, of an English author, as justifying his condemnation of my remarks. But as neither this author, nor his arguments, possess with me sufficient weight to decide this point in contrary distinction from the Scriptures, I must be allowed to bring forward the testimony of Scripture, in the case, in justification of those remarks which my brother considers so false. "To the law and to the testimony" (Isa. 8:20), is what I wish to have inscribed as my motto in the spirit, and in the letter, of all my discussions of religious subjects.

In bringing forward the revelation of Scripture on this point, I shall, first, give its testimony concerning the title to the heavenly kingdom; secondly, concerning the object of Christ's death. First: Concerning the title to the heavenly kingdom, the Scriptures not only speak of the heavenly kingdom as being a gift, and a gift freely bestowed, as in Luke 12:32; Rom. 8:32, and 6:23, &c., but also as an inheritance. 1st. It is expressly called an inheritance. "Which is the earnest of our inheritance &c." Eph. 1:14. "Giving thanks unto the Father which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light" Col. 1:12.

In this text we have two ideas distinguished, which I apprehend that brother J. and others confounded, namely, the title, which is that of inheritance, and the making us meet for being actual partakers thereof. The latter they have mistaken for a purchase of the title. See also I Pet. 1:4 and other texts.

2nd. The saints are denominated heirs. I will write a few of the texts on this point. "For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect" Rom. 4:14. Compare this with Gal. 3:18. "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise &c." I have in these a twofold testimony, and that Divine, that it is not a legal righteousness or justification which entitles to heaven. Again Rom. 8:17 - "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ;" and Gal .4:7 - "And if a son then an heir of God through Christ." These are the two texts which brother J's author quotes, and tries to explain away. He seems to suppose that they are all on which we rest our proof, for the idea that the title to heaven is derived from inheritance, and not from purchase. He also mistakes in supposing that we found the right to all spiritual blessings in adoption, such as pardon, liberty, peace &c. We believe these come to us in consequence of our being predestinated to the adoption of children, not as the inheritance, but as that meetness for it, which is spoken of in Col. 1:12, and that the right to these could only exist in our being redeemed from under the law. Not only do these texts represent the title of saints to glory as being that of heirship and founded on their being sons of God, but the one, Rom. 8:17, places their title on the same footing with Christ's. If Christ's title to that glory which He had with the Father before the world was, was the purchase of His blood, then is the saint's title derived from the same source; not otherwise? One more text on this point: "If ve be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" Gal. 3:29. He does not say according to a purchased right.

3rd. The new covenant is represented under the idea of a testament Heb. 9:15-17. Hence the Scriptures are very full and pointed in representing the title of the saints to heaven as an inheritance, in distinction from a purchased right. See this distinction illustrated in reference to the possessions of natural Israel in regard to the year of Jubilee Lev. 25:14-55.

Second. The testimony of Scripture as to the object of Christ's death. I will under this head commence with some of the types of the Old Testament. It will be admitted, I presume, by our brethren, that the redemption of national Israel from Egypt, and bringing them through the wilderness into the promised land by the hand of Moses, Aaron and Joshua, was typical of Christ's redeeming spiritual Israel from under the law, and bringing them home to glory. I will then ask: Did God thus redeem Israel from Egypt &c., to purchase for them a right to possess the land of Canaan or was it to fulfill the promise He had made unto their fathers to give it to them for an everlasting possession? The latter I presume my brethren will admit was the fact. If any do not, let them look at Gen. 17:8; Exod.32: 13; 33:1; Deut.9:4-6 & 10:15. If they do admit the above, what becomes of the notion of Christ's purchasing or meriting heaven by His death and obedience to the law? If Christ's obedience to the law is that which entitles the saints to heaven, why was it that Moses and Aaron must both die short of the promised land, and that Joshua alone could be allowed to lead Israel into their possessions? And, on the same supposition, we might say that there was a law given which did give life; contrary to what is implied in the Apostle's remarks in Gal .3:21.

Again, the sin offerings and other sacrifices under the law were evidently typical of that one offering which Christ should make of Himself. These, in their relation to national Israel, were not to purchase their title to their typical inheritance but to remove their sins that they should not mar their possession of that inheritance. The law concerning ceremonial redemption does not present the right of redemption as a privilege to purchase a. title to the land of the Israelites; but is founded on a previous, unalienable title which they had, by inheritance, to their possessions, and was designed to remove the hindrances which were in the way of their peaceable possession of such inheritance. See Lev. 25:14-17; 25:28.

Pocket Trott 1.0 290 of 1338

The New Testament account of Christ's death will be found exactly to correspond with those Old Testament types, in reference to the design &c. thereof. "But now once in the end of the world hath He appeared" for what? "To put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." Heb. 9:26-28. "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin," - for what object? "That we might be made the righteousness of Godin Him" II Cor. 5:21. "Who was delivered for our offenses, and raised again, for our justification" Rom. 4:25. The Scriptures go farther in defining the spiritual object to be attained by Christ's death; as in Gal. 4:4,5 -"God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" Eph. 5:25-27. "As Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious church&c." Titus 2:14 - "Who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people &c." If Christ gave Himself for these objects, I would ask brother J. what He had left to give for the purchase of heaven? It will be readily seen that I have selected but a few of the many texts having a bearing upon, or a direct reference to, this point. But if we allow those to speak according to their plain, legitimate meaning, we shall be convinced that Christ gave Himself, not as a purchase price, but as a ransom, a redemption price; not to purchase or redeem heaven, for His people; but to redeem them from under the law, and meeten them for heaven. The Apostle speaks in Eph. 1:14 of the redemption of the purchased possession which some may understand to mean heaven. But if any do understand that heaven is the purchased possession, I would like for them to tell me what idea they can have of its being redeemed, after having been purchased. Besides there is no corresponding passage of Scripture to support this idea. And, remember that it is in the mouth of two or three witnesses that every word shall be established. But understanding by the purchased possession the church of Christ, and we have our two witnesses to support the idea; thus: "Ye are bought with a price" I Cor. 6:20; 7:23. "To feed the church of God which He hath purchased with His own blood" Acts 20:28. But as I have showed from other Scriptures, this purchase is a redemption purchase; not a purchase of title.

And the idea of redemption as applied to this purchased possession is perfectly consistent, according to the sense in which the term is used in I Cor. 1:30, and in other passages, as meaning the complete deliverance of the whole flock of Christ.

In reference to the absolute necessity of the people of God being redeemed from sin and from under the law in order to their being brought to heaven, we consider the Scripture to be full of this doctrine. And for myself, I cannot conceive of any way how creatures could be made to partake of the privilege of sons of God but in that way unfolded in the Scriptures, namely; their being left to fall under the curse of the law, whereby occasion was given for their Spiritual Head to be manifested as their Redeemer, to deliver them from under the law, and from sin. Without death to the law, we never could have been severed from it. And while under the law we never could partake of the privilege of the sons of God. See Rom. 7:1-6 & Gal. 5:18. Neither can I conceive that Christ as the Messiah, being once made of a woman and made under the law, could ever have repossessed that glory which He had with the Father before the world was, without finishing, by His perfect obedience, the redemption of Himself as the Husband, Surety &c., of His church, and of His church in Him, from all the demands of law and justice. Hence; Luke 24:26; John 17:4,5; Heb. I:8,9 & 2:9,10. But all this, the Scriptures teach me, are the means which God had appointed in His eternal purpose for bringing the many sons unto glory, not to purchase glory for them. But the sentiment that Christ purchased or merited heaven by His death is not merely a departure from the plain language of Scripture, but also involves other errors. It degrades the personal merits of the Messiah as He was set up from everlasting and His church in Him. For as He and His church were one, if He had no merits, independent of His blood, by which to present His church, as in Him and one with Him, as proper objects of His Father's love, and worthy to be recognized as sons and heirs, with Him of God; it must have been the merits of His blood only that entitled Him to be appointed heir of all things. But very differently from this is the testimony of the Scriptures concerning the glory of the Son of God. See Col. 1:15-19 & Hebrews chapter one.

Again the idea of Christ's purchasing heaven by His blood, savors too much of the cold speculations of a mercantile transaction to correspond with the riches of Divine grace as revealed in the Scriptures. For according to this, although God was willing that His predestinated sons should be made partakers of heavenly glory, and therefore appointed for them a Surety who should purchase it for them; yet He could not bestow it upon them as the bequest of a Father, but must have an equivalent for it. Some are fond of talking about the provisions of the everlasting covenant being suspended on conditions to be performed by Christ, and about the great contracting parties in the covenant &c.; but this savors entirely too much of the wisdom of this world. To suppose the Divine Three meeting in council to devise ways, and close a bargain concerning the redemption of men, each proposing and accepting of terms &c., by which they enter into contract infinitely degrades the idea I have of God, of His unity, His dignity, His sovereign majesty &c. And as neither the above, nor any equivalent terms, are used in the Scriptures relative to this subject, I feel at liberty to enter my protest against their use. It is contended by the school men, and those who derive their system from the schools, that the term, covenant, implies the idea of a contract; but this I deny to be the case as we find that term used and explained in the Scriptures. When God made a covenant with Noah &c. (Gen.9), was there anything like a contract between God and Noah? Did Noah propose any of the terms of this covenant?

Did its being established depend in any measure on his giving his consent to the terms? Very different from all this. God established a covenant with Abraham, Gen. 17, also with David, II Sam. 7:4-17; 23:5 & Ps. 89: 19-37. Is there anything like contracting, like proposing and accepting conditions between the parties in either of these? Does not God in these declare His Divine sovereignty, saying I will, and thou shalt, whilst at the same time He gives them the strongest ground to rest their faith and hope upon? If we look at the new covenant, Jer. 31:31-34, we shall find it in conformity with the others. The shall of Jehovah establishes all! If we look at the promises which the Father makes unto the Son as in Psa. 89 as above quoted, in Isaiah 42:1-9; 49 & 53 &c., we find them made in the absoluteness of Divine sovereignty and freeness; no condition, no ifs to clog that freeness. Hear the language of the Son, "Then said I, Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." Psa. 40:7,8; Heb. 10:5-10. What harmony and oneness does this express in the Godhead! What loveliness and beauty in the Divine freeness with which the Son does the will of His Father, and offers Himself in the place of burnt offerings and sacrifices, for His people! How different would it appear if we were to suppose Him adopting, instead of the above declaration, language suiting the idea of a contract, and saying, seeing O God, that according to stipulations, thou hast prepared a body for me, Lo, I will come and fulfill my part of the contract? What a letting down of dignity there would be even to the littleness of human bargaining.

Once more, the notion of Christ's having purchased heaven by His blood, tends greatly to diminish the view which the Scriptures and our experience give of the exceeding evil of sin; for according to this notion, it was not for our sinfulness and vileness alone, that debarred us from heaven; a title to heaven must be purchased. Neither was it our sins, and to redeem us from the curse of the law alone that caused Christ to bleed on Calvary, but His blood was in part shed for purchasing a title to heaven.

If on the other hand we will let the revelation of God speak for itself, in this maimer not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, making known that the kingdom of glory is an inheritance given, in the better Testament, to His Son and to the church in Him, as His bride, bone of His bone, and as joint heirs with Him, of which Testament Christ is made the Surety or Executor, we discover the whole transaction to be a display of the rich, free and sovereign love of God, as of a father to his children, in Christ; and the barrier to our felt enjoyment of it - not the want of freeness in the gift, but our vileness as creatures of the dust, and sunken, by transgression, under the curse of the law. And the pureness of Divine love, and the riches of Divine wisdom is displayed in God's predestinating His people to the adoption of children, by Jesus Christ, constituting them one with Him in that He, which was, in Him, which they derive from Him, and which is thus the light of men; by which union, on the one hand, they are entitled with Him to the heavenly inheritance, and on the other hand, He was involved in their accountability, as creatures, to law and justice, and bound to meet the demands thereof in their behalf, whereby their complete redemption and justification from all demands of law and justice were secured. Pure justice thus shines forth in the infliction of the penalty of the law upon Christ, and the heavenly inheritance, whilst it comes to the heirs as the free gift of the Father, comes to them through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, by which His love to them, as His bride, is sealed by His heart's blood.

Hence, in the Scriptural view of redemption, instead of beholding the deadened colorings of a mercantile transaction, we see every attribute of our Jehovah God shining forth with heightened lustre and glory, all Secretly combining and harmonizing, in the predestination, calling, justification and glorification of the elect sons of Adam.

Our sins, as they are seen contrasted with the love of God and felt to be a barrier to our enjoying that love which nothing but the fountain of a Saviour's blood, applied by the energies of the Holy Ghost, could remove, appear indeed as exceeding sinful and odious; and whilst the value of a Saviour's blood and righteousness is enhanced by a sense of our vileness and sinfulness, we are humbled in the dust on account of that vileness as contrasted with the stupendous love and favour of God to us.

From those Scriptural considerations, I feel fully justified in maintaining that it is not justification from the law which entitles the saints to heaven, and that the object of Christ's death was not to purchase heaven for His people. Whether brother J. and others will ever in this life see eye to eye with me on this point and on the subject of justification I know not. I desire that we may, providing it be as the Scriptures teach. But if kept by the grace of God I trust I shall adhere to the doctrine as taught in the Scriptures, as far as my mind is enlightened to understand it, whether thereby I go, with, or against, my brethren. And I cannot feel that my Old School brethren are justified in blaming me for not going with them, wherein they fail to show some direct Scriptural authority for their belief or practice; neither do I wish to blame them for not seeing with me on every point, so far as the Holy Ghost is pleased to teach them or me, we shall be made to see whoever else may remain blind, and however strong our prejudices may have been in opposition. May He teach us all to know, to feel, and to live more and more the truth as it is in Jesus.

One word more, if my brethren cannot agree with me on these points, I think from what I have now written they will discover that my views do not clash with the doctrine of Sovereignty in predestination, election &c., nor with the richness and freeness of the gift of grace that bringeth salvation, nor of the fullness there is in Christ to present His people faultless before God; neither in the sovereignty and perfection of the work of the Holy Spirit. Why then are my brethren so alarmed?

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, April 24th, 1838. S. Trott.

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 133-140

Strictures

On the first report of the executive committee of the American Baptist home mission society

No. 1

Brother Beebe I did not think, when I sent on my last communication, that I should so soon again wish a place in the "Signs" But having been honored with a copy, by mail of the first report of the executive committee of the American Baptist home mission society, I feel constrained to notice it.

When I first examined the report, saw good words and fair speeches, employed sold well circulated to deceive the hearts of the simple; the extensive concentration of power in the hands of a few, this society being designed as the head, and the center of the union of effort, to all the state conventions, general associations and smaller connections formed in the United states, and in the British provinces of America, for the whole mission purposes and intended apparently in the whole arrangement to be to the Baptist, what the Presbyterians, synods and General Assembly of the Presbyterians are to that denomination; the artful attempts to enlist the support of persons of influence in all the states by appointing such as vice president; but above all the object designed to be accomplished, to bring all the Baptist churches in America under the pastoral care of what they call an educated ministry; That is, a set of men who are taught in the theological schools, to preach scientifically a philosophized gospel who will train the churches to the practice of all these self styled benevolent plans of the day; I say, when I saw thus developed a plan artfully contrived to accomplished the entire prostration of playing gospel preaching throughout the whole land, although I have for years believed that such event would air long take place, yet when I saw before me the instrument ready prepared to affect it, I felt a misgiving and an agitation which forcibly reminded me of the words of Habakkuk; "when I heard my belly trembled, my lips guivered." Although there was not produced in me an excitement to the same extent as that described by the prophet, yet what I did feel, led me on reflection to discover in his manner of describing a strong excitement, a peculiar correctness which I had not before seen.

I intend giving in this number a sketch of the formation of the society, and in future numbers a view of its designed operation as declared on the report, and illustrated in the communications of certain of their missionaries published in the "Baptist repository," the organ of this society, several numbers of which were sometimes since forwarded to me very opportunely.

In the organization and arrangement of the society, there is discoverable a studied attempt to present it to public view, as divested of several of those offensive traits which we find in the constitutions of former mission societies.

First, in the liberal provision as to membership, "any person may become a member of this society by contributing annually to its funds, $30 paid at one time shall constitute a member for life, $100 paid at one time shall constitute a director for life; and any Baptist Church, or association or state convention, or missionary society that contributes annually to the objects of this society, shall be entitled to be represented by one or more delicate, in its annual meetings. "Constitution Article 3d, the officers of auxiliary societies, shall be ex officio directors of this society, and their members shall be members of this society."

2nd, in the great proportion of directors, "the officers of this society shall be a president, vice president, a treasurer, an auditor, a corresponding secretary, a recording secretary, and 50 directors, who shall be annually appointed by the society." Article 4 of the Constitution. These 50 directors are in addition to the life directors, and officers of auxiliary societies. There are also 32 vice presidents appointed; 1 from each of the British provinces, and from each of the States and territories of the United states, with three or four exceptions. In this liberal number of vice presidents, I find but four reverend gentlemen, the others being Honorables, esquires, gentlemen, or doctors. Quite a distinction has conferred in the laity; Even the president being of that class. But then they must all be the great ones of the earth. Among the accepted states, I find Maryland. Poor Maryland Baptists; Even those of them who may be solicitors of preferment, and who possess worldly titles sufficiently honorable to merit a distinction, have to suffer a deprivation in consequence of our "old school meeting," having been suffered to be held in connection with the Baltimore association. There is a brother of the Salisbury association, and one of the Delaware, who are appointed directors. How far these brethren, will feel flattered with the distinction, is not for me to say. The brother of Delaware whom they have exacted to the dignity of a vice president, if I'm not mistaken in him, was not the happiest choice they might have made for themselves, he will not be as easily cajoled into their measures, as some others who might be found even in the same city.

3rd, the society stipulates with its auxiliary societies, to allow them severally the right to appoint, direct and pay missionaries within the respective limits, to any amount not exceeding the neat income of such auxiliaries. See Stipend 2d, pg. 26. The committee in view of their stipulations with the auxiliaries, make the following flattering declarations, "these stipulations wherever they shall be adopted will put it out of the power of the parent institution to contravene, the wishes of those whose business it is to manage the affairs and guard the purity of the churches in the different sections of our country. Were appropriations beyond the amount contributed by an auxiliary are needed in the district of that auxiliary, the parent society will of course find it alike convenient and necessary to consult the wishes and avail itself of the councils of its own auxiliaries."

"The general society thus claims but to be the servant of the churches. It pretends no ecclesiastical authority. It interferes not with the discipline of the peculiar views of the doctrine of any of our churches. The society has no charter and no funded property. It has its being only in the confidence of the Christian public; And should it ever through unfaithfulness to its trust, cease to deserve these, it's auxiliaries may withdraw their aid and the society cease to exist," Rep. Page 28.

These several circumstances in the organization of the society, the general specified object, "home missions," together with the many smooth things said in the report are well calculated to enlist the feelings of all those Baptists who are not conscientiously grounded in the belief that the scriptures are a sufficient and the only correct rule of gospel order and practice, as well as of doctrine. These the report characterizes, as those who "have no part in Christian feeling and the triumphs of Zion," and contrast them with others of Baptist congregations who say they "though they profess less faith show more works." What a pity to ruffle the smooth surface of such a report! Did it relate to anything but to profess religion of Christ I would not disturb it, as it is i must sound its depth.

First, we will inquire into the amount of the privilege of membership officers, so liberally bestowed.

First, the privilege of membership, annual life delegated. We find from the minutes of the annual meeting, does that the society met on the 8th of may at 4:00 PM; That after delegates had presented their credentials, and others were invited to seats with the society, they proceed to appoint the officers for the ensuing year. Here it will, of course be supposed the members enjoyed the privilege of free suffrage, in electing their officers. But let the minute speak for itself.

"Agreeable to the report of a committee of nomination the following officers were chosen for the year ensuing." The privilege in this case enjoyed, was that of saying Yea! To the report of the nominating committee. The late hour appointed for the meeting, by providing precluding all the time for canvassing, shows that no higher privilege was intended them.

Three or four other transactions of the society are recorded. The committee of nomination were empowered to fill up any vacancies in the list of officers.

2nd, the executive committee were instructed to procure if possible an act of incorporation for the society.

3rd the time and place of holding the next annual meeting was appointed.

4th, the society adjourned to meet again at 7:30 in the evening Minute pg. 4.

The evening meeting, and distinction from the 4:00 meeting is styled the "public anniversary." The object of this meeting is thus expressed, "the society met pursuant to adjournment, for the purpose of hearing the reports of the treasurer, and of the executive committee." But in addition to hearing the reports, the society enjoyed the privilege of hearing these reports and the great objects of the society, eulogized by several speakers, who in conformity to the general custom at the anniversaries of the various societies, were probably selected beforehand, page. I have thus been particular to give the amount of the privilege of membership. And surely it may be well worth the expense trouble of traveling, 100 and 500 or 1000 miles, as a life member or the delicate of an auxiliary, to enjoy such a privilege, to those who are fond of mere pageantry.

Second, the vice presidents. According to the constitution, "the officers of the society shall be a president, vice president, a treasurer etcetera". Consequently but one out of the 32 vice presidents can be recognized as an officer of the society. The others of course were all blanks. This is giving flattering titles, with a witness.

3rd, the officers of the society. I will give entire, the fifth article of constitution to show the extent of the control these have over the concerns of the society. The article reads thus, "the officers and life directors shall appoint an executive committee of 13 persons (including the treasurer, the corresponding secretary and the recording secretary) reciting in the city of New York and its vicinity, five of whom shall be a quorum at any meeting regularly convened. This committee shall have power to appoint its own meetings, from its own rules of business and fill any vacancies that may occur during the year and convene special meetings of the board and of the society; shall appoint missionaries and instruct them as to the field and manner of their labors; Shall dispose of the funds of the objects of the society, (provided that all monies contributed for any specific purpose shall be faithfully applied only to that particular object) shall create such agency or agencies for the appointment of missionaries and for other purposes, as the interests of the society may require; And shall make an annual report of their proceedings to the society. All the officers, executive committee, agents and missionaries of the society shall be members of some Baptist Church in general union with the body of the denomination." Thus we see the whole control of this vast concern in the hands of these 13 persons!

There is no account given in the report, of minutes of the origin of the committee of nomination; But from every circumstance it is presumed that they are appointed by the executive committee and out of their own body. If so, we here see us complete and aristocracy organized as ever need to exist. There is no act or any account that can be performed in this society but what is under the control of the executive committee, accepting that the life directors can give an independent vote in choosing this committee; the only vote which the constitution allows to them or to any of the officers, accepting the secretaries or treasurer. The nominating committee being appointed by and being a part of the executive committee, the 50 directors and other officers being in effect appointed by that committee, a majority of this committee will always have the power of securing their own election. The 50 directors, therefore are about on a par with the 31 vice presidents. That is they are appointed directors but debarred by the constitution from all power to direct the concerns of the society.

Second, the privilege granted to the auxiliaries in stipulating with them to allow them to severely to appoint, direct and pay their own missionaries. To this stipulation there is however the following proviso, "that the appointment of missionaries by such auxiliary shall be in the manner following, a sufficient number of blank commissioners shall be furnished to the auxiliary signed by the chairman of the executive committee and the corresponding secretary of the society, which shall be filled and countersigned by the proper officers of the auxiliary and issued on their responsibility." Stip. 2d. pg. 26These commissions are undoubtedly made out in conformity to the provision of the constitution in that case, the executive committee shall appoint missionaries and instruct them as to the field and manner of their labours. The direction therefore of these missionaries accepting the selecting the persons and their stations, is with the executive committee, whilst the responsibility rests on the officers of the auxiliary. A handsome compliment is paid to the auxiliary.

The executive committee styling the society, "the servant of churches," in referring to the liberty of these stipulations, is as fine an imitation of the popes calling himself the servant of servants as I have ever seen.

As to the declaration that the society has no character, we have seen from the minutes that the executive committee were instructed to procure if possible an act of incorporation of the society. And in reference to the societies having no funded property; The fourth general head of the plan of operations (p.25) reads thus, "a large amount of funds is obviously needed along the indispensable means of our enterprise." Nine several modes are named for trying to obtain these funds. Hence we can plainly see what is intended by the assertion that the society has no charter and no funded property, and to what it amounts; And from such palpable insincerity of expression we shall learn how to appreciate their future assertions.

Thus such in relation to the peculiar formation of the society.

S. Trott Fairfax Courthouse, Va., July 31, 1833

DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE TWO HEADS

As in the distinction between the two Heads, the first man and the second Man, so is the distinction between the two lives brought forth severally in these distinct Heads; consequently so is the distinction between the bonds of union by which each Head is united with its body and members.

The one bond is earthly, the other is spiritual; the one commenced in time and is dissolved in time, the other commenced in eternity, and therefore unchanged by changing time, will be eternal.

The one head, Adam, being created under the law, and his posterity in him; the other Head, Christ, as the Son of the Father, was set up and His posterity in Him, under the everlasting covenant, that is "ordered in all things and sure," they are therefore as sons loved with an everlasting love, and therefore with "loving kindness" are they drawn.

Again as the members of Adam's family, or of the creation in him, are made manifest as such by being "born of the flesh;" so the members of Christ's body can be manifested only by being "born of the Spirit." They are by this brought into personal existence - as new creatures, and are now personified by their new life.

Hence says Christ speaking of His disciples; "They are NOT of the world, even as I am NOT of the world." (John 17:16;) and says Paul; "If I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." (Romans 7:20 - See also 1 John 3:9 and 5:18.)

As the posterity of Adam came into existence under the curse of the law as having been in him when he fell; so the posterity of Christ in their new birth, are born into the blessings of the new covenant, as well those exceeding great and precious promises given them in Christ as that full provision for their deliverance from under the law; therefore they receive not the spirit of bondage again to fear; but they receive the Spirit of Adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father.

This much in relation to the union of Christ's people with Him. I will now briefly notice this union with Adam &c. - Whilst they were thus set up in Christ, and as such, loved with an everlasting love, it was the pleasure of the Father that they should be partakers of flesh and blood, and therefore as rational creatures they were created in a natural head, Adam, and under the law; were in common with all his posterity, left to fall in him, and become subject to the curse of the law.

While they were thus a part of the same fallen family of Adam involved in the same condemnation, they by the eternal purpose of God were distinguished from the rest of the human family - and were from the beginning "chosen unto salvation," and "predestinated unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ," and were given to Christ as His portion, as it is written, the "Lord's portion is His people; Jacob is the lot of His inheritance."

It was also necessary in order to their being brought into liberty as sons, and receive the spirit of adoption, that they should be redeemed from under the law, and also to be slain by it, that their union to it might be dissolved.

For all this provision was made in the everlasting covenant, and the accomplishment thereof assigned to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit in their respective offices.

Their redemption could alone be accomplished by One who could fulfill the demands of the law, and make it honorable in their behalf, and consequently alone by one who could be acknowledged by Divine Justice, as standing in their law- place.

Christ being their Brother, their Head, their Husband in the everlasting covenant, an in relation to the life therein set up, the right of redemption belonged to Him, He could take their law-place and obey in their behalf, and be accepted by Divine Justice.

WAS CHRIST CREATED WITH HIS PEOPLE IN ADAM? If so He is but an earthly creature, and a branch of fallen stock! Again we are told that Christ laid down His life for the sheep. Now if He did not lay down His life in the place, or stead, of the sheep, how will we find an atonement in the death of Christ? and how will we find a ransom in it? If He laid down His life for us in any other sense than as suffering that punishment which was due to our transgressions?

Instead of that nominal union which many talk of, which is produced by the creature's believing – the Scriptures speak of a real oneness. "Both He that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one;" is the Scripture testimony (Hebrews 2:11), and so I believe.

Instead of this union being founded in Christ's assumption of a human nature; the Scriptures speak of His taking flesh and blood as a consequence of His relation to the children who were partakers thereof. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also likewise Himself took part of the same; &c." - What children? - Those of whom Christ says; "Behold, I and the children which God hath given Me." (Hebrews 2:14,13). And this is not simply a oneness of views, but a oneness of life.

Now, Brother Jim, I pass on to address the scattered believers whose trust is in the Lord, and have no confidence in the flesh - not theirs, not preachers' nor any other creature. A lovely and lovable scattered flock; not esteemed by the self-righteous and confident, whose soultroubles are nor so sharp or trying that they cannot rest on their lees, with a pain of conscience now and then. "Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee." "There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell Me therefore, which of them will love him the most?" Simon correctly named the one that owed the most. "Thou hast rightly judged." (Luke 7:41-43.) I think sometimes it is a pity that the one that owes so little are the ones so quick to join the church; while the ones so great in debt are the more backward. And I steam when I sense, rightly or wrongly, that one who owes so little is ready to castigate the poor trembling Mary, full of fear, and hesitantly, yet bravely finally slipping in to weap at His feet. Simon - the selfrighteous hypocrite! "If this man were a prophet, He would know what manner of woman touchest Him, for she IS a sinner." But the sweetness of the gentle Savior, inspired the writer to not let that stand! The text, "she WAS a sinner." Blessed difference in vantagepoints!

Duty Faith & Repentance.

An enquiry concerning the duty of the unregenerate to believe, repent or pray.

PART 1. Brother Beebe: - I will now notice the charge which Brother Meredith has been informed is made against the Old School Baptists, that they hold it "not to be the duty of the unregenerate to believe, repent or pray." I will in my examination of this charge endeavor to show what there is of truth and what of falsehood in its several items. I will commence with the subject of belief. The charge that we hold it "not to be the duty of the unregenerate to believe," has originated evidently from persons who do not know or distinguish the difference there is between believing the Son, and believing on the Son, or between believing the record that God gave of His Son, and believing on the Son of God.

See John 3:36 & I John 5:10. Such distinction not only is made in the texts above referred to, but is evidently manifested in christian experience. The one, the believing on the Son of God, is no other than the exercise of that faith which is the gift of God, and is distinguishingly denominated the faith of God's elect. It is a reliance on that obedience which Christ has rendered to law and justice in behalf of His people, as our alone and complete righteousness before God and redemption from under the law, and a trust in Christ, as our whole salvation. But it is evident that, from a very early period in the travel of the church on to this day, a great proportion of the professed church of Christ have mistaken a simple belief of the truth of the record which God has given of His Son; or indeed a simple belief in the truth of the scriptures, for that faith which characterizes one as a believer in Christ. That is, the revelation made of Christ in the scriptures has been considered as a proposition presented to the minds of men for their reception; and the reception of this proposition either as dogmatically laid down, or on examination, has been understood as constituting one a believer in Christ, and the rejection of it, the ground of condemnation. Hence the solicitude that has been manifested to instill into the minds of children the knowledge and belief of certain summaries of what was considered essential points to be believed in order to constitute them christians. Hence the catechumenical system in the earlier ages of the church, and Sunday School and Bible Class plans of our day. Hence also creeds and catechisms as essential summaries of christian doctrine which must be driven into the minds of children by parental and priestly authority, and often beaten in by the rod of the schoolmaster, in order to make christians of them.

Owing to the mistake which has thus existed, when it has been asserted that the natural man is not required of God to exercise that faith which is peculiarly the faith of God's elect, and is not condemned for not exercising it, it has been construed into a denial of its being his duty to believe, that is, the record which God has given, or the testimony of the scriptures. The fact is, so far as I understand what is the Old School or apostolic Baptist doctrine on this point, it is this; that the peculiar faith which constitutes one a believer in Christ, in a gospel sense, and which goes out from one's self and from all he has done or felt, to rest upon, and plead Christ's obedience to the law, as his whole righteousness, and ground of acceptance with God, &c.; is a belief which the law knows nothing about; for the law is not of faith; and which can in no sense be considered a natural duty, it being not the acting of any natural powers or faculties of man as created of the earth earthy, but is the peculiar exercise of that spiritual life which was created in, and is derived from the Son of God, as the Head of His people; and which requires that a person be born of God to exercise it. Hence this faith in contra-distinction from its being a legal duty, is declared to be the gift of God. On the other hand, I understand the Old School doctrine to be, that it is the duty of all rational beings to believe all God has spoken in the scriptures as they have access to them directly or indirectly, and to believe the testimony of the works of creation and providence, where the scriptures have not come. To disbelieve the record, which God hath given of His Son, is to make God a liar (I John 5:10;) and surely no person can do this and be guiltless. The obligation man is under thus to believe God, arises, not from any demand which the gospel as such peculiarly makes upon him, but from the nature and fitness of things, and from what God is. It is a law of our creation.

The "duty of the unregenerate to repent," comes next under consideration. This owing to the confusion into which it has been thrown by the introduction of the various systems of conditionalism, and other causes is a difficult subject rightly to understand and explain in all its bearings. My own mind I confess has been much difficulted to draw a clear line of distinction between the different relations and senses in which the idea of repentance, is presented to our view in the scriptures, and between the idea of its being a duty incumbent on men at large, and that of its being a free gospel blessing bestowed by the exalted Saviour on the spiritual Israel of God. But as it is highly important that we should understand the true import of the scriptures on this subject, I have at different times elicited considerable enquiry from me; and such as I have, give I unto you. I will add that ever since I knew by experience what repentance is, as given by Christ, (as I have a hope that I do know it to some extent,) I have been fully convinced that the manner in which repentance is held and preached by the conditionalists of all grades, is altogether foreign from the scriptural view of it. On the other hand I have never been able to receive in all points as correct, the explanations which Doctor Gill and other sound brethren have given of it. There will be found some difference between the explanation of this subject which I have to give, and that given by Brother Beebe in No. 14, more particularly in relation to John's preaching repentance; this difference I trust is not such as to break any bones.

I shall lay down the following positions, as waymarks, in the investigation of this subject. First: If we suppose that the original law of man's creation, or the law as published in Ten Commands from Sinai, commanded repentance as one of its requisitions, it will lead to the following insuperable difficulties. 1st. Repentance presupposes sin, therefore the law's commanding repentance as one of the conditions of its fulfillment, would be to command the previous existence of sin. 2nd. If the law commands repentance, then repentance is essential to that righteousness which the law requires, and consequently Christ in bringing in that righteousness and magnifying the law in behalf of His people, must have repented for them, as well as obeyed in their behalf in other respects. This supposition therefore I think cannot stand. 3rd. If we suppose that the gospel commands

repentance as a condition of acceptance with God, then the gospel

must in some sense be a law under which the human family exists. Consequently a failure to obey this command would involve condemnation. And if the gospel thus comes from God who changes not, with its demands upon the human family at large, then from the moment any individual existed as an accountable creature to God, he was obligated to render obedience to this gospel-law, and failing at any moment to do it, he incurred condemnation from it. If he lived twenty years, or more, or less, in impenitency or in transgression of this command of the gospel, and then became a penitent, his after repentance could not make satisfaction for his former neglect of it. Hence it is evident that all must be viewed as transgressors of this gospel-law. Now Christ redeemed His people from the curse of the law; but who is revealed as a redeemer from the condemnation of the gospel? And if not redeemed from it, must we not lie under the condemnation or suffer the penalty? If then no Redeemer is provided to save from gospel condemnation, who can be saved? If it be said that Christ redeemed from this as from the law, then as before He must have repented for His people. This is but one among several absurdities arising from a supposition of this kind.

4th. If on the other hand we suppose that the unregenerate are under no obligations to repent, we must consider them as justifiable in continuing on in their sins of whatever grade they may be. This I think none will admit; for there certainly are instances in the scriptures of unregenerated persons being exhorted or admonished to repent. The query then arises, Whence does this obligation to repent arise? This I will endeavor to answer, after a little. The difficulty on this subject has frequently been attempted to be solved by a reference to the fact of there being two kinds of repentance spoken of in the scriptures. There certainly are these different repentances brought to view, designated by different words in the original of the scriptures; but I find there is but one word in its formation and derivations, used in all those passages of scripture which are immediately connected with our present enquiry; such as Matt.3:2; 4:17; 11:20,21; Acts 8:22; 17:30; the same also is used in these, and the like texts, namely: Luke 24:47; Acts 5:31; also the word repentance as found in II Cor. 7:9,10. (The word repented in this 10th verse, is a different word in the original and of different import.) Hence I think there is but the one kind of repentance we have to do with in this case. And I know not that it is here necessary for our present enquiry to consider this repentance as classed into outward, and heart repentances, or the like. The original word used in the above texts, metanoco, according to its etymology, signifies "To reflect on, or to be wise after the act, or to return or come to a right understanding." This repentance therefore imports a change of mind after an act has been committed, and which therefore implies a condemning of the act, and of course, sorrow for it, and a change of conduct. This sorrow may be natural or worldly sorrow, or it may be godly or spiritual sorrow, as the act is viewed in the light of reason, or in the light of the Spirit. If the former, it needs to be repented of again. But the main point in the idea of repentance, is I think altogether missed by conditionalists, and perhaps is frequently overlooked by others, and which in fact, is the substance of the thing. It is this, that as repentance is self-condemnation, it stands in direct opposition to all self-righteousness, self-justification, or reliance on our own acts for acceptance with God, &c. Hence the utter absurdity of making repentance a condition of salvation. In pursuing the enquiry concerning the obligation of men to repent, I shall have again to refer to the law of Ten Commands; and as I had occasion in the preceding communication, and have again in this to speak of it in distinction from the original law under which man was created, I wish here to quard against being understood as meaning that they are separate laws. I understand them to be in substance the same law, but differently revealed. In the original creation of man the law requiring him to love God with all his heart, &c., was not delivered to him verbally in so many words, nor in a series of implied prohibitions as in the Decalogue; but was written in indelible characters upon man. I do not say, nor mean in his heart; but upon his existence as a rational being, and upon all by which he was surrounded, for all declared the wisdom, power, and goodness of their Creator, and therefore reflected the obligation of man to love his Creator with all his powers and faculties. Thus it is said, Rom.1:19,20. "Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them. For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." Had man continued in the state of uprightness in which he was created, he would not have needed the specifications contained in the Decalogue to show him what was right or wrong. Though a test of his love and subjection to God was needed, and that was given him in the prohibition of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. But man having sinned and come short of the glory of God, and sunken into a state of condemnation, God, in bringing in that dispensation which was particularly designed to typify the salvation in all its parts, of spiritual Israel; as well as to prepare the way for the manifestation of the Messiah, saw proper, to give a new edition of the law, or to declare it in Ten Commands from Sinai, which commands are but so many specifications by which are showed man's entire departure from the standard of right. Hence says Paul; "I had not known sin but by the law; for I had not known lust except the law had said Thou shalt not covet." Rom.7:7. This law was given in the letter of it, in covenant form to national Israel; and was written on tables of stone to show that the law in itself cannot give life; that its commands in their outward address to man leave the heart as lifeless and hard as the stones on which they were written.

This law of Ten Commands, in its spirituality and as addressed to all, both Jews and Gentiles, I understand was given expressly to teach repentance. I do not say, to show that repentance was a part of the original requisition of the law, and a part of the righteousness it required; but that it is addressed to man as depraved and condemned, to call him off from self-confidence, and to repentance. I feel myself fully supported in this by the declarations of scripture, that the law was added by reason of transgression; entered that the offence might abound, &c.; and especially by this text, "What things soever the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law" - for what? - "that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." What is this but self-condemnation before God, that is designed to be accomplished by the declaration of the law? And what is such self-condemnation, but repentance toward God? It is then I think clear, that it is the law of Ten Commandments in its spirituality that calls for repentance. But it may be asked. Is it the laws thus calling for repentance that makes it the duty of man to repent, or thus to be humbled and abased before God? I answer no; for the law calls for it only as it shows the nature and truth of man's case, that he is a guilty condemned creature, polluted in all his ways. The fitness, propriety and obligation of man to repent arises from the nature and truth of the case. If it is a duty of man to practice truth toward God and toward man, then it is his duty thus to be humble and abased before God and men, because the truth is that he is thus debased by his transgressions of the law; and to plead or trust to his works for justification is to plead and trust a falsehood, as showed by the Decalogue; for his works condemn him. However I would here remark that I doubt the propriety of using the term duty in a strict sense in relation to repentance, although it may be admitted in a loose sense. Of the fitness of repentance, and of the obligation man is under to exercise it, from his still existing as the creature of God, and a subject of His moral government, I have no doubt, that is, so far as the light of reason and external revelation can show them the evil of sin.

Let us now look a little at christian experience on this point; for the Spirit's teaching is truth. When a person is led by the teachings of the Holy Spirit truly to know the law and by it to know his guilt and depravity, he at once falls prostrate at the footstool of mercy, acknowledging the justice of his condemnation, and feels that from the fitness of things, he cannot be too much abased and humbled before God against whom he has sinned. It is true that in the former stages of his exercises, he may have sought to work himself up to a repentance, as a something that was to make amends for his transgressions and make his peace with God; but he now abhors this attempt to mock God and dishonor His law as much as any of his former open sins. And he would no sooner think of pleading the condemnation and contrition he now feels as a reason why he should escape punishment, than the criminal before a court would think of pleading the fact of his being clearly proved guilty, as a proper ground for his being cleared. This contrite penitent sees and feels that there is no way by which in justice he can be released from enduring the curse of the law, until he is led by faith to behold that satisfaction which Christ has made to the law for such sinners as he. He now feels that there is a natural fitness that he and every other person should be abased and humbled before God as transgressors of His law and abusers of His goodness. But further, being brought into the light of the gospel, he sees that it was sovereign grace alone which brought him thus to repentance, and that the condemnation which man lies under in consequence of his awful departure from God, is that he should be given over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient, or fit, or as the Master saith, that he should love darkness rather than light.

In accordance with what I have above shown as taught by experience, of the fitness and propriety of men's being thus humbled before God, the Apostle speaks of the goodness of God, that is, in the riches of His goodness, forbearance, &c., toward man, leading him to repentance, or in other words, as naturally tending to produce in him humbleness and contrition of heart, if he rightly viewed himself, but that instead of its having this proper effect, he, after his hardness and impenitent heart, treasurest up unto himself wrath against the day of wrath, &c. See Rom.2:4-5. Now I understand the Old School doctrine thus to teach the natural fitness that all men, to be consistent with truth, should be abased and penitent before God as transgressors of His law. And farther, I understand it to be in accordance with Old School doctrine for a person, when he knows of another's committing any sin, whether he be regenerated or not, to exhort him to repent of that sin, as Peter exhorted Simon, Acts 8:22. But this exhortation will of course with propriety, be nothing other than a persuading of the person to use that light which God has given him, relative to this sin, whether that be the light of reason, or of grace. Such exhortations however must not be considered as, peculiarly a part of the ministerial office. If the above comes up to what others would import by saying that it is the duty of the unregenerate to repent, let them have this phrase, to convey the idea that men can or are required of themselves to exercise that repentance which is unto life, or that it is their duty to exercise repentance as a part of legal righteousness, or to make amends for a deficiency in that righteousness, or as a condition proposed by the gospel, in either of these senses the Old School doctrine does not represent it to be the duty of the unregenerate to repent.

Although I have already drawn out this subject to what many will think an unprofitable and unreasonable length, yet I cannot as I have entered upon it, feel satisfied without pursuing the enquiry as to what PART II. The branch of the above enquiry now before us is, What constitutes preaching repentance both under the day spring, and the sun rising of the gospel day? The day spring of course comes first, and under this we find both John and Christ preaching, saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." In order to come to a proper understanding of the import and design of this preaching, it is necessary to refer back to the peculiar standing of the Jews. I have already remarked on another branch of this inquiry, that the law of Ten Commands in the letter of them, were given in covenant form to national Israel. Connected with these commands and as conditions of the same covenant, was the observance of the whole Jewish ritual as commanded by Moses. In the offering of sacrifices and in other rites, repentance or an acknowledgment of guilt and condemnation was implied and taught; also the hearing and reception of the Messiah, when He should come, was commanded. Deut. 18:15-19. Hence the "foundation of repentance from dead works" is named, Heb.6:1,2, among the principles or first rudiments of the doctrine of Christ, which the believers from among the Hebrews were called upon to leave. Hence also when Messiah came, it was according to the Divine and revealed plan of His manifestation, that He should first present Himself to the Jews, nationally, for their reception or rejection; on the principles of the Sinai Covenant. Hence it is said, Christ "came to His own and they received Him not," &c. John 1:11. It was as I understand it, in accordance with this arrangement, and the provisions of the Sinai Covenant, that John came preaching repentance and that Christ preached it; and also that the Seventy were sent two and two to give notice of His coming, or that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. They preached repentance to show that according to the order of Messiah's kingdom, and to what had been figuratively taught in the Sinai ritual, repentance, and not self-righteousness, was requisite to a right reception of the Messiah, and to entering into His kingdom. They called upon them thus to repent upon the principles of that covenant under which they as a nation in a peculiar manner existed, and according to which Christ thus first presented Himself to them as the Messiah for their reception or rejection. It is true, as

Brother Beebe said, in his remarks on repentance, that a special design of John's being sent preaching repentance was "to make ready a people prepared of the Lord." But still I think John's preaching, saying Repent, &c., was addressed to the Jews nationally upon the principles of their covenant; and that it was thus left to the Holy Spirit, whose province it peculiarly is, to make manifest the "people prepared of the Lord," to lead such through John's preaching to be convinced of their sinfulness and just condemnation, and to hope for the immediate manifestation of the Messiah; and as a fruit of their repentance, to renounce their self- righteousness, and their dependence on, having Abraham for their father, for justification; and were accordingly prepared to come to John's baptism as a baptism - not of self- righteousness for justification, but of "repentance for the remission of sins." Hence in the text already quoted, John 1:11, after it is said "He came to His own, that is nationally, and His own received Him not, it is further declared that to as many as received Him, to them gave He power, &c., which were born not of blood," &c. Thus showing that their being distinguished thus from the nation, was peculiarly of God. From this view of this subject, Pedobaptists may think it consistent to preach repentance according to John's manner of preaching, because they imagine their children to have been brought in under the Abrahamic covenant; but surely no consistent Baptist will think of blending the principles of the Sinai covenant with the gospel ministry in calling upon men to repent as a self-preparation for receiving the gospel.

I will now come to the preaching of repentance under the sun rising of the gospel day. On this point we have a plain direction in Luke 24:47, where Christ after His resurrection teaches His disciples that, "Repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." This I understand to be the particular instruction given how repentance is to be preached since the ascension of Christ.

1st. It is to be preached in His - Christ's - name. Not in Moses' name. Not as a demand of the law; nor as John preached it to the Jews on the principles of the Sinai covenant. Neither does preaching repentance in the name of Christ, consist with calling upon men to repent, for this implies that the repentance called for is such as the natural man can exercise, or the reflections of the natural mind will produce. Hence this preaching tends to build men up in the notion of their own ability and to satisfy them with such repentance as they are capable of exercising; and therefore tends to produce in their minds the very reverse to that repentance which Christ gives, a being abased in the dust as guilty, ruined, helpless sinners.

Repentance is truly preached in the name of Christ, when the law in its exceeding broadness, unchangeableness and spirituality as taught and illustrated by Christ, and established by the gospel is preached, as cutting off all human works as the ground of acceptance with God, "Stopping every mouth and presenting all the world as guilty before God." This is the preaching which, when the heart is opened by the Holy Ghost to receive it, and by Him applied, produces the fruits of genuine repentance, namely: a being stripped of all self glorying and self confidence and an abhorring of one's self and being humbled as in dust and ashes. But further in preaching repentance in the name of Christ, as He is "exalted as a Prince and a Saviour for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins," the sensible sinner [text obscured in original] should be pointed to Christ as Him who alone can melt his heart and give him that repentance which needeth not to be repented of. And the intimate connection between this repentance, and the receiving of the forgiveness of sins, must be clearly held forth; so that none, on the one hand shall indulge in the hopes of experiencing pardoning mercy through Christ, unless brought to know and feel the odiousness and exceeding sinfulness of sin; and on the other hand, that those who are mourning over their own vileness and ruin may be encouraged to hope for the forgiveness of their sins through Christ. Now I will leave it to Brother Meredith and others who have been alarmed at the cry against our Old School preachers, that they do not preach repentance to sinners, to judge whether the above described kind of preaching; or the calling upon the unregenerate to repent and the trying to scare them to it by dwelling on the horrors of hell, and thus leading them to infer that repentance is a bodily exercise, a mere excitement of the passions, appears the most consistent with gospel doctrine and preaching, and the most like preaching true "repentance toward God." But there is another point which it is incumbent on me to notice before I quit this subject, namely; Acts 17:30. "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent." We must first notice the import of the expression now commandeth. If the obligation of the Gentiles to repent, rests upon this command, as a new law then instituted, as those who dwell so much upon this text seem to intimate, then their previously gross idolatry afforded no just ground for repentance, and they were guiltless in practicing it. But such a conclusion is entirely inconsistent with Paul's view of their case given, Rom.

Pocket Trott 1.0 318 of 1338

1:18-32. The true import of this expression as connected with the idea that God had heretofore winked at the times of this ignorance, appears to me to be this, namely: That although hitherto the law of Ten Commands as designed to teach the knowledge of sin, was confined mostly to the Jews, while the Gentiles were left without any special revelation to teach them their sins; yet now under the gospel dispensation, this law as connected with the gospel proclamation was "to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," showing the absurdity and wickedness of idolatry, and the guilt and condemnation of all as transgressors of the divine law. Hence wherever the gospel came among the Gentiles thus accompanied with the proclamation of the law, those Gentiles whose hearts were opened to receive the word, were led to renounce all their hopes arising from those idolatrous rites which they had performed and to fall prostrate before God as guilty sinners, needing His pardoning mercy; as were the Jews stripped of their legal righteousness. And not only this, but God is so revealed in the external testimony of the law and the gospel as human reason becomes convinced comes are more or less made to feel that they are dependent on, and accountable to the living God. In accordance with this view of the import of this text, I will add that the primary idea of the word here rendered command, is to instruct, teach, direct, and hence also it came to be used to denote commanding as one mode of directing; it further signifies to give notice or warning, &c. Hence I understand the text as designed, not to intimate that under the gospel God had instituted a new command or law for the Gentiles, or laid them under a new obligation to exercise repentance; but to show the bearing and effect the gospel proclamation as embracing an illustration of the spirituality of the law was designed to have upon all people, and that it was thus addressed to all, in distinction from what was the case under the former dispensation.

Lastly, the subject of prayer, or the enquiry whether it is the duty of the unregenerate to pray, demands attention. If the charge that Old School Baptists "believe it is not the duty of the unregenerate to pray," is designed to convey the idea that they do not hold, or preach that it is the duty of unregenerate persons, or right for them, to read or say over a form of prayer, as a regular or occasional task, and as means of salvation, or a condition of acceptance with God, whilst their hearts are insensible of the wants their words express; every consistent Old School Baptist, and every other person who knows the wickedness of mocking God with lip service, while the heart is far from Him, must plead guilty to this charge. But as this charge imports that we do not admit it right for any person, under a sense of his dependence on God and feeling his need of divine mercy or aid in any case to ask God for it; I think the charge is false. I for one believe it right for anyone to pray to God for any aid or mercy that he truly feels the need of, and is authorized by the Scriptures to believe that God bestows upon the sons of men.

To say it is the duty of unregenerate persons to pray, as a form of worship is to say that God requires of them that worship which is neither spiritual, nor from the heart. But Christ informed the woman of Samaria that, "God is a Spirit and they that worship Him, must worship Him in Spirit and in truth." John 4:24. But for a person to pray, not as a form of worship, but simply to ask God for mercy because he feels he needs it, is the privilege of any; hence Peter exhorts Simon to pray God, if perhaps the thought of his heart might be forgiven him; under the impression, undoubtedly, that Simon from the sharp rebuke and warning he had given him, would see and feel the wickedness of his thought and the need of forgiveness.

I have thus traveled over a good deal of ground upon these subjects, whether Brother Meredith will be any better satisfied than with Brother Beebe's brief explanation, I know not. The confusion into which these subjects have been thrown by conditionalists and their use of them, seemed to require a general and particular examination of them. I cannot say that after all I have said, and my anxiety to place the subjects in a clear light, I have succeeded to any degree.

But I leave it. God may enable some others to set the subject in a clearer light, or may lead some to comprehend the ideas, I have attempted to convey; and if they are wrong to show the right. Yours in the gospel of Christ,

Samuel Trott

SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.7 (1839)

REMARKS ON DANIEL 8-12

Remarks designed to show the proper and extended application of the prophecies contained in Daniel from chapters 8 to 11, inclusive, with a particular reference to the texts chapter 8.13-14 And 12.7-12.

NUMBER 2

Brother Beebe: I will now continue and conclude my remarks on the above-named subject.

To establish, if possible, more clearly the position I have taken on this subject: that Antiochus is presented in these prophecies of Daniel as typical of, or as representing Mohammedan Antichrist, in distinction from the western Antichrist, I will just glance at some of the characteristics given of Antiochus, and show their strict correspondence with the Mohammedan interest. 1st. Antiochus is represented as a vile person, standing up in the Kingdom, "to whom they should not give the horns of the kingdom," but that he should come up in peaceably, Chapter 11.21. Antiochus had been a hostage at Rome and in that sense, he might be spoken of as a vile person, or as coming to the throne from a low origin, otherwise he was a son of the preceding king. But of Mahomet, this is all strictly true. He was of a low origin, he hatched up his system of religion in obscurity; when he undertook to develop his religion at Mecca, where he resided, the citizens were so enraged against him, that he fled to Medina for safety; here he was allowed to teach his religion, and having by persuasion, flatteries, obtained the number of followers, he armed them, and sallying forth, he overran as with the swarms of a flood, the whole of Arabia and the adjacent countries, subduing all before him, according to what is said, verse 28. He also according to verse 24, scattered among the people the prey, spoil, etcetera. Both the government he established and his religion, are a system of rapine and plunder, and he taught his followers, to live thereby. As Antiochus was grieved with the ships of Chittim coming against him, that is Roman ships, (verse 30) the Mohammedan powers were disturbed by the Crusades from Europe. And as Antiochus returned to Jerusalem with greater indignation, and polluted the temple, (verse 30-31) sold the Turks, a Mohammedan people, retook Jerusalem from The Crusaders, built a splendid mosque on the site of the former temple; Turned the most prominent places of professed Christian worship into mosques, stationed janizaries there to prevent either Jews or Christians from entering those places of worship; to extort tribute from all who visit Jerusalem for religious purposes; And who keep the Jews that from attachment to their country still reside there, in the most oppressed and abject state. Again what is said of Antiochus versus 37-38. "Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers nor the desire of women; But you'll honor the god of forces," is strikingly illustrative of Mohammed and his religion. He brought a new order of religion, a new order which had not been known. His religion degrades females to a state of mere slavery; Even denies their having souls. It honors the God of forces or war. He taught that "the sword is the key of heaven and of hell, a drop of blood shed in the cause of God, or a night spent in arms is of more available than two months of fasting and prayer, whosoever falls in battle his sins are forgiven in the day of judgment. "Edom and Moab and the chief of the children of Ammon shall escape out of his hands," verse 41. By these may be understood the tribes of wandering Arabs, as they composed in part of the descendants of these nations; And although they have embraced Mohammedanism, they have never been brought into subjection to the Turkish or otherwise established governments. The planting of the tabernacles of his palaces, between the seas in their glorious holy mountain, (verse 45) in reference to Antiochus, could mean nothing more than his building a tower on Mount Zion to overlook the temple and give his soldiers power to prevent any from entering it. But in reference to the Turks, they have their most splendid mosque on the spot where the temple once stood, and have their Janezaries there to control all worship in Jerusalem. And it may indeed refer more fully to what may yet take place, that the Turks being driven from Constantinople, may establish the seat of their government at Jerusalem, for the space that will remain unto them under being driven from Constantinople: from the year 1844 to 1872, when, "they shall come to their end, and none shall help them." Thus it is seen, that these descriptions given of Antiochus, seem as if designed more particularly for Mohammedanism. But were we to undertake to apply this description to the western Antichrist, we should find it not corresponding in any one important particular. From the whole view of the subject, I think it very manifest that Antiochus in these prophecies, is intended as a representation of the Eastern Antichrist; And not of the Western.

I will now notice the proposed texts. The first is that contained in Daniel 8.13-14. In this passage, we have, first an inquiry, "How long shall be division concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden underfoot?" Notice that this inquiry embraces the period of the transgression going before as the cause of the desolation, as well as the period of the desolation. Secondly, we have the answer, "unto 2300 days; Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." This. As relating to Antiochus polluting the temple, must be taken literally. 2300 days, at 360 days to the year would be six years and four months and two days. The period from the time that Antiochus set up his image on the altar and prohibited the Jews from going into worship until the temple was retaken and cleansed by Judas Maccabaeus, was but three years old in 10 days. But if we go back to the transgressions, occasioned by the corruptions brought in by Menelaus who had obtained the high priesthood by treachery and bribery from Antiochus, we shall find the 2300 days fully made out. Whether this. Was designed only to be understood literally, and to be applied to Antiochus's persecution, I am unable with certainty to say. But from the manner in which it is given, and from the circumstance that Antiochus appears so manifestly to have been typical of the Mohammedan Antichrist, one would suppose that it was designed to point out the whole period of the transgression and scattering of the Jews since the time of the Babylonian captivity. All the time I wrote the letters on the image of the beast, I considered it as having this further reference. But I then supposed it, as well as to. In 12.7, to have reference to the duration of the western Antichrist. And from the fact that the Persian as well as the Grecian monarchies are presented to view in this vision, eight. I inferred the period of 2300 years represented by the 2300 days, must be dated from the commencement of the 70 weeks or 490 years of Chapter 9, which terminated with the death of Christ. Thus dating the 2300 years and allowing for four years of error in the date of the Christian era, it would terminate in the year 1842, and I suppose it might thus point out the time of the slaying of the witnesses. But in this calculation, as before noticed, I was mistaken both in applying it to the romish Antichrist and in dating it from the commencement of the 490 years; For the expression of the text, "then shall the sanctuary be cleansed," in this anti typical application of it, can intend nothing less than the cleansing of the Jewish people according to Ezekiel 36.24-31; And indeed it most likely refers to the full cleansing of the whole house and land of israel, after the destruction of the army of God, according to Ezekiel 39. But in such application of this prophecy, there is a serious difficulty in determining the proper date from whence this period commences. The beginning of the 70 weeks, that is, from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, chapter 25, is evidently too early a date. The cleansing supposed above to be intended cannot take place until after the destruction of the Mohammedan power in Asia, and that manifestly, will not take place for several years. If we were to suppose this period to commence with the time of Antiochus's persecution, as that was only 169 years before the Christian era, it would extend this. On to 2131 AD; a much later period than other prophecies seemed to allow us to suppose the restoration of the Jews will be deferred to. I know of no discrimination given in scripture of the time when this. Commenced, unless indeed what the Angel says, Daniel 10.13, is designed as a clue to it. It is this, "but the Prince of the Kingdom of Persia withstood me one and 20 days." I never could suppose that literally this heavenly messenger being sent to teach Daniel, could have been hindered in his journey, 1 and 20 days, by the Prince of the Kingdom of Persia; hence the passage has been a very difficult one to meet. Were we to admit that this was designed to mark the commencement of the 2300 years, then as Alexander entered Asia 326 BC or 352 BC and from this, we may date the reign of the goat or Grecian monarchy. I must answer that I cannot point to any particular event in the history of the Jews as that., which can with certainty be said to be the beginning of the transgression of desolation. But the following considerations will I think afford very probable reasons for the periods then commencing. 1st. As was before shown, this. Includes the time of the transgression which occasioned the desolation, as well as the time of the desolation. 2nd. The former part of the Persian monarchy was occupied by the Jews returning from the Babylonian captivity, the rebuilding of their temple and the city, and the reestablishment of in their natural privileges and the observance of their laws. As this was therefore the conclusion of one period of chastisement there is certainly a propriety discoverable in this part of the Persian monarchy not being included in the period of the future desolation. 3rd. Nehemiah died 420 years before Christ, and Malachi's prophecy is dated at about 390 before Christ. Now from the instructions and reproofs of these, and Ezra and others who preceded, we may suppose that Jews were kept from the transgression of desolation; and indeed that their instructions and influence would extend to the restraining them in a great measure during the succeeding generation which would bring them down to the year 353 before Christ. And from the general history of those people in all preceding ages, we might expect them again by that time to be growing restless under the restrictions of the Sinai covenant. 4th. Eliasbib Who was a high priest in the time of Nehemiah, was succeeded by Joida, and he again by Jonathan, Jonathan was murdered in the temple. This looks like transgression which would ultimately cause desolation, Matthew 23.29-36. The time of the death of these several high priests is not known; but it would not be unreasonable to suppose that the priesthoods of the three might have occupied the 67 or rather 70 years which intervened between the death of Nehemiah and a year 353 before the Christian era, at which. We date the beginning of the 2300 years. The above considerations may appear to be good reasons why that. Should thus include 21 years, and no more, of the Persian monarchy. But another objection might be made to this application of the passage in chapter 10.13. On the ground that the one was spoken in the vision and the period of 2300 days was given in another period but in answer to this, I need only to say that both visions relate to the same subject, the desolation of the Jews under Antiochus, and of course under his antitype. And it is plain that in both visions, the Persian monarchy seems but touched so as to introduce the Grecian.

In the texts Daniel 12.7-12 to which I now come, we have 3 periods of different lengths given. The first, a time, times and a half, prophetically answering to 1260 years; The second, to 1290 years; And a third, to 1355 years. It is presumable that these periods commence on the same date, said to be (verse 11,) "from the time the daily sacrifice be taken away and the abomination that makes desolation set up." In chapter 8.13, the expression is somewhat varied as has been noticed; it is the transgression of desolation. In chapter 9.26, we read, that, "the people of the Prince shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, And the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined." In verse 27 "and for the overspreading of abomination, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation and the determined shall be poured upon the desolate." By the people of the Prince, we are evidently to understand the Roman armies that came against Jerusalem. And by the expression, for the overspreading of abomination, we may understand the Roman standards as placed upon, or round the walls of Jerusalem. Hence the declaration of our Lord, Matthew 26.15, "When you therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel, the prophet, stand in the holy place." But while these expressions according to our Lord's own application of them, referring immediately to the Roman standards, as being abominable to the Jews, both on account of their being the ancient of foreign government, and that of the images on them, and when planted in the holy place indicative of the desolation speedily coming upon their city and nation; yet the further remarks in those verses 26 and 27 of Daniel chapter nine. "Unto the end of the war desolations are determined;" and "he shall make it desolate even until the consummation and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate," can import nothing less that the continued desolation upon that people even down to this day. For the war then commenced against them, in its bearing upon that nation has not yet ended. When since the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans to this time, had the Jews, though existing as a distinct people, been acknowledged in their national rights, or has any nation made treaties of peace and amity with them? And when have ceased to be poured upon them, in their desolation the judgments determined, or denounced against them? That the commencement of the periods under consideration could not have been when the Roman armies encompassed Jerusalem, is evident from the above remarks, for the longest of these periods, dated then would have terminated as early as 1405 AD. We must therefore seek another abomination that makes desolate the Jews, being in its effects a continuation of the other, as being the one intended in this instance. Such we find in the Mohammedan standard. For its merits consideration, the Roman flag continued to wave over Jerusalem, that is, Judea continued in subjection to that government, in the eastern division of the empire, until it was taken by the Mohammedans, and the Crescent took the place of the Roman equal or cross; With two exceptions which I shall notice. 1st. The king of Persia took Jerusalem from the Romans in 613AD, but it was retaken by the emperor of the eastern division, in 627; nine years after, that is in 636 according to the account before me, it was taken by the Mohammedan khalif omar. Although it has been taken and retaken repeatedly by one and another of the contending Mohammedan khalifs, it has remained in the possession of the Mohammedans from the time it was taken by Omar until now, with the exception of the time The Crusaders had an in possession, which was about 90 years. But the possession of it by The Crusaders neither relieved the Jews, nor the country at all from desolation.

One circumstance which may be considered an attempt to remove the desolation of the Jews I will notice. The emperor Julian about 350AD or 300 AD assembled the Jews to Jerusalem to rebuild their temple, with the design, to give the lie to the prediction of our savior, but, as we are assured by the historians, in their attempts to clear away the rubbish, they were completely frustrated; Globes of fire are rising from the ruins drove off the workmen. From the whole then, Mohammed setting up his religion, alike abominable to Jews, and Christians, and erecting his standard, may be considered the abomination that makes desolate, of our text; It is that power which has stood in the way of the Jews gaining the possession and occupancy of their own land, since the fall of the roman standard in Judea.

The Mohammedans reckon their era from 612 AD, as being the beginning of their religion and power, some say from 622, though the other is the more general chronological date given. Allowing then the period in verse 7, to commence with 612 AD, being 1260 years represented by the time, times and a half, or three years and a half, and it will terminate in 1872. When the Turkish or Muhammad didn't have power over Judea would most probably be broken. In like manner, the second period of that in verse 11 dated from 612 being 1290 years, will terminate in 1902 AD. At this time it is probable the Jews will generally be gathered to their own land. And the period of 1355 days or years of verse 12 commencing with 612 AD, will terminate in 1947. The same year as I have before shown in the period of 22,300 years will terminate if it commenced 21 years before the beginning of the Grecian or Alexandrian empire in Asia. At the termination of this. It may be expected that the army of Gog will have been destroyed, the land cleansed and the Jews settled in their own land under their own government, and in subjection to the gospel of Christ. Hence the expression in the text, verse 12, "Blessed is he that waits and comes to the 1305 and 30 days." Thus the three periods in this chapter answer to the three great events which yet await the Jews, I think according to the prophecy.

Previous to the termination of this last. If not of the second, the western Antichrist in all its branches, of the 7 horned, and two-horned beasts, and the image will all have been destroyed by the brightness of the Lord's coming, and the fullness of the Gentiles be brought in according to what Paul says Romans 11.25, "that blindness in part has happened to Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles is come in."

I have thus given the conclusions to which my mind has been LED upon re-examination of this subject. Although I make no pretensions to any divine revelation being made to my mind, assuring me of the certainty of these conclusions; from a comparison of scripture with scripture, the old school standard; I feel a good deal of confidence in the correctness of some of these conclusions. Such as that the witnesses will not be killed until after the breaking of the Turkish power in Europe, which will take place in 1844 if the chronological dates we have are correct. I feel equally confident that expositors have committed an error in committing the Eastern and Western Antichrist in their explanations of prophecy. The western Antichrist in its bearings upon the gospel church, with peculiar propriety is principally pointed out in the prophecies of the New Testament; while the eastern Antichrist in its bearing upon, the Jews is particularly the subject of these prophecies in Daniel which we have been considering.

The times of the several periods which have been under consideration relating to their commencements and endings, as given above are such as appear to be consistent with the general tenor of prophecy, and likely to be found correct. There is a difficulty in deciding which certainty on the true periods of prophecy before their accomplishment, both from the manner in which they are given being decidedly obscure and from the uncertainty with regard to the correctness of the chronological dates we frequently have. But the accomplishment of these prophecies will show the correctness or incorrectness of our calculations. The safest way to avoid being mistaken on these points is to wait thus the expositions of divine Providence.

I remain your companion in the tribulations of the gospel,

Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, March 30, 1840

Narration of a Little Affair

Brother Beebe: I believe I will narrate a little affair that has transpired in this vicinity, which goes to show what the new school principals are.

A man by the name of Peter F. Ogilby, having in the course of the years 1833 to 1834, lost to standing with the new school baptists in Powhatan County Virginia, being declared out of the fellowship of Powhatan church, for what they stated to have been immoral conduct, and was subsequently published by the middle district association, in their minutes of 1834, as not being entitled to fellowship from the Baptists until he should return and give satisfaction to the Powhatan church; Undertook to regain a standing by pretending to have been fully converted to the old school doctrine and order, by a perusal of the Signs, and to have been rejected by the Baptists in Powhatan on account of his patronizing the Signs. A letter of his to this effect was published in the Signs, volume to, page 129. These things that in his persecutions, were more fully declared in letters addressed to yourself, Brother Beebe, and me in which he makes the inquiry whether he could obtain standing in any of our old school churches, as he was excluded for patronizing the Signs, and stating that Valentine M. Mason the general agent of the general association raised the hue and cry against him as being a Signs of the Times Man. He received from me in answer to his inquiries encouragement to believe that if he were to move up into this part of Virginia, and could show by certificates that his moral standing was good, he's having been excluded for being an old school baptist, would be no bar to his being received into fellowship by any of our churches. Subsequently, after I had started on a journey to Kentucky in the latter part of that year, he came into this neighborhood, and prevailed on the Bethlehem church to receive him into membership by telling of the persecutions that he pretended he had received for being an old school Baptist, and showing them the letters he had received from yourself and me, and certain certificates which he professed to have received of his good standing as a man; And this without their waiting for his removal among them.

Early in 1837, I received a letter from Elder John Wooldridge pastor of the Powhatan church, requesting of me information whether Peter F. Ogleby had been received into membership by one of the churches which I serve, and what statement he made to induce them to receive him, as he had been excluded by the Powhatan church for unchristian and immoral conduct. In a postscript, he mentioned having understood that Mister Ogilby had stated he was excluded on account of his faith, and he averse it was not so that his faith was not mentioned in the affair, but that he was excluded for wicked conduct. After receiving an answer from me Elder Wooldridge sent me a copy of the middle district minutes, containing the action of that association on the case. The affair was laid before the Bethlehem church a correspondence between the church and Mr. Ogilby and others took place on the case, and in consequence of his protracted correspondence, his exclusion by the Bethlehem church was delayed, until Ogilvy I presume concluded the church would not exclude him, he moved up with his family into this neighborhood; And the church then concluded to wait still longer before they acted definitely on the case, to give him an opportunity to show by his preaching and conduct whether his statements or those of others were true. But he soon began to leak out in his preaching away from the church his Arminianism And to resort to his old business of horse swapping, in which he was not over-scrupulous in always stating the truth until the church became convinced that he was no old-school Baptist and that he had deceived them on that point, and hence were satisfied that the statement of Elder Wooldridge was correct as to the ground of his being disowned by the Powhatan church. The pestilence church therefore declared a withdrawal of fellowship from him on the grounds of his having deceived them both in reference to his being in reality new school in sentiment, and having been excluded for immoral conduct. Still, however, he went on appointing his meetings and both preaching and marrying, in open violation of the laws of Virginia and was countenanced therein by the new school Baptists, excluded Baptists and numbers of the world, thus making manifest how well prepared the worldlings of this day are many of them, to give their support to anything calculated to put down old school Baptist doctrine and order. But that to which I had special reference in writing this, is that elder L. Marters a preacher who had some standing in Westmoreland County, and in the Dover association, and who could not have been ignorant from the proximity of the two associations and the correspondence between them of the fact of Ogilvies having been published in the minutes of the middle district association as a man out of fellowship. Or if even he had forgotten or overlooked that thing in the minutes of that association still here the ground of Ogilby's exclusion had been repeatedly and publicly declared, and if he doubted the statement and wished to observe anything like the order he could easily have had access to the minutes of that association for satisfaction. Elder Marders Moved into this neighborhood last winter, and immediately takes Ogilby by the hand and unites him in keeping up and carrying on meetings, and even in constituting a church or what they call such, out of several excluded members, one of whom had been living in exclusion and his life justifying it, for 14 or 15 years. Now if elder Marders and other new school Baptists in this vicinity fairly represent their party, then one of two things is true of their principles, either that a man's having deceived an old school church and got into it, and after his deception is discovered, is rejected, is sufficient ground for the new school to take him into favor and fellowship, though he stands excluded for immoral conduct from one of their own churches and associations. Or else that because they find a man away from the neighborhood where he was excluded, and they have use for him as an instrument to make up a party against the old school cause, they will thus employ him though it is by trampling upon the discipline of their own churches, and in face of the fact of the individuals having slandered their churches and associations, and general agent in order to deceive an old school baptist church. Mr. Marders And his friends are welcome to take either horn of the dilemma they choose. I do not pretend to have made a Full disclosure of Ogilby's conduct; For instance, Elder Woolridge stated in his letter that this man had been three times excluded in about 10 or 12 years, and each time for wicked conduct.

But enough has been said to show elder Marders and his party in not a very favorable light as to principle.

Yours as ever,

Samuel Trott

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, June 23, 1840

ELDER OSBOURN: HIS CHARGE OF SABELLIANISM, &c.

BROTHER BEEBE: - As the several pieces published in the SIGNS on the occasion of Elder James Osbourn's charging the Old School Baptists of the West with Sabellianism, have raised guite a resentment against you and the SIGNS on account thereof, from certain quarters; and as I was the first to call this subject up to the notice of our brethren, I feel disposed to say something further on the matter. I shall not attempt a defense of all which has been said through the SIGNS on the occasion. And indeed those letters of brother Saunders which have been so much denounced call for no defense. If after the repeated acknowledgements published by brother Saunders for certain expressions used in those letters, and the declaration made by brother Beebe, (SIGNS, volume 8, pg.15,) that previous to the publishing of those letters, brother Saunders had requested him to correct the unquarded expressions used in them; and that he had failed to do it in consequence of being unavoidably absent when they went to press, persons will denounce the SIGNS on account of those expressions, as the Woburn and North Berwick churches have done in their letters published by Elder Osbourn in his recent pamphlet, they may as well be let alone to denounce on, until they come to a temper which will dispose them to receive a brother's acknowledgements.

At the time I called upon our western brethren to notice the charge Elder Osbourn had published against them, I did not design engaging myself in any discussion on the subject; but as, owing to the abuse poured forth, I feel disposed to take up my pen as a friend of the SIGNS and of our Old School cause, I may, before I close, touch the whole matter in debate, and also show mine opinion. The first thing I shall notice is the very uncandid course taken by Elder Osbourn and his special friends to impress the public mind that the present excitement has grown out of an attack of I.T. Saunders and the SIGNS on Elder Osbourn, as a servant of God. Whereas the plain state of the case, as we shall further show, is that it has arisen from an attempt of Elder Osbourn to brand the Old School cause as connected with the SIGNS, through our western brethren, with the charge of Sabellian heresy, and the opening of the pages of the SIGNS by brother Beebe, to the brethren thus directly charged, to show the injustice of such charge. Previous to Elder Osbourn's pamphlet coming out, Mr. Booth of Dayton, Ohio, wrote a communication for the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE, in which he attempted to lead the attention of his readers off from Elder Osbourn's unchristian like charge, to brother Saunders' letter, which was designed originally as a private friendly communication to Elder Osbourn; and construing that letter about as uncandidly as Elder Osbourn himself has done, he has endeavored therefrom to fix upon brother Saunders; 1st, Osbourn's charge of Sabellianism; and 2nd, censure for presuming to make any objections to Osbourn's mode of expressing himself, and especially as Osbourn is so experimental and spiritual a man. Having noticed Mr. Booth's communications, I will add, that apparently to settle the point in dispute, it is a little amusing that he should give an extract from Romaine which strikes a blow at the fundamental and most objectionable point of Osbourn's system. Romaine as represented in that extract, separate from his use of the term person, and his telling more about the Eternal Three's entering into a covenant agreement among themselves, than the scriptures do, has given guite a correct view of the design of the term Father, Son and Holy Ghost as designating the Three. His language is, "They took these names, not to describe the manner in which they exist, but their manner of acting; not what they are in themselves, but how they stand related to us in the economy of Redemption, &c." What then becomes of Osbourn's position relative to the term person, as on page 43 of his Calm Investigation; namely, "that it is expressive of that perfection of the divine nature whereby it subsists three different ways, as in the Father, and in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, each of which persons possessing the divine essence after his peculiar manner, thereby becomes a distinct person;" that is, the Son being a begotten god in distinction from the others, and the Holy Ghost being a breathed forth god, &c.

But to return to the enquiry as to where the fault lies in this case, let us notice the facts as they have transpired: 1st. Elder Osbourn in preaching at the Miami Association in 1837, expressed himself in such a way as, in the estimation of brother Saunders, and others, to convey the idea that the Three were three gods. Brother Saunders believing that Osbourn did not in reality hold what his words implied, and that the using of such terms unexplained, would injure his usefulness, he immediately wrote an affectionate letter to Osbourn for the purpose of trying to show him the impropriety of expressing himself in so strong terms on that point, &c. The spirit of this letter shows for itself, as it is now published. The greatest fault in the letter, in my estimation, is its containing too much flattery; but Saunders was evidently induced to speak in the highest terms he could of Osbourn's preaching, in order to prepare the way for touching the other point without giving offence. Now I appeal to the candor of any man who has not embraced the idea that Elder Osbourn is something higher than the ordinary gifts which the Great Head of the Church bestows for the work of the ministry, to say if there was anything wrong in Brother Saunders addressing that letter to Osbourn, under those circumstances. Was it not brotherly in him to do so?

And ought not Osbourn, if he considered himself in any wise amenable to his brethren for the sentiments he advanced among them, to have thanked brother Saunders for his kindness in this, although he dissented from his views? But Saunders used in that letter some very unquarded expressions in illustrating the subject. True, he did; and Osbourn and he had shortly after an interview on the subject, and an explanation, and Saunders here considered the matter as dropped, ought not Osbourn to have so considered it? But no, Elder Osbourn treasured up those expressions for after use. He occasionally showed this letter to a few where he thought it would have effect. He also communicated those objectionable expressions, perverting entirely their application from that which Saunders manifestly designed in their use, and representing him as using them in reference to the doctrine of the Trinity, to a certain Dutch Reformed Minister, in two letters together with inferences therefrom of his own, and charges of Sabellianism founded thereon, against the Old School Baptists of the West indiscriminately. Whether he expected his Paedobaptist brother to communicate these letters for publication in some Paedobaptist journal, or not, I cannot say. But one thing I can say; namely, that the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE having gotten into extensive circulation, and from the flattering respect it had paid to his communications and other publications, and he having flattered it and its conductor much in several communications, and apparently concluding that here was a periodical that would serve his interest, and having laid claim to it as such by asserting that "I have nothing to do with any other periodical at present, nor do I intend to have, &c.," (ADVOCATE, Vol.2, pg.246,) he sends on copies of those letters containing the charge against the western Old School Baptists to be circulated thereby abroad. From all the circumstances connected therewith, I do feel justified in entertaining the belief that he intended by thus throwing a firebrand into the ranks of the Old School Baptists to scatter them, and draw off a party who should follow his lead, having the ADVOCATE for their flag; and those who would not thus rally around his standard, were to be published before the whole host of the Philistines as heretics, graceless professors, dry breasts, &c. Now I again appeal to common candor to say whether on the principle of his having in any way identified himself with Old School Baptists, it was christian-like or honest for Elder Osbourn thus to put afloat among a denomination on which we cannot recognize as belonging to the visible gospel church, a charge of gross heresy of the Sabellian kind against the Old School Baptists, limited only to the bounds of what he calls the far west, and afterwards to publish the same through the ADVOCATE. See the number for June, volume 2, page 367. Was not this an attack of the most wanton kind, founded as it was upon an individual's expostulating with him upon the use of certain terms, in a private and friendly way?

And I, a third time appeal to common candor to say whether those assailed brethren ought not to be allowed to come forward in their own defense, even though it was against the eminent servant of God, Elder Osbourn? And was it anything more than common justice in Brother Beebe to open the pages of the SIGNS to those brethren to publish in their defense, seeing his paper is devoted to the Old School Baptist cause? I am well aware there are Old School Baptists, who seem to think that Elder Osbourn must be allowed the privilege of labeling individual preachers, in standing among the Old School Baptists as dry breasts, and of charging whole communities of Old School Baptists with being graceless professors and gross heretics, and no reply must be attempted lest the unity of the Old School for myself.

Having mentioned my belief of Elder Osbourn's intention to make the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE the flag of his party, it is but justice to add that in this I imagine that he is mistaken; and that Elder Jewett, by the impartial course he has pursued relative to this affair, since the first error of admitting such unqualified charges against the Old School Baptists, and which was undoubtedly occasioned by the confidence he had reposed in Elder Osbourn, will find himself a sharer with Old School Editors in Elder Osbourn's resentment. Elder Jewett has admitted communications into the ADVOCATE on the Trinity, far more liberal than Elder Osbourn would allow, and giving I think a better view of the subject than his. See the sermon of Mr. Burder's furnished by Elder Herrick, in the number for February, 1840. Mr. Burder says, "We are not bound to adopt the mode of expression used or enforced by any particular divines or churches. Some good men in their attempts to explain the doctrine have rather perplexed it.

Some good men have said the Father is the fountain of Deity, that he communicated his whole essence to the Son, that the Son is eternally begotten of the Father, and that he is very God of very God, &c." See pages 186 & 187. Is not this passage directly opposite to Elder Osbourn's high stand, that all must be held as Sabellians who will not adopt his mode of expression that there are Three proper and distinct persons in the Godhead? And does not Mr. Burder think those persons, rather perplex the doctrine of the Trinity who talk of the Son being eternally begotten, that is, as God, that he is very God of very God? And yet this is a prominent point in Elder Osbourn's adopted theory. Again, whilst Mr. Burder would justify the use of the term person in relation to the Divine Three, he admits that it is not scriptural and that it conveys an idea somewhat too gross. He adds, "But we contend not for the word, but the thing. It is enough for us to say with the text, There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost." How does this comport with Elder Osbourn's denouncing all as heretics and unregenerate, all who will not say the Three in the above text are Three persons, or with Mr. Booth's pre-judging that brother Saunders is a Sabellian on the import and design of the names Father, Son and Holy Ghost, with that given by Romaine in the passage already quoted as furnished by Mr. Booth.

But in addition to these pieces published in the ADVOCATE, Elder Jewett, in his editorial on the Tri-unity of Jehovah, in the May, 1840 number, correctly recommends an adherence to simply facts of revealed testimony as the only correct premises for discoursing on this sublime subject, and as being better than all the decisions of wise men and councils. Very different this, from Elder Osbourn's tying us down to the terms he has borrowed from the school-men.

The idea is being much insisted on at this time, by some, that opposition to the sentiments advanced by Old School Baptists should not be allowed in the Old School periodicals, and some have denounced Old School papers (without naming any) on this ground, in more severe language I think than I have seen used on any other occasion by Old School writers against the Old School, excepting in Elder Osbourn's denunciations of our western brethren. But their remarks, if correct, will not apply in this case, for Elder Osbourn has never come into the Old School ranks. His doctrinal views, on many points are the same with those generally advanced by our brethren, and he has ever opposed and been severe against the New School party and measures, but he has never attended any of the general Old School meetings, though held near Baltimore and published long enough beforehand for him to have so ordered his arrangements, had he wished to attend; yea, he has been known to leave Baltimore for a tour on the very week such meetings were to be held in connection with the Baltimore Association. He has manifested nothing more like regarding the principles of fellowship towards the Old School than towards the New School. I do not mean this in reference to controverting their sentiments, for that can be done where fellowship is maintained, but in denouncing them. He has allowed his communications to be published in Old School papers, apparently for the sake of advertising his books, and has himself communicated for the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE, and professed to admire it. This has no doubt led many to suppose he belonged to the Old School ranks. But the fact is, he is and ever has been one by himself, with the exceptions of his keeping a membership in some church, and being associated with certain individuals, without distinction of denomination or regard to church relation. See his correspondence with his Dutch Reformed Brother. I have considered him as more directly identified by himself and them, with a certain peculiar sect who have ever valued themselves on their soundness in doctrine, according to the standard of a class of English authors esteemed high-toned Calvinists. Their peculiarities are; 1st. Strong assurance of their own gracious state, and having more than ordinary unctions of the Holy Spirit; 2nd. Claiming to have special revelations made to them by the Spirit; 3rd. A neglect or disregard for the ordinance of baptism and church relation; 4th. A confident denouncing as graceless professors all who do not warmly approve of them and their standard. The first knowledge I had of this sect was in 1811; it was then composed of six or seven females, among whom was Mrs.

Ann Fradgely and Mrs. Bogart, whose names have appeared in the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE; with Mr. Doughty as their leader. They professed and appeared to have the strongest assurance, as they said communicated by the Spirit to them, that they should live to see the millennium brought in; and that Mr. Doughty was to be, under Christ, the leader in introducing it, as he professed to have his commission, if I recollect right. He used to attend public places, to make known as opportunity offered the speedy approach of the special reign of Christ and the down-fall of sects and governments, &c. I recollect of being at a place where two or three of these ladies were at tea, and hearing them assert that they had the same assurance of living to enjoy the millennium as they had of being subjects of grace; that the knowledge of both was communicated by the same Spirit; if they were deceived in one case they were in the other. So I understand Mr. Doughty contended. They mostly, if not all of them, had separated from Paedobaptist churches; Mr. Doughty and perhaps the others from the Dutch Reformed. They acknowledged believers baptism to be right, but said they were not to submit to it until the coming of the millennium. They, I believe held stated meetings for Mr.

Doughty to expound the scriptures to them, but had no church relation. But after several years Mr. Doughty died without introducing the millennium; I do not recollect in what year, but when I removed back from the West in 1821, he had thus left them in extreme disappointment. They however after a length of time, as I understand, became reconciled, having an explanation wherein Mr. Doughty had been mistaken. About this time one G.H., formerly a member in the 1st Baptist church, was trying to be recognized as a leader among them, though I believe without effect.

Sometime between 1824 & 1826, two or three men who had on one account or another separated from Baptist churches, united with the remaining followers of Mr. Doughty in procuring a place for worship, and Elder Osbourn located himself among them as the preacher of this mixed company of baptized and unbaptized persons and continued with them a year or more, his family remaining in Baltimore. After he left New York they became, I expect, pretty much scattered; though some of them I find, especially Mrs. Fradgley and Mrs. Bogart keep up an intercourse with certain of the Old School party of the Dutch Reformed church, as appears by a correspondence between Mrs. Fradgley and minister C.Z.P., published in the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE, for April 1839; and I presume in conjunction with Elder Osbourn, as he has an intimate intercourse with the same party of that denomination, as evinced by a considerable portion of his correspondence as published in the ADVOCATE. Mrs. Fradgley, after Elder Osbourn made the ADVOCATE the special medium of his correspondence, sent on a letter which was published, but the number containing it I cannot now find, in which she professed that by a vision or special revelation of some kind she was introduced to the knowledge of that periodical, as a cloud from which she would derive some refreshment.

Now to the point of Elder Osbourn's being identified as of this peculiar sect. 1st. As to his soundness according to the standard of certain English authors, and his professing great assurance, like that sect, of being in a gracious state, and of enjoying extraordinary unctions of the Spirit, his writings abundantly testify. 2nd. To his confidently denouncing as graceless professors all who dare to differ from him, his writings and his resentment towards the SIGNS bear full testimony. 3rd. His disregard for the ordinance of baptism in common with that sect, is showed from the following instances. 1st. Previous to his ordination he confessed to the pastor of the church to which he then belonged that he was in favor of mixed communion; hence this pastor would take no part in his ordination, and has from that time been the object of his denunciations. 2nd. In his preface to his first bound volume; (the book I have not, and therefore quote from memory,) he, speaking of others contending for the ordinance of baptism, says, let them give themselves to the tithing of mint and anise, whilst I will attend to the weightier matters of the law. Thus, he contemptuously compared a contending for the ordinance of baptism to the Pharisees tithing mint and anise. 3rd. His consenting to settle down as the preacher to that mixed company in New York is another proof to the point, as his brotherly inheritance with those Paedobaptist preachers is a fourth. 5th. I shall mention, is this: At the time of the division in the Dutch Reformed church, about 1826, a family residing in New Jersey, who had separated from the New School church in that place, had thoughts of joining the Baptists, they were evidently enquiring on the subject. Baptist preachers were invited there to preach. Elder Osbourn being at that time with his party in New York repeatedly visited them and preached; I by invitation once visited them and preached. After this I enquired of a relative of this family on whose information I could rely, whether they had concluded to join the Baptists, and she said no, they had given it up, that Elder Osbourn advised them so to do, the ordinance he said was not material, and in the present state of the church, they would be more comfortable out of connection with the Baptists, than in it.

4th. That Elder Osbourn, in common with that sect, believes in special revelations communicated to him aside from the scriptures, is evident from his letters to C.B. Hassell, published in the SIGNS, Volume 3, numbers 14 & 15. In these numbers he represents the church to be in a sickly and famished state, and makes the positive assertion that this state of things is to last for many years, and that there is to be no persecutions by the sword during that time, and this without giving one scripture as proof, but gives as his authority in the case, this declaration, "I know and am persuaded of the Lord, that my mind has been led into those things by that very Spirit which testified of Christ to my soul many years ago." See Vol.3, page 226. If this is not a plain declaration of having received a special revelation in the case I know not what to make of it; and this aside from the scriptures, for he in the same piece pronounces it a "whim for to undertake to find out this secret by calculations of numbers, times and seasons, &c.," which are given in the scriptures. Does not this then come up to Mr. Doughty's revelation concerning the millennium, and like Doughty, his confidence in it, rests upon the same ground with that of his knowledge of Christ. If the same spirit made both revelations, he must have been mistaken in one case, for the views given concerning the prospects of the church by the two are very different, and how can we know that he was not mistaken in both cases; as Elder Osbourn shows us no miracles in confirmation of his prophecy. If they are allowed to have been different spirits, one is as liable to have been mistaken as the other, from all we know. We have no evidence in favor of Elder Osbourn from a comparison of the spirit and lives of the two men. Mr. Doughty was, separate from his delusion, an example as to a conscientious deportment and amiable walk, with whom Elder Osbourn would not bear a comparison, as I could show, if disposed to run a parallel on certain points.

Hence, as the Old School stand; if I rightly view it, is on the scriptures as a perfect and only rule of faith and practice, Elder Osbourn, and his sect with their new revelations, are as far removed from that stand, as are the New School with their new measures. The Old School brethren profess and gladly feel a dependence on the Holy Spirit to lead their minds to an understanding of the scripture revelations, but not to give them new revelations. And the moment we get beyond the scriptures, we have no standard by which to try the spirits, whether they be of God or not. I noticed Elder Osbourn's special revelation formerly in the same volume of the SIGNS and somewhat to the giving of offence to Elder Osbourn and his friends; but I wished then to test the point whether the SIGNS were to be the medium of new revelations. This if published, may give greater offence. I do not wish to give offence, but as Elder Osbourn has given notice in his pamphlet of making a division in the Old School ranks, if any who read the SIGNS are disposed to follow him, I wish to let them know who they are about to follow, at least in part.

Thus much for Elder Osbourn. S.TROTT. Centerville, Fairfax County, Va., July 6, 1840.

Elder Osbourn - His Charge of Sabellianism Number 2

Brother Beebe: I will now take a brief view of Elder Osbourn's pamphlet, entitled "A Calm Investigation of the Letter written by Deacon Saunders, By James Osbourn V.D.M. Minister of the gospel at Woburn MA." V.D.M. stands for three Latin words signifying a minister of the word of God. I should think a modest man would have been content with fixing to his name, as designating his office, "minister of the gospel act" without adding those scholastic letters, importing the same thing. But I would not have noticed this where it is not that the tautology so apparent in his connection indicates a servile attachment to various schools. But again, as has been intimated concerning elder Osborn's egotism, it may be said that this is a small matter. True it is. Straws, however, show which way the wind blows; and when we see many of them blowing in One Direction, we conclude a pretty strong wind blows that way.

Elder Osborn styles his pamphlet "A Calm Investigation," I am very sorry he has so pronounced it; For when a person writes or speaks manifestly under excitement, some allowance may be made for his misrepresenting the expressions of his antagonist. But when a man calmly perverts the plain import of another's expressions, it looks like a settled purpose to misrepresent him.

Elder Osbourn takes this oft-repeated text as a motto, "he that is first in his own cause seems just but his neighbor comes and searches him out." This might have been appropriate as a heading to the defense of our western brethren; but it is certainly quoted with an ill grace by elder Osbourn, after having been foremost in making so wanted an attack upon them. The adopting of this motto is one of Elder Osbourn's calm attempts to direct the mind of brethren from the method he had taken to correct the error of the western brethren, by publishing them to the petal baptists as heretics and clearly representing that he considered himself a man of God of such dignity as not to be approached by others but with a voice of adulation and praise.

As to the letters of the North Berwick and Woburn churches, with which elder Osbourn has prefaced his pamphlet, I have already said they might as well be let alone, considered as attacks upon the Signs. And I will show now only say concerning them, that I know not whether elder Osbourn dictated the matter of them or not; but this I know, that a worthy and respectable old school Baptist preacher; In the lower parts of Virginia, informed me last winter that elder Osbourn some few years before, had visited him and preached several times among the churches in the neighborhood; and that when about to leave he drew up a letter of recommendation of himself as an able gospel minister, and of the great satisfaction which had resulted to the brethren from his visit amando, and presented it to his brother with the request that he should sign it; and that because this brother refused to do so, he left apparently much offended.

Elder Osbourn denies having said what Brother Saunders Affirms he did in his preaching, "that God the father cannot regenerate a Sinner," and represents Brother Saunders As having stated a falsehood, though he hopes not from a malignant spirit, (see pages 11 and 12 of the pamphlet.) I shall not hear an attempt to decide which has stated the truth in the case. Except many other witnesses agreed to what he stated; And what he may do if he should again recover his eyesight, [with the loss of which, from inflammation, I understand he is at present much afflicted] I cannot see. I however have not believed that either designedly stated a falsehood in the case. We know that persons, not infrequently, and hearing draw what they consider correct inferences from what they hear, and these inferences, in their after reflections, may so blended with the word spoken, that in making a statement on a future occasion of the thing, they may, in honesty of intention, state their own inferences for the word spoken. On the other hand, a preacher may speak under such excited feelings as to use expression stronger than he is aware of, or then he afterward recollects. And as elder Osbourn imagined at the time the Sabellian foxes (as he in his Christian spirit calls them) to be hissing at him, it may well be supposed that he was not a little excited. With the expressions of elder Osbourn as given by Brother Saunders In his letter to him, that it was not the work of God the father, that it was not the business or office of the son the second person, that is to regenerate, I should not myself so much object, were it not for his needless use of the terms second person, and third person in the Holy Trinity. And it was not with his Speaking of the special office work of each of the three, that Brother Saunders In that letter, finds fault; but with what appeared like dividing God into, first, second, and third persons. And I must say that this Speaking of persons and arranging them as first, second, and 3rd in the godhead greats much upon my ear, being too much, not only like dividing God into three but also like appointing to each their respective stations in the godhead. Hence I wonder not that our brethren of the Miami association, accustomed, as I know they have been in times past, to hear their preachers on such points, confined themselves to scriptural modes of expression, should have shuddered at this presumptuous appointing to each of the three his order as 1st, second, etcetera; nor that Brother Saunders Still having confidence in elder Osbourn should have written to him on the subject. I would remark just here, that dead brother Saunders' stating Elder Osbourn's expressions as he did in that letter, is no evidence to me that he did not at the tie, consider them stronger and more offensive; For while in faithfulness he wished as a brother to admonish elder Osbourn on that subject, he evidently wrote the letter under the most conciliating feelings towards him; And I think that most of the children of god know that when actuated by such feelings they are not apt to represent a brothers error. Although Elder Osbourn throughout his pamphlet represents Brother Saunders As having given in his letter the amount of what he said, yet in his letter to his brother of the Dutch Reformed Church, as published in the doctrinal advocate for July 18 39, page 19, we find him making this statement: "in a sermon which I preached at the Miami association, in Ohio, on September 18 37, I had occasion to treat distinctly of the person and work of the Holy Spirit and of the work of each person in the Trinity as that of God the Father the first person, God the Son the second person, and God the Holy Spirit, the third person. Now why appealed to the candor of any man of reflection to say, that there is, if anything there be, in this mode of expression, to prevent a plain man from receiving the idea from it, of the father's being the first God and the son, the second God, and the Holy Ghost, the third God as distinctly as they are three persons. Each is as a God spoken of as a distinct person, having a distinct work, occupying a distinct station, as first, 2nd etcetera, why then does it not represent him as equally distinct gods? It may be given as an answer, and the only answer, that we know elder Osbourn did not mean so. And it is true that persons accustomed to these scholastic expressions do know this. But if he did not mean soul, why did he speak so? And why was Brother spirited right in admonishing him for so speaking? See, for a form of expressions quite as strong, his pamphlet on page 24.

I next come to elder Osbourn censure upon Brother Saunders For inviting him into Ohio, after knowing that he held the doctrine of three persons in the Godhead, which he shows he must have known by quotations from certain of his works as on pages 15 and 16 of the pamphlet. But these quotations show nothing more in elder Osbourn's views of the Trinity, than was held by many other Baptists, with whom the brethren of the Miami association were conversant and in fellowship: that God dwells in a Trinity of persons, the father, the son and the Holy Ghost, who are one in nature, etcetera, and that the Holy Ghost is God, etcetera. Now this circumstance speaks more against the truth of Elder Osbourn's statement concerning the cannots, than against Brother Saunders' candor in inviting him. For if after being acquainted with what elder Osbourn had published on the subject, Brother Saunders So freely invited him to visit them and introduce him to the association, it is almost self-evident that he must have used in his preaching expressions much stronger than his books contained, and more calculated to represent God as divide it into three parts or three gods, or Brother Saunders Would have passed it by, as he had done what the books contained.

Elder Osbourn Persists throughout his pamphlet, in representing, as he had done to his pedo Baptist brother, That Brother Saunders By his use of the words Pa and Tool, Intended to treat with contempt the scriptural doctrine of God's existing as Father, son, and Holy Ghost, three in one. The passage in Brother Saunders' letter containing these expressions, reads thus: "and if it should turn out that Brother Osbourn believes in three gods and we only in one, why the We will find out, private or comment by ministers or lay members. But brother Osbourn, I cannot indulge in the unpleasant thought for a moment that the contrast is so great, As for Brother Osbourn to have two gods more than any of the Baptists in the valley. It must be that by tradition he retains words and terms not extent in the West, which frightens and alarms us to think that there should be three gods, God the father, the highest on the throne; God the son the 2nd distinct person, a step lower, bowing obeisance to his pa, and then the spirit or Holy Ghost, away down lower yet, as the 3rd distinct person last and lowest and inferior God to be sent as a mere servant and tool of the other two gods to finish the work of salvation." Can anyone unprejudiced by Osbourn's representation, read this, and not see at once that Brother Saunders Uses the terms, Pa and tool Of the other two gods to finish the work of salvation to carry out the supposition he had ironically made to illustrate the inconsistency of Osbourn's using such expressions, as first, second and third persons? And was the supposition a farfetched one, seeing Osbourn himself had arranged them as first, second, and third? Notwithstanding this manifest design of Brother Saunders in using these expressions, and his immediately after saying, "Now brother Osbourn, you do not believe and think so diminutively of Jesus the alpha and Omega, nor of the Holy Spirit which is God," thus showing that he had more exalted views of Jesus and the Holy Spirit then to view them as inferior gods and that he had a higher opinion of Osbourn's real belief; elder Osbourn makes this gross perversion of brother Saunders supposition, and represents him as using these expressions in reality of the father, son and Holy Ghost as revealed in the scriptures. If elder Osbourn can resort to such gross perversions, to bridge advice the public mind against old school Baptists and their sentiments, in a CALM INVESTIGATION, I know not what he would do if irritated.

I will now notice Elder Osbourn's remarks, (page 27) on Brother Sanders' saying there is no such scripture as a first-person second person etcetera. Elder Osbourn makes the other reason, on this, a wonderful exclamation, saying, most powerful criticism!! And adds, "but I would not wish to play upon words, nor take any undue advantage of your weakness; But really, Sir, a man whom must needs criticize octopus as some little wisdom. You say there is no such scripture as, the first person, etc. "And is it from hence you conclude that the eternal father is not a person,?" May I not exclaim in return and say, behold, what magnanimity elder Osbourn manifests towards a weak brother, in not taking advantage of his ignorance, in supposing that the scriptures are the standard by which to weigh words used in religious discussions? But to the point of a simple man's reasoning, admitting that brother Saunders made these remarks, not as a criticism, which Osbourn knows he did not, but as an argument, and a plain Christian in reference to Osbourn's reply would say; 1st. Then if he lacked wisdom he would consider it much safer, to hear instruction, from the Lord's mouth and find wisdom (proverbs 8.23) than to look for it from elder Osbourn's scholastic creeds and expositions. 2nd. That to a mind which has ever received the scriptures as the revelation which God has made of himself, the fact that the terms first person, second person, etc, are not found therein, used in reference to God, is a good and sufficient reason why he should not so use them. If elder Osbourn was guided by divine wisdom and fixing to the sacred three, their respective stations as first, second and third, how came Paul to make such a mistake as to reverse disorder, as in 2nd Corinthians 13.14, "the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God," and to make that other mistake, if elder Osbourn's exposition of the texts (Colossians 2.2) is right, (of which I have some doubts,) in which he supposes God to stand personally for the Holy Spirit, thus "of the mystery of God, and of the father, and of Christ?" In the one instance placing the Lord Jesus as first, and in the other, the Holy Ghost as first period again, was the Holy Spirit deficient in wisdom or faithfulness in making that declaration of God in first John 5.7, in not saying. There are three persons that bear record in heaven, and these three persons are one was deficient, who gave elder Osbourn and Mr. Booth authority to supply it? If otherwise, is it not insulting to the Holy Spirit for them to dictate what ought to be supplied; And presumptuous in them, to make it a test of heresy, whether men will adopt that supply, or not, as did Mr. Booth in effect, by his inquiries addressed to brother Saunders in his communication in the advocate, notice in the previous number. See Elder Osbourn, page 28. But do they, or do they not know, that there is a material difference between using words that are of the same import as other words used in the scriptures, for those words, or as condensing the idea expressed by several words into one; and the using of words to supply an imaginary deficiency in the scripture revelation? And we challenge these gentlemen to show us any authority from scripture, for applying the terms, first person, second person etcetera, to God. But when we come to look at Brother Saunders' letter we find he made the remark, that there is no such scripture as first person, second person, etcetera, neither as an argument, nor as a criticism, but simply as a known fact and as a reason why elder Osbourn's dividing God into first, second and third persons did not sound so well. Here then is another of elder Osbourn's calm perversions.

I will hear add that for myself I do not object to the use of the word Trinity, though not found in the scriptures; it being an abbreviation of two words, which in English, signify three in one, and is used as an equivalent to, these three are one.

Elder Osbourn Is not content with the use of the simple word person, but throughout his pamphlet, adds to it the expressions, proper and distinct. A distinct person is one who is a person by himself. A proper person, I should suppose means one who is a person properly, not in an improper or figurative sense. What is it to be a person properly, but to be an individual being? We have then in the godhead according to elder Osbourn's expressions three distinct individual beings. I do not say that he means so, by these expressions. Indeed on page 33 of his pamphlet, he says that the father, the son, and the Holy Ghost are not persons, strictly in that sense in which the word is applied to men, and that three distinct persons in that sense would make 3 distinct beings. But when are we to believe him, when he says they are three proper and distinct persons, or when he says they're not properly so? And if he does not use the words in the sense in which they are used in common conversation, as applied to men; why does he not give us the definite idea which he intends to convey by them, or refer us to a use of them, by which that idea is defined? Words without a definite idea, are to me unmeaning sounds, better not used than used.

Further, elder Osbourn on the same 33rd page, strips, the three in the godhead of a personal distinction which I think the scriptures give them. He says, (and I doubt whether he understood what he said,) "we need not suppose that to constitute proper and distinct personality in the godhead, there must necessarily be a distinct divine understanding and will," again, "and if there really was a distinct divine understanding and will, but God had would necessarily be divided, and Christ in the spirit would indeed and of a truth be separate gods." I would like to know what he would do with such texts as these, "I came down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me," John 6.38. And this: Father, if you be willing remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will, but yours be done. Luke 22.41. Will elder Osbourn say that these distinct wills belong to one to the human nature of Christ, and the other to the godhead? If so, according to his reasoning above, the divine and human natures in Christ must be divided into distinct beings. Sabellianism this truly!

Elder Osbourn's pamphlet contains many quotations from Doctor Gill in support of his theory and several positive assertions of his own. I will notice here one or two of them. He says, on page 32, addressing Brother Saunders, "You say the Holy Ghost is God, and I will admit this to be a true saying, in one sense of the word, but in the sense you intended, it is not true; for you acknowledge him to be God, and yet deny his proper and distinct personality, which is an absurdity that wants a name." And again lowering the page he says, "and thus Deacon, so long as you acknowledge Christ to be God, and the Holy Spirit to be God, and yet deny the proper and distinct personality of the spirit, you must acknowledge two gods." Here are assertions very positive, but without proof, without argument, and I had almost said, without sense; And I will say, he affirms what he is ignorant of. Who has told him that God cannot exist as father, sun, and Holy Ghost, and be the one only self-existent God in each of these relations or distinctions, without being divided into proper and distinct persons? God has not. His reasoning is truly ridiculous when he says that by denying the proper and distinct personality of the spirit. Brother Saunders makes the son and spirit to be two gods. The making of them to be two gods is the very thing that would make them to be proper and distinct persons, as anybody can see. I have already noticed a plain import of the expressions God the Father, God the Son, etcetera. Here, in his mode of reasoning, the same idea is fully carried out, for if the Godhead of the son and of the spirit depends on their distinct personality, as his reasoning fully implies, then each in being God, must be as distinct from the other, as is his personality distinct. What is this but to make them to be distinct gods? I challenge Elder Osbourn to get rid of this conclusion by any fair reasoning, notwithstanding his positive assertions to the contrary.

In reference to elder Osbourn's repeated assertions, that to deny distinct personalities in the godhead is sabellianism, I will hear merely say that this only proves his understanding and divine things not to be infinite.

Elder Osbourn gives several slaps at the Signs, and one, which I should judge intended as such, at the doctrinal advocate. He says, on pages 10 and 11, that for the last six months, he has not read nor heard read so much as one line from the Signs, that since last December he had borrowed 4 numbers of the advocate, but had not read in the whole to the amount of one column. What a dignified character he must be! He hurls forth his condemnation against old school Baptists, in a mass, and then will not Dane to read their defense against his sentence; Not even to read so much as one column in the advocate, paper so lately eulogized by him. Why? Forsooth, because I. T. Saunders has been allowed to publish in it, in self-defense, and in defense of his brethren. And the circumstance of Brother Saunders publishing in the Signs his replies to Elder Osbourn is turned to be persecution against him. Well may such an exalted personage boast as he does on page 46, "Men may rave and storm against me as much as they please, it will not hurt me, for I am out of their reach, and out of their sight, and hence their envy will rage in vain; And a friend of mine here tells me that it does rage in a most vehement manner in a certain paper, a little below Baltimore; and be it so:

Calm on tumults wheel, I sit.

Elder Osbourn is said by his admirers to be a very spiritual man. Be it so. But what spirit was he of, when he wrote the above? According to any conceptions I have on the subject, that humble spirit which belongs to true Christianity would have led him to express himself quite differently from the posting self-vaunting style of this passage, even on this supposition, that Brother Saunders's communications were an unprovoked attack on him. What then shall we say of it, when all this is a vaunting against a defense of those whom he had wantonly published among the pedo Baptists as heretics, and whose private and friendly correspondence he had given to the public in a grossly perverted manner?

The pamphlet contains many words and displays much self-importance calculated to attract the admiration of such as regard sound more than substance, but I believe I have noticed in the above, all that in substance its 47 pages contained. There are some varied forms of expression that I may have occasioned again to notice.

My next is designed to contain a comparative view of Sabellianism, and elder Osbourn's system of the Trinity.

As ever yours, S. Trott Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 21, 1840

ON THE SONSHIP OF CHRIST NO. 5

Brother Beebe: This subject, the sonship of Christ, is of no trifling importance, and our right understanding of the great doctrinal salvation. Could we be led to a clear apprehension and reception of the scripture revelation on this point, without blending anything of human wisdom therewith, it would be a precious privilege.

I would hear entreat my old school brethren not to be alarmed though in presenting what appears to me clearly the testimony of scripture on this point, I should give some views not generally received by the professing world until they have calmly examined the proofs presented, and compared them with such as may be suggested as supporting different views. If after such examination, they find that in this, and in the preceding communication relating to the existence of God, as three and one, I have mistaken the voice of scripture, they will do well to show the mistake.

When we look into the scriptures in reference to this subject, we find the sonship of Christ therein presented to view as threefold; as the Son of man, the Son of David, and the Son of God. Each of these demands some attention, in a careful inquiry on this subject. But the examination of the two former, I intend shall be brief, and indeed of the third also, so far as the importance of the subject will justify, 1st: what is implied in Christ's being called Son of man.

The term, son of man, is repeatedly used in the Old Testament, sometimes in reference to mankind at large, as denoting their vanity, vileness, and mortality. See numbers 23.19; Job 25.6; and Psalm 146.3, among other texts. It is a term particularly appropriate to Ezekiel as a prophet. It is said he is so-called about 89 times in his prophecy, and Christ about 80 times in the four gospels. I have however not counted for myself. Why Ezekiel is so peculiarly designated, I know not; unless it was to point him out particularly as typical of Christ, as the Son of man; and its being his lot to prophecy about and in the time of the captivity of his people for their transgressions, and his having representatively to bear some of those punishments he was directed to denounce. See chapters 4, 5, and 12.1-7. Christ is twice, if not thrice, designated by this term in the Old Testament. Psalm 130.17, and Daniel 7.13. In most instances in which the term is used in a New Testament, the Lord I think uses it himself, of himself. But the inquiry is why does he so denominate himself? It is evidently not to designate him as literally the posterity of Adam, or as having come into Adam's place or anything of that kind. For in regard to his assumption of humanity, the scriptures are particular in quarding against the idea of his being literally the son of man. In this point of view, he is revealed as the seed of the woman, Genesis 3.15. Isaiah also prophesied, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel," chapter 7.14. And the Angel in answer to the inquiry of Mary on this point describes his production thus: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon you, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow you." He adds, "Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of you shall be called the Son of God," Luke 1.34-35. Here his humanity in distinction from being the son or offspring of man, is declared to be the Son of God. But the term Son of God here I do not understand as denoting the same as his being the begotten of the Father. The term here I think corresponds with the same term as applied to Adam (Luke 3.38,) and is designed to denote that his manhood was, as was Adam's, produced by the immediate creating power of God, without the intervention of secondary causes. Hence his not participating in human depravity. Perhaps Christ's being called the son of man may be designed in part to denote him as the heir of the world, for as Abraham's seed, he is the heir of the world. See Romans 4.13; compared with Galatians 3.16. In thus contemplating him, we must view him as in connection with his body the church; and in this point of view, we shall see him to be the only heir of creation; he in his church being the whole substance and object of creation and that for which the world stands. Hence all things were made for him, as well as by him, Colossians 1.16. But in a more particular sense, the Lord's portion is his people, and Jacob is the lot of his inheritance, Deuteronomy 22.9. That however which I think is more directly intended by Christ's being revealed as the son of man, and what constitutes him more manifestly the anti-type of Ezekiel, was his inheriting, in consequence of inheriting Jacob, their law standing, their sins, infirmities, sorrows, death and and curse. "For as much as the children," (the children of God had given him, but who were the natural heirs, the begotten sons of man,) were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him who had the power of death," Hebrews 2.14. Herein was he most astonishingly manifested as the son of man, in being made under the law, made sin, made a man of sorrows, made a curse. Hence it is, that while he is so repeatedly called the son of man in the evangelists, he is nowhere that I recollect, so-called in any other part of the New Testament.

2nd. Christ's sonship as the Son of David is the next subject of our inquiries.

We find him repeatedly addressed as the Son of David. But Christ indirectly though clearly rejects the idea of being the Son of David, on one occasion, that is, of being so in the sense in which the Jews understand the Messiah would be David's son, in a natural sense, Matthew 22.42-45; mark 12.35-37. Hence it cannot be that it was as being a natural descendant of David, that he is called the Son of David. It is true that this name, as does the name son of man, relates to his being manifested, in the flesh, and to his being of the seed of David that is as the apostle explains it, being "made of the seed of David according to the flesh," Romans 1.3. But I think a consideration of the scriptures which I will shortly refer to will satisfy the candid Inquirer that the sonship of Christ as the son of David related particularly to his exultation in human nature as the king of Zion, of Israel; and as the covenanted heir of the throne of Israel, as being that seed of David more particularly intended in the covenant God established with him as mentioned, second Samuel 7.4-16; 23.5; Psalm 139.19-37. It was necessary that he should be "made of the seed of David," and be born in Bethlehem the town of David's nativity, that he might be visibly manifested as this covenanted seed of David, as that "righteous branch whom the Lord should raise unto David," Jeremiah 23.5. But that Christ's sonship as the Son of David consisted in his being the king of Zion, having his dominion established in the earth, and over the nations of the earth, is evident from the fact, that all these prophecies which speak of him as the offspring of David thus describe particularly his reign, Psalm 122, 138; Isaiah chapters 9.6-7 and 11; Jeremiah chapters 22.5 and 23.15-17; as also from the manner in which he has spoken of, and addressed in the New Testament. The Angel Gabriel says to Mary concerning her son: "The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the House of Jacob Forever, and of his Kingdom, there shall be no end" Luke 1.32-33. Thus his entry into Jerusalem as the "king of the daughter of Zion," as foretold, in Zechariah 9.9, as the Son of David, as he "that comes in the name of the Lord," according to Luke 19.38, as "that king that comes," and according to John 12.13, as the "king of Israel that comes in the name of the Lord." Hence several terms, king, and king of Israel, are by the Holy Ghost used to denote Christ as the Son of David. Hence his being the king of Israel and being the Son of David is one and the same thing.

3rd. "We now come into consideration of the sonship of Christ as the Son of God."

Here we at once meet with a peculiar distinction of his sonship from the other two. This is a begotten sonship. He is revealed as the only begotten Son of God. The others are not begotten sonships they relate to his humanity. He became a son in those respects, in consequence of his union with his people; as in disrespect, as it will be shown, his people are sons of God in consequence of their union with him. Christ is then truly the Son of God. But what does his sonship in this respect consist of? In his godhead? In his humanity? Or in something else?

1st: that it does not consist in his godhead or in his personal distinction in the godhead, which is to the doctrine of the Nicene creed; I should think that has already been clearly shown in treating God's existence as three and one, by the proof produced establishing the fact that christ in the distinct relation which he sustains in the godhead, is revealed as the one God, the Jehovah, and therefore as being absolutely self-existent and independent, in his being, as in the Father.

2nd: the idea that his sonship, as the Son of God, consists of his being born of Mary, I should think would be given up on reflecting that his other sonships related to his humanity and were therefore not begotten sonships, whereas in this sonship he is begotten of God. But in the further prosecution of this inquiry, other considerations will present themselves in opposition to this idea.

In examining the New Testament on this subject, it will, I think, appear very manifest. 1st: that Christ, as the Son of God, sustains a subordinate relation to the Father. Let us look at some of the principle texts relative to Christ's superior glory as the Son of God. In John 3.16-18, while Christ is declared to be god's only begotten son, The testimony is that God gave his only begotten Son, consequently the Son as such was subject to the Father. Turning to John 5.17,30, we find the son declaring his superior authority as such, over the Sabbath and to execute judgment; yet throughout the passage, he acknowledges his subordination to the Father. His language is, "The Son can do nothing of himself only what he sees the Father do." "Forest the father has life in himself, so has he given to the Son to have life in himself," John 10.16-18. Passing John chapter 17, we behold the Son praying to the Father to be glorified with the glory which he had with the Father before the world was verse 16, acknowledging dependence on the Father before the world was. Hence he must have been a Son before he was made flesh. See also verse six. In First Corinthians 15.27-28, Paul having spoken (verse 24) of Christ delivering up the Kingdom to God, to the Father, said "for he has put all things under his feet. But when he said, all things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him, That God may be All in all." Here again the subordination of the Son, as such, to the Father, is declared in language as plain as can be expressed. In Colossians 1.12-20, the greatness, the glory, and vast superiority of Christ, as God's dear Son, over every created thing in heaven, and in the earth, is declared; and yet all this was by the Father's pleasure; Not of his own independent will, "for it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell," verse 19. Again in Hebrews chapter one, the great superiority of the sun over angels is shown; and yet all this glory is by the Father's pleasure. He appointed him heir over all things; he said unto him, "You are my Son this day have I begotten you, and again I will be to him a Father and he shall be to me a Son," verse 5: (See Psalm 2.7-11; Samuel 7.15.) "And when he brings his first begotten into the world, he said, and let all the angels of God worship him," verse six. Can anything be more explicit than this chapter to show the subordination of the Son to the Father, as well as to show his great superiority as the Son to the Father, as well as to show his great superiority as the Son, over the angels? I have selected these texts in which the highest authority, exultation, of the Son as such is declared, And have shown that as thus presented to view in his exultation, his subordination to the Father is manifest; So that it cannot with any show of candor be said, that this subordination belonged only to his humiliation, as the Son. Still, I know men have said, and will say that it is only as a mediator, the Redeemer, he is spoken of in these passages and the light passages I will only say in return, that when they can convince me as the Holy Ghost has been mistaken in the terms he authorized to be used, I may admit their right to substitute other terms, conveying other ideas, for those he has employed; but I think not before. Let us however examine one or two of the passages already referred to. Take First Corinthians 15.28. And we shall find that instead of the holy ghosts intimating that the Son, only in his mediatorial office, shall thus be subject to the father, it is expressly affirmed, that the Son also himself, shall be subject, thus confirming the fact by an emphatic expression, that it is of the Son himself, the affirmation is made. And in Hebrews 1.5 instead of its reading, you are my appointed mediator, and I will be the one God and you shall be the one mediator, the affirmation is, "You are my son." "and I will be to him a Father," thus the idea which I contend for in some of the preceding communications: that a begotten existence, implied derivative, and as therefore a dependent existence is sustained by the whole revelation of Christ as the Son of God, by his subordination to the Father, therein manifested. And such subordination in a Son Is sanctioned by the voice of nature, of reason, and of god. God says, "Honor your father and your mother," Exodus 20.12. And Christ says, "I honor my Father and you dishonor me," John 8.49. Hence it is evident, that the revelation made of Christ as the only begotten Son of God, is not the revelation of the modus of his existence as Jehovah, as the Father's fellow or equal. His sonship therefore must relate to something other than to his essential existence as God.

But the Athanasians say that God is beginning a Son, must have begotten one in his own nature, and must therefore have begotten him God. This reasoning would be correct if God in the beginning his Son was subject to the law of generation by which man is governed. But the subjection of God to such law, I think they would hardly contend for. The expression as used in reference to God, is evidently designed to denote the putting forth his producing power, in a way distinct from the act of creation but peculiar to himself, further than this we cannot say. But still, there is the person of the Son of God, a conformity to the law of generation, by which everything produces its like. For in his person, while he is the begotten Son of God, he possesses also the fullness of the Godhead is the Jehovah equally with the Father, not as a product of the Father's beginning, but essentially so, of himself as God. He therefore in his person possesses every quality and lineament of the Son of God, is the brightness of God's glory and the express image of his person. Hence while as the Son, he with propriety says, "my Father is greater than i," (John 14.28) with equal truth he says, "I and my Father are one," John 10.30. So also, the father could with truth, on the one hand, address him the Son, thus, "your throne old God is forever and ever," and on the other hand say to him, "God even your God has anointed you," Hebrews 1.8-9.

This subject is too lengthy for one communication. I will continue in another.

Yours, Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax County, Va., July 28, 1840

CIRCULAR LETTER CORRESPONDING ASSOCIATION HELD AT FRYINGPAN CHURCH

Beloved brethren: when in the course of human events, and in the Providence of God, it became necessary for the honor of God, and in order to maintain the purity of the gospel, and to keep up the ordinances as they had been delivered to us, that we should separate from many of those bearing our own name, we were known by the distinctive appellation of "Old School Baptists," Which name was given to us by our enemies, as perhaps the name Christian first was first given to the saints at Antioch, no doubt by way of reproach; but which we have been content to wear according to our understanding of its application to the school of Christ, and of our having been taught therein. But it is quite remarkable does the enemies of the cross of Christ soon claimed the name which they had given to the Saints as a title of reproach embracing in it all the ignominy and scandal which they supposed the "crucify Christ" incurred, after whom they were called. So now the same party in principle, the same viperous breed, claim the name of old-school Baptists!

Having, however, separated from them, and so that our standing might not be doubtful, we considered it necessary to give a distinct expression of our views both of gospel doctrine and practice of our entire descent from opposition to all new schemes and devices which the new school party had introduced under the pretense of improvement, and also of our views in regard to Caesar and our connection with him. Through the medium of the press, an opportunity has been afforded us to defend our principles and expose the workings of Antichrist and also cultivate a larger and more extended acquaintance with the whole family of the faithful.

But as the separation is now pretty well over, and the respective parties have now obtained that distinct organization and standing from each other, it becomes us to look particularly to our own ways and affairs, as those who profess to be the children of the light and of the day; that we sleep not as others do, but that we watch and be sober. To this end, we propose, in this address, to adopt this scriptural admonition as our motto: "Let brotherly love continue." Hebrews 13.1.

Although we have the positive testimony of God in his word and by his spirit, that the stand which we have taken is agreeable to his will, and also the negative evidence furnished us, in the same kind of opposition and objections made to us and our doctrine by the anti-Christian party, that they made to Christ and his apostles, yet we have to lament our shortcomings before God, that in many things we offend all. In comparing ourselves with the primitive saints, how great is the disparity! How far short do we follow that heavenly zeal, that entire devotion to the cause of God and truth, that unyielding attachment to everything embraced in the pattern shown in the holy mountain, that uncompromising hostility to every innovation attempted to be introduced into the Kingdom of Christ, and that love of the brethren that would lead us to lay down our lives for them, which characterized primitive churches and apostles of the lamb, whom we are exhorted to follow as they follow the Lord Jesus Christ. Is it not too true, brethren, with many of us, since the excitement occasion by our connection with and separation from Antichrist has measurably subsided, that we have degenerated into a lukewarmness incompatible with the distinguished stand which we occupy and the exalted profession which we have made? How many appear to be "neither cold nor hot!" And others looking back into sodom!

The business of the good soldier consists not only in charging upon the enemy, but in securing his situation after the battle is over, in looking well to the order and discipline of his own camp, and in adjusting and learning the proper use of his armor, both offensive and defensive. And to be successful in the charge, or in defense, it is all-important that the army should attend strictly to the orders of the commander, and that they should all be of one mind and determined to accomplish the same things. Nothing is more fatal to an army or ruinous to its success than mutiny. Let us then, as soldiers of the cross of Christ take heed to our ways in this matter. Let us not be guilty of the inconsistency of those who, professing to be the peculiar people of God, grossly offended and stop playing as precepts of his word in some points, and yet make war upon others for offenses in other points. Christ is not divided in his doctrine nor ordinances, and it is ours to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded us, without preferring one above another. But it is evident, brethren, that we live at a period in the history of the Church of Christ, in which perfect unanimity in everything has not been attained to by the saints, and hence the occasion is furnished us to cultivate the spirit of brotherly love, to mark well between those points of difference which are vital and such as are mere matters of opinion and about which we may honestly differ without a breach of fellowship, remembering the exhortation which speaks to us as sons, "put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man has a quarrel against any; Even as Christ forgave you so also do. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." Colossians 3.12-14. Again we are exhorted to walk "with all lowliness and meekness with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love," Ephesians 4.2.

In the Lord's family, there are no kings, Lords, and Commons, but they are all one in Christ Jesus, members of his body of his flesh and of his bones. He is the elder brother of the family, and hence we are joint heirs with him to the heavenly inheritance. We are brethren because we are of the same family, have one Father, are interested in the same covenant blessings, are objects of the same eternal love, quickened and born again by the same eternal spirit, preserved and kept by the same almighty power and ultimately welcomed into the same Kingdom prepared for us from the foundation of the world.

In this interesting family, there are many members, and those of different ages and capacities; from babes to those who are of full age. To the latter belong strong meat, but the babes subsist upon milk. Now we are taught that those who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves. Those who are greatest in the Lord's house are not to be Lords over his heritage, but servants in the House of God; Even as Christ came not to be ministered to, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. We should be careful to distinguish between the weakness of babes and the enmity of the carnal heart; and while we should not give place to the latter no, not for a moment, we should remember that the great shepherd of Israel has said concerning the former, "feed my lambs," and that the sincere milk of the word it's the food upon which they grow and thrive. Now the sum of what we have written is this: while the new school Baptists, together with all the different orders of the anti-Christian interest, may transgress the laws of Christ with impunity, may change his ordinances, add to his commands, take from any of the prophecies of his book, the old school baptist, from the profession which they have made, are not at liberty to separate that which god has joined together, nor to prefer any of his commandments one above another, but to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded.

Holding as we do, brethren, the faith once delivered to the saints; and standing aloof from all other denominations in the world, it certainly becomes us, above all others, to see that we love one another with a pure heart fervently, to manifest that we are taught of God to love one another; And to give evidence of this by works of faith and labors of love in doing good unto all men, but especially to those who are of the household of faith.

The letters from the churches which have been read in our meeting, bring us to the pleasing intelligence of the prevalence of peace and harmony among the brethren but complain of coldness and barrenness and divine things. We believe, however, that the Lord's set time to favor Zion cannot be hastened, and although we feel inclined to pray for a manifestation of his presence in the churches, in building up the waste places of his Zion; Yet we dare not resort to unscriptural and unauthorized measures to hasten this event. We would remember the experiment that our old mother Sarah made in days of old, to hasten the accomplishment of the Lord's promise, and from the effect thereof learn wisdom; no mechanical efforts of ours can revive the Lord's work.

We acknowledge the kind expressions of fellowship for us which we have received from several associations, by their minutes and messengers, as set forth in the accompanying minutes. Dear brethren, we ask a continuance of your friendly correspondence; We feel disposed to reciprocate the saying by letter and also by messengers, through as many of our brethren as may be permitted in Providence to meet with you. Our object is not disunion, but union founded upon truth is not to scatter the sheep but to feed them. To the Lord's chosen few we can say with one heart and voice, "Entreat me not to leave you, for your people shall be my people." Come then, brethren in Christ, without respect to locality, come and see us.

Our next meeting will be held, God willing, by invitation of that church, with elk run, commencing on the Friday before the 2nd Lord's Day in August 1841, where we hope to meet with many of your messengers and to receive your epistles of love. We hail with thankfulness the information received through the signs, of old school churches 'uniting corresponding and annual meetings, and hope a correspondence may be open between our churches and such.

S. Trott August 9, 1840

THE END OF THE WORLD.

EXPOSITION OF MATTHEW 24:29-51.

BROTHER JEWETT: - Having been from home three weeks, and having seen your request in the April Number of the ADVOCATE for my views of Matt.24:29-51, I will now, as opportunity may offer in my journeyings, endeavor to write them out for you, though I may not finish the communication before getting home.

This subject has considerably occupied my mind for some time past, in consequence of certain opinions advanced among Old School Baptists on the one hand and Mr. Miller on the other. Between these two, the two distinct comings of Christ revealed in the Scriptures, are as completely mixed up and confused, as ever any subject was. The prophecy or prophecies contained in this 24th of Matthew, have in part been differently understood by me at different periods; though at no period have I been able to receive the idea, that the whole received an entire accomplishment in the destruction of Jerusalem and events connected therewith, for reasons which I shall have occasion hereafter to notice. But recently my mind has been led to what is to me a clearer view of the subject, than I have formerly had; whether by the Spirit of God, I will not presume to affirm.

That the prophecy contained in that portion of the Chapter from the 4th to the 22nd verse, inclusive, received a full and distinct accomplishment in the destruction of Jerusalem and events preceding it, history fully evidences. Whether the then, which commences vs.23, refers to the period embraced in the preceding description, and the events mentioned in that and the following verses on to the 28th are a further description of what relates to the Jews, is not certain. These verses have generally been applied to the

Jews, though I doubt the correctness of such application; but as these verses are not included in the part of the chapter, which is requested to be expounded, I pass them without further remarks, and will come to the portion desired to be considered.

Preparatory to an explanation of the chapter from verse 29 onwards, I will remark, that I understand the disciples to have proposed two distinct questions to the Master in verse 3; the first relating to the destruction of the Temple, the second having a reference to the second coming of Christ and the end of the world. In reference to the first query, Christ in answering the disciples, points out events relating to themselves and to the Gospel as preceding that event; gives them correspondent warnings and describes the great leading events, relative to the gospel and gospel Church, which were to intervene between the destruction of Jerusalem and his second, personal coming.

Verse 29, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened," &c. Some expositors, setting aside the order which Christ here gives to these events, as being after the tribulation of those days, represent the darkening of the sun, the moon not giving her light, and the falling of the stars from heaven, as being accomplished in the destruction of the temple and the consequent overturning of the legal ceremonies, priesthood, and worship. But I cannot admit, that any light remained in any part of the Mosaic economy, after Christ had fully come out of it in his resurrection, ascension, &c., as he was the whole light and substance of the economy, whilst he remained buried in it.

Even Dr. Gill makes the sun being darkened represent the Shekinah or divine presence being withdrawn from the most holy place, when the temple was destroyed. He should have recollected, before making this blunder, that the Shekinah, or God's presence communing with the high priest was from off the mercy seat which covered the ark and from between the cherubim, and that consequently, as the ark of testimony was involved in the destruction of the first temple, and the gold of the mercy seat and cherubim was carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, the second temple was entirely deficient of all these, only as Christ, the grand antitype and substance of them, came to this temple agreeably to Hag.2:6-9. The truth is, that as Christ describes that tribulation to be greater than any which had been before or should come after, verse 21, so the tribulation of those days can be nothing less, than the entire destruction which came upon the Jews, their city and temple. Hence it being after the tribulation of those days that the sun should be darkened; this must be an after event; and therefore as above remarked, must be an event preceding the second coming of Christ. But the word immediately, requires some attention -"immediately after the tribulation," &c. If by this expression we are to understand the event to be one directly connected with the destruction of Jerusalem, and in quick succession according to our notions of time; then as we find nothing recorded in history answering to the declarations in this verse, either literally or figuratively, as having thus taken place, we are placed in the deplorable predicament of believing that our blessed Lord delivered a prophecy, which failed to be accomplished, or at any rate, one, the truth of which is left very doubtful. But if we understand the word immediately to point out the next leading event in the history of the church after the destruction of Jerusalem, as it may with propriety be understood, then we shall escape such unpleasant predicament. So I understand it to be used, and by the expressive and figurative language of this verse, according to the order of prophetic style, I understand the whole rise and power of the man of sin, on to the witnesses being killed, as being prophetically described. By the sun darkened I understand the gospel as being obscured in the rise and reign of antichrist, and as being entirely hid from public view during the time the two witnesses shall lie dead. By the moon not giving her light, I understand the church as departing from the purity and simplicity of gospel doctrine and order, and ultimately at the time of the witnesses being killed, as deprived of bearing any public testimony to the truth of the gospel. And by the stars in like manner, in falling from heaven, I understand the ministers of the gospel, falling from gospel doctrine, into a mixed

system, and ultimately those who remained steadfast being killed as witnesses. And the term immediately is properly used in reference to this event; for very soon after the apostolic age the ministry began to fall off from the apostles doctrine to a mixed system of Judaism, philosophy and gospel; and ceremonies began to be multiplied in the churches, by which their true light was obscured and the sun, the gospel began to be darkened, and these departures went on waxing worse, until the Beast was fully formed and arose in his power, and from him the two horned Beast and now the Image &c. Verses 30 & 31, as I understand them, point out the change which will take place in reference to the gospel and gospel church after the witnesses shall have been killed, the sign of the Son of man will appear in heaven, that is his being in the gospel church sustaining and delivering it from all the rage of the Beast, will then be openly manifested; as will also his coming with special power in the clouds of heaven, or gospel ministry; this will cause the tribes of the earth to mourn, when they see the whole mass of antichristian superstition falling before the power of Jesus and his gospel. But the destruction of Jerusalem caused rejoicing rather than mourning among the tribes of the earth. To Titus was decreed a splendid triumph for his conquest of Jerusalem. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a (or the) trumpet, (not a sound of the great trumpet, as though it were the first blowing of it,) but with a more powerful blast of it. Yea, Zechariah says, "The Lord God shall blow the trumpet," as I think, in reference to the same period. Zech.9:14. By the trumpet here I understand the gospel trumpet, and by the angels, gospel preachers, for the whole passage is in the figurative language of prophecy. Although there may be a reference to the more extended spread of the gospel and with more powerful effect among the Gentiles, and certainly the second coming of Christ, and the end of the world.

The Master having thus pointed out the events relative to the gospel, gathering in the fulness of the Gentiles is implied; yet I am led to the mentioned in verse 22, and that the whole of these three verses has whole of Israel, as the last grand event in prophecy, preceding the conclusion, that by the elect here are intended the same elect, special reference to the bringing in of the Jews; and indeed the

which were to precede the periods embraced in each of the two questions of the disciples, without giving any direct answer to them, now turns more directly to their enquiries, and in reference to the first, "When shall these things be" - that is; When shall the temple be destroyed; shows them (verses 32-35,) with what certainty they might know its near approach, and that it should take place before that generation was past. And then in verse 36, and on he gives an answer as to the period referred to, in the other enquiry; namely, that, "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven &c.;" that is, he hereby informs them, that the period of the end of the world God has never made a subject of revelation. He has revealed by his servants the prophets the distinct periods of other events, but never this; and further, according to Mark, he informs them, that the Son as sent of his Father is not authorized to reveal it. Thus we see that Mr. Miller and his disciples have altogether gone beyond revelation in their calculations. That I am correct in making this distinct application of the declarations in verses 34 & 36, appears from the demonstrative adjective pronouns here used. Grotius, a learned Greek scholar, says that according to the idiom of the Greek, the two distinct pronouns used in verses 34 & 36, the one translated these and the other that, point out a plain distinction in the subjects to which they each relate; distinguishing the one as near, the other as more distant. The same distinction is often made in our own language by using of the words this and that. If our Lord had intended by the day and hour, vs.36, the same period as that intended in vs.34, the use of the demonstrative pronoun ekeinos,

or that was improper; the proper mode of expression would have been but of the day and hour &c. As there is therefore clearly a distinction pointed out by the mode of expression used in reference to the subjects of these two verses, I think we are warranted in concluding the distinction to be that of the distinct enquiries. The comparison of this latter period; namely, the end of the world, with the days of Noah, corresponds with what we might infer will be the case, from the description given of the Laodicean church state, the seventh and last state of the church militant, (Rev.3:14-17,) and other declarations of Scripture, which, I think, relate to the same. But the comparison here made with the days of Noah, certainly does not correspond with the description given in Luke of the period connected with the destruction of Jerusalem, nor with the account given in history of those times. See Luke 21:25,26. So also the declarations contained in verses 40 & 41, do not hold good in reference to the destruction of Jerusalem; for according to the uniform testimony of history all the Jews without exception found in Judea, that did not perish in the war, were taken captive and sold for slaves. But that the distinction pointed out in these verses will be manifested at the second coming of Christ, we may conclude from the description given by Paul of that event (I Thes.4:16 & 17;) namely, that "we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Hence one will be changed and taken up and another left. And I think the admonitions given in the remainder of this chapter, refer to the event of Christ second coming, or the end of the world. But here I will remark as to that subject. As some speak of the comings of Christ, we might infer, that they think him like some of the importing merchants and factors in our cities; these having business to transact both in Europe and in this country, have frequently to pass from the one country to the other, to attend to it. But those who so represent our Lord, forget his Godhead and omnipresence. His first coming or his coming in his kingdom instead of being confined to one instantaneous appearing is like the coming of the day, progressive, now manifested in this degree of longitude then in that, so of our Lord, who will continue to come in the one coming in his kingdom, until the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, is ground to chaff, and the gospel church or his kingdom, represented by the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, fills the whole earth. So in reference to his second coming, it has been in effect progressive to every succeeding generation of men, and will be until the dead in Christ are raised and the world burned. That is, when we or others are called from time by death, time things have no more to do with us, and therefore it is the same with us, as though time was ended as to any changes we may know, but the one in the resurrection of our bodies. Hence the admonitions contained in these latter verses of this chapter; also the declaration contained in Rev.22:7, "Behold I come quickly," &c., and other like ones, are as appropriate to us as they will be to any future generation of men on the earth. O that the Lord would give us grace to obey these admonitions of our Lord, and to watch for his coming; that is, to us.

Brother Jewett, having been permitted to return home in safety from my tour, I have thus finished the communication begun abroad; in it I have given what is my understanding of the portion of our Lord's prophecy designated, which you will of course publish, if you publish it, as mine. If you have anything more correct, or better on the subject, I hope, you will publish that also.

Yours with christian affection, S. TROTT.
May 26, 1843.

ENQUIRIES CONCERNING THE SABBATH AND THE LORD'S DAY.

Brother Beebe: - I received a letter a short time since from brother Thomas McColl, of Canada West, requesting my views on Rev. 1:10, with a general reference to the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath. I have thought to address him, in answer, through the Signs; but if you think I am crowding too many communications upon you (as I have recently sent you several) for the prosperity and usefulness of the Signs, will you be so good as to enclose this in another envelope and send it to him? You know his post- office address; if otherwise, you will please publish it in its course.

Brother McColl, you mention in your letter having been accustomed to the observance of the first day of the week, as so strictly observed in Scotland, as the Sabbath, and the influence of custom on the mind. As I was in early life brought up among the New England Puritans, and was afterwards among the English Presbyterians, I know how to sympathize with you in reference to the influence of educational prejudices on the mind. But I have, I trust, as well as yourself, been led by Divine teaching to look away from all traditional teachings to the Scriptures, as the directory God has given for all religious observances. To the Scriptures therefore it becometh us to look, and to them alone, for our authority for observing the first day of the week. But in order to meet your former educational prejudices, it may be well first to enquire as to what the Scriptures teach concerning the Sabbath. We will come first to the fourth command as it stands in the decalogue, and inquire into its nature and design.

First; As to its nature in the letter of it, whether it is to be viewed as a positive or a moral command. I use the term moral here, not as relating to common morals, but as denoting that which has an obligation arising from the nature of things; or, in other words, that which is necessarily obligatory in consequence of our obligation to love God, and to love our neighbor. From our Lord's teaching on this point, I am led to the conclusion that this fourth command, in the letter of it, is positive, and not moral. That which is moral must alike be obligatory upon all who are obligated to love God and their neighbor. So the Jews seemed to view this command. Hence, when the Jews complained of the disciples doing that which was not lawful on the Sabbath day, Christ said to them, Mt. 12:5 - "Have ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath and are blameless?" That is, in their kindling the fire on the altar, and offering the continual burnt offerings, &c. Now if this command was moral, it would be equally obligatory upon all. None could transgress the first command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and be blameless. He further adds, in the same connection, "For the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day," thus showing that this law of the Sabbath in its letter, instead of arising necessarily from man's obligation to love God, depended altogether upon His sovereign command, and hence obligatory only on those whom He had commanded to observe it. And as it was given to national Israel, distinctively from the other nations of the earth, it was only obligatory on them. Again, Christ said to the Jews, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath" Mark 2:27. But man was made to honor and love God; hence it is manifest that the keeping of the Sabbath is not essential to man's loving God, only as he is especially commanded to do it. Other texts might be quoted to the same effect, but the above are, I think, sufficient to convince you or any candid inquirer that the fourth command, concerning the seventh day Sabbath is positive and not moral, and therefore binding only to those who are directly commanded to observe it. And as there is not a text in the whole Bible to show that any but the nation of Israel were commanded to rest on that day, no others are obligated to observe it. Again, a positive command must be positive in the very wording of the command, and as this command particularly specifies the seventh day as the day of rest, we see how futile is the reasoning of those who would represent that the spirit of the command is observed by keeping the first day as a day of worship.

A second inquiry relative to this command is, Why, if it is not moral, was it placed in the decalogue among those that are moral? I answer, Paul tells us that the law is spiritual; meaning, evidently, the whole ten commands. Again, by showing us that Love is the fulfilling of the law (Rom. 13:8-10), he shows us that the law in its spirit is all moral. So is the fourth command in its spiritual import.

Let us consider it in its parts. First: Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. There is manifestly a reference to the curse with which God cursed the ground for man's sake Gen. 3:17-19. In this, connected with his labor, or the sweat of man's face, is the sorrow with which he shall eat of the ground, and the thorns and thistles which it shall bring forth. Would not love to God, with all the heart, lead us patiently and cheerfully to endure the labor and to bear all the sorrows, the thistles and the thorns He has appointed to us in this world? The second branch: "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work," &c. "For in six days the Lord made the heavens and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day," &c. Here is the reason assigned for the command, namely: That the heavens and earth and all that in them is are God's finished work; and therefore all that we are, all that we possess, and all with which we are surrounded, is God's, as being made of Him, and therefore rightfully subject alone to His government and disposal. Hence love to God would lead us to rest entirely in God, satisfied with what He has made, and for Him to dispose of us and all around us at His pleasure, and to seek to serve and glorify Him in all that we are and in all that we enjoy, not only for one day in seven, but, as seven and seventh signifies, and is used frequently to denote, a fullness and completeness, so this teaches that all our time should be the Lord's and all we do be for His glory. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." And I know of no command more fully calculated to show us our depravity, our selfishness, our want of submission to God's government, and our propensity to choose for ourselves, than is this fourth command when viewed in its spirituality. But all this is lost by confining it down to a seventh day rest. Truly, by their traditions the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, have made void the law.

A third inquiry is, Whether the seventh day rest or Sabbath is not typical, and of what? It is written, Ex. 16:29, "See, for that the Lord hath given you the sabbath, therefore He giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days." As to the bread here spoken of, the manna, it was typical of that true bread which the Father giveth from heaven, so the Sabbath must be typical of a gospel rest, in which those to whom it is given shall not have to labor for the bread then to be eaten, but it shall be given them beforehand. God says to Ezekiel, "Moreover, also I gave them" (that is, Israel) "my Sabbaths for a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctifies them" Ezkl.20: 12. This must be typical of God's dealings with His spiritual Israel. But the apostle, in his epistle to the Hebrews (4:1-11), shows from a reference to the 94th Psalm that there is a rest remaining to the people of God, both after the rest which Joshua, here called (verse 8) Jesus, gave to Israel in the land of Canaan, and also God's rest on the seventh day; and further showeth it is by faith, and by that only, any do enter this rest, which was shadowed forth by the other two. This then is that rest which the believer finds in Christ. For this the reason is assigned: "For he that is entered into his rest hath ceased from his own works as God did from His" (verse 10). Many of our brethren understand by the He, who is entered into his rest, in this verse, the believer. It is true that when any, by faith, enter into this rest in Christ, they cease from their own works, but not, I think, as God did from His, as having finished it, and pronounced it all good. When Christ entered into rest in His glory, it was that He had ceased from the work of redemption, having finished it, and it was accepted as good, as well as pleasing to the Father. To the believer the fourth command and other commands concerning the Sabbath apply with full force antitypically, and find a ready response in his heart. This work is all done beforehand.

Christ has performed the whole six days work, and the curse with its thorns is removed; and he, therefore, rests in a finished redemption; he goes no more out to hunt sticks to kindle his fire - no more to look for bread beyond that he finds in Christ crucified. Why, then, my brother, should we cling to the typical rest, when the substance is already come, and we find it all in believing in Christ?

A fourth inquiry is, have we scriptural authority for considering the first day of the week, as particularly pointed out, as the day for the meeting together of the churches? I think we have. I do not say for worship as is commonly said, because if we do not feel led to reverence and worship God daily, I fear our hearts are far from Him. Some, in their opposition to a legal Sabbath, may have denied that any particular day is specified as a day for the church to meet together. I differ from them on this point. I cannot think there would have been any regular meetings of the churches kept up, if there had been no particular times or days set apart by apostolic custom and authority for the churches to meet to observe those ordinances and that order which the apostles, by the authority of Christ, had enjoyed. In those times of severe persecution after the apostles day, if the meetings of particular churches had not, from time to time, been broken up so as to prevent their making appointment for any future day of meeting, they would have been tempted not to make any regular appointments to avoid persecution, and thus their regular meetings would have been broken up, and they would have had to depend on some particular notice to get together again. Take away any regular day of meeting, and you take away all regular appointments of meeting.

But if you suppose that the apostles, by their institutions, established a uniform custom in the churches of observing the first day of the week, in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ, as the day on which they were to come together, then it is evident as that day, from time to time, occurred, they would be reminded of their obligation not to forsake the assembling of themselves together. When we examine the New Testament on the subject, we find not as much said in reference to the observance of the first day of the week as might be expected from the confidence with which it is asserted that it is substituted for the Jewish Sabbath. From the Acts of the Apostles, it would appear that the church at Jerusalem was daily together and engaged in that which appertained to the gospel and its ministry. The apostles, as they went from place to place preaching the gospel, went, of course, where the gospel had not been preached, and where churches had not been planted. There they embraced, in the first place, the meeting together of the Jews in their synagogues on the Sabbath for preaching Jesus; and then other places of public resort, and even went from house to house preaching the gospel. In Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, he repeatedly speaks of their gathering together and coming together in one place as a church. This, of course, implies that they had stated times of coming together, but he, in these cases, gives no information in reference to the time of their coming together. Where, then, it may be asked, do we find any intimation of the first day being the day on which the disciples met together?

First, we know that it was on the first day of the week that our Lord arose from the dead; that He showed Himself to certain women and to Peter, and afterwards to two of His disciples, and then at night, when the disciples, with the exception of Thomas, were together, it being as expressly said, the first day of the week He met with them. (See Luke 24, John 20:19-23.) We are again told that after eight days His disciples were within and Thomas with them; then come Jesus, &c. (John 20:26). It has been said that the expression after eight days would carry this second meeting to the second day of the next week; and so it would, according to our mode of computing time. But the scriptural mode is different; according to that, the day from whence a period commences and the day on which it terminates are both computed. I need but refer to two instances to establish this position; the first is found in Lev.23:15-16: "And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering, seven sabbaths shall be complete, even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days," &c. From the morrow after the Sabbath to the morrow after the seventh Sabbath would make but forty-nine days, unless we reckon both the morrow after the first-mentioned Sabbath, and the morrow after the seventh Sabbath in. Yet it is expressly said to be fifty days, and the feast is called Pentecost; that is, the fiftieth-day feast. The other is the declaration of Christ: "For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:40).

It was about the ninth hour of the sixth day that Jesus gave up the ghost, and He arose early on the first-day morning. So that we have to reckon the sixth, seventh and first days to make the three days and nights. According to this mode of reckoning, an eight days after would bring us to the next first day at evening. Our Lord met His disciples at other times, but no mention is made of which day of the week it was. Hence we have a two-fold testimony of His meeting with them on the first days of the week, but none that He met with them on any other days than the first days.

Again the day of Pentecost, when the baptism of the Holy Ghost ushered in the kingdom of heaven in its full light, was on the first day of the week, as we have seen from Lev. 23:16; that is, the morrow after the Sabbath. As on this day was the first establishment of New Testament order, it would seem to designate it as the proper day of the week for the church to meet together to observe that order. We find, also, that when Paul came to Troas on a certain occasion, he waited seven days, until the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread (Acts 20:7). Again, in 1st Cor. 16:2, we find Paul, in giving directions concerning the collection for the poor saints, tells them upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, &c. The incidental manner in which the first day of the week (or the first of the week, which is the same thing), is spoken of in these two instances, seems to me clearly to show that it was the custom of the disciples in those days to meet together in their church relations on that day. We have thus a double precedent of Christ's meeting with His disciples on the first day of the week, and a two-fold testimony of the apostolic churches meeting together in conformity to that precedent, as well as the clear testimony that on that day of the week, the morrow after the Sabbath, the apostles received their power from on high and commenced their witnessing to the resurrection of Jesus Christ in the preaching of the gospel, and that with great success.

We have thus ample testimony, as in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established, to establish the order of the disciples meeting together in their church relations, and, of course, for the churches attending to those ordinances and order, as directed in other parts of the New Testament, on the first day of the week. And nothing beyond this. It would seem that the Holy Ghost, in inditing the New Testament, was particularly careful that nothing should be written, not an apostolic injunction, to give any countenance to that legal observance of the day as especially holy, which he foresaw would be the case by legalists. There is no authority to show that wherein disciples are in any way providentially prevented from assembling together with the church, they should observe the day as a special day of rest, any more than there is for their eating the Lord's Supper by themselves, when prevented from meeting with the church to do it. The practice of the churches meeting together on the first day of the week is marked in church history and other writings up to the apostle's days. But I know of no account of its being observed as the Sabbath, until Calvin instituted the observance of it as substituted for the seventh day, Sabbath, under the law. Mosheim, in his church history, speaking of the internal history of the church in the fourth century, says: "The first day of the week, which was the ordinary and stated time for the public assemblies of Christians, was, in consequence of a peculiar law enacted by Constantine, observed with more solemnity than it had formerly been." This shows how the first day of the week was observed previous to Constantine's time, merely as a stated time for the assembling of churches. And even Constantine's law does not seem to require its observance as a Sabbath. But Calvin taught that the Abrahamic covenant was binding on the gospel church and that the law was a rule of life to the believers. Hence the Presbyterians have observed the first day as the Sabbath, and from them the Independents or Puritans of New England regard it as the Sabbath. And from them this view of the first day has been adopted by other denominations who are by no means favorable to Calvinism.

I now come, my brother, to your text, Rev. 1:10, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." The term Lord's day in this text has been considered by some as designating the gospel dispensation. The gospel day is in a peculiar sense the Lord's day; it is a day enlightened by Him as the Sun of Righteousness, and is the day of His reign, as the Mediator, having all power in heaven and in earth. It is one day that is known to the Lord, and is a day to be observed by His subjects, or spiritual Israel, as a day of rest, as noticed in the view of the anti-typical Sabbath. But John, I think, certainly intended to designate by this term the particular day, or point of time, in which the Lord Jesus appeared to him, to make known to him the things written in that book. And I think it altogether probable that the first day of the week was intended. But I cannot think that this name was given to it to denote that the Lord claimed this day as especially His out of the seven days of each week. For, as noticed above, the whole gospel day is peculiarly His, in which He exercises His kingly power, and in which He requires His Israel to rest from all their works, and to honor and obey Him. If this name was designed to designate the first day of the week, it was evidently designed to mark it as the day observed by the saints for assembling together in commemoration of Christ, as the other days of the week were named after certain heathen gods, and probably to denote the times of their

There is one point more in connection with this which it seems proper to notice. It has been contended that for the good of man, and of society, men should rest from their worldly labors one day in seven; and there are evident traces of such weekly rest being observed by other nations beside the Jews. To all this, in itself considered, I do not object. And I have no doubt that God, in giving laws to Israel as a nation, had in view their natural good in giving them the seventh day Sabbath, as well as their other holy days and sabbaths. But when these things are brought forward as arguments to support the idea of a first day Sabbath as belonging to the religion of Jesus Christ, I do seriously object to it. According to the argument, this rest belongs to national or worldly policy; but the religion of Christ belongs to a kingdom not of this world. As our Lord has, in His revelation of the institution and order of His religion, severed it from all connection with worldly governments, not intermeddling with their laws and policies. They have no business to intermeddle with His religion, or to hitch any of their policies or plans on to it. If civil governments think that custom and public opinion are not sufficient to protect the dependent laborer in the enjoyment of his weekly day of rest, it might be proper to pass laws requiring the release of minors, servants, &c., from their regular daily labor one day of seven, on the same principle with the ten and twelve hour systems of daily labor adopted by some States. But they have no right, under pretense of authority from God, to connect anything of religion with it, any further than to have those whose religious views would lead them to observe the seventh instead of the first day, to do so.

I have thus, my brother, given you what I think is, and what I believe you will on examination find to be, a scriptural view both of the Jewish Sabbath and of the New Testament practice of meeting together on the first day of the week. I have been lengthy, because I wished to take in review the whole subject in its various connections. I shall probably be thought too tedious on the subject, but I hope you will bear with that.

With brotherly regards, Yours, Centreville,

Pocket Trott 1.0 383 of 1338

Fairfax County, Virginia, March 21, 1856. S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.24 (1856) Writings from Elder Samuel Trott pages

414 - 422

COMMENTS ON BEEBE'S INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS VOL. 7

Brother Beebe: On reading your introductory address in the first volume number of volume 7, and noticing your proposition for publishing an additional weekly paper. I concluded to suggest to you and planned while certain brethren and friends had recently mentioned to me with a wish that I would propose the same to you. This plan is for you to publish the Signs weekly at $2.00 per annum.

The reason assigned by them is that now they have to wait too long from one number to the other, the mind loses the connection of those pieces which are connected, and in some measure loses the relish which the last gave them for the next number. Judging from their own feelings on the point, they thought your subscribers generally would prefer paying the $2.00 for a weekly paper to the $1.00 for a paper once in two weeks; while to you the additional expense would be considerably less then double in reference to the hands you have to employ.

If your subscribers generally would be willing or were able to spare the additional dollar, yearly, for this object, there are additional considerations in favor of a weekly paper, it would enable you to publish more timely, and more generally the communications of your correspondence, (if they would write them so as to save you the trouble of transcribing,) also to publish more extracts from other works. In addition to the above, there might be, probably, short extracts made, if you had room for insertion, from most of the letters sent to you by brethren principally on business, giving information of the state of religion and of the churches in the different sections of the country, which would be interesting to all. Your agents would thus be induced in writing to you, on business, to add a sentence or two, giving information how the contest goes on between truth and error, or between Michael and the dragon, and how the Lord prospers their souls concerns. But in adopting this course there's a need of caution that you do not insert that which becomes offensive. For instance if you frequently insert extracts which principally contain commendations of the Signs, it will have the appearance, however far from being intended, a flattery and of your publishing your own praise. On certain occasions it may be highly proper to win search such commendations; when for instance, they clearly indicate the state of feeling in reference to the great religious contest already alluded to, or in reference to the truth as set forth.

A weekly paper would necessarily confine you more at home, which is not very desirable, but not more so than your proposed plan, (and it may be that air long you might connect some one with you in the publishing concern who would take much of the labor, excepting the editorial part, off your hands, and thus loose you more than you even now are.)

I would for myself prefer the above plan, to that proposed by you, because I think it would succeed better and be more acceptable to our brethren generally. Render unto God the things which are God's and to Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and let them be distinct, will I think best please our brethren.

But let others speak for themselves on the subject. Your agents who feel interested in the continuance of the Signs may after a little ascertained pretty well the minds of your subscribers, and give information as to what would be their choices.

Yours as ever, S. Trott Centerville, Fairfax CH, Va., January 7, 1839

HAPPENINGS OF ELDER JOHN CLARK

Brother Beebe: I yesterday received a letter from our esteemed brother elder John Clark of Fredericksburg, which details and afflictive dispensation of divine Providence, that has occasioned many thoughts to pass, through my mind. I cannot well get over communicating some of these thoughts through the Signs.

First, the affliction of brother Clark it seems found himself under the necessity of engaging in some business to provide for the wants of his family, beyond the communications he received from the churches he serves, being a mill right; and what he considered a favorable opportunity offering for renting a small mill opposite Fredericksburg, he embraced it, made arrangements for vending meal in town, hired a miller, purchased corn to the extent of his funds, filled out a horse and cart and a driver, and commenced operations on the 1st of January. On Saturday morning the 12th, when he arose, to about Daybreak, he saw across the river, his mill in wrapped in flames which in a short time was consumed with all its contents, the corn he had purchased etcetera, and all his mill right tools, a valuable chest of them; And his plans all frustrated. Brother Clark seems to feel as he ought that the Lord has done it.

This dispensation gives rise to a number of reflections. 1st no child of grace unacquainted with brother Clark, and his gifts for the ministry doubt his being called to that work, or to the gospel field being the proper sphere of his labors. But it is with him as with too many of our old school preachers in this wilderness state of the church, that owing to the scanty support he received from the churches among which he laborers, he finds himself under the necessity either of neglecting the wants of his family, or of, in part, neglecting the ministry, to provide for their wants, by attention to other business. This deficiency in the contribution of the churches to the ministry is in a great measure to be attributed to their scattered state, their fewness of members, and those members, as formerly, being mostly of the poor of this world.

That the churches always do their duty, that is, properly considered the necessities of their ministers, and contribute according to what God has given them period to supply those necessities, is doubtful.

2nd it is to me evident, that when a minister finds himself under the necessity of engaging in other businesses for support, he ought so far as he can, to select that business which would least interfere with the duties of the ministry. Brother Clark may, in renting his mill, have inconsiderately involved himself in business that would have required his first attention, and occasioned his two great neglect of the duties of the ministry, excepting in his immediate vicinity; and the Lord may have thus visited him as a token of his displeasure at such a course. The Lord will not suffer sin on his people, nor be disappointed of his purpose concerning them.

But third. Can we suppose for a moment that this visitation was for brother Clark's sake alone? I think not. In the first place an opportunity is hereby given to those brethren, to whom the Lord has given the means, and hearts to improve them, to manifest their love to the gospel, and their sympathies with the worthy brother in his afflictions, by contributing through the facilities of the male or other mediums for his relief. And I doubt not that members of such, at least, of those who have known brother Clark, will thus testify their love. They will discover from what I have stated his peculiarly tried situation. He before this loss had not the means to go a warfare at his own charges, hence felt the necessity of engaging in business. Now he is less able to engage in feeding the flock, unless he can eat of the milk of the flock than before. And now he has not the means to enable him to select, and engage in such business as would yield him a partial support, without engrossing too much of his time. In the second place, from the disapprobation which God has hereby given, to his servants emerging in other businesses, to the neglect of the gospel field; Which is before them, there is a lesson both for the preachers and the churches. 1st, for the preachers. We are men of like passions with others, and have families of like passions and desires, being of the same flesh and blood with others, and Republic feel as anxious for the present comfort, and future prosperity as to others. These feelings of nature no doubt too often gain the ascendancy over us, and lend us to lose sight of the fact that we are our Lord's servants; that he has called us to labor in a particular sphere, with a perfect knowledge of what is necessary and good for the support of us and ours, and fully able as to God of Providence to provide in one way or another for our being fully supplied. We are also too prone to look forward with an anxiety to provide for the future, instead of being contented with the import of the petitioner "give us this day Our Daily Bread;" and without knowing with all our forethought, and the lease, what will be on the Morrow. These things often lead us to involve ourselves in difficulties, any concerns which prove hindrances to our proper business. If we could feel more in reference to worldly concerns as the old colored servant expressed himself, they would perhaps be more for our comfort and usefulness. This man had an old sore on his foot, which he altogether neglected someone asked him why he neglected it, he replied it is the master's foot, if he wants it, let him take care of it. But I fear it will require many hard lessons before I, for one learn to feel right on this subject.

Secondly. The churches; to them is committed by the great head of the church, the charge of providing for the temporal wants of those whom he sends to labour among them in word and doctrine. The obligation is made reciprocal; As to minister is required according to his ability and as the Providence of God opens the way to give himself wholly to the work; So it is the duty of the church or churches which enjoy his labors, to administer, according to the ability which God gives them, to the full supply of his necessities; And he is allowed to lead about a wife. In each case the requisition is according to to that which God gives. If the churches by neglect drive their ministers to engage in business to the injury of their usefulness in the ministry, the sin, lies at their door, and they will suffer loss. When a minister finds himself thus neglected by churches who evidently have the ability to supply his necessity, he has I think good grounds to conclude that his labours are no longer designed to be useful there; but let him not take it as a discharge from the warfare. While I would not be understood as insinuating any charge that the churches with which brother Clark laborers, have not done their duty, I would request them each, to inquire whether they may not have been in part, the occasion of his present disaster, by not doing what they might have done towards making him a partaker of their carnal things. I am aware that the doctrine I have here advanced runs counter to that of brother Forshee in the second number of this volume. Brother Forshee may conclude that there is a better prospect for providing and inheritance to leave his children by attending to his farming; Then by giving himself wholly to the ministry, and is therefore willing to avail himself of an excuse by not receiving communications from the churches, thus to pursue his farming. And he may also wish to feel that kind of independence which will allow him to suit his own convenience about going to preach, instead of feeling bound to be instant in season, out of season, by acknowledging himself as servant of the churches in receiving a support from them.

Again. The new school may aim to misinterpret this to their advantage, but let them not do it, the ground I occupy it's directly the opposite of theirs, as I would show, had a room.

I shall make no apology to brother Clark for this introducing his case entirely without his knowledge, and perhaps adverse to his feelings; for I have done no more than I felt it my duty to do.

Yours in Gospel fellowship, S. Trott Near Centerville, Fairfax. Va., January 29, 1839

DUDLEY'S LETTER ON JUSTIFICATION

Brother Beebe: I have just seen brother Dudley's communication in #3 on the subject of justification. Passing all other remarks contained therein, as I do not wish to prolong the discussion, and I believe I have already answered them in one communication or another, I will simply request of him through this channel, and explanation of what he means by this sentence "I will not retort by saying brother trot received his present opinions on that subject from the authors loaned by a brother in which they were fully held forth." There is an allusion here to certain authors loaned an insinuation which I am unable to solve, especially as coming from brother Dudley, I hope therefore he will not keep me and the readers of the signs long in the dark concerning it.

S. Trott Centerville, Fairfax, Va., February 6, 1839

MORE THOUGHTS ON JUSTIFICATION

Brother Beebe: I sometimes since received, through you, a pamphlet published in Maryland, purporting to be a scriptural vindication of the doctrine of justification; but proving to be an attempt to refute my "Thoughts on Justification" by criticisms on those scriptures which I quoted. There are very few if any texts that he notices that he does not attempt to rest from their plain English as they stand in the common translation, either by confining a word in one text, to the identical sense it has in another without any reference to the connection, and when there is a manifest difference, or by some criticisms of the Greek. Some few instances will be hereafter noticed.

I have much hesitated whether to notice it at all; and not that there is nothing in it worthy of notice, or that the book is unanswerable. But, in the 1st place, I am aware that many of our brethren are tired of the discussion of the subject of justification through the Signs. In the second place, where I attempt to answer it through the Signs, I might be blamed for availing myself of an accommodation which the writer had not; And I could not think of publishing a book, especially in answer to an anonymous writer. This work you declined to publish through the Signs in accordance with a standing and wholesome rule of yours, not to admit any communication into your paper, without the writer giving you his name.

In the 3rd place, the manner in which the writer has misrepresented both the sentiments I had advanced on this subject and the arguments and proofs I've produced in support thereof, would render it a very unpleasant task to answer him. What to ascribe this misrepresentation to, I know not; I cannot describe it to ignorance, for, so far as respects language, he appears to possess considerable learning; to ascribe it to want of candor would be to contradict the professions of wishing only to use fair argument, I will therefore leave it undecided.

Suffice it to say that I laid the book by several times, in hopes that on looking at it at a future I might view the production in a more favorable light; still however as often as I recur to it, its characteristics appear to be the same.

Hence I have declined to attempt to answer it; But still, there are some things in it, which I cannot consent to let pass without a brief vindication of myself from; And some views, from which I wish to clear our old school brethren who are advocates or eternal justification, lest it might be supposed that they were old school sentiments, seeing they have been by this writer thus connected with his views of justification; And more especially, as the book comes out under the sanction of the name of Elder Plummer waters; who has assumed the responsibility of being its publisher, and whom I once introduced to the readers of the Signs, as one of whom, I thought, was, in principle, an old school Baptist.

I wish here to assure those brethren who are tired of this subject, thinking probably that nothing new or instructing to them can be elicited by a further discussion concerning justification, that it is not my intention to offer a single argument further in what I now right, either in support of my own views or in opposition to eternal justification; though I may possibly in conclusion give a simple explanation of what my views are, as they seem so much misunderstood. In reference to brevity in my writings which some have justly recommended, I have to say that I am like the witness represented anecdote; I must be allowed to tell my story in my own way, or not at all; Although the readers of the Signs probably might not, by thus frustrating me, suffered loss, as did the lawyer, in attempting to control his witness method of stating his testimony.

The first thing I wish to notice is the reason assigned by the writer for not attaching his name to this production. In his preface, (page 4,) he says, "The present is an inauspicious moment for any new names to be added to the advocates of the old school cause, and I would be unwilling to put my name among any inharmonious set of men." The ground thus taken by the writer, is strongly commended in an additional preface, I presume of course, by the publisher elder Plummer Waters. He says, (page 5,) "the reader will observe that the author has expressed his unwillingness to put his name among any inharmonious set of men; And what prudent man under the influence of the religion of Jesus Christ, or even sober reason will widely differ from him?

For what advantage can such a man derive from a mere party name, since names are nothing?" How are we to reconcile the great zeal which elder waters has manifested to promote and continue the controversy which had commenced among all school Baptist brethren on the subject of justification, in his volunteering his services to publish this book for the writer, with his recommendation to stand aloof from all who may not perfectly harmonize in views and sentiments upon every point of doctrine, I will leave for others to determine.

I will first call the attention of elder waters (should he see this,) to the circumstance of his denominating what the author expresses by the term, advocates of the old school cause, a mere party name. If elder waters will plainly tell us which he considers the old school Baptists, as such, to be a party of, whether the of the true visible Church of Christ, or of the anti-Christian Church, and will bring forward his strong reasons in support of his position, whichever he takes, I will join issue with him, and maintain that, as old school Baptists, we are not a sect or party of either of those interests; that we are the visible Church of Christ, itself, though we may at this time be divided into parties on the subject of justification.

In reference to the idea of being united with any harmonious set of men, if the difference of opinion that exists among us on the subject of justification, be considered as destroying harmony, I can tell both of these gentlemen that on these principles they need not have singled out the present as peculiarly an inauspicious moment, for if such diversities of sentiment is to be held a barrier, the moment never has been since the apostles day when they could have joined the Church of Christ. See the discussions between the Grecians and Hebrews in the Church of Jerusalem, (Acts 6,) in the church at Antioch, (acts 5,) between Paul and Barnabas, in the same chapter, verses 36, 39. In the church at Corinth, and the churches of Galatia.

I would ask elder waters whether a man living in Antioch or Corinth, on being brought to believe and to see it his duty and privilege to be baptized, and to give himself to the church, would not be under the influence of the religion of Jesus christ, have added his name to either of those churches notwithstanding the want of harmony among them.

But to the point. If Elder Plummers and his author do not view the old school cause, or that cause for which we distinctively as old school Baptists contend, as being the cause of revealed religion, and have not that love to which it would induce them to become the openly avowed advocates of it, whoever else may oppose it, or whatever difficulties and reproaches may be in the way, I would advise them still to keep their names detached from its advocates, as enough have already volunteered their names, who have again fallen away. Incoming to those points from which, I wish to privilege of vindicating myself, I will observe that it is my intention to give only some specimens of the writer's misrepresentation for me.

1st he has set up a man of straw of his own building, to combat my sentiments, representing me as having taken the ground that individual or experimental justification did not actually take place in any, until the resurrection of Christ, and that the redemption of Christ had only a future reference; whereas I have neither believed nor advanced any such thing, notwithstanding his resting some of my arguments so to represent me. Hence his arguments to prove the reverse were only proving what I never denied. The justification which I denied being eternal, is what I have always understood Gill and others to ascent was eternal, the justification of the church, as the body collectively of Christ, in him, her head.

For I never understood them to advance the sentiment that the elect was ever justified separately or experimentally, otherwise then progressively, as they were born and brought to believe in Christ, whether before or after his crucifixion. If I had not been particular in the communication entitled Thoughts on Justification to mark the distinction between the two branches into which I understood the subject of justification to be divided, there might have been some excuse for this writer misunderstanding me on this point.

2nd he represents me as so holding the oneness of Christ and his people as that there existed a union between the holiness of Christ and the sinful and sinning soul of man. And yet I have fully declared that the elect as they were set up in Christ, and therefore as one with him possessed a spiritual beauty and glory, which nothing arising from their connection with Adam and the law can add to, and that in him or in that life which constituted their union with him they never sinned or fell. If he means by his assertion, that the Adamic nature of the elect, or those who were predestined to be quickened with that life which would bring them into actual existence as members of Christ's body, was thus sinful and sinning, I admit it, for it to admit of eternal justification I cannot admit it to be a sanctification of their humanity. And I would ask if those characters named, first Corinthians 6.9-10, were not sinful and sinning, and yet it is evident from verse 11, that they were of the elect of God, and if eternal personal justification be true, they were thus while sinning, personally justified.

3rd he charges me with meaning by the term law when I use it, exclusively the law of Moses, and of attempting to show that previous to the giving of the law there could be no charge of course, no condemnation, (page 12.) Have I ever said anything like it? Have I ever ascribed the obligation of the Gentiles to obey God, to his delivering Israel out of Egypt, and their sins, to their having transgressed a Sinai covenant? He seems to think that I had forgotten the text, (Romans 2.12;) that I had not, nor (verse 14-15) neither the apostles' argument, (Romans 5.13-14) to show that man was under law previous to the giving of the law by Moses.

If the writer was so ignorant of the general import of the term law as used in theological discussions as to really think it confined to the written law of Moses, or of the obligation, or law, binding upon man as a creature of God. Elder waters could not be, and I therefore cannot view it, as coming under his sanction, in any other light than a misrepresentation, not through ignorance.

4th he charges me with wishing to give a future signification to the text, (2nd Corinthians 5.21.) From the word might. But as any person looking at my quotation of this text in Thoughts on Justification, (signs, volume 5, page 195, column i,) we'll see that in my remarks on it, I make no reference at the time, as such, but only to cause and effect, and showed from expressions which I believe are correctly translated in our bibles, that are being made the righteousness of God in him, was not the cause of his being made sin for us, but that his being made the righteousness of sin for us, was to procure our being made the righteousness of God in him. To get rid of the force of this text, he gives this turn to my remarks, and also to carry out his charge that I confine the effects of Christ's death to Saints under the gospel. He makes a similar charge (page 8,) concerning my quotation in my Thoughts on Justification, of (Romans 5.25,) and upon about the same grounds.

5th he directly charges me in several instances of resting and perverting texts of scripture, some of which I will notice. 1st Hebrews 9.26. He charges me with resting from the intention of the author, (page 11.) This text, I call it to show that the scriptures speak of the atonement of Christ as being a time act, and thus not the expression, once in the end of the world show that? And does the circumstance of Christ's one offering being contrasted with the many offerings required by the law, alter the force of those expressions? I think not. 2nd my quotation of (Hebrews 9.22,) "for without the shedding of blood is no remission." He charges with being a resting of the text from its connection, (page 17.) But does not the sacred writer go on in verse 23 and on, to speak of Christ's sacrifice and blood, and thus give the general position thus laid down, in the quotation, as much a bearing toward his better sacrifice as toward the legal? If so, where did I wrest it? 3rd he charges me (page 10) with quoting (romance 3.24) and with perverting it in my quotation. When the fact is, I did not quote it at all; I simply said, "According to (Romans 3.24) we are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," and using in part the words of the text I marked them in italics, but I did not mark the passage as a quotation, nor the words we are in italics, I simply laid down a position for which I referred to (Romans 3.24) as my authority.

And does it not fully sustain my declaration? If all are thus justified, are not the we who are a part of that awful? The truth is, I wished merely to bring to view the idea that justification was through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, and to show that we are so taught in that text. Had I undertaken to make a quotation of the text, I should have had to quote two verses to give the full expression. But the attempt of this writer to show from my mode of expression here, that I wish to confine the effects of the redemption wrought by Christ, to the Saints since his resurrection, is altogether gratuitous. Have I ever advanced such a sentiment? Did I not (volume 5, Signs, page 195, column 2) in reference to Romans 3.25-26, expressly declare, that in the resurrection of Christ, there was a reference to the individual justification of the Saints under the former dispensation, and more to that point? If the Saints under the former dispensation belong to the same one body of Christ, then in substituting according to Apostolic example, we and us in the place of the word saints. I, of right, ought to have been understood as including all the members of that one body, former and latter. 4th Galatians 4.5.

He charges me, (page 11,) with dismembering this text and not quoting the latter part of verse 5, which he says, goes to contradict my argument. If there is any meaning to his expression, he makes an error or crime, in stopping short in my quotation quite as great as to sever the head and body, Christ and his church asunder. By reference to the passage in my Thoughts on Justification, (volume 5, Signs, page 193, column iii) it will be seen that in connection with having shown the intimate relation which justification had to redemption, I called this text to show that redemption was manifestly a time act, and I quoted so much as showed this fact, and also the fact that those thus redeemed were previously under the law, and therefore, not before justified from it; the part omitted being an explanation of the part quoted or telling to give a different view of the subject, then I should have been so to be blamed.

Such a quotation we have in this pamphlet. The writer, (page 17,) referring to Galatians 3.8, notices that part of it which reads thus, "preach before the gospel unto Abraham," and referring to these expressions, (page 20,) he draws from the wonderful conclusion that,

"because the gospel was preached to him beforehand, he had a perfect knowledge of the state of believers under this gospel," (that is as I understand him, in the gospel day,") "and of the parts performed by the apostles in its propagation," whereas if he had read the whole verse, he would have found the apostle clearly explaining what he meant by saying the gospel was preached before unto Abraham, simply this, that the promise was made to him that, "and you shall all nations be blessed." Without saying that this is resting the scriptures, I will lead the writer and his friend Elder Waters to make what they can of it. To return to the text Galatians 4.4-5, I will say that I have not the ability to discover how, in any sense, the part left, which reads thus, "that we might receive the adoption of sons," contradicts my argument.

I have supposed that a pretty strong argument might be drawn from it, in its connection, in favor of my views of justification; but as I am pledged not to bring forward any argument, not knowing what the writer would make from this text, I will simply say that in writing my Thoughts on Justification, I supposed I was writing for the consideration of those who knew the difference between having been predestinated to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, and a receiving of the adoption of sons, in having the spirit of God's son sent forth into their hearts crying, Abba, father; and who well recollect a period when they had not received this adoption, and when they would have given the world, if they had had it, for the privilege of calling God dear Father.

I pressed to be of those who do not handle the word of God deceitfully, and to be under the influence of that fear of God which would deter me from wresting the scriptures to support any point, and to be thus publicly charged with wresting and perverting the scriptures repeatedly, and that upon no better grounds, does not sit well on me; I have therefore been constrained thus to vindicate myself from the charge. However, it is, on the whole, better for the charge to have been made, on these false grounds, than that I should have given just ground for such charges.

I will leave the vindication of my old school brethren, to another communication.

Yours as ever, the subject of fears within, and fightings without, Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax Co, Va., February 4, 1839

Remarks on Ephesians 1:3.

"Blessed be the God, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."

Who hath blessed us, &c., is what I wish particularly to notice. From the manner in which this text is quoted and applied by certain writers, one might infer that they considered the revelation of God to be altogether of His eternal purpose, and nothing of the accomplishment of that purpose, or that their attention is so much taken up with the purpose itself, that they can see nothing of its being carried out in the acts and events in time. These persons have certainly a right to present their own view of the subject; and this liberty I would not deprive them of. But being as confident as I am that God exists, that such a view of the subject is wrong, I will present for their consideration a different view of divine revelation, and of the text above named in particular.

Perhaps some may think that I have used too strong an expression, in saying that I am as confident of this thing, as I am that God exists. But my brethren; how can we know anything of God but by His bringing to pass the events purposed in His own eternal mind. Thus I understand God to declare beforehand in prophecy and in promise, His purpose, that the accomplishment of those events thus before declared, may be a continual witness that He alone is God. And this I understand to be the ground taken by God in His reasonings with Israel against idolatry, as in Isa.41:8-20, 21-28; also in chapter 42:9; 42:8-13, and in other places.

There appears to me, to be a divine beauty and glory reflected, from the subject when we contemplate God's eternal purpose as rolling on in the unerring accomplishment of the preordained parts thereof, in regular succession; and in beholding the successive accomplishment of each event unfolding more and more of the manifold wisdom and gracious designs of Him who sits as a Sovereign, governing all, "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times, the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure;" (Isa.46:10) thus also verifying His declaration;

"I will work and who shall let it." I think far more of God is seen in beholding Him bringing to pass in regular succession, His declared purpose, making every thing, even the wrath of man subservient thereto, than could be seen in contemplating Him merely as declared in the purpose. Just as the planetary orbs, by their constant and regular revolutions, bringing about, in beautiful order, the successions of day and night, summer and winter, seed time and harvest, proclaim far more distinctly the existence and government of God, all-wise, all-powerful and good, than the mere excellence of those orbs divested of their motions and of the changes produced thereby, could do. It was this motion of these heavenly bodies, and the changes thereby produced, which the Psalmist calls our attention to in the 19th Psalm.

The writers of the New Testament seem to have been ever intent on bringing to our view the purpose as coupled with, and showed in, its accomplishments, and the prophecies and promises as verified in their fulfillment; the types which were but prophecy or the purpose of God declared in emblems, are also in the New Testament brought to view in connection with their anti-types.

As one instance in which the purpose and its accomplishment are brought to view in their legitimate connection by the inspired writers I will refer to II Tim.1:9. "Who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Here we have God's own purpose and grace, given to the saints, not in themselves, but in Christ Jesus, their Head, before the world began, brought to view - not as constituting in that original gift, their actual salvation and calling, but as being the purpose going before, or predestinated plan according to which, those, of whom the Apostle then spake, were actually saved and called. Here therefore we have the purpose as fixed before time began, now actually accomplished as manifested in the experience of the saints, and that of grace and not of works, presented together as one harmonious whole, manifesting God in the beginning, and ending of it. So in the text to be considered, (Eph.1:3) I understand the Apostle not as speaking simply of the saints being blessed in purpose, or of their being chosen and predestinated to these blessings, but of their being brought into the experience of these blessings, according to God's electing and predestinating love and purpose going before.

Hence the text in its connection does not read as it should have done to convey the idea of the saints having been blessed, as the Apostle speaks, with all spiritual blessings in the electing and predestinating purpose going before. It should in that case have read, Who blessed us with all spiritual blessings, &c., when He chose in Him before the foundation of the world, &c. But the Apostle here speaks not of the saints having been blessed in their election to holiness &c., and predestination to the adoption of children, but of their having been then blessed according to that CHOICE and PREDESTINATION going before. See verses 4 & 5 in connection with verse 3. I therefore must understand him as calling the attention of the Ephesian brethren to the fact, of the actual accomplishment of the electing and predestinating purpose of God going before, concerning them, as manifested in their experience. The obligation of the saints thus to unite with the Apostle in blessing God, for having brought them to realize in their experience, all those spiritual blessings to which He had chosen and predestinated them, before the foundation of the world, was taught under the Levitical law, in the case of the Israelite who was to bring his "basket of first fruits" unto the Lord; according to Deut.26:1-11. There is in the confession which the Israelite was to make on that occasion, something beautifully illustrative of our text, and also of the experience which the child of grace relates when he comes before the church, (as the Israelite came before the priest,) to offer also the first fruits of grace in his heart, namely; a thankful acknowledgment of being saved by Christ, and of subjection to Christ by submitting to the ordinance of baptism. Were it not so lengthy I would transcribe the whole passage; as it is, I will content myself with noticing some particulars therein; and request my brethren to read the passage for themselves. 1st. He was to say unto the priest, "I profess this day unto the Lord thy God that I am come unto the country which the Lord sware unto our fathers for to give us." (vs.3.) Notice the import of this confession; it was not, that God in swearing unto their fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, had by that oath and promise put them then in actual possession of the good land; but it was, that now, according to that oath and promise, God had brought Israel into the possession of the land promised unto their fathers, notwithstanding all the difficulties that had intervened. It was not therefore the oath and promise that he was then to acknowledge, but the accomplishment of that promise as manifested in his actually now enjoying the fruits of the land. And yet the promise made unto their fathers and confirmed by the oath of God, as effectually secured the possession of the land to their posterity, as did the choice of the saints in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, and the everlasting covenant established with Christ, secured to them, their being actually "blessed with all spiritual blessings." Again this Israelite, after the priest should take his basket of first fruits and set it down before the altar of the Lord his God, was to give a brief detail of Israel's origin, of their bondage and oppression in Egypt, of their crying unto the Lord, and of His hearing their cry and delivering them by a strong hand out of Egypt, and His bringing them into that land which flowed with milk and honey, and that the fruits which he then had brought were those which the Lord had given him, &c. How different the idea conveyed by this whole relation from that of their having been put into actual possession of national liberty and blessings in the land of Canaan by the promise made unto Abraham! That promise secured their being put into this possession, and the confession was, that it was according to that promise, and not according to their works, that they were thus blessed.

So in the relation which spiritual Israelites give of their experience, there is a correspondence with that of the national Israelites. "A Syrian ready to perish was my father, and he went down into Egypt," &c., said one. The other says, a deceived one, (the import of Syrian) ready to perish was my father, and I have borne his image; and when the Lord opened my eyes to see my condition, I found myself a poor sinner lying under the just condemnation of the law, &c., and being heavy laden with its demands, I cried unto the Lord for mercy; He heard me and brought me from under it and to Jesus, for salvation, &c.

I recollect, if I may refer to the subject without giving offense, that in the discussion on justification, one esteemed brother said he had been taught the doctrine of eternal justification in his experience. If so, he of course found from the first discovery he had of his true situation, that he had always been actually blessed with all spiritual blessings. But although I have not the most distant idea that this brother designed to misrepresent his case; yet from his preaching as I heard him, I am confident that his experience taught him to view himself - not as a justified one saved - but as a sinner saved - not as always enjoying the milk and honey of Canaan; but as having groaned under the bondage and oppression of Egypt. So I think all who are taught of God, instead of viewing themselves as having been always in the blessed state of which the Apostle speaks in the text under consideration, find that they had been living without God and without hope in the world, and had been aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, &c.

In further noticing this subject, it will be proper, first to examine the import of the expressions; In heavenly places, in Christ Jesus. 1st. The expression, in heavenly places. From the use of this and like expressions, in this and other texts, I do not understand the idea intended thereby to be conveyed, as one to be confined to that which is beyond time, either before or after; but the expression is evidently used to point out the peculiarities of the gospel dispensation and what properly belongs to it, in distinction from the legal dispensation. Thus I understand the Master, in the expressions "If I have told you earthly things and ye believed not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things," (John 3:12) to intimate to Nicodemus that he had not believed the words of the Sinai covenant in their true and full import, and therefore it was no wonder he did not comprehend and believe the testimony of Christ concerning the new birth. And this text I understand as thus corresponding with John 5:47, with the difference that Christ here claims to have Himself spoken the words from Mount Sinai. In I Cor.15:47-49, the termsheavenly and earthly refer to Christ and Adam the one as the head or father of the spiritual birth of the saints; the other of their natural birth. Thus also the heavenly places mentioned in Eph.1:20 & 2:6, in which Christ was seated on His resurrection from the dead, and His people with and in Him, refer I think to Christ's being thus exalted as King in Zion to administer to His people, not the regulations of the Sinai covenant, but the provisions of the sure mercies of David. And we are thus taught that as Christ in consequence of His union with His people was brought under the law, so by the redemption which He completed in the same oneness with His people, and His consequent resurrection from the dead, His people were thus exalted with, and in Him, and together seated in Him far above the demands of the law and above all the principalities and powers, whether angels or men that are under the law.

In a similar sense in the expression used in Eph.3:10. Thus also, the heavenly calling, heavenly gift, heavenly things, heavenly country, and heavenly Jerusalem, Heb.3:1; 6:4; 8:5; 9:23; 11:16; 12:22, all refer to the same spiritual idea relating to the gospel church. The term heavens also in Heb. 9:23, refers to the same spiritual nature of the gospel church. Hence the being blessed in heavenly places refers to the saints being under the Everlasting Covenant, and their being blessed according to the provisions of that covenant, as ordered in all things and sure, and not according to the conditional provisions of the Sinai covenant; they being recognized, not as bond servants under the law; but as sons of God.

We next enquire, what the import is, of the expression, in Christ Jesus as used in this connection. It is, as I understand it, designed to bring Christ to view, as the sole medium through which the blessings of God flows to any of the children of men, and shows farther the distinction between these blessings, and those, bestowed upon national Israel.

The blessings which national Israel enjoyed were bestowed upon them as the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and according to the promises made unto them. The saints are blessed as the seed of Christ, and according to the promises which are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. The natural seed of Abraham were blessed as they were recognized as such by the circumcision in the flesh. The saints are manifested as heirs of the spiritual blessings by the circumcision that is of the heart, in the spirit. The blessings of Canaan came to natural Israel on the ground of their own obedience; these spiritual blessings flow freely to the saints, through that perfect obedience which Christ rendered from under the law. In a word, the believer, in having Christ as his, has in Him, all spiritual blessings, secured eternally unto him; and as from time to time he is enabled to exercise faith in Christ, he is made to rejoice in the assurance that the blessing of God rests upon him, without any mixture of evil, or any deficiency for rendering him truly blessed for time and eternity. And it is only as he can exercise faith in Christ, that he can thus realize that he is blessed of God.

In specifying the all spiritual blessings, many name election and predestination as standing foremost in the list, but however great and glorious blessings these are, as the flowings out of the love of God to His people, yet it was not of these the Apostle here spake, for it is according to this electing and predestinating grace, that they are thus blessed, or in other words, the blessings which are here spoken of, are no other than what flows out of that everlasting love which God placed upon them in their election. As the Israelite already referred to, in bringing his basket of first- fruits, therein confesses unto God, not that God chose Abraham and swear unto him, to give unto his posterity the land of Canaan; but according to that purpose thus confirmed unto Abraham, he was in the possession, and actually enjoying the fruits of the land of Canaan. So the believer when brought to receive Christ by faith, is constrained to acknowledge, that in Him he finds not only all that he had conceived to be promised in the gospel, but infinitely more than it had ever entered into his heart to conceive of.

As to any attempt to count up these blessings, I consider it superfluous. I might enumerate; redemption, calling, repentance, faith, adoption, &c.; but are these all that are included in the Apostle's expressions, "Who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings?" I think not. The expression all spiritual blessings, seem to me to embrace the idea, not only that they had been blessed with all that they had understood to be included in the gospel report; but that all they had experienced or should experience was blessing; that as the curse was now removed, their sins pardoned, and they justified in their experience through the redemption they now apprehended by faith in Christ, they had peace with God, and felt that everything flowed from His goodness. The being disappointed in their attempts to make their peace with God, by their works, and the condemnation, distress and broken- heartedness which they had been made to feel, they now see were all blessings, rich blessings, to their poor guilty souls; all were but preparing them to receive and rejoice in Christ.

So faith, when exercised by the operation of God in the hearts of His people, assures them that all the trials of the way, inward and outward, how much soever sense may be disposed to pronounce them evils, are all brought with blessings, rich and spiritual; all are working together for their good. Having Christ, they are blessed in prosperity, in adversity; in sickness, in health; in darkness, in light; in life, in death; in the sounding of the trump of the Archangel, and in eternity.

Well and feelingly therefore may the saint, when faith is in exercise, say with the Apostle: Blessed be the God, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; according as He hath chosen us in Him, &c.

Centreville, Fairfax County Virginia, Dec. 23, 1839.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 8 (1840)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pgs 181 - 188

ETERNAL JUSTIFICATION?

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - I see that you have copied into the SIGNS OF THE TIMES from the WORLD, the communication signed T.J.K. on the subject of justification. The sentiment advocated by this writer, relative to the elect having been justified in eternity, is one which has generally been received by our Predestinarian Brethren, and is certainly ably handled by him. Although I am a predestinarian in sentiment, and classed with those, whom the law-gospel religionists call by way of reproach Antinomians, yet the arguments of T.J.K. has left my mind, as they found it, possessed of what appears to me strong objections to this sentiment. As T.J.K. appears to be intimately conversant with the subject, and as capable perhaps as any other of removing these objections, if they can be consistently answered, I beg leave through the medium of your Paper to propose some of them for his examination; hoping that, not for my sake only, but that there may be a correct understanding of this important subject by all those who are desirous of being established in the truth as it is in Jesus, he will enter into a candid discussion of the subject. Before stating my objections, I would remark that none of those objections raised by the popular religionists against this sentiment, and which grew out of a denial of the eternal union of Christ and his Church, find any place in my mind. But I object to the sentiment that the elect were justified before the foundation of the world.

First, because the Scriptures, no where as I can find, declare this to be the case, or directly imply it. Now to us Waldensis, this is a weighty objection; for being an inhabitant of the valley, and not having our residence on the hillof Theological Science, we have never learned to receive as revealed truth, those notions which are only found by drawing inferences from the major and minor propositions of the logicians. We are plain men, and require plain and direct Scriptural proofs for what we receive as articles of our faith.

Thus eternal & personal election we find plainly stated or necessarily involved in the declarations of Scripture; the everlasting love of God to his people is also clearly revealed, and the eternal union of Christ and his Church, and the individual members thereof, is also evidently declared in such texts as these, "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world," and necessarily involved in the doctrine of the headship of Christ. So of the other particulars of the doctrine of the everlasting Gospel.

Second, I object to it, because to defend the sentiment its advocates uniformly find it necessary to make it an essential prerequisite to the everlasting love of God. T.J.K. does not say this in so many words, but he seems to think it inconsistent to suppose that God would choose his people in Christ, without considering them as justified, which amounts to the same thing. But the Scriptures, I think, as uniformly represent the love of God to his people to be the moving cause of his making the necessary provision; that is, giving his Son that they might be justified. If so, I do not see how we can get rid of acknowledging it the primary cause of their justification; which is exactly reversing the subject.

Third, I object to the notion of eternal justification, because that in supporting it, its advocates seem necessarily to blend the law under which Adam was created, with the everlasting Covenant under which Christ, and his posterity were set up, and the relation of the elect to Adam, with their relation to Christ. For justification, I believe is uniformly admitted to be a law term, and to effect man's standing as existing under the law; so I think the Scriptures speak of it. This being the case, I cannot conceive how justification can entitle us to heaven and eternal happiness, unless the inheritance come by the law; but the Apostle tells us, "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise." Gal.3:18. Neither can I comprehend how they could be justified (justification being a clearance from a charge of guilt,) whilst they had no being, but as they existed in Christ, unless they existed in him as under the law; nor can I understand how that which was alone necessary to the elect, as existing in their relation to Adam, could be necessary to effect their standing in Christ, if their relations to the two Adam's be as distinct as are their two headships.

Last, I object to this notion, because, as justification relates wholly to the requirements of the law, the idea of eternal justification must involve in it the existence of the law from everlasting. But how could a law exist without subjects? And who were the subjects of law before the creation of the world, if we admit that Christ, and his people in him, were wholly set up under another Covenant?

A WALDENSIS. Valley of Achor, Dec.21st, 1832. Elder

Samuel Trott

EXPERIMENTAL DARKNESS.

BROTHER BEEBE: - I had formed a resolution not to controvert any subject introduced into the SIGNS, unless particularly called out; and although now inclined to notice a remark of yours, I do not consider it as transgressing in reality that resolution, because I think it will not cause much discussion, being experimental rather than doctrinal, and because I presume the remark was made without reflection, rather than being an expression of your experience on that point. Why then notice it and again subject myself to the charge of being censorious, &c., if it is mere mistake?

Because as coming from brother Beebe it is calculated evidently to disturb the minds of many whose lot it is to walk much in darkness; for such I think is frequently the lot of God's children, and that distinct from their seeing and feeling the corruptions of their nature, as I shall probably show the Scriptures support me in believing. The remark to which I refer, is in No.8, present volume, page 63. It is this, "But in an experimental view of the travel of the saints, they are subject to much of what they very improperly call darkness, for what they call darkness is that by which they see the depravity and corruption of their own carnal natures; and our Lord instructs us that whatever maketh manifest, is light." What is the believer's light? Reason or judgment is the lamp of the natural mind, it is trimmed by science, and on some points and in some measure it may be trimmed by spiritual knowledge; but, "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life," and again, "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in me should not abide in darkness." John 8:12, and 13:46.

He is the light to the spiritual mind or new man, not a lamp, but the Sun of righteousness. Thus says the Psalmist, "The Lord is my light and my salvation." Psalm 27:1; and the Apostle, "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." II Cor. 1:6. As in the natural, so in the spiritual world, darkness is the absence of light. As the light of the natural sun is at times more or less withdrawn, as from its being obscured by clouds on to its entire withdrawal leaving us in perfect night; so I understand the Lord deals with his people. In proportion as the Lord is pleased to shine upon the written or preached word, or to withdraw his shining, and so upon the ordinances or in prayer, or upon our experience, we see and feel the operations of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, or we mourn his absence. Sometimes he so withdraws his shining from all these points at once that we have darkness, as brother Hatfield says in his communication in the same number of the SIGNS, that can be felt. It is the not enjoying of this light that I have always understood christians to have reference to, when they have spoken of being, or walking in darkness, entirely distinct in idea from their seeing and feeling their native corruptions; though both often go together, for Satan frequently takes advantage of the saint's being in darkness as to his evidences, &c., to stir up his corruptions by temptations. Hence the believer often complains of his darkness and of his depravity both together. As to a darkness that can be felt, I think I have experienced it for instance in preaching, I have thought I had my subject before me, would name my text and commence speaking, when all of a sudden a darkness would come over my subject and text so that every ray or idea of what it contained seemed shut out from my mind; I could go on speaking, but when one idea was advanced I did not know what I should have to advance next; and it seemed actually to affect me so that I felt it in my natural vision, I could not with confidence, whilst it lasted, look upon the congregation and when I attempted it, there seemed a blur before my eyes, as though half blind, or as some have said, a bag was drawn over them. So in experience sometimes so thick darkness seems to cover the word, past experience, and our minds in prayer, that we cannot discover one ray of spiritual comfort or light from any source; and the darkness is so great that we think we can actually feel it, and we do feel it affecting our natural mind and system. Now a person thus under darkness, might as well undertake to command the natural sun to shine and give him light at midnight as to think by any resolution of his mind, or any recalling to mind of past experience that he could dispel this darkness, or even by any experience of faith that he can cause the light to shine upon his distressed mind, until the Lord is pleased to bring him forth to the light. As Job says, "He shutteth up a man and there can be no opening." Faith, instead of being able to control the shining of the light, is dependent on its shining for its acting; when the Sun of righteousness shines on the gospel testimony, or on the promise in reference to us, we feel the actings of faith embracing that testimony or promise; not otherwise. The Lord alone can control and prolong the shining of this light, as Joshua his type only ever successfully commanded the sun and moon to stand still. As to scriptural authority for saints walking at times in darkness, I will quote first, Isa. 50:10, "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." Surely the prophet must have reference to saints; and if they had been walking in their corruptions and sins, instead of encouraging them as he does, he would have reproved them; so that was not what is intended by their walking in darkness; and their having no light, forbids the idea, that what they called darkness.

was light. Neither does he reprove them for this darkness, nor does he encourage them in lieu thereof to encompass themselves with sparks of their own kindling, see verse 11. Instead of occupying space to explain the trusting in the name of the Lord and staying upon his God, I will illustrate it by the text I will quote from Micah, (Mic.7:8-9,) "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me; he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness." Thus Micah, though he sits in darkness, trusts in the name of the Lord and stays upon his God, that he will again bring him forth to the light.

Brother Beebe, now that I have written this, I have some hesitancy as to the propriety of again subjecting myself to the charge of dogmatism by sending it on for publication. But I think I will send it

In reference to the paragraph you inserted in the recent number of the SIGNS, page 63, in reference to me, I will say, I know not what opinion my friends have formed of the state of my health, nor what is the purpose of God concerning me; but I know that between nine and ten years ago some of my friends thought I would not live a year then, but since then I have enjoyed better health, than I ever before enjoyed. As the Lord has so far raised me up again as to enable me to attend and fill my appointments for preaching, he may disappoint me and my friends as he did before; though it is not likely from appearances that I shall again enjoy the same degree of health and strength as before. Indeed if the Lord should continue me only in consideration of my usefulness or fruitfulness, I think he must take me away very speedily as a barren branch.

With christian regards yours, S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., April 29, 1848.

EXPLANATION OF THE TERMS: NATURAL & CARNAL.

BROTHER BEEBE: - Will you permit me to propose an answer for the consideration of brethren a little differing from yours on page 113 of the SIGNS for Aug.1, 1848 – to the first of Elder Goldsmith's queries on page 115, same number. To your answer to the second query I have no objections.

This first query is, "Is it certain that natural and carnal are synonymous terms as used in the Scriptures? You give an answer according to the import of the two words as found in lexicons, but the guery was in reference to the use of the terms in the Scriptures. There is this difference in this, as in some other cases. Lexicons speak of men and things as they are manifested in the world to the natural eye, or human reason, the Scriptures speak of them by the revelation of God. I understand, and so I presume you do, the term carnal in its application to man as designating him as depraved. This is what I understand God as charging him with, when he says, "For that he also is flesh." Gen.6:3. As man universally is flesh or depraved we cannot contemplate the natural man as he exists in the world but as carnal. But the term natural is not, I think, in the scriptures confined to man as carnal or depraved. My recent experience on the point is this; in preaching a short time since, I had occasion to quote I Cor.2:14, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, &c.," and in quoting it the idea was presented with considerable force to my mind that the Apostle did not design to convey the idea only, that man in consequence of his fallen state, "receiveth not the things," but, that man as made a living soul, being of the earth, earthy, had no faculty, either in his original upright, or present fallen state, capable of receiving the things of the Spirit of God, and I so explained the passage. In reviewing the subject since, I have been confirmed in the correctness of that idea, both from the connection of that text, and from the use of the term natural in I Cor.15:44-46, where it is evidently used to denote man in his original creation as distinguished by his peculiar formation, faculties, &c., from the second man who is the Lord from heaven; without its having any special bearing as to the state of man, either as upright or fallen. Hence whilst the word is here used in relation to man in his original creation, and therefore whilst in his upright state, it is just before, in verse 44, used in relation to the human body as mortal and therefore as subject to the consequences of sin. So that neither uprightness, nor carnality are essential to man as natural. If I am correct in these views, the terms natural and carnal or flesh as found in the Scriptures are not strictly synonymous. The difference is about this; the carnal man is the natural man as he exists in consequence of the disobedience of Adam, a depraved creature; the natural man, is the same man, as he exists in his distinct formation and powers as a creature of God, whether in his original upright or present carnal state. From what I have said, it will be seen that one expression of mine found in the queries I proposed, published in SIGNS for July 15, 1848, page 106, is according to my present views incorrect. It is this, "Is the mind which by nature is earthly and fleshly&c.?" The mind of man is by nature earthly being so formed of God as adapted to man's earthly residence. But man's mind is fleshly or carnal, by the offense of one, Adam. This makes the idea involved in the query still more formable, for the mind of man in order to become spiritual and heavenly must be changed both from its carnal state and its earthly nature. Excuse me, Brother Beebe, for introducing my views in answer to a query addressed to you and differing from yours. I thought perhaps the query was induced by my expressions above referred to, though not meeting them exactly. Besides as the query was introduced, I wished it to receive an answer through the SIGNS, such as the scriptures will fully justify. If you and I have both failed in giving a correct answer, some other brother may be induced to set the thing right.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., Aug. 4, 1848.

EXPOSITION OF COL. 1:12.

"Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light."

Dear Brother Beebe: - Having had my mind somewhat impressed for some time past with the text, Col. 1:12, and having some more distinct views than formerly of its import, I have thought of offering a few remarks on the passage.

Although the subject and my remarks may be considered controversial, as differing from the opinions of some others, yet my object is to present for the consideration of the brethren my view of the subject. Whether they be correct, or whether they be of any importance, they may judge. Brother Dudley has anticipated me on some points of my subject, but there are other points not in contradiction to what is contained in his excellent communication in the fourth number of the present volume, which I wish to notice.

The text reads thus: "Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." The expression, "Giving thanks unto the Father, which, &c.," clearly shows that the making meet, &c., is the work of God and not of the creature. But that on which I wish particularly to remark is the making meet to be partakers of the inheritance, &c. By the expression, "the inheritance of the saints in light;" whether we understand by the saints in light, the saints in glory, or believers in general, I think none will dispute that we are to understand the inheritance to be that inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them; and therefore that it must be entirely distinct from that inheritance which was given to the natural seed of Abraham through the lineage of Isaac and Jacob. That was a natural inheritance and the nature derived by their natural birth as the posterity of Abraham, and certified by their circumcision, made them meet to be partakers of it, their nature being suitable to the enjoyment of it, and they being known as the legitimate posterity of Abraham, see Gen. 17:1-14. But the inheritance of which our text speaks is not earthly, but heavenly; not corruptible, but incorruptible, not natural, but spiritual; it is not given of God merely as the sovereign disposer of events upon covenant obligations and conditions, but it is bequested of God as a Father, for an inheritance for His children. Hence it appears to me that to those who have ears to hear what the Spirit saith it is an easy task to describe what is requisite to make any meet for this inheritance. We must possess a nature that is heavenly, incorrupting, and spiritual; for without a nature corresponding to the inheritance we cannot enjoy it. And further we must have the witness that we are the children of God, "and if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together" Rom.8:16,17. The question may be asked whether adoption, with its necessary accompaniments: redemption, and emancipation from the law, would constitute this meetness for the inheritance? It might make us partakers of the inheritance, but not meet to be partakers of it; and our text speaks of being meet to be partakers, &c. Adoption and redemption have an important place in our being made heirs, because as the children of Adam we are bond servants under the law until redeemed, emancipated and made partakers of the spirit of adoption. But redemption and adoption give no new nature. They only make us, as we were the children of Adam, legally partakers of the inheritance, without giving that heavenly, that spiritual nature, adapted to the nature of the inheritance. Hence the declaration; ye must be born again, sounds as emphatically from the word as does the doctrine of adoption or redemption. It bears as prominent a place in the gospel revelation, is as important a point in the plan of salvation. I see not why the declaration, "Except a man be born again," &c., is not as definite in its import as are the declarations concerning adoption and redemption; or how a person can speak loosely of the nature of the new birth any more than he can of the nature of redemption, consistently with a correct view of gospel doctrine.

The question may be asked, whether we understand by the terms regeneration, and born again, born of God, &c., a washing? Do we not form an adequate idea of what is intended to be conveyed by those terms in the Scriptures? I answer, No.

1.Because the idea conveyed by the terms being born, in their uniform use, is very different from that conveyed by the terms being washed.

2. Because no washing can give to an earthly person a new and heavenly nature. No washing will change the Ethiopian's skin, or the Leopard's spots. No washing will change the sow into a sheep, but after being washed she still retains her old nature, and will therefore return to her wallowing in the mire. But do not the terms washing of regeneration found in Titus 3:5, convey the idea that washing and regeneration are one and the same? Will any say the terms renewing of the Holy Ghost, found in immediate connection, convey the idea that the renewing and the Holy Ghost are one and the same? Yet both expressions are similar in construction. The plain manifest import of the one expression is that the renewing is the result of the operation or communication of the Holy Ghost; so that of the other is that the washing is the result of regeneration. The one is the Holy Ghost's renewing, or a renewing which is experienced only where the Holy Ghost is given (John 7:39), the other is regeneration's washing or a washing which is experienced where regeneration takes place. There is an experience of washing, both of the water and of the blood, resulting from regeneration. But I think I have said enough to show any true inquirer after truth that this text does not convey properly the idea that a washing is regeneration; and I know of no text of Scripture that does.

But the question returns. What do the terms regeneration and born again mean? I cannot conceive that anyone has a right to say that they do not mean just what they say; that regeneration is not a regeneration, that being born again is not a being born again. If then no one has authority to say that the meaning of these terms do not correspond with the word used; I think I may safely say they do mean what the words import. And this is just what is needed to make us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. For as showed, the inheritance is not earthly or fleshly, but spiritual. In our first birth we were born of the flesh, and that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and will remain till death does its office to return it to dust. That only is spirit which is born of the spirit. In our first generation we were generated as the seed of Adam the living soul, but earthy man. Those who are regenerated are generated a second time; generated as the seed of the second Adam, who is the Lord from heaven and a quickening spirit. In the first birth, persons are brought into manifest existence in a nature that is of the earth, earthy. In being born again, they are born of a nature that is spiritual and heavenly; capable of receiving the things of the Spirit, and enjoying that which is heavenly. So that those who are born again exist in an old man and in a new man, in the same person; exist as the seed of Adam and as the seed of Christ; as the children of Adam and the children of God. Hence, notwithstanding their old man clinging to its mother earth and corrupt, yet they are made meet to be partakers of the incorruptible inheritance; for who so meet to partake of the inheritance laid up by a father as his own children? Hence the declaration of Paul before quoted: "If children, then heirs of God." &c. I have above represented this second birth to be of the seed of Christ, and I think I have truly so represented it according to the Scripture. But our text reads, "Giving thanks unto the Father who hath made us meet," &c. How is this? It is even so: The believer is born of life and Christ is their life (Col. 3:4); he is born of the Spirit and the Lord is the spirit of the New Testament, II Cor.3: 17. The second Adam was made, not a living soul, but a quickening spirit. What is it that quickens a dead body but life imparted? So what will quicken a dead soul but spiritual life imparted? Christ is that spirit and is that life. Hence that which is in the believer, the hope of glory according to the Scriptures, is not the old soul new formed, but it is Christ in him Col. 1:27. That Christ is the seed, the life of which the children of God are born, I have contended (if brother Beebe, you will allow me to glance a little at old things), heretofore as now; but though charged with it, I never have said that Christ, as the quickening spirit, was the regenerator. I have said that I knew not from the Scriptures, or to what effect that the Holy Ghost, as such, was the regenerator. And I have said that the Scriptures ascribed the work to God, but whether as Father, or Word, or as Holy Ghost, they did not say. Here, according to my present construction of this text, I was mistaken. For what does the text say? "Giving thanks unto the Father," &c., not unto the Word or the Holy Ghost. But how has the Father made us meet? 1. The new man, which I understand to be the production of the new birth, is said to be after God created in righteousness, and true holiness. Again it is said, "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works" &c. If then we were created in Christ Jesus, we are, in our second birth, the seed of Christ, as our being created in Adam constituted us the seed of Adam; but in both cases it was God that created us; in the one case as servants, in the other as sons. In the second place, it is God, even the Father, that regenerates. For it is written, "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God" &c. God's shining in the heart to give the, light of the knowledge, &c., is His regenerating, by imparting that life which is the light of men. Hence Christ said, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." If Christ is that eternal life which was with the Father (see John 1:2), and that life is the light of men, then God shines in the heart to give the light of the knowledge, &c., by regenerating with that life.

I have thus given my view of what it is to be made meet to be a partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light, and who it is that makes meet. It is not for me to say that God could not in any other way meeten heirs for His inheritance, but I think I may say, this is the standard which God has revealed, "If children then heirs;" and that these children are born children by a second birth; born not of the flesh, but of the spirit; born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God; born not as the seed of Adam, but as the seed of Christ. I think also from the view I have taken of the Scripture testimony on the subject that, although there is a washing of water by the word and a washing from our sin in the blood of Christ connected with salvation, yet that no washing can constitute the regeneration and new birth spoken of in the Scriptures, or can change one from a natural person to a spiritual born child of God. You may wash an African slave until you rub the skin off and yet you cannot make him a free born son of his white master.

I do desire that our brethren would examine this, and other subjects of like importance, carefully in the light of the Scriptures; and be careful that they look at it in the Scripture light, and not in that of the theories of men. If the Scriptures do not sustain the views I have given, I hope any discovering the error will point it out in the spirit of christian love.

I remain yours; the same poor sinful wretch as when younger.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia. March 8, 1855.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.23 (1858)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 409-414

THE FOUR CHARIOTS FROM BETWEEN TWO MOUNTAINS OF BRASS

"And, behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass." – Zechariah vi, 1.

The chariots denote different warlike powers which shall prevail, and the color of the horses in each, indicated the result from the reigns of the several powers, to the Jews, as the color of the horses in Revelation vi, 1-8, pointed out the nature of the events which should prevail under the first four seals in John's vision.

It is generally admitted that the first three chariots correspond with the first three beasts of Daniel's vision – Daniel vii, 1-8, and with the three higher parts of Nebuchadnezzar's image of which he dreamed in Daniel ii, 31-40. That is, that the first chariot represented the Babylonish Monarchy, having red horses in it, denoting the bloody wars that nation waged against the Jews. As this Monarchy was already succeeded by the Mede-Persian Empire when Zechariah had this vision, nothing more is said of this chariot and red horses.

The second chariot represented the Persian government; and the black horses, the gloomy and oppressed state of the Jews under that Monarchy. For although they had release from captivity and liberty to rebuild their Temple given them by Cyrus the Great; yet they met with such a constant series of opposition and discouragements, during that period, that their state was truly dark.

The third chariot represented the Grecian Monarch under Alexander the Great. This chariot had in it white horses, the emblems of peace. While Alexander was carrying war and rapine to all the nations bordering upon, or near Judea, the Jews enjoyed peculiar peace, and received from his special privileges and favors.

Alexander while laying siege to Tyre sent a deputation to the Jews requiring them to submit themselves to him. To this the Jews refused, at which he was so enraged that he was determined to take signal vengeance upon them. As soon therefore as Tyre was taken, he marched with his army directly towards Jerusalem. But in the mean time, he saw in a dream a large company of unarmed persons, preceded by a venerable looking personage richly attired approaching him in supplication. The Jews hearing of Alexander's approach, determined to throw themselves upon his mercy, and accordingly formed a procession headed by the High-priest in his priestly robes, and went forth to meet Alexander. As they came nigh him, Alexander recognized the High-priest to be the same venerable personage, and the company to be the same he had seen in his dream; and being forcibly struck with the providence of what he now saw, with his dream, he lighted from his horse, did reverence to the High-priest, and granted the Jews their request, and left them in peace. This, I believe, is the amount of what is related by Prideana and others concerning this affair: though not having the history near at hand, I have to quote from memory.

It is said in verse 6, "The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country, and the white go forth after them." The Persian conquests were principally of Babylon and other countries north of Judea; and Alexander over-run these same countries after the Persians subdued the nations generally of the north country [central Hia, or Asia] under his yoke and introduced the Greek language among them, and caused the Jewish Scriptures to be translated into Greek; and thus was this country in a great measure prepared for easy access to the preachers of the Gospel and the Scriptures, when the time appointed should come. Hence the quieting of God's Spirit in that country, verse 8. They were afterwards brought under the Roman yoke, but the Grecian language and culture continued to be the principal language and customs.

The fourth chariot, had two sets of horses, the one grisled, (or hail-spotted as the Hebrew signifies,) the other, bay. Following the order of Daniel's vision, this chariot ought to represent the fourth beast, or the Roman power, and which is the iron power of Nebuchadnezzar's image, – Daniel vii, 7, and ii, 33, and verse 40. The bay horses very properly represent the conquests of the Romans as walking to and fro through the earth. The grisled colored horses would in this case represent the Syrian government under the Antiochuses as being at sometimes destructive to the Jews; at other times the Jews obtained the ascendency.

But the more general idea is that this chariot and horses represented the Syrian and Egyptian powers, or the governments of the Grecian Antiochuses and Ptolemy, two of the four horns or kingdoms into which Alexander's empire was divided- Daniel viii, 8, and 23. These two horns being contiguous to, more affected the Jews than did the other two horns, or divisions. In this view of the subject, the grisled horses represent the Egyptian government as being sometimes friendly and sometimes hostile to the Jews. And the bay horses, the Syrian government, particularly under the reign of Antiochuses Epiphanes, who as a scourge to the Jews is particularly pointed out by the "little horn," – Daniel viii, 9-12, and xxiii, 25, and in Daniel xi, 21-45, and has been justly considered an eminent type of antichrist or the "man of sin" under the Gospel.

But which ever is the true application of this fourth chariot, it is evident from a little attention to history, that no period of five hundred years, (that being about the length of time represented by these four chariots,) at least, since the fall of the Roman Empire, can any ways be compared with this, for bloody wars, extensive conquests, and ravages of nations. It embraces, First, the wars and ravages of Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. Second, Of Cyrus, Darius I, and II, and Cambyses and the other Persians monarchs, including Xerxes' famous invasion of Greece with a host, including sea and land forces, women and other attendants, that is recorded by historians to amount to upwards of five millions, the larger part of which were slain by Leonidas and his little band at the pass of Thermopylae, and the remainder nearly all perishing before Xerxes got back to Persia. Third, The conquests, ravages, rapine and bloodshed of Alexander and his successors are included. And Fourth, probably the Roman conquests as well. Hence, what has particularly attracted my attention, is that these four chariots, representing such a vast amount of devastation, misery and destruction of human life, should be denominated the "four spirits of the heavens;" and should have come out from between "the mountains of brass." "These are the four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth." - verse 5.

What will the opposers of God's predestination say to this? Will they admit, or will they not, that this subject is a striking illustration of that specific text. "Shall there be evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it?" - Amos iii, 6. We are not to understand that they, in the devastation and misery which they occasioned, represent the spirits of heaven. Nor on the other hand, that the spirits of heavens, are the spirits of hell or the power of darkness. I understand nothing else by their being said to be the spirits of the heavens, &c., than that it is to teach us that the angelic spirits are employed in conducting the providential government of the world, and in directing and controlling the effects of the ambition, rage, &c., of men so as to make them conduce to the accomplishing of the purpose of God. "Then said he unto me, Fear not, Daniel: for from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty-days: but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia. Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days; for yet the vision is for many days." - Daniel x, 13,14.

Although men are disposed to quarrel with the eternal and sovereign predestination of God, and to represent it as making God the author of sin, &c., we here see it guarded by the brazen mountain of eternal Justice, which stands side by side with it. As streams which runs out, from between two mountains in nature, and is fed from both, so all the events which transpired in the government of God, whether in Providence or in Grace, have source from these two mountains; flowing from, and having the impetus to their directed course given to them, by both, – the predestination and the justice of God.

If we look more particularly to the monarchies represented by these four chariots, whilst we see God unerringly accomplishing His decreed events exactly as foretold in prophecy, and bring about by these various revolutions and conquests, the great purpose of breaking down the national barriers by which the subjects of these conquests had been separated one from another, bring them ultimately to be settled peacefully under one government – the Roman, and to have a general acquaintance with one common language – the Greek, preparatory to the coming of Christ; and the Jews, whilst they were scourged for their iniquities by these governments preserved amidst all the revolutions and down fall of nations, a distinct people, in their own land, and in a good measure governed by their own laws, the laws given by Moses, until Shiloh or the Messiah came, we on the other hand find one conqueror after another made the instrument of punishing the preceding monarch for his rapine and cruelty.

As God said of the King of Assyria, after using him as His rod and send him against a hypocritical nation &c. "Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed His whole work upon Mount Zion and Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria, &c." – Isaiah x, 5-15.

Besides these general judgments, we find in the history of this period, several instances of signal judgment, as in the death of Antiochus Epiphanies who has already been noticed as a special type of antichrist, he was visited with so extremely a painful, lingering and loathsome disease, that he was made to confess it to be a just judgment upon him for his cruelty to the Jews and the insults he had cast upon their worship.

So of the Romish antichrist and its image after God has used them according to His purpose as instruments for deluding and punishing the people because they believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness, 2 Thessalonians ii, 9-12, and making them a scourge to drive His people nigher to Himself, and a fire to try and refine His churches and saints, He will in turn, give them blood to drink because they have shed the innocent blood of saints and prophets. – Revelation xvi, 6.

And, my brethren, the stream of salvation which flows to you through a crucified Redeemer, comes to you, out of between the mountains of God's purpose and His justice; these mutually so supply the stream and give to it, its course, that the will of God is accomplished, and justice is pleased in the salvation of each poor sinner that is brought to Jesus.

Well in conclusion may it be said to those who are vainly and impiously kicking and fighting against the mountains of brass, or the doctrine of predestination and eternal justice, "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God." – Romans ix, 20,21.

Samuel Trott, Fairfax C. H., Va., March 21, 1838.

MR. WALLER'S DISCOVERIES

Brother Beebe: my compliments to Mr. Waller of the banner. He must certainly have acquired to himself fame as an antiquarian having made the wonderful discovery that I at one period of my life was connected with the Kentucky mission society; that I was in 1818 and 1819 more foolish than I am now. He he has however made a slight mistake, in representing in at that time, an auxiliary mission society. The society declared itself independent of the general board and undertook single handed the work of Indian reform. Had it not been for this separation, i should not have connected myself with them, as i could not even then, countenance, the pride, arrogance and pomposity, as well as other things, connected with the general board.

As it was, I united with the Kentucky society, was appointed and acting as their corresponding secretary; and afterwards an agent, to travel and make known the independent objects of the society, collect money. But how will this discovery of Mr. waller's accord with the assertions of him and others that our opposition to missions arises from ignorance? I was with them long enough to know something of the spirit of missions, as being perfectly worldly, of the arts, intrigues, and more than political management employed among them, to carry points. When I speak these things, as connected with mission schemes, I speak what I know, and testify what I have seen.

As Mr. Waller has made this discovery, I am glad he has not been able to find that I labored for a fixed, and extravagant salary, like their modern secretaries and agents, not that like some of them, I proved a defaulter in my agency, or that like others I drew from the funds of the society, to make out my pay, over and above what I collected.

While it is a matter of humiliation to reflect on my former wanderings from the simplicity of the gospel, it is cause of praise to the rich and sovereign grace of God which showed me my error in this thing, and enabled me to depart from it and to separate myself from those who notwithstanding all the evidence before their eyes of the anti Christian spirit and tendency of the mission plans, are pursuing on, from bad to worse.

As Mr. Waller wishes to publish a history of that. Perhaps I could furnish him with some reminiscences of certain characters that then were prominent and now are cutting a great dash in the religious movements in Kentucky.

S. Trott Fairfax CH Virginia, March 21, 1838

MR. WALLER AGAIN

S. Trott, of Virginia. Sometimes since, we inquired of this old school worthy what amount of salary he received while agent of the Kentucky missionary society. He said he did not receive a large salary, and we then asked respecting its precise bulk. He has not answered us. Perhaps he does not know that we made such an inquiry; perhaps he has forgotten it, as men are prone to forget what they do not care to remember. Now we will take it as a favor of the editor of the signs of the times (and as it is the first favor we have ever sought at his hands, in charity we do not think he can refuse it) just to tell Mister trot that we are anxious in obtaining information on this subject; and if he has forgotten it, to refresh his memory. We are not alone in our solicitation. There are others that feel concerned. Come out, Mr. Trott. Your salary was not large you say; then what size was it? Be precise in your answer, even to dollars and cents."

Reply

Brother Beebe: Mr. Waller of the banner, is entirely mistaken as to the import of my reply to him through the signs, I had no intention of engaging in his Indian skirmishing from behind the Bush. He came out in his paper professing to have been looking over the ancient records of the Kentucky mission society. And among other things to have discovered that I had been connected with that society, had been employed as an agent, as it was a fact that I had formerly fallen into this corruption and error, I thought it just to acknowledge any sin; in doing this I thought it equally right that I should show from Mr. waller's own statement, there's was a limitation to my error in this thing; that what I did, was not from the consideration of a regular and fixed salary agreed on beforehand. I did not, as Mr. Waller would insinuate to his readers, state this upon my own responsibility but upon the better testimony, that Mister Waller had not found any such arrangements, and bargaining in the records of the society, as was evidenced from his not having brought it forward. Hence his coming out and demanding me what I did receive, is altogether a shifting of the ground, and I do not think him gain of sufficient importance to be thus following him through the swamps. As he professed in the onset to have the records, if such things stood there recorded against me, why not bring them out, and not call upon me, without the advantages of those records to refresh my memory, to make statements or give testimony in my own case.

If Mr. Waller wishes to engage me in a controversy with him, let him come forward with his strong reasons his scriptural argument, to defend his friend Giddings essay on modern missions from the expose I made of its corruption. Its Jesuit tendencies, or let him introduce anything like a candid discussion of any other point of his new schoolism and as life, health and ability are granted me, I will meet him but as to his attempts to cover his retreat, his being driven from the field in the Giddings affair; By trying to draw me into the bushes, it is in vain. I will leave him to have the whole fun of this skirmish to himself.

Farewell S. Trott Fairfax CH Virginia, July 21, 1838

FURTHER NOTICE OF BROTHER PARKER'S THIRD DOSE

Brother Beebe: I will not notice Brother Parker's reply to the communication of mine, on the subject of the washing of feet, published in the Signs, Vol. 8, No.3. I will in the 1st place, acknowledge my obligation to brother Parker, for correcting one mistake I had fallen in two, in supposing that the instance of our Lord's washing the feet of his disciples was after the Passover supper. From a further examination of the scriptures on the point I am convinced that they do not warrant the conclusion I have heretofore drawn on that point; but from some expression used it is probable, that the meal they were eating at the time the Lord washed his disciples feet, was an ordinary meal, their dinner if you please, for the name used and the customs of that day suit that idea. Hence in verse one of John 8 it reads, "now before the feast of the Passover."

Again, in verse 29 I find this expression, "by those things that we have need of against a feast." I know not what feast this could be except in the Passover feast. This view of the subject strips the affair of that appearance of a religious rite, in connection with the lord's supper, which it otherwise would have carried with it, had it not been, as noticed in my former communication, that Paul, in stating the manner in which he had delivered the institution to the church at Corinth, omitted altogether to mention the washing of feet, First Corinthians 11.23-27. This is the only error in my former views of the subject of which I am convinced by Brother Parker's reply; and this new view, as just notice, supports rather than makes against those views. It may be for the want of the Spirit's teaching on the point, that I do not see with Brother Parker and others, on the point. But so it is, that although he brings to his aid a powerful imagination, yet his arguments appear to me destitute of scriptural support, and much confused. For instance, he takes the position that the washing of feet is not an ordinance, but an example. So far he is supported by the declaration of the master, "for I have given you an example that you should do as I have done unto you," verse 15.

Yet Brother Parker goes on to say afterward, "We will agree that every external act of Christian duty is figurative, expressive of, and pointing to a reality." He here uses the word duty instead of worship, and yet what he says of the act as being figurative, can only imply, in their right observance, and embracing by faith of the reality soul represented. In accordance with this, he goes on to point out the several things prefigured by the several acts connected with the saviors washing his disciple's feet, according to his view of them. The supper from which Jesus arose, represents the spiritual food of the gospel, the supper of the lamb; he is rising from it, his resurrection, and that of his saints to a state of glory; he is laying aside his garments, shows he's laying aside his heavenly garments, coming into the world. Strange that a figure designed to represent such great leading truths of the gospel, should point to the resurrection of Christ as preceding he's coming into the world! But this incongruity I will pass. He goes on to say, that the towel with which he girded himself represented the humanity which he took; the pouring water into a basin, was a figure of the streams of that river which make glad the city of God, pouring into the covenant of grace, the plan of salvation. This may be the order of things as represented in the scripture; but I should sooner have looked for the streams of that river, of which the psalmist speaks, to be running from the covenant of grace, than to be running into it.

He goes on to say, that the act of stripping and washing the feet of the disciples and wiping them with the towel, shows the condescending love and attention of Christ to the meanest member of his body. Very strange indeed, that a practice taught by Christ to be observed by his disciples in the letter of it, and designed to represent their faith in such important gospel truths, should not be a gospel ordinance, or a constituted part of gospel worship! And if a constituted part of worship, I cannot conceive why it should not be observed by the church in church relations. Strange that an institution that belongs to the Kingdom of Christ, should not be observed by that Kingdom in its visible form. But where does Brother Parker get his authority for asserting that this act of our Lord was designed figuratively to represent these things? Did the decision of the apostle Lord's judges, show us what is represented by baptism and the Lord's supper, but they have given us no decision concerning the washing of feet. Neither can Brother Parker show us any authority from the New Testament from that acts being figurative of those things. And without I have no right to receive his declaration, neither have you, brother Crafton, though he may think that as one of the Peters, the Holy Ghost has so taught him.

I will now refer to the remarks of Brother Parker upon the position I took in my communication: "Nothing is binding upon the churches to be observed as ordinances but what the enthroned judges, the apostles established in the churches by their acts and writings." On this point, I do not think Brother Parker has exercised all that candor that might have been used with equal advantage to his cause if a good one. Some of these remarks I shall notice, others I may let pass. His first exception to my position is, that it gives the apostles something like legislative power. Not in the least. That Christ appointed to his 12 apostles a Kingdom and gave them peculiar authority in his Kingdom, is to me evident from the scriptures; and that their decisions on the order and doctrine they established, are of equal authority with his commands, must be manifest, because they in these things work through the inspiration of the Holy Ghost infallible.

But that they in themselves had the power to originate a single law cannot be inferred from what I said. Neither is my position liable to the inference he draws, the day by not sanctioning what he commanded might contradict it. If left to their own fallibility this might be; but there was a safeguard against this being the case, in anything to be delivered to the Church of; the Holy Ghost was as faithful to lead them unto all truth, as Christ was to publish the decree. The grounds on which my position rests in connection with the scriptures which I firmly quoted in support thereof, are these:

1st. That the order of a gospel church in its true former pattern, could not be fully shown while the law was enforced, and Christ was a minister of the circumcision and his disciples, bound to observe the mosaic ritual, as was the case until Christ had taken the handwriting of ordinances out of the way, nailing it to his cross. Consequently, after his resurrection, he was to enter into his glory, instead of staying on earth to preach his gospel and plant churches, this authority was given peculiarly to the 12 to establish the pattern of a gospel church in its liberty, form, ordinances, and worship. Hence it is to them, in their acts and writings, that we are to look for such a pattern; And theirs is the only infallible and standing pattern. They were in this only establishing by their decisions the instructions which he gave them while he was with them for 40 days after his resurrection, speaking to them of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God; and that which he afterward imparted to them through the Holy Ghost.

2nd. As this authority was given a loan to the 12, they're being but 12 Thrones mentioned, all that appertains to a gospel church, in its form, ordinances, they must have bound by their decisions and left on record, or we in after ages should not have had a perfect pattern to be governed by. This view of the subject completely refutes the Catholic notions of a succession of Apostolic authority; as well as the modern anti-Christian notion, that the regulation of forms, and order, is left to the church to be adapted to times, and circumstances. And yet Brother Parker, somehow strangely inferred that the view which I took of this authority, as being rested in the apostles, was such as gave rise to popery. If Brother Parker's views be correct that the apostles only exercised their offices as judges in such cases of difficulty as occasionally arose in the churches, and at only such of their decisions as were given in writing because they were distant from the church, had been transmitted down to us, there would evidently be as much occasion for a succession of judges to meet the cases of difficulty in succeeding churches, as it was for them in the primitive church. Hence the pretensions of the popes to possess a succession of Apostolic authority would appear plausible.

Again, Brother Parker represents that according to my view of the subject, we should have no right to claim either doctrine or order in the church, except what little we might gather from the acts of the apostles. If he means by this expression the book called The Acts of the Apostles, he has much mistaken me. If I had not referred to their writings as well as acts, there might have been more excuses for this mistake. But it must appear to manifest on the candid examination of my communication that I considered the apostle's decisions given in their writings as well as in their acts given to us by Luke. As the decision of the apostles being unimportant in reference to doctrine, As I once mentioned doctrine in my former communication, though it is not particularly connected with the subject under consideration, I will further remark that although the apostles said no other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come; yet but little of the doctrine of Christ, more particularly as contained even in the Psalms and in the prophets, should we have understood in its application to Christ and the gospel church, had we not the decision of the apostles in the New Testament showing the application.

It is true, that the Holy Ghost might lead our minds into such doctrine, but without the infallible assurance that it was the teaching of the Holy Ghost, we could not have the same confidence in the truth of the application as now. Neither could we have had any certainty that the various parts of the ceremonial law had a typical reference to gospel things, or what the doctrine contained in them were it not for the decisions contained in a New Testament on this point. These decisions and special applications by the apostles are very brief, yet sufficient to show that they were shadows of good things to come. I know of no doctrine contained in the Old Testament which is not confirmed and made more clear in its application, by what is contained in the new. Hence the doctrine that characterized the gospel church at Jerusalem is called emphatically the apostle's doctrine, and the church is represented as having a joint foundation, being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, acts 2.42; Ephesians 2.20. The doctrine on which the church is built is thus witnessed by two witnesses. If Brother Parker will examine this point in its general bearing instead of looking at it only in its reference to foot washing, he will I think not find me so far wrong.

In reference to ordinances, my position was that there must be both the command of the king going before and the decision of the apostles establishing the fact of such command being recognized by them as requiring the observance of it as a positive institution and showing the order of its observance. The command of the king is necessary in such institutions because they are to be observed not only as expressions of our faith in him as Darren revealed, but also as declarations of our willing subjection to him as king of Zion. And the decision of the judges is also important thus showing what our Lord's directions were to be observed as positive institutions, and what was designed merely as general instruction.

Now, if, I should advance the sentiment, that it was necessary as preparatory to eating the Lord's supper, that two disciples should be sent to prepare a Passover supper, that a man bearing a pitcher of water must meet them and show them a large upper room furnish, as our Lord had directed at the time he instituted the ordinance of bread and wine, what proof would brother Parker bring to refute the sentiment, but the fact that the apostles did so to understand that transaction as evinced by their entire silence on the point of reference to the order established in the gospel church? There is just as much authority for all of this as there is for the supper being observed in an upper room, and at night, and by giving loose to the imagination I might bring quite as much of gospel illustration from this man with the picture of water, the large upper room furnished, as brother Parker has brought from the Lord to washing and disciples feet; but still it would be only illustration, there would be no authority to warrant the conclusion that this was designed to represent those things. Now, on the same ground as Brother Parker would reject my notion of this previous order and preparation to partaking of the supper I reject his sentiment that the washing of feet should be observed, in the letter of it, as a religious rite; because there is no record of any such custom in any of the Apostolic churches.

We either have or have not a perfect pattern of a gospel church after the day of Pentecost as brought out in full form in liberty from under the yoke of the Mosaic covenant. If we have not such a pattern, we are thrown upon the mercy of every man for the form and order of a gospel church, who may hunt out from all the things which Jesus did and said while tabernacling in the flesh, and serving under the law, something new to be observed as a religious right by the disciples.

That our Lord's transaction in the thing under consideration, as in everything else he did and said, was designed for instruction, I have before admitted; and more than this, that it was done for an example. The inquiry is, what does his example in this thing teach?

The answer to me is plain, that he thereby has taught us to condescend to the lowest offices and station to serve our brethren; that as our Lord laid aside his garments, so we should in effect disrobe ourselves of any superiority of station or of circumstances which we might be placed, that we might be serviceable to our brethren as occasion may require.

And that as our Lord girded himself with a towel, thus assuming the garb of one that serves (Luke 12.37; 17.8) and washed the disciple's feet, and thereby performed one of the lowest offices, so we should be willing to take the lowest station in the church and among our brethren, and to perform any service however menial that their good or comfort may require, and thus manifest that we feel such nearness to them as being fellow members of the same body. And such I really understand to be the plain import of our Lord's remark, "for I have given you an example that you should do as I have done unto you." An example is not so much to giving a form of doing a thing, as it is the indication or illustration of a general principle. Now, the position of Brother Parker on this point is, as he admits it to be not an ordinance, but an example, that we should after the pattern of our Lord, continue as a stated practice to give to one another the example, inform, instead of coming directly to the practice of the principle exemplified by him.

As to the idea which I advanced in my former communication, that this act of our Lord was designed especially to teach his disciples to wash the gospel feet or Christian walk of their brethren, I confess I have no direct scripture authority for it other than influential; I will not, therefore, insist on that idea, further than it is included in the general principle taught by the example of Christ, that we should be ready to serve our brethren and do them good on every occasion for it. And in this view of it, I think the example of our Lord beautifully illustrates the proper course toward our brethren. It teaches that we ought, on all occasions of seeking to wash the gospel feet of our brethren, to be girded with the towel, that when the admonition, or course of discipline, when such has to be resorted to, has the effect to produce proper repentance and fruits meat therefore, we should be prepared and careful to wipe away the remembrance of the error of sin of our brother, so that it may not afterward come in to mar our fellowship toward him, or interrupt our brotherly intercourse with him. Were the general principle thus taught by the example, carried out in our conduct towards our brethren, it would, I think, have quite as great a tendency to produce a proper state of feeling, and proper action, in our churches, as would the mere imitating the form of giving the example by our Lord. And such a state of feeling and of action, our churches certainly greatly need at this time.

In conclusion, I will say that I desire to feel thankful to God for any confidence Brother Parker may have in me as a watchman on the walls of Zion; And I would assure Brother Parker that if I were convinced of the correctness of his views, and that I have been in an error on this point, I would as cheerfully go with him in the practice of washing feet and recall what I have written to the contrary, as I now go for this different view of the subject. But if I am in an error on this point, i can assure him, that it is hidden from me.

May the Lord in his great mercy correct whatever error either Brother Parker or myself, or any of our brethren have fallen into; and lead us to greater conformity to the New Testament, both in spirit and letter, in doctrine and in practice.

S. Trott Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, September 14, 1841

Reply to inquiries from a brother in Tennessee, touching my proposed publication of elder Parker's pamphlet, and also relating to the resurrection.

Brother Beebe: I received a short time since, a letter from a brother in Tennessee, referring to my proposition to republish elder Parker's pamphlet, and proposing some inquiries concerning the resurrection, to which i beg leave to respond, in accordance with his request through the Signs.

In answering this letter, I shall have necessarily to touch some points brought forward by elder Goldsmith; I will therefore hear remark, that this is not designed as a reply to him; That I do not design answering him until he shall have given us his statement, and informed us what he does believe concerning the resurrection; and I do hope he will be explicit in letting us know what he understands concerning the resurrection as declared in the scriptures, what it consists in. If he believes he holds the truth on this subject, he need neither to be ashamed or afraid to speak plainly, and to declare without reserve his sentiments. And I request as a favor he will do it, as I have been so abundantly charged with misunderstanding and misrepresenting him. Indeed, as to answering him at all, unless something particular should require a reply I doubt the propriety. I have set forth the plain definite testimony of the scriptures on the subject, and if men will not hear (I do not say Moses and the prophets,) but Christ and the apostles, they will not be persuaded by human argument. And it's the testimony of scripture according to it's plain manifest import, is not allowed to be decisive in the case, then we are without a standard, and every man may believe and teach us seems good in his own eyes.

In reference to elder Parker's pamphlet, I will inform my brother in Tennessee and others who have wished the work, that although I have written the most I intended writing an answer to the pamphlet, yet I have given up the idea of publishing it as proposed. Having my attention called to the point by a brother in whose judgment I have much confidence, I have since reflected on the subject, and every day's developments go to convince me, that such is the peculiar state of the church at this time, that even Christians seem more disposed to embrace something new, it should be a little extraordinary especially, then to be satisfied with the plain simplicity of scripture testimony. They seem in the state the Israelites were in when they said in the wilderness, "and our soul loathes this light bread." Hence I have concluded that elder Parker's pamphlet, write to publish it as proposed, would perhaps make 2 disciples to his system, where any notes would Convince one of its error. I hope brethren who have written on the work, will excuse me for having occasioned there taking that trouble. Should Providence open the way from my publishing my reply to this pamphlet separately, and to circulate it where his views are known, I may perhaps yet do so.

Touching the resurrection, my brother enquires, what is, and has been, the belief on this point among the oldfashioned Baptists, as far back as their writings show? If we begin with the New Testament, we shall commence with the origin of the Baptists proper. And beginning there, I think any person, not wishing to strike out a new path, and who will admit that Christ and his apostles said what they meant on this subject, will acknowledge that they taught that there would be a raising up, a coming forth, a resurrection of that part of man designed as the body, and which is subject to death, to be buried in graves or in the sea. See the concluding declaration of Christ in verses 40-45, of john chapter 6: "and I will raise him up at the last day." See his declaration in John 5.28-29, in distinction from his remark, verse 25: "marvel not at this, for the hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, that they have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." See also John 11.23, as illustrated by verse 40-44; also Matthew 22.23-33. These with other texts show us what Jesus taught on this subject. Paul says, "why should it be thought of thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Acts 26.8. See also first Corinthians 15.12-54, (noticed in part by me, in answer to elder Goldsmith, Sign No. 4 of present volume) also revelation 20.12-13; these with other scriptures show what the apostles believed and taught on this subject. After the apostles days, so far as we can learn from church history, the professed Church of Christ generally believed in the resurrection of the body, and the rise of the beast. There are some exceptions which I will hereafter notice. Coming to the Waldenses, we find in their confession of faith, dated 1120 AD, this declaration Coleman" and this we also believe concerning all other Saints, namely that they are waiting in heaven for the resurrection of their bodies at the day of judgment." Jones history. Walden. Chapter 5 Section 3. Coming to the confession of faith put forth by the particular Baptists in England, 1643, we find a doctrine of the resurrection of the body and a future judgment declared; and from that day to this I know of no confession of faith put forth by the regular Baptists, which does not include a belief in the resurrection of the body, and in a final judgment.

Among all the errors which Mosheim charges upon the anabaptists, as he calls them, we do not find that of a denial of the resurrection, as he would have done, had it been so. I will now briefly trace the denial of the resurrection of the body, through the corresponding period. The first instance on record is that of the Sadducees, as in Matthew 22.23: To Sadducees which say that there is no resurrection," again acts 23.8: "for the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither Angel nor spirit, but the Pharisees confess both." Notice in verse 6, that Paul on this point, declares himself a Pharisee. Let those who deny the resurrection, get rid of this testimony for the doctrine if they can. Another class which appeared to disbelieve in the resurrection were the sex of Grecian philosophers, the epicureans and stoics, acts 1718-32. Again there were some in the Corinthian church, also Hymenaeus and Philetus Who denied a future resurrection. 1st Corinthians 15.12; and second Timothy 2.17-18. Leaving the New Testament, we find the Manicheans, the disciples of Manes, 3rd century Who rejected the resurrection. Manes Had formerly been one of the Persian magi or worshippers of fire. After professing to be converted to Christianity, he undertook the blend of Persian philosophy with the religion of Christ. Briefly, he acknowledged 2 great principles from which all things proceed; The one light, the other darkness, these two powers he taught, have produced an immense multitude of creatures resembling themselves; the first man was produced by the power of darkness, his body of corrupt matter, his soul from a particle of light stolen from heaven. Jesus Christ came to deliver these souls; and those souls which believe him to be the son of God, will at death, after being purified both by water and fire, go to the regions of light, while their bodies will return to their original mass of corrupt matter, thus his system contained a denial of the resurrection of the body. Coming down to modern times, most of the sect called Quakers are supposed to disbelieve the resurrection of the body though the founders of the sect left that point undecided. It seems also, that recently among the Baptists there are numbers, and those, too, calling themselves old school, who are denying the future resurrection of those bodies. Thus my brother, I have given an answer both affirmative and negative to your inquiry, as far as I can from recollection and a hasty reference to church history. What I have stated will I think be found correct, though there may be some omissions.

I will now notice the different views which this brother informs me are held by those Baptists in Tennessee, who denied the resurrection of these old bodies, as they call them.

1st. The argument on which some of them rely: that all the anti Christian denominations have believed in the resurrection of the body, and therefore the true church must believe differently on this point. Then the Sadducees, the epicureans, the Manicheans, I suppose must be considered of the true spiritual church. Most persons who have a traditional belief in the truth of divine revelation, I presume, believe that there will be a resurrection of the bodies of men, and a final judgment. They also with equal confidence believed that the scriptures were written by divine inspiration, that Jesus Christ was the divine person, that he became Incarnate, was crucified, rose again. Now if we must reject the former as anti Christian, because so generally believed, we must on the same ground in like manner reject these other points. But the truth is, that while regenerated persons may believe those positions in the letter of them, there is a spirituality in them which they know nothing about.

2nd the different views held. 1st that regeneration is the only resurrection taught in the scriptures. I refer to my remarks on this point in answer to elder Goldsmith, Signs, No. 4, present Volume, and will only add on this point, a query: how is it that some are regenerate it unto life, and others are regenerated unto damnation, as is the case if the resurrection of the scriptures is only regeneration? See John 5.29. 2nd that a death God will give the soul a spiritual body as it pleases him. This device for the resurrection, is a complete denial of the resurrection and substitutes a new creation in its place. Christ then after bearing the sins of his people in his own body on the tree, and bearing the penalty due, is foiled in his attempt to redeem their bodies, or to conquer death. These old bodies are so corrupted as to be beyond the power of salvation, and must be abandoned by the God that made them, and death must reign undestroyed, with an eternal dominion over them! If this is believing the record that God has given of his son, pray what is unbelief? But I would like to be informed when this spiritual body died? When was it dead and in the grave, to come forth? What absurdities men will run into, to get rid of the truth, while professing to believe the scriptures? Why not come out at once and say they do not believe the scriptures, instead of trying to wrest them in this way? 3rd the body spoken of in the scriptures in reference to resurrection, is the mystical body of Christ. This in one point is a better device than the preceding, and that it does not involve an entire denial of resurrection. But unfortunately it unavoidably involves the notion of Hymenaeus and Philetus: that the resurrection is passed already, which has received Apostolic condemnation, second Timothy 2.17-18. For the mystical body, as such, must have been raised with its head, Christ; Or, do these persons suppose there was in the resurrection of Christ, the curious fact of a head being raised while its body remained under the power of death in the grave? Of the mystical body of Christ, does the apostle speak, when he says, even when we were dead in sins (that is as individuals) has quickened us together with Christ, and has raised us up together, Ephesians 2.5-6 and Colossians 2.12-15. The last resort made by those who deny the resurrection in Tennessee, mentioned in the letter now being answered, is, the round assertion that the body of Christ did not actually go to heaven. I suppose then we must conclude, that God buried christ's body as he did the body of Moses, and that the disciples were deceived when they thought, they saw him taken up. Of course we must infer, if this be the case, that as the law of Moses is buried in the experience of God's children, by the bringing in of the gospel of Christ, so the gospel and work of Christ is to be buried, and no more remembered nor come into mind, when the saints get to heaven. Excuse me my brother, for treating these theories in this way. The truth is, when the scriptures and their plain and definite import are laid aside, there is no room left for argument, and our only source of proof is cut off; Hence we have left, only to show that deformities of their theories; And these one would think, would be enough to make them sick of them.

I will add on the subject of the resurrection of the body, that all those persons, whether professed infidels or others, who believe that God would not condescend to notice the small concerns of this life, or to watch and direct transmutation of atoms, are very consistent with themselves in denying the resurrection of the body. For when we consider that some persons are eaten by beasts and by fish, and particles of their bodies become component parts of the bodies of those devourers; that others are burned and their ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, others again have their bodies, left to the decompose on the surface of the earth, and the particles thereof to be driven about by the winds, or washed by the floods and come mixed with other matter, and passing through all the multiform changes to which matter is subject; how can such believe that God could ever collect the particles of the human body together again? But I trust there are some old school Baptists left yet, who have such confidence in the infinitude of the attributes and government of our God, as to believe that not a particle of matter which he has made, amidst all its changes, is ever, for a moment, lost from his view our control, or is ever found not filling the space, and answering the object assigned by his decree to it. Believing thus, my brethren, we do not think it beyond the power of God, nor a thing incredible that God should raise the dead.

S. Trott

P. S., in reference to other subjects on which the brother asks my view, he may perhaps hear from me, if I am permitted hereafter, in this way, or by letter.

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, April 9, 1842

GNOSTICISM.

BROTHER JEWETT: - As you seem disposed to call me out to say something on the subject of Gnosticism, as you with propriety call it, I will give a few general remarks concerning it.

A strong evidence to me that the church of Christ, at this time, is not only surrounded with Babylonish confusion, but is about to find herself captive in Babylon, is the great propensity manifest by our brethren to refuse the watersof Shiloh that go softly, and to rejoice in something new or strange, something which has the velocity of human imagination in it. Whilst Judah was content to drink the waters of Shiloh which flowed from the foot of Mount Zion, they were kept of course from being far scattered from their home. But when they must take other and untried waters, God for this discontent, brought upon them the waters of the river, strong and many. See Isa.8:6,8. So of spiritual Judah, if they would be content with the simple testimony of Scriptural revelation, made plain in their experience, they would be of one heart, and speak the same things. But whilst we must have human expositions on the one hand, or on the other, allow imagination to stretch itself to bring in something more full and more rapid, than what we find in the Scriptures, we shall be confused in our views, and scattered in our feelings; and God will bring upon us the strong waters of Babylon and cause them to go over and reach even to the neck. Ah, they may reach even to the neck, but their proud waves must stop there; Zion's Head cannot be brought under; whilst this is her case, though she may be greatly chilled, there is no danger of her drowning.

If Old School Baptists could agree to appoint themselves a Pope to imagine for them, they might not be so much scattered, though in a strange land. If we could unitedly give this honor to Doctor Gill, or to the Faculty of any theological School, or to yourself, Brother Jewett, or to brethren Beebe or Newport in your editorial capacities, and receive your dictation as to what we are to receive as truth, there might be union of sentiment among us. But so long as while some wish to adhere to just what the Scriptures declare, others wish Dr. Gill to be taken as the standard, and others again wish to imagine for themselves, and to sweep away every ancient landmark by the boldness of their fancy, we must continue to be scattered until the great Shepherd shall be pleased to bring us back, and to lead us by the side of the still waters, and to make us to lie down in the green pastures of his grace. The time I think cannot be far distant, when those of us who remain, will be found – not floating down – but sitting beside the rivers of Babylon, one by this, and another by that, weeping in remembrance of Zion and its peace, with our harps hung upon the willows, saying, "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land."

I was somewhat surprised to find our excellent and gifted Brother Newport, in the Predestinarian Baptist, coming to the conclusion that of all the opinions he had heard concerning the origin of the devil, the one which represents him as the eternal opposite to God, is to him the most rational and reasonable. As to the rationality of the thing I have nothing to say; Satan and sin occupy too conspicuous parts in the revelation which God has given, for me to admit them as subjects of rational enquiry, instead of revelation. The reasonableness of Brother Newport's conclusion is not very apparent. To me it is quite unreasonable for one who believes in the perfection of divine revelation, to leave that revelation and like the Gnostics of old go to the Magi or ancient worshippers of fire to learn the origin and nature of a being with whose acts the revelation of God is so full. But there it is, men want something more full, more overflowing, on the origin of the devil, than God has given in the Scriptures, and human imagination must be resorted to. The Scriptures on the origin of the devil, as on many other points, go softly, instead of presenting a set treatise in biographical form of his parentage, birth, &c., they give us here a little and there a little, leaving the honest enquirer after truth to find out what God has declared on the subject, by comparing Scripture with Scripture. And we may rest assured that, wherein God has withholden, neither the ancient Magi, nor modern Philosophers can give us the truth on the subject, so directly a subject of revelation as this.

The preceding remarks I had written, previous to receiving the 18th number of the SIGNS, in which Brother Beebe proposes to publish in pamphlet form, a "Scriptural Refutation of the Two Seed Doctrine." I shall now omit the remarks I had intended on that subject. I will go on to remark that the origin of the devil, so far as it is viewed merely in relation to his existence, is a subject not worth contending for. But when men will, in advancing their opinions on that point, publish that which reflects on the character of God, or the truth of Divine Revelation, no lover of God's truth can, I think, consistently hold his peace from bearing testimony against it. If one opinion is attempted to be pulled down, merely to build up another equally imaginary, it is labor poorly spent. When the sentiment is advanced among the Old School Baptists that the devil was made such of God, I feel bound to bear testimony against it, because it represents sin and holiness to be both on a footing as to their origin, making both to proceed directly from God, contrary to that revelation which God has given of himself, as a God of infinite holiness and purity, as "Righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works." Psal.145:17. On the other hand, in representing the devil as a self-existent being, he is set up as a competitor with God for the sovereignty of the universe; each alike existing in the universe by his own independent power, each so far as I can conceive, might, on this principle, have an equal claim to the sovereignty. Besides it is giving to the devil a claim to the name Jehovah, which is expressive of self-existence, when the Scriptures declare that God's name alone is Jehovah. Psal.33:18. Beside this, it strikes a fatal blow at the doctrine of predestination, making the whole purpose of God going before, concerning the plan of redemption, and the events which should take place in the world, a matter of entire contingency. For if the devil exists by his own pleasure and independent of God, then his acts would be alike independent of God and according to his own and not God's counsel. It is true, Elder Parker to obviate this, lays down the position, that the devil by coming into God's dominions comes under his law and was subject to his government. But were we to admit the consistency of this idea, it would not obviate the difficulty in the way of God's having beforehand and certain purpose as to the government of the world. It, from the nature of things, is impossible, that God could have known beforehand, with certainty, that the devil would enter the garden of Eden, unless he from the beginning so existed in dependence on God, as to give God a governing control over all his movements; and without this certain knowledge that the devil would enter the garden and tempt the woman, it is gross absurdity to suppose, that God could with certainty have

Brother Newport's Declaration of Faith, published in the 1st number of the Predestinarian Baptist, is as good as any I ever read; and how it is, he can thus believe in the predestinating purpose of God, and yet believe that the devil, who has had so great an agency in all the events of the world, existed independent of God and therefore entirely without his control, until he appeared in the garden, is to me strange. I wish he would explain this point for us, and let us know how far back, according to his and Elder Parker's views of the existence of the devil, God's predestinating purpose can be extended. Elder Parker I am told has published an answer in the Predestinarian Baptist to my remarks on his Third Dose. He may in that have offered some explanation on these points, as I have never seen it, for although most of the Numbers have been sent me by the kindness of some friend, the Number containing that, with some others, has never reached me.

One writer in that paper has challenged me to show, that angels were ever created, others have represented me as adopting Milton's poetic representation of the fall of Satan from heaven. I will therefore I think ere long give my views on these points, if you will publish them. And I will try not to give speculation for Scripture declaration.

I remain Yours, &c., S. TROTT. Oct.12, 1842.

SON OF GOD & GODHEAD.

Brother Beebe: - As in the 7th number of Signs, for this year, there are two communications which call for some reply from me. I presume you will indulge me in such reply. But also on further investigation, I think, brother Clark's previous communication requires some more extended notice than I took of it in my recent letter. I must, therefore, request the permission to thus notice it previous to replying to the other. From the unaccountableness of the circumstance, that it is fifteen years or more since I first published through the Signs my views relative the sonship of the Son of God and to the popular idea of three persons in the Godhead. I have had repeated occasion to argue these subjects since through the same channel, and have uniformly preached in accordance with those views; and that brother Clark, during all that time, has been holding social and brotherly intercourse with me, preaching with me, &c., without any intimation that he considered my views heretical. And from the fact that during that period he has been a reader of the Signs, and must have known that the very ground I occupied was that of sustaining the doctrine of the essential, self-existing Godhead of the Son of God, in opposition to the apparent denial of that doctrine by some of the positions of the popular system, he has now, without showing any direct ground for it, come to the conclusion that I deny the divinity of the Son of God. I am led to enquire, whence this new born zeal and these conclusions in opposition to my views? From its connection with Rappahannoc Association, and the formal dissent contemplated, as he says, in that body from those points on which we differ, I am led to conclude that something is designed; and lest this should be a separation from me and any with whom I may accord on these points, I have thought it desirable that our distinct views on these points might be presented to view in connection, that they and others may know about what they are aiming to make a split. It is for this that I ask this indulgence of you and the readers of the Signs. There is a preliminary point on which we appear to differ, which I will first notice.

I hold that the Scriptures, being the revelation of God, must be true in all their parts, and therefore wherein they mark distinctions, by words or by connecting circumstances, those distinctions should be strictly regarded in all our consulting of them. Brother Clark will contend for the observance of such distinctions in some things. He will not admit that sprinkling or pouring is baptism because the words used and the circumstances mentioned in the Scriptures clearly point to immersion distinctively as baptism. But in reference to the subject before us, there are distinctions definitely pointed out, as between a father and a son, which they disregard. Further, I believe that no contradiction can exist in pure truth. As the Scriptures are the pure truth of God, there can be no real contradictions in them. Hence, whenever we hold a system which involves the language of the Scriptures in contradictions, we ought to remember the injunction of Paul, "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar" (Rom.3:4). May this injunction have weight with us and lead us to reject our system as false rather than by implication represent the Scriptures as containing falsehood. Brethren, are not these positions consistent? If they are, please bear them in mind as we proceed.

Now to come to the points of difference. They contend that God exists as three persons and one God, that these three persons are alike equal and alike the self-existent God, but that they exist by distinct modes of existence, that the Father exists of Himself that the Word or Son exists by the generation of the Father, being begotten of Him, and that the Holy Ghost exists as He proceeds from the Father and the Son. This I presume will be admitted to be a simple and ncandid representation of their views. Now to this system I conscientiously object, that it presents palpable contradictions, and that as they represent this as the revelation of God, they charge Him with these contradictions. They say that the three are alike eternal, self-existent and independent, and yet that the Father alone has an underived existence, and that the other two exist by a derived existence and depend on the existence of the other; the Son on the existence of the Father, and the Holy Ghost on the existence of the Father and the Son. Can they then be alike independent in their existence? If I say of two persons, one is the father and the other is the son, do I not distinctly convey the idea that the one existed as a person before the other, and that the latter's existing as a person is a consequence of the previous existence and action of the former; and hence while the father's existence did not depend on the previous existence of the son, the son's existence did depend on the previous existence of the father? Now when they say there are three persons in the Godhead, and of these three, as persons, one of them is the Father, and of another, He is the only begotten Son of this Father, what reason is there that the same declaration made concerning these two divine persons does not tend to convey the same idea, as to the previous existence of the one, and the subsequent and dependent existence of the other, as in the case of two men? When, therefore, they contend that the one is the Father, and the other His Son in relation to their personal existence in the Godhead, how can they, without a plain contradiction to that declaration, say in reference to the same personal existence, that they are alike eternal and independent in their existence? Is this letting God be true, but every man a liar, in charging these, and several other contradictions in this system, to God's Word? Again, I object to this system because that by making the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost three persons in the Godhead, they make them to be three distinct individuals, for what less does the term person mean, than an individual being? This, I think, at best is dividing the Godhead more than I believe the scriptural revelation of the one God will admit. But when we carry it out, that they contend that each of these persons is distinctively God, as each is a distinct individual, there must be three individuals existing by distinct modes of existence, and, of course, three Gods. Brother Clark says of the Apostles, that they were not afraid of making a plurality of gods by maintaining that the Son of God was Jehovah. Neither am I; but the Apostles never taught that the Son of God in His Godhead was a distinct person from the Father, so that his remarks are altogether out of place. When I was led to look at these inconsistencies, and contradictions in the Nicene system, I turned to an examination of the Scriptures on that head, and I found that they by no means sustained that system. I found that God has revealed Himself as three, and so as three, that distinct things are affirmed of each; but not so as three as to infringe upon the unity of God. Hence it is said, "These three are one." Hence, whenever God is spoken of He is spoken of as the one God, that is absolutely God, whether in reference to the Father, the Word or Son, or the Holy Ghost. Therefore, I conclude that each in His distinct relation is the one God, having all the fullness of the Godhead in that relation whether as Father, as Son, or as the Holy Ghost.

Pocket Trott 1.0 457 of 1338

I found that the Son is declared in the same person in which He is spoken of as Son to be absolutely God and one with the Father; yet that as Son He is uniformly spoken of as personally distinct from the Father and subordinate to Him; as that He is begotten of the Father, and which, as before noticed, conveys by the expression clearly the idea of a priority of existence in the Father. And things are affirmed of Him as Son which cannot consistently be affirmed of the Godhead as such. He says of Himself, "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do," &c. John 5:19. Could it be affirmed that as God, He could do nothing of Himself? Again, it is written, "God sent forth His Son, made of a woman," &c. Gal.4:4. Could it be said consistently with the unity of God that God sent forth God made, &c.? Yet these and many like things are said of the Son. I, therefore, believe that the Son possesses in Himself such a distinction from the Godhead as is thus marked by the declarations of Scripture. Not that He as Son exists distinct from God, but that as I have said and as the Scriptures affirm abundantly, that in His Person He is God, whilst He possesses that which is begotten of the Father in personal union with His Godhead as the Word, which constitutes Him personally distinct from the Father and the Holy Ghost. This distinct and begotten or produced existence, which constitutes Him as Son in distinction from the Father, I find not only revealed in the declaration that He is the Son of God, but also in that life which is declared to be in the Word in the beginning, for it reads, "In the beginning was the Word," &c. John 1:1; and in verse 4, "In Him was life, and that life was the light of men." The declaration that this life was in Him certainly conveys the idea that it was something distinct from His essential existence as the Word or God. And if thus distinct, it must be a produced existence; and as a produced existence, it could be in Him and not destroy His Godhead.

In turning to Col. 3:3 & 4, we find it said of the saints, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." Is not this the same life which is the light of men; said to be hid in God as that life was in the Word? And this life is Christ, and Christ is the Son of God Mt. 16:16.

Hence it is said of the Word, when He was made flesh John 1:14. "And we beheld His glory." As the glory of the invisible God? No, but "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father."

Thus, the believer's life is identified with Christ, and Christ with the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father. Consequently, the Son of God, as such, is the life of the saints and the head of them in that life. How else could they be born of God, seeing He is the Only Begotten of the Father, unless they were begotten in Him as a head, as we are the creatures of God and being created in Adam. As brother Clark says, Is there anything like grandsons about this? Whilst we have in the Son the Godhead in all its fullness as existing in the Word, we have also the life of His people, thus constituting Him one with the Father, and one with His people, and yet possessing a personal distinction from each, in distinction from the Father, He is begotten of Him and is the life of His people, in distinction from His people, He is God. He is, therefore, just such a person as could act as Mediator between God and men. Without His being thus distinct, in person, from each, He could not sustain the office of Mediator. "Now a Mediator is not a Mediator of one, but God is one," says Paul Gal. 3:20. And again, I Tim. 2:5 - "For there is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus," not the man Jesus, but the Christ as well as the Jesus. Hence, as He had an existence in the beginning which was distinct from Him as God, and this existence is the Christ, we see that from the beginning we had an existing, living Mediator in the Head of the church. As Paul represents, as above, that the Mediator must be a person distinct from the one God, and from men; according to the system of our brethren, which represents Christ as existing only as God, and therefore as the one God, until about eighteen hundred years ago, there was no actually existing Mediator until then. If for four thousand years God could hold gracious intercourse with many of the fallen posterity of Adam without an existing Mediator through whom they were to commune with Him, I cannot see why such communion might not still be continued without a Mediator. But such a thing could not be. Paul says, "Who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" II Tim. 1:9. How could this be if there was no life of believers, no Christ in existence until about eighteen hundred years ago?

The views which I have advanced have been charged with Sabellianism. But any candid reader of what I have written will see the falsity of such charge. They will see that I believe just what the Scriptures say, that "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one" I John 5:7; that is, that God exists as three, but so as three, as to be absolutely one, and therefore, not three persons or individuals.

I have been charged with Arianism, so brother Clark charges me with denying the divinity of the Son of God. He says he has made it deliberately, but I must say he has made it wantonly. I cannot view it in any other light, though I presume he designed no such looseness. What I have written will, I think, show the entire incorrectness of the charge. I will, however, add that brother Clark, I think, will admit that the Word was made flesh, or became a perfect man, without in the least destroying His essential Godhead. Why then could He not exist with the life of His people, and therefore a begotten life in Him, and as personally one with Him without destroying His divinity? However, it is enough to sustain me against such a charge, that, in the same declaration of Him, in which it is said, "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men," it is also said, "The Word was with God, and the Word was God." John I:1 & 4.

Again he appears to think there is nothing in the Scriptures to warrant the idea of Christ's being anything else than God and man. Strange! Does brother Clark harbor the idea that God in His word has carelessly used descriptive and distinctive names and terms, where there are no distinctions designed? Is not the Lord Jesus Christ in the Scriptures declared to be God and Jehovah, and the Son of God, and man? Are not these three distinctive names, and is there nothing distinctive intended by them? Does not the name Jehovah imply absolute, independent, and self-existence? Does not the term Son, as used among men, and generally in the Scriptures, distinctively imply a begotten, and therefore dependent existence?

And does not the term, man, imply a fleshly existence? Was He not a Son before He was made of a woman and made under the law? I cannot believe that our Lord is revealed to be what He is not. Why then are these three distinctive terms so often used of our Lord if He does not possess the three distinct existences thereby designated? Can brother Clark answer these enquiries so as to make them harmonize with the truth of Scripture declarations and yet so as to deny His distinct existence as the Son of God? In John 1st, as already noticed, we have the three natures, "The Word was God;" again, "In Him was life;" again, "The Word was made flesh," verse 1,4 & 14. In Isa. 9:6, we have A child born and a Son given, are not these distinct? And again, His names are The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace. Are not these names descriptive? I presume brother Clark could not say that the name Everlasting Father being given to the child born and the son given implies He is distinctively the Father in the Godhead. Brother Clark will probably shuffle these queries off by saying the subject of God's existence is a mystery. True it is a mystery, but does this imply that we should, by our constructions put upon God's word, involve it in contradictions? There is a material difference between mystery and contradictions. It is nowhere written, great are the contradictions of godliness. Contradictions in his system I have already pointed out, the above hint therefore will be sufficient. I have thus presented my views as contrasted with the popular system, by which it will be seen that I, in common with the advocates of that system, hold that God exists as three, and that these three are one, and so one, that either of the three is, in His distinct relation, the one God. They hold that there are three persons in the Godhead. I deny that, but say that the Son is a proper and distinct person from the Father and the Holy Ghost, in relation to His sonship; but that He does not exist in His sonship separate from His Godhead, any more than He does as man, so that in His distinct personality He is God, Son of God, and Man. They hold that His sonship relates to His Godhead, so that He is no otherwise God than as He is begotten of the Father; I deny this as contradictory to His being equal with the Father, and to His being the independent and self-existent God; and in distinction, I hold that His sonship consists in His being begotten of the Father as the Head of His church and life of His people and that they thus, in their spiritual life, were begotten in Him and proceed from Him, and that He is the "first born among many brethren" Rom.8:29. And now brethren, is there anything heretical, anything anti-scriptural in those points wherein I differ from you, anything contradictory to the Son of God's being absolutely the Jehovah, whilst He is the Son of God, and Man, possessing these existences distinct from His Godhead, yet inseparable from it, and personally one with it; any diminishing of His capacity to act as the one Mediator between God and men? If there is, then clear yourselves from the heresy by separating from me. But beware how you encourage splits among us, when that from which you would separate is sustained by the word of God. I am willing to join issue with brother Clark in an appeal to the saints of the most high God, which it is that denies that the Son of God is the Jehovah, he who says He is begotten of the Father as God, or I in contending that He is unbegotten, unproduced in His Godhead; and whether I any more diminish His essential Godhead by contending that He exists as the life of His people as well as man in His personal union with His Godhead, that he does in admitting that He exists as proper man in like union with His Godhead. Whilst having joined in this appeal to the saints, I would not forestall their decision, but wish them to consider and speak candidly if they are disposed to do so, and say which more denies the idea of absolute self-existence, he who contends that it is an unbegotten, underived existence, for this is the point; I would beg indulgence to lengthen this communication by stating what I believe to be the actual difference between me and brother Clark and other brethren whom I could name, and that reduced to the shortest span. It is simply this, that I believe that Christ actually existed from before the foundation of the world, in union with His Godhead as the Head and life of His people, and they deny His so existing, and therefore in effect, deny His actual existence as the Christ and Mediator until He was born of Mary, Also, we differ in the reference of His sonship, they referring it to His Godhead and I referring it to His existence as Head and life of His people. This is the amount on this subject; it, to be sure, extends itself to the subject of regeneration as to what constitutes that. Whether this be a sufficient ground for a split I leave them to judge for themselves. My opinion and my feelings are that it is no cause for a split or for hard feelings; but as I do not wish to intrude upon their fellowship after what brother Clark has developed by crowding invited.

There are one or two other things in brother Clark's communications which I wish to notice. He charges me with having proscribed all the saints from the apostles' days down. How have I proscribed them? By making my views on this subject a test of fellowship? I deny the charge. The first instance of my publishing my views on this subject, through the Signs, was to defend them from the charge of heresy, which certain brethren had made against them, as advanced in conversation and preaching; and in most cases since, in which I have discussed the subject through the Signs, it has been in self defense from similar charges. In these communications I have protested against making our different views on this mysterious subject a test of fellowship, or a charge of heresy; so long as the essential Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ was maintained. If, by the charge, he means that I have been too harsh relative to the views of others, I probably am guilty. I feel that I am deficient in the graces of meekness and humility as well as in every other christian grace. There have been some occasions for producing excited feelings. When the subject of the sonship of Christ, as I now view it, was first opened up to my view, the revelation of Him in the Scriptures seemed so to harmonize in relation to His being the Jehovah, and to His subordination as Son, and in reference to His relation with His church and people, that I thought surely Old School Baptists would receive the Scripture testimony on the subject. But what have I met with from them, as a general result, but charges of heresy, and of bringing forward new things to make a split and lead a party, &c. Again, when I consider the origin of the system, as such, of three persons in the Godhead, and of the sonship of Christ as generally received by Catholics, Protestants and Baptists; for brother Clark is not correct in saying I have proscribed all the saints from the Apostles' days. The Apostles never taught that there are three persons in the Godhead, nor that it was as God the Son was begotten. Mosheim says, speaking of the affair of Anus, and of the council of Nice, A.D. 325, until then "nothing was dictated to the faith of christians in this matter, &c. Hence it happened that the christian doctors entertained different sentiments upon this subject, without giving the least offense, and discoursed variously concerning the distinctions between the Father, Son and Holy Ghost." (See in his church history his account of the Arian affair and the council of Nice.) When I say I consider the character of the majority of the Bishops composing this council, the decrees they established, as well as the creed; that they sanctioned Constantine's assuming as emperor an authority in religion, and that from this council emanated the first professed christian persecution against christians; first against Arians, and then against Donatists and Novations, with whom was evidently the true church, I am led to the conclusion that here was developed the Beast in his first assuming the seat and power of the dragon; and therefore that the creed and decrees of this council will go down with the Beast. See also Jones' account of this council, and remarks in his church history. Hence, I have felt impatient at seeing Old School Baptists holding so tenacious to the creed of that council, and in its spirit branding all as heretics who dare to differ from it. I may, therefore, have spoken too severely on this point. I give not the above account to reflect upon brethren, but as a matter of well authenticated historical fact, to show brother Clark that he was too brash, regardless of candor and of facts in his sweeping charge.

Brother Clark also admonishes me relative to the effects of my discussions. How many have been edified by them is not my province to decide. But I know that the multitude are not always on the side of the truth. I have probably as great an itching, naturally, for popularity as others; and I do highly regard the fellowship of brethren, and of brother Clark and those who appear to have been with him in this stand against my views. But I have not been trained in my experience to a popular course. In my early experience I was constrained by a regard to Scripture testimony to break off from my connection with the most numerous and influential denomination in New Jersey, and to hunt up a few despised and scattered members of a Baptist church in that vicinity, before unknown to me, and ask them to admit me to baptism and connection with them. And as they had no preacher, I had to go to the city of New York (thirty miles), and request a preacher to visit them and baptize me. My travel ever since has been in the same course. Again and again have I had to leave the many to go with the few; but it has not been my lot to leave the few and adhere to the many. And does brother Clark suppose that at this time of life I am to be induced, unless by being convinced of error, to cease to advocate what I have conscientiously received as revealed truth for the sake of being with the majority? With Jeremiah I may conclude that I was born a man of strife and a man of contention Jer. 15:10.

Brother Clark on I Cor. 15:45, and brother Williams, I will, if permitted, attend to in another communication.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, April 17, 1850.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 18 (1850)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 391-401

On the Sonship of Christ.

Brother Beebe; - This subject, the sonship of Christ, is one of no trifling importance, in our rightly understanding the great doctrine of salvation. Could we be led to a clear apprehension and reception of the scripture revelation on this point, without blending anything of human wisdom therewith, it would be a precious privilege.

I would here entreat my Old School brethren not to be alarmed though in presenting what appears to me clearly the testimony of scripture on this point, I should give some views not generally received by the professing world, until they have calmly examined the proofs presented, and compared them with such as may be suggested as supporting different views. If after such examination, they find that in this, and in the preceding communication relating to the existence of God, as three and one, I have mistaken the voice of scripture, they will do well to show the mistake.

When we look into the scriptures in reference to this subject, we find the sonship of Christ therein presented to view as threefold; as the Son of man, the Son of David, and the Son of God. Each of these demand some attention, in a careful enquiry on this subject. But the examination of the two former, I intend shall be brief, and indeed of the third also, so far as the importance of the subject will justify.

1st. - What is implied in Christ's being called the Son of man? The term, son of man, we find repeatedly used in the Old Testament. Sometimes in reference to mankind at large, as denoting their vanity, vileness, mortality, &c. See Num. 23:19, Job 25:6; Ps.146:3, among other texts. It is a term particularly appropriated to Ezekiel as a prophet. It is said he is so called about eighty-nine times in his prophecy, and Christ about eighty times in the four gospels. I have however not counted for myself. Why Ezekiel is so peculiarly designated, I know not; unless it was to point him out particularly, as typical of Christ, as the Son of man; in its being his lot to prophecy about and in the time of the captivity of his people for their transgressions, and his having representively to bear some of those punishments he was directed to denounce. See chap's. 4, 5 and 12:1-7. Christ is twice, if not thrice, designated by this term in the Old Testament. Ps.80:17 & Dan.7:13. In most instances in which the term is used in the New Testament, the Lord, I think uses it Himself, of Himself. But the enquiry is, why does He so denominate Himself? It is evidently not to designate Him as literally the posterity, or as having come into Adam's place or anything of that kind. For in regard to His assumption of humanity, the scriptures are particular in quarding against the idea of His being literally the son of man. In this point of view He is revealed as the seed of the woman. Gen.3:15. Isaiah also prophesied: "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Chap.7:14. And the angel in answer to the enquiry of Mary on this point describes His production thus: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee." He adds, "therefore also that Holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God." Luke 1:34,35. Here His humanity in distinction from being the son or offspring of man, is declared to the Son of God. But the term Son of God here I do not understand as denoting the same as His being the Begotten of the Father, &c. The term here I think corresponds with the same term as applied to Adam, (Luke 3:38,) and is designed to denote that His manhood was, as was Adam's, produced by the immediate creating power of God, without the intervention of secondary causes. Hence His not participating in human depravity.

Perhaps Christ's being called the Son of man may be designed in part to denote Him as the heir of the world, for as Abraham's seed, He is the heir of the world. See Rom. 4:13; compared with Gal.3:16. In thus contemplating Him, we must view Him as in connection with His body the Church; and in this point of view, we shall see Him to be the only heir of creation; He in His church being the whole substance and object of creation and that for which the world stands. Hence all things were made for Him, as well as by Him. Col.1:16. But in a more particular sense, the Lord's portion is His people, and Jacob is the lot of His inheritance. Deut.32:9. That however which I think is more directly intended by Christ's being revealed as the Son of man, and what constitutes Him more manifestly the Antitype of Ezekiel, was His inheriting, in consequence of inheriting Jacob, their law standing, their sins, infirmities, sorrows, death, and curse. "For as much as the children," (the children God had given Him, but who were the natural heirs, the begotten sons of man,) "were partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death He might destroy him who had the power of death," &c. Heb.2:14. Herein was He most astonishingly manifested as the Son of man, in being made under the law, made sin, made a man of sorrows, made a curse, &c., &c. Hence it is, that whilst He is so repeatedly called the Son of man in the Evangelists, He is no where, that I recollect, so called in any other part of the New Testament.

2nd: Christ's sonship as the Son of David is the next subject of our enquiries.

We find Him repeatedly addressed as the Son of David. But Christ indirectly, though clearly, rejects the idea of being the Son of David, on one occasion, that is, of being so in the sense in which the Jews understand the Messiah would be David's son, namely: in a natural sense. Mt.22:42-45; Mark 12:35-37. Hence it cannot be that it was as being a natural descendant of David, that He is called the Son of David. It is true that this name, as does the name Son of man, relates to His being manifested, in the flesh, and to His being of the seed of David; that is, as the Apostle explains it, being "made of the seed of David according to the flesh." Rom.1:3. But I think a due consideration of the scriptures which I will shortly refer to will satisfy the candid enquirer that the sonship of Christ as the Son of David related particularly to His exaltation in human nature as the King of Zion, of Israel; and as the Covenanted Heir of the throne of Israel, as being that seed of David more particularly intended in the covenant God established with Him as mentioned. II Sam.7:4-16; 23:5; Ps.89:19-37. It was necessary that He should be "made of the seed of David," and be born in Bethlehem, the town of David's nativity, that He might be visibly manifested as this Covenanted seed of David, as that "Righteous Branch whom the Lord should raise unto David." Jer.23:5. But that Christ's sonship as the son of David consisted in His being the King of Zion, having His dominion established in the earth, and over the nations of the earth, is evident from the fact, that all those prophesies which speak of Him as the offspring of David thus describe particularly His reign. See Ps.72;

Isa.9:6,7 & chap. 11; Jer.33:15-17, &c.; as also from the manner in which He is spoken of, and addressed in the New Testament. The angel Gabriel says unto Mary concerning her son: "The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David, and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1:32,33. Thus also His entry into Jerusalem as the "King of the daughter of Zion," as foretold, Zech.9:9, as the SON OF DAVID, as He "that cometh in the name of the Lord," &c., according to Luke 19:38, as "the King that cometh," &c., and according to John 12:13, as the "King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord," &c. (Denoting the different modes of expression by which Christ as the Son of David is described - each pointing to His kingly office.) Hence these several terms, KING, KING OF ISRAEL, &c., are by the Holy Ghost used to denote Christ as the Son of David. Hence His being the King of Israel and being the Son of David is one and the same thing.

3rdly. We now come to a consideration of the sonship of Christ as the Son of God.

Here we at once meet with a peculiar distinction of this sonship from the other two. This is a begotten sonship. He is revealed as the only begotten Son of God. The others are not begotten sonships; they relate to His humanity. He became a Son in those respects, in consequence of His union with His people; as in this respect, as it will be shown, His people are sons of God in consequence of their union with Him. Christ is then truly the Son of God. But what does His sonship in this respect consist in? In His Godhead? In His humanity? Or in something else? 1st: That it does not consist IN HIS GODHEAD, or in His personal distinction in the Godhead, which is the doctrine of the Nicene Creed; I should think has already been clearly shown in treating on God's existence as THREE AND ONE, by the proof produced establishing the fact that Christ in the distinct relation which He sustains in the Godhead, is revealed as the one God, the Jehovah, and therefore as being absolutely self-existent and independent, in His being, as in the Father. 2nd: The idea that His sonship, as the Son of God, consists of His being born of Mary, I should think would be given up on reflecting that His other sonships related to His humanity and were therefore not begotten sonships, whereas in this sonship He is begotten of God. But in the further prosecution of this enquiry other considerations will present themselves in opposition to this idea.

In examining the New Testament on this subject, it will, I think, appear very manifest. 1st: That Christ, as the Son of God, sustains a subordinate relation to the Father. Let us look at some of the principle texts relative to Christ's superior glory as the Son of God. In John 3:16-18, whilst Christ is declared to be God's only begotten Son, the testimony is that God gave His only begotten Son, &c., consequently the Son as such was subject to the Father. Turning to John 5:17, 30, we find the Son declaring His superior authority as such, over the SABBATH and to EXECUTE JUDGMENT, &c.; yet throughout the passage He acknowledgeth His subordination to the Father. His language is, "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do."(John 5:19) "For as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself," &c. See also John 10:16 - 18. Passing to John chap.17, and we behold the Son praying to the Father to be glorified with that glory which He had with the Father before the world was, (verse 5,) thus acknowledging a dependence on the Father before the world was. Hence He must have been a Son before He was made flesh. In I Cor. 15:27, 28, Paul having spoken (vs.24) of Christ's delivering up the kingdom to God, even the Father, saith, "For He hath put all things under His feet. But when He saith, all things are put under Him, it is manifest that He is excepted, which did put all things under Him. And when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." Here again the subordination of the Son, as such, to the Father, is declared in language as plain as can be expressed. In Col.1:12-20, the greatness, the glory, and vast superiority of Christ, as God's dear Son, over every created thing in heaven, and in earth, is declared; and yet all this was by the Father's pleasure; not of His own independent will. "For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell," &c. vs.19. Again in Heb. chap. 1, the great superiority of the Son over angels is shown; and yet all this glory, is by the Father's pleasure. He appointed Him heir over all things; He said unto Him, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And again, I will be to Him a Father, and He shall be to me a Son." vs.5.(See Ps.2:7-11; II Sam.7:14) - "And when He bringeth His first begotten into the world, He saith, And let all the angels of God worship Him." vs.6. Can anything be more explicit than this chapter to show the subordination of the Son to the Father, as well as to show His great superiority as the Son, over the angels? I have selected these texts in which the highest authority, exaltation, &c., of the Son as such is declared, and have shown that as thus presented to view in His exaltation, His subordination to the Father is manifested; so that it cannot with any show of candor be said, that this subordination belonged only to His humiliation, as the Son. Still I know men have said, and will say that it is only as the Mediator, the Redeemer, that He is spoken of in these and the like passages. I will only say in return, that when they can convince me, the Holy Ghost has been mistaken in the terms He authorized to be used, I may admit their right to substitute other terms, conveying other ideas, for those He has employed; but I think not before. Let us however examine one or two of the passages already referred to. Take I Cor.15:28. And we shall find that instead of the Holy Ghost's intimating that the Son, only in His Meditorial office, shall thus be subject to the Father, it is expressly affirmed, that the Son also Himself, shall be subject, &c., thus confirming the fact by an empathic expression, that it is of the Son Himself, the affirmation is made. And in Heb.1:5, instead of its reading, Thou art my appointed Mediator, and I will be the one God and thou shalt be the one Mediator, the affirmation is: "Thou art my Son," &c. "And I will be to Him a Father," &c. Thus the idea which I contended for in some of the preceding communications, namely: that a begotten existence, implied a derivative, and as therefore a dependent existence, is sustained by the whole revelation of Christ as the Son of God, by His subordination to the Father, therein manifested. And such subordination in a son is sanctioned by the voice of nature, of reason, and of God. God says, "Honour thy father and thy mother." &c. Ex.20:12. And Christ says, "I honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me." John 8:49. Hence it is evident, that the revelation made of Christ as the only begotten Son of God, is not a revelation of the modus of His existence as Jehovah, as the Father's fellow or equal. His sonship therefore must relate to something other than to His essential existence as God.

But the Athanasians say that God in begetting a Son, must have begotten one in His own nature, and must therefore have begotten Him God, &c. This reasoning would be correct if God in begetting His Son was subject to the law of generation, by which man is governed. But the subjection of God to such a law, I think they would hardly contend for. The expression as used in reference to God, is evidently designed to denote the putting forth His producing power, in a way distinct from the act of creation, but peculiar to Himself, further than this we cannot say. But still there is in the person of the Son of God, a conformity to the law of generation, by which everything produces its like. For in His person, whilst He is the begotten Son of God, He possesses also the fullness of the Godhead, is the Jehovah equally with the Father, not as the product of the Father's begetting, but essentially so, of Himself as God. He therefore in His person possesses every quality and lineament of the Son of God, is the brightness of God's glory and the express image of His person. Hence whilst as the Son, He with propriety saith, "My Father is greater than I," &c., (John 14:28,) with equal truth He saith, "I and my Father are ONE." John 10:30. So also, the Father could with truth, on the one hand, address Him, the Son, thus: "Thy throne O God is forever and ever," &c., and on the other hand, say to Him, "God even thy God hath anointed thee," &c. Heb.1:8,9.

This subject being too lengthy for one communication, I will continue in another.

IOB - INTRODUCTION

To the Reader.

IF the dark gloom of Priestcraft and superstition, which prepared the way for Pagan Idolatry and Papal usurpation; if the horrors of an infatuation, which has repeatedly drenched the earth with human gore, racked and tortured the dear people of God, and prostrated every liberal institution in civil government on earth; were a sufficient reason why the Watchmen in Zion should "lift up their voice like a trumpet, cry aloud and spare not" even to sound an alarm in God's holy mountain, there is no apology necessary for the appearance of this Pamphlet. If it were deception for Pagans to teach the worship of imaginary Deities, it is no less deceptive for professed Christians to teach the worship of a bankrupt God, whose resources are exhausted, or whose disposition or will transcends his power. If it were deception for the Pope of Rome to teach men that salvation could be bought and sold for money, it is equally absurd for any of the Clergy of the present day to teach that the salvation of mankind depends on moneyed institutions; as Bible, Tract, or Missionary Societies, Theological Seminaries, or Sabbath School Unions, or any other system of Works. If it was unlawful for the Pope to sell indulgencies, or passports through Purgatory, or pardons, or titles to Eternal life, for money; how is it less criminal for modern speculators in divinity to sell Birth rights into Religious Societies? What more is required at this day, to constitute a man orthodox than to pour forth his cash into the grand Reservoir of Priestcraft? Or what less than the name Deist, or Infidel, is stamped on the man who conscientiously withholds his support from worldly institutions, and comes forth boldly to avow the Eternal truths of the Bible? Are not the signs of the times alarming? Are not our religious rights disputed? Are not our Republican Institutions threatened, by what is called "a Christian party in politics?" Who that loves his country, or his God, can be an uninterested spectator!

It is due to the author of the following Letters, to state, that they were written by my request, and intended to comprise the substance of an address, by him delivered, before the Central New Jersey Baptist Association, and in presence of the New Jersey Baptist State

Missionary Society, convened at Herberton, N. J., Oct. 1830; and although they were not written originally by him with a design of printing them, yet upon my special request, he has consented to their publication. I therefore cordially submit them to the citizens of the United States in general, and to my Baptist brethren in particular; praying that God may attend them with his divine blessing, and make them edifying to you, as they have been to me, for a dear Redeemer's sake. Amen.

GILBERT BEEBE, 1832.

IOB - LETTER I

Brother Beebe: - Agreeable to your request, I will give you my views concerning the Witnesses and the Image of the Beast, as I partially stated them before the Central New Jersey Association.

You will recollect that in opposition to the motion to recommend the Missionary plans, &c. the ground I took was the rights of conscience. After stating the manifest evidence there was of our being conscientious in opposing these schemes, in that we did it at the expense of popularity, in the face of reproach, &c., I attempted to show that the Scripture Testimony justified our conscientious opposition to the schemes of men being introduced into the concerns of religion. In proof of this, I brought several passages from the Scriptures to show that in all our religious transactions, we are to acknowledge Christ as the one King of Zion, are to follow him as the Shepherd of his sheep, to hear him as our only prophet and instructor, that the apostles were commissioned to make known the regulations the King would have observed by his church, and that the order thus established by them is equally binding upon the Church in all ages; hence he tells his disciples that "when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory," evidently implying whenever he shall thus sit, that is, during the whole period, till his second coming, - "Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19:28. Also, that to follow the directions or contrivances of men was so far to turn away from Christ. As proofs that we are not to do this last on any consideration, I quoted Deut. 13:1-5, Matt.

24:23-26 & II Pet. 1:19. I then said there was another kind of testimony which I should now produce from the Scriptures to the same point. This I remarked was the testimony of prophecy, which is as much the word of God, and as unchangeable as are the promises of the gospel.

I then turned to the prophecy concerning the reign of the Beast during forty and two months, Rev. 13:1- 10; to the prophecy of the church, under the similitude of a woman clothed with the sun, and being in the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God; during the period, said verse 6, to be a thousand two hundred and three score days, and verse 14, to be for a time and times and half a time, Rev. chap. 12, and to that of God's two witnesses, who shall prophecy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth, Rev. 11: 3. I remarked that some suppose the witnesses have already been killed, but that this could not be the case, for as the periods of the reign of the Beast, of the Church's being in the wilderness, and of the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, are of equal length, they must, from the nature of things, have commenced about the same time, and consequently end about the same time; for the Church's fleeing into the wilderness, was in consequence of the persecution of the Beast, and the witnesses prophecy in sackcloth in consequence of the Church's being in the wilderness. But I would rather say, as more strictly Scriptural, that the Witnesses prophesying in sackcloth in consequence of the court that is without the temple being given to the Gentiles, and the Holy City being trodden under foot by them. This amounts to the same as the other expressions used. For the term Gentiles, is another name to denote the Romish Church, or the Beast, used as expressive of its having become conformed to the idolatrous Gentiles, in having borrowed so many of its ceremonies from them. By the court which is without, &c. I understand formal or nominal professors; and by the Holy City being trodden under foot by the Gentiles, I understand the true Church's being oppressed and persecuted by the Beast. As I remarked before the Association, it is manifest from the above consideration that the witnesses cannot as vet have been slain, because the Beast is still in power. In addition to the above considerations I would remark that the connection clearly proves the fall of the Beast, immediately after the witnesses are raised up again by the spirit of God entering into them, for, "The same hour was there a great earthquake, &c." And they will be raised just three years and a half after they are slain; that is, three days and a half prophetic time.

See Rev. 11:11-19.

It may not be amiss here to add a few remarks relative to the different terms used to denote the period of a thousand two hundred and sixty years. The terms used to denote the period of the Beast's reign, are forty and two months, Rev. 11:2 & 13:5. Hence his continuance, and the time of his treading under foot the Holy City, are of one length, forty and two months, allowing thirty days to the month, according to the ancient method of reckoning time, make just a thousand two hundred and sixty days, the same length of time the witnesses are to prophecy in sackcloth. Dr. Gill, if I mistake not, observes with a good deal of propriety, that the reign of the Beast is measured by months, to denote the Romish Church's being so much governed by the moon or months; the most of their ceremonies and holy days being governed by the moon, as was the case in reference to the Jews and the Heathen, from both of whom they borrowed ceremonies. The time of the Church being nourished in the wilderness, is expressed in Rev. 12:14, by the terms a time, and times, and half a time; and in verse 6, it is said to be for a thousand two hundred and three score days, which shows that these different computations are of the same amount, and also that the church is to be in the wilderness, for the same period that the witnesses are to prophecy in sackcloth. Again, Daniel represents the time of the saints being given into the hands of the Beast, denoted by the little horn, by the same terms in substance. He says, a time, and times, and the dividing of time. See Dan. 7:20 – 25. By comparing this with Rev. 11:2, we find also that these denote the same as forty and two months. Taking a time for a year, and times for two years, and the dividing of time, or a half a time for half a year, we have just three years and a half, which amounts to forty and two months, or a thousand two hundred and sixty days. With regard to a day, prophetic time, being taken for a year, we have an instance in Ezek. 4:4-6, again in Dan. 9:24-26.

Seventy weeks were appointed for the coming of the Messiah, which at seven days to the week, amount to four hundred and ninety days; and the event proved it to be just four hundred and ninety years. I said nothing before the association, as to what I understood by the two witnesses, but perhaps you would like to know my opinion upon this point. Some have supposed that the two Testaments were meant by them; but the whole description of them, Rev. chapter 11, is too personal to admit of the idea, in my mind, of the Scriptures being intended. Others have supposed that by the Two, were intended the preachers of the gospel as the one, and the Church of Christ as the other. But I think that the idea of prophesying is not applicable to the Church as such, and I cannot conceive of the Church's being killed; besides the state and situation of the Church during the same period, is distinctly described in the 12th chapter. I understand by the two witnesses no other than the succession of Gospel Preachers, to them the idea of prophesying as well as bearing testimony is properly applicable. And those who have borne faithful testimony concerning the truth and order of the gospel, not going to Mother Rome, nor to any of her daughters, to learn what they should testify, have had to prophecy, or preach under very discouraging circumstances, as far as regards their reception from the most of the professed Church of Christ.

The same is still the case. Hence they go mourning. It is said, vs. 4, "These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth." There is in this a manifest reference to Zech. 4:3,11,14. The primary design of the vision as mentioned in verses 2 & 3, was to show Zechariah, and through him Zerubbabel and Joshua, that notwithstanding their meekness and the opposition they met with, the temple should be built; and it thus would be manifested that the Lord's hand was in it. With still more propriety may it be said of the gospel church; the antitype of that temple in the building of it up, that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of hosts." How is this manifested? In that it has pleased the Lord to do it, instrumentally, by the foolishness of preaching; and as Paul says II Cor. 4:7. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us." The station of the two olive trees, or as they are called, verse 12, olive branches, in the vision, and type, fitly illustrate the relative situation of Gospel ministers in the antitype. In the vision they are represented as standing [verse 2,] on the two sides of the bow that is on the top of the candlestick, and in ver. 11, as standing by the two sides, the right and left of the candlestick. In the vision there is but one candlestick, but having seven lamps; in the case of the witnesses two candlesticks are mentioned. This difference is suited to the different state of things under the different dispensations. In the type, the Jewish Church-state, it was but one, it had no branches; yet in the vision the candlestick though one, had its seven branches, being figurative of the Gospel Church in all her fulness of branches. In Rev. 11:4, the view is adapted to the actual state of things under the gospel, the several branches of the gospel church being actually independent churches. Hence as many candlesticks, in this case, are spoken of as olive trees, or witnesses, not to show that every preacher must have a distinct church, but that every gospel preacher stands by the side of, or in relation to a gospel church, in all his ministrations, being sent forth and constantly sustained by the fellowship of the church, as the lamp or candle is sustained by the candlestick. And as in the vision the olive trees stood on the sides of the bowl at the top of the candlestick, so real gospel ministers stand connected in their ministry with Christ the head of the Church, and He being the Grand Treasurer of all the gifts and grace of the church, they receive from him their ministerial gifts suited to their stations, and depend on him from time to time to fill their earthen vessels with the golden oil of gospel grace, or treasure; and which, as they receive it, they, like the olive branches, constantly empty out of themselves, for communicating light, that is, comfort and instruction to the saints, the priests of God. How different this from going to Theological Schools to get furnished for the ministry, and from standing accountable to Mission Boards, for the manner of fulfilling their ministry, and depending on them for being supported? The witnesses also empty the oil through the golden pipes of christian experience; that is, instead of lecturing upon the doctrines of the gospel, they preach the gospel in its relation to christian experience and practice.

But why are the witnesses limited to the number two? I answer because that by the Jewish law, two, and not less than two witnesses, were sufficient to establish any important fact; see Deut. 17:6. So in this case, there is a sufficient number of faithful gospel preachers, and but a sufficiency to corroborate each others testimony. Hence they are said to be two, and only two.

The next things in order, will be to notice the remarks I made relative to the place and time of the witnesses being slain. But as my sheet is sufficiently filled, I will defer this to another opportunity.

I subscribe myself your brother in the trials of the gospel. SAMUEL TROTT.

IOB - LETTER II

Brother Beebe: - After a longer lapse of time than I had intended, I resume my pen to give you a further statement of my views relative to the two Witnesses, &c. Having already given my reasons for believing that the true gospel ministers are represented by these two Witnesses; I am now to notice the place and time of their being slain.

1st. The place of their being slain: I remarked before the Association, that the general notion was that the Witnesses would be slain only in those countries which are under the power of the Pope; but I presumed the place of their being slain would be that, wherein they are principally found bearing their testimony for the truth; and that as a retreat has been provided for the church, in her wilderness state, in this country, since her being driven from the valleys of Piedmont, here we of course shall find the Witnesses.

I will enlarge a little upon these several points: 1st. The notion that the Witnesses are to be killed only in the dominions of the Pope, is probably taken from what is said in Rev. 11:7 & 8. "The beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, shall make war against them and kill them.

And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified." This being understood to be the same beast with the one described in Rev. 13: 1. But I think rather that this is the same with the one described, Rev. 17:3,8,14; and which is there distinguished from the church of Rome, represented by the woman seated upon it, and is therefore distinct from the beast in chapter 13:1. But again, another objection to the idea of the Witnesses being killed in this country, may arise from the circumstance that this beast was designed to represent the Roman Empire. It is true that the Roman Empire as the fourth beast in Daniel's vision [Dan.

7:7,] is represented by each of these beasts, but by each as standing in a peculiar relation to the church of Rome. In chap. 13, as I may have occasion hereafter to illustrate, the Romish church is particularly characterized as succeeding to the seat of the Empire. But in the passages referred to in chap. 11 and 17, the Roman Empire under particular circumstances, is brought to view as sustaining that church in her bloodshed and adulteries, and raising her to power.

What the particular circumstance connected with the Roman government is, which constituted it "the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit," is an important and difficult point to decide. But I will submit a few remarks upon it. The seven heads of the beast, besides representing the seven mountains or hills on which Rome was built, answered to the seven forms of government which had or should exist in that city, and "the beast that was and is not, is the eighth and is of the seven," Rev. 17:9,11. Hence it was neither of the seven forms of government as such, which constituted this beast. And yet it is said, the beast was, whilst the sixth head was still in power, and therefore before the seventh or eighth had succeeded; consequently before the Pope had arrived to his power. A particular difficulty in deciding upon this subject arises from the two dates which present themselves to our minds, either of which might be supposed the one assumed in this description of the beast, namely; the period at which the revelation was made to John, or the period at which the church of Rome shall be seen riding into power as the eighth head or form of government. The idea perhaps, which would be the most readily received, is that the period at which the Apostle wrote, was the date here assumed; hence the Imperial is considered the sixth form of government; that is, that the Pagan Emperors constituted the sixth head. But what in this case, should this beast be, that it was then said, it "was and is not." If the Roman power as such be supposed to be the beast, it was then but just passing the meridian of its glory; if the persecuting edicts of the Emperors, be supposed to constitute this beast, John was at this time suffering under them in his banishment to the Isle of Patmos. Besides, I think it would be difficult for anyone to show in what sense either, could be that, on which the church of Rome rode into power, or was seated. I am therefore, from these and other considerations, led to the conclusion, that the time of the beast of chap. 13, "rising up out of the sea," or of Popery's coming into power, was the period or date assumed. Indeed I think the kingly government of the Ostrogoths, which succeeded the fall of the Western Empire, properly constituted the sixth distinct form of government; and the provincial government under the Eastern Emperors which followed, was of course the seventh. If we consider that union of Church and State which was established by Constantine, as represented by this beast, we shall find the description given of it to correspond. This union was certainly sufficiently irrational to be viewed as beastly; and it must have been a device of hell, [certainly not of heaven] and therefore "ascended out of the bottomless pit." And it was manifestly this union which raised the church of Rome to its worldly power; she is therefore fitly represented as seated upon this beast. Again viewing this union as constituting the beast "that shall ascend out of the bottomless pit," and at the time, which I have supposed assumed as the date of the prophecy, it might correctly be said, "The beast that was" - it had existed under the reign of the latter Emperors - and is not - this union not existing in form, that is, by law, under the Ostrogothic kings – and yet is – for the power and wealth which had been lavished on the churches and Bishops, especially on the church and Bishops of Rome, gave a worldly influence, still increasing through their artfulness, beyond even what they had possessed under the Emperors - "and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." This union being still to be more completely manifested as the birth of hell, and as a scarlet colored or bloody beast, when the Popes should assume the temporal government of Rome and the adjacent districts and should exercise an authority over the kings of the earth, equal to what the Caesars had possessed. Hence the Popish, should then become an eighth form of government, and yet completely identified with the seven, being still the government of Rome. Hence also in the 11th verse, the Popish power is designated by this same Beast; this Beast existing in its fullest rage in that power; and also in chap. 13:1, by a similar Beast. As this union of Church and State, of Religion with Politics, constitutes this Beast; wherever this union has existed there we have seen this Beast red with the blood of saints. Should this union then once be formed, directly or indirectly, in this country, here the Beast will be found, ready to devour the Witnesses. "The streets of the great city which spiritually is called Sodom," &c., may denote those places, where the power of Antichrist is publicly displayed, whether that power be displayed in a mitered head, or in a more complex form, like Missionary Conventions or a Sunday School Union; as the streets of Rome was the place where the Roman Emperors used to display their power and glory. To this application, the description given, will be found by a little reflection, to correspond.

2nd. To the remark I made before the Association; namely, That the witnesses would be killed wherever they are principally to be found, I will just add, that it appears to me a self-evident proposition, if the Witnesses be, both to be killed, that wherever the principal portion of them may be found; bearing their testimony; there they will be killed.

3rd. The conclusion that they are principally to be found in this country, because here the church is sheltered in her wilderness state, is, I still think, a correct one. For those who are witnesses for gospel truth and order will of course be found standing in gospel order. If so, they will have their standing in connection with gospel churches; the churches being the candlesticks from which the gospel light is to shine forth.

The same facts which I noticed in the former letter as proving that the Witnesses had not as yet been killed, prove that the Church is still in the wilderness. This being admitted, and the Church of Christ being found in this country, it will, or ought to be admitted, that she is here in her wilderness state, as in other places where she is found. But the idea which I advanced before the Association was, that this is peculiarly the place of her retreat, since her expulsion from the valleys of Piedmont. To this point I will confine the few remarks I shall offer upon this subject. I have not found the idea thus advanced, simply upon the fact that her situation is in the wilderness, for that might denote no more than that she is in a scattered and oppressed situation, but what I principally rest it upon, is, that which is said in Rev. 12:6. "And the woman fled into the wilderness where she hath a place prepared of God," &c. It is this prepared place that I lay the chief stress upon. That the valleys of Piedmont were a place prepared of God for the retreat of his Church, from the rage of the Beast, is generally admitted. But the time; times and half a time, that the church was to be nourished from the face of the Serpent were not ended when she was driven from this place of refuge; for, as I have already showed, her time of being in the wilderness, or of being fed in her prepared place, must run nearly parallel with the Beast's being in power. Where then shall we find a prepared place, after the former retreat was broken up? Europe, even including England, did not afford a place where she might be in safety from persecution. But when we turn our eyes to America, we discover not only a retreat, but a place bearing evident marks of having been prepared of God. Roger Williams, as early as in 1644, had obtained from the Earl of Warwick, a free charter for the now State of Rhode Island, by which equal freedom was secured to all religious denominations. This was eleven years previous to the severe destruction of the Waldenses in 1655; and forty-two years previous to the final expulsion from the valleys of Piedmont by the French armies. The religious freedom secured in the charter granted to Rhode Island and Providence plantations, was such as had never before been enjoyed by any State or Kingdom. And certainly the hand of God must be acknowledged as peculiarly manifested in providing this asylum for his oppressed church. The subsequent dispensations of God towards this country, in granting us a free national constitution, and in continuing us in the enjoyment of the liberty thus granted; whilst the other nations of the earth, all have been burdened with religious establishments, speaks volumes to me, in confirmation of the fact, that this is a place prepared of God as a retreat for his Church from the thralldom and persecution of the Mother of Harlots, and of her daughters, however different others may view this subject. Indeed, I have in times past thought, that as God hath hitherto preserved our government from giving its power to the Beast, by intermeddling with religion, the whole storm raised by the Beasts, and which will terminate in their destruction, would pass by without molesting us. But I now see several reasons for altering my opinion. One, besides that already noticed, I will mention. The visible church, having been greatly prospered in this good land, with increase and peace, has like her prototype Jeshurun "waxed fat and kicked," she has become weary of the government of Zion's King, and is desirous of being like the nations, or religious sects around, and of choosing a king from among them.

2nd. The time of the Witnesses being slain. We are told, Rev. 11:7, that "when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." That is, as I understand it, when they shall have prophesied during the period mentioned, verse 3, of a thousand two hundred and sixty days, or years. If then we would fix with certainty upon the time at which this period commenced, there would be no difficulty in calculating when it would end. It is evident however, that it will end at least three years and a half before the reign of the beast terminates, as for that length of time their dead bodies are to be unburied previous to their being raised up again. It is also manifest that there is such an intimate connection between the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, and the reign of the beast, as that the one could not have long preceded the other in its commencement. Hence I remarked before the Association, that as it was generally acknowledged, the beast must have been fully manifested when the Pope was declared Universal Bishop, by the Emperor Phocas, in the year 606, his reign must of course terminate in 1866, and therefore as the Witnesses must be slain at least three years and a half previous, it cannot be more than thirty-two of three years before this event will take place. I made these observations, and left it for them to enquire for themselves, how this Divine prophecy would correspond with their boasted triumph of the Sunday School and Mission cause over every obstacle, till they shall have brought in full orbed, the latter day glory. I moreover stated certain reasons I had for believing that the reign of the Beast must have commenced at a still earlier period. But as my sheet is full, I must defer the recital of them till another opportunity.

I remain yours, SAMUEL TROTT

IOB - LETTER III

Brother Beebe: - Agreeably to the remarks at the conclusion of my last letter, I will now state some of those circumstances which led me to think that the reign of the Beast, or the thousand two hundred and sixty days, or years commenced at an earlier period than A D. 606.

1st. I would observe that the kingdom of the Ostrogoths, which I think the sixth head of the beast, or distinct form of government established over Rome, ended A D. 552. Then the seventh head, or a provincial government, under the Eastern Emperors commenced. For though the Lombards afterwards got possession of the greater part of Italy, yet they did not of Rome, nor of Ravenna, the residence of the Exarch, the provincial governor. Indeed at this time the Bishops of Rome seem to have exercised the principal jurisdiction over Rome both civil and ecclesiastical, and therefore was in this sense of the seven, or as many understand it, the seventh head.

2nd. The Western or Roman Empire was conquered, and divided into ten distinct kingdoms, signified by the Ten horns, both of John's Beasts and of Daniel's fourth Beast, as early as A.D. 486, and hence the way was prepared for the little horn of Daniel to spring up. Dr. Robertson, as quoted by Jones in his history of the Waldenses, says, "Such however, was the extensive influence of the Papal intrigues, that there were few among the princes of the Western Empire, that were not virtually brought into a state of subjection to the authority of the Bishops of Rome, before the close of the fifth century." And during the sixth century we find not only the Bishops of Constantinople contending for the honor of an equal dignity with the Bishops of Rome, and also Kings and Emperors striving to resist the power of the Bishops of Rome; from all which, it is evident that the little horn, during this century, had arisen with a mouth speaking great things, &c., although its power was not as yet admitted by all, neither had the three horns fallen before it. See Dan. 7:20-24.

3rd. The event of the taking away the daily sacrifice, and the setting up the abomination that maketh desolate, spoken of by Daniel chap.8:11-13, 11:31, & 12:11. These passages appear to have a threefold reference: 1st. The expressions as they stand in chapters 8 & 11, primarily related to the taking of Jerusalem and polluting the Temple by Antiochns Epiphenus, 2nd, They also applied to the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans. See Matt. 24:15. The abomination in this case designing the images of the eagle on the Roman standards. And 3rd. To the establishing of the power of the beast. See Dan. 12:11. It is in reference to this third application that I would consider these expressions. The abomination that maketh desolate, in the former applications referred to the setting up of images, and before the conclusion of the sixth century, we not only find images set up in most of the churches, and in some instances worshipped, but also that the worshipping of relics, and praying to departed saints, &c., had come into general use. If the setting up of those things was not an abomination according to the Old Testament use of that word, I know not what would be. And these absurd rites, certainly made desolate the churches where they obtained of everything like pure and vital religion; and became the rallying point for desolating the assemblies of the real saints, for the observance of them was the standard of orthodoxy, and the non-observance of them the ground for persecution.

Again, the Mass was substituted in the place of the Lord's Supper by Gregory the Great, before the conclusion of the sixth century. In submitting to this innovation, the Roman worshippers lost sight of the one complete sacrifice made by the Lord Jesus Christ, as taught in the Lord's Supper. Hence the daily sacrifice may be said to have been taken away. At any rate, if these circumstances, without the grant of the Emperor Phocas, be not considered as completely establishing the Pope as the Beast, still they are such as irresistibly lead us to the conclusion, that the Church of Christ, not being able to submit to such abominations, had before this period, [that is, A D. 600] separated themselves from all connection with those who submitted to the power of the Roman Pontifs. Accordingly, Mosheim speaking of the Donatists, a sect whom in conformity to the Catholics, he terms heretics, but who are by Jones, in his history, represented as a body of christians who had two or three hundred years before this separated from the established church on account of its impurity, and had hitherto kept themselves from the corruptions of the Catholics, though having their churches intermixed among the others, especially in Africa, and had adhered to the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel. Mosheim, I say, speaking of these says, "In this century the church of the Donatists dwindled away to nothing, and after this period no traces of it are any where to be found." This he ascribes to the success of Gregory's schemes to put them down. But from what he just before says of them, I can account for their thus disappearing only upon the ground of their having retired from the storm into the wilderness. And they in all probability, passed over into Spain, and from thence into the valleys of Piedmont. See Mosheim's Eccl. Hist. Cent. 6th. Part 2nd. ch. 5th. Another circumstance which leads me to expect the termination, at least, of the wilderness state of the Church, if not of the reign of the beast before A D. 1866, arises from two prophecies in Daniel. The one is found Dan. 8:13,14, where we have a period of two thousand and three hundred days, given for the daily sacrifice to be taken away, [as in vs. 11] and the sanctuary and host to be trodden under foot. At the termination of this period the sanctuary is to be cleansed. The vision which Daniel relates in this chapter seems to be a more particular description of some of the events included in the vision of the four beasts, as in the preceding chapter. The Little Horn of this vision, no doubt, primarily represented Antiochus Epiphenes, who was an eminent type of Antichrist, or the beast from the bottomless pit. And therefore whilst the days of this prophecy, taken literally, may designate the time of Antiochus' assaults upon the Jews, the same, taken prophetically will denote that number of years, and point out the period when the Church of Christ, the antitype of the sanctuary, shall be purged, from the errors she has contracted from antichrist, and be seen coming up out of the wilderness. And if this period commenced with the commencement of the 70 weeks, or 490 years of chap. 9:25-27, [which seems the proper period to date its beginning, since the vision commences with the dominion of the Medes and Persians, and recollect that the 490 years terminated with the crucifixion of Christ, A.D. 32, that is, allowing for the four years of error in the beginning of the christian era, we shall find the 2300 years terminating A D. 1842. Thus subtracting 32 from 490 leaves 458, which taken from 2300, leaves 1842.

The other prophecy is contained in Dan. 12:6-12. It appears to me evident that this prophecy embraces in its scope the deliverance of the Church from the oppression of the beast, and the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and their subsequent conversion. And to this last event I consider the third period, or one thousand three hundred and five and thirty days as referring. Hence the expression, in reference to Daniel's people, blessed is he that waiteth and cometh, &c.

Consequently the second period, or thousand two hundred and ninety days of vs. 11, must refer to the destruction of the Mahometan power, preparatory to the restoration of the Jews. And the time, times and a half or thousand two hundred and sixty days, of vs. 7, is, as in other parallel passages, to be referred to the deliverance of the gospel church. If then we may suppose that the reign of the Eastern Antichrist, or Mahometan power is, as is generally admitted, of the same duration as that of the Western or Papal Antichrist, that is, a thousand two hundred and sixty years; then as the Mahometan era commenced in A D. 612, it must terminate in A D. 1872. Consequently the thousand two hundred and ninety days will then end. Hence as the scattering of the power of the holy people, or the oppression of the church of Christ, will terminate thirty years earlier, it must terminate in A D. 1842; the same time at which the 2300 days, according to the preceding calculation, end. And therefore the 1260 years of the church's being in the wilderness, must have commenced in A D. 582. From the circumstance of these two prophecies, which commence at different times terminating at the same time, one might conclude, that this is the important period, when the wilderness state of the church shall end, or at least when the last scattering of the holy people shall take place in the slaying of the witnesses. But still I must confess that I do not feel all that confidence in this calculation which I could wish. Did it terminate ten years later, that is, in 1852 instead of 42, I should feel more confidence in its correctness. For the pontificate of Gregory the Great, that is, from A D. 590 to 600 appears to me as the more probable period during which the Church retired to the wilderness. On the other hand, I know not what more consistent references can be made of these prophecies, if we allow them to have any reference to gospel times, nor what more correct calculations can be made upon the dates therein given. And from their connection with the other prophecies of Daniel, I do think they have a reference to gospel times. Indeed allowing 1842 to be the period of slaying the witnesses, as hinted above, then '45 or 6 would be the time of their being raised, and it might still be 5 or 6 years more before the church would clearly be manifested as coming up out of the wilderness.

And although the tenth part of the city shall fall at the time of the witnesses rising, still it might not be before 1866 that Babylon would be utterly thrown down. (*On further reflection it appears to me evident, that as A D. 606 was the period, not when the Popes of Rome first assumed the prerogative of being universal Bishop, but when their arrogant pretensions were confirmed by the decree of the Emperor, so the termination of the 1260 years from that date, that is, 1866, will be the period when the ten horns, or kingly powers into which that empire was divided, shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate, &c. Rev.17:16.

Hence as the killing and raising of the witnesses, the great earthquake, by which a tenth part of the city shall fall; the sounding of the seventh angel, and the proclamations that the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, &c. see Rev. 11:7-15, must all precede the final destruction of the beast; they must of course take place before A D. 1866.) And this having different beginnings and terminations to the period of a prophecy, is not uncommon. Thus the 70 years of the Babylonish captivity, may be referred to different dates for its commencement, according to the difference of captives being carried away from Jerusalem, and to each of these captives there was a correspondent returning of the Jews from Babylon as under Zerubbabel, Ezra &c.

I am now to give my views of the Image of the Beast, and the probable manner of the witnesses being slain in this country. But before proceeding to this I will close this letter with some additional remarks relative to the witnesses being slain in this country. Since writing the last letter I have had an opportunity of examining Dr. Gill on the subject, and he has helped me to some additional reasons for believing my position correct, although contrary to his design.

He, speaking upon the dead bodies of the witnesses being in the street of the great city, &c. [Rev. 11:8,] observes that,

"As the street of a city denotes a public open place in it, a place of concourse and resort, the dead bodies of these witnesses being said to lie here, may denote the publicness of their silence, disgrace and contempt." Now is not this country completely like a public street in this respect, being a place of free and public resort for persons from all the nations of Europe? And the event of the witnesses being put down here, would be more generally noticed and gloried in, than the same event in any other place, because the eyes of all Europe are upon us, watching the movements of our government.

Again, the Doct. remarks, "Or else this street may design some part of the Romish jurisdiction, and Great Britain may be particularly designed; for where should the dead bodies of the witnesses lie but where they are slain; and where are they, at least where are so many as in these islands?" Dr. Gill did not live in this day, to be acquainted with the spread of the gospel of these United States. But to pursue his remarks, he adds, "It may be objected that Great Britain is not a part of the sea of Rome, does not belong to the jurisdiction of it.

To this it may be replied, that in this last war of the Beast, the outer Court will be given to the Gentiles, the bulk of the reformed churches will fall off to Popery, and their countries again fall into the hands of the Pope, and among the rest Great Britain." I have no doubt that the British Government, and the other Protestant governments of Europe will again give their power to the Beast, for a little season, being of the original ten kingdoms or horns into which the Roman Empire was divided. But instead of the bulk of the reformed churches, either in Europe or in this country, going off to Popery, I think it a far more probable supposition, that they will be engaged in erecting the Image of the Beast and giving life and power to it. Again, the Doct. says, "The fears of Dr.

Goodwin seem to be too just and well grounded, that the prophecy in Dan. 11:45 respects our island, which speaks of Antichrist planting the tabernacle of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, or the mountain of delights, &c. Now where has God such a mountain of delight, or a people that are the darling of his soul as here? Where in all the globe is such a spot where God has so many saints?" To these several questions I answer that the United States in all these surpass Great Britain. And certainly there is no country like this so much a mountain of delights, where God has delighted to shower down blessings both spiritual and temporal, and to crown them with civil and religious liberty.

Dr. Gill further asks, "What place between the seas is there to which these characters can agree but Great Britain?" "Here then," says he, "Antichrist will plant the tabernacle, &c., but it will be but a tabernacle or tent; it will be but for a short time, as it follows, yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." It is true that Great Britain is an island in the sea; but the expression between the seas, does not appear to me a natural description of its situation. But when we recollect that in Scripture language the ocean is called sea, we have but to look on the map of North America to be convinced how appropriate the above expressions are to the situation of the United States.

We see our country completely between the seas, extending its borders from shore to shore completely from the Atlantic across to the Pacific. And may I not retort the question and ask, what other country is situated like this, between the seas? But by Antichrist, as the antitype of Antiochus, whose reign is described in that 11th chap. of Daniel, from ver. 21 to the end; I understand it not in the limited sense, as denoting a beast, that arose from the sea, Rev. 13:1, but in his more general opposition, as designated by the beast from the bottomless pit, as described in the preceding letter.

Yours affectionately, SAMUEL TROTT.

IOB - LETTER IV

Brother Beebe: - My views of the Image of the Beast come now in course. But to arrive at this, it will be necessary previously to notice the two Beasts mentioned in the preceding part of the chap. [Rev. 13] And as the views I have of the several parts of this chapter, differ considerably from the exposition which Dr. Gill gives of this part of the prophecy, and which is generally received by the Baptists as correct; it is incumbent on me to state some of my reasons for dissenting from him.

According to the Doctor, the first beast, or the one with seven heads, designs the temporal power of the Pope; the second beast, designs his spiritual power, and the Image of the Beast deigns the whole of Popery, or what was denoted by the two beasts. It requires but a little discerning comparison of this exposition with what is said in the scriptures concerning these several things, to discover its total inconsistency. In the first place, he makes the Pope or beast to arise to his temporal power, and to receive from the dragon his power, seat, &c., of course to rule over the nations in temporals, before ever he is seen arising in his ecclesiastical or spiritual tyranny; whereas it is manifest that it was by the exercise of their ecclesiastical tyranny, that the Bishops of Rome arrived at their temporal authority.

Secondly, it is evident that the description of this beast as given from the 4th to the 8th verses, can only relate to the ecclesiastical usurpations of the Pope. It is as the successor of Peter, vicegerent of God, &c., that the Pope is worshipped. As such he assumes those blasphemous titles, &c., alluded to in the declaration, that he opened his mouth in blasphemies against God, &c. And it was only in this relation that power was given him over all kindreds and tongues; for as a temporal sovereign he at most exercised a jurisdiction over three of the ten kingdoms, into which the Empire was divided, denoted by three horns being plucked up by the roots before him. Dan.7:8. And this indeed the Doctor evidently explains the verses referred to. Thirdly, Dr. Gill, in order to carry out his views, remarking on ver.11, which begins thus: "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth," &c., immediately subjoins, "the same with the first, only in another form; the same for being and person, &c." I have not much confidence in that exposition, which directly contradicts the declaration of the text. The Scripture not only directly calls it another beast, but describes its origin as different, being from the earth, whereas the other was out of the sea, and the description goes on to represent it as distinct from the first beast; speaking of it as directing an image to be made of that beast, &c.

Fourthly, his explaining the Image of the Beast, as designing, either image worship, which was introduced, or the two beasts combined, I am sure can never be received as consistent, by any but by those who read the exposition as though it must be true, because the production of a great man, and who therefore do not step to examine for themselves.

I will now give briefly as I can, my views of these beasts and the Image. The beast which ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, I have already spoken of as distinct from these beasts, and as denoting Antichrist; as he is the more generally manifested, being arrayed against the kingdom of Christ.

Antichrist, as assuming the name of christian, in distinction from the Jewish and Pagan Antichrists, was first manifested, systematically arrayed against that kingdom which is not of this world, in the national establishment of Constantine.

Near Lambertsville, N. J. Feb. 17th 1831.

The beast which John saw arise out of the sea, and which is described in this 13th chapter [Rev. 13:1-10,] I think denotes Popery in all its power. It is said to rise out of the sea, to denote its coming into power out of that convulsion of the nations occasioned by the influx of the barbarians, which was indeed comparable only to the commotion of the troubled ocean. See Rev. 17:15. He has the seven heads and ten horns of the beast from the bottomless pit, to show not only that he occupied the same seat with that beast in his previous manifestation, namely: Rome; but also that in this beast Antichrist was most fully and distinctly manifested. He is represented as having in part the likeness of the leopard, the bear, the lion and the dragon, to show that he was the antitype of the little horn of Daniel's vision, and also that this was the intervening general power, before which the nations of the earth should bow, between those four extensive monarchies, and the universal establishment of the kingdom of Christ on the earth, signified in the vision, by the coming of the ancient of days, and the judgment being given to the saints of the Most High, &c. See Dan. 7:14 & 22. It's further said that the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. By the dragon I understand with Dr. Gill, Satan as he was enthroned in the Pagan Empire, and as he continued to annoy the church through the influence and opposition of Paganism; which power and authority, together with his seat - Rome - he transferred to Popery when that arose, and now waged war through this channel against the saints and Church of God. John further had a view of one of the heads of this beast, as wounded to death, and again of this deadly wound as being healed. Dr. Gill thinks that this denoted the destruction of the imperial government, which he considers the sixth head of the beast; and that the healing of this wound, was the introduction of Popery. The Doctor must have forgotten that he had already given it as his opinion that the whole beast which John saw rise out of the sea designed Popery in its secular power, and that he had assigned several reasons to show that this beast could not be designed to denote the Roman Empire, and that among other reasons assigned, he remarked that the arising of this beast, was showed to John as something future, whereas the Roman Empire was already in power, and also that the duration of this beast, be forty and two months, did not agree with the time of the Roman Empire. It is very strange that the wounding of one of the heads of this beast, should denote an event which took place before the beast came into existence. Besides if this beast had been in existence when the Roman Empire was overturned, the forty and two months of its duration must have expired before this time. Further, it does not appear very consistent, that the sixth head, should be represented as being healed when according to the Doctor's exposition, it was totally taken away, and what he considers the seventh head, brought into power. The healing of this head, whatever it be, must denote the restoring of the same head to its power. Dr. Gill afterwards notices with some approbation, the opinion of some, that the wounding of this head, denoted the wound given to Popery by the Reformation. But that wound has never been healed, besides it was not properly a wound inflicted by a sword. I should suppose by his head's being wounded, &c., that we are to understand the wounding of the power of the beast in some shape, and I think by the expression, one of his heads, we may understand, that usurped headship, or influence, which the Popes held over the kingdoms of Europe, in distinction from their authority over the Catholic church. Hence, as I remarked before the Central N. J. Association, I think there has no event taken place since the establishment of Popery, which bears any comparison to the wound which Bonaparte gave to the power of the Pope, especially if we allow, as I have just supposed, that by this head we are to understand the secular power of the Pope, or the superiority he assumed over the kings of Europe. Bonaparte certainly did, by his sword, completely prostrate that power, so as to oblige the Pope to submit to his will. And this wound has since been healed; that is, the Pope's authority has been re-established over those States which were previously under it.

The Beast which arose out of the earth having two horns like a lamb, as already intimated, I consider to be, as the text describes it, another Beast, that is, a Beast distinct from the first. I did not state before the Association what I considered this Beast to be. And indeed I feel a delicacy in giving my opinion now, upon it, not only because of its being so new, but also on account of the violent opposition it will meet with, should it be generally known; and still more because I suppose it will be construed, though unjustly, as unchristianizing all who have been connected with this Beast. (*The fact that from the commencement of the reformation, down to this time, many eminent christians, including Luther, at any rate, in the number, if not Calvin, have belonged to those churches which make up the two horned Beast, I gladly acknowledge. But I at the same time confidently believe, the time not to be far distant, when all real believers will be brought out of them, either by death, or by being convinced of the errors on which they are founded, and those churches will then be left mere loathsome carcasses, made up wholly of carnal professors. Why the Lord has suffered his true visible church, so long to languish, and to be composed of so small a company of the poor of the flock, whilst so great a number of his heaven born children, have been permitted to turn aside to the flocks of his companions, must remain a mystery, at least till the time of the sounding of the seventh Angel. See Rev. 10:7,11 & 15. Yet when we discover from prophecy, the purpose of God, to suffer his church to remain in this oppressed wilderness state during the thousand two hundred and sixty years, we see the necessity of her remaining for that period, a little flock, and consequently of a great portion of her Lord's children, being suffered to treat her with neglect and contempt. Unless we were to suppose that during this period the salvation of God was narrowed down to a much smaller compass, than we would wish to believe the case, or than we have reason to believe.) But as the Beast has been particularly described by Divine inspiration, and as I think I discover it; well answering the description, existing among us, (and I have had it for several years under consideration) I will state my opinion. Should I be mistaken; it will not be more than has happened to others who have given their views of prophecy. Neither will my views of this Beast be more unpopular than were the views which the Waldenses, in their day, held concerning Anti- Christ or the Beast; the correctness of which, every year's experience since, has confirmed. In a word, I consider the Reformation, or the Reformed Churches, designed by the two horned Beast. Its description: It was seen coming up out of the earth. By the earth in chap.12, as distinguished from heaven, I understand the Romish Church, as distinguished from the Gospel Church. "There was war in heaven ... and the dragon, that old serpent ... was cast out into the earth." Dr. Gill explains this of the dragon's being driven out from the throne of the Empire, by Constantine becoming christian, &c.; hence he had power only with the baser class of the inhabitants. If this was the case, how had he power to persecute the woman, the church of Christ? See ver. 13. In some other parts of the New Testament, heaven denotes the gospel Church; understanding it used in this sense here; then whilst the visible gospel Church remained connected with the establishment, the dragon had influence in the Church to raise up wars, as in the case of the Arian heresy, &c. But when the true Church was separated from the establishment, the dragon was left with only the earthly or carnal part of professors; hence he ceased to raise wars in the establishment, and used his influence to raise persecutions against the Donatists and other members and churches which had separated from the establishment. It is true that in the estimation of carnal professors it would rather appear that Michael and his angels were cast out, than that the dragon was; but not so in the estimation of the children of grace. To be permitted to meet with brethren whom they fellowshipped, separated from others, and to have that worship unclogged with that mass of human inventions which had been obtained in the worship of the establishment was cause of rejoicing and praise to the poor Donatists, even whilst persecuted. Hence I feel justified in supposing that by the earth, out of which this Beast distinguished from the Gospel Church. And it is a well known fact that the Reformed Churches came out of this corrupt Catholic Church. They carry the mark of their origin from this earth in their frontlets, by denominating themselves Reformed Churches. Secondly, this Beast has two horns like a lamb, by which I understand Luther and Calvin, the two eminent leaders of the Reformation. These horns were indeed lamblike; for they appeared to be, and indeed were, in several respects contending for the simplicity of the gospel of Christ. "And he spake as a dragon." The language of the dragon was, that all should be conformed to him in religion.

So said the Reformers, Luther and Calvin; they could give no toleration to the poor Anabaptists, nor to any that differed from them. The same language has in times past, been held, by all the Reformed churches where they have had power to exercise this dragon-like disposition. We see the Lutheran historian, Mosheim, whilst he in one case, vol. 4, pgs. 442 & 443, more than half acknowledges the Anabaptists to be the descendants of the Waldenses, yet he gives currency to almost every base calumny against them, and what is wanting in him is fully supplied by his Calvinistic translator, Maclain, in his notes. Mosheim represents these Anabaptists as suffering death in its worst forms in all the countries of Europe, and preferring it to a retraction of what he calls their errors. And this suffering was under penal laws in the enacting of which, the Lutheran state of Saxony, took the lead, and was followed by other states and among the rest, the Calvinistic magistrates of Switzerland, and the Hollanders. See notes to pg. 419, vol. 4. Again he tells us, pg. 498, "There were certain sects and doctors against whom the zeal, vigilance and severity of Catholics, Lutherans and Calvinists, were united, and in opposing whose settlement and progress, these three communions, forgetting their dissensions, joined their most vigorous counsels and endeavors. The objects of their common aversion were the Anabaptists and those who denied the Divinity of Christ, and a Trinity of persons in the Godhead." This I think was speaking like the dragon; but witness further, the putting to death of Servetas by Calvin, and the persecution of the Dissenters by the Church of England, and of the Baptists and Quakers by the Congregationalists in New England.

"And he exerciseth all the power of the first Beast before him." 1st. In requiring the temporal authorities to compel by law the observance of their religious forms. 2nd. In raising the ministry, above the churches, and transferring to them principally the government of the churches. 3rd. In requiring the ministry to be supported by taxes levied upon all classes of people. 4th. In claiming the direction of the consciences and the pastoral care over all persons, from the infant upwards, within the bounds of their parishes. All which has been practiced by the Reformed churches. Hence the Reformers retained the beastly nature of the Catholic church; in that they taught a union of the church and the world, and of the kingdom of Christ with the government of the world.

"And causeth the earth and them which dwell therein, to worship the first Beast whose deadly wound was healed." There is certainly some difficulty with me in deciding as to the precise meaning of the Holy Spirit in this passage. By "the earth and them which dwell therein," we may understand as before, the Catholic Church, and those dwelling in Catholic countries. Previous to the Reformation it appears that in all the countries of Europe there were many persons groaning under the civil and ecclesiastical tyranny with which they were burdened. When the Reformation broke out, many supposed they were now to be relieved. Hence the commotion at Munster which the Paedobaptists talk so much about as being the origin of the Baptists. But when the Reformers and those Governments connected with them, instead of soothing the wounded feelings of these persons who had been goaded on by oppression to excesses, by giving them assurances of the enjoyment of a liberty consistent with the spirit of the gospel, they calumniated them as enemies to all government, and then made use of armed force to put them down; and when afterwards the Reformation settled down in religious establishments without any toleration to dissenters, it seemed to blast the hopes, and dispirit the minds of those, who had been looking for relief; and led all dwelling in Catholic countries, excepting such as had an experimental acquaintance with the Kingdom of Christ, tamely to settle down in submission to Popery. Or by the "earth and them," &c., we may understand, the governments of the world and the subjects thereof. And though the reformed churches are distinct from the Catholic, as the daughters are distinct from their mother; yet they have brought so much from their mother church, which is contrary to the work of God, that none can implicitly submit to what they have taught, without in effect acknowledging the supremacy of the Church of Rome. As for instance, the doctrine concerning the divine right of kings to govern. From whom did they obtain this right? From no other than the pope, who established all the original reigning dynasties of Europe; that is, of all the ancient ten kingdoms. The establishing of religion by laws, and giving governmental preference to specific forms, embracing particular creeds, &c., has the same origin with the preceding. The same may be said of the superiority of the ministry over the churches; and of their being acknowledged as a clerical class; of the ministry being supported by legal provisions; of infant membership; of changing the ordinance of baptism into sprinkling; of implicitly confiding in the instruction of the clergy because of their peculiar learning, and other things which might be named. And all the civilized governments, other than the Catholic and Greek, with the exception of our own, have been influenced to respect these things under one modification or another as of divine origin, whereas they wholly emanated from Popery. And it seems they are determined to give our government no rest, till they shall have inducted it into these principles, by causing it to establish by law, the first day of the week, as the sabbath, or at least, to give a legal preference to those who thus regard the first day; and it is very doubtful whether they stop here. Indeed the causing the earth and them that dwell therein, &c., may imply that all the governments, and all the carnal professors, within the range of this Beast, will submit to this order of things. Yea it may have special reference to our government; for the other governments have only been caused to continue their homage to the Beast.

And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men. I do not understand by this, material fire; but as the fire coming down and consuming the sacrifices of Elijah was a decisive evidence that he was the prophet of the true God; so the accompanying of the preached word, by the power of the Holy Ghost, so as to make the word as the fire and the hammer to break the rock in pieces, is an evidence that the Lord owns the word preached, and is generally considered an evidence that he owns the preacher. But this is not a fire which the Lord sends down; it is a fire which the Beast maketh come down. Hence it must refer to those great revivals which the preachers of some of the reformed churches are so famous for getting up and carrying on by human exertion, and which like the fire in the case of Elijah, even burn up the stones and the dust, and lick up the water, or seem so to do. And these revivals are in the sight of men; they are public things. They not only are frequently appealed to as evidences of God's peculiar favor to that church, to this and that doctrine, and are trumpeted abroad; but they are viewed in this light by the multitude. Hence it is said in the next verse, And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of those miracles (or wonders) which he had power to do in the sight of the Beast.

We thus come to the direction which this Beast gives, to make an Image, &c., the examination of which I shall again have to defer to another letter.

I remain your friend and brother, SAMUEL TROTT.

IOB - LETTER V

Welsh Tract, Cooch's Bridge, New Castle County, Delaware, June 24th 1831.

Brother Beebe: - I again proceed in the prosecution of my object. That which next comes under consideration, is the direction which the two horned Beast gives to them that dwell on the earth, saying unto them that they should make an image to the Beast which had a wound by a sword and did live.

We will notice first, the persons to whom the direction was given, namely; Them that dwell on the earth. By the earth here, I think certainly, we cannot understand the Romish church, nor by the persons intended, the members of that church, or the inhabitants of popish countries; because it is inconsistent to suppose, that the reformed churches should have the influence, implied in this direction, over the Catholics. And the difficulty is not diminished, by supposing with Dr. Gill, that the Beast here speaking designed the Popish powers; for neither the Popes, nor the church of Rome have ever manifested any disposition to divert the obedience or worship of mankind from that establishment to anything else, nor has the church of Rome ever represented itself to be the image of a preceding power, but constantly affirms, that it is the original church, and in it is invested the original, and supreme power established by Christ on earth. Hence the solicitude manifested to confine the obedience of mankind, not excepting the kings of the earth, to popery itself. And herein is the inconsistency of the Doctor's exposition of this thing. I therefore understand by the expression them that dwell on the earth, earthly minded professors of the true church, or those dwelling interspersed among the earthly churches. And the same are the persons deceived by the miracles which this Beast had power to do.

I will now state what I understand by the Image of the Beast that had a wound with the sword and did live; and wherein it is already manifested. The first Beast according to the views I have already expressed concerning it, denotes the whole of popery. This Beast is in every instance described as a monster. In Dan. chap. 7, the Beast from whence the little horn, by which Popery was designed, arose, is a nameless thing. So in this 13th chapter of Revelation, this Beast is represented as blending in its composition all that is most terrible in the beastly creation. And popery indeed, embraces in its constitution all that is represented by the Beast of Daniel. We see in it the iron mixed with the miry clay. It pretends to power and authority derived directly from God, and yet depends on human governments, human force, the influence of money, and on intrigue and cruelty to maintain its authority. It pretends to be the church and kingdom of Christ, and yet is composed of earth-born subjects, and is blended with the kingdoms of this world. It pretends to dispense pardons for sin, and to bestow eternal glory, &c., and yet ascribes the whole of acceptance with God to the merit of good works. Lastly, it pretends to be engaged in promoting the salvation of men and yet is seen drunken with the blood of saints and martyrs. This is a living Beast; its union with the governments of this world gives vitality, action and power unto it. An image of this Beast, must be a form, made to resemble it, in its general appearance, but without vitality.

Again, the description particularly given of this Beast, as having had a wound with a sword, &c., necessarily implies that the making of this image, is an event subsequent to the wounding and healing of the Beast; consequently subsequent to the rise of Bonaparte.

By noticing the manner in which the Beast grew into existence, we may judge of the progress of the Image towards a perfect formation. I speak of the Beast's growing into existence. For though the Beast was seen rising out of the sea, or what was intended by that, out of the inundations of the barbarians into the Empire, yet he then arose a Beast ready grown, and the rising was the coming into power. He must therefore have been previously growing into existence. This growth took place within the visible church of Christ; and there we are to look for the formation of the Image.

The first limb of the Beast may be supposed to have owed its origin to that anxiety which the christians would naturally feel to have their children distinguished from the heathen, and to have them become christians and enjoy the privileges of the church. Growing impatient of waiting for the Spirit of God to convert their children, they contrived the plan of doing the work themselves. Hence the catechumen classes in which children and such adults as were willing to submit to the discipline, were instructed in what they considered the first principles of the christian religion. These after being thus taught, and having manifested an orderly deportment, were admitted to baptism and the privileges of the church. The churches thus came to be supplied with members, who gave no other evidence of their being subjects of grace, than their being able to repeat the creed, and their professions of renouncing their sins, particularly the devil and his pompous allurements. See Mosh. Eccl. Hist. Vol. I., pg. 112.

And wherein are Sunday Schools, and Bible Classes different in principle and effect from the institution of catechumens? I mean not those Sunday Schools designed for teaching such poor children to read, as cannot enjoy the privilege of attending school on other days of the week; but those schools, the professed object of which are to teach the children religion; or in other words, to do that which the Scriptures teach me, the Holy Ghost alone can do.

Another limb of the Beast, formed about the same time with the other, seems to have grown out of an anxiety to draw into the churches, the philosophers and great men of the age; and whereas they had not the power of humbling the hearts of these persons, to submit to the self abasing religion of Jesus, their only resource other than to submit to the will of God in this thing, was to conform the religion to the proud notions of men. Hence the blending of the Grecian philosophy with the doctrines of the cross; the substituting for the simplicity of gospel worship, a pompous show made up of Jewish and heathen ceremonies, and the establishing of schools at Alexandria and other places, for teaching those intended for the ministry to preach a philosophized gospel, and to preach it scientifically. And are not the systems of theology and the theological schools of this day the same in design and effect with the establishment at Alexandria? They tell us that society has become more generally polished than formerly; and that if we should see the learned and polite part of society brought into our churches, we must have a polished gospel, and a learned ministry. Hence the simple doctrines of the cross, and those plain preachers who with Paul are determined not to know anything among the people save Jesus Christ and him crucified, must retire to the back woods and give place to the fashionable divinity, and to those clerical gentlemen who are flocking from the seminaries; and these in many instances are but an excuse for men of science. They have to be sure, learned enough of the Scriptures to know how like Peter, to fish for money, and they have learned to feel their own importance, to sway the churches, and to preach so as not to offend the world.

A third limb of the Beast was a natural growth from the preceding. For those philosophized preachers, not only considered themselves entitled, on account of their scholastic acquirements, to the care of such churches as were more eminent for being planted in the cities, &c., and accordingly wound themselves into such stations; but they also considered themselves entitled to a pre-eminence over the neighboring preachers. Hence we find, shortly after the establishing of those schools, certain preachers claiming, in consideration of their being the pastors of those churches, which were more eminent as mother churches, an oversight over the neighboring churches, and the right of appointing their preachers; sometimes reserving to themselves the right of administering baptism; or what was more common, delegating to the preachers the privilege of baptizing, but reserving to themselves the right of confirming the baptized. The one class of preachers came soon to be called distinctively bishops, the other presbyters. What less dignity and superiority than this is claimed by the boards of Managers of our modern Mission Societies, who assume the oversight over the destitute churches, and parts of the country, and the right of appointing to these churches their preachers, and to the preachers their fields of labors, &c.

A fourth limb is found in those rich endowments which were bestowed on the churches, and those distinguished honors conferred on the Bishops. A corresponding part of the Image we find in those vast funds which are accumulated for Mission and other professedly religious purposes, and committed to the disposal of the several boards. And the having the exclusive control of these funds, will be found to give to these bodies an influence greater than did those honors conferred on the Bishops, give to them.

There were other things which undoubtedly entered into the composition of the Beast, such as the multiplication of ceremonies, the formation of religious societies other than gospel churches, as the different orders of monks, &c., the custom of persons aiming at superior holiness, and becoming recluses and submitting to great self mortification; veneration paid to relics, and the like unscriptural practices; and even correspondences to some of these, if I mistake not, are already showing themselves. What less than an idolatrous veneration for relics is that which ascribes to those little tracts, circulated with so much zeal, an efficacy quite equal, or indeed superior to the Scriptures, in leading persons to believe in Christ, and which are mostly represented as the experiences of persons dead, or extracts from dead authors? In truth, what are all those expositions and those systems of divinity which are substituted by our modern Theologians for the Bible, but as rotten bones compared with the Scriptures of Eternal Truth? But that which gave vitality and power to the Beast, was the establishing of penal laws, the observance of the christian religion in its then prevailing doctrines, ceremonies &c., making it the religion of the Empire, and the Emperor the Head of the church, which headship was ultimately transferred to the Bishop of Rome. The image of course has not a correspondence in this particular, for an image has no inherent vital principle; to this image however life is to be given, as will be noticed.

Yours, &c., S. TROTT.

IOB - LETTER VI

Brother Beebe: - I will now call your attention to the circumstance of the giving of life to the Image of the Beast.

It is said, He had power to give life unto the Image of the Beast, that the Image of the Beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the Image of the Beast should be killed. Hence it is manifest, this second Beast will have power to give life to this Image. How this Beast, or the reformed churches, will obtain this power is principally conjecture; because the event is yet to be accomplished. In saying this, I would be understood as referring more particularly to the power to kill. The Image already has received power to speak, and we have heard him uttering from the Press, and by his Legates, in Associations and elsewhere, language like this, namely; that these religious schemes must triumph, and that all opposition must be put down; yea, that all who will not unite in supporting them must fall; which is speaking as much like the dragon as an image is like its original. From the source of this power we may form some conception whence the killing power will be derived. Indeed I should judge from the connection of this passage, that this giving life to the Image does not imply that the image will be made a living Beast, that is a national religious establishment. I presume that it means something like a general control, which these religious societies combined, will obtain over the public, and probably over our national government, through the influence of the reformed churches, and by which they will be enabled to put down every person, who does not favor their plans. The object of the Reformed church, will not be so much to exalt these institutions as existing among the Baptists, as to obtain through them, as existing among themselves, an influence and power which will satisfy them, in place of being established by law. And the Baptist schemes being like their own, will share with theirs in the honor and power obtained. The Baptists indeed, in several instances are connected in the same union with the Paedobaptists, and bring but one in connection with several, they are but exerting themselves to promote the schemes of the Paedobaptists.

But I think we shall know with more certainty what is intended by the giving life to the Image of the Beast, that it shall cause as many as will not worship the Image, &c., to be killed, after that the Reformed churches shall have established their control over our national government in carrying their point relative to Sunday Mails, and in some other arrangements, which they will propose to Congress when they shall have triumphed in this. These points they will carry not so much by their general fasts as by making the members of Congress, and others, feel that in order to secure their popularity, and their election to office, they must humor these things. I will pass on to notice the several circumstances mentioned in the three concluding verses of the chapter. Rev. 13.

Before proceeding to give my views on the several circumstances mentioned in these verses, I will remark, that I necessarily differ from all others, so far as I am acquainted, who have attempted an explanation of them. This difference arises from the circumstance of others understanding the Beast herein mentioned to be the seven horned Beast, whereas I understand it to be the two horned Beast. I think myself justified in thus departing from the beaten track, by the connection of the subject. In the expression the mark or the name of the Beast, what other mark of the Beast can we suppose is intended than the mark which he caused all, both small and great &c., to receive? But the he of ver. 16, referred to the two horned Beast, therefore this is the mark of that Beast, or that which he imposeth upon all.

In giving my views of these verses, I will notice first the mark which the two horned Beast caused "all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond to receive in their right hand or in their forehead." I understand this to have an allusion to the custom of persons marking their things, and in some cases, their servants, to designate them as theirs. So this Beast extending his claims to all, or at least his desires to bring all under his influence, causeth a mark to be set upon them, by which he may claim them as subjected to his control. Some he causeth to be marked in the right hand, and some in the forehead.

As this marking is connected with the giving of life to the Image of the Beast, it cannot refer to infant sprinkling, for that has been in practice ever since this Beast arose. It has indeed been used as a mark, hence we find those who practice, uniformly claiming the right of a control over those they have sprinkled. But the component parts of this Beast now want a more powerful claim upon all, both small and great, they are therefore engaged in fixing a more prominent mark upon them. The causing all to receive a mark, seems remarkably to point out the great exertions which are making at this time to bring all classes and all persons into a profession of religion, and consequently under the influence of the clergy. This may be considered the mark in the forehead. The great success which has attended the several plans recently brought into practice for converting sinners, or rather for bringing them into the churches, but especially the Four day meeting plan, now in vogue, affords a striking comment upon the text now under consideration, as well as upon the circumstance of this Beast's bringing fire down from heaven in the sight of men. Indeed they speak of the success attending these Four-day meetings as being a repetition of the events of the day of Pentecost; that as the Holy Ghost then descended, so he now descends in answer to their prayers. But they either lose sight of, or do not understand the difference between the Holy Ghost being sent down by Christ upon his disciples, in fulfillment of his promises to them, and in confirmation of their faith in his being seated at the right hand of the Father, as the intercessor of his people, having all power in heaven, and in earth, and the coming down of what they call the spirit, in obedience to their prayers; or else their arrogance is unbounded. For what is this comparison which they make of their meetings with the day of Pentecost, short of a comparison between the testimony given the disciples, of the prevalency of Christ's intercession, and that which they claim as a testimony of the prevalency of their prayers.

The mark in the right hand being less conspicuous, may refer to that influence which is established over those who are induced to unite with the reformed churches in their great American or in corresponding Institutions. This marking is extended to many Baptists and to many who have joined no church, and we see too many instances of obsequiousness not to discover the power of the influence exerted.

However the mark of the Beast may also refer to some mark which should be established by the authority of this Beast, other than the gospel standard, as a criterion of religion.

Such a mark has been established as was published several years since in periodicals, and from the pulpits. It is this; a support extended to what are called, the benevolent institutions of the day as the proper mark by which to judge of a person's true piety.

We pass to the Name of the Beast. This seems to mean nothing more than the name by which this Beast is designated. It may refer to the individual name by which either branch is known as well as to the collective name reformed. Being a member of a reformed church, the individual is termed a reformer in distinction from a papist. And the collective name as well as the name of the particular church passes from the church member to his children while they continued attached to the congregation. Probably it is to these members of the congregation that this has particular reference in distinction from those who have the mark.

I will now offer some observations upon the Number of the Beast, or as it is called in verse 17, the number of his name.

It is said to be the number of a man, and his number is 666. By its being termed the number of a man, the most natural inference would be that it is a specific number used by man. Do you ask, how is the number 666 used as a specific number? I answer, in decimal arithmetic it is used frequently as the decimal of the fraction two thirds – 2/3.

Let us then according to the wisdom which may be given us, count this number. First, we will count the figures of which it is composed. In doing this, we find the first, the central and the last alike. In applying this counting to the reformed churches, we shall find, if I mistake not, a striking correspondence. What was the beginning of the reformed churches? They themselves tell us, that it was corruption; for from the corruptions of the church of Rome, they profess to have reformed. What is their intermediate state, but as marked by many corruptions, which they brought from their mother church? And what can their end be, other than corruption, judging from their almost universal, and woeful departure from their originally professed doctrines, and their former strictness in receiving members? Secondly, let us count the number decimally; in doing this, we find it but an imperfect expression of the fraction 2/3. We may go on with the operation of reducing the fraction to its equivalent decimal; till we multiply the decimal expression ad infinitum, and still it remains imperfect. The application of this to the reformed churches is easy. Their coming out from the church of Rome was with the professed design of expressing in their constitutions the true visible Church of Christ. But this so long as they remain upon their original foundation is impossible. For the church of Christ is a kingdom not of this world, but they are founded upon principles conformable to the Abrahamic Covenant. Consequently, their natural posterity, as such, are brought in to participate with them in the privileges and blessings of their covenant. Hence they are, in part, at least, kingdoms of this world, propagated by natural generation. They may reform as often as they please, yet so long as they retain a standing on their old foundation, they remain imperfect, viewed as expressions of the kingdom of Christ. They may have correct confessions of faith, as some of them have had; they may have many heaven-born christians among them, as no doubt has been the case; they may have sound gospel preachers, as some of those churches frequently have had; they may immerse candidates upon a profession of faith, as they have occasionally done, still while they bring in their natural offspring, as such, they remain in part worldly, and therefore cannot be a kingdom not of this world. Thirdly; we will now count this number, by computing its assumed value. This as has already been noticed, is two thirds. By turning to Zech. 13:8 & 9, we read, "And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die, but the third shall be left therein; and I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them, as silver is refined, &c." Compare this with Rev. 14:9-12. I leave the application of this to be made in the accomplishment of these two prophecies.

Hence according to the view thus taken of this part of the prophecy concerning the two horned Beast, and the Image, it appears that he is preparing the way for issuing his decree, that no man may buy or sell; that is, figuratively, no man may preach or enjoy the privileges of public worship, except those who are brought under the influence of the clergy, and marked either in the hand or forehead; or such as belong to some one of the reformed churches, or congregations, and thus have the name of the Beast, or such as have the number of his name; that is, those who have in some way, conformed to those corruptions, or those plans, by which the church and world are blended, and the visibility of the church of Christ, as a kingdom not of this world is lost. This event when it takes place will evidently bring out the worshippers of the Image, and thus leave the adherents to truth to be put down and the witnesses to be slain.

I remain yours with christian affection, S. TROTT.

IOB - LETTER VII

Brother Beebe: - On reviewing what I have written relative to the formation of the Image of the Beast, I conclude you are ready to enquire whether the Image is composed of the popular institutions as they exist generally among all denominations; or only as they exist among the Baptists. If we take the first Beast as a pattern in this case, we find that he grew out of heathenish ceremonies and sentiments as they were adopted by the professed church of Christ; not as they were practiced by the Dragon. Of course, we must conclude that the Image is primarily composed of these modern worldly schemes as they are pursued by those who professedly belong to the visible church of Christ. It is true that as in the former case the Dragon or the Beast from the "bottomless pit," became so completely blended with the seven horned beast, as that it was said of it, "The beast that was and is not, and yet is;" so there probably will be a general blending of the two horned beast with the Image. The direction which I have already noticed as given by the two horned beast, corresponds with the idea above advanced; for it is not said that this Beast, which I have supposed represented the Reformed churches, made the Image, but that he said to "them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image," &c. Rev. 13:14. You will recollect, as I formerly stated, that they who were directed to make the Image, were they who were deceived by the miracles of the two horned beast; namely, "they that dwell on the earth," by which I understand, principally, worldly minded or carnal professors and preachers of the Baptist churches. The reformed churches hold forth this language chiefly by example, although they are not wanting in other exertions to induce the Baptists to rear up the Image. We will notice the influence of this example.

In the first place; These dwellers on the earth, see the multitude adhering to the Reformed Churches, in consequence of having been sprinkled in infancy, and thus brought within the pales of their churches, and under the pastoral watch of their ministers; and they are anxious to gain a similar influence over the multitude. They have therefore resorted to Sunday Schools as a substitute for infant membership, hoping by these to attach the rising generation to their congregations and even bring them into their churches. In this the Reformed churches continue to animate their zeal by pursuing the same course. Secondly; These earthly minded professors seeing the learned, the polite and wealthy part of society joining the Reformed churches, feel solicitous to have their churches filled with such respectable professors, instead of those of the lower circles in society from whom the Lord has mostly sifted his people. And as they ascribe this success of the Paedobaptists to their learned and polite ministry and to their philosophized gospel, they are using every exertion to supply the Baptist churches with such preachers and such a gospel. Thirdly; The ministers of the Reformed Churches, appearing not satisfied with that authority which their ecclesiastical courts give them over their churches and congregations, are seeking a more absolute authority in the organization of those several religious Societies which they are forming under various pretences. And what a perfect obsequiousness do the popular Baptists manifest, in following the example set! No person can examine the arrangement of the modern mission societies, without discovering the Methodist Episcopacy (the most absolute of any short of Popery) copied out, with this exception, that in the mission episcopacy, aristocracy is substituted for simple monarchy. Fourthly; The Clergy of the Reformed Churches appear artfully engaged in accomplishing that which they cannot directly obtain under our government; namely, independency of the people for Cooch's Bridge, New Castle County, Delaware, Aug. 11th 1831, their support. And the Baptists where they are not blended with the others in the same scheme, are evidently treading directly upon their heels. Could we come at the correct amount of funds in this country, under the influence, if not under the direct control, of the Clergy, the interest only of which is annually expended; such as the funds belonging to the Mission and Bible and the like societies, and those connected with Theological Schools, Colleges, and Academies; also the additions yearly made by collections, subscriptions, &c., together with the profits arising from the printing establishments of the Bible, Sunday School and Tract Societies; and add to this amount the sums collected upon the spur of some new project, such as supplying every family with a Bible, and the recent fifty or eighty thousand dollar scheme of establishing Sunday Schools in the valley of the Mississippi; I say if the amount of all this was known by us, we should be convinced that the period is not far distant, when these funds will be sufficient to give the body of the clergy an independent, moneyed control over the institutions of learning, over the pulpits, and over the printing establishments, if not over the congressional and legislative halls of our country.

Fifthly; We see the Baptists not only following the example of the Paedobaptists in forming religious societies, other than gospel churches; but also forming them upon the principle of worldly societies; uniting all in the same profession and privileges of membership who will pay the stipulated yearly sum, whether they make any pretensions to being subjects of grace or not. If these mission and other like societies, be religious societies, then to become a member of them, is to be religious according to that standard. A cheap way of making ourselves or others religious, by paying the yearly dollar for us or them. It is no wonder that Dr. Ely should purchase a life membership for his deceased children in the Sunday School Union. This is certainly equal to anything found in the first Beast.

I would offer one remark more upon this point; namely, That it is not only manifest from appearances that the Baptists are in these things copying after the Paedobaptists, but we also hear them repeatedly and in every place, appealing to the practice of their Paedobaptist brethren, as good and sufficient reason, why the Baptists generally should engage in these schemes.

But still, from the fact, that it is the combination of these institutions as existing among all denominations, which is giving them such a complete control over the public mind, some will more readily conclude that the Image is to be found in this combination, than admit that it is confined to that branch of them which exists among the Baptists. To such I would say, First; The reformed churches, are in their original constitution, formed upon the plan of a national establishment, and based upon a union of the church and the world; it is therefore but the acting of that beastly nature which they brought from their mother the church of Rome, to adopt worldly plans, and act upon worldly principles, in extending the bounds and number of their churches. These new projects are perfectly congenial to their constitution. Not so with the Baptists, their church was constituted as a kingdom not of this world, as a body chosen out and separated from the world by the influence and power of Divine

Grace. When therefore we find worldly projects, worldly influence, and worldly wisdom, introduced among the Baptists under the pretence of extending and supporting that church, we see at once that they are heterogeneous from its constitution, and that they can be nothing less than an Image of the beastly nature of the worldly churches.

Secondly; Although I have admitted that it is the corroboration of these institutions as existing among all denominations which gives them their general influence, yet I very much doubt whether this combination, if the Baptists were clear of these schemes, could with all its power ever produce the slaying of the witnesses in this country. And I think it will ultimately be found that it is the power given to these worldly institutions as existing among the Baptists alone which will accomplish the slaying of the witnesses and the scattering of the Holy People.

In a former letter you request some explanation respecting the kingdom of the Ostrogoths, which I mentioned as the sixth head of the Beast. I would say that during the fifth and sixth centuries the Roman Empire, especially the Western Empire, or that of which Rome was the capital, was repeatedly overrun by hordes of hardy barbarians, who uniting under some bold and enterprising leader would come down like a mighty torrent upon Italy and the other ferthe parts of Europe. These barbarians came from the northern parts of Europe and Asia, and are distinguished by different names, as Huns, Vandals, Goths, Ostrogoths, &c. It was Odoacer, a chief of the Ostrogoths who overturned the Western Empire and established himself as king of Italy, in the year A.D. 493. This kingdom lasted till 552 when it was again overturned by the arms of the Eastern Emperor, the seat of whose Empire was Constantinople. Although the Lombards, another barbarous nation, soon again overrun Italy and established a kingdom there, yet they did not get possession of Rome, nor of the adjoining province of Ravenna. These remained subject to the Emperors of the East, and were governed by a provincial officer called an Exarch. The kingdom of the Ostrogoths I consider the sixth distinct form of government established over Rome; consequently the sixth head of the Beast. And the provincial government of Exarch, under the emperors of the East, I consider the seventh form of government, and the seventh head. The preceding five forms of government, or heads over Rome as I reckon them; were 1st, Kings; 2nd, Consul; 3rd, Decemvirs; 4th, Dictators; 5th, Emperors. Tribunes which some reckon a distinct form of government, were only distinct officers connected with the Consular form. Neither was the Triumvirate, which has also been counted as a distinct form of government, ever established. And the reason why these were ever counted was that expositors have thought they must make up the seven up to the period that John wrote.

I now leave this subject with you. So far as I have given a correct view of it, may it prove profitable to you. So far as my views may be wrong, may the Lord enable you to discern the error and reject it.

I remain yours in gospel bonds, S. TROTT.

FINIS.

On the Sonship of Christ. (Concluded)

Brother Beebe: - Having in the preceding Number shown satisfactorily as I trust, from the testimony of the scriptures concerning Christ, that His sonship as the Son of God does not consist in His essential existence as God; because in that He is selfexistent and independent, equally with the Father; nor in His assumption of humanity, for in that, He was made under the law, and took the form of a servant, (Gal.4:4; Phil. 2:7;) and therefore, surely He has a higher sonship than this; it remains to be shown in what other character He is revealed, in which His sonship as the Son of God may consist. He is certainly revealed as the Head of His church and people, and as so existing before the foundation of the world. He was set up from everlasting, and brought forth when there were no depths, &c. Pv.8:23-27. As God, He could not be set up, as man, He was not brought forth until the fullness of time. "He who was to be Ruler in Israel, had His goings forth from of old, from everlasting." Mi.5:2. Christ as the Head and His church as His body must ever have existed together; for neither can the head exist without the body, nor the body without the head. "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet I have no need of you," I Cor.12:21; compared with vs.12. His people as His posterity existed in Him their Head "before the foundation of the world;" for they were then chosen in Him, and "predestinated by Him to the adoption of children." Eph.1:4,5. If it was as they were predestinated to the adoption, they were chosen in Him, He must as their Head have been, a son also. Thus is it made manifest how Adam was made in the image of God, that is, in the image of the Son, who is God, and by "whom all things were made," and how he was the "figure of Him that was to come;" that is in that Adam was made male and female, as well as made with his posterity in him. See Gen.1:27; Rom. 5:14. The Apostle contrasts the two Heads of their respective posterity's in this way, "The first man is of the earth, earthly: the second man is the Lord from heaven." I Cor.15:47. If the first man in being made of the earth was made a servant, then as contrasted with him, He who was the Lord from heaven, was not a servant, but a Son - and so is the contrast between Moses and Him. Heb.3:5,6. Herein, then, as the Head of His church, and of His seed, and as contrasted with Adam as the earthly head, who was made a servant, do I understand the sonship of Christ as the Son of God to consist. I am confirmed in this by the testimony of the following texts which I will notice. 1st: In immediate connection with the text just quoted (I Cor. 15:47) we read: "As is the earthy such are they also that are earthy, and as is the heavenly such are they also that are heavenly." Now we do know that the posterity of Adam are born, servants under the law, and that when the posterity of Christ are born, that is when any are born again, they are no more servants, but sons, sons of God. See Gal.4:7; John 1:12,13 & Rom.8:14. If then, in the former class; their being born servants, was in likeness to their head the earthly, then, in the other class their being born sons of God, must be in likeness of their Head, the heavenly. If so, I ask, is not the conclusion irresistible that He as the heavenly Head is the Son of God?

The testimony of Rom.8:29 is "for whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the first-born among many brethren." It is then in the image of the Son of God, that His people are born sons; but they bear of course the image of their head; it must be as their Head then, that He is the Son of God. But further, if He is the "first-born among many brethren," and He of course was born a Son, then He and they must have been born of the same seed, the same parentage, and be sons together. And how could this be, but as they were begotten and brought forth? And therefore He was the only begotten and first-born of the Father, with a seed, a posterity in Him. In accordance with this idea of a common parentage, He says to Mary: "But go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God and your God." John 20:17. Again, wherein His people are spoken of as "many sons to be brought to glory," it is said: "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying," &c. Immediately after it is added: "Behold I and the children which God hath given me," &c. Heb.2:10-13. Hence Christ recognizes these many sons both as His brethren and as His children. In this is fully carried out the parallel, between Christ as a Son and Head and His seed, as sons with Him, and Adam and his posterity, with him. The posterity of Adam are all the creatures of God, but God finished the work of creation in six days (Gen. 2:1-3,) hence the human family are all but that one creation which God made when He "formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," &c. Gen.2:7. As Adam and his posterity were thus all of one lump, of one foundation, so Christ and His people are here all represented as being of one, are of one begetting, one brotherhood, all brought forth in Him, in that life which was in Him, the Word, and which sanctifies them, sets them apart, or manifests them as the children of God. As Adam and his posterity are alike the creatures of God, so Christ is not ashamed to call His people Brethren. Again as the human family are the children of Adam, being born of that life of which he was the head, that is in their distinct manifestation; so the people of God, in their being manifested as such, are the children of Christ, (not mediately, but directly, He being distinguished from Adam in this, that He is the Everlasting Father,) in that they are born of that life which was in Him, the Word, are made partakers of His spirit. John 1:4, Rom. 8:9 & Gal.4:6. And indeed Christ is their life. Col.3:3,4. Is it not then manifest that as Adam in being created a human being, was created the head of the human family; so Christ in being the only begotten of the Father, was begotten as the Head of the sons of God? I might pursue this subject and show that throughout the New Testament, His people, in that life which He is to them, are connected with His sonship as the Son of God. Thus; Does their heirship rest on their being the children of God? They are as such "joint heirs with Him." Is He spoken of in His superior glory as the Son of God? He has "His fellows," and is the Head of His body the church, though Himself in "all things having the preeminence." See Rom.8:17; Heb.1:9 & Col.1:18. But proof sufficient has been brought to establish the point, and here I might close, were it not for the objections against this position arising, from other considerations than want of proof to the point. These it seems proper to notice. 1st: There seems to be among many, very vague and indeterminate ideas as to what constitutes the bond of union between Christ and His people, and consequently wherein His headship consists; some would seem to represent it as merely nominal. From this source therefore objections will arise to the idea I have given of the sonship of Christ. This subject must on this account receive some attention. Whilst regenerating, or quickening is in the scripture ascribed, to each, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and believers are called children and sons of God, I think all consistent Old School Baptists, and I mean by such, those who have searched the scriptures in dependence on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, in order to derive their ideas concerning all parts of religion from thence, instead of taking them second handed from Doctor Gill or any other author; I say such will readily admit that Christ Jesus, the Son distinctively, is revealed as standing in a peculiar relation to His people, such as is not affirmed of the Father and the Holy Ghost. Not only in that they are said to be His as the gift of the Father; redeemed by Him, &c., but they are collectively, that is as His church, declared to be His bride, His body, and even the "fullness of Him that filleth all in all." Eph.1:23.

Here the oneness of Christ and His church as she is distinctively manifested, is far more full than that of the type, Adam and Eve. Eve was a rib taken from Adam's side, but the church is His Body itself, the fullness of Him, is Himself, is the Abraham's seed which He is. See Gal.3:16-29. He must therefore be the living and abiding Head of His church. Again, His people are spoken of as His posterity, He calls them His children as has been noticed. Heb.2:13; Isa.8:18. They are called His seed. Ps.22:30, Isa.53:10; Ps.89:29-36. And they are declared to be members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones. Eph.5:30. And He is their life and therefore the Head or fountain of it. Col.3:4. On the other hand the testimony of scripture is full to the point that the believer has an existence distinct from that which he derived from Adam. He is said to be born again, in a birth as distinct from his natural one, as spirit is distinct from flesh. John 3:3-6. To be quickened in a sense in which he was before dead. John 5:25; Eph.2:1-5. To be a new creature. II Cor.5:17. And to have been created, not in Adam, in this sense, but in Christ Jesus. Eph.2:10. Now that, of which all these affirmations are true, must be a living principle, real existence. It is declared to be of incorruptible seed, and to be everlasting life. I Pet. 1:23; John 3:36. The union therefore of Christ and His people must be a real living union, and He a real head of this union. Of the existence of this new principle the

we know that the wind bloweth. John 3:8.

Now the point of enquiry is, what is this new life, or existence? It is not the essential nature of God, every believer knows. For as he discovers its existence in Him, he finds it far from possessing the essential attributes of the Godhead, such as self-existence, independence, omnipotency. It is spirituality, holiness, and love, in these things the new man is after the image of Him who created Him. Col.3:10. But some have inferred from what Peter says, that the believer has, in his new birth implanted in him, the divine nature. But what is Peter's statement? "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature." To whom were these promises given? To the believer, - that by these, by these promises, he might be a partaker of the divine nature, not that he certainly was a partaker of it in regeneration. And truly God has so given Himself to His people in His promises, that when by faith they can take hold of those promises, they apprehend God in all His attributes, as their help, their wisdom, power, defense, &c. But certainly brethren, we are not gods. The believer is, in his experience much farther from it; than before he believed.

Others suppose that Christ's being made flesh was what constituted the union of Him and His people. But this would rather make them the head, for it was in consequence of their being partakers of flesh and blood, that He took part of the same. But they were His children before He partook of this nature. Heb.2:13,14. It would make the woman the head, for in His being made flesh, He was manifested as the Seed of the woman. Besides the believer knows that his human nature was derived, not from Him who was the Lord from heaven, but from him who was made of the earth, earthy. He has all the evidence he wants of this, from the earthiness and depravity of his nature.

Some may suppose the preexistent soul of Christ to be that which constitutes the bond of union of Him and His people. If so, why does it not constitute Him the head of all who have souls? But brethren, had you not souls before you were regenerated? And did they not betray their origin as being of the earthy Adam, by their being depraved? Our western brethren, however if I understand them, do not make the preexistent soul of Christ, the bond of union, but the repository of that which constitutes the union. But the scriptures I think reveal a far safer repository for the believer's life than any created being could be, even God Himself, as I shall notice. It must then be that the new man of the believer, that by which he is manifested as the seed of Christ, is distinct both from the Godhead and from humanity. It is not earthly like humanity, but spiritual and heavenly. It is not independent in its powers of action like the Godhead. To will is present with the believer, but how to perform that which is good he finds not. But some one will hastily say, why, to represent Christ as the Head of such a distinct life, would be to represent Him as possessing a third nature distinct from His Godhead and humanity. And does this alarm you, my brother? Though you may not have thought of it in this form, yet have you not in substance believed it. Do you feel that you are as young gods? Or do you believe with the Arminian that regeneration is nothing but giving a new bias to the old nature? If so, it will be of no use to argue this point with you. But if you believe a new principle, a living principle of holiness, righteousness and love is imparted in regeneration, and that this was derived from Christ as the Head, do you not believe that it had a previous existence in Him, and that you therefore existed in Him, in this life, before the foundation of the world? Or what was the existence you then had in Him? But to the law and to the testimony on the point. Let us come to the 1st of John. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made." This Word then who, whilst He is declared as distinct from one who is also God, is declared to be God, and the Maker of all things, must have been essentially life itself. When therefore it is affirmed in vs.4 that, "In Him was life," it must refer to a life in Him, distinct from His essential existence.

"And the life was the light of men." Can there be any mistake then in understanding this life as being the life which is communicated in regeneration, and which delivers from the power of darkness? But this was in Him distinct from His essential existence as God. It is also distinct from His humanity; for it is afterwards, vs.14, affirmed of Him that He was made flesh. Need I bring any further proof to the point? We have it in vs.14, compared with vs.16, and with II Tim. 1:9, as well as in other texts. That which was His glory, as the only begotten of the Father, was His fullness of grace and truth, of which all believers have received. And truly the life they derive from Christ is grace and truth compared with their life in Adam.

One point more. Does this view of the Sonship of Christ derogate from His divine and essential glory as God? Not in the least. His person is more exalted in this view of the subject, for whilst He is the Son of God, He is absolutely Jehovah, equally with the Father. This life which is the begotten of God exists in the Word or Son, as God, - it never has, nor ever will exist separate from the Godhead, either in the Son or in His people. In Him was life. And of His people He says unto His Father: "I in them and thou in me." John 17:23. As the only begotten Son He is said to be in the bosom of the Father. John 1:18. As Christ He is hid in God, for the life of His people are hid with Him in God. Col.3:3.

This life does not exist in His people without God. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." I Cor.3:16. See also I John 4:12-15,16; and John 14:15,16. Although believers are conscious of a principle distinct from nature being in them, from the holy and heavenly desires they have, and from the warfare within, which could not exist were there not two opposite principles within; yet this new principle has no independent powers of action. The believer cannot of himself exercise faith on a single promise, nor bring into exercise a single holy affection to the suppression of those which are unholy. And so we are told, "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do, of His good pleasure." Phil.2:13. Christ says, "without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5. Herein perhaps is where some have confounded the Holy Ghost, which is God, with the spirit of Christ or the spirit of God's Son which the believer has, Rom.8:9; Gal.4:6, because the Holy Ghost dwells with such.

From a review of this whole subject, well may we exclaim with the beloved disciple, "Behold what manner of loves the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," &c. I John 3:1. Brethren what an exalted religion doth the believer stand in to God, as having from everlasting been one with His only begotten and well beloved Son. Beloved as He was, begotten in Him, hid in Him, and living in His life. The union does not stop in heaven, they were sons of Adam, of condemnation and death, He became the Son of man, sunk below them under the curse, and raised them when He arose, and made them sharers of His dominion as the Son of David. "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," are His words. Sharers they are in His justification from the law, in His triumphs over death, over the grave, over the curse, and in His exalted glory. John 17:22, compared with vs.5.

Here then I have given a view of my sentiments on this important subject. Are they supported by scripture and experience, or are they not? Brethren examine candidly before you join in the cry of heretic which has been attempted to be raised against me on account thereof. And may God lead you to a righteous judgment in the case.

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 28, s
– Part 1
Sept.2, 1840 – Part 2
S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.8 (1840)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 223 - 236

SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE OF GOD'S EXISTING AS THE ONE AND THREE - NUMBER 4

That God in ONE appears to manifest from every page of God's revelation, but I shall hear content myself with quoting some of those texts in which he has more positively taught that he is to be acknowledged and worshipped as one and only as one God. The first command in the decalog is in point, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" Exodus 20.3. Thus Moses on another occasion; "here, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." Deuteronomy 6.4. Here God also by the prophet saying, "Is there a God besides me? Yeah, there is no God, I know not any," Isaiah 44.8. Again, "for I am God and there is none else". Isaiah 46.9, he says: "For I am God and there is none else; I am god and there is none like me." When we pass through the New Testament, we find Jesus teaching the same thing as taught by Moses, with his declaration prefixed that it is the first of all the commandments, "and Jesus answered him, the first of all the commandments is, here, O Israel the Lord our God is one Lord." Mark 12.29. Paul's testimony is, 1st Corinthians 8.6: "But to us, there is but one God."

Here in conclusion of my proofs on the point of God's unity, I would remark that although the doctrine of God's existence as three is, as I shall show, fully revealed in the scriptures, there is nothing like the positive declarations which we find on this point, found on the other. Surely asked a master says, the first of all the commandments is this; so it is carried out through, the law, the prophets, and the New Testament. And certainly, it cannot be without special design. What then are we to learn from it but this, that the point of the first importance in the doctrine of God is his unity? Hence the system that implies directly or indirectly God's existence as three beings or gods, or parts of god, is a greater departure from the scriptural doctrine of God than is that which obscures or denies his essential existence as three in one.

That God exists in a plurality, and that this plurality is limited to three, I will now show from several texts of scripture.

1st. That he has revealed himself in plurality. The first name by which God declared himself (as in Genesis 1.1, "in the beginning God created," as in the original plural, Elohim, But in this, as in most instances, it is connected with a verb singular, though there are exceptions to this, thus showing the display orality exists in unity. In verse 26 of this same chapter, God says, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness;" in verse 27, it is said, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." Thus we have God again presented to view both in plurality and in unity. In Genesis 3.22, "the Lord God said, behold man has become as one of us." In Genesis 11.7, God says: "Go to let us go down and there confound their language." Isaiah says in chapter 6.8, "Also I heard the voice of the Lord God saying whom shall I send and who shall go for us." Unity and plurality again united. In Daniel 4.17, we read, that this matter is the decree of the watchers and the demand by the word of the holy ones. These watchers cannot be angels, for it is not for them to decree concerning the affairs of kings and men. Christ in the figure of wisdom says, "By me Kings reign," Proverbs 8.15. Here Daniel also further in the same verse, "to the intent that the living may know that the most high rules in the Kingdom of men."

2nd. I will now show this plainly to be declared in the scriptures to be three. In Isaiah 4.8, we hear him who is in verses 12 and 13 say, "I am he, I am the first, I am also the last. My hand also laid the foundations of the earth," in verse 16, saying, "Come you near to me, hear you this; I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I; and now the Lord God and his Spirit has sent me." Who can this be that declares all these things of himself, but he whom he declares himself to be, in verse 17, the Lord your Redeemer, the holy one of Israel, the lord your god? And yet this glorious One says, "Now the Lord God and his Spirit has sent me." Here then are the three clearly brought to view acting as distinct pairs and accomplishing the work of redemption. The Lord God, the Father, and his Spirit, the Holy Ghost, as uniting in sending the Redeemer; and the Lord your Redeemer, as being sent, and who in equality with the Father declares, I am the Lord your God, which teaches. Passing on to the New Testament, at the baptism of Jesus, the savior, we have the same Three present it to view as sustaining their respective stations in a great plan of redemption. We see him, who was made of a woman, and made under the law, to redeem, and who therefore was THE LORD THY REDEEMER, being baptized; and the Spirit, whose office it is to testify of Christ (John 15.26) so designating, a visible appearance, Jesus, as the Messiah, that John could unhesitatingly bear witness of him as being the Son of God, (see John 1.33-34.) "And he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and lighting upon him," and also the Father was manifest as approving of the work the Son was engaging in, "and, lo, a voice from heaven saying, this is my beloved it Son in whom I am well pleased." Matthew 3.16-17. Again the Three are declared as equal in authority, and equally objects of the believer's trust, in the instituted form of baptism. Baptizing them in the name, not names, of the Father, etcetera, Matthew 28.19. They are also revealed as being equal objects of worship, and the source of blessing; in the form of blessing, 2nd Corinthians 13.14. Again the three are declared as sustaining their several stations in the plan of salvation, in Ephesians 2.18; In effect, in 2nd Thessalonians 1.13; and fully in First Peter 1.2. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." And in the text which has been so often referred to in this controversy, first John 5.7. Three 3 are declared by distinct names, and as bearing separate testimony in heaven, not that they bear one testimony; But there are three that bear record, it is, therefore, a threefold testimony, though the three are declared to be one. There are many other texts in which each of the three is declared by one or other of his peculiar names, and as sustaining his peculiar relation and performing his peculiar part in the plan of salvation; and there are other texts also in which the three are presented to view at once, each at the same time sustaining a distinct relation as in John 14.26, "but the comforter which is the Holy Ghost whom the father will send in my name, etcetera," says Christ to his disciples. So that the three must be something more than merely three names or three manifestations which he has made of himself. God must be so 3 that he can be distinctly manifested as, Father, Son, and Spirit, in the peculiar relations and stations of each, in the plan of salvation, at the same time. See also, John 15.26, where the order is somewhat reversed.

I now passed a show from the scriptures, that while, as has been shown, god has so revealed himself as three, as that he is manifested as sustaining three distinct relations, at the same time, that on the other hand, he is so revealed to be one, that when spoken of as God, even in reference to the distinct relations he sustained as three, he speaks and is spoken of as absolutely god, as the one lord god, as he whose name alone is Jehovah. I here declare, and who will make me a liar, on this point that God is nowhere spoken of in scriptures in a way to justify expressions like this, God in the first person, God in the second person, or God in the person of the father, God in the person of the son, or that which such expressions imply. Got in the 1st order of revelation and God in the 2nd order of relation etcetera. Expressions calculated to present God to view thus in different grades are evidently the offerings of an overheated zeal to support a system. And as God said to Job, the soul may be said to such zealots: "Who is this that darkens counsel with words without knowledge?" I shall on this head confine myself in proofs to show that the father, son, and Holy Ghost, each in his distinct relation is declared absolutely and equally as God, the one God. Referring to the text before quoted, 1st Corinthians 8.6, Paul says: "But that's to us there is but one God, the father." (See the whole text) but Thomas addressed Christ as his Lord and his God, and no doubt Thomas had then true faith in exercise, John 20.28. And Paul says of Christ: "Who is overall God blessed forever, amen." If Christ is overall God blessed, then he must be the most high God. And therefore the only God.

When we look into the Old Testament, we find many instances in which God is declared by one or another of his names, as, God almighty, Lord, or Jehovah, in which it might be presuming in us to undertake to decide whether it is the father, as the son, or as the Holy Spirit, he is therein declared. It is evidently enough for us in such cases, to know it is God, our God, the God of the scriptures who is revealed as Darren speaking or acting. In other instances by a reference to the clearer light of the New Testament, we may clearly discover, whether as Father, or as Son, or as Holy Ghost, it is God that speaks or is declared. Thus we know from the New Testament that Christ is the Lord that has shown us light, for he came a light unto the world, and this is the true light. We are told, Psalm 118.27, that, "god is the lord with which has shown us light." God then is Christ. And so John bears testimony, John 1.1-4. We know from the New Testament that Christ Jesus is the only savior, "neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved," Acts 4.12. We know also that we have redemption through his blood, (Ephesians 1.7; Colossians 1.14) and therefore that he is the Redeemer of Israel. And the disciples were not deceived when they trusted that Jesus of Nazareth had been he which should have redeemed Israel, Luke 24.19-23. But on turning to Isaiah 47.4, we read: "As for our Redeemer the Lord of hosts (Jehovah Sabbath in the original" is his name, the holy one of Israel" hence the name Jehovah Sabbath, or Lord of hosts is here clearly given to the Redeemer as such. "He whose name is Jehovah is the most high over all the earth." Psalm 83.18. Is not then Christ in his distinct relation as Redeemer, the most high and he whose name alone is Jehovah, and therefore distinctly the one Lord God? As to the name holy one of Israel, it as peculiarly belongs to Christ as the Messiah, as does the name Redeemer, and so I understand it was ever found. All the holiness of national Israel, and up there multiplied rites, was centered in Christ, as he was shadowed forth in them. All the holiness of spiritual Israel is found in him, as made unto them sanctification our holiness, 1st Corinthians 1.30. That the Father also in his distinct relation, as calling Christ, upholding him, giving him for a covenant of the people, is he whose name alone is Jehovah, I will now show from one text. After declaring himself as he that created the heavens, and then saying to him whose office is to be a light to the Gentiles, to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners, I the Lord (Jehovah) have called you. He then goes on to say, "I am the Lord (Jehovah) that is my name, and my glory I will not give to another nor my praise to graven images," Isaiah 42.5-8. Now looking to Isaiah chapter 43, we shall see that he who addresses Israel and says you are mine, I have redeemed you, I have called you, by the name, and repeatedly in the same connection declares himself their savior, their holy one, their king, (see verses 3-15) As confidently and absolutely declares, as did the father in the preceding chapter, that he is the Jehovah. He says in verse 3: "I am the Lord your God," and in verse 11: "I am the Lord and besides me there is no savior." In both of these instances, instead of Lord, it is in the original, Jehovah. And in verse 12, he says to his Israel, "Therefore you are my witnesses said the Lord that I am God." And will not his people with Thomas bear witness, that he is the Lord their God? And can any doubt from these scriptures, as dust compared, that the father and the son while distinct, as manifested in their separate relations in the economy of salvation, are each absolutely the one Jehovah, the one self-existent independent God in all his divine attributes? It will be discovered by those who examine the scriptures, that I have selected but few among the many proofs in point.

As to the holy ghosts being in his distinct relation absolutely God, we have also proof in point. Thus by comparing the second Peter 1.21; with the second Timothy 316; and Acts chapter 5 verse 3 with verse 4, we shall find that he who in one instance in each couple is said to be the Holy Ghost is in the parallel text declared absolutely to be God. Christ informs us, John 6.63, that it is the Spirit that quickens, yet Paul tells the Ephesian brethren, that, "God who is rich in mercy, has quickened us together with Christ." Ephesians 2.4-5. Hence in the Spirit, is God who is rich in mercy. In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established, we are told. Hence the above establishes the fact that the Holy Ghost is God, the one God. I would suggest for the consideration of brethren, whether from the declaration of Peter, "for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of men, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," (second Peter 1.21) we are not authorized to understand, when the prophets speak of God's speaking to them, that the Holy Ghost, in his distinct office, is intended? Thus when Isaiah says, "the Lord spoke to me with a strong hand and instructed me," are we not to understand that the Holy Ghost was he who thus spoke to him with a strong hand, or in him, as he speaks to the saints in these days and instructs them? For I presume God spoke not audibly to the prophets. And whether, among many other texts, we are to understand, in the text Amos 6.8, which is rather a remarkable 1, the Lord, the God of hosts, which said, the Lord God has sworn by himself, is the Holy Ghost in his distinct office.

What, then, is the sum of this scripture testimony, concerning God as being one and three? It is, as I receive it, this:

1st. That the Lord our God is one Lord, one Jehovah, and that besides him we are to have no other as the object of our worship and trust.

2nd. That this one Jehovah, exists as three, and so exists as three, that in all his divine majesty and perfection he as the father remains the invisible God seated on his throne, rolling on the eternal purpose, maintaining the honor of his throne, demanding and accepting satisfaction for his transgressed law. At the same time as the Son, be appointed heir of all things, be made a high priest, offer himself in sacrifice, and having purged away the sins of his people, enter into glory as their intercessor and forerunner. And, also at the same time, the Holy Ghost is that distinct witness, through the apostles and in the hearts of God's children, of the completion and perfection of the work of Christ, and of the acceptance of his offering and intercession for his people, by the father.

And 3rd. That while he is thus three, these three are so absolutely one, that each is the one Jehovah, acting in his distinct relation, in all the fullness of the Godhead; so that whether it is the father, predestinating, and loving; the Son, redeeming, interceding and governing, or the Holy Ghost, quickening, comforting and guiding, whatever part or point of the believer salvation we contemplate, we are constrained to say it is God's act, and God's perfection is in it.

Should I be asked what I mean by God's existence as three, I answer, that my meaning is that he is absolutely eternally, and essentially exists as three, as he exists as God. I feel authorized so to understand it, first; from this consideration, God has manifested himself in the scriptures as I three and I cannot conceive That in making a revelation of himself, he would declare himself as existing as three and one; so I must believe he eternally existed, as essentially three as one. Secondly, I am confirming this, by his declaring himself to be, I AM

THAT I AM, not I am. What I Am what I eternally was not. Exists as one, or how he exists as three, he has not told me. I can no more comprehend how he eternally exists of himself, than I can how he exists as three or as three and one. It is enough for me to know that he so exists, and therefore that every part of salvation is his work, and bears his mark of perfection. But I will add, that I can no more believe that God is in order to exist as three, under the necessity of begetting and breathing himself into existence as such, than I can, that he begat or breathed his essence into being.

Again, should I be asked, are the three, three persons? I answer not in any proper sense and I think using the word in an indefinite and improper sense, tends to confuse and darken counsel. An undefined term can be of no use, it may hurt.

I am authorized to speak of the Father as a person, not only because he is God, but also because as God, the scriptures speak of his person, in Hebrews 1.3, the sun is said to be the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person. But I understand the term person here, not to have reference to the father in his distinct revelation, as such in the godhead, as the attachment to a system has led some to represent it; but to him as the invisible God, it being evidently a parallel passage with Colossians 1.15, where Christ is said to be the image of the invisible God. I am also authorized to speak of the sun as a person because he is God, and also because he stands in personal relation to his church as her husband, head, and king. And in Speaking of him as a person, I am led to contemplate him as having some things peculiar embraced in his person, which do not belong to the Father or Holy Spirit as such. For he is revealed as God and man, and having in him that life which is the light of men, all in one person. In like manner the Holy Ghost is declared to be God and as exercising the attributes of a person as in First Corinthians 12.11, "but all these work that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." That is, I am authorized to speak of each, the father, the Son, and the Spirit, individually as manifested, and as acting, as God and therefore as a person. But I am thereby no more warranted to say that they are three persons, than I am, to say that they are three gods. That I may not however appear to make a greater difference, than what really exists, between what I understand to be the scriptural view of this subject, and the system of men, I will add further, that what many mean by the terms three persons, that the relations and distinctions, which the father, the word, and the Holy Ghost sustain each toward the other, are of a personal nature, I believe to be a scriptural idea, revealed by that use of the personal pronouns distinctly applied to each, and in other scriptural declarations. For this, I contend in opposition to the notion that there are only three offices or manifestations of God. And when persons in using these terms, are careful to explain that they do not use them in the full import of the terms I do not feel so much opposition to their using them, though for reasons before a sign, I do not use them. But when without any reserve or explanation persons say absolutely that there are three persons in the Godhead, or like elder Osbourn or others assumed to prescribe to us that we must conform to them in the use of these terms, or be denounced as heretics, I certainly shall resist it, as being, so far as it goes, the very spirit of popery; the terms not being sanctioned by scripture authority.

I now appeal to my brethren, does not the revelation which infinite wisdom and love has given us of God in the scriptures, possess in and of itself a God-like glory, beauty, simplicity, and adaptation to our cases, which the explanations and sophistry of the schools with their undefined, but consecrated forms of expression only tend to mar and confuse? Such as they're explaining God's existence as three, by their first, second, and third persons, one beginning, another begotten, and the other breathed forth, and the godhead of the sun as begotten thus, that he is very God a very God, begotten not created, begotten unbegotten. Whoever may undertake to study the systems of men on this subject, with the idea of comprehending the being of god within a human system, will find such study producing a very different feeling from a suitable reverence of the greatness of God, they will find it to be learning to their own understandings and producing disappointed feelings, at the incapacity of their reasoning powers to grasp and arrange the subject without confusion, any consequent bitterness of feeling, toward those who discover the weakness of their system and reject it.

On the other hand, when we go as little children, to the scriptures to receive the revelation that God has been pleased to give of himself and to receive it just as he has given it, we are filled with reverence and awe at the greatness, the glorious majesty, and incomprehensibility of him whom the sun has declared; and our humble before him under a sense of how little we know or can know of God. Should reason under these circumstances attempt to approach the subject, she is confounded at once, driven back abashed, and gives place to faith whose province alone is to apprehend the revelation of God. And she as she takes hold of this subject, is still knowing that it is the being of God, she is embracing in her arms, the great I AM THAT I AM. Yet faith apprehends all in the revelation, that we need to know, to inspire us with fear, reverence, and love of god; with unreserved and childlike trust and confidence in him, and with boldness of approach to him, and pleading with him in all our straits. This revelation corresponds with our experience. Our experience taught us nothing of first, second, and third persons in God, of the eternal generation of a begotten breathed forth God; not of the pre-existent soul of Christ. But when our hearts were open to understanding the law, we felt that it was the law of God our creator which we had transgressed that against him and him only we had sinned. When the plan of salvation was revealed to our souls, it appeared all of God; God in the riches of his love, and in his wisdom and power to save, was manifested to us; And with confidence, we trusted in his salvation. In our after-the experience, when a promise has been peculiarly applied to our case or scripture has been opened by the Holy Ghost to our understanding, we have been ready to say with Isaiah, "The Lord spoke to me with a strong hand and instructed me," Isaiah 8.11.

There remains one point more to be shown, that I understand to be the scriptural doctrine concerning the sonship of Christ, that brethren may know the whole amount of error, which it has been insinuated that myself, and perhaps, brother Beebe and others hold.

S. Trott Centerville, Fairfax County Virginia, July 28, 1840

THE WORD WAS MADE FLESH.

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth" (John 1:14).

By the Word that was made flesh, we are to understand one of the Three who bear record in heaven, "The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost" I John 5:7. By comparing this latter text with John 1:1, we see the propriety of the expression, "The Word was with God," as the Word is one of the three who distinctly bear record. We are also taught by thus comparing these texts that the Three are not merely three manifestations of God, nor three parts of God, or three distinct persons, or beings comprising the Godhead; for it is positively said that "The Word was God." Hence it is evident, though we can not comprehend the how, that God exists as Three, and so exists, that the Three are One, and that each of the Three in this peculiar relation is the One God. Hence also that the Word who was made flesh, was God, not in part, but in all the fullness of the Godhead. Thus it is said "God was manifested in the flesh," I Tim. 3:16; and of Christ it is said, "For in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily" Col.2:9. And; "There is none other God but one" I Cor.8:4.

We will now notice the declaration, "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." 1st. The Word was made flesh: Not that there was a transmutation of Spirit into flesh, or of the eternal Godhead into the babe of Bethlehem. We must understand the expression made flesh as explained by other texts; as the one from I Tim. 3:16 -"God was manifested in the flesh," and Phil.2:6-7, "Who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made Himself of no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." Thus the being made flesh was a being manifested in the flesh; a taking upon Him the form of a servant; a having a body prepared Him Heb. 10:5. Again we are taught from Gal. 4:4, "But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law," &c., that this being made flesh was not a mere assuming of a fleshly body, but that the term flesh is here used as in several other places (see Gen.6:3, John 3:6) for the whole of manhood or Adamic nature, in distinction both from angelic nature, and the spirit of the new man. Thus the being made of a woman, was a being made under the law. But the law has dominion over man as a living soul, not as a mere body formed of the dust of the ground. So Christ speaks repeatedly of His soul in a sense in which He could not have intended merely animal life. It may be asked, Why is the strong expression used "The Word was made flesh," if it intended only the assuming of mankind? I answer, we are not to understand that it was merely assumed as an outward form; but that the Word was so made flesh, that the manhood was *personally one*with the Word, with God, and the Man, Christ Jesus, whether viewed as the babe in Bethlehem, as growing in stature, or on the cross, was personally the Word, was God, was the Jehovah. Thus Watts sings:

"Aaron must lay his robes away, His mitre and his vest;
When God Himself comes down to be, The offering and the priest."

The Word was made flesh, that He might accomplish the work of redemption and meet the demands of the law which stood against His church and which His relation to her as her Head and Husband required Him to meet. The law could not have dominion over the Godhead as such, either to demand and receive obedience, nor to inflict its penalty of suffering and death. Hence the word's being made flesh or made of a woman, was that, He might be made under the law. And being thus made it was no other than the Word, the God of Abraham, the Almighty God, who yielded obedience to the law in His own flesh or manhood which He was made, or which was made in personal union with Himself in behalf of His people. In His manhood He bore their sins, was made a curse for them, and thus by His infinitely perfect offering, and obedience, He brought in everlasting righteousness, took the curse out of the way, expiated their sins, and made an end of them, and finished transgression. For though it was only through and in His manhood of which He was born of Mary that He would be in subjection to the law, or endure its penalty. As the Godhead in itself could neither suffer, nor be in subjection as before shown, but the Word in being made flesh, was so God and man in one person, that the Godhead in all His fullness of attributes carried all its powers and excellency, &c., into all that the man Christ Jesus did and suffered, and thus perfect redemption from under the law was accomplished for His people and death was conquered.

2nd. And dwelt among us: This embraces the whole of Christ's humiliation. His birth, His growth in stature, His susceptibility to hunger, thirst, weariness and being grieved and angered; in a word, having all the original appetites and passions of man without being disordered with depravity, being in all things made like unto His brethren; that He might be tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin, and be a merciful and faithful High Priest. It includes also His ministering in common with His brethren as a servant under the law, and sharing with them in all the evils, sorrows, enmity, &c., consequent upon sin, even to the condemnation of the law, though in Himself without sin.

Thus, in all the debasement of His people, He owned them as His brethren, His bride, sharing with them in this debasement, that He might raise them to share with Him in glory. As His oneness with His people was manifested in His sharing with them in the consequences of sin, so their oneness with Him shall be manifested in their sharing with Him, in His being appointed heir of all things and in the glory He had with the Father before the world was. Surely, this is love and condescension immeasurable! Well might Paul desire to know the fellowship of His sufferings, that is, the participation His people have in what He suffered for sins; and the power of His resurrection, in His being declared to be the Son of God with power and their being quickened together with Him, and raised up and made to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

3rd. "And we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father." John may have reference to what he and Peter and James beheld, the transfiguration of Christ; and to which Peter somewhat similarly refers, II Pet.1:16-18. This, however, was but a view given to these disciples beforehand of the glory that should follow His sufferings. Hence I think this text has a further reference to that full manifestation of Christ in His kingdom. Not even the disciples in this sense beheld His glory as of the only begotten of the Father whilst He was a minister of the circumcision and served under the law; for then He was seen in the form of a servant, and in the likeness of man, Phil.2:7. The Jews seem never to have beheld this glory in the Messiah, but have supposed that His kingdom would be set up like David's under the dominion of the law of Moses. None of the conditionalists see this glory of our incarnate Lord.

They view Him as like the servant Moses, and as proposing salvation as it were by the works of the law - not by the works of the law - but as it were by them; that is, by creaturely activity, and mortifications, &c., "For they stumble at that stumbling stone" as did the Jews. See Rom.9:32.

But what is this glory, "The glory as of the only begotten of the Father?" 1st. How the only begotten of the Father? In Psa .2:7 it is said of Him when God had set a King upon His holy hill Zion, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." By turning to Acts 13:33 and Heb. 1:3-5 we see that this relates, not to His being born of Mary, but to His being the "First begotten of the dead" (Rev. 1:5), or to His being "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4). I do not understand by this that Christ did not exist as the Son of God before His resurrection, or before His being made flesh. He existed as such from everlasting; hence it is said of Him who is to be Ruler in Israel (and therefore the same, and spoken of in the same relation as in the 2nd Psalm, the King on the holy hill Zion), that His "goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" Micah 5:2. It is also said in Heb.5:8, "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered," which shows that He was a Son before He learned obedience, &c. Hence also whilst He is said to be "the beginning, the firstborn from the dead," Col. 1:18, He is also said to be "the first born of every creature," and that "He is before all things and by Him all things consist" Col. 1:15-17. Hence I understand the text, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee," as referring to Christ being manifested in His resurrection to His church, as the beloved and only begotten Son of God, in whom God is well pleased, and to His establishing that new dispensation, the spirit of which is the spirit of sonship and which is distinct from the former dispensation, the spirit of which is that of bondage. As Christ was born of Mary, He was born as made under the law, as He had been manifested in types, &c., to the fathers, He had been only manifested through the law; but now in His resurrection He was manifested in His glory as freed from the law, having canceled all its demands against Him as the Husband and Surety of His church, and His church in Him; and therefore no longer does His relation to His people impose on Him the form of a servant, but He is declared the Son of God; and His people as no longer servants, but sons and heirs of God in Him. Now the Sonship of Christ, as declared by the resurrection, was in His relation to His church as the Head, for as such He was raised from the dead, and if this was the glory which He had with the Father before the world was (and that was the glory with which He prayed the Father to glorify Him), then His glory as Son before the world was must have been in His relation to His church and body as its Head. See John 17:5. Whether, therefore, we consider Him in His being begotten from the dead, or in His being the first born of every creature, He is the only begotten of the Father, as Adam was of the human family, the only direct creation of God, though Eve and all his posterity were created in him, and have, therefore, proceeded from him, and formed in their distinct manifestations according to God's arrangement and are, therefore, creatures of God. So Christ was the only begotten of the Father, though in His being begotten, His seed or posterity were begotten in Him, and are, therefore, spoken of as His seed, being, though born of God, directly begotten of the Son as the Everlasting Father Isa.9:6. Hence it was that they were predestinated to be conformed to the image of God's Son, "That He might be the firstborn among many brethren" Rom.8:29. Hence also it is said: "Both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren" Heb.2: 11. All of one lump, of one original production. So also whilst they are the children which God hath given Him, He recognizes them as brethren, saying unto Mary, "Go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God and your God" Heb.2: 13; Isa.8: 18; John 20:17. Thus it is also that whilst He as Son is "appointed heir of all things," His people are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Him Heb. 1:2 & Rom.8:17. This relation of Christ's people to Him alike applies, in their manifestation as sons, to His manifestation as the Son of God by His resurrection; and in their original predestination to the adoption of children, to His goings forth from of old, from everlasting. It appears to me that I tread on safe ground, being sustained by the declarations of Scripture, in going thus far in reference to the sonship of Christ as being in relation with His people, but I do not feel safe in going into the Athanasian view of the sonship of Christ with nothing but human speculation and theological dogmatism to support it.

2nd. What is His glory and how beheld. His glory is that which He had with the Father before the world was. In this He is the brightness of God's glory; not the essential glory of the Godhead, for that shines as bright in the Father as in the Word, but the manifested glory of God, this centers in the manifested sonship of Christ, and outshines all the glory of the heavens. This glory is only seen by faith. Even the quickened souls see nothing of it whilst under the law; they look to God then only through the law, and therefore see nothing but wrath reflected upon them. But when faith is given them to behold God in Christ, then the glory of God's way of salvation, as contrasted with their formed legal notions, and of the peculiar liberty and privilege of sonship, as contrasted with the bondage of the law, bursts with heavenly splendor upon their vision; and though filled with wonder and admiration at the glorious scene before them, reflected through the gospel, yet they have no disposition, like Peter, James and John, to make tabernacles for Moses and Elias with Christ - but rather are they disposed to hear only Him as God's beloved Son in whom they see God well pleased. But, though the children of God may have, from time to time, glimpses of His glory while in this dark vale, yet the fullness of this glory will not be seen by us until that prayer of our Lord has its accomplishment: "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which Thou hast given me" John 17:24. Thus we see that this glory of the Son is not His essential glory as God, for it is given Him of the Father.

3rd. "Full of grace and truth." According to the parenthesis in which the preceding sentence is included, this clause should belong to the former sentence, thus, "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us full of grace and truth." And surely there was nothing but grace in the errand on which He came and dwelt among us. Grace was the moving cause; and redemption from the law, and the establishing of the reign of grace unto salvation was the result. Hence His people receive grace - not for their works - but for grace given them in Him before the foundation of the world. And truth. His sacrifice and blood and righteousness are not shadows like the sacrifices and ceremonies of the law; but real substance, where is no deception in trusting by faith in His blood and righteousness for pardon and acceptance with God, as there is in trusting to human efforts. Or if the meaning is that "we beheld His glory as of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth," how full of grace did the whole gospel plan of salvation, and the whole Scripture testimony concerning it appear when we beheld Christ by faith, as contrasted with what the Scriptures and what we heard appeared to us before, all denouncing the curse against us. Now all is refulgent with love and favor, and all is beheld in beholding Christ. How full of truth did this sure foundation now appear as contrasted with all the foundations we had before been trying to find rest upon? The promises of God as viewed in Him are a revelation wholly of grace, and are in Him yea and Amen. None of those ifs in them which marred the excellency of the promises of the Sinai covenant and changed them in consequence of disobedience to curses. May we be enabled to keep Christ in view as the only begotten of the Father, and beholding His glory be changed into the same image from glory to glory.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, June 25, 1846.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.14 (1846)

Writings of Elder Samuel Trott pages

333 - 339

GOD'S GRACE.

Corresponding Letter: The Corresponding Association of Old School Baptists held with the church at Occoquan, Prince Wm. Co., VA., August 7, 8 & 9th, 1851, to all Old School brethren, churches and associations in correspondence with us, sendeth christian salutation.

Beloved Brethren: - In the providence of God we are once more permitted to meet on the shores of time, and according to a long established custom, we send you this our annual epistle; in which we would offer a few remarks upon the subject of God's Grace.

This is a theme upon which ministers have declaimed, sages mused, and poets sung, in ages that are past, and yet the tale remains untold, and is one of the few subjects upon which repetition is not irksome; its sound is still charming, its effects still transporting to the children of God. Near six thousand years ago in the land of Asia, now wrapped in heathenish night, and under the influence of blind idolatry, appeared a solitary individual making an offering to God, expressive of his faith in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and incurring at once the approbation of his God, and the enmity of his brother, who offered the result of his own labor. Four thousand years subsequent was seen and heard in the same country, a meek, quiet, unassuming individual, bearing indubitable testimony of having been sent of God, yea of being God Himself made manifest in the flesh, proclaiming to the world in a voice so loud that the sound has even reached us of the Nineteenth Century, that there is no Salvation but by grace; yet there are found multitudes who like their ancient brother Cain, think to obtain salvation by their own works. It is true, they talk about grace, about obtaining it, and losing it, obtaining it by good works, and forfeiting it either by bad, or by neglecting to attend to those things which are reputed good. But brethren, we have not so learned Christ, we have not been taught to regard this grace as a commodity which may be obtained at a price, or upon conditions, but as the act of a Sovereign God having mercy upon whom He will have mercy, and hardening whom He will. The qualifying or distinguishing terms: Free, sovereign, &c., are not found in the Scriptures, are deemed wholly superfluous and unnecessary, because all the acts of God, whether of a gracious or other character are sovereign and free. Sovereign, because His will is the standard of His own acts; and all that He does is right, because so it seemed good in His sight. Free, because He requires nothing of His creatures as a return for what He does for them; and because an act ceases to be gracious when it ceases to be free. Salvation is either of works or of grace, for there is no affinity between the two. If it be of works, it is no more of grace; if of grace, it is no more of works, and the question is settled in the scriptures, and in the experience of the children of God, that salvation is of grace. In a state of nature they have no evidences of being interested in the favor of God, but what are common to the rest of mankind. They are fed and clothed, protected and defended in Providence, and so are the rest of mankind, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea. The raven and the lion both seek their meat from God; but they are no less interested in this grace because they are ignorant of it; nor do they partake of it any more freely because they know it. Prior to regeneration, they ascribe all their destiny to their own skillful or unskillful management (as the case may be) of their own affairs; but after regeneration, they say, as Paul said, "By the grace of God I am what I am." And what was he? An apostle, a minister of the gospel, a persecuted and afflicted saint, a prisoner in bonds, enduring the buffeting of Satan, in perils, by land and in perils by sea, in perils among false brethren, and carrying about continually a body of death that made him wretched, &c., and yet the grace of God had made him what he was. Every act of God expressive of kindness or favor is an act of grace; and every act performed upon or in relation to His chosen people is an act of this kind. All the provisions necessary to their eternal salvation were made in Christ, while they were yet in a state of nonentity, yea, from all eternity. For their sakes the foundations of the earth were laid; light and darkness, life and death, evil and good, angels, men and devils, and all things present, past and to come, are so many expressions of God's grace to His people. And they are assured, through the apostle Paul, that no creature shall be able to separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. What though they fell in Adam, and became dead in trespasses and sins? It was in full view of this state that God loved them with a perfect love, and made for them all that rich provision of grace of which we read in the Scriptures. What though when born they go astray from the womb, and run into all the excesses of riot and debauchery to which their depraved natures incline them? God's grace is commended to them in that while they were yet sinners Christ died for them. What though being dead they are unable to know or appreciate His kindness towards them? God's grace has made provision for their being quickened into life; but not through the means of a preached gospel as some suppose, for to admit this would be to deny that any were quickened until about eighteen hundred years ago when the gospel first began to be preached; or that any have been quickened since only where the gospel has been preached. To us such an idea savors more of the language of Ashdod or Arminianism than of being a mere different form of expression, to express the same idea with those who contend that the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. What though being guickened they are left to feel themselves exposed to wrath under the sentence of God's violated law and borne down by a weight of guilt sufficient to sink a world to hell? There is in store for them, as the fruit of God's grace, a righteousness which shall hide all their shame, a sacrifice that shall atone for all their sins, and a victim that their faith shall behold, enduring all the wrath that was due to them. What though in the christian pilgrimage they meet with sore temptations and dire afflictions? My grace, saith God, shall be sufficient for them.

They shall glory in infirmity, and in weakness shall be made strong. Affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground. Job 5:6; but these are sent in loving kindness and tender mercy, for God has promised to be with them in six, and not to forsake them in the seventh.

When His providence seems to frown and bear strong marks of displeasure, yet while He chastens He loves, and works all things together for good to them who are the called according to His purpose. That grace therefore which ordained the plan of salvation for God's elect, shall be their companion and comfort through this vale of tears; their support in death, and it has in store for them in heaven an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and cannot fade away. May we not then joyfully sing,

"O to grace how great a debtor!"

Our meeting, whilst it has been one of peace and pleasant intercourse together, has been one well calculated to lead us to mourn over the desolations of Zion; but few churches united in the correspondence this year, and messengers from but one association, were in attendance with us. Whilst we mourn before God the causes of the thinness of our meeting in reference to brethren, we would not repine; we sometimes feel that if our brethren abroad knew us as we know ourselves they would not care to associate with us. And when we contemplate God's dispensation in this affair, instead of repining we have ground for great thankfulness to Him that He is still granting us the privilege of meeting together in peace, of receiving epistles of love from a few sister churches, which are indeed little flocks, surrounded by wolves, and having nothing to hope for, but from God's rich grace in Christ, and His protecting care; and from two or three associations. Though we have but little to commend us to the favorable notice of our brethren abroad, yet we feel a desire for a continuance, and even extension of the correspondence of churches, corresponding meetings and associations who are united with us, in the glorious doctrine of salvation by the grace of God, and in that order marked out in the New Testament. And would therefore say again; Brethren visit us with your letters of christian affection, and your messengers, at our next meeting to be held with the Frying-pan Church, Fairfax Co., VA., to commence on the Thursday before the 2nd Lord's day in August, 1852, at 11 o'clock, A.M.

S.TROTT. 1851.

GOSPEL ORDER.

BROTHER JEWETT: - By some mismanagement among the Postmasters, I have not received the Sept., number of the ADVOCATE and MONITOR, but in a recent tour I had an opportunity of seeing it and of noticing the request of brother Ashbrook for your views and mine on the query, Whether one church has a right to disown another church, as a church of Christ, on account of corruption however great.

I am somewhat surprised, that any O.S. brethren should harbor the idea, that a departure from the faith should be no bar to fellowship; or that corruption should be held in estimation as if manifesting a body of persons, to be a church of Christ, equally with truth and disorder, and disorder equally with order. I readily admit, that there is no direction given in the New Testament, for churches dealing with and excluding other churches, as is the case with individual members. But be it also remembered, that the New Testament contains no authority for churches combining, or being bound together with churches in any external union or form, by which any such discipline, or exclusion, or act of dismissal, should be required to produce a separation.

Neither do the scriptures justify us in owning the tares as wheat, the synagogues of Satan as churches of Christ, error as truth, or contempt of Christ as obedience to Him; nor our recognizing any body of people, not continuing steadfastly in the Apostles doctrine and fellowship, as a gospel church.

Such being the fact, relative to New Testament authority on the subject, the opinion of those spoken of by brother Ashbrook, stands at once condemned, as being antichristian usurpation, and *not*gospel order; I mean, that it is usurpation, which requires us to fellowship everything brought in by the will of man. I will, however, enlarge a little on this subject.

The Redeemer's interest, as established in the world, is called a kingdom, but a kingdom not of this world; accordingly we find its manifestation under the ministry of the apostles. The Apostles, as they planted churches, instead of combining them under territorial governments and these again being made subject to a great central, visible power, after the manner of the governments of this world gathered a little flock at Antioch, one at Ephesus, at Philippi, several in the region of Galatia, called the churches of Galatia. Each of these was organized as a distinct church, having its own bishops or elders and deacons; and when addressed, were addressed distinctly as a church, whether on doctrine, order or discipline; so that in each place, where the gospel standard was planted, the kingdom of Christ appeared only as a little flock meeting together for worship, having nothing in its appearance calculated to alarm the fears of the governments of this world, as though it were a power growing up to overturn their authority. It is true, jealousies and opposition were aroused against these lambs of Christ, but not by any just provocation from the Gospel.

When the interest of Christ collectively is spoken of, it is called the church, as it is the one body of Christ; but when spoken of as manifested in the world, the churches, and the churches of the saints, are mentioned; each a little flock by itself having no other bond of union with each other, than that invisible bond of being made to center in Christ, and on being quickened by the one Spirit; and having no visible form of union (except the congregating of individuals in church relation,) but the "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," and being "called in one hope of their calling." But so soon as Antichrist began to gain power in the churches, the propensity to mould the visible form of the church into a conformity to the kingdoms of this world, was manifested; and we guickly find territorial bishops, assuming a control over all the churches in a certain district, and these again uniting under the government of patriarchs, or of archbishops and a Pope. And when the Reformation took place, the same disposition was manifested, in all the reformed churches, to have their government conformed to the kingdoms of this world; and each sect has to this day its confederacies and combined government over the churches. We can but be struck, in reading history, with the distinction in narrating the state of the Novatians and Donatists, (as those who separated from the corruptions of the early church were called,) from that of the other sects, these are only spoken of by their churches, whilst others are mentioned by their bishoprics, patriarchies, &c. The same peculiarity is observable in the history of the Waldenses. No instance can be produced, wherein the Baptist churches, either during the apostolic period, or after their separation from the corruptions of the churches, until since the reformation, were confederated into any kind of territorial bodies, or under any external form of central government, or oversight. During the former part of the 17th century, the Baptists in England took it into their heads to try to get rid of the peculiar odium and persecutions, which as Baptists they had suffered. To accomplish this they held general meetings to agree on a one confession of their faith; these meetings they ultimately molded into constituted associations, by which under the notion of advisory councils they might keep an oversight over the churches and prevent their showing any departure from the one confession of faith, lest they should be charged with duplicity in putting it forth, as Mosheim does the Mennonites. And, as an additional preventative against contempt and persecution, they adopted measures, such as the establishment of schools &c., for having an educated ministry. From this move, associations have become general among the Baptists.

If then brother Ashbrook's enquiry has reference to the case of associated churches, whether they as so associated have a right to put from their connection any church, however corrupt, he has applied to a wrong person to solve it. I know of no better source to apply to on this point, than to the same book, in which they find them authority for being combined into associational bodies, which probably may be the epistles of St. Hermes, or St. Simon the Sorcerer, if such epistles exist. As associations grew out of an attempt by the Baptists to avoid that peculiar persecution, to which they as a peculiar people had been subjected; and were an imitation of what existed among some of the reformed churches, I cannot approve of them; though I would bear with them as I find them among my brethren, for my brethren's sake. Although associations as I find them among the Old School, are shorn of their antichristian power, yet there remains the form of a central control in their constitutional compacts; and I can but think their testimony against the concentrated governments, established among the New School in their Boards, &c., would be less liable to be objected to, were they themselves clear of all appearance of sanctioning human confederacies in religion. Were I, therefore, to express an opinion upon this point, it would be, that churches which find themselves unpleasantly confederated with other churches by any constitutional bonds, should at once dissolve their compact and reinstate themselves in that independency, as churches, in which we find the churches in the New Testament, owning no Lord, but Christ, and no religious ties beyond the church, but those of brotherly love and a mutual interest in the common salvation; being free each church to act for itself, and show out by its doctrine and practice, what in truth it is, wheat or tare, a church of Christ, or of antichrist; and each church alike free to recognize another body as a gospel church, or an antichristian combination, according as they may judge that they discover the marks of the one or the other.

But if brother Ashbrook has reference to the action of churches as such, independently of any associational control, then I would say to him, that he must admit that there is a standard given in the New Testament, by which to test a church, whether it be a gospel church, or belong to that opposing power brought to view in the Scriptures; or that there is not. If there be no such standard or pattern given, then is there no alternative left but for us on the one hand to assume the judgment seat and decide according to our own opinions, who belong to Christ and who do not; or on the other hand, to extend undistinguished fellowship toward everything coming under the name of the christian religion, in doctrine, from Socinianism to Predestinarianism; and in order, from the Quaker to the Papist. But if there be such pattern or standard given in the New Testament, what right have we to acknowledge any body of persons as being a gospel church, unless such body possess the characteristics given in the New Testament of a church of Christ? And even if a true church had once worshipped in any place and had been succeeded by a people corrupt in doctrine and practice, would it not be manifest, that the golden candlestick had been removed? And shall we, when the Lord has done this, persist in calling the succeeding corruption truth, the darkness light, and the mixed mass a candlestick of beaten gold?

But on this point, discretionary forbearance is to be used. A church may be bewitched from the simplicity of the Gospel, as were the Galatians, and yet life be there; so that they will bear the word of admonition and return from their wanderings. But if they are deaf to the word and throw themselves into the embrace of strangers, or lose their individuality of action, in any of the confederacies of antichristian benevolence, shall we still consider such a church to be "espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ?" II Cor. 11:2.

But again, if Scripture prophecy be good authority, there is abundant authority for the people and churches of Christ to stand separated from every branch of Antichrist. What means the voice, Come out of her, my people, &c., if Christ's people are not to separate themselves from the antichristian interest? Or whence would war arise between the seven headed Beast and the saints, if all are to be blended in one common fellowship? Why the "woman clothed with the sun," fleeing into the wilderness to the place God had prepared for her? And why the two witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, if the true church was not to separate and be a distant interest from those churches, which by corruption had become antichristian? Rev., 11th & 12th chapters. Whence came the present Romish, Greek and Nestorian churches, but from churches originally planted by the apostles, and being what they now are by corruption? If the churches of Christ have no right to be separate from corrupt churches, then ought Christ's dove, his undefiled, still to have been linked in fellowship and union with the great whore, who has her name Mystery, Babylon the Great, &c. Neither should there have been any distinct revelation of that Wicked, whom the Lord shall "consume with the spirit of his mouth," as a distinct interest from the true churches, if the corrupted and uncorrupted were to be mingled together in one common mass. II Thes.2:8. Or why were the disciples and churches of Christ warned of the coming of false prophets and of antichrist, if they were not to beware of them, and not be deceived by them, &c.?

On a little reflection, on the nature of the two religious interests brought to view in the New Testament, I think, brother Ashbrook will be convinced, that they cannot walk together in peace, until righteousness can have fellowship with unrighteousness and light have communion with darkness. See Amos 3:3 & II Cor.6:14.

With the apostolic exhortation, "Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean," &c. (II Cor.6:17,) I conclude.

S.TROTT. Nov. 8, 1843.

THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

BROTHER BEEBE: - As I proposed in my last communication a further consideration of Mr. Dennison's famous argument, by which he seems fondly to anticipate the complete conversion before the next meeting of the Philadelphia Association, of those Brethren who have hitherto had no more benevolence than to suppose that the plans drawn by Christ himself for publishing his Gospel among the Nations of the Earth are sufficient for them to attend to, I will now attempt to show the vast difference there is between these things to which those brethren object, and those which Mr. Dennison enumerates as parallel instances of departure from the Scriptures as a rule of practice.

That this gentleman should not have discovered the difference which so manifestly exists between the practice of human inventions as substitutes for things which have been particularly appointed by the King of Zion, for the observance of his Disciples, and those things which are practiced, not as parts at all, of positive institutions, but merely as conveniences, even admitting that there is no Scripture Warrant for them, is not so much to be wondered at, he having till lately been connected with the admirers of Peter Edward's manner of getting rid of Divine appointments. But that Baptists who have been used to consider a thus saith the Lord, as of more importance in reference to positive institutions than all the reasonings that the wisdom of men could devise, when Baptism has been under consideration – should themselves resort to the same kind of human reasoning to invalidate proofs taken from the plain declarations of God's word in reference to the dispensation of the Gospel, which is as entirely a positive institution as is Baptism, is well calculated to show what man is, with all his boasted wisdom.

That the Gospel Ministry as entirely originated from the express appointment of the Lord, as did either of the ordinances of the Gospel must be manifest to every reflecting Christian. Consequently the obligation to pay a strict regard to all the divinely prescribed parts of this institution without altering, adding unto, or diminishing from them, is tantamount to the obligation to own the Author of the institution as Lord. See Luke 6:46, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord; and do not the things which I say?"

The Lord has given particular directions in his word, on the several following points, relative to this appointment of Heaven, for making known the glad tidings of salvation.

First, in relation to those who are to officiate in this important work, as in the command given; Go ye teach, &c., being originally directed to certain baptized believers, chosen for the work. Matt.25:16,19. We find those first employed in this work, were called directly by the Lord himself and sent into the work; afterwards as in the case of Paul and Barnabas, we find the precedent set of the preachers of the Gospel, being called to the work by the Holy Ghost, and being recommended to the grace of God for the work, or separated to it, by the Church. See Acts 23:1,2, compared with Acts 14:27,27. Again it is declared that the ministry of reconciliation, is given to them of God, II Cor.5:18; and that they are given especially to the churches for the work of the Ministry of Christ, and consequently are made manifest to the Churches, by their peculiar gifts, given to them by the Holy Spirit, I Cor.12:4,7,8, & 28; or as expressed in I Tim. 3:2, being apt to teach. See Eph.4:11,12; consequently it belongs exclusively to the Churches to separate persons for the work of preaching or teaching the Gospel, and they have no more right to send others into this work, than they have to authorize others to baptize; the authority to teach all nations, and that to baptize, being both found in the same command.

Second, these designated persons are commanded to preach the Gospel. This preaching is not as Allen Campbell says, a simple proclamation of the fact of Christ's incarnation, death &c. It is a teaching; compare Matt.28:19, with Mark 16:15. By referring to the Acts, and to the writings of the Apostles, we learn what they understood the word of reconciliation committed to them to be. It was not a Gospel divested of Doctrine, that they preached, it was an illustration of the situation of man, as under the curse of the Law, and a development of God's purpose, and plan of saving sinners, by expounding and testifying the Kingdom of God and persuading concerning Jesus out of the Laws of Moses, and out of the Prophets, &c. See Acts 28:23. As the preaching was a teaching, so the teaching was a preaching, not a reading or writing. See Acts 28:31.

Third, the command given to the Eleven, contains the authority to teach all nations and to preach the Gospel to every creature; consequently God has appointed the same ordinance for making known the Gospel to the heathen and to the young, as to others.

There are several other circumstances relative to this institution, particularly appointed by Divine Authority; as First, in the case of a deficiency of laborers, the command is express, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth more laborers into his harvest." Are not the plans in vogue, at this day, for supplying preachers, in direct violation of this appointment? Second, persons called to preach the Gospel are not to let even the burying of the dead, hinder them from that work; what right then have such to bury themselves and their talents, for years within the walls of Classical or Theological Seminaries? Third, it is expressly declared in the word, that, It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. It pleases men, to save by the wisdom of Mission, Tract, Sunday School, and Bible Societies; whose pleasure will stand? Fourth, "the Lord hath ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." The wise men say, that preachers would starve were they to depend on the *living*their preaching would induce the people to give them; they therefore ordain that men shall preach because they receive a support from mission funds. Still I think their plans do not overturn the ordinance of God, for on examination it will be found that those who preach because they are hired or because they have been maintained from the King's Mission Palace, do not preach the Gospel. As the avowed object of Mission, Tract, Sunday School and Bible Societies, is to make known the glad tidings of salvation, they are as manifest substitutes of human contrivance for that order which God has particularly appointed for publishing the Gospel, as infant sprinkling is for believers Baptism.

Again, in reference to these several human institutions, they have Societies connected with them, composed of professed believers and unbelievers, who are united together upon the ground of money payments; and which assume the stand of religious Societies. Herein therefore they are opposed to the following plain declarations of scripture: My kingdom is not of this world; My dove, my undefiled, is but one, she is the only one of her mother; There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness.

Thus, Mr. Dennison, it is manifest that the ground upon which those Brethren, whom your brother of the PIONEER would denominate Anti-mission Baptists, object to these several institutions, which to you, and to the majority of your venerable Association, are so precious, is the same as that upon which you would object to infant sprinkling; namely, because they are substitutes of human contrivance for a positive command of God. Remember, Sir, to do something else instead of that which is commanded, is not merely a doing what is not required; it is a plain refusal to do as commanded. Now, Sir, admitting that as you insinuate, there is no Scripture warrant for the practices which you enumerate in your inquiries, can you show in one instance, that either of them is a substitute for something particularly commanded of God? If you can; then are we thus culpable in conforming to such practice. But if you cannot, as is evidently the case, there is no proper comparisons between these things, and those which you denominate charitable institutions.

I will leave you to reflect on this subject for a little season, and when another opportunity offers, I will examine your allegations, concerning those practices which you name as not being warranted by Scripture.

I again subscribe myself, A WALDENSIS. Valley of Achor, Nov.4, 1832.

THE GROUND OF CHRIST'S GLORY.

BROTHER JEWETT: - The 4th and last head, which I mentioned, as a division of those subjects, on which there appears to be an important difference of views between us and some of our Western brethren, is The ground of Christ's glory, or that which constitutes his glory as the Redeemer.

If I can understand the import of the arguments used by those brethren, they suppose the GLORY, which accrues to the Son of God from the work of redemption, to be altogether such as earthly conquerors derive from their conquests; the more powerful the foe subdued, the greater the glory in conquering him. Thus Elder Parker, in his views of the Two Seeds, pg.12, says, "Notice and remember, that, when a king or power makes great preparations for to accomplish a small object, it argues and proves weakness and ignorance; and as this character cannot be attached to the Divine Being, we cannot fall on any better plan to form an idea of the greatness and power of the devil, than to take a view of the Almighty God of heaven and earth exerting his divine properties in the redemption of his people, for his own glory and the overthrow of Satan and his kingdom." After other remarks to the same point, he comes to this declaration: "But just bring our minds to Christ, his servitude in this world, his agonizing pains in the garden, his shameful and awful sufferings, his crucifixion, his resurrection and ascension; not a groan, not a drop of blood in vain. O think of this with the sufferings of saints, and providence of God, from then till now, and ask your common reasons as well as the revelation of God, has all this and a great deal more been done just to defeat an immaterial spirit or two? O this would be a contemptible idea of God." From these quotations it is manifest, that he considers the redemption of the elect and the defeat of Satan to be one and the same thing; that is, that their redemption consisted in conquering the devil and delivering them out of his hands. Hence the argument in favor of Satan's greatness, from the greatness of the power and exertions to redeem the elect. Also he makes the glory of God and the overthrow of Satan and his kingdom, as intimately connected. Elder Paxton to the same effect says, (W.P. Baptist, No.15, pg.231,) "What! Can we properly appreciate the great power and wisdom of God in his all-conquering Son, for overcoming a mere creature, which he, the Son, must have created in less time than a minute!! I would as soon think of enlarging a giant for overcoming an infant not a week old." Brother Crafton also seems to have imbibed the same idea; for in reply to Elder West's letter to him, (W.P. Baptist, No.16, pg.245,) he says, "And whether Jesus Christ in conquering and destroying the devil and his works, will have the glory and honor of destroying an enemy indeed, or only of subduing a revolted subject, made by and for himself to war with," &c. Again he speaks of the Scriptures, representing in glowing colors the transcendent glories of the Son of God in delivering his captured people from the corrupting influence of the power of darkness and destroying the works of the devil. It appears to me, that those brethren have suffered themselves to be so carried away with the whim of trying to extol the greatness of their self-existent devil, as to be led to degrade and carnalize the great and glorious work of redemption into a mere war of conquest between God and Satan, and the glory resulting to God and Christ as being only commensurate with the great prowess of their enemy, Satan. If such be the case, I have certainly hitherto read the Scriptures in ignorance. I have understood the purpose of Christ, in coming into the world to be to redeem his people, not from the power of Satan, but from curse of the law and from under the law, that they might "receive the adoption of sons."

In my exercises, my convictions were, not that Satan had the power over me, but that I was a transgressor of God's Law and depraved in all my faculties. And if ever I knew the joy of believing in Christ, it was that he had taken the law-place for such poor sinners as me, had magnified the law, brought in an everlasting righteousness, and expiated the guilt of sin by the shedding of his own blood, so as to bring us to God. And surely, if our western brethren would look to the time when Christ first appeared to them the chiefest among ten thousand, yea as altogether lovely, they will remember that it was on other accounts, that he thus appeared to them, than merely as having displayed his power in conquering Satan.

But in coming to the point, as to what is declared in the Scriptures to be the design of Christ's coming into the world, we read in I John 3:8, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." Again, in Heb.2:14, we read, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him, that had the power of death, that is, the devil," &c. By a first view of these texts, without any reference to other parts of scripture, we might suppose, that the devil had gotten the elect somehow into his power, and that what was necessary for their deliverance was to conquer him, as our western brethren, if I understand them, represent the matter. But when we look at other parts of Scripture, we find that it was under the law of God, that they were holden, and that being transgressors of it in Adam, the judgment had passed upon them, in common with others, in condemnation; and therefore sin reigned over them and in their mortal bodies, and they were under the sentence of the Law, dead in - not to - trespasses and sins. Hence, to redeem them from under the Law, to bear the curse in their stead, and to become "the end of the Law for righteousness" to them, was what he had to perform, to accomplish their deliverance. And such the Scriptures abundantly represent his work to have been. Thus Christ says, "Even as the Son of man is come, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many," certainly not to the devil, but to the law of God. Matt.20:28. But is there a contradiction between those passages above quoted from I John and Hebrews, and the other parts of the Scriptures? Certainly not. By turning again to I John 3:8, we find the former part of the verse read thus, "He that committeth sin, is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose," &c. Hence we can readily perceive, what John means by the works of the devil; namely, sin; and by comparing this with Heb.2:14, we may understand what is intended by destroying the devil as having the power of death. We cannot suppose with any propriety, either that the Son of God undertook to destroy the existence of the devil, or that the devil ever had personally the power of death, that is, the control of it so as to visit it upon whom he pleased and when he pleased; or to release from it at his pleasure. But if we understand this text according to the one in John, that is, the devil here spoken of as personating his works, sin, and sin to be represented as his works, because he sinned from the beginning; that is, he first transgressed, for sin is a transgression of the law; and that he first beguiled the woman to transgress, we shall then find it harmonizing with other Scriptures and the general doctrine of Redemption. Thus sin is represented as having power to bring death, as in Rom.5:21, "That as sin hath reigned unto death," and verse 12, same chapter, "wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." Thus as it is plain, that death comes by sin, so it was sin that Christ was manifested to destroy, in reference to his people; that is, in taking it away by the offering of his body once for all, Heb.10:4-14, and in saving his people from their sins. But from whence did sin derive this power of reigning unto death? Was it a power which the devil independently possessed, and which he of his own will imparted to sin over the human family? Certainly not, for on this principle the devil could kill as fast, as God could create. But as Christ said to Pilate, "Thou couldest have no power against me, except it were given thee from above;" (which he said with all the sins of his people charged to him,) so it might be said to Satan.

The power of sin to reign unto death over the whole human family, as was showed in treating of Sin, was given to it of God as a judgment upon man for his transgression, and was but an infliction of the penalty upon Adam, as a public head, annexed to the prohibition; "For in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Gen.2:17. Hence "the sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law." I Cor.15:56. This leads to a very different conclusion from the one, that the object of God's sending his Son into the world, with all its preparatory and attendant circumstances, was to measure power with the devil and conquer him, thereby to redeem the elect. It leads us to the certainty, that it was the immutable Law of God with its incurred curse, which was to be met, satisfied and honored, for the redemption of his people from under it. And certainly his being able to deliver sinners from the curse of God's unchanging law, and raise them above its demands, by a perfected redemption, even to the privilege of being sons and heirs of God, whilst he magnifies and makes honorable the law in all its demands, is a far greater manifestation of Christ's Almighty power to save, than could have been given by his measuring lances with Satan and conquering him. When the devil had the impudence to meet Christ Jesus, face to face, Christ had but to say to him as to his vassal, "Get thee hence, Satan," and the devil quailed before him. But when he came to meet the law with its sword of eternal Justice awakened up, we find him agonizing in the garden under a view of the cup given him to drink; yea yielding unto death before it; yea as standing in the law place of his people, Immanuel was weak to resist the demands of the law, and was crucified through weakness, II Cor.13:4, yet he liveth by the power of God. Having by his death satisfied the sword of Justice, conquered death, removed the curse of the law and redeemed his people from under it, He arose victorious, was declared to be the Son of God with power, and manifested as "ABLE TO SAVE TO THE UTTERMOST all that come unto God by him." The parable of the strong man armed, Luke 11:21,22, appears from the connection to refer to Satan; and by the figure he is represented, not as a selfexistent being, but as a creature, the figure being that of a man. He considered himself secure of a dominion over the whole human family, being armed, as he thought, with the penalty of the law holding them in a state of death in sin. This penalty Christ by his death took away; thereby stripped Satan of his imaginary dominion over the elect, and divided his spoils. By this we must understand, that the elect and non-elect were in Satan's estimation alike his spoils.

Thus in redeeming his people from under the curse of the law, Christ completely destroyed the works of the devil; that is, not only, as before observed, took away sin from his people, but also overturned all the malice and arts of Satan, from his beguiling Eve on to his entering into Judas, to his own confusion, and to the accomplishment of God's glorious purpose of salvation. In this work of redeeming his people from under the law, the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ was fully manifested. No created being could have come into the law place of others and redeemed them, because every creature is bound to obey for himself; God has a sovereign, an unalienable right to his service, from his being his creature. If you are already a bound servant in your own person, it would be absurd to offer your service to your master, as a substitute for the release of a fellow servant.

But our Lord, being Jehovah, and therefore dependant on none for his existence and accountable to none, could voluntarily undertake in behalf of others; and by coming into their law-place, being made under the law, and taking this legal nature, this humanity, into law and take the curse out of the way, and thus take from death its sting and power to hold its captives, and deliver the lawful captive.

The lawful captive, (Isa.49:24,25,) cannot mean a captive to Satan, he having no legal right to make God's creatures captives. But they having transgressed God's righteous law, God, as the rightful Judge, had an undoubted right to assign them over to captivity under sin or depravity, according to the requisition of his law; and being thus under judgment to condemnation, they stand prominent, as the prey of God's terrible wrath. He who could thus deliver the captive from the mighty and take the prey from the terrible, must be GOD ALMIGHTY; and not only must he put forth omnipotent power, but must exercise an infinitude of goodness, of love and humiliation, in coming under the law and being made a curse for sinners. Thus the true glory of the Son of God, does not consist merely in his having put forth omnipotent power, nor in his destroying an enemy, but in his putting it forth for the salvation of rebel, ruined sinners. How infinitely brighter is this glory, which encircles the brow of our Immanuel, than any which could be reflected by the mere conquest of a contending power! The holiness, the infinite love and goodness, which led Him, who was rich, to become poor, who was in the form of God and thought it not robbery to be equal with God, to make himself of no reputation and as a servant to become obedient unto death, that he might save vile sinners from the merited curse of the law, and raise them to be participants with himself in heavenly and eternal happiness and glory, is that glory which he showed forth as the Only Begotten of the Father; that glory which he had with the Father before the world was, and with which he is glorified in his risen humanity in seeing of the travail of his soul and bringing his loved, his redeemed, his heaven-born bride home to partake of that during, holy happiness, which is of the Father reserved for her. When we contemplate the Son of God as crowned with such a glory as this; how trifling, how insipid appears the attempt to swell the devil to a self-existent, independent power, that Christ might have the glory of trying prowess with him and conquering him!

It appears to me, that these Western brethren in their whole advocacy of the Two Seed system, mistake the occasion, or, if you please, the necessity of the putting forth of the power and other attributes of the Godhead in the great work of redemption. For they represent, whether they so intend or not, this most glorious display which God has made of himself, to be from an occasion entirely out of himself, yea to be from a necessity laid upon him by the independent existence of an opposite being, in order to carry out his purpose in spite of the opposition of this enemy. Or if they say, "No; that God foreknew the existence of this enemy, and that he would intrude upon his creation, (which by the by is a positive absurdity, which they have never attempted to meet, that God should actually know what an independent being, who acted of and from himself, would do, when in fact this being could not have willed thus to intrude, until he knew of the existence of an occasion,) still it would leave the purpose, which God purposed in Christ Jesus to have been dependant on the voluntary action of this self-existent and self-acting being! Take which view they please of it; it cannot be made to correspond with the declaration which God made of himself to Moses, when he said, "I AM THAT I AM." Ex. 3:14. The Psalmist says, "He that is our God, is the God of salvation." Hence, as to be God, is to exist, to will and to act sovereignly and independently, salvation must be, from the original occasion and purpose of it, with all its provisions unto its ultimate accomplishment, all of God, the result of His infinitely wise and sovereign choice. The occasion was God's goodness in choosing to bring into existence beings, and to raise them to a happiness and glory, in nearness of likeness to and communion with his glorious and holy self, which as mere creatures, however upright they might be, they could never attain, or participate in. The plan embraced those provisions, which are adapted in infinite wisdom to the communication of the greatest good and happiness; such as the creation of these chosen vessels in a natural head, leaving them to fall in him by transgression and become sinners, that they might be proper subjects of the redemption and thus be raised above the accountability and servitude of the law of their creation, even to the privilege of sons; whilst the evil of their depravity as leading them to will and act for self-gratification, is contrasted with the infinite goodness of God, as manifested in the gracious purpose of the Father, the humiliation and sufferings of the Son for them, and the gracious teachings and indwelling of the Holy Ghost as a Comforter; and whilst from Christ, as their spiritual Head, is communicated to them spiritual life, in which they discern and delight in the good, and know and abhor the evil.

But what can we who dead in tenements of clay, know of the purpose and plan of God in what he has declared? We do know, that other beings are brought into existence through the putting forth of God's creating power, and by his understanding, and are left to depravity and to consequent banishment from him and to misery. How the goodness of God is to be manifested in their being brought into existence, beyond that of communicating to them the pleasure of existence, we know not. But we do see enough of his goodness in creation and providence, in making the curse, with which he visited the earth for man's sake, a temporal blessing to man, in giving him employment instead of idleness; but more especially as showed in the work of redemption, to know that he is good, infinitely good; and therefore we must know that the existence of the wicked is for the greater good, or they would not be permitted to exist; though we cannot tell the why and the wherefore. And here it is our prudence to leave it.

Yours, &c., S. TROTT. January, 1844.

VIEWS ON II PET.3:12-13

HEAVENS DISSOLVED, AND ELEMENTS MELT WITH FERVENT HEAT

Dear Brother Beebe: I see in No.21, Sister Dutton requests my views on II Peter 3: 12-13. "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

I somewhat regret being called on for my views on this text; because, in the first place, I think I have in some of the earlier volumes of the Signs expressed my views of it, and, secondly, I am aware that my views of this text differ from those of some of the brethren whom I have quite as much reason to believe are, in their general views, subjects of God's teaching, as I hope that I have myself been thus taught. Still, as I am not convinced of the error of my views, I will give them.

The first point of enquiry is, What are we to understand by the heavens and earth which are to be burned, and what by the new heaven and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness? The opinion of some is that by the former we are to understand the covenant of circumcision and legal dispensation, as being appointed of God a fixed residence for national Israel to dwell in; and that by the latter is intended the new covenant and gospel dispensation. I admit that the terms heaven and earth are sometimes used to denote the old covenant and legal dispensation; as in Is. 13:13 & Hag. 2:6-7, compared with Heb. 12:26-28. I also admit that in the gospel covenant and kingdom there dwelleth righteousness. But the heavens and earth spoken of in these texts were to be shaken and moved from their place, not burned, that I am informed of. This, as I understand, according to the prophecy of Haggai, was by the coming of Christ, when He gave up the Ghost, having taken the hand writing of ordinances out of the way and nailed it to His cross. Hence the veil of the temple was then rent in twain, showing that God no longer dwelt in the holy place of the temple, and was there no longer to be worshipped by legal rites. And from the day of Pentecost believers have dwelt under the dispensation and blessings of the new covenant, and received that kingdom which cannot be moved. But the old heavens and earth of which Peter speaks were yet reserved unto fire, when he wrote A. D. 65, thirty-two years after the gospel dispensation or kingdom of heaven had come and taken the place of the legal dispensation. And the new heavens and new earth of which he spake were yet looked for as something yet future.

But, secondly, taking the context as a correct criterion by which to judge of what Peter intended by the heavens and earth that were reserved unto fire, we must conclude that he spake of the natural heavens and earth, which still exist. For in verses 5 & 6, he speaks of the heavens of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished; meaning, evidently, the antediluvian world which perished.

Consequently, the heavens and the earth, which, he says, verse 7, are now by the same word; that is, which still exist by the same word of God, are kept in store reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, must be the same natural heavens and earth. However slack God may appear to some men to be, in thus destroying this world, yet Peter assures us that "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up" Verse 10. Hence I understand the apostle to mean what his language so definitely expresses, that these material heavens are to pass away, and this earth, with all the works which belong to it, are to be burned up.

Hence also by the new heavens and new earth which, he says, is looked for, I understand him to refer to a distinct place of residence where the saints, being raised and changed when this day of the Lord shall come, shall forever be with the Lord.

The idea has been entertained that these heavens and this earth being dissolved and burnt up, they will only be burned over and purified by fire. Whether Peter's strong language will admit of such construction, I will not stop to enquire. To me, it is of no importance whether the new heavens and the new earth are to be formed out of these old materials, or whether they will be altogether new. The revealed change of the bodies of the saints at the resurrection, from natural to spiritual bodies, would favor the idea of a change of the present heavens and earth, corresponding thereto, for their future residence. The saints, though their bodies will be raised spiritual bodies, must still occupy some locality, because they will not be omnipresent. The same is the case with the glorified body of the Son of God. Where He is, there will be the heaven of the saints, there they will behold the brightness of God's glory and the express image of His person, for such is the Son. But of whatever the new heavens and new earth may be composed, there are important differences between them and the present heavens and earth, some of which I will notice. 1st. In the heavens which John saw, there was no more sea; consequently there will be there no water needed, but the fountain of the water of life; no materiality there Rev.21:1-6. 2ndly. There will be no temple there, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. They will truly worship God as they will see Him in the Lamb, in spirit, without any need of external forms to express their worship. They will be wholly swallowed up in and filled with the love of God Rev.21:22. 3rdly. There will be "no need of the sun nor the moon there, for the glory of God and the Lamb, will be the light thereof. And there will be no night there Rev. 21:23-25. As the saints will be wholly changed from natural to spiritual in their bodies, there will to them be no natural darkness and no need of natural light.

And as the Lamb, who is the light thereof, will be constantly present with them, and the brightness of the glory of God constantly shining upon them, there will be no spiritual night or darkness there.

Again, Peter informs us that righteousness dwelleth therein. In this world dwelleth sin, making it a sin-defiled and sin- disordered world. There is no purity, no truth in it; look where we will within ourselves, or without, we behold corruption, and that which maketh a lie. But because in the new heavens and earth dwelleth righteousness, according to the pure law of love, there "shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither that worketh abomination or a lie" Rev. 21:27. Hence, there shall be there "no more death, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor pain" Rev.21:4. What a

I will now pass to notice Peter's exhortation to the saints in view of those things of which he wrote. In doing this, I will also take the 11th verse in connection. "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," &c. I do not understand Peter here as intending to shake the minds of, or trouble or terrify, the saints to whom he wrote any more than Paul did the Thessalonian brethren by writing to them that: "the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night," &c. I Thes.5:1-3 & II Thes.2:1-10. It is not much to be wondered at. that persons who view the Scriptures as an instrument of terror to drive people to a servile religion rather than as a revelation of peace and good will to men, should, in view of such declarations as this of Peter's and the one of Paul's just noticed, do as did many in the latter part of the tenth century, who, thinking that the millennium or the thousand years of Christ's reign on earth was about closing, and therefore that the world was about coming to an end, gave up their possessions to the Catholic Church, and became monks and hermits; or as did the Millerites a few years back in running into all their wildness, manifesting, in both these cases, and in many others, that "God had sent them strong delusions that they should believe a lie." But you, my sister, I trust, are not left to that delusion which would lead you to suppose that, to maintain a holy conversation and godliness, you must neglect to fill with fidelity your station in society and in the world, or that you must neglect to provide things honest in the sight of all men. The truth is, we manifest more of a holy conversation and godliness by a proper attention to the wants of our families, and to the several affairs of this life appertaining to our station, than by neglecting them. A holy conversation and godliness are a deportment corresponding with our profession of not being our own, but the Lord's, and of being governed in all things by His revealed word. The consideration that all worldly relations and things are perishing and hasting to dissolution should keep us mindful that our inheritance is not here, and lead us to live as those who are looking for another and better country. Such a sense of things would prevent our being covetous and grasping after the world, and from hoarding it up. If we are entrusted in Providence with this world's goods, whilst as faithful stewards we shall not waste it by extravagance or neglect, we shall hold it as not our own but the Lord's, subject to be taken from us if He pleases, or to be used for the good of His cause and people where the duty is pointed out by His word. If in providence we are destitute of this world's goods, we shall still manifest a cheerful and thankful spirit, knowing that a destitution of these things is no evidence that we are not heirs of God or objects of His love and care. Hence also, in our holy conversation we shall not suffer these perishing things of time, nor reproaches, nor persecution to hinder us from attending upon our ministry, if in the fellowship of the church we have been called to minister, nor from assembling ourselves together with the saints to whom we have given ourselves to walk in fellowship; nor from connecting ourselves with the poor and despised followers of the Lamb, if we have a good hope of being saved through grace.

Looking for and hasting unto the coming; or, hasting the coming day of God, as it reads in the margin. Not that we are to look for or hasten the coming of that day by practicing the devices of men for hastening on what they call the millennium. Nor that we are to expect its coming before the whole purpose of God, revealed in the Scriptures to transpire in the world shall have been accomplished. Nor that we are to hasten its coming personally to ourselves by dissolving our connections with the world by suicide or by secluding ourselves from it, but by habitually looking for the coming of the day of God wherein all these earthly things and relations shall be dissolved, we shall hasten the coming of that day in our experience, in that we shall thereby feel less tied to the world and less solicitude and anxiety about its affairs, and live more in the anticipation of the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Could we thus live in anticipation of that glorious residence which is in reserve for the saints, the warfare within, temptations without, poverty, and other afflictions, reproaches and persecutions, and the commotions in the world, would have less effect upon us to disturb our peace than they now do with many of us.

In answer to Sister Dutton's request, I have given such views as I have on this portion of Scripture. Happy would it be for many of us (I speak of such as, with myself, have reason to complain of our coldness and want of spiritual enjoyment) if we might be enabled, by grace, to give more heed to Peter's injunction, in view of the day of darkness and trouble which seems fast coming upon the church; we should then find, according to Paul's declaration: "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." That is, the new heavens and new earth which the day of God shall reveal.

With Christian regards, Elder Samuel Trott Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Dec. 15, 1856. SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 25 (1857)

APOSTOLIC DIRECTION FOR DEALING WITH HERETICS, AND ON HERESY IN GENERAL.

Brother Beebe: - I, a short time since received by letter a request to give, through the Signs, my views on Titus 3:10: "A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject." As the request was that I should give the exposition as soon as convenient, I send these remarks on, with a request, that you will publish them as soon as you can find room without crowding out other communications.

The direction contained in this text was given directly to Titus; but as Paul had left him in Crete, that he should set in order the things that were wanting, &c., as he had appointed him (1:5); this injunction must be considered as a part of that order which Titus, under Apostolic authority, was to establish in the churches. The term reject might have been considered here as confined to the idea of refusing such characters when offering for membership, or for the eldership or ministry, were it not that this rejection is presented as the closing part of a course of discipline; being preceded by a "first and second admonition," by which it is evident the person was, previous to his rejection, not only under the watch care of the church, but also under its discipline. Hence this must be considered as an apostolic injunction to reject or exclude from the communion of the church, persons who retained their heretical sentiments after having been twice admonished to renounce their error.

The expression, a man that is an heretic, appears rather discriminating, as though females were not so likely to become heretical, or that their being heretics was not so likely to disturb the peace of the church as in the case of the males. But it is to be remembered that the parallel direction in Rom. 16:17, makes no such distinction; but requires all who cause divisions, whether male or female, to be avoided.

This rule evidently includes the idea of rejecting from the privilege of preaching to the church all that bring and persist in heretical doctrines. The provision in this rule requiring a first and second admonition before rejection or exclusion is designed to lead the church to make the attempt to reclaim the heretic before excluding him, as well as to prevent a too hasty decision, by which a person might be made an offender for a word, or be rejected when the error was perhaps only in expression, not in sentiment; or had been fallen into through ignorance, not from determinate choice. But when after being once and again admonished of his error, a member persists in it, the church should act decisively in rejecting him, "Knowing," as the Apostle says (verse 11) "that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself."

This rule has been undoubtedly entirely too much neglected by the Baptist churches. The enormities practiced by the Catholics under the pretense of dealing with heretics has probably had considerable effect in bringing the idea of disciplining heretics, as such, into disrepute. Another reason for this neglect may be traced to the error the churches themselves had fallen into of consulting human creeds and human authors as standards; and as these varied it became difficult to fix the charge of heresy on any but a very flagrant corruption. Owing to the continued prevalence of this error among the churches, it is a particular difficulty in obeying this injunction to decide on what constitutes a man an heretic. But this point, at the request of my correspondent, I will try to illustrate.

If we look at the etymology of the original words rendered heresy and heretic, we find them to import the idea of sentiments of men's own choice, being from a verb which signifies to choose, elect, pick out, &c. Hence that man is a heretic who chooses, or picks out his doctrine or system of doctrine of himself, and to suit his own notions. The heretic is thus manifestly distinguished from one who receives the doctrine of Christ as taught of God; for the latter has been brought to desire, not to be left to choose his doctrine for himself, nor to pick out a system, to suit reason or popular opinion. What God reveals to his mind as truth, that he receives as such, and because God has revealed it, without stopping to inquire whether human reason can comprehend why it should be so, or whether it be popular or not. His prepossessions fall before the truth, when thus received, as dagon fell before the ark.

Again, if we look at the use of these words in the Scriptures, we shall find they involve the idea of division, or of forming a sect or party. Thus, we find the word used in Acts 24:14; and in Acts 28:22, the translators have rendered this word by the term sect. In I Cor. 11:19, it evidently, from the connection, has the same leading idea. Heresy, therefore, in the scriptural use of the term, is not only something of human device and choice, but it relates to a leading sentiment, such as will so affect the faith, or practice, or both, as to form a dividing point in the faith professed, or in the order and practices. Thus Peter speaks of the damnable heresies which some should bring in, as being "even a denial of the Lord that bought them" II Pet.2: 1-3. Most religionists calling themselves christians, profess to believe that the Lord Jesus Christ has bought or redeemed them. Connected, however, with this very profession, many of our day deny Him as Lord; for it is not enough to say Lord, Lord, to be exempted from this charge, whilst they "Do not the will of His Father which is in heaven." See Mt.7:21. Some, by their systems, deny His essential Godhead, some the divine perfection of the work of redemption, some, His divine sovereignty in ordering the work of salvation, and others deny Him as Lord in denying His sovereign authority as King of Zion. These damnable heresies, the Apostle foretells, they shall bring in privily; not openly avowing them at once, but disseminating them by degrees, and under a profession by the saints, having their corruptions wrapped up as to conceal their bearing towards a denial of the Lord. With feigned words of great zeal for the cause of Christ, great love to souls and great pretended affection for the saints, they will gain multitudes of followers, and on this account wax bold and revile the truth and those that adhere to it; others again will charge their absurdities, and the divisions occasioned thereby among professors, to the cause of truth, and thus the way of truth comes to be evil spoken of. They will, through their covetousness, make merchandise for a while even of the churches of Christ. But I need not enlarge upon this prophecy, for the last thirty years affords a full comment upon it, in the manner in which corrupt systems have been introduced among the Baptists, and the plans for gaining money, &c., which have been so fully manifested. The consequence to themselves will yet be as fully

The standard by which we are to test the truth or heresy of any sentiment next demands attention. On this point, I cannot admit the right of churches to set up any human composition such as expositions, creeds, confessions of faith, &c., as an unalterable standard by which to test the correctness or incorrectness of doctrine or practice; although I admit the propriety of churches making declarations, and giving summaries of what they consider to be the doctrine and practice taught in the Scriptures, yet, instead of establishing these as fixed standards of truth, they ought ever to hold them subject to correction by any additional light they may, through any medium, receive on the Scriptures. The proper objects of such declarations of faith are, first, for cultivating an acquaintance and correspondence with brethren abroad, by thus making ourselves known in our religious character; secondly, for a testimony towards those that are without. In objecting to declarations, &c., being set up as standards, I would not be understood as admitting that all points of doctrine are mere matters of opinion; that there are no fixed principles which all the children of God are taught in their experience, and of which they have received the inward assurance that they are infallible truths. But the fact is, that we are liable to connect with these truths, as parts, and perhaps as inseparable parts of the system of salvation, certain ideas which we have received, as inferences, connecting points, explanations, &c., and as there will be differences of opinion on these points, whilst we believe them true, we are likely to be very tenacious of them, and to have them set forth in our declarations of faith; when after all, if we should be graciously led to inquire into the correctness of them, we shall find we had no higher authority for them than that certain men whom we esteemed sound in the faith, had in their writings, preaching or conversation held them forth as parts of the doctrine of Christ; and that we had received them as Joshua and Israel did the declarations of the Gibeonites, without asking counsel at the mouth of the Lord. Josh.9:1-15.

As a test of truth and error, the Holy Spirit has given to the children of God an infallible standard, a more sure word of prophecy sustained by a twofold testimony, to which, as Peter has said, we do well that we take heed. "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them," is the unalterable rule given by the Holy Spirit. Everything else must stand or fall as it is found genuine or reprobate, when tried by this standard. The letter of the Scriptures alone can be applied to as a rule bearing upon the unregenerate. And although to them much that is contained even in the New Testament is done in parables, yet there is a sufficiency of the plain declarations of Jehovah to leave them without excuse, in bringing in their willworship, their vain ceremonies, vain hopes, and false systems. To you, says Christ to His disciples, "It is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of heaven;" and says Paul (I Cor.2: 15), "But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man." This then is it, the inward teachings of the Spirit of God affords to the child of grace a ready test, if he will attend to it, by which to detect heresy. But then this inward teaching is not to him a safe standard until he has "tried the spirits whether they be of God." If the teaching be from the Spirit of God, he will find it so written in the Scriptures; and the one, as his understanding is now opened to understand it, is found to be an exact duplicate of the other. Hence he has a twofold testimony for the truth of what he receives. And when he hears the same things affirmed in the preaching of the gospel, it is with him that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word is established. Having this standard at hand as he would not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, it becomes him to consult it, instead of going to the creeds and expositions of men as a standard. And whatever application of the Scriptures, inferences drawn from them, or professed preaching of the gospel, which contradicts his experience as thus confirmed by the word, he should reject as false and heretical. Hence it is to this internal standard that the Apostle refers the saints as that by which to test heresies, as in Rom. 16:17 - "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." Here the standard set up is not the doctrine which they have read or heard, but which they have learned, of course, from the teachings of the Holy Spirit. Again, in Gal. 1:8,9, he says: "But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other doctrine unto you than that which we have preached, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say we again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed." This is a high stand which he points out to the Galatians; yet high as it is, the gospel which they have received, is in the conclusion the ground on which they are to take this stand. I trust I am writing for those who understand the difference between a receiving of the gospel and a mere hearing of it.

In conclusion, whenever the saints can be generally brought back to primitive simplicity, and to view the Scriptures as the wise man describes them, when he says: "They are plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge" (Prov. 8:8), instead of viewing their meaning as so closed from the unlearned of this world, that none but a set of priestly beings, or men having a certain grade of the human learning can unlock them and bring that meaning forth; when, instead of going to the writings of any man as a standard by which to understand and test the doctrine and order of the Scriptures, they will go to the Scriptures for themselves, to try the doctrines of men, depending on the key which they carry in their own breasts, the teachings of the Holy Spirit, as that which best can unlock the Scriptures to them, then we shall find the saints all speaking the same things, and being of one mind, on every essential point in doctrine and practice. And not till then will this desirable period arrive, for so long as the writings of men are consulted as standards, the opinions of the saints will be as various as are the writings which they set up as standards; and not only so, but the children of God, many of them, have too high a sense of christian liberty to suffer their minds to be trampled down by any creed or confession of human composition, how much soever sanctified it may be by age or by the estimation of the many, so as not to think and inquire for themselves. As the Spirit of God teaches the same things and dwells in all the saints, so far as His teaching alone is consulted, so far there will be uniformity of sentiment among the saints. May the period soon arrive when this will be the case with all the saints; then it will be no great difficulty for the churches to detect the man that is an hereticand to unite in rejecting him. Then also will they experience the truth of the Master's promise, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" John 8:32.

1840. S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES. Vol.8 (1840)

Select Works of Elder Trott: pgs 208 - 213

AN INQUIRY #1.

BROTHER BEEBE: - In the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE for June 1839, there is a letter from Elder James Osbourn to the Editor, containing some remarks which I wish to bring to the notice of our Western Old School Brethren. Elder Osbourn, after noticing his book, which professes to be an exposure of missionism in the great valley of the Mississippi, refers to errors of a most pernicious kind as existing in that country, and then says, "I shall venture to say that the great darkness and the odious errors now alluded to, are to be found and there too I found them, among men and churches professing orthodoxy, and the true Christian faith. But forsooth orthodoxy and Old Schoolism are terms which stand but for little, etc. Hence a man may be a full grown Quaker under the unmeaning term, as it is now mostly used, of orthodoxy; or a gross heretic of the Sabellian kind under the abstruse and new fangled term of Old Schoolism. And in short, thus it is with the people now referred to in the far West. They indeed greatly pride themselves in what is called orthodoxy and Old Schoolism, and yet they literally hiss at and make common sport of a TRINITY OF PERSONS IN THE ETERNAL GODHEAD, and insultingly call the divine Father, PA, and the Holy Ghost a TOOL. And hence under this orthodoxy and Old Schoolism we clearly see heterodoxy and downright blasphemy, etc."

I think there must be some mistake in this matter. But mistake or not, the thing has gone out, through what is recognized as an Old School periodical, as an indiscriminate charge against our Western brethren, for the New School party to rejoice in. If the above charge is true, I do not blame Elder Osbourn for pronouncing it blasphemy. Not that I am disposed to consider it blasphemous to deny that the Three, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost are in any sense three Gods, or that they are three distinct persons, or that they blaspheme who dissent from the Nicene Creed, or from my creed concerning the divine Three, in which the One God has revealed himself, providing that either of the Three is not degraded. But when we consider that Father, is one of the names by which God has been pleased to declare himself, as expressive of a relation which, he, the Father sustains in the economy of salvation, as he is declared to be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and Christ says to his disciples, "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God;" I say when we consider these things, we must conclude that no person having a becoming reverence for God, whatever may be his views of the doctrine of the Trinity, can trifle with or make sport of this name and relation in which God has revealed himself. Neither can we conceive that any such person would either deridingly or considerately speak of him as a tool of whom Christ thus speaks, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of Truth, etc." John 14:16-17. And again, "But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, etc." I hope therefore that some of our Old School Brethren of the West will set this matter right; if it is a wrong charge which Elder Osbourn has made, that they will clear it up; or if any do hold in contempt the names and relations, Father and Holy Ghost, I say not, as declared in the Athanasian Creed, but as declared in the Scriptures; I desire that they may be made manifest; and be no longer recognized as of us. If this charge had come from our avowed enemies it might well be passed unnoticed; but coming from the quarter it has, I do think it calls for some attention.

May the Lord enable all who profess to be of the Old School stand, to believe, speak, and act, consistently therewith.

Yours, etc. S. TROTT July 1, 1839.

AN INQUIRY #2.

BROTHER BEEBE: - At the same time I received the 15th number of the SIGNS, containing my call to our western Old School brethren, to vindicate themselves from the charge preferred against them by Elder Osbourn in the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE for June, I received the number of the ADVOCATE for July (No. 1, Vol. 3,) containing another communication of Elder Osbourn, in which he enlarges upon the charge against the Old School Baptists of the West. This communication is addressed to a clergyman of the Dutch Reformed Denomination; and so (I find,) was the other; hence I mistook in saying that it was addressed to the editor of the ADVOCATE. In an extract of a letter from brother I. T. Saunders, which he gives in this latter communication, is manifested what I anticipated was the mistake in Elder Osbourn's former communication; that is, that instead of representing, through ridicule, the Father as PA, and the Holy Ghost as a TOOL, brother Saunders makes use of these expressions to illustrate what he understands to be Elder Osbourn's system of the Trinity. However, it was not a mistake in Elder Osbourn; for he evidently, as manifested in this latter communication, considers his system of Three Divine Persons in the Godhead, to be the only true doctrine of the Trinity; and a peremptory denial that there are three divine persons in the Godhead he considers as constituting infidelity. And the reason why any do not attach the same vast magnitude to his system of the Trinity as himself and others do, he says, "Is evidently owing to the serious darkness of theirs, interwoven with the whole system of salvation, and with the whole covenant of grace, and with the whole life of faith, and the triumphs of a Christian." Elder Osbourn, I confess here hits me, and it may be correctly; for I certainly have a great deal of darkness to mourn over; but certain it is, that while I consider the doctrine that God essentially exists as Three and One, of the highest importance, yet the system that will make the Three to be three distinct persons, and only to be expressed by the term persons, I do not consider in a light that would justify me in pronouncing as infidels all who do not admit the correctness of the Athanasian explanation of the modus of God's existing as Three by the special phrase of three distinct persons, the one person begetting, the second being begotten, and the third being breathed forth by the other two.

How Elder Osbourn may be right or wrong in his system of explaining the Trinity I will not here attempt to decide, nor what are the sentiments concerning the Trinity of brother Saunders and the hundreds of Old School Baptists in the West, whom Elder Osbourn pronounces Sabellians, I will not say.

My object in writing this is to show that Elder Osbourn has himself explained what I had wished explained; namely, in what sense it was that our Western brethren represented the Father as PA, and the Holy Ghost as a TOOL; that is, not as they are declared in the Scriptures, but as these brethren understood Elder Osbourn to represent them. Hence I recall my request for these brethren to give an explanation. However, brother Saunders, as he is personally pointed out can do as he pleases in speaking for himself.

S. TROTT. Centerville, Fairfax Co., Va., July 5, 1839.

NO.1, ON ISAIAH 20th.

BROTHER BEEBE: - On reading the 20th chapter of Isaiah, several months since, I was forcibly impressed with the idea that this passage of Scripture had reference to these times; in a word, that here we had declared the result of the struggle which is at present going on between the Catholics and the Benevolent Societies of the day, for preeminence in the valley of the Mississippi. On some reflection upon the passage, and it has been repeatedly on my mind since, and on comparing it with certain other passages of Scripture which I shall have occasion to notice in the following remarks, I feel more confirmed in the conclusion, that this portion of prophecy is yet to have its fulfillment, and that in this country in part at least. If correct in my present views of this prophecy, I may have been mistaken in the supposition I gave in my "Letters on the Image of the Beast," relative to the Witnesses being killed by the influence of the Image, or of the reformed churches through that Image, rather than by Popery.

This and the preceding chapter of Isaiah had no doubt a primary reference to events which in part have already transpired relative to national Egypt, though I doubt whether that part of the prophecy contained in the 19th chapter, from the 18th to the 25th verse, has as yet had its primary fulfillment, or will have, until the time of national Israel's being brought under the power of the gospel; when there will be no longer an Assyrian or Babylonish captivity, Egyptian bondage or Israelitish infidelity to oppose the Church of Christ.

That Egypt was typical of, or represents a spiritual interest which is to exist in opposition to the church of Christ in the latter days of her wilderness state, is evident from Rev. 11:8, where it is said of the Two Witnesses that, "their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt," &c., as Babylon also, the capital of Assyria and Chaldea, is made to represent another opposing interest; namely, the Church of Rome. See Rev. 17:5, 14:8, 16:19, and 18:21. That Egypt and Babylon or Assyria cannot with propriety, be considered as designed to represent the same thing spiritually, is evident from the fact that in Scriptural history and prophecy they are represented as entirely distinct nations and often opposing powers, whilst both are brought to view as distinct from Israel, and often its oppressors. Having made these preliminary remarks, I will now present some of my thoughts relative to the spiritual import of this 20th chapter of Isaiah. Not that I will presume to give a full illustration of the proper application of the whole passage.

Assyria being synonymous with Babylon, evidently represents spiritually the Church of Rome. Egypt as has already been noticed, being uniformly presented, in the Scriptures, as distinct from Babylon or Assyria, must refer to something other than that interest in the prophecy under consideration. If we can determine what is intended by that "great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified," Rev.11:8, we shall undoubtedly get at the true application of the name in the prophecy. The name Egypt signifies bondage, and Egypt in the Scriptures is called the house of bondage, having been such to Israel.

Israel soon passed into the house of bondage after being distinguished as Israel, or as having power with God, the import of that name. The church of Christ, after being manifested as the true Israel, or as having power with God; that is, as having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, &c., (Heb. 10:19-20,) soon passed into a house of bondage, under the introduction of Judaism and a multiplication of ceremonies, or that mystery of iniquity which began to work even in the Apostles days. It was under the influence of a religion of this kind among the Jews, a religion which made void the law of God by the traditions of men that our Lord was crucified. As in Egypt literally, so in this case, the task masters, which bound heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and laid them on men's shoulders, would not move them with one of their fingers. And all their works they did to be seen of men, as the Egyptians kept Israel making bricks with which to build their Pyramids, those standing monuments of their ostentatious folly to this day. See Matt.23:4 & 5. So the Apostles say in reference to the binding of the burden of circumcision upon the disciples, that "our fathers, nor we are able to bear;" again, "as many as wish to make a fair show in the flesh constrain you to be circumcised," &c., it is added, "For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law, but desire to have you circumcised that they may glory in your flesh." Acts 15:10, Gal.6:12,13. Thus the house of bondage is clearly traced down from ancient Egypt, to New Testament times. And are not the bondage and the glorying in the flesh above noticed fully copied out in the popular religion of this day? With all their benevolence, are not the managers, the modern task masters binding heavy burdens upon those under their influence, in their proposed conditions of salvation, in their multiplication of ceremonies and plans of benevolence, and in their tithing or taxing all the increase from the farm, the purse, the servant girls weekly wages, &c., down to the ragbag? And is not the same external show, and glorying in the flesh, manifested now as anciently? How often are we informed of their persuading persons to sign their Temperance pledges, for the sake only of the influence of their names, or their inducing persons to head a subscription with a round sum with the understanding that it was not to be paid; of their obtaining the passage of resolutions recommending the benevolent schemes, in Associations where they expect nothing further? Of the flaming reports of Agents and of Missionaries, who like the Missionary within the bounds of the Abington or Bridgewater Association, Penn., that reported through the American Baptist, 400 baptized, but who on being questioned about it, acknowledged an error, and on being questioned further, had to reduce the 400, considerably? And do the managers in these schemes manifest any greater disposition than the Scribes of old, to share the burdens? No; but rather thereby to increase their own means of worldly grandeur and show.

But this is called a Great City. And truly it is; men in all ages have manifested a fondness for a conditional salvation and a showy religion. In all ages the priests, the task-masters in the humanly contrived religions have been disposed to gratify the public whim, by loading their religion, with ceremonies and parade, and the more they have burdened the people with these things, the more popular they have been, and the more they have fattened on the spoils. This city has many streets. There is Mission street, which has Presbyterian Mission Alley, Baptist Mission Alley, &c., running out from it; there Bible Society Street, and many others. But there is one Main street or thoroughfare, where all the citizens intermingle, and where the "dead bodies of the Witnesses are to lie."

But this is also called Sodom, spiritually - not literally - remember. The sin of Sodom therefore, practiced here is in a spiritual or religious sense. And can this sin be found in the city we are describing? Yes; as the Prophet says of Jerusalem, "The shame of their countenance doth witness against them, and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not." Isa.3:9. Look at the whole mission and moneyed concern; is there any intercourse with the bride the Lamb's wife, or with her daughters, the individual gospel churches, as such in these things? Any consultation of pastor and church in managing those society plans? Not at all. The Boards of the various Societies, composed mostly of preachers, have all the intercourse among themselves. They send out the Agents and Missionaries, appoint their fields of labor, finger the money, what is not swallowed up by the Agents in the collection, and manage the whole business; it is altogether a male concern; Sodomy to the full! Yea, more. For as the Apostle speaks (Romans, chapter 1,) of a sin which was not even mentioned in Sodom; so in this great city we find female Tract Societies, female Mite Societies, female prayer meetings, &c., in which females religiously associate together, not as in churches, nor as churches, where "there is neither males, nor females, but all one in Christ Jesus;" but as females by themselves.

Having thus pointed out spiritual Egypt as exemplified in this great city, I am, I think, safe in supposing the same intended by Egypt in this 20th chapter of Isaiah. I would here make a passing remark; that the view here taken of Rev. 11:8, if correct, goes to confirm the position I took in my "Letters on the Image of the Beast," relative to the place where the Witnesses are to be killed.

But there is another character connected with the Egyptians in the passage under consideration; namely, the Ethiopians. These were a nation bordering upon Egypt, situated above it, on the same troubled and muddy River, the Nile; the waters of which both drank.

Ethiopia and Egypt are repeatedly connected together in Scripture prophecy. I however find no direct figurative application in the Scriptures, of Ethiopia, or the Ethiopians, except in Jer.11:23, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the Leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil?" This was addressed to that adulterous generation of the Jews who were about to be carried captive to Babylon, and corresponds in idea with the prophecy of Daniel, concerning the Egyptians of our day; namely, that "the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand." Dan.12:10. Amos 9:7, also may be considered a figurative application of the term, where speaking of Israel as being rejected of God and about to be driven from their land, the prophet says, "Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, saith the Lord?"

The Ethiopians in the passage we have under consideration, may refer to a distinct class from the Egyptians, but I am inclined to the belief that they are designed to prefigure the same people, and to designate them as being of the same character, having the same blackness and depravity of heart, now they have floated down the broad stream of their troubled and muddy systems, till they have got into Egypt, and near the great Sea of Babylonish corruption, and of destruction which awaits the whole mass of the Man of sin, as when they started at the source of this over-flowing river. The term may also show, that notwithstanding the white washing they may have put on, and their great pretensions to the peculiar favor of heaven, they, instead of being recognized of God as his free-born sons, are to him, as the children of the Ethiopians, and destined to be subject to perpetual bondage.

Having thus arranged the several characters brought to view in this prophecy, I will leave further consideration of the subject for another opportunity.

Yours, as ever, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Sept.26, 1836.

NO.2, ON ISAIAH 20th.

Brother Beebe: - Having in the preceding letter noticed the principal characters of the great and awful *drama*predicted in this chapter, I will now examine the facts prophetically assigned to each. We will commence with the Prophet's part as specified verse 2: "At the same time spake the Lord by Isaiah the son of Amoz saying, Go and loose the sackcloth from off thy loins and put off thy shoe from thy foot. And he did so, walking naked and barefoot." According to verse 3rd, He thus walked naked and barefoot, three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and Ethiopia.

As Isaiah and other prophets had to endure in their measure the same afflictions they were directed to pronounce upon the people, so the Great Prophet of Israel, the Antitype of those prophets, not only endured the same temptations, persecutions, and afflictions which he has appointed for his people, for he was tempted in all points like as we are; but he also subjected himself to the same wrath which is due to transgressors. And as Isaiah was three years a sign of what Egypt and Ethiopia was to suffer, so our Lord was three days a sign of what awaits the transgressors, the finally impenitent; for in his being subjected to the curse of the law in his death, we see exemplified that eternal curse which awaits them. Hence "this gospel of the kingdom is to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." But herein he far excels the type, Isaiah was only a sign, the Lord Jesus besides being thus a witness unto all nations of the wrath due them from the divine law, and hence his declaration. If they do these things in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? But he also suffered as a substitute for his people, and was made a curse for them, "to deliver them from the curse of the law." Gal.3:13. Again as the prophets were thus made to feel the afflictions they prophesied of, so the true ministers of the gospel have to be made acquainted, in their own experience, with the various temptations and trials, to which the people of God may be subject, among whom they minister; that they may know how to speak a word in season to those who are in trouble.

But 3rdly, the Prophet here, I think, represents the church of Christ; and as he had to endure beforehand nakedness and shame, representing that, coming upon Egypt and Ethiopia; so Peter assures us, I Pet. 4:17, that the time is that judgment must begin at the house of God; and adds, "And if it begin first at us, what shall the end of them be that obey not the gospel of God, &c." The connection is evidently applicable to the gospel of God in every period of the gospel day, and so I understand the Apostle as intending by the time, the gospel time; that is, that such is the order under the gospel dispensation. That no less, than in the coming of the judgment upon literal Jerusalem, must it be in the judgment of God, coming upon the Egypt where our Lord was crucified, or the man of sin; that judgment must begin at the house of God, by which is meant the Church of Christ; hence Peter says, if it begin at us. It must there begin for the trial of the faith of the saints, (verse 12 of the context,) and also for purging of the churches; for it is written, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." But the same afflictions or persecutions which the Lord, for wise purposes, suffers the Egyptians and Sodomites of this day, to inflict upon his people; he will visit upon them in a more awful degree. He giveth blood to drink, to those who have shed the blood of saints and prophets; the that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity, &c. Rev.16:6, & 13:10.

But an important inquiry in this case, is, what is intended by Isaiah's walking naked and barefoot? 1st. It was an emblem of captivity. 2nd. Of degradation and shame. As Isaiah bore the emblem, so the church must bear these. She has been for a long time in the wilderness, but she is now approaching to a state of captivity; that is like captives, the churches of Christ will be deprived of their religious liberty, and be driven from their homes, the places where they now meet in the family circle, the tents where they are sheltered from the storms of the world. In addition to this, they will experience a famine; "not of bread, nor of water; but of hearing the word of the Lord." All this will be evidently in connection with the killing of the Witnesses.

As to the degradation and shame, this was in the case of Isaiah, only so in the eyes of the people, in truth it was not so, for he was walking in obedience to the command of God; so in the case of the churches of Christ, and of the ministers of the gospel, every attempt will be made to turn their glory into shame by those who seek after leasing; or deception.

And too successful will these benevolent Egyptians be in heaping shame and contempt before men, on those who will not tread mortar in their brickyard, or in other words, who will not do their dirty work of filching pennies from widows, orphans and servants, to increase the funds of what they call the Lord's treasury; or their slavish work of grinding at their mills; and who prefer the simple manna and the water from the Rock of the wilderness, to eating the fish, and the leeks and onions of Egypt. And truly this is the diet on which the Egyptians of our day live. For as the eating of fish increases a man's thirst, so the system which they live on, as gospel, is continually increasing their thirst both for money and for the praises of men. And as your breath will publish aloud the fact, if you eat leeks or onions, so these persons must have published, all their religious doings. Such will be the shame heaped at this period upon those who will not conform to have religious burdens imposed upon them, and will not admire their parade, that it will be too insufferable a disgrace to be an Old School Baptist, for any to endure, but such as choose rather to obey God than man, and who, like Moses, have been brought by Divine grace to esteem the reproaches of Christ greater riches, than the treasures of Egypt, yea than all the funds connected with their benevolent Institutions, and all their glory. As these things must be immediately connected with the killing of the Witnesses, that event must certainly be fast approaching, for these things begin to come to pass; therefore the direction is; look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. Luke 21:23. But that which I particularly wish to notice, is the prophecy upon Egypt and Ethiopia; namely, that, "So shall the king of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt." Verse 4. As this is to be understood of a spiritual or religious captivity, it can mean nothing less than that these Egyptians shall be brought under the power of the king of Assyria, that is, of the Pope; and not only loose their liberty and forms of worship, and be oppressed as they have oppressed the true church of Christ, or as quoted before from Rev.13:10, as they have lead into captivity so shall they go into captivity; but they shall be lead clear off, that is, as I understand it, be led to submit to, or embrace popery. For it cannot be a mere persecution, or force put upon them, because it is to be to the shame of Egypt; and no shame can be attached to the persecuted as such.

Again the expression used in reference to the nakedness of these must imply something more than Isaiah's walking naked. To me it is probable that Isaiah wore breeches such as the priests wore, Exod.28:42, and such as those Africans which go naked, wear. So the churches of Christ will not be left to expose themselves to shame by acting out the corruptions of their hearts. But these Egyptians will have no such covering; all their uncleanness and vileness will be exposed to open view. The shame and contempt which they have endeavored to put upon the Old School Baptists, will be heaped four fold upon themselves; for when they go over to popery, their deception, and the tendency of their religious frenzy, toward that corrupt and beastly religion will be fully manifested.

Verse 5 and 6; "And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory. And the inhabitant of this isle shall say in that day, Behold, such is our expectation, whither we flee for help to be delivered from the king of Assyria; and how shall we escape?" The term is frequently used in scripture to denote countries beyond the sea whether properly islands or not. The they of verse 5, and the inhabitants of verse 6, do not refer to the Prophet or the church represented by him; but to the inhabitants at large.

There is, at this time, a considerable excitement among the citizens of this country on account of the great increase of Catholics among us, and the attention seems generally turned to the Home Mission, Bible, and Sunday School Societies, as preventatives to the Catholics gaining the ascendancy in our country; and the advocates of these Institutions are encouraging this excitement, and this expectation, and turning it to their advantage; to the increase of their funds and influence. Hence the sentiment which has been once and again advanced, by the advocates of the Home Mission Society, that it has a claim upon us as citizens to support it. And in thus fleeing to those institutions for help, they are building them up, increasing their influence, and thus empowering them ultimately to scatter the holy people, and kill the Witnesses. And when the expectations of the people, becomes a little more intensely fixed on these institutions, to save the country from the horrors of popery, they will sanction the putting down of those who oppose the progress of these institutions, as do we Old School Baptists, upon Bible grounds. But how awful will be the disappointment of the people, as seeing the leaders, agents, and notaries of these institutions, going over to popery. Well may they in their confusion cry out, Behold such is our expectation! The fact is, the putting down the Old School Baptist preachers, and scattering the churches, will directly hasten the consummation of this amalgamation of the Mission interest with popery; for contemptible as we may be in their eyes, whilst we have liberty to bear public testimony against their innovations and trickery, and to hold forth the doctrine and order of the New Testament. We have considerable influence in restraining them from going the whole length of their corrupt desires. Instances no doubt will occur to most of the readers of this, exemplifying the above position.

In the winding up of this great drama, will be fully exemplified that which is written, Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world, and also, God taketh the wise in their own craftiness. I Cor.1:20 & 3:19. As it ever has been, so it will be in this case, when men lean to their own understandings to guide them in religion and thus exalt the wisdom of men above the wisdom of God, they will run into the grossest absurdities. And God will take these, who are so wise to devise for Him, in their own craftiness, sending them strong delusions, by suffering them successfully to add scheme to scheme, until they land in popery, and thus turn the flattering expectations of the people, into disappointment and disgust, as the Ten kings, after giving their power one hour to the Beast, will be made to know the abominations of the whore and to hate her, &c. Rev.17:12, 16. Besides being thus allured along by their vain imprudence and presumption into popery, these Egyptians will become finally identified with the Beast, and involved in the sudden destruction that awaits that whole interest, and the declaration of God will be fulfilled in them, "That if any man worship the beast or his Image and receive his mark in his forehead, or hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture," &c. Rev.14:9, 10.

Owing to the remark I made in the commencement of the former Letter, "That I may have been mistaken in supposing that the Witnesses would be killed by the Image or two horned Beast, as expressed in my Letters on the Image of the Beast," &c., it will be proper here to make some additional observations. On first contemplating this subject I concluded it probable that the killing of the Witnesses would be brought about by the Catholics getting the ascendancy in this country, and of course by the power of the seven horned Beast. Hence the remark above quoted from Letter 1st. But on a closer examination of the subject, I feel convinced, from the connection of events, and of prophecy, as above developed, that the Witnesses will first be killed, and then will come the captivity here prophesied of the Egyptians as Christians, the professors of the church. There the dead bodies of the witnesses will be seen lying not in Babylon, but in the great City which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, &c. This seems to me to receive additional confirmation from the specified period Isaiah was to walk naked and barefoot for a sign and wonder, &c., namely - Three years. The dead bodies of the Witnesses are to lie before life from God enters into them, three prophetic days and a half; that is, three years and a half. And as the three years captivity of these Egyptians is to terminate in their being involved in the destruction of the Beast, by the pouring out of the vials of the wrath of God, as has been showed in part, and is fully confirmed by Rev.16:2, this period certainly cannot terminate previous to the killing of the Witnesses, or after the commencement of the Three and a half years.

You see I am again at my old practice of counting numbers; but as periods and numbers have been, by the Holy Spirit, connected with the prophecies concerning the Beast and his Image, I do not feel that I have any more right to throw away, or to treat with neglect these numbers or periods, than I have any other parts of the prophecies.

Brethren therefore, I hope, will excuse me for trying to count or compute these numbers, not to display my wisdom, but for a better understanding of the wisdom of God therein revealed in a mystery. I must also beg the excuse of certain brethren, if I have or again should, make my objections to anything delivered as Divine prophecy which seems to stand for support, not upon the direct portions of the more sure word of prophecy, which we have, but upon strong impressions made upon the minds of those who deliver such. If I err in this, may the Lord and my brethren forgive me. A word to the wise is sufficient.

But to return to the subject before us. At what ever period this captivity may come upon Egypt. It will be a rapid conquest which the Catholics or spiritual Chaldeans will make according to Hab.1:5-11. The description given of it by this prophet is terrible. That this prophesy had not a final accomplishment in the captivity of the Jews by the king of Babylon's army, is evident from Paul's quoting the 5th verse, and addressing a caution therefrom to the Jews to whom he spake. See Acts 13:40, 42. As therefore an accomplishment of the prophecy was looked for since the commencement of the gospel dispensation, and of course must refer to Chaldea or Babylon spiritually, no event seems more to correspond with the rapidness of the conquest here predicted, than that last grand struggle of the beast, when the kings shall agree and give their kingdoms unto the beast and receive power as kings one hour with the beast &c. See Rev.17:12,17. But rapid and terrible as may be this last prophecy of popery, the church of Christ may adopt the language of Habakkuk in verse 12th of the same chapter and connection, "Art thou not from everlasting, O Lord my God, mine Holy One? We shall not die, O Lord, thou hast ordained them for judgment; and, O Mighty God, thou hast established them for correction."

Again, the prophet Isaiah compares this same conquest by the spiritual Assyrians, to the overflowing of a mighty river, Isa.8:5,8.

This overflowing is to fill the breadth of Immanuel's land, the conquest therefore is to extend over all countries where the churches of Christ are. It must be a very contracted and forced construction that would confine the prophecy of this and the preceding chapter to the conquest of Israel and Judah literally, by the Assyrians. Notice the sign given, chap.7:11, and compare that with what has just been quoted from verse 8, chapter 8.

I have thus given the views my mind has been led to receive from this 20th chapter of Isaiah, and from a comparison thereof with other Scriptures referred to. The time I think is short, in which the correctness or incorrectness of these views will be decided. I have no idea that they will be found perfectly correct, or so in every point. They may be wholly wrong, I leave others to form their own opinions from an examination of the Scriptures referred to, and others relating to the same subject. One thing is certain, the word of God will abide, and every prophecy therein contained will receive its just and full accomplishment, and at the appointed time, whether we or any of us, have wisdom given us to discern the signs of the times as they approach or not, and in spite of all the devices of men to change the times. Daniel says, the wise shall understand, and none of the wicked shall understand. Into God's hand would I commit my times and ways, and wait patiently for him. Still I think it my duty to seek and to understand what he has been pleased to reveal, and to discern the signs of the times, and if he give me understanding therein, to him belongs, and to him will result the glory and the praise.

Yours, in Brotherly Affection, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Sept.26, 1836.

REMARKS ON ISAIAH 51:1

(LOOK UNTO THE ROCK WHENCE YE ARE HEWN, AND TO THE HOLE OF THE PIT WHENCE YE ARE DIGGED)

Dear Brother Beebe: There is one more text which has been on hand for some time, for my views through the at the request, by letter, of an esteemed sister, on which I now wish to offer some remarks, if agreeable to you to publish them. I had hoped that this would have been the last request of the kind made of me; not that I am unwilling to give such views as I have of any text of Scripture, or that it is not a satisfaction to me to express them when I feel like writing; but I apprehend that the infirmities of mind incident to old age must begin to show themselves in my writing. These infirmities are much sooner discovered by others than one's self. And there are younger and much abler writers for the on whom brethren may call for expositions.

The text above referred to, on which my views are requested, is Isaiah 51:1, "Hearken to me ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord; look unto the rock whence ye are digged." The connection shows that Zion's members are here addressed, and that the design of the address throughout is to encourage and comfort them under all their discouragements and distresses. It is true that Paul represents Israel as following after the law of righteousness, and the Gentiles as not having followed after righteousness Rom.9:30-31. The Jews follow after the law of righteousness, but do not attain to it because they seek it, as it were by the works of the law, that is, being ignorant of God's righteousness they go about to establish their own righteousness, and therefore never attain to it, nor to an obedience to the law. But the Gentiles, while in a state of nature, do not follow after righteousness, they do not know it. Believers do know it, hence in the 7th verse of the context they are characterized as knowing righteousness. And such know where their righteousness is, that it is only in Christ; that He alone is the righteousness of His people. They are satisfied with it as being abundantly sufficient for their justification; hence they want no other, or are filled, as Christ said, those who hunger and thirst after it shall be Mt. 5:6.

Yet it is a true characteristic of believers that they follow after righteousness. They even feel their need of it, as the ground of their acceptance in appearing before God, and therefore ever wish to be grasping it by faith as their plea. Not only this, but they are following after it, that they may grasp it more strongly by faith, and bring it more closely and more assuredly to themselves as theirs. Again, they want to find righteousness in themselves, and they follow after it (for they love the law), with the desire to attain to it in their works and in their thoughts.

Believers also are they who seek the Lord. They seek Him in that they desire to know more of Him. They seek Him because they constantly desire to have His presence with them, and to enjoy the tokens of His love. In these points of view He often appears to be hidden from them, hence they seek Him. Again, they seek the Lord in seeking to show forth His salvation, in seeking to honor Him, and be conformed to His word.

But the main points on which my views are requested are the rock and the hole of the pit. In preaching from this text some years since, I considered both expressions as having reference to that state of nature from which the people of God had been taken by grace. The rock as representing the hardness and impenitency of man in a state of nature, and both figures as representing their entire incapacity in a state of nature, their entire destitution of life or any principle of action by which they could sever themselves from their relations to the world as living in wickedness and under the curse of the law. Although I probably preached correct doctrine and experience, I am now satisfied that I gave a wrong construction to this part of the text and the import of these figures. In the first place, although the heart is represented as stone, yet God says He will take it away and give a heart of flesh. Whereas the hewing a piece of sculpture, or a block, from a rock does not alter the nature of that which is hewn out, it remains rock still. Although Peter represents the saints as "lively stones built up a spiritual house," &c., yet this representation of them as "lively stones," evidently refers to the new man in the believer, and not to the old man, for the old man would not form a spiritual house. In the second place, mankind is not in Scripture represented by a rock or anything solid, but by dust and ashes, by the grass of the field, &c., as light and vain. On the other hand, our God, or God in Christ, is represented in Scripture as a rock, as is also Christ in His mediatorial person abundantly represented as a rock or stone, as in Deut.32:4-31; Ps.18:46; I Cor. 10:4, and in other places. Hence, in being governed by the testimony of Scripture, I feel bound to consider Christ as the rock spoken of in this text. Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn. This probably will appear as a strange idea to many that Zion in her members should be represented as hewn out of Christ. But it is no more strange than that Eve, in her distinct existence, should have been formed of Adam, and after her distinct formation remain bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. The term hewn is here used to denote the distinct manifestation of the church and her members in conformity to the figure of a rock as used. It brings clearly to view, in conformity with other testimony of Scripture, the existence of the saints or the church in their spiritual life in Christ before their distinct manifestation. In the art of sculpture, the statue lay in its substance in the block of marble before it ever received its distinct formation. The sculptor only brought it to view in its distinct form and features by the use of his chisel.

Its substance was there before and it still remains, though it may be a statue of Washington, the same marble rock it was before. So the church and saints remain in their distinct manifestation as saints, the same Christ, the church being His body, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all Eph. 1:23. And the church collectively is called Christ I Cor. 12:12. Christ is in them the hope of glory, and is their life. Well, therefore, may the saints amidst all their difficulties, under all their persecutions, and their being dwindled down by divisions, and amid all their individual conflicts, be directed to the Rock whence they were hewn, or of which they are hewn, for the whence is a supply by the translator. And surely the rock of those who would worry and waste us by opposition and divisions, &c,is not like our Rock, our enemies themselves being judges. Our Rock is the Almighty, the only wise God, He is ever with and in the midst of His people, is and ever has been one with them, is their life, their foundation, their chief corner stone; with whom as such, no comparison can be made from human architecture; He is a living stone, and His life is disseminated through all the materials of the building, making them lively stones, and one with Him, so that this Rock, this foundation must be destroyed before the building can fall, or one stone.

"And to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged." This, as I understand it, relates to that state of condemnation in which mankind are sunken as transgressors of the law, they being as prisoners shut up in the pit of depravity. Hence it is said to the daughters of Zion, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein there is no water" Zech.9:11. The hole of the pit out of which they are digged, has reference to the fact that the whole human family are in the pit, or state of condemnation in a mass together; and hence when any are digged, or taken out, there is a hole made in the mass, or evidence left of their having been in that pit. Hence the direction is to the children of grace in their difficulties, distresses and discouragements, to "Look to the hole of the pit;" look back to where you once lay in the darkness, ignorant of yourself and of God, and of the spirituality of His law. Afterwards there was light let into the pit; that is, your eyes were enlightened to see your relation to God, and your condemnation as a transgressor of His law. You tried to bring yourself into favor with God; but you were shut up under the law in this pit of depravity; you found it a horrible pit, and your feet sinking deeper and deeper in the mire. Nay, you knew of no other medium to look for relief but to the law, and that demanded full payment and held you fast as its prisoner, so that you found yourself as helpless to deliver yourself as would be a clod of dirt to throw itself out of a pit that was being dug. Now, if a believer, you can look back and see this hole of the pit, that place under the law in which you once lay. And you know you were thrown, or taken out of it. You know that you were once delivered from that sense of condemnation and guilt, and brought into a state of peace, and felt a confidence in approaching God with your thanksgivings and supplications which you had not felt before; and felt a hope springing up in your breast that your sins were forgiven, &c. You may have thought very soon after that you were deceived, and wanted to get back again under the law, and again to feel that distress, that sense of guilt and condemnation which had been removed from you; but you found you could not get back under it; that you were as much shut out from it now as you were shut up under it before. You were sensible that you were a vile sinner, but you could not feel the condemnation and wrath for it as before, and you were distressed that you could not feel it. You have never, from that day to this, thought of ascribing it to anything else that you were sent forth out of that pit, but to the blood of Zion's covenant, or the new covenant. And you have never, from that day to this, thought of looking to the law, or to your obedience to it, as the medium of your acceptance with God. Now, if you can see that hole of the pit where you know you once were, and know that you are no longer in it, you have the evidence that you are no longer under the law. And if not under it, then, of course, not subject to its curse; and if freed from the curse of the law, nothing can hurt you. You may have heavy trials, difficulties and temptations, but no evil can come to you from them.

The people of God are further directed in the following verse to "look to Abraham their father, and to Sarah, that bear them," &. In this we may see, if we will look, that Abraham's being called alone, his becoming old, nor the barrenness of Sarah, could prevent the accomplishment of God's promise to Abraham concerning a seed. Neither could the perverseness of Jacob's sons, nor the obstinacy of Pharaoh, nor the Red Sea, nor the barrenness of the desert, nor the rebellion of Israel in the wilderness, nor any other obstacle, prevent the fulfillment of God's promise to Abraham's seed, that they should be put in possession of the land of Canaan. From this we may be assured that nothing is too hard for the Lord, and that all He has promised to his church and people He will assuredly accomplish.

But I have written enough to show my views of the text, and here I will leave it, as I fear I am not writing to much profit.

Yours in love, Elder Samuel Trott, Signs of the Times, Vol. 27 (1859)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 153-158

REMARKS ON JAMES 5:14-15

Brother Beebe: - The apostolic direction contained in James 5:14-15, is another subject of enquiry by Brother Moore. The text reads thus: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Until within a few months past, my views of this passage had been that it related only to that period in which special gifts of the Spirit were conferred on the churches; and that it was through the exercise of these gifts that this healing was to be expected. But four or five months since, in reading the passage, I was lead to a very different view of it, and the subject seemed to open to my mind so much light and clearness that I then thought I would embrace the first opportunity to write out my views for the Signs. When, however, such opportunity arrived, the liveliness of those views was somewhat gone, and dreading the charges being repeated that I was trying to bring forward things singular and new in order to become a leader, I therefore let it pass.

If a desire to see our Old School brethren laying aside the traditions of men, both ancient and modern, and seeking to be closely conformed in all things to the only standard of truth in religion, the New Testament, and this desire prompting me to action in bringing things to the test of that one standard, regardless of the generally received opinions of men, justly subjects me to the above charge, so be it. As Brother Moore has requested my views on this text, I will now endeavor to give them; only aiming to bring forward what I believe designed by the text under consideration. If any consider my views wrong, let them show them to be such by the Scriptures, in a becoming spirit, and a kindness will be done both to me and others. If not, and they are not satisfied with my views, it is not for me to dictate their course.

But to come to the subject in hand. I will in the first place remark that the form of the direction here given does not correspond with the idea that the intention was to recommend the sick to those on whom was conferred the gift of healing, as one of those special gifts conferred by the Spirit in the first age of the church. For, according to Paul's account, this, like every other special gift, was conferred only on particular individuals; hence he says, "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing?" etc., (1 Cor. 12:8-10, 29-30). It must, therefore, be manifest that the direction would have been, if those gifts had been designed, to send for those who had the gift of healing; instead of this direction to send for the elders of the church, simply in their official relation, without any specification concerning gifts.

Again, the direction given as to how the elders shall proceed does not comport with the view given of the exercise of the gift of healing. As in the instance of the healing of the lame man, by Peter's saying, "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk," he was healed (Acts 3:6), so also in the case of AEneas (Acts 9:33-34), Paul's healing the father of Publius and others, appears to have been different from the direction here given. See Acts 28:8-9. If then this passage does not relate wholly to the exercise of the extraordinary gifts which were in the churches in the apostolic age, as I think will appear evident to those who will candidly examine this point, it must be considered as an apostolic direction to the saints at large, and therefore to extend to all after ages. In fact, from the circumstances of the Apostle's having written this epistle near the close of the Apostolic age, or the period which preceded the destruction of Jerusalem, it appears to me reasonable to suppose that this direction was designed by the Holy Ghost to meet the necessities of the saints after the gift of healing and other extraordinary gifts would have ceased; they having answered their purpose for the confirmation of the gospel, in its first publication in all the world for a witness unto all nations.

The direction here given, as I understand its import, is for the sick to commit their case directly to the Lord Jesus Christ, and in this prescribed form, by which faith in His sovereign power to heal is fully and publicly expressed, as also an acknowledgment of His authority in the case.

The faith that is necessarily required to perform this act acceptably to God (I speak not here of the *prayer of faith*which I shall again notice), is no other than the faith which the centurion expressed when he said, "Lord I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; but speak the word only and my servant shall be healed; for I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me; and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it" (Matthew 8:8-9). The centurion, by this form of _expression, showed that he had faith to believe that the Lord Jesus had the same control over diseases, to send and recall them at His pleasure, as he had over his soldiers and servants which were under him. Although the Master declared this to be greater faith than He had found in Israel, yet methinks an Old School Baptist ought surely to have as great faith in his Lord.

I will now notice the direction in its several parts. 1st. "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church." It is then to be the voluntary act of the sick, by which he shall thus manifest his confidence in the Lord Jesus and subjection to His appointments. It is also thus made the duty of the elder or elders sent for to attend. 2nd. "And let them pray over him anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." Olive or sweet oil is evidently intended, as that is the common oil of the Scriptures. As pouring oil on the heads of persons appointed to office was expressive of the communication of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit qualifying the person for the office, and as anointing the head was also an expression of cheerfulness, thankfulness, etc., the ceremony on this occasion of anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, may be designed as expressing a cheerful hope that the grace of the Lord may be extended to the healing of the sick, as well as a cheerful submission to His will; or its application to the diseased parts, perhaps for its medical qualities; like Isaiah's applying figs for a plaster upon the boils of Hezekiah (Isaiah 38:21).

3rd. "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." I do not understand by this that in all cases where this direction is observed that the sick will be raised up to health or that in any case through the observance of this institution the saints will live beyond their appointed time. By the prayer of faith I understand that prayer which is specially indicted by the Holy Spirit and therefore according to the will of God (Romans 8:26-27).

When the Spirit thus helpeth our infirmities, there is faith given us to believe that God hath heard our prayer, and hence a cheerful resting on Him for the accomplishment of the thing desired, in His own time and way. This prayer of faith is therefore a pledge to the sick, that the Lord hath rebuked his disease, and will again raise him up. It is the duty of the elders on this as in officiating on other occasions, to lead in public prayer unto God, but on this, as much as on other occasions, are they dependent on the special influence of the Holy Spirit to enable them to offer the prayer of faith; and as much so as are private members. Further we have reason to believe that where there is a submission to this institution in faith, even when the prayer of faith shall not be offered, and therefore the disease not removed, there will, nevertheless, be a blessing attend it, in giving to the sick a calm, resignation to the will of God, and a peaceful waiting for Him. A very different state this from that frequent distress of body, and anxiety of mind consequent upon submitting to, and waiting upon the doctor's prescriptions.

4thly. "And if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." This sentence, to me, conveys the idea that sickness is sometimes sent upon the saints as chastisement for their having indulged in sin. It also gives the assurance that, when this is the case, and the Lord is thus sought unto in the way of His appointment, the sin shall be forgiven and he healed.

Isaiah 33:24, seems also to support this idea: "And the inhabitant shall not say I am sick" (why? because) "the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity." Thus also the case of the Corinthian Church (1 Corinthian 11:30-31).

When this subject was first presented to my mind, as applicable to the saints in all ages, I was particularly led to admire the care which the Lord had thus manifested for His people to relieve them from the necessity of being dependent on the learned professions of the world, and thereby of being subject to be oppressed by them. Of what the world denominates the learned professions, the priesthood is undoubtedly the worst and the oppression which they exercise upon the consciences and persons of those subjected to them, under the pretense that they alone are, by their learning, capable of expounding the Scriptures and declaring the will of God unto the people is the most galling and cruel. But the professions of law and medicine, from the consideration that a special course of learning is the essential prerequisite to the practice thereof, but more particularly from the fact of exclusive laws being enacted even in our free country for their benefit, may properly be considered as monopolies. Hence peculiar advantages are possessed by the practitioners in each of these professions to oppress those who are brought to depend on them. I would not be understood as intimating that there are not many honest and honorable men in each of these last two named professions, men who will be faithful to the trust reposed in them. Neither will I here assert that there are any of an opposite character; it being not necessary for my argument. It is enough to know that these monopolies give to each class great advantages to oppress if disposed to use them. The one practitioner, by protracting the course of law and by extravagant charges, may fleece his client almost at his pleasure; the other, by charges of a similar character and by procrastinating the perfect recovery of his patient, may take large sums from him. But worse still the practitioner of medicine may, with impunity from the law, trifle with both the constitution and life of his patient in trying experiments on his case, if rascal enough to do it. There is, therefore, great danger in putting ourselves on a general scale into the hands of men having such power, unless when we have the fullest confidence both in their skill and in their uprightness.

But when we reflect that not many wise men after the flesh, and therefore not many of the learned of this world are called, by grace; and consider further that by a determination to live godly in Christ Jesus, the believer draws upon him the opposition and even the persecution of the world, how important for the protection of the saints, under such circumstances, that they should not have to seek help for the preservation of their rights and their health from persons having such power to oppress them. Brethren, we have in our generation been in a great measure freed from the persecutions which others have suffered, and having gone along so smoothly with the world, we do not feel the full weight of the gracious provision made in our text for the saints, and also in the text: Matthew 10:18-20. "And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which is in heaven. "But let times come, such as some of the younger of us may live to see, and then we shall prize such gracious provisions as are made in these texts for the saints. More might be said to show the guards which the New Testament gives to the saints against being brought under the power of these several professions; but enough has been said to lead my brethren to reflect on the subject.

Perhaps Brother Moore may be desirous to know whether I have ever acted in obedience to this apostolic direction. I answer that I have not. In the first place, I have no idea that it would be proper to call for the elders of the churchon every slight attack of cold or disease, for which simple remedies are at hand, and within the knowledge of almost every family, any more than it is prudent to send for a physician in all such cases. 2nd. I should not consider it proper to insist on this course in reference to any member of my family, especially of any age, unless by their choice. In case of sickness myself, I now think, if my faith fail not, that I should obey the apostolic direction, if elders be within reach, who would be willing to attend the call. At any rate, I would prefer committing my case to the Lord to seeking to physicians as did Asa, as in II Chron. 16:12. If called to attend the sick in obedience to this apostolic direction, and I believed that the sick had faith in the appointment as being of divine authority, I should not hesitate to officiate.

One thing more remains to be considered in reference to this subject, namely: The objection which will be made against my views that miracles have ceased, and that this apparently implies a miracle, seeing that healing is anticipated without the use of adequate secondary means. But is it a fact that miracles have ceased, that is, that no events take place which are not brought about by the regular operation of certain fixed laws of nature? I admit that the gift of tongues, the gift of healing, etc., are not now in the churches, as in the apostolic ages, and that men are not now empowered to work miracles, as were the prophets and apostles. But I cannot believe that the Lord Jesus Christ has either laid aside, or suspended, His power to accomplish His own purposes concerning either the work of salvation or the government of the world, independent of the regular operation of any natural laws. In the affairs of the world many events take place which can be consistently accounted for on no principle but that of the special providential government of God, or rather, more properly of Christ, as Mediator, to whom is given all power in heaven and in earth. As to the great work of salvation, which is continually going on, it is from first to last a continued series of miracles. No power of man, no natural cause, or law of nature, can give efficacy to the gospel of Christ so as to minister consolation to the child of grace, nothing short of the immediate power of God the Holy Ghost can open the heart of the unregenerate to receive the truth as it is in Jesus. The gifts which alone can constitute even a child of grace a true minister of the gospel of Christ, cannot be derived from the schools, they must be communicated direct from Christ, who alone has received gifts for men. But to come to the point in hand; Is there a natural and necessary connection between the skill and medicine of the physician, and the recovery of health to the sick? A Predestinarian Bapist who admits that affliction cometh not forth of the dust, at least, whatever others may think, will not believe that the skill of man, who is but dust, can control affliction, or that God is dependent on the exertion of the doctor's skill for the removal of affliction.

There are instances of frequent occurrences when the physician acknowledges he has exhausted his skill and can do no more, and yet the sick person, after all, recovers.

Many other instances, I will venture the assertion, there are in which physicians, if they would state the truth, have exhausted their skill, yet they continue to prescribe more to keep up the appearance of trying to do, or by way of experiment, more from any hopes of their patient's recovering. Now if under such circumstances, you will consent that the doctor's prescriptions had any hand in bringing about the recovery, you must admit that it was not big skill which directed the result. What was it then? Was it chance, or an overruling Providence that directed to the remedy? If then, whether it be miracle, or not miracle, God does thus interpose and restore health where the physician's skill has failed, why may we not hope that without the aid of the doctor, God will recall the affliction, when the sick, turning from every other helper, looks by faith to Him alone, and that according to the direction of His word? Will any still say that God has appointed the skill and medicine of the doctor as the alone means through the use of which we have a right to expect the earth to produce bread? Let them establish this fact and we submit. But one of two things must be proved in order to establish it. They must either show that there is a fixed law of nature by which healing is the natural result of the application of the doctor's skill and medicine, as the pointing of the needle to the polar star is the effect of magnetism or as the falling of heavy bodies let loose to the earth, is according to the fixed law of gravitation. Or they must show where God has revealed the appointment to such connection between the doctor's art of healing, and the removal of disease, as He has declared the appointment that in the sweat of man's face shall he eat bread, until he return unto the ground. Neither of which can they show, and therefore to divine appointment for a dependence on the doctor's skill for health, can be proved. Thus much for this subject.

The last text proposed as matter of enquiry by Brother Moore is Genesis 4:7. The difficulty I apprehend, apparent in this text, arises from supposing sin to be the subject spoken of in the latter part of the verse. I formerly so apprehended it, and the import of the text, was incomprehensible to me. In order to a correct understanding of this text, it is necessary to consider that Cain was the elder brother, and therefore considered himself entitled to the preeminence, hence his anger against Abel, considering the acceptance of Abel's offering and rejection of his own, as a preferring of Abel before him. The Lord is, therefore, in this text reasoning with him on this ground, showing him that if his offering was not accepted, sin, and not a preference to Abel, was the cause of it. That if he did not well, sin lieth at the door, and thus separated between him and the divine favor, God appears to him to say: If he did well, should not he be accepted, and after showing the cause of his rejection, namely: in sins lying at the door(that sentence being parenthetical), goes on to assure him that if he did thus well, Abel's desire should be unto him, and he should rule over him. The form of expression here used is the same as that used in Genesis 3:16, in reference to Eve's subjection to her husband. The expression: Thy desire shall be to thy husband, I cannot conceive was designed to import that her affections should be to him, for that could not be considered a punishment or an effect of sin, but the import I conceive to be is that she should feel herself dependent on him as her head. So in the other case: And unto thee shall be his desire, was designed to show that Abel should acknowledge his dependence on Cain and subjection to him. Thus the false religionists of our day quarrel with the saints and with the doctrine of election, &c., as though that was the cause of their religious services being rejected; whereas the sinfulness of their own self- devised performances, and their not worshipping in faith, is the ground of their being rejected as reprobate silver.

I remain yours, &c.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Jan.10, 1840

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.8 (1840)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 200 - 207

Laborers Together With God.

Brother Beebe: - I have been requested by a distant brother to give an exposition of I Cor.3:9, through the *Signs.*I have once had occasion to give my views on this text through your paper within the past three or four years, but that exposition may not be in the possession of many of the present readers of the Signs, and hence my giving them again may not be unacceptable to some others beside the brother requesting them.

My opinion is that the translators entirely mistook the import of this text and also of II Cor.6:1, which occasioned their giving them the turn they have in the translation; and it is something surprising they should have thus mistaken, as the context, as I propose shortly to show, so clearly fixes the import. They evidently understand the compound word, sunergoi, which they have rendered laborers together as designed to represent Paul and Apollos as being associated with God in their labors; whereas the Apostle clearly used it to denote the equality of him and Apollos, being associated together as fellow-laborers in God's service. Hence Theos, God in the translation, stands in the same relation to sunergoi, as it does respectively to the words rendered husbandry and building; it being Theou, in the genitive or possessive case, in each instance; and therefore required to be rendered God's laborers together, instead of Laborers together with God, just as the next clause was correctly rendered, ye are God's husbandry, instead of ye are the husbandry with God. There is a difficulty in conveying the precise idea intended to be conveyed in this connection by the word sunergoi, in our language without a circumlocution of words. It might be rendered helpers, servants, or fellow- laborers. But helpers or servants, would express in this relation, the one a wrong idea and the other not the full idea. That which comes nearest to the true translation of this passage is this: We are God's associate-laborers, (that is laborers associated together in God's service) ye are God's husbandry, God's building. In II Cor.6:1, there is no excuse for the translators making it read as it does, excepting the making it correspond with their translation of this other text. It stands in the translation thus: "We then as workers together with Him beseech you," &c. The words with Him being printed in italics showing that there is nothing in the original answering to them. Why not then read it and understand it as the Apostle wrote it, "We then as workers together, (or fellow-laborers) beseech you," &c.

On noticing the context in I Cor., chapter 3, we shall find it fully supporting the import of the 9th verse as conveyed in the translation I have given above. In reproving the Corinthian brethren for their division, as in the first four verses, Paul represents them as accounting too highly of him and Apollos &c., hence his language in the 5th verse. But what is it? Does he say: Would you know who Paul and Apollos are, they are God's helpers, laborers together with Him in working out your salvation? No, very different! It is this: "Who then is Paul and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom you believed, even as the Lord gave to every man." In verse 6, he brings himself and Apollos to view as fellow- laborers, "I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase;" and in verse 7, "So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God, that giveth the increase." Thus he shows that God was all in all, in their salvation, whilst he and Apollos were nothing but God's servants by whom they believed. In verses 8 & 9 he reproves the Corinthians still further, as holding him and Apollos as different leaders, by one saying, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, and therefore he shows himself and Apollos, to be but one, but fellow-laborers not in their own, but God's husbandry. Whilst therefore this 9th verse as it stands in the common translation clashes in import with the preceding verses, in the construction I have given to it, there is a harmony in the import of the whole.

A few remarks in reference to the system of the missionaries. They bring these texts to sustain them in their notion of being co-workers with God, yea, they go so far as to say that God cannot save sinners without the aid of preachers.

Admitting this to be the fact, and the conclusion is irresistible, that God has never in earnest purposed the salvation of sinners, notwithstanding His having given His Son, to save them, but that He looks on it with an entire indifference, whether they get to heaven or sink to hell. Let us just take one heathen, in a land where the gospel is not now preached, and count some of the leading contingencies that stand in the way of his salvation, according to the missionaries notions. A missionary must be sent to him, to obtain this, to go, back no further: 1st, a young man must consent to become religious: 2nd, he must devote himself to the ministry: 3rd, schools must be established where he can obtain the necessary qualifications: 4th, he being a poor pious young man; beggars must go forth and succeed in obtaining money to defray the expenses of his education, and the ladies must become sufficiently interested in his education to furnish him with clothing: 5th, when all this is done, he must decide on going to the heathen, instead of seeking a call in some other field: 6th, he must find a wife willing to go with him: 7th, on application to the Board he must be judged to be of the right stamp: 8th, the public must be induced to contribute money enough to sustain the other establishments, &c., and to enable the Board to furnish him his outfit, &c.: 9th, the winds and waves and skill of the mariners must contribute to waft him in safety to his intended port: 10th, he must not get sick of his undertaking, and therefore invent an excuse to return, as some have: 11, after this, if the natives neither conclude to eat him, being cannibals, nor drive him from them, he may become settled as a missionary among them: 12, if he lives long enough he may acquire a knowledge of the language so as to write and circulate tracts among them, and preach, &c. Now to the individual heathen whose salvation we started for, and 13, he must not have died during this long space whilst the missionary was being prepared: 14, he must fall in with the missionaries' tracts or preaching: 15th, he must be convinced by the missionaries' arguments of the truth of the christian religion: 16th, he must have resolution sufficient to profess that religion and then, 17th, if he hold out in his profession, he will, according to the mission notion of conversion, get to heaven. Here then are 17 contingencies, besides chains of others connected with each, standing between this man and heaven, should any one of them fail to take place, all would fail, and neither the zeal of the missionary, nor the labors of the theological professors, nor the money collected and expended, nor the shedblood of Christ would save this individual from the quenchless fire of hell. Can any man whose judgment is not perverted by religious frenzy, believe that a God infinite in knowledge, wisdom and power, could will the salvation of sinners and yet leave their salvation to depend on the uncertain issue of such a mass of contingencies? Can anything more absurd be found ascribed by the heathen to their gods, than the missionaries thus ascribe to their god, in representing Him as willing, and attempting the salvation of sinners through the sacrifice of His own Son, and yet leaving their salvation to depend altogether on such a combination of human contingencies? Well do the missionaries term their god, the God of missions, and not ascribe to Him the title claimed for our God, namely: THE GOD OF OUR SALVATION.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Jan. 7, 1841 S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.9 (1841)

ANOTHER ARTICLE ON THE ON AND THREENESS GOD

Brother Beebe: A brother in a letter I received recently containing strictures on what I have given as the scriptural doctrine of God's existence as one and three, refers me to a passage in my 4th number as conveying the idea God the godhead was humbled, suffered, etc; and on looking at the passage again, found on column three, page 138, Signs Vol. VIII, No. 18, I see it is liable to such a construction when taken irrespectively of what I have written in other numbers. I wish therefore to offer an explanation of it. The passage is this, "that this one Jehovah exists as three and so exists as three, that in all his divine majesty and perfections, he as the Father remains the invisible God, high seated on his throne, rolling on his eternal purpose, maintain the honors of his throne, demanding and accepting satisfaction for his transgressed law. At the same time, as the Son, be appointed heir of all things, be made a high priest, offer himself in sacrifice."

As I was here Speaking of Jehovah in his essential existence, as three and not of the Son distinctly as uniting the godhead and humanity in his person, it did not occur to me, that any would understand me as intending to convey the idea that the God hid itself was made a sacrifice. The idea I intended to convey was that God so existed as three, that while as the Father he was exercising all the prerogatives of the divine throne, he, as the apostle said, was manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seeing of angels, or in other words that the fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily in Christ Jesus, so that in Christ that God had and humanity so existed in personal unity that he was to Jehovah while exercising the office of mediator between God and men, and while humbling himself as the Son of man, and yet it was only as Christ that he was appointed mediator, and as man that he suffered. Hence the work of redemption accomplished by him in his humiliation had the perfection of the godhead in it. The righteousness which he wrought out, is the righteousness of God, Romans 3.22; 2nd Corinthians 5.31; and the blood which Jesus shed is spoken of as the blood of God, Acts 20.28.

S. Trott

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia January 29, 1841

REMARKS ON EXODUS 10.1

Brother Beebe: my views through the Signs, on Exodus 10.1, have been requested. The text is this, the Lord said unto Moses, go unto Pharaoh; for I have hardened his heart and, the heart of his servants, that I might show these my signs before them.

To a particular point, I presume, on which my views are desired, is that of the Lord's hardening the heart of Pharaoh and of his servants. The difficulty of this passage, though esteemed quite a difficult one, does not consist of any obscurity of language, for the declaration is plain that the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, But it, I apprehend, in a great measure, arises from the opposition of our hearts to bowing with becoming reverence to the absolute sovereignty of God. There is a rebellious perverseness in our nature which prevents our feeling, at least but seldom, anything like that holy submission, that stillness of soul which should pervade us in view of the sovereign right of God to do what he will with his own; and of the fact that we are the thing formed and that God formed us; that to him belongs to right absolutely, to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor.

The apostle in Romans 9 places the arrogance of man in replying against God upon the sole ground of God's sovereign right as the maker of all things to dispose his mercy as he please; and on this ground alone the awful presumption of men is manifest in arranging him at the bar of human reason, and finding fault with those dispensations which we can never scan, never see the end from the beginning. But God in being manifested as the creator is made known to be as wise as he is absolute, as good as he is powerful, as gracious as he is high, and as merciful as he is just; a consideration of God's being such, and a sense of what we are as creatures, and more especially as fallen creatures, constitutes an abundant reason why we should lay our hand upon our mouth and be still knowing that he is God, how much soever the acts of his government are above our comprehension.

Another difficulty to acknowledging the sovereign right of God to deal thus with Pharaoh and others consists in our utter incapability to understand how God accomplishes his own independent and determinate counsel, in, with, and by man, without infringing upon that freedom of voluntary action which is necessary to him as an accountable creature. Yet God does so control man and all his acts, whilst men at the same time his acting out their own inclinations and is therefore justly accountable for their acts. Such is evidently the case in reference to the Pharaoh. God explicitly declares beforehand what should be, and that he so controlled Pharaoh or hardened his heart as to bring it about. He says, exodus 3.19-20; "and I am sure the king of Egypt will not let you go, no not by a mighty hand. And I will stretch out my hand upon Egypt." In chapter 4.21 he tells Moses: "But I will harden Pharaoh's heart and multiply my sins and my wonders in the land of Egypt. And Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you."

Again, God sends Moses with this message to him, chapter 9.14-16; "for I will at this time send all my plagues upon your heart, and upon your servants, and upon your people that you may know that there is none like me in all the earth. For now, I will stretch out my hand that I may smite you, and your people with pestilence, and you shall be cut off from the earth. And in very deed for this cause have I raised you up, for to show in you my power, and that my name may be declared in all the earth."

On the other hand, it is equally evident that God in all this dealt with the Pharaoh as a rational and accountable creature, and though it was of God his heart was hardened, it was only that he was led on, and permitted to persist in his rebellious determination to resist the demand of God for the release of Israel, until God should have inflicted upon him and his people all those plagues which he had determined injustice to visit them for their oppression of his people. Hence in the very connection of the last quotation, exodus 9.17, Moses is directed to address the Pharaoh thus, "as yet you exalt yourself against my people that you will not let them go?" Pharaoh acknowledges once and again that it was his own wicked act and did not let Israel go. Exodus 9.17, says, "I have sinned this time; The lord is righteous and I and my people are wicked." In chapter 10.16, he says to Moses: "I have sinned against the Lord your God and against vou."

And He is said to have hardened his own heart, as in Exodus 8:15: "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite he hardened his heart and hearkened not unto them, as the Lord had said." Again the same in verse 32; and in verse 29, Moses reasons with him as its being his own act. He says, "But let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully anymore and not letting the people go." Thus we see that while God makes use of the Pharaoh, works in him, and with him, to accomplish his own sovereign purpose, raised him up to show in him his power and to declare his name throughout all the earth, Pharaoh, in refusing to let Israel go, acts with that self-determination which fully proved it to have been his own voluntary act; that he acted as a free agent, according to the sense in which some used a term, and which the term properly imports, that is one who acts voluntarily or from choice. An independent agent or doer cannot exist short of the independent God.

Thus all rational creatures while they act completely under the government and control of God, being made to accomplish his purpose even in their wicked opposition to him, act voluntarily, consulting and acting out the inclination of their own hearts. Neither is it necessary that God should infuse, in any way, any hardness or rebellion of heart to his government, into men in order to induce them to act wickedly or contrary to the demands of his law; this hardness already exists there as the consequence of man's original apostasy. Hence I do not understand that in hardening the Pharaoh's heart, God added anything to the native enmity or wickedness of his heart, but only that, in that (to us) incomprehensible way already spoken of, he so directed and brought into action his native enmity, as thereby to accomplish his own sovereign purpose, while in all this opposition to letting Israel go, Farrell was completely acting out himself. Most probably, god exerted this control over the Pharaoh to bring out his wickedness, in a providential way, that is, by placing him and his exalted station, or in scripture language raising him up, and surrounding him with his magicians, and other circumstances, such as leading him to engage in his ambitious projects for which he was employing Israel in his brickyards, he was led thus resolutely to resist the release of God's people. Thus it would appear that in some instances the magicians imitating the miracles of Moses was the occasion of Pharaoh's heart being hardened, see Exodus 7.12,13-22. And God undoubtedly knew that the magicians would imitate those miracles before he directed Moses to perform them.

I have already intimated that God designed by thus hardening the heart of the Pharaoh and his servants to bring his judgments upon them for their cruel and murderous oppression of Israel, see Exodus 3.19-22; 5.5-6; 7.3-6. But in addition to this, and to make himself known to Israel, he purposed to show in Pharaoh his power and that his name might be declared in all the earth, Exodus 9.19. By this, I understand that his name is declared as exercising the same power in all the earth and over all flesh that he showed in Pharaoh. Thus Paul viewed it when he quoted Exodus 9.16, to support his position, that God has mercy on whom he will have mercy and whom he will, he hardens, Romans 9.16-18.

What then is the conclusion of this matter? It is nothing less than this, that God raised Pharaoh up for the very purpose of showing in him that power which he exercises in, and over men, in all the earth, making even their depravity and wickedness subservient to his predetermined purpose, and causing in spite of all the enmity and rebellion of men and devils, his counsel to stand, and often making men, by giving them up to their own wicked propensities, to become the punishers of their own crimes. Thus, as has been noticed, the Egyptians were punished for their oppression of Israel. Thus the nations of Canaan, in their iniquity being full, "it was of the Lord to harden their hearts that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favor, but that he might destroy them as the Lord commanded Moses," Joshua 11.20. Thus also the apostle says of those who are involved in the corruptions and punishment of that wicked, the man of sin; "for this cause God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie, that they might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness," 2nd Thessalonians 2.11-12. And further that God not only controls the actions but also the volitions of men, that is, as I understand it, by providentially placing them in such circumstances, leaving them exposed to the operation of such temptations, as will operate upon their depravity and dispose them to those acts which god has purposed.

It is sometimes said that God's predestinating decree concerning wicked actions is a decree of permission, and I have myself so said. And I still believe it is the truth, so far as it distinguishes the predestination of God, from the notion that such predestination is a constraint upon man to act without his having a choice in the case. Contrary to this notion of direct compulsion, God, as we have seen, dealt with the Pharaoh as a rational being, sending messages and threats to him, and directing Moses to show signs to him, to lead him, if he had any disposition to do it, to obey the just demand of God that he should let Israel go. But if the idea of permission is carried to the extent to imply an uncertainty whether the individual will choose to perform the act predestinated, or not, it is not correct, according as God showed in Pharaoh, his power and name.

So far from there being any uncertainty as to Pharaoh's willingness to resist the demand of God Moses, God said to Moses beforehand, "And I am sure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, no, not by a mighty hand," exodus 3.19. So God says concerning Assyria or the king thereof, "I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge to take the spoil." And yet he says, "When the Lord has performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria." And why? Because, though the king of Assyria performed God's charge or what God had purpose concerning Jerusalem, yet it was not from the principle of obedience to God that he acted, but from his own bloodthirsty, and vicious desires to cut off nations not a few. See Isaiah 10.5-16.

Thus God does according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and no one can stay his hand, or say unto him, what do West thou? And with the unerring and sovereign hand is he moving on every prophecy to its perfect fulfillment, however much it may involve the wickedness of men and the rise and fall of nations; And yet nations and people in doing the very things which God by the prophets had said they would do, our drawing upon themselves the just judgment of God for so doing, that is, for acting out the wicked inclinations of their own hearts; As for instance in persecuting the Church of Christ.

Whether my remarks on this passage will meet the wishes of the Inquirer or not, I cannot say. Perhaps he may have wished the force of the text explained away. But there is, to this day, too much of this explaining away of scripture, it is time for us to come to the plain declarations of scripture, and let them stand as originally written, as the declarations of God. With my kind respects to the Inquirer,

Yours,

S. Trott

Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 13, 1841

CORRESPONDING CIRCULAR ELK RUN ASSOCIATION

The elk-run church together with the messengers of churches and other brethren, consisting of the said church in a meeting for correspondence, held on the 6th, 7th, and eighth days of August 1841, would hereby salute with the expressions of love, the several churches whose messengers we are, the associations which have correspondent with us, together with all old school Baptist churches, associations and meetings:

Brethren: surrounded as the churches are, with the present darkness, it may be in the minds of some of you, to make the inquiry that was made of old: "Watchmen, one of the night? Watchmen, one of the night?" Isaiah 21.11-12. Shall we simply respond and say, "The morning comes and also the night?" Or shall we say, the morning has been and gone, and the night with all its darkness, its chilling damps, and its beasts of prey, howling and prowling around, has come too close to the scene in this world? That night with its gloom and discouragements, is present, we are aware, brethren, that you are painful experience will testify; but instead of giving up to the disconsolate conclusion that this is the determination of all the bright prospects of the church on earth, you would perhaps inquire further about the night. Well, "if you will inquire, inquire you; return, come." Yes, brethren, here is a divine warrant for inquiring into all the parts of scriptural revelation; confining ourselves, however, always to what God has revealed, bearing in mind that secret things, things not written in his word, belong unto the Lord our God, Deuteronomy 20.29. But let not our inquiries be those of idle curiosity; let them be made with an earnest desire to know and obey the truth. If our requirements show us that at any point we have wandered from the way which the Lord has said shall be there, and shall be called the way of holiness, as being sanctified of God for his people to walk in, the text says, return; and let it be our endeavors to return. If in our inquiries we have discovered to us any part of revealed truth, or of ordained order and practice, of which we had been before ignorant, the direction is, come and let us obey, and come up to the standard both in doctrine and practice, according to the light given us, let who will stand back.

But it may be said that the light is not so favorable for inquiring and searching for the old paths, that the morning light would be more favorable to the inquiry, and therefore, that we had better postpone our inquiries in hopes that morning may return. If we were called to sleep in the night, this reasoning might answer, but being called to endure hardness as good soldiers, and being children of the light and of the day, how much soever we may be surrounded with darkness, we are required not to sleep as do others, but to watch and be sober, 1st Thessalonians 5.5-6. We therefore need a correct knowledge of our way at night as well as in the morning. Hence as we more need of knowledge of our way at night, so we are more disposed to inquire carefully concerning it. In the morning everything is bright and cheerful, and we are much inclined to rely on our own discernment to find out for us the way; or if we inquire it will be carelessly. But when night overtakes us on our journey, and we know that on either side is the enemy's border, in which snares and traps are made for our feet, with what care shall we inquire out the way, and seek waymarks that may be felt as well as seen; and how cautiously shall we keep in the way; not carelessly verging to the right or to the left. Brethren, is not such the race now set before us? Let us then run it with patience, looking unto Jesus, and constantly bearing in mind the injunctions, enquire; Return, come. May the Lord give us the spirit of inquiry, of watchfulness and obedience; That from our many wanderings, and fallings short, we may return, come.

But in reference to further inquiries concerning the night. From the declaration as it stands in the text, the morning comes and also the night, some may infer that the order of nature in this case is to be reversed, that the morning at night is to constitute today, instead of the evening in the morning. The legitimate conclusions of such would be that as it is now night, we have nothing else to expect but that the church and the Saints are to grope their way, in this dark and gloomy state, until the time be lost in eternity.

But on a considerate examination of this passage, we shall find no such conclusion warranted from it. It evidently was then night when the inquiry was made. Hence the address to the Watchmen, and the inquiry itself, Watchmen what of the night? And the answer was, the morning comes and also the night, as it reads in the translation. The most that can be made of this is that both are to be looked for; and that, as we would infer, both are to be expected in alternate succession as the burden of Dumah. Dumah signifies quietness or likeness. As the Inquirer calls to the prophet out of Seir, which is one of the names given to the land of Idumea, or Edom, Dumah is supposed to be a place in that country. Edom and Idumea are of the same signification and mean earthly. Hence Duma may well be supposed to denote the church in its present earthy state, the imports of the word pointing out the church:1st it is quiet or peaceable nature in itself considered and also its likeness or assimilation to the world in having to participate in all the commotions, judgments, that come upon the nations. This burden therefore of Duma is the burden of the church in its militant or earthly state. But again Seir in its connection and its import, deserves notice: the word signifies, Harry, or devil, or Tempest, and the inquiry being made out of Seir, Watchmen what of the night? May represents the church as thus inquiring out of the storms or tempests in which she is involved by the opposition of Satan and his legion of ministers of the anti-Christian party, transforming themselves as the ministers of Christ. Thus in according with the answer, the morning comes and also the night, we see the church has had her mourning seasons and also her night; when there is war in heaven, and the dragon and his angels fight, it is night with the church and a Tempest is upon her; But when Michael and his angels shall prevail and the dragon be cast out, then it is morning with the church. And what is, and has been, the experience of the church in having her alternate seasons of morning and night, is also the case with the saints in their individual experience. Sometimes when we have enjoyed a morning to our souls, we have thought that darkness had forever fled; And when night is upon us we conclude that morning will never return. In both cases we have heretofore found ourselves mistaken; and so the present night, as thick as in the gathering darkness around us, will give way and morning will again return.

But there is a little different view of this text, (the morning comes and also the night) which we wish to notice. The word in the original which is rendered in the translation, and also, mixed with equal propriety be translated, even as; and thus rendered here, the morning comes even as the night. The import of the answer would be wholly that of encouragement, that is, it's import is, that though the burden of Duma is, that there was, and there should be night seasons, yet that the morning should return as sure as there was night. Thus, brethren, we give upon the authority of the scriptures the assurance of the return again and again of mourning. Yes, brethren, Christ will not be ashamed nor slacked to avow to the world, and in the world, himself to be the husband, the protector and defender of the daughter, his undefiled among the gentiles, as he thus about himself in reference to the mother, the church among the Jews, that as certainly as that one stone was not left upon another in Jerusalem, and so certainly will Babylon sink like as a millstone in the depths of the sea, and that the whole mass of that wicked, the man of sin, shall be destroyed by the brightness of his [Christ's] coming.

Yea, and further, we believe and assure you, brethren, debt as the disciples after their Lord had shown himself to them by many infallible proofs for 40 days, saw him taken up and the cloud received him out of their sight, he shall again come in like manner as they saw him go into heaven. Remember that this was a visible and personal being taken up from them into heaven, in like manner must he come again, acts 1.2-11. When he thus comes he will come without sin unto salvation, will come, to receive his disciples unto himself, yea they will be caught up to meet him in the air, and so will be forever with the Lord. Then indeed will it be that an eternal mourning will have burst upon the church; a morning never to be succeeded by night, nor to be overcast with clouds. Brethren, let us patiently wait the approach of morning, and in the meantime let us watch and be sober, and not sleep as do others. Let us obediently return or come as the pillar of fire leads the way, and thus avoid being scattered.

But, brethren, let us beware of turning from the pillar of fire to any ignis-fatuus, any meteor that may arise from the damps of our own brains. Such vain imaginations will only lead us into the swamps of error, and scatter us one from another.

Brethren, while the letters from the churches generally lament the state of coldness and darkness which so generally prevails, they seem to be generally awake to the importance of cultivating brotherly love; several of them urged the subject upon the meeting, not that indiscriminately thing called Christian love, or charity which professedly embraces everything going under the name of religion, but that love commended in the New Testament, which centers in God as he is revealed in Christ, as the fountain of all loveliness and all good, and in Christ Jesus as God's way of salvation, and which reflows out to the image of Christ, in whomsoever seen and to the cause of a precious Redeemer; but which draws back with pain, sorrow, and disgust, from Antichrist wherever beheld in any of its features. And dear brethren, we would do well to stir up our minds to a more fervent love of the brethren, and to seek to act under its influence in all our intercourse with them. Our meeting has been one which has caused our hearts to rejoice and which calls for thankfulness to God, on account of the presence also goodly a number of brethren, from a distance bringing with them encouraging and edifying communications from associations and distant churches; also on account of peace and harmony in our meeting, but more especially that our ministering brethren come to us in the fullness and blessing of the gospel of Christ, and had manifestly the assistance of the blessed spirit in administering the same among us. We would urge upon churches and associations to keep up this correspondence among the churches of our Lord and to extend it more and more, as we are permitted the privilege in the providence of our heavenly Father.

The Mount Pleasant church, Fairfax County, Virginia (near Fairfax courthouse) has invited a meeting of correspondence to be held with them commencing on the Friday before the 2nd Lord's day in August 1842; and we would dare by unite with them in the request that old school churches, associations, annual meetings, etcetera, would unite in the said meeting by messengers, and would address their brotherly communications thereunto.

In conclusion, we would express our sympathies with the Baltimore association, with the churches of which the brethren were pastors, and with their families on account of the death of elders Choat, Scott, and Croft.

Signed by the Order of the Meeting, S. Trott, Moderator RC Leachman, Clerk

THE LAW

Brother Beebe: - In the communication signed P., Signs no. 2, vol.12, Jan.15th, 1844, there were the following sentences, - "The Decalogue was given exclusively to National Israel, and its duration, in letter, was throughout their generations; and was predictive in all its requirements, and was coupled with the prophets until John, whose mission was to point unto Him in whom both the law and the prophets should concentrate. The burden of prophecy from Adam to Zechariah foretold the coming of Christ in the flesh. The demands of the law being perfect, holy and spiritual, predict the righteousness of Christ being imputed to those who are born of His Spirit: hence Jesus quotes from the law, and He doubtless knew the use of it, saying, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy might, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. &c."

I waited, thinking there were other brethren who would not let the sentiment advanced in the above quotation and its connection pass unnoticed; feeling quite averse to again appear in the Signs as an opposer of the sentiments of Old School brethren, being aware of the offense I have formerly given to many by my opposition to kindred sentiments with the above. I have wished that I could feel in consistent to let every thing pass as good which appears in the Signs from Old School brethren; but it is not so. With me, error appears as wrong, and perhaps more grievous, when found in the Signs than when advanced by those not of us. But, brethren, though I have been very troublesome to many of you as readers of the Signs, by being, as you think, too strenuous, and even fastidious, bear with me a little longer; I may soon cease to be numbered among you.

What I wish in this case, brother Beebe, if you will permit me, is simply to show my dissent from the sentiment advanced by P., and some of my reasons for such dissent. I have no intention of engaging in a prolonged discussion of the subject. I dissent from the sentiment advanced in the above quotation: 1st. Because, if the Decalogue, or law of Ten Commands, was given exclusively to national Israel, and in the letter of it was restricted to their generations, and in its perfect, holy and spiritual demands, it is to be viewed as a prediction of the righteousness of Christ, then I know of no revealed law which God has ever given showing to the Gentile world what God demands of them as creatures and what sin is. If so, I cannot conceive how Paul could say, "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent," unless the gospel is to be viewed as a law to the Gentile world. The world is bad enough now, with all the restraint which the Decalogue evidently has upon them. But it would be worse if they could be persuaded that God has never forbidden their killing, committing adultery, or stealing, &c. Besides, although I have been, and still am, willing to bear the reproach of being called an antinomian, when so called for maintaining that Christ accomplished a complete redemption of His people from the demands of the law, believing with the Apostle that this doctrine instead of making void the law, establishes it (Rom.3:31), and that the charge is false. But I am not willing to countenance a sentiment which would give the enemies of truth just ground to charge us with making void the demands of God's revealed law. It is true, it is not our business to consult consequences in receiving and advocating truth. But what is truth? Christ says to His Father, "Thy word is truth" John 17:17. But certainly the Scriptures tell us nothing of the abrogation of the Decalogue. When Christ came "to the law and to the testimony:" speculations may have been useful in advancing human science, but in reference to the revealed truth of God, they can have no other effect than to obscure that truth, and bewilder the inquirers after it.

2nd. I further dissent from P.'s view of the law, because if we Gentiles were never under the revealed law, then all our convictions of sin and sense of condemnation by the law must have been as completely imaginary and delusive as ever a Campbellite represented them to be. And not only me, but Paul must also have been deceived in reference to his own experience as a child of grace, for he says, "Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin but by the law; for I had not known lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" Rom.7:7. This Paul spoke, as is evident from the connection, of his Christian experience in common with the brethren to whom he wrote. And he shows clearly what he meant by the law, for he quotes the very letter of the Decalogue, that is, from the ten commandments, Thou shalt not covet. But if the Decalogue, in the letter of it, was restricted to fleshly Israel in their generations, what had it to do with Paul in reference to his gospel experience?

- 3rd. I dissent from P.'s views because, if I can understand the Scriptures on the point, the redemption wrought by Christ was a redemption from the demands of the law. Thus Paul says, "Ye also are become dead to the law, by the body of Christ" Rom.7:4. And again "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us" Gal.
- 3:13. And further he says, "God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law," &c. Gal.4:4,5. If the Gentiles were never under the law, they, of course, were never under its curse; upon that ground I cannot see what part they could have in redemption accomplished by Christ's death.
- 4th. I dissent from P. because I am in favor of taking the New Testament, after allowing for parables, prophecies, and figurative expression, as it reads. Certainly, according to the plain reading of the New Testament, those to whom its books were addressed, namely: believers in Christ, were once under the law. Thus they are represented as having stood in a relation to the law similar to that of a wife to her husband, and as having become dead to it by the body of Christ (Rom. 7:1-6), and Paul says, that, "Whatsoever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God" Rom.3:19. This certainly looks as though all the world were under the sentence of the written law.
- P., I apprehend, has not made the proper distinction between the law, as given as a covenant and in covenant form to national Israel, and the precepts of that law in their spiritual extent as being the revealed and unalterable standard of righteousness. Our Lord, in His instructions, instead of representing the law in its essential nature as passing away at the setting up of His kingdom, illustrates its stability and exceeding broadness as in Matt.5:17-32, and 22:36-40. P. also has evidently mistaken the distinctive nature of the law in confounding it with prediction. The law, being the standard of righteousness, showed what was required of Christ to the redemption and justification of His people from its demands; but instead of merely predicting of foretelling that Christ would bring in such a righteousness, it demanded it of Him, as standing in the law place of His people. I have taken the words of P. according to my capability to understand their natural import. I may have misapprehended his meaning, or he may have a turn for his expressions which I have not thought of; for I know some an give turns to their declarations, which I never should have imagined. Or he may cover himself under the position that the legal dispensation continued in force until the destruction of Jerusalem; but that position I cannot allow. But P. may be a person not wanting to avail himself of such a position. If so, I shall be glad to see him correcting, with candor, any misapprehension of mine concerning his views. Yours to serve,

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, March 14, 1844.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.12 (1844)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 291 - 294g

THE LIGHT OF GOSPEL SIMPLICITY

BROTHER BEEBE: – Although full, heart and hand, with things requiring my attention, and the difficulties with which I am encompassed, and arising principally from the bitter opposition of those who have claimed to be Old School Baptists, yet I cannot let the last number (the 16th) of the SIGNS pass without dropping you a line upon its contents.

I will begin with those things which have been gratifying to me; namely, the Letters from Brethren Hartwell and Hovey. It is really refreshing to hear of those churches in Maine coming out from the mass of corruption, both in doctrine and ceremonies, with which I had supposed that whole country was covered; and of their setting up a standard in the behalf of the purity and simplicity of Gospel doctrine and order. It is certainly a favorable indication that the Lord has much people there which he intends bringing out as witnesses for himself. May all the Lord's children be led to distinguish between the light of Gospel simplicity of which the Lord has given them a lamp, and the darkness of human systems and schemes, and come out from their errors and rally around the standard their brethren have erected in the name of the Lord. But in thus coming out, they must expect opposition, and reproach. If enabled so to conduct in all things, that their opposers may have no evil thing to say of them, in truth, reproach will not hurt them; they will find a blessing in it, though it is not pleasant to the flesh.

But Brother Hovey's account of the little band of faithful ones at Brighton is the most surprising. The existence of such a company of witnesses for the truth in that situation is one of those remarkable instances in which God has at all times displayed the power of Sovereign Grace in rearing up and preserving a standard to the glory of his Name in the midst of everything calculated to prostrate it. It is like a living fire amidst surrounding waters; it is like some of those little companies of spiritual disciples which during the dark ages were occasionally found and hunted down in the very heart of Rome

.

For there they exist, the humble followers of Jesus, amidst the wealth, the grandeur, the hurry and pride of the Emporium of the Eastern States, and which perhaps surpasses in these things, any spot of the same size in America. Again, they have on one hand in this vicinity the Unitarian College, called Harvard University, and not far from them the Baptist Theological School at Newton, and near them in Boston, the Baptist Foreign Mission Rooms, and Board of Missions in all the splendor of their operations, and are encompassed with what are called the Baptist churches of Boston, of Charleston, Cambridge and Newton, with their great D.D's for pastors. And yet these Brethren have had boldness given them to come out from all this pomp in religion and to meet by themselves for the purpose of worshipping God in the simplicity and spirituality of his instituted worship. Then the humble, meek and quiet spirit which Brother Hovey's letter breaths, renders it more estimable, than a million of such Reports of great human exertions, as emanate from the foreign mission rooms, with Dr. Bolles' or Dr. Sharpe's name appended to them. I did feel on reading the letters of these brethren as though I should be rejoiced to visit them, were I at liberty to roam among the scattered bands of my Master's little flock.

I now pass to notice some of those pieces less pleasant. I will commence with the extract on Sinners coming to Christ, which you have credited to Emmons, I presume Dr. Emmons. Perhaps many of your readers will be surprised, and perhaps think me wild, when I say that this piece is one of the greatest or most complete counterfeits I have ever seen of the New Birth. That either the writer was a stranger to Divine Quickening or was so accustomed to the dialect of Ashdod that he could not speak intelligibly in the Jews language.

There is much said of God's teaching, but it is apparently the natural man taught. There is an intimacy formed between the sinner and Christ, like the branches and Vine; but it is not the branches growing out of the Vine – it is His divine and human excellencies, and his mediatorial offices from the views they have of Him as the brightness of the Father's glory, that concur to unite them to him as the branches are united to the Vine.

There is a coming to Christ for salvation, but it is not a finding of salvation in him, but in their coming to him. To show the justness of my remarks, I will quote a few of his expressions. He says, "By being taught their own characters and the character of God, they are fully convinced that no mercy can be found out of Christ." Again, "They cannot see how it is possible that God should be just, and yet justify any but those who came to Christ and believe in Him for salvation." He speaks of God's terms of mercy in a way of implying condition. His idea of the failure of the similitude of the Prodigal is I think incorrect. Sinners when brought to return to God in the penitent spirit of the Prodigal, know no more in reality of the Mediator than the Prodigal did, until he is unfolded to them, as in figure he was to him, in the robe, feast, etc. He says, "They are willing to come to Christ and rely upon his mediation and atonement as the sole ground of their complete restoration to the divine favor." If they are willing to come to him, they know not that they may come, till his work is applied to them; the best robe must be brought and put on them, etc. But I will not multiply quotations. A little attention will show that his was a legal gospel, and an un-regenerated unborn, renewed man; if I may use the expression.

I had intended to notice your New York Scraps, but I must let him pass for this time. Only requesting the next time he writes that he would give us Scripture quotations in proof, and not mutilated Scripture neither, as in his extract from Rom. 8:1.

S. TROTT, Fairfax Court House, Va., Aug. 8, 1834.

THE LORD SHALL COMFORT ZION.

Circular Letter & Corresponding Letter: The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, to the several churches of which she is composed, send christian salutation.

Beloved Brethren: - As an expression of our fellowship, we again address you in our associational circular, and on this occasion we have selected as the theme or subject of our address, the following declaration made in the scriptures concerning Zion: "The Lord shall comfort Zion." Isa.51:3.

In this passage we find four things which demand the attention of the redeemed of the Lord. First: Zion, which is to be comforted. Second: Zion's Comforter. Third: The absolute character of the promise. Fourth: The Comfort promised. May the Lord by His Spirit guide both writer and reader into the experimental enjoyment of the subject under consideration.

First: Zion, or the city of David, see I Kings 8:1, is frequently used in the scriptures as a type of the church of Christ, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all; and we regard it as a very beautiful and instructing figure: first, from the meaning of the word Zion, which signifies a monument raised up. The church of Christ is truly a monument raised up and founded on the eternal purpose of God, based on His unchanging love, secured against all evil by His omnipotence. Every individual believer is a monument of grace, seen and read of all men. The whole church forms a monument which shall remain resplendent in glory when all the glories of this world, yea, when the creation itself shall no longer exist. But, some will say, the word Zion, means a heap of stones - rough, unpolished, useless. Do they come from nature's quarry? Are they not made living stones and polished by divine grace? They are raised up as the spiritual seed of Abraham, and built upon the foundation which God hath laid. Each stone, whether great or small occupies the place which was from eternity assigned it, by the great Architect, who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will. But again, Zion is emblematic of the church in being the object of God's peculiar love. See Psa.87:2 - "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob," and even so hath He loved the church; yea, "He loved the people." Deut.33:3. And He so loved them that He gave His Son to die for them. I John 4:10. And although the Lord's tender mercy is over all His works, so as to supply all His creatures with food and raiment; yet His love for His church is peculiarly manifested in providing for them in an everlasting covenant, spiritual food and raiment in the Person and righteousness of His dearly beloved and only begotten Son. Zion is the object of God's choice. Psa.132:13 -"The Lord hath chosen Zion." So hath He chosen the church in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, Eph.1:4. Zion is well garrisoned: "Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof; Mark well her bulwarks." Psa.48:12. So also is the church. Her walls are Salvation, and her gates Praise. The Lord will be a wall of fire round about her. God, with all His wisdom, power, love, mercy, longsuffering and goodness is for her; who can be against her? She has watchmen upon her walls, to warn her of danger, and they have a trumpet on which to blow a certain sound, that her inhabitants may prepare for battle.

Second: Let us notice Zion's Comforter. And this is the Lord: He is God the Father; for all her comfort, all her joy, and all her hope springs from the heart of Jehovah, the Father, and descend to her through the Son, whom He declares to be: "Lord, to the glory of the Father." For in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. All spiritual blessings were given to the church in Him, and of His fulness they all receive their strength, light, hope, joy and peace. These are all in Him in their fulness; and for the use of thirsting souls, to whom they are applied by the Spirit who is expressly called the Comforter. John 14:15-17. Because His covenant engagements are to give the church a knowledge and enjoyment of her most gracious Lord and Master.

Third: We will now glance at the absolute promise of God: "The Lord shall comfort Zion." All the promises of God in Christ Jesus are yea, and in Him, Amen. That is, they are sure and certain, irrevocable and irrevisable to all the promised seed of Abraham. And the nature and attributes of Jehovah confirm the same. For if Jehovah, the Father hath given comfort, the Son received the same, and the Spirit engaged to communicate it to the hearts of the elect.

Jehovah being unchangeable in His nature, is consequently immutable in these wonderful acts, whereby the comfort of the church is secured. Not dependent on any contingency or uncertainty: for God has so arranged from even the most trying circumstances of their lives. If the comfort of Zion depended on her deserts, she would indeed be comfortless; or if it depended on her improvement of anything committed to her care, she would be destitute; for she feels daily and hourly that she can only stand as she is held up, and only use what is given to her; for the Spirit of God works in her both to will and to do of His own good pleasure.

Fourth: We will now offer a few remarks on the comfort, and the manner in which the Lord applies it to Zion. It is by His word, by the ministry, and by the direct agency of the Holy Ghost. 1. The Lord comforts His people by His word when it quickens them, as it did David, Psa.119:50, and when through patience and comfort thereof they have hope. Rom. 15:4. Seeing themselves, in the early stage of their conversion, and in their daily falls into sin, to be altogether helpless, they imagine themselves to be in a hopeless state, until by the word, they see the foundation of hope to be not in themselves, but in Jesus Christ the Lord. 2. He comforts them by the ministry, when a full and free salvation is proclaimed, as in Isaiah 40:11 - "He shall feed His flock like a Shepherd," &c, and when His ministers have been led into trouble, and comforted, expressly that they might be enabled to comfort those who are in any tribulation, with the same comfort wherewith they themselves are comforted of God. II Cor.1:3,4. But neither the word, nor the ministry, valuable as they are, can afford any comfort, only as instruments in the hands of God, by His Spirit. Now all the comfort of Zion's citizens consists in relying entirely on Christ in every emergency, and in all trying circumstances. 3. The Holy Ghost becomes a Comforter in testifying of Christ, and by leading the soul to Him. Are any suffering under a sense of indwelling corruptions; He leads them to Jesus for sanctification. Are they naked; He leads them to Jesus for the mantle of His righteousness. Are they hungry; He leads them to Jesus for the bread of life. Are they weak; He teaches them to rely wholly upon that strength which is made perfect in their weakness.

Fear not then, ye drooping, doubting and desponding saints; for Christ is All. The Father hath given you all. The Holy Ghost is engaged to bring you to Him; and thus the Lord shall comfort Zion, and all her children shall rejoice. Yet a little while, and the Lord God shall wipe away all tears from their faces, and lead them to fountains of delight, to cast their crowns at His feet, and praise Him forever and ever, even so, amen, and amen.

Corresponding Letter.

Dear Brethren: - Agreeably to our last year's appointment, we have been indulged of our Heavenly Father with the privilege of once more meeting together; and considering our ingratitude and many short comings, of which each church, and each individual member among us will plead quilty, and stand convicted. We are amazed at the goodness of God in granting us privileges so inestimable. Yet, we enquire on the other hand, if while we were dead in sins, God so loved us as to give His Son to die for us, will He not also with Him freely give us all things? Cold, ungrateful, and indifferent as we are, we do feel an assurance that we hold and love the truth as it is in Jesus. For our attachment to what we understand to be the doctrine and order of the gospel, and our opposition to the innovations and inventions of men, we have not only to endure the persecutions of men made religionists, but to resist the popular current of the world. All this we could well bear and even rejoice in knowing as we do that it is a part of the saint's inheritance on earth; but the Lord seems to have in a measure withdrawn His presence from us, and because of this we mourn. Many of the churches in our connection, have, from the ravages of death and other causes dwindled down to a mere moiety, while some have entirely disbanded, and we are in a great measure dependent for ministerial gifts, on other associations. The evidences of the power of divine grace are few and far between, and our harps are hung upon the willows; but amidst the raging storm, to whom shall we look so confidently as to Him "who rides upon the stormy sky, and thunders when He please." Perhaps these things may be to prove our steadfastness in the stand we have taken; or it may be that the Lord is about finishing His work in this part of the land, and that the gospel, like the sun, arose in the East, and is traveling on to the West, leaving us to repose in its evening shade. Let the purpose of our God be what it may, we desire to still contend for His truth, submit patiently to all His will, and live upon the assurance that all things work together for good to them that love God, and are the called according to His purpose.

Our meeting, which is drawing to a close, has been one of unusual comfort and christian enjoyment. Your messengers and ministers who have come to us have brought us the pleasing intelligence that you are enabled in some good degree to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. The preaching that we have had has been of Christ, and His salvation, without a jarring note.

Our next Association will be held, the Lord willing, with the church at Hartford, Hartford County, Md., to commence on the Thursday preceding the third Sunday in May, 1852, at 10 o'clock, a.m., when and where we hope to receive a continuance of your correspondence.

S.TROTT. Moderator, 1851.

THE LORD THY GOD WHICH TEACHETH THEE TO PROFIT.

Circular Letter: Of the Baltimore Old School Baptist Association to the churches of which she is composed.

Beloved Brethren: - As an expression of fellowship, we again address you in our Associational Circular. On this occasion we have selected as our subject the address to the Israel of God contained in Isaiah 48:17-19. "Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go. O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments," &c. We understand spiritual Israel to be here particularly addressed. In the first verse of chapter 48 God addresses the house of Jacob, which art called by the name of Israel, &c., which swear by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness, &c., thus showing that national, and not the true Israel are there addressed. Hence their idolatry and obstinacy, &c., are spoken of.

In verse 12th, and onward, the Lord addresses Jacob and Israel His called. Paul says, "But unto them which are called both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." I Cor.1:24. So that being called is distinctive in believers or the true Israel. Hence these are the people we think are addressed in the verses we have selected as our subject. In directing your attention to this subject, we will notice.

First. The person speaking, who being Israel's Redeemer, can be no other than the Messiah. Hence whilst He declares Himself to be the Lord, or Jehovah, their God (verse 17) as He is in truth the self-existing God, and whilst He claims the prerogatives of God, saying in verse 13, "Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens," &c; He in verse 16 saith, "And now the Lord God and His Spirit hath sent me;" thus showing that whilst He is Jehovah, God, He also exists in a relation personally distinct from the Lord God and His Spirit; and is the Messenger of God.

Secondly. The characters under which He speaks. - 1st. The Lord thy Redeemer. He is the Jehovah, whilst He is also thy God, thy Near Kinsman, who stood of course in this relation to thee, before thy thralldom; whose right therefore it was to redeem thee and who was not like Ruth's kinsman afraid of marrying His own inheritance in doing it; but who has accomplished thy redemption from all bondage and from all iniquity, by the sacrifice of Himself; and who is to thee, and for thee, all that righteousness which the law requires; who indeed gave Himself for thee, that He might in justice, be manifested as thy Lord and thy Husband. - 2nd. "The Holy One of Israel." He is to His people all that holiness in which they will shine through eternity, was to them all that holiness in which they stood before God from before the foundation of the world, as His body, His bride; being loved in Him, and in Him predestinated to the adoption of children. His blood is their purification from all pollution, and He in them is the principle of personal holiness and of love to God.

Thirdly, What He says. 1st. He says, "I am the Lord thy God, which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way thou shouldest go." - As before noticed, Christ is truly the self-existing God, whilst He is He who was sent of the Father; and being God in Christ, He is as such peculiarly the object of His people's worship, trust, and love; is their God; whilst as such He is to all others the unknown God. As the Root and offspring of David, He was given a Leader and Commander to the people. As such He teaches His people to profit. He by implanting His spirit in them, gives them spiritual discernment, gives them ears to hear, and hearts to understand, and when He speaks the word, whether He speaks through others, through the written word, or in visions of the night, they know it, and rejoice in it as the truth, whilst all other teaching but deludes. All that He teaches is good, and He teaches them all that is good or profitable for them to know, whether in relation to doctrine or practice. Let us then beware of other teaching. Which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go. As the Leader of His people, He goeth before them, and draws them with cords of a man, with bands of love. John 10:4 & Hosea 11:4. When He thus draws, they willingly run after Him. He does not lead His people to places of worldly rest and ease, but to the experience of tribulations and trials, to temptations and darkness, and thereby to the knowledge of the plague of their own hearts. He does not lead them to partake much of the applause, honors, &c, of the world, but to receive its reproaches and persecutions. He leads them to know the law, but He also leads them out from it, to the enjoyment of the privilege of sons of God. He leads them to death, but He will also lead them to participate in the joys of the resurrection.

He leads them about through the way of the wilderness, but it is by a right way that they might go to a city of habitation. Ex.13:18 & Ps.107:7. He has gone before leading them in the way of patience, meekness, uprightness, holiness and self- denial. Both by precept and example He leads them into the ordinances in which they should go, and out from the traditions, and commandments of men. Where the footsteps of Jesus are seen going before, there is the right way. Where they are not found, there let His people not go.

2nd. He says, "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments," &c. All our Lord's instructions whether in relation to faith, or to acts of obedience, are with authority, hence they are here with propriety called commandments. So the Evangelist speaking of Christ's instructions to His disciples as recorded in Matthew, Chapter 10, says, chapter 11:1 - "And it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding His disciples, He departed thence to teach, and to preach in their cities." His instructions came to the Jews as the preaching of men does to the world, but to those to whom He has given ears to hear and hearts to understand, they come as commands. But it may be asked: Do any of the people of God neglect to hearken to the instructions of Christ after having once received His commands with joy? We answer, the church, the visible Israel of God, evidently has done it in two ways. First, she has neglected to adhere to the instructions received; and secondly, she has been much disposed, instead of hearkening to hear what He commands, to listen to the suggestions and commands of men. Thus, the churches of Galatia, instead of adhering to the gospel testimony, which they had no doubt once received with joy, proclaiming them justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses, were disposed again to return to the law. And so the church went on listening to the suggestions of reason, and the teachings of Satan's ministers, until the man of sin came full robed into power; and the bride the Lamb's wife had to retire from the pomp, the splendor and persecution of an established religion, to the wilderness, to find a lodging place. Still with all this evidence of the evil consequences of not hearkening to the commands of her Lord, the church has been too much disposed to hearken to the reasonings and commandments of men, even to this day. Hence instead of her peace flowing as a river, divisions and contentions prevail, instead of her true righteousness rolling on to view she is covering herself too much with linsey-woolsey or the flimsy stuff of human doings. We also think that individual believers have not as they ought, hearkened to the commands of the Lord, though times have been when His word was all precious to them, and they wanted nothing else for their comfort and directory.

But enticers from without and from within have succeeded in turning away their ears from hearkening to His commands, and led them off from the simplicity of the word. Hence they have been bewildered and confused with the traditions and systems of men, have been contending for things that are not according to the word, or have found themselves walking in paths of disorder and disobedience, and to aggravate the wretchedness that has resulted, instead of the regular flow of peace and righteousness, Satan has charged these disorders home upon them, as evidences that they are not christians.

Then had thy peace been as a river and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea. We do not, brethren, understand by this complaint, that God has been disappointed, or His purpose at all frustrated by the disobedience of His church and people. On the contrary this very oppression and diminishing of His church is abundantly pointed out in prophesy; and these very trials of His people, are fully anticipated in the Scriptures. But we understand that it was designed to set forth on the one hand, the direct tendency of a faithful hearkening to the commands of the Lord in all things pertaining to religion; namely, unity of faith and consequent peace. On the other hand, the evil consequences of seeking guidance and instruction in religion from any other source. Then had thy peace been as a river. A river flows on in a constant current, bearing down and overcoming every obstacle to its progress. Such would have been the peace of the church had they uniformly been disposed undeviatingly to have hearkened to the commands of the Lord, and suffered no opinions of men to usurp the place of His instructions. Not its external peace with the world, for in this sense Christ came not to send peace, but a sword, (Mt. 10:34,) but peace within, a oneness of mind and heart. And thy righteousness as the waves of the sea. The sea is in constant motion, and its waves or swells are therefore constantly rolling on in regular succession. So would their righteousness have been constantly rolling on to view, that is, The Lord their righteousness, in all their preaching, in all their conversation, in all their approaches to God. Thy seed also had been as the sand and the offspring of thy bowels as the gravel thereof. Instead of multitudes of the children of God having been led off with the various sects that separated from the Apostles' doctrine and order, and multitudes more being deterred from making a profession, by the divisions among the professed disciples of Christ, there would have been but one doctrine, one order, one professed church of Christ, and all the children of God should have been borne upon her sides, dandled upon her knees; and sucked and been satisfied with the breasts of her consolations. See Isa. 66:11 & 12. And who will say that in that case her seed would not have been manifested to be numerous as the sand of the sea?

His name should not have been cut off, nor destroyed from before me. Instead of the expression as it stands in the text, should not have been cut off, &c., in the margins of some Bibles we read, Shall not be cut off, &c. This we think is the correct reading of the text because it corresponds with the declaration of our Lord - "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Mt. 16:18. It also corresponds with what is said in the next verse, "Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the ends of the earth, say ye, The Lord hath redeemed His servant Jacob." So that instead of Jacob or Israel's being cut off for his rebellion, he is yet to be redeemed and come forth from Babylon, or from all the confusion occasioned by the man of sin. How rich and free the grace and

Now, brethren, we see and we lament that there are discords among the O.S. Baptists. Whilst instead of hearkening to the Lord's mercy of our God!

commandments, we say, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ, and suffer opinions, whether our own or of other men, to govern us, can we expect our peace to flow like a river? Opinions of men always have, and always will conflict one with another. If then we were to stop all means of public correspondence, whilst each is swayed by opinion, can we be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment? Methods were resorted to in the earlier ages of the church, for supplying the place of the remedy pointed out in our text, to produce unity of faith and practice in the church. Councils were called, Creeds and Confessions of Faith were formed, ceremonies and forms were agreed upon, and the observance of these was attempted to be enforced by laws and persecutions; but all would not do. Do you ask why? We answer, that all of the children of Zion are to some extent taught of the Lord, and are led more or less to wait on Him for further teaching, and so far as He reveals to their faith His doctrine or order, or any point thereof, all the fetters and chains which men may forge will not bind their consciences to prevent their testifying to that which they know is truth, nor against what they know is error. Could we give up all contending for opinions, if we have occasion to mention them, mention them only as opinions, as it is written, The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream, and contend only for what we have been taught of God to know is truth, then would contentions cease among us; for the Spirit of truth cannot give different views on the same subject to different persons; though He may give more extended views of scripture to one than another. It may be asked, How are we to distinguish what is taught us of the Lord, from what is merely made up opinion? We answer, there are certain things which every child of grace so knows to be the truth, that neither the sophistry, nor wrath of man can lead him to deny them. He knows that he did not attain this knowledge of them from men, nor from books, except, it may be, instrumentally, and that he did not reason himself into it. He was taught it internally; there was an enlightening of the mind to see, to taste and feel that it was truth and that the Scriptures bore testimony to it. And since the first revelation of Christ to him as the way, he has in like manner had his understanding enlarged in the knowledge of the Scriptures on particular points. There is an exercise of faith in the thing, a knowing that it is God's truth. When he states these things and points to the Scriptures which he has seen as so clearly sustaining their truth, he does it with confidence, feeling that he is girt about with truth. But it is not enough to have an internal impression, there must be an opening of the Scriptures to view as sustaining it. If there were with us more of a waiting to hear what God the Lord will say, and of hearkening to His commandments, then might we look for unity and peace. It is not however probable, that we shall altogether be divested of our attachment to human opinions, whilst the church remains encompassed by Babylon. But if we cannot agree in opinions, let us try to love as brethren, to be courteous, and not to give place to anger and bitterness, nor to a wresting and distorting of each other's views, that we may put down by prejudices what we cannot confute by argument. And let us remember for our comfort that amidst all the confusion, Jesus will in His own good time show Himself as walking upon the waves, and will hush all to peace.

S.TROTT. 1850.

Is Love the Bond of Union?

Brother Beebe: - As we sometimes hear some of our ablest preachers say that love is the bond of union between Christ and His church and people; I have presented the above query hoping that some who thus assert will show us by good authority and argument that it is so; or failing, become convinced that they have been asserting for revelation, a traditional or self-invented notion. But in proposing the guery for the consideration of others, I presume I may be allowed to accompany it with a statement of some of my objections to the idea. It is true, the advocates of the idea that love is the bond of union sometimes say in proof of it that love constitutes the union of husband and wife. But the proof fails from its own falsity. Love may unite a couple in affection, but it is not that which unites them as husband and wife, neither legally or scripturally. Not legally; for many couples have loved each other who have never legally become man and wife; whilst other couples, it is apprehended, are legally united as one flesh who never loved each other. Scripturally, it is a becoming one flesh that constitutes the relation of husband and wife. Hence Paul after exhorting "husbands to love their wives as Christ loved the church" goes on to say, "So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife, loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh." (Eph.5:29) In the case of Adam and Eve, in which is the true representation of the union of man and wife, and a true figure of union of Christ and His church, the ground of their union as assigned by Adam was that she was "bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh." (Gen.2:23,24) One more remark I will make before assigning my objection, viz. that the life in which Christ and His people are one is love, it is the spirit of the law, it is love to God, and therefore the union in this defined sense I admit is one of love. If brethren in speaking of love as the bond of union were thus to explain and define their meaning as characterizing the holy nature of that life in which Christ and His people are one, I should not object to the idea. But in speaking of love as the bond of union, persons are generally understood as conveying the idea that the exercise or feelings of love each toward the other is what constitutes the union; and in fact it is mostly so represented.

My first objection to the idea that love is the bond of union as generally understood is that, as the love must be mutual in order to constitute the union between parties, this doctrine represents Christ, if a head, a head without any existing body until man was created, and as even now having but parts of a body united to Him; many predestinated members not yet being brought to love Him. For though Christ's love may have gone forth from eternity to His members as existing in purpose, yet it is evident His people never love Him until born of God. A loving head without a living body united to it would be a monster.

My second objection to the idea that love constitutes the union of Christ and His people is that it represents love as a distinct existing principle, contrary to every authorized conception we ever had of it; for according to such authorized conception love is but the acting of a pre-existing living principle, toward an existing object, or is the characteristic of such a living principle; it also contradicts the doctrine generally understood by Old School Baptists to be taught in the Scriptures concerning God's love toward His people and their love to Him. It is written, "God is love;" but it certainly is not understood by this that He who is revealed as God is only love in the abstract. I understand it as representing the distinguishing characteristic of Him who is the living God, the almighty and selfexisting Spirit. His being love presupposes His existence as God. God's special love to His people even when they were dead in sins, has always been understood by consistent Baptists, as extending to them, not as in themselves considered, but as in Christ, not through Adam but through Christ; this implies that they had a previous existence in Christ which was the special object of God's love; and if a previous existence in Christ, then of course a previous union with Him. Consequently according to this, God's love to them, instead of constituting their union to Christ, was the fruit of such union. Again, consistent Old School Baptists, do not admit that our Adamic nature, prune it and cultivate it as you will, can truly love God; our loving God, then presupposes the implantation in us of a distinct principle of life capable of loving God, whence is this new life derived but from Christ as the head and is therefore the Spirit of Christ in us? If then that living principle by which we love God is derived from Christ as the Head it must have previously existed in Him, and thus in that life we must have been one with Him before ever we loved Him. But if love is the bond of union, we had no union and therefore no existence in Christ, previous to our loving Him. And if we love God we must love Him with the powers of our Adamic nature.

The third objection I have to the doctrine that love is the bond of union between Christ and His people is that, it contradicts the apparent import of many texts of Scripture which speak either directly or indirectly in relation to a union of Christ and His people. I will notice a few. John 3:3-6 represents a new birth, and that a being born not of the flesh but of the Spirit. Are we to understand that here being born again means nothing more than a change of the current of the affections to a loving of God? Or are we to understand by it what is plainly expressed in the word, a being brought manifestively into a distinct state of existence? If the latter, then we must remember that to be born is distinct in idea from being created. To be born implies a previous creation in a head, as our natural birth implies our previous creation in Adam. As this new birth is not a fleshly birth, it cannot be from the fleshly head Adam; and as the Scriptures reveal no other head but Christ and Him as a spiritual head, it must imply a spiritual creation and therefore a previous actual spiritual existence in Him. So in the texts where Christ's people are spoken of as His seed (as in Psalm 22:30; Isa.53:30) the same idea of a previous existence in Christ is fully conveyed, and consequently a created living union with Him. Again, Col. 3:3,4, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear....", plainly declares a oneness of life in Christ and in His people and that Christ is this life. According to this text, the union of Christ and His people consists in life and must be as old as the existence of Christ as such. May we not then with confidence proclaim the eternal union of Christ and His people as a revealed doctrine? Hebrews 2:11, "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren," I will lastly notice under this objection. I presume it will be admitted that Christ is here intended by the He that sanctifieth, and His people by the they who are sanctified. If so, the expression all of one ought to be admitted to express something more than a union between them formed by love; it positively declares a perfect unity, a one, and that in the very origin of their existence; all of one; that is, in the sense in which they are each here spoken of; their existence in a brotherhood, according to the latter part of the text, is the sense in which they are spoken of. It therefore neither refers to Christ's essential Godhead, nor to His people's creation in Adam. The expression all of one is so unlimited in the declaration that we may not confine the oneness to any one idea connected with the existence of a brotherhood without being guilty of limiting the declaration of God. According therefore to the declaration, they must have existed in Christ's existing as their brother and from the same source; as Adam's posterity existed in his existing and from the same source, the creating power of God. So we shall find this unity in relation to the brotherhood carried out in the Scriptures. Does brotherhood imply the idea of father, here the Father is one? Says Christ, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God and your God." (John 20:17) Does the idea of brotherhood imply a begetting; if Christ is the Only Begotten of the Father, (John 1:14) they must have been begotten in His begetting for they are born of God, and as showed, He is their Father? Does it imply a birth, and is Christ the first born of every creature; (Col.1:15) His people must have been born in Him, for they existed in Him before the foundation of the world, were the chosen in Him, had grace given them in Him, etc.? Does a birth as before showed presuppose a creation, and is Christ the beginning of the creation of God (Rev.3:14), here the unity also is found, for they are God's workmanship created in Christ Jesus, etc.? (Eph.2:10) Does the brotherhood imply sonship, here the unity continues? Is He a Son, so are they sons, and in their sonship have the Spirit of God's Son sent forth into their hearts, etc.? (Gal.4:6) And does sonship imply heirship, and is Christ appointed heir of all things, (Heb.1:2) His people are joint heirs with Him. (Rom.8:17) If then the union of Christ and His people is a oneness of life and of existence, how can love be the bond of union?

A fourth objection to the idea that love is the bond of union is that Paul plainly teaches that the headship of Christ is not the bond, but the source or fountain of union of Him and His people, and charges some with a defect in this thing. See Col.2:10, "And not holding the Head from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." Here the Head is that from which the body has its increase, its nourishment and is knit together, etc. In a word, I object to the term bond of union, as not being Scriptural in idea nor in expression. In the text just quoted, whilst there are joints spoken of indicative of the distinct action of the several members of both, and bands, showing the binding together of those members, all is from the Head as the fountain. We might as well talk of binding a stream to its fountain, as of binding the church and people of God to Christ their Head. The church is not something bound to Him to make Him full, but is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. (Eph.1:23) The grand mystery of the gospel is not that we are bound to Christ, but it is "Christ in you the hope of glory." (Col.1:27) And Christ, in speaking of the unity of believers, does not speak of binding them more closely by eternal bonds, but says to His Father, "I in them and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." (John 17:23)

I will here leave these objections for the consideration of those who preach that love is the bond of union, hoping some one or more of them will let us hear from them on the subject.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 21, 1848.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 16 (1848)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 387 - 391

MATTHEW 24:27, CONSIDERED.

BROTHER BEEBE: - I see in the SIGNS for Sept. 1, 1848, a request for my views on Matt. 24:27, from a humble brother who signs himself, An Inquirer. As the grace of humility is so very rare, and so many of us who would be humble, find ourselves when tried, the reverse; it seems reasonable that when a humble brother is met with, we should pay all due attention to his inquiries. I will therefore seek to comply with his request.

The reading of the text is this, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." As the coming of the Son of man is here mentioned, it may not be improper to give somewhat fully my views of the coming of Christ as declared in the Scriptures. The Scriptures as I understand them speak of two distinct comings of Christ, in reference to the saints as being in the world. The first was his coming in the flesh or being born in Bethlehem. Embraced in this personal coming, according to the general tenor of promise, and prophecy going before, is the whole of his coming in his kingdom in the world, both in the gathering together of his elect, and in the destruction of his enemies. Thus old Jacob's prophecy, Gen. 49:10, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law- giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be," evidently embraces Christ's coming in the flesh, and his going forth in his gospel, gathering his sheep into his fold. In Psalms 50:1-3, it is said, "The Lord hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." And that, "Our God shall come and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with my sacrifice." &c. Thus this corresponds with Jacob's prophecy above, in the coming of our God or Shiloh, and in the gathering of the people unto him; also with Matt.24:30 & 31, the sending of his angels with the great sound of a trumpet and gathering together his elect, &c. Those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice are evidently the elect; that is, in and through Christ their Head and Representative. In this connection it is said a fire devoureth before him, and remember, "A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about." Psal.97:3, this also in connection with the Lord's reigning. Thus his reigning or having all power given to him in heaven and in earth, or calling to the heavens from above, and his burning up his enemies round about and the gathering together unto him his people or saints, are all connected with his coming in the flesh, for to this end was he born. John 18:37. See also Phil. 2:6-11. In Isa.9:6 & 7 it is said of the child born, (and by comparing verse 1 & 2 with Matt.4:14-16 it is evident that it is spoken of Christ, as coming in the flesh,) that "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." But it is not necessary to multiply quotations to prove a point of which the scriptures are so full.

Hence the comings of our Lord in reference to the spread of his gospel, to the destruction of the Jews, and other enemies; or to his dwelling with his saints are but points of his first personal coming; they are not distinct manifestations of himself in person, but only distinct manifestations of his power and of his grace and faithfulness to his people, &c.

That there is to be a second personal coming and appearing of Christ Jesus, is evident from the declaration of the two men in white apparel, unto the disciples, as they were gazing after Jesus as he went into heaven; namely, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:9-11. This is affirmed of Jesus, and therefore of his manhood, and hence can mean nothing less than that he shall again come visibly in that same body in which the disciples had seen him go up into heaven. Hence it is that I understand the Apostle in saying, "And unto them that look for him shall he appear a second time without sin unto salvation," (Heb.9:23,) to have reference to the coming of Jesus in like manner as the disciples saw him go into heaven. A second time, clearly refers to a former time in which he appeared and marks a distinct appearing from that first time; and if it is a second appearing it must be a personal manifestation. This appearing or coming is to be "without sin unto salvation." In everything connected with Christ's first appearing, sin is in one way or other brought to remembrance; but this salvation without sin must be that ultimate completion of salvation, that entire deliverance from sin and death, which the saints by faith are looking for.

Hence also I think I Thes.4:16 & 17, has reference to this same second appearing, or coming in like manner. It reads thus, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Some of our brethren differ from me in their views of Heb.9:28, as also in reference to the 27th verse, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, &c." If I understand them, their view is that the 27th verse has reference to a will or testament; that the appointment once to die has reference to the laws and customs of men which require that the testator should be first dead, before his heirs can claim the execution of his will; and the after judgment to be the decision of the judge of probates as to the validity of the will. Whilst I would not treat with disrespect those brethren or their opinions, I must say that from the first of my hearing or seeing this idea advanced my mind revolted as it as tending to belittle this portion of Scripture; and still whilst I am conscious of the superiority of those brethren in gifts and judgment, I cannot view the idea otherwise than as degrading, that the eternal God should have appointed his Son unto death, or offered him, merely in conformity to the laws and customs of men concerning testaments, that the testator must first die, before his will is of force, and such must be the conclusion, from such exposition; for notice the comparison. "As it is appointed unto men once to die ... so Christ once offered, &c." But the mischief of such an exposition does not stop here; it sets aside the whole doctrine of the cross of Christ, as Old School Baptists have ever held it; as those brethren themselves hold it. For if we admit that the laws and customs of men concerning wills, amount to anything like an appointment unto men once to die, what is the sum of it? It is this, that the testator must die to establish his will. He dies according to the general sentence of God by which death passed upon all men; there is nothing in his death expiatory, no bearing the sins of his heirs, no redemption in it. Now if the comparison in the text holds good, according to this exposition, Christ's bearing the sins of many amounts to nothing; he only dies to give force or validity to the new testament, and the inheritance comes to the heirs without their being redeemed, or their sins being expiated. Is not this the legitimate conclusion to be drawn from the passage according to the above exposition? But let us examine the text with its connection, to see whether such exposition can be correct. I cannot see anything in the declaration, "As it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" applicable to the circumstances of wills. There is the appointment by the word of God or by the laws of men that men shall make their wills, or that having made them they shall then die. There is an appointment of God that men shall die because they have sinned, but this has no relation to their wills. The Apostle says nothing about an appointment in the case of a testament; he says, "Where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator," but this is very different from the idea of an appointment in the case. The necessity arises from the nature of things, because whilst the man still lives, his property is his own, and he may alienate it, or decide to make a different disposition of it.

Hence some men have lived to make several wills, and others have died without making any, and some without having any property to be inherited after their debts are paid. Again, how is it that the judgment is after the death of the testator? In modern times, wills may be contested, and in that case there is a judgment as to their validity. But in general the judgment goes before, the man's will is the judgment that must stand in reference to the distribution of his property, and this has after his death to be executed; hence he appoints – not judges – but executors to his will.

Also, the connection does not favor the idea, any more than the words of the text, that the Apostle in speaking in reference to a will. God has been pleased to show to the heirs of promise, the security to them of the gracious provisions he has made for them in Christ, both by the idea of a covenant, and of a testament; and both ideas are carried out in the scriptures distinctly. The Apostle having in the eight chapter brought to view the superiority of the new covenant over the old, goes on in this ninth chapter to show that the specifications of the first covenant were but the shadows of the good things, the substance of the new, as in the case of the offerings of the priesthood, and of the tabernacle; and in bringing to view the death and blood of Christ as the substance shadowed forth by the offerings and priesthood of the old covenant, confirms the idea of the old covenant, confirms the idea of the necessity of his death, verses 15 – 20, by reference to a testament, and the necessity of the death of the testator, thus showing that the death of Christ was involved in both figures. He then again resumes the consideration of the specifications of the covenant in reference to the shedding of blood for remission, and offerings, &c., showing that he had fully dropped the idea of a testament; for a testament has to do with an inheritance, not with sacrifices and offerings for sin. In verses 25 and 26 he lays down the position, that Christ's offering of himself had not to be repeated like the offerings of the first covenant, "But now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." He then proceeds, verses 27 & 28, to confirm this position by the fact that the penalty of the law does not require that the sinner should repeatedly die, and therefore Christ as the substitute of his people could not be required repeatedly to offer himself or die; his language is, And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered, &c., thus showing that Christ's once being offered met the appointment of God or the demand of the law that men should once die. But what, say some, has this sentence, "But after this the judgment" to do in this case? A great deal. What is the judgment, but the giving of judgment? And what is that, but the passing of sentence either of justification or of condemnation? Does not the whole scriptural testimony fix the time of judgment after death?

Was it not after Christ's death that he was raised for the justification of his people? And in reference to himself, though he was first manifested in the flesh, yet it was in the Spirit that he was justified; not by his death, but by the resurrection from the dead was he "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the Spirit of holiness." I Tim. 3:16, Rom.1:4. So in reference to the elect, it is after they have been slain by the law, that judgment passes upon them. Herein is the clear difference between the sentence or penalty of the law and the judgment, and shows that the sentence of the law is not the judgment; the convicted elect sinner is under the teachings of the Spirit convinced that the sentence of death by the law stands justly against him as a transgressor, and is expecting every moment the judgment in accordance thereunto to be given, and to be banished to eternal darkness; but behold it does not take place, and to his astonishment, instead of condemnation, it is justification, through the obedience of Christ. So of the world, or those who die in unbelief, Christ's words are, "The hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice; and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5:28 & 29. Damnation as used in the scriptures is synonymous with condemnation, and condemnation is the giving of judgment. If they are raised to this out of their graves it must be after death. If indeed there is no after judgment, in reference to the finally impenitent, no sentence passed upon them other than what is contained in the scriptures, or than the written penalty of the law; there would at least be a very strong argument in favor of their becoming extinct at death. For the penalty of the law is, the sinner shall die; and if there is no after sentence corresponding to the spirituality of the soul, the conclusion would be that death would be the end. Following the Apostle's argument through, that "as it is appointed unto men once to die," so Christ was once offered, corresponding with that sentence, and as, "after this the judgment;" so "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation;" in open confirmation of their faith, and of the judgment passed upon them through him in his resurrection; we see a full harmony in this passage with the connection, and a dignity in it corresponding to the exalted nature of Christ's death as generally revealed in the scriptures.

But to the immediate subject given for consideration. I think I have on a former occasion in writing my views of this 24th chapter of Matthew noticed that the disciples in verse 3, asked their Lord two distinct questions. 1st. "When shall these things be?" that is, the destruction &c., of the temple of which he had just spoken; and 2nd. "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Some may perhaps suppose, and I know not but that I may have formerly supposed, that the disciples asked concerning two distinct periods in this second question; namely, that of his coming, and that of the end of the world. But not so, for then they would have enquired for the signs; that is, the sign of each, instead of connecting both as they did with one sign.

The coming therefore embraced in this enquiry, is that which is immediately connected with the end of the world, and which of course is that second personal coming of Christ which, as has been showed, the scriptures authorize us to look for. The enquiry is, after the sign of this event, or these events connected. Christ in the course of the chapter gives such answers to the two enquiries and such instructions relative thereto as he saw proper. Preceding this 27th verse he forewarns of the coming of false christs, &c., in verse 26, he speaks of their calling upon the people to go into the desert or the secret chambers in order to their manifesting themselves to them as the Christ. He tells his disciples not to believe them; and in the 27th verse he gives them this one leading principle by which all such secret working imposters may be detected; namely, that the true Christ, the Son of man, comes in no such obscure way, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east" (and from its nature) "shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." His coming personally, or coming in his gospel and the display of his power, is open and public like the light, not obscure like the darkness. As he says, Isaiah 48:16, "I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I;" and as he told the high priest, John 18:20; "I spake openly to the world &c." So his religion leads to an open public profession of it; in vain is it sought to be enjoyed in secret. His doctrine is to be proclaimed from the house-tops, not talked of in the chimney-corner, but kept back in public. These are my present views of this text; and it was spoken I think to guard his disciples in all after ages against any of these secret-chamber systems, plans or professions of religion; Christ's religion being like his coming, and like a lighted candle designed to give light.

My respects to Enquirer, though I think I may doubt his humility from his being ashamed of his name.

S. TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., Oct.10, 1848.

Missionary Priestcraft.

Brother Beebe: - As the Old School Baptists are so frequently charged with denying to others, the right of doing what they please with their money, a few remarks on this subject may not be unreasonable. It is said that we would deprive brethren the privilege of giving a ninepence, or a six cent piece to the missionaries, &c. But let us examine the subject; and would to God that those who thus charge us, and those who received these charges, were disposed to judge candidly.

In the first place, - Have the Old School Baptists, by their declarations of separation from the mission schemes, or by any of their resolutions attempted to dictate to others the course they are to take? We have not. I challenge those who complain of our stand to show an instance wherein we have. In our stand, we maintain that what is not of God, has no just claim to be put on the same footing with that religion, and its ordinances, which God has revealed in His word. And is there the missionary who has the audacity to say in direct terms, that the authority of man is equivalent to the authority of God?

We say that the whole mission system, or plans of benevolent operations, to use the Ashdod phrase, is devoid of the sanction of divine revelation, and of course of divine authority. In confirmation of this position, we say and show, that God, in His word, has prescribed an order for the spread of His gospel and the gathering of His elect, entirely different from the mission plan; and has given no direction for any part of that plan. And further we have, by every different motive we could present, called upon the mission advocates, if we have erred in this position, to show us from the scriptures our error, and without effect. They, it is true, say that the success which attends their plans, is an evidence that they are of God. But we cannot admit this as proof; because from the whole history of our religion, as given in the scriptures, as well as in posterior writings, we learn, that in every age, the multitude have been disposed to depart from the true God and His institutions, and to follow their own imaginations; and that in every age, has there been, comparatively, but a little flock, which adhered to the instructions of divine revelation, or have been owned of God as His true worshippers. Also, to receive such testimony would be to admit that the opinion and practice of the multitude is higher authority than the written revelation which God has given us of His will. And, thirdly, to decide on the truth of a religious system according to the multitude of its advocates, would be to brand those who were slain, in ages past for their religion, and the Witnesses who are yet to be killed, with being martyrs to error. For the persecuting class of professors in times past have always been more numerous than the persecuted; and the great majority of professors must be on the side of Anti-christ, to enable him to establish his decree, that no man may buy or sell save he that hath the mark or the name of the beast, &c., and to kill the two Witnesses. Again, we not only believe and say that the mission system is not of God, from the fact that He has not stamped it with the broad seal of Christ's kingdom; namely, divine revelation, but we also say, that not being appointed of God, it must have originated with the man of sin. It not only bespeaks this origin, from its being palmed upon us as religious, by human authority, but in every branch of it, we see the image of the beast reflected, or a copying after the church of Rome, as a prototype. Where do we first find the mission plan brought forward, and acted on? In the church of Rome. These enquires might be pursued if we had room, until every feature, of the pretended benevolent operations, would be shown to be but copies of what is found in that corrupt church.

Hence, we must necessarily, according to our belief, consider the whole mission system, as being at so great a remove from the religion taught in the scriptures, that whilst we truly reverence the latter as having God for its author we must separate ourselves, both in practice and in fellowship, from the other. And I cannot comprehend how any person who has known experimentally the spirituality of the religion of Christ, and the divine communication of it to the soul, can, after a moments reflection, harbor the idea of placing the devices of men in conjunction with that religion which is from heaven and bears the stamp of divine perfection.

The above principles have been fully published in the several declarations made by Old School Baptists, as the reasons why we cannot fellowship as disciples of Christ, those who continue, after the subject has been thus brought to their consideration, to give countenance to the mission plan, in any of its parts. At the same time, we have, hitherto, and still would leave others to choose for themselves, whether they will seek our fellowship by giving evidence of a heart subjection to Christ the King of Zion, or will seek union with the missionists by countenancing their devices. And resting on the merits of the case, we have never to make converts, resorted to flattery or any of those arts, which missionists employ to draw persons under their yoke. We wish persons to be fully persuaded in their own minds upon this important subject, and to pursue with decision that course which they believe right. To fellowship the Old School Baptists in truth, and at the same time to approve of the mission plans, is impossible! Can two walk together except they be agreed? Or can any person be agreed with us in conscientiously opposing the devices of men in religion, and at the same time support the moneyed religious schemes of the missionaries?

But in the second place, I cannot admit the principle involved in the charge against us, which is now under consideration; that is, that members of a church may indifferently employ their money either in the support of vice, or of religion. I readily admit that the New Testament recognizes a personal property in the possessions providentially given to anyone. But at the same time, when a person as a professed disciple of Jesus, gives himself up in fellowship with a church, there is more implied, than simply that he will occasionally, or constantly, unite with them in their worship;

however loose many churches may hold their members. So long as this person continues to fellowship this church as a church of Christ, he is bound duly to regard the fellowship of the brethren in all his transactions. And in professing to be a disciple of Christ he professes no longer to be his own, but to be bought with a price, &c. Hence, his independent right to employ any gifts which may be bestowed upon him, or anything he may possess to his own exclusive advantage, or to his own pleasure, is absorbed in his greater obligation to his Lord, and is under the guardianship of the church. Under such tenure, I think we should feel ourselves and all that we possess, as held, if we felt fully under the influence of the spirit of the gospel. Hence the New Testament recognizes in the church the right to call upon each member to lay by in store, according as God has prospered him, for the necessities of the poor; and to administer of his carnal things, to those who administer in spiritual things. I Cor.9,11 & 16:2. Hence from this guardianship of the church, a member who shows covetousness, as illustrated in the parable of the rich man - Luke 12:16-21 - and as condemned by the Apostle in Col.3:5, or the member who expends his income in supporting his family in extravagance and folly, whilst he can spare little or nothing for the support of the gospel ministry, or for the wants of the poor, are each of them undoubtedly proper subjects of church discipline.

Again, the staking a ninepence on a hand of cards or a billiard table, is as decidedly gambling as the staking of a five or ten dollar bill. Would an orderly church excuse from its discipline a member who should thus gamble, merely from his plea that his money was his own? And why not? Not on account of the money lost in itself considered, but because of the principle and practice he thus countenanced.

But to come to the case in hand, the ardently plead for privilege, of giving a ninepence to the missionaries. What is your motive for wishing to give it? Is it on the principle of almsgiving, as you would give to a common beggar? They do not demand it on this principle; and a little reflection will, I think, convince you that such is a very foolish application of your charities. Remember that he who giveth to the rich is under the same condemnation with him who oppresseth the poor . Prov.22:16. The agents of the several societies, their managers and their missionaries, considering their high salaries, the style in which they travel and live may be considered rich. Whilst these various agents are making it a profitable business to travel and filch their salaries from the unsuspecting; there are many of the poor to whom your ninepence would be a real cordial. Yea, are there not those who have given themselves to the ministry of the word, who are poor in this world, and who from a sense of duty, are often constrained to leave their families, not very comfortably provided for, to preach the gospel to these poor and destitute brethren, to whose care-burdened minds your spare ninepences would often be a real relief? But those who are fond of giving to the missionaries, are not much disposed to give to those who preach the gospel, independent of fleshly considerations. The reason is manifest; because in giving to the one, they receive the applause of men, in the other case, they have to be content with the approbation of their own consciences. Or, secondly. Do you wish to give your ninepence, merely from fear of being thought singular, and of being reproached for not giving? And can you claim to yourself the character of the one who is not ashamed of Christ, whilst your money is given so freely to purchase an exemption from that reproach to which a conscientious and steadfast adherence to His word would expose you? And is ninepence the price at which you value the fellowship of those who from principle will not sanction a departure from the word of God as the rule of faith and practice, that you can so lightly hurt their feelings by giving your money to support an interest, so opposite to that of the pure and heavenly religion of Christ?

Or, thirdly. Do you truly believe that the mission plans are of God, and believe the truth of the principle on which they are built; namely, that the giving of money to support those plans is essential to the salvation of the heathen? And can you satisfy your conscience, whilst you thus believe, with giving now and then a ninepence, or a dollar? In what other light can we view you as that of unfeeling monsters, if you believe that God has suspended the salvation of the heathen on your giving money to provide them with preaching, and can content yourself with giving so sparingly? And in what light are we to view the mission agents who believe the above position relative to the situation of the heathen, (if we can credit their own repeated assertions,) and yet who can appropriate so large a proportion of the money so sparingly given to rescue those people from dropping into the quenchless flames of hell, in paying themselves those high salaries every year, and to decking themselves with their gold watches, guards, spectacles, &c.? Again, can you believe this mission system to be the religion of Christ, and yet wish to have any religious connection with us Old School Baptists, who are entire unbelievers in your whole system? We do not believe that the giving of money ever did, ever will or can procure the salvation of one soul that would otherwise have perished. We do not believe that ever a College or a Theological School made one gospel preacher, or gave to one person the necessary qualification for preaching the gospel of Christ. We do not believe that Bible Societies are at all necessary to enable those whom God has converted to know that He has converted them; or to those who have a desire for the scriptures to obtain them. Neither do we believe that Tract Societies, Sunday Schools, or Bible classes are of use in converting souls to God, or in any sense the so-called means of grace. Nor do we believe that God employs the modern, or the more ancient Romish missionaries for preaching His gospel, or making known His salvation. But we believe that all these are important links in that chain, which is forging to bind down the minds of our countrymen under the dominion of priestcraft; and that they are parts of the Image of the Beast, the dedication of which by public decree, will consummate the power of Anti-christ. Hence those missionists who denounce us as infidels are much more consistent with their own creed, than those who pretendedly wish to enjoy our fellowship or to live in church relation with us. But before they decry us as infidels, they ought to give more decisive proof of their own genuine belief in their creed, by a more faithful appropriation of the money they collect, to the specific object for which it was given.

In a word, where there is a moral honesty and a faithful examination of the subject, there can be no neutrality, no indifference relating to the mission system. It either is of God, or is not of God. If we believe it is not of God, and truly love Christ and His cause, we cannot consistently countenance it by the giving of even a nine-piece for its support, any more than had we lived in the days of the primitive christians, we could have thrown incense on the heathen altars, to countenance those sacrifices, which Paul says they sacrificed to devils. If we believe this system to be of God and have any love and reverence for God, we certainly should feel constrained to enter fully into the whole system, and be actively engaged by every exertion and every sacrifice in our power to promote all its branches and to prove the superior efficacy, over the death and life of Christ, of human contrivance aided by money, to save souls and evangelize the world. Paul said: "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by His life ."(Rom.5:10). But Paul was an Old School Baptist. The gospel which he preached, he received not from men, neither was he taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. (Gal. 1:11,12). Therefore Jesus Christ and Him crucified - not money - was the sum of his preaching.

To conclude, my Friend, if you believe the mission system to be of God, be consistent, give your money freely, but neither fellowship us in our opposition to it, nor ask us to fellowship you. Let each be governed by his own religion, as distinct, the one from the other, as is the production of the Eternal Mind, from the imaginations of the human brain.

If you do not believe the mission system to be the appointment of God, take heed how you countenance it as religious lest you give the world reason to conclude that you consider all religion to be the device of men, and lest you be found enlisted among the enemies of truth. Farewell, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.5 (1837)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 96 - 102

Moreover the Law Entered

Brother Beebe: - I saw in a number of the Signs some time back that sister A. A. Ford, of Lexington, N.Y., requests my views on Rom.5:20, "Moreover the law entered, that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

It appears to me that any person who reads this text with attention, believing it to mean what it says, will be surprised at the view Paul had of the purpose of God in the giving of the law as differing so materially from the view so generally entertained of the use of the law. The idea of many is that the grand design of the law is to make men moral and better, and to enable them by obedience to it to secure acceptance with God. No doubt the letter of the law, where it has been known, has had a tendency to restrain persons somewhat from outward sins, at any rate to establish a better standard of morals then exists among the heathen. But God had a much higher purpose than this in giving the law; and when men preach it as a way of life, and look to their obedience to it as means of their acceptance with God, they entirely pervert the law and the design of it. The law is spiritual, and as such is the standard of righteousness; and was given to show the depravity of man and to prepare the way for the manifestation of salvation by Christ and of grace. Paul said, "I had not known sin but by the law." Of course he would not have known the need of salvation by Christ, without this knowledge of sin by the law. "The law entered that the offence might abound," is a positive declaration without any reservation. We evidently are not to understand by this that man has become any more depraved, or has acted out this depravity any more since the law was given, than before. God, before the coming of the flood, "Saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." But the depravity of man was made more manifest by the law's being given, in showing thereby his want of conformity to it, as illustrated in the continual disobedience of national Israel, and the consequent repeated judgments incurred. There was everything to induce and to favor that people's obeying the law, if the heart had not been entirely alienated from God, in the repeated manifestations of His power in delivering and preserving them, and in fulfilling unto them the promises made unto their fathers, and in blessing them with an abundance of increase when obedient; yet their hearts were continually going off after their idols. But the grace of God did much more abound in their case, in His repeated and marvelous deliverances of them from those distresses brought upon themselves by their rebellion against Him, and in preserving them until the long-looked-for promise made unto their fathers of the coming of the Messiah was fulfilled. Then were they left to fill up the measure of their iniquities in rejecting Him. And then was it manifested that this grace abounded toward them, not for their sakes, but for the sake of Christ and His seed, which was in them concerning the flesh, and typical.

But I think the Apostle had more particular reference to the spiritual application of the law in the experience of the subjects of grace. Men, while in a state of unregeneracy have all that depravity which they under God's teaching afterwards discover in themselves; but they know it not; it perhaps lays in a great measure dormant in them. So that Watts was correct in saying:

"I was alive without the law, And thought my sins were dead."

Again,

"My guilt appeared but small before,

Till terribly I saw,

How perfect, holy, just and pure, Was thine eternal law."

The law is spiritual, but the natural man cannot discern spiritual things; he only knows the letter of the law. And as by the law is the knowledge of sin, we can only know sin as we know the law. When that spiritual life which is the light of men, is imparted to men in regeneration, or God shines in the heart, he now sees the law in that light as it is applied of God to him; and there is a majesty, weight and broadness to it that he had not felt in the letter before. It penetrates and searches his heart, and joys open to his view as contrasted with its holy demands, the exceeding sinfulness and deceitfulness of his heart; so that his soul is by the law converted from its notions of self-righteousness, and he dies under the sentence of the law. Thus, I presume, sister Ford once thought that she had only to turn her attention to the law and observe it more closely, and she would soon purge away those sins she was then conscious of, and become very good. And probably that would have been the result in her estimation, if it had been only her turning her attention to the law. But when God spake the law to her, and caused it to enter her heart, she found the offence abounding. This is just the difference between man's teaching and God's teaching; between men's seeking God, and God's seeking them and searching them.

But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. Yes, grace abounds to the free pardon of all the multitude of our sins, and the depth of our depravity. It superabounds above all our unworthiness, poverty, pollution and guilt, to give instead of the curse we deserve, peace and joy in believing, and the hope of heavenly purity and glory beyond this world. It superabounds, in that it makes our depravity and ruin the very occasion, and I may say a means (though the expression may startle the means folks) of our being subjects of God's grace and salvation. Without being sinners we had not been subjects of salvation. Hence without knowing our sinfulness we could not have known what it is to be saved, and without a knowledge of the depth of our depravity, we could not have known the loveliness and the riches of that grace which brings salvation to such vile sinners. The entrance of the law was a very important part in the salvation of the elect, and it was rich grace which caused it to enter in its majesty and strictness to our hearts, searching out the abominations therein, and stripping us of our self-righteousness.

Those who know not the law as spiritual, may please themselves with their goodness and with their obedience as being means of their salvation, but when they go hence they will leave behind all the heaven, they can know. The super abounding of grace over our abounding sins, is manifested, in that it has provided for the believers an infinitely better righteousness than man could have obtained by the law, a far more stable foundation for the hope of future happiness, than man could have had in his own obedience; and also has brought the believers into a nearer and far more glorious relation to God, that of sons of God, than they could have known had they not sinned, for they could only have remained servants. Lastly it has secured for them in Christ a far more glorious inheritance than they could have had through Adam had he remained in uprightness; for he was of the earth, earthy.

If these views will be of any use or comfort to sister Ford or others, I am glad to impart them. Yours, in love, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, May, 1858.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 26 (1858)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 452 - 455

Mr. Giddings's essay on the modern mission system

Examined, #3

I now come to Mr. Giddings's third proposition: that combination of effort on the part of the church, is sanctioned by Christ its head. This proposition he attempts to prove; First from the usefulness of such combinations, for the accomplishment of great worldly objects, as exemplified in turnpike and railroad companies. Secondly he says Christ gave the principle his sanction," when he chose the 12 apostles to be with him, to cooperate with him, in the language of Paul, to be workers together with God in bringing about his gracious designs of mercy toward our guilty world." He speaks of the appointment of the 70, as having reference to the same principle; as also the early Christians having all things common. In reference to the same principle of combination of effort he makes Paul represent the church is a body fitly joined together. But after all this, which I may call monstrous proof, (for it is the most monstrous perversion of the scriptures, I ever witnessed from a man professing candor, and reverence for the bible) it will do him no good in support of his mission cause, unless he can prove that christ's Kingdom is of this world, and sustained by worldly principles; or that Christ has authorized a combination of the church and the world to advance his cause; For such as to combination found in the modern mission system.

That the Lord Jesus employs instruments for the accomplishment of his gracious purposes towards his people, all consistent old school Baptists admit, but he chose for himself, the instruments he intends to employ, and directs them to their field of Labor as he did the 70, we maintain. That he ever authorized others to choose and direct for him, as the mission boards, assumed to do, we deny, until divine authority is produced for such assumption.

That christ's church is a body fitly compacted together, of which Christ has the head, we believe, and that it grows up into him in all things, we are taught: Ephesians 4.15, 16. But how it grows and increases, no man by human reason or science, can know any more than he knows how the seed he casts into the ground springs and grows, mark 4.26, 28. Hence Mr. Giddings so egregiously mistaking the spiritual union of the Church of Christ, for the mere voluntary combination, such as is found in a Turnpike company. That Christ has formed his people a social people, we know; And that when those who have been taught by the spirit of God meet and speak of their experience, their hearts flow together in union, we have felt. And such cheerfully give themselves up to each other, to walk together in fellowship, and in obedience to the institutions of Christ. But whoever supposes disunion is produced by that cold mathematical calculation of interest or strength, which is implied in combination of effort, must be ignorant of gospel fellowship. What the child of grace does in obedience to the institutions of the gospel, he would do, if an account thereof he should be abandoned by all men. Hence the same principle which leads him to give himself up to a church, as a Church of Christ, may again constrain him to separate himself from that church, and to stand and bear his testimony alone rather than sanctioned certain errors which he finds maintained by the church. So far from a union with the true Church of Christ, bearing any resemblance to that combination of the church and the world, found in both the foreign and domestic mission societies, the act of thus uniting with the church, is formal and visible separating of oneself from the world.

So much for Mr. Giddings notion of gospel system being a combination of effort. I however wish to notice more particularly a few of his remarks. 1st that "Christ chose the 12 apostles to cooperate with him;" that is to labor jointly with him to the same end, for this is the plane idea of cooperating. Christ came to minister, that is, to serve under the law, and to give his life a ransom for many. Did the apostles cooperate with him in this, and help him to finish the work the father gave him to do? This cooperating in the work of Christ, is a new doctrine. It does appear that these missionists care not how they degrade Christ to level with worms, or pervert a doctrine of the gospel, to give plausibility to their schemes. The Lord Jesus called and ordained the 12 to be with him, and to witness of all that he began, both to do and to teach, and also of his resurrection acts 1.1, 21, 22. He taught them to honor him as Lord, and to do whatsoever he commanded them, owning no other master. He committed to them a dispensation of the gospel, because it was his pleasure to put that treasure in earthen vessels, that the Excellency of the power might be of God, and not of them. Very different this from their being cooperators with him. The 70, he as a king, chose and sent his messengers, two and two before his face into every city and place, whether he himself would come, Luke 10.1. Was there anything in all of this like equality? How absurd would it be if a messenger sent by an earthly king, before him, to give notice of his approach to any part of his realm, should, on that account think himself a cooperator with the king in the government of his Kingdom.

But secondly, Mr. Gidding makes Paul say, they were workers together with God. Paul does not say so; Though the translators make him say to some amount. The text, 1st Corinthians 6.1, reads, "we then, as workers together with him," but the words with him, are printed in italic, to show that there is nothing in the original answering to them. Why does translators presume to add to them, I know not. The proper reading of the text is, "we then, as workers together, (or rather, as fellow workers) beseech you." This is the idea evidently intended to be conveyed, that in beseeching them, Paul and Timothy did as brethren, as companions, and not as lording it over them. The same idea is kept up in the 3rd and 4th verses, where it is added, "giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blame; But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God." They did not say yourselves, but ourselves, connecting themselves with them as fellow laborers, and as the ministers of God, and not as workers with him.

We have another passage in first Corinthians 39, in which the translation is equally exceptionable with the above; and these two are more so than any I have noticed, unless it be Psalm 110.3. In a translation of this text, 1st Corinthians 3.9, there is a plain contradiction to the context. In verse 5, we find Paul, not exalting himself and apostles as equal with God in the work of salvation, but putting themselves upon their own level, that God might be exalted. His language is, "who then is Paul, and who is Apolllos, but ministers by whom you have believed, as the Lord gave to every man?" In versus 6 and seven, he adds, I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that plants, anything; Neither has heated waters, but god that gives the increase." How different this from the translation of verse 9, which reads, "for we are laborers together with God; you are God's husbandry, you are God's building." But when we come to look at the original, we find it different. It ought to read, "we are equally God's laborers; You are God's husbandry." The construction of each branch of the text is the same. Theon gar esmen sunergoi; theon georgion este, and so of the other. It is theon, the genitive for God, in each case, and we might with the same propriety, according to the construction, read you are the husbandry together with God, as to read the former branch as in the translation. Some may perhaps contend for the signification of the word sunergoi, as favoring the translation; It being sometimes used to signify aiders, or assistants, but the formation of the word determines its natural signification. It is formed of sun, which in composition signifies equally, together, in company, and ergoi, which signifies work or labor, hence ergos, a laborer, and ergoi, being thus compounded, shows that sun qualifies ergos or the ergoi, and not theon. Thus the true rendering is as above, we are equally God's laborers; and so the apostle explains it in verse 8, "now heat at plants, and heat at waters are one." This verse, thus properly rendered answers exactly to the context and to the whole scope of the apostles reasoning, which was to show that there was no ground for the Corinthian brethren to divide themselves into parties, and one to say I am of Paul, another item of Apollos, for Paul and Apollos were both equally God's ministers, laborers or servants, and the Corinthians were not Paul's or Apollos 'husbandry but God's.

As Mr. Gidding gave me occasion to touch this subject, I felt it important to make this digression, and notice both these texts, as pedo baptist, and new school preachers are so fond of referring to them as giving them a great importance as if they were agents or a kind of vice-regents for God, or fellows with him in carrying on the work of salvation.

I will now pass to Mr. Giddings 4th proposition, that in relation to missions, there is nothing in combined action repugnant to the general principle, on which in other cases it is justifiable.

This is rather a singular proposition to come from Mr. Gidding after having asserted that Christ had given such combination of effort, his high and holy sanction. However, as he has laid down the proposition, and undertakes to sustain it, we will follow him through with our examinations.

He has given 3 specifications, which he admits necessary to establish, in order to sustain his proposition. They are, that the end or object to be obtained by such combinations, be in itself good. That the means employed for its accomplishment, be lawful and proper; And, that those means be directed in a lawful manner.

In his attempts to show that this first specification, that the object to be attained, be it in itself good, is found to hold good in the mission system, he asserts that it is no other than the conversion of the world to God, and adds, "that he designs its accomplishment, has been already abundantly shown." He further asserts, "for it (the conversion of the world) he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believes on him should not perish. For if the savior left the bosom of the father." He says, "those who espoused the cause of missions, have the same object in view, and no other;" that is, the same object God having giving his son. The savior had in leaving the bosom of the father, in becoming obedient of the death in re ascending an intercessor before his father's throne. For all these and more he names. This is truly assuming high ground for his mission advocates; And they are engaged to accomplish the same object Christ had in view in leaving the bosom of the father, in dying. It is raising them fully as high as Christ; For it would seem that Christ did not accomplish the object for which he came into the world, and they have now undertaken to complete it for him.

Mr. Getting says much more to the same amount, showing on the one hand the wretchedness of the heathen; And on the other hand what had changed to missionaries designed to make in the case. But as the above quotations contained the substance of all he says on this head, we will confine our remarks to them. The high assumption he makes I will leave him to answer for, to that God who will in due time vindicate the honor of his great name. As to the assertion that he had "abundantly shown that God designs to conversion of the world to him;" we promptly deny it. Mr. Gidding under his first proposition showed that God opened quote designed to extend the blessings of the gospel to all the nations of the earth." To this I readily assent it; But there is a material difference between the fact that a people shall be saved, who are "redeemed unto God from every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation," and the idea now advanced by Mr. Gidding that God designs a conversion of the world, or all of the kindred tongues. The expression redeemed out of the kindreds, implies that some of every kindred we're not redeemed. But to this point, whether the missionaries attempts to convert the world to God is good. If not it is rebellion against the government of God.

By the world I presume Mr. Gidding means the whole human family existing on the earth. Has God therefore designed the conversion of the world to himself? Certainly not; For if he had he has been awfully disappointed. But God has said, "my council shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," Isaiah 46.10. Has God ever manifested it to be his design that the world should be converted to him, or be saved? Let us inquire of the ages that are passed. Did God design the old world to experience the salvation of Noah and his family? Evidently not, from the special directions given to God to Noah, concerning the size of the ark, as to whom, and what should be brought into it, and from the declaration which God made, that the end of all flesh was come, genesis 6. This preservation in the arc, was a like figure unto baptism, as baptism was a light figure unto it, of the salvation by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. That is, they were both figures of the true salvation, not the substance of it, first Peter 4.20, 21.

2nd the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, and God's redeeming them as a peculiar people unto himself. Israel were typical and a redemption typical of the redemption of God's spiritual Israel. Hence Christ is said to be our Passover, sacrifice for us, 1st Corinthians 5.7. See also, 1st Corinthians 10.1-6. It is very evident that God in sending Moses into Egypt to deliver Israel, did not design the deliverance also of the Egyptians, exodus 314-20; and 7.1-4. See also the directions concerning the sprinkling of the blood of the Passover, exodus 12.7-13. It is equally evident that God, in bringing Israel into Canaan, did not design the preservation of the canaanites, but their destruction. Did God design the conversion of the gentile nations generally, to himself, during the legal dispensation? If so, why did he bar them from the privilege of the Tabernacle and temple worship? Why did he make the laws establishing his religion with Israel, a middle wall of partition between them and the gentiles? Why did he, whilst he gave to Israel the scriptures, sent to them his prophets, and gave them line upon line, and precept upon precept, wink, as Paul says, at the ignorance of the gentiles? Acts 17.30.

3rd when Christ came in the flesh, God did not design at that. The conversion of the whole world to the truth of the gospel. Not the Jews as a nation, Matthew 13.11-17, compare with mark 4.11, 12, and Luke 8.10. Also John 12.37-41. Not the gentile; For Christ commanded his disciples saying,

"go not into the way of the gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter you not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," Matthew 10.5, 6.

4th after the resurrection of Christ, and ascending of his disciples among the gentiles, the Lord did not design the conversion of all; As is evident from the holy ghosts not suffering Paul to go into Bithynia, and from God suffering him, and other preachers, to be driven by persecution, from many other places, after they had preached to gospel for a witness to them. While at Corinth, the Lord spoke unto Paul in a vision "be not afraid, but speak and hold not your peace, for I am with you and no man shall set on you to hurt you." And why at Corinth was he to continue? "For I have much people in this place," was the reason assigned for the Lord, acts 18.9, 10. So where God had a people to be brought into the liberty of the gospel, he could, and did send his preachers without the aid of missionary societies, and continue them too, until his purpose was completely accomplished. The same will hold good in all after ages, for Christ says "I am with you," that is, in reference to those whom he sends, "always even to the end of the world," and having too, "all power in heaven and in earth." I would then ask Mr. Giddings why, if God at any period for the last 1200 years, designed a conversion of the world to himself, through the circulation of the scriptures and the preaching of the gospel, he suffered the popish and mohammedan interests to arrive at that power, by which they have been enabled to debar the scriptures and the gospel from so many countries, and to continue to exercise this power to this day? Christ certainly has not lost any of his all power.

The missionaries laboring den to convert the world to God, when he so manifestly does not design this conversion our laboring in a bad cause. It is as much rebellion against God, as was Israel's attempt to go up and take immediate possession of the land, when God had said their carcasses should fall into wilderness, numbers 14.39-45.

But if God does not design the conversion of the world to himself, does he not design extending the blessings of the gospel to all nations? I understood from the scriptures, he does. But this event evidently belongs to the quote times and seasons which the father has put into his own power," and the period of it, therefore is not for us to know, until it is his pleasure to make it manifest, acts 1.7. But for our patient waiting for it, God has been pleased to connect this glorious event, in prophecy, and other events as precursors to it. Thus, as foretold in the 60th chapter of Isaiah, it is to be preceded by that special vengeance which the Lord will take upon his enemies, as in Isaiah 59.16-19, as mentioned in Isaiah 66.19-12. It is preceded by the Lords "pleading with all flesh, with fire and sword," versus 15, 17. As for told in revelation 11.15, it is preceded by the "spirit of life from God entering into the witnesses" that had been killed, and by the "great earthquake," versus 11, 13. As mentioned in revelation 14.6, it is connected with the proclamation "that Babylon is fallen, is fallen;" verse 8. And in reference to the "kings of the east," that Euphrates must first be dried up, revelation 16.12.

Now the missionaries, in their attempts to convert the nations, do not "know the thoughts of the Lord, neither understanding his counsel for he shall gather them as sheaves unto the floor, and say, arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion, Micah 4.12, 13. Their cause therefore is not good. But in the second place, God has not appointed the mission societies to do this work of extending the blessings of the gospel to all nations. They cannot show their Commission having a seal of heaven to it. The whole government of this work is committed to Christ, and he must reign until he has put all enemies under his feet 1st Corinthians 15.25. He said all power is given unto me both in heaven and in earth, and lo, I am with you, Matthew 28.18,20. Has he then become so weak as to require men to form combinations, in order to gather strength to do this work for him? No. The thing is an insult upon His Majesty. Again, in reference to human means, the declaration is "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, says the Lord of hosts." Zechariah 4.6; Titus 3.5-6. Does Mr. Giddings think that by their combinations they can command and control the operations of the spirit of God, at dare option? If not, are they not setting him at not, and going on according to the plea of their own devising, and attempting to convert the world at their own pleasure? Can that be a good work in which the Holy Spirit has set aside, the majesty of the Lord of glory insulted, and men are deceived with a conversion in which there is no spirit, no life?

The missionaries are undertaking to convert the world to God, at their own will, and by their own exertions. The Pope pretends to forgive sins by virtue that it is in the church. Which is the most presumptive in heaven insulting? If those who trust in the Pope's pardons will find themselves deceived, those who trust in human evenly produces conversions, for bringing them to god, will be no less so. It is assuming the prerogative which belongs alone to God, to forgive sins, it is quite as much so to undertake to convert and save according to the will of men, and by means of human devising, "salvation is of the Lord." If then popery is a branch of the man of sin, the modern mission system must be connected with it also. Thus so much for the goodness of the object aimed at by the mission combination.

S. Trott Fairfax, CH Virginia, September 6, 1837

(To be continued)

MR. GIDDING'S ESSAY ON THE MODERN MISSION SYSTEM

Examined No. 5

(Concluded)

Mr. Giddings in reference to the third instance of the use of means, quote several texts of scripture, to show that trust ought not to be reposed in man, but in God, and says, "thus it is with the friends of missions, who after they have done all that they were able to do, say we are unprofitable servants." He adds, "nothing is more unfounded than the charge we sometimes hear alluded to against the supporters of missions, that they trust in themselves, and not in God." And this he says after himself pleading for a combination of effort, upon the principle of Turnpike companies, in order to accomplish the work they are engaged in. It is true, in this case he wants God to be a coworker with him; But it is evident that he has but little confidence in God's saving the heathen, without the cooperation of the missionaries.

In reference to the fact of making false charges, it so happens that elder George Waller, himself a mission supporter, and state convention advocate, has, in the same paper which contains Mr. Giddings peace, some remarks that completely fixes the crime of charging falsely, not on the opposers of missions, but on Mr. Giddings himself. Elder wallers language is, "there is another extreme of Bible religion, equally destructive of union of effort, which is a grasp and A use of means without due regard to the throne of God, and its sovereign determinations respecting the final results of all instrumentalities. Hence many unsavory expressions, both from the present pulpit, indicating that many perish for want of the Bible, for want of the gospel ministry, who, as it would seem, might have been saved if men had been sufficiently active; Intimating clearly that the salvation of sinners depends upon human effort." He goes on to speak of this extreme as he calls it, introducing among the Baptists, other errors, such as the sentiments of Fuller, Arminius and Campbell. Thus Mr. Giddings own brother Waller, (who indeed was once recognized by me as brother) has saved me the trouble of looking over the missionary publications for proofs, of which there are abundant, to sustain the charge that they trust in human effort to accomplish a great work of saving the world. However, as aNo. Of the "cross and journal," of September 1st, has just fallen into my hands, I will give an extract from a letter of Mr. Mason, one of the Baptist missionaries in Burma, published Erin, showing that according to his view that there is no need of any other dependence than that upon what he calls the church, to accomplish their conversion of the heathen. His language is, "there is moral power enough in the church to shake the pillars of pandemonium to their foundation, and put all its counsels to confusion, where that power brought to bear on the legitimate object of attack. It is too late for skepticism now. The experiment has been tried, and has been fully proved that heathenism shrinks before the sword of the Lord. She has long ago ceased to come to the attack, and her defenses are mouldering walls, and IV battlements. destined, inevitably destined to fall, whenever the church musters the host of the battle." He had just before said, "we see that the church has only to come in the name of God of hosts, and her report will be, Veni, vidi, vica," I came, I saw, I conquered; thus borrowing the expressions of Julius Caesar, in describing his rapid conquests in Gaul. Thus moral power is all that is necessary, and at the church has, completely to overturn heathenism, if she would only muster the host of the battle; that is, let alone the divisions and contentions about sentiments which he had been Speaking of, as existing among the religious society here, in America, and be engaged for the conversion of the heathen. No need, of course, of any spiritual power to be put forth. The divine energies or the Holy Ghost would be superfluous. All they want of God, is to go in his name, and to employ the written word, which they call the sword of the Lord. This is the missionary doctrine of the cross, which is carried to Burma.

In reference to the question from elder Waller, it seems he does not consider these delusive and God dishonoring sentiments, as contrary to, but only extremes of Bible religion; hence he can go hand in hand with those who hold them, and help to devise means for propagating them. If such is a happy view of Bible religion, he is welcome to the happiness of entertaining it. It is a popular view, and let him enjoy the popularity of it, whilst I would cheerfully exchange it, together with his society, whilst he purposes the phantom, for the reproach of believing in a Bible religion which came from God, is perfect, and peculiar in its nature, and which therefore can admit of no extremes.

But to return to Mr. Giddings, he affirms, as proof that they do not trust in an arm of flesh, that "if there are any men on earth that pray, they are the missionaries," whom he calls the missionaries of the cross of Christ. What intelligible idea he intended to convey by this expression, I know not, unless it be, that like the papists, they are said to carry, figuratively, a semblance of the cross, instead of the doctrine of Christ crucified. But as to Mr. Giddings proof that they trust in God, that they pray, it cannot amount to much, unless we could know that they pray in faith. I have no doubt that the missionaries are often engaged in what they call the duty of prayer. This trait has always belonged to that class of professors. The Pharisees, who made long prayers, and who prayed at the corners of the streets, nor the Catholics who are so zealous to say daily, or oftener, the whole collection of prayers on their rosaries, do not more trust in the efficacy of their prayers, than do the great body of the missionaries, judging from the power they frequently ascribe to prayer. We need but look to their zealous attention to their monthly concerts, to be satisfied that they expect, by their prayers, to control the decisions of heaven. On what ground can they justify the notion that all, in every part of the world, must unite at the same time in each month, in praying for a specified object, but that so many persons, at the same moment offering their prayers for the same object will have the effect, if not to overall the God of heaven, at least to constrain him to grant their request, because so many asked for it; just as the abolitionists at this time, think to sway Congress, by the number of petitions they send in? If the mission prayers thus offered, are in evidence of a humble trust and reliance on the government of God, then the exertions of the abolitionists, shows that they rely principally upon the number of signers they obtain, to carry their point with congress, then the monthly concert system, shows equally an expectation of controlling the throne of God, by the number and suddenness of the prayers coming before him.

But again, the missionaries, in common with others, have a consciousness of the existence of a God, and for several reasons which might be named, they would wish that God to sanction their plans, and crowned your schemes with success; for probably during anxiety on this point, is not greater than then was that of the priests of Baal, that he should answer them by fire, (first kings 18.26) the anxiety, therefore, of the one, is no more evidence that they do not trust to their own exertions, than that of the other was that they did not. So much for Mr. Giddings decisive proof.

Mr. Giddings 5th proposition is, that it is right to support a preached gospel. In support of this proposition, he brings a number of scriptural proofs from the New Testament, which I am not disposed to contravene; but his attempts to prove it from the law concerning ties, looks too much like his wishing a legal establishment, compelling, as in Catholic countries, the people to pay a 10th to the priests. For that law, and the letter of it, has nothing more to do with the gospel church, than has the law concerning the sanctifying the firstling of man and beast. His attempts to sustain the mission system, from the gospel direction concerning the support of those who preached the gospel, is mere sophistry.

Referring to the direction given by the apostle to their churches, concerning those who preached the gospel, living off the gospel; And to his directions concerning the collections for the poor Saints of Jerusalem, Mr. Gidding says, such are the arguments by which the friends of modern missions justify themselves in the course they are pursuing. In making this assertion, he must have considered the readers of the banner as complete dupes, as are the Catholic laity, to their priests; for what individualist or who depends on his own judgment for his conclusions, that does not at the first glance, see a material difference between the Apostolic directions concerning churches and ministry and carnal things, to those who administer to them in spiritual things; and the modern plan of forming mission societies, for raising money to hire missionaries to go and preach under their direction? As also a marked difference between a gospel preachers having a right to expect a support from the churches of Christ, whilst he is devoting himself to the work of feeding the sheep and lambs of Christ, and a person's engaging to preach to please the world, because he has been hired at a specified sum per diem to do it?

To crown the whole of his outrage upon the judgment and feelings of those who will not be duped by his Jesuit arguments, Mr. Giddings, in concluding his essay, addresses stem in the language of Gamaliel to the council, concerning the apostles, refrain from these men and let them alone; For if this counsel or this work be of men it will come to not; but if it be of God you cannot overthrow it; Lest happily you be found even to fight against God.

Before addressing us in this language, he ought to have shown that the same scriptural and divine testimony has been given to the missionary system, which had been given to the apostles doctrine, miracles, for such had been given to the apostles, in a way that the Jews could not deny it, Acts 4.16. To apply that text to the class of the missionaries, without either a direct scriptural command, or miracles being produced to evince that their new schemes are authorized of God, would go to set aside the scriptures as a gospel standard, and to establish a principle that we have no given criterion by which to judge whether a work or counsel to be of men, or of God.

As to letting the missionaries alone, if he intends by it, that we should let them go on with their anti Christian schemes, propagating their errors in all our borders, without bearing our decided testimony against him; we can assure him that we shall be brought under no such gag law while the liberty of conscience is continued to us.

If he means by letting them alone, that we are not to go among them to disturb and annoy them, the caution is altogether unnecessary; for we are far more anxious to depart from the tents of those men, than to associate with them, or go after them.

If he means by his application of that exhortation, that we must let the missionaries bring their pernicious schemes and false doctrines, into our churches, associations, without opposing their intrusions and attempts to force us to sanction their measures; we shall have to say that, in this thing, we did let them alone entirely too long for our own comfort, for the honor of Zion, and for the peace of the Baptist denomination. Had the Old Regular Baptists manfully resisted the first attempts to introduce new measures, new doctrines, and men made converts and preachers among them, and maintaining a firm stand on the platform of their confession of faith, had they discountenanced everything in religion, which had not a thus said the Lord for it, and rejected it from their communion, those who, after the 1st and 2nd admonition persisted in practicing or advocating what was thus unauthorized, the denomination of regular Baptists, would not have become such a mixed multitude as it was previous to our old school separation, we we should have been spared the pain of these recent divisions, and the world would not have had the occasion (which they have had at every meeting of an association) to say, behold how these Baptists dispute and quarrel. No, it is high time that those who adhere in principle, to the faith once delivered to the Saints; and as professed by the old persecuted Baptists, were done letting them alone in this sense, and were determinately pursuing measures to produce an entire and effectual separation between themselves and the entire new school brood.

If, again, by letting them alone, Mr. Gidding means that we should not persecute them, or make use of carnal weapons and worldly power to stop them, he addressed the exhortation altogether to the wrong company, were the sheep ever known to persecute the wolves? Or the wolves not to persecute the sheep when they had the opportunity? This may be thought begging the question as to which company are sheep; But stop a little. Will any person, on a moment's reflection, judged that animal to be a sheep, which is clothed with wool that was bought with money, to a respectable appearance, as the missionists by membership in their religious societies? As the master cautions us against no other animal but wolves that would come in sheep's clothing, we feel authorized to consider them to be wolves; and as the old school Baptists are an opposite company, and are the objects of the others pursuit, it is a pretty good evidence that they are sheep. Hence, as much as the idea has been ridiculed, it is not to be wondered at, that we should have expressed our fears that the missionists Are aiming to get an ascendancy in our country and government, and at getting it, they will, by worldly influence and power, put us down.

I have thus gone through with my examination of Mr. Giddings's attempt to reconcile the modern mission system with the scriptures of truth; and from the whole review, it does not appear that, in reality, he has made one attempt to show that the peculiar traits of that system, have any resemblance to the order laid down in a New Testament, but has only endeavored to cast a mist over the eyes and judgment of his readers, by quoting a number of passages of scripture, and resting them from their true meaning, to make a forced application of them To his system. I here leave him with the wish that before he attempts to write again, God would give him an honest regard to the truth and dignity of divine revelation.

S. Trott Fairfax CH, Virginia, October 18, 1837 P. S. Brother Beebe: among other typographical errors which I discover in No. 3, of the Examination, is one which appears awkward in my quotation from the Greek of first Corinthians 3.9, you have in each instance where the genitive of theos occurs, put theon for theou.

An examination of Matthew 2.23, "and he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets; He shall be called a Nazarene."

Brother Beebe: from the conversation which passed when I was last in Alexandria, on the above subject, I was led on returning home to give the subject a more close examination. The result of this examination I will now offer to your readers as an illustration of this scripture.

The apparent difficulties of this passage, are, first that there are no prophecies in scripture directly asserting that christ should be called a nazarite or according to the Greek termination a Nazarene; and 2nd that he was principally called a Nazarene from the mere circumstance of his being brought up in Nazareth.

There is some difficulty in deciding from which of the two Hebrew words the name of the city Nazareth was derived. One is nazar which signifies separated; the other Naizar which primarily signifies preserved. These words, in Hebrew, are both spelled with three letters, the one with Zain answering to Z, in english; the other with tzadhe answering to tz, but both answering to the letter, Zeta in Greek. Parkhurst (in Hebrew lexicon) considers Nazareth derived from nazar, others give it from natzar, and Calmet and others to arrive it indifferently from either. As the evangelist refers to the prophets without specifying any one, we may with Calmet, consider both words, and their use in the scriptures embraced. Whatever may have been the design of the founders of this city in giving it this name, it was evidently designed of God to point it out, as the designated residence of the true nazarite and branch, or the separated and preserved one. The expression, "he shall be called a Nazarene," means nothing less than that he should be made manifest as the Nazarene; the term called is frequently used in this sense in the scriptures, as in Jeremiah 23.6.

I will first mentioned the word Nazarene as derived from nazar, and show some of the instances wherein, in the use of that word, Christ is prophesied of. 1st nazar is the word to point out the nazarite under his vow of separation. Here permit me to remark, that vows generally, as recognized by the levitical law, had a typical reference to the Messiah, to that suret ship which he had entered into, and to his devoting himself to God in the place of legal sacrifices, and it'll behalf of his people, hence the strictness with which vows were to be observed Leviticus 27.1-29; numbers 30.1-15. Hence Jephthah's affliction in consequence of his vow; hence Christ says, "ought not Christ to have suffered these things," Luke 24.26; and the psalmist I think, personating Christ, says "your vows are upon me ohh God," Psalm 106.13. If it is not so, and the laws concerning vows are to teach the spiritual Israelites the rightness with which he must perform his promises to God, what a miserable case should we be in!

But to return to the subject, the law concerning the nazarite, (numbers 6) required that the person, during the period specified in his vow should refrain from wine and everything of the fruit of the vine; should not come near any dead even his nearest relative; Should not let a razor come upon his head; And that he should all the days of his separation, be holy to the Lord. These things taught typically or prophetically, the perfect holiness of Christ, in his humanity, his entire separation from the depravity and defilements of sinners. Hebrew 7.26. And thus also was shown the partition of his people in him, from sin in the world which lies in wickedness. The nazarite and not being allowed to drink any wine or anything fermented with the grape, showed forth Christ as acting in the work of salvation, from his own divine, and not from a borrowed power, that he was not excited nor empowered to act from anything external or derived. Hence those, who in this day would by their prayers and schemes excite and help Christ to save the world, are comparable to those who gave wine to the Nazareth to drink, Amos 2.12. But the hair of the nazarite was the distinguishing thing in his separation. Hence numbers 6.7. His hair is called, the consecration, or rather separation, of his God." Because the conservation of his God is upon his head." In verse 19, in the translation we read, "after the hair of his separation is shaven;" but the words, the hair of are in italics, showing that in the original it reads, "after his separation is shaven." Hence if a person died suddenly by him, he was said to have defiled the head of his separation, verse 9. Thus in the case of the nazarite, it is seen that the principal part of his consecration consisted in his unshaven hair and in the case of Samson, who was a nazarite from the womb his great strength lay in his nazaritical locks, Judges 16.17, 19, 22. So in the unshorn glory of Christ, the head of his church in his contest with Satan, sin, death and the law, lies all the strength and action of his people; and the cause of their being made manifest as consecrated to God.

But it may be asked, what Jesus dwelling at Nazareth to do with his being the true nazarite? I answer, first; By his being brought up at Nazareth, he had the name given him which pointed him out as one separated to God; 2nd as the nazarite was to keep himself separate from the dead bodies even of his nearest relatives, so because christ's brethren the Jews were now dead as a nation, as a typical people, and as a peculiar people to God, seeing that the Messiah, the promised seed, and substance had come out of them, and also that for their transgressions they were dead under the curse of the Sinai covenant, he must be brought up in Judea, a city in the province of Galilee, called Galilee of the gentiles, Isaiah 9.1-2, and Matthew 4.15. Thus Jeremiah prophesied of the Jews, saying "cut off your hair old Jerusalem and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places, for the Lord has rejected and forsaken degeneration of his wrath." Jeremiah 7.29. The word rendered hair, is Nizer, from Nazar, Showing that it was the hair of their separation which is should be cut off; Having reference to the fact, that hitherto they had been a Nazaritical nation, a people separated from other nations and consecrated to the lord. Christ, as he lay in them in type and in promise, was the Nizer, the separation or consecration of that nation. And that's Jeremiah thus intimates, in the prophecy under consideration, Jerusalem for her sins, was left to reject Christ when he came to them in his ministry; And rejecting him their peculiar national glory was shorn from them; the middle wall of partition between them and the gentiles was broken down. And Christ being cut off from Jerusalem, became the Nizer in truth and in accomplishment of prophecy, or the manifestation of consecration to spiritual Israel, of people consecrated to God from both Jews and gentiles. This, Christ intubated, was about to be accomplished by his being brought up among a mixed people, of Jews and gentiles, and in Nazareth a city separated from the province of Judea. Galilee was like Samaria, a part of the land originally inhabited by the 10 tribes, and was, when they were carried into captivity re peopled by those nations which Shalmaneser king of Assyria brought and place there; (second kings 17.24) and who were considered as aliens by the Jews, though many Jews in the time of our savior dwelt among them. Hence as before noted, it is called Galilee of the gentiles and the inhabitants are said to walk in darkness, and to dwell in the region and shadow of death Isaiah 9.1-2; Matthew 4.15-16.

2nd the word Nazar is used in reference to Joseph, and to his being separated from his brethren; Intimated and in his separation he was a nazarite to God, Genesis 4.26; Deuteronomy 23.16. Joseph's father and his brethren, in his being made a Nazir or separated one from them, considered him lost and his father's expectations concerning him cut off; yet Joseph from that separation it rose to great power, and to be a preserver to his father's house. In this, as in other things, Joseph was a figure of Christ. Christ as the anti type of Joseph, received from his brethren the Jews, the name of Nazarene which is the same as Nazir, nazarite or separated one and that out of envy and spite, as Joseph brethren from the same cause made him a separated one. Not only so, but christ from being separated from the jewish nation, in his rejection and crucifixion, was hide the exalted, and had a name given him which is above every name, that at name of Jesus every knee should bow." "And has all things put under his feet, accepting him who did who did put all things under him; So that only the father is greater than he." Philippians 2.9-10; 1st Corinthians 15.27; Genesis 4.39-44. Christ also became salvation unto his father's spiritual house; not only to them of the gentiles but all of the Jews also. We find also an indication of these things, and are personal correspondence in Christ as in the flesh, with Joseph. Four, from Jesus being born in Bethlehem, the city of David, and from other events connected with his birth, the expectations of many were raised concerning him, that he was born to be a ruler over the people Israel, yet yet from his being driven hence and being brought up in Nazareth a city held a cursed by the Jews, those expectations were, and their estimation, wholly blasted; and he was truly as a Nazir, as one separated from his brethren, according to the flesh. But though they viewed his infantile indications cut off, as joseph's brethren considered his dreams brought to nought, yet god was with him, owning him as his son, and preparing the way for his being manifested as the Messiah.

I will now notice the instance in which the word Natzar is used in reference to the Messiah. This word as before said, signifies primarily preserved, it also signifies a sucker or young tree springing from the roots of a tree that has been cut down, as being preserved whilst the old tree is destroyed. Or perhaps as being separated from it, so that the idea differs not materially from the meaning of Nazar. It is used in this sense in reference to the Messiah in Isaiah 11.1. "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of its roots." The idea therefore is clearly held forth in this prophecy, that the family of Jesse should be cut off from the throne of David and should be nearly extinct (as knowing their direct lineage) when the Messiah should be born; and that the branch of David, (Christ) should grow up, in the eyes of the Jews, as a slender tweak having no promise of being the king of Israel. Or as Isaiah, in another place, has it, that, "he should grow up as a tender plant and as a root out of the dry ground," that, "he is despised and rejected of men," Isaiah 53.2-3. Thus we find Jesus born at Bethlehem the place of Jesse's residence and of David's birth, and at a time when Joseph, his supposed father, went there to be taxed, because he was of the house and lineage of David, and therefore at the time when his name was recorded as being of the family of David and a rightful heir of his throne, but immediately he is compelled to flee to save the child's life from the cruelty of herod, who had usurped the throne of David. He fled first to Egypt, and when recalled from there, returning aside into Galilee, and went and dwelt in the city nazareth, for fear of Archelaus who reigned in the place of his father Herod, Matthew 2.13-23. Thus was clearly manifested the lowest state of the family of David at the time Jesus was born. Joseph it is true was acknowledged to be of the lineage of David, but this was in the act of being taxed by a foreign power, by the decree of the emperor of Rome, and endanger of the child's life from Herod who reigned in Judea by the privilege of the roman emperor.

Jesus being brought up at Nazareth, made him, as professing to be the Messiah, peculiarly the contempt of the Jews. Even Nathaniel, an Israelite in whom was no guile, when Jesus of Nazareth was spoken of, to him as the Messiah, directly replied, "can any good thing come out of Nazareth," John 1.6. The Pharisees replied to what nicodemus, said, "out of Galilee arises no profit," John 7.52. Thus to Jews, out of contempt, calling Jesus a Nazarene, was indirect accomplishment of the Pharisees Isaiah 11.1-2; 53.2-3. And his being brought up at Nazareth was made the occasion of it.

Besides the Jews calling him the nazarite, though in contempt, was as directly an involuntary acknowledgement of Jesus being the true nazarite of God, and the branch from the roots of Jesse, as was pilot superscription, and acknowledgement of his being the king of the jews, and as was Caiphus' advice that he should be put to death, a prophecy that "he should die for that nation and not for that nation only" John 11.49-52.

Thus let the infidel say what they may upon this point, it is evident the scriptures fully bear the evangelists out in giving it, as of fulfilling of prophecy, that Jesus should be called a Nazarene.

Yours, S. Trott Fairfax CH, Virginia January 26, 1838

CIRCULAR ADDRESS OF THE DELAWARE OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST ASSOCIATION (TROTT) 1831

"BELOVED BRETHREN- Your attention is called to the nature and use of means in religion, Relative to the nature and use of means, we do not wish to be understood as speaking of anything to be used concerning merit, but of those appointments which have been established for the accomplishment of the Divine Purposes, in the observance of which we are solely to rest on the Divine munificence for the blessing. We are to view the means not as the fountain, but as golden pipes let down from Heaven, which convey to us the salutary waters of life. Nor are we insensible that the great and majestic Creator, who spake and all things sprang from nonexistence into being in obedience to his omnific fiat.-He who fills the immeasurable extension of space, with inexhaustible stores of light, and upholds from age to age the stupendous fabric of the Universe, could have accomplished all his purposes without means But we have reason to bless God that for the good of man, and the glory and exaltation of our Redeemer's great name, means have been appointed. He uses builders and watchmen, yet it is the Lord that builds the house and keeps the city. (Ps. cxxxii.) Paul may plant and Apollos 'water; but God giveth increase. Indeed the systems of Nature, Providence, and Grace are all carried on by means, nor can any person expect the approbation of his own conscience, the respect of friends, or the smiles, of approving Heaven while they are neglected. Some have argued that the Divine decree supersedes the necessity of means. But the means .have been as certainly appointed as the end, In nature, while the Earth remains there is a promise of seedtime and harvest, yet no one is so preposterous as to think on account of this appointment, that he is exempted from the duty of preparing for seed time by breaking up the fallow-ground or so much as dream of a plentiful harvest when the proper means have been neglected.

The period of human life is represented as being an appointed time, or stated period, yet where is the man that refuses the use of means in this case; is anyone ready to relinquish the use of food because his days are appointed? That our Divine Parent generally works by them and thereby displays his - glorious perfections fully illustrated in the sacred Scriptures. When the Israelites were bitten by the serpents in the wilderness, Moses was commanded to lift up a serpent of brass, and the people were to look to it and be healed; wonderful -as it may appear, those that obeyed were made whole." They were commanded to look that their faith and submission might be manifest, and only to look that it might be evident their cure was' not effected by natural means, but by the miraculous interposition of God, in the same manner, sensible sinners are commanded to look unto Christ who has been lifted up on the cross for the salvation of wounded sinners, 'with the assurance that they shall be healed of their wounds. Look unto me and be ye saved all ye ends of the earth, for I am God (saith the Lord by the Prophet Isaiah) and it is a very consolatory consider ration that vast numbers in every age since the Christian era, have found peace and salvation in the Cross of Christ, and in opposition to the frowns of tyrants-the punishment of crucifixion and the flaming faggots, the doctrine of the Cross has made its, way through the world,

At the close of the Antediluvian period "when all flesh had corrupted his way on 'the Earth" and the Almighty had determined to sweep them away by a deluge, At this awful period the Lord appointed Noah to prepare an Ark. Although the profane world scoffed at the preacher of Righteousness, yet he attended to the means, and himself, his family, and of living creatures, two of every sort were saved, (Gen. 6, 7,8,9)

We have also a very striking view of Abraham's strict attention to God's command in offering up his son; and his approbation of the same. Observe also the obedience of Gideon arid his army to God's commands in the use of the appointed means; although at the first view trifling, especially to, those who look only at the outward appearance; consult Judges, 7, 8, and you will perceive the blessed and salutary .consequences. God will have the instruments and means, regarded according to his appointment and direction, that he has graciously manifested and delivered for instruction and salvation, and those who are tenaceous of his will are ever, ready to observe it themselves and press it upon others.

Hence we find our blessed Lord, the Holy Spirit, and an, Angel, the means of God's appointment in sending Men to the ministry for instruction, (see Acts, chapters 8, 9 & 10.) In the overthrow of Jerico, the means were to encompass the walls seven days, blowing with trumpets of rams horns-s-in this', vay the city was was demolished; nothing could be better calculated to manifest that the efficacy was all from God and cause his Israel to confide in him for the blessings of time and eternity. He who engulfed the Egyptians in the Red Sea, slew by his angel 185,000 of the Assyrians in one night, and smote others with blindness, when they were sent to apprehend his Prophet, could have accomplished their downfall, independent of such means. So under the present 'dispensation, Chris.. tians are to encompass the fortress of Infidelity, blowing the Gospel trump is a means under God for demolishing the strongholds of Satan. We have reason to thank God that through these means the Empire of Satan has been depopulated to the confusion of the enemies of truth, the rejoicing of Saints and Angels, and the glory of God. The means and instruments under the Gospel are such as exalt the name of the adorable Sovereign. He has not commissioned the holy Angels, who stand near the ineffable glory of his throne.

Nor does He raise up an order of men, naturally distinguished by purer morals, more comprehensive understanding, or commanding eloquence. Were this the case the success of the Gospel might be ascribed to the excellency of the means. But he has employed base things of the world and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not to bring to naught things that are. That no flesh should glory in his presence. He generally employs means apparently the most unequal to the work; twelve men, illiterate, destitute of worldly wealth or influence, was the mighty means of spreading the gospel among all the nations of the Earth, despite the malice, tyranny, prejudice, and bigotry of those on the side of opulence and power.

Furthermore, permit us to mention in behalf of the use of means, that our blessed Lord when on earth used them; by duly attending our Lords appointed means, the hideous deformity of the lukewarm disappears, the dark cloud withdraws, and the light of Heaven bursts upon the scene and illuminates the abodes of men with the splendor of immortality. Those who steadily adhere to their duty, unmindful of the scoff of the infidel or the cavils of the Libertine. Jareen couraged with the prospects of " an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Those that have suffered privations for the sake of the Gospel, have the promise of eternal life." Does our profession expose us to outward poverty? He promises in reversion his "unsearchable riches, even the tried gold of his kingdom." Those that are called to take up the cross, have the promise of an incorruptible crown. Those that are instant in season and out of season will be rewarded with an eternity of rest from all labor, What a glorious promise; " He that overcometh and keepeth my word unto the end, to him, will I give power over the nations; To him that overcometh I will give to sit down with, me on my throne," and I will give him the morning Star. Let us for a moment contemplate the last scene of one who has been faithful to his Lord's commands, and how dignified his triumph is, "I have fought a good fight: I have finished my course: I have kept the faith. Henceforth, there is laid up for 'me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

In addition to this our Lord's last commands to his disciples, imply the highest activity in the use of means, Math xxviii, 18, 19, 20. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, all power is given to me in Heaven and in earth. -Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever, I have commanded you and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, Amen.

On the other hand, by the neglect of our Lord's appointed means, the magazines of darkness are thrown open, and infidelity stalks abroad with a brazen front, the moral atmosphere is contaminated, the Sun withdraws her shining, and the beasts of darkness Issue forth to devour. For while the harmless and unsuspecting are asleep, the enemy is busily employed in sowing tares. In the consummation of human events, when .our Lord shall appear as judge of all, we learn that all those on the right hand are addressed with "come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, for I was hungered and yo gave Inc n eat, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, I was a stranger and you took me in naked and you clothed me, I was sick and you visited me, I was in prison and ye came unto me.

Here' We have exhibited to our-view the blessed consequences of attending to his commands and appointments. . . In the observance[of every duty, we must remember that the caution the Lord gave Moses, is applicable to all Christians; " see that ye make all things according to the pattern shown you in the Mount."

We have no right to propose any alteration. In the use of means, regard should be bad to time, manner, and ends, &c.; otherwise it will but receive marks of God's displeasure. See the instance of Nadab and Abihu offering strange fire before the Lord and being consumed, (Lev. 10, 1.;) and also Korah and his company; Numbers 16, chapter, together with Saul -1; Samuel 15th.

When he says, wash in Jordan, it is plain he does not mean Abana or' Pharpar-when he says go baptizing, it is not sprinkling, and as all nations are mentioned, it is wrong not to use exertions to send the Gospel as far as Providence opens the way.

RESPONSE TO BROTHER CLARK'S COMMUNICATION TOUCHING THE SUBJECT OF JUSTIFICATION, AS AGITATED AMONG US

Brother Clark has kindly, in the postscript to his communication, opened the way for my responding to him; And indeed I shall feel excusable in thus doing, although I stated it was not my intention to write any more on this subject, from the circumstance that he is in his peace, "Signs" No. 14, Vol. 6., to which this is designed as an answer, writes not as a controversialist, but as a mediator, his communication, therefore, demands attention; Besides to let pass without notice, what is incorrect in the representation Darren given of the state of the case, would be to admit its correctness.

Brother Clark's communication I have no doubt was dictated from the best intention, but that he has led in some instances, together with the brethren whose remarks he quotes, to a misapprehension of the state of the case, I am equally confident.

Props 1st declaring my dissent from certain parts of Brother Clark's representations, and my reasons for the same.

1st dissent from the impression which his remarks are calculated, I think, to make, that brother Beebe and myself have, by what we have said, called in question the right or propriety of brethren candidly investigating, or closely scrutinizing anything I have written on a subject of justification, and of exposing through the Signs or other ways if they have chosen, any error they have discovered in my views. Is this a correct impression to go forth? Has Brother Beebe, or myself, said anything to justify it? Did I not, in a postscript to my "thoughts on justification," invite brethren to give a more correct view of the subject, if such descriptors afforded them? Did I not in the preparatory remarks to my answer to Brother Pitcher, argue and insist on the propriety of brethren discussing the subject through the Signs so far as they did in regard to truth and to the testimony of scripture?

How then could opposing brethren, consistently with the correct representation of me, adopt such language as this, "Has Brother Trott's notion or thoughts become so sacred to be meddled with or called in question?" I will answer this inquiry, and I feel that I can conscientiously say, thy I never gave held and never wish to hold any of my thoughts or to have others hold them, of the above being examined, and scrutinized. What as I had candidly stated the reasons I could not agree with my brethren on the subject of justification, and having given my own views, and the scriptures from whence these views were drawn; had I not a right to expect from brethren who profess to be governed by the scriptures, and who stood in the relation of brethren engaged in the same cause with me, that if they considered my thoughts on justification worth noticing publicly, at all, that they would treat them with some degree of candor, and if I was in an error that they would show from the scriptures wherein my views and objections were wrong?

If I had a right to expect this kind of treatment from them, wherein they felt objections to my views, is surprising, that when instead of that brotherly treatment, I was hearing, from every quarter, of ill-natured expressions which I knew common candor could never justify, and to crown the whole, heard of others carrying their opposition so far as to threaten withdrawing their patronage from the Signs must be abandoned. Hence I could see no alternative, but the sacrifice of paper which I believed had been so useful, or be myself excluded from it; as to being controlled by other men's opinions, in religion, brethren had no right to expect me to submit to it, after what I had said on miss the head, in a former communication on this subject.

In reference to my applying the expression of Paul to myself, that "with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you," I did feel so then, and I sincerely desire ever to feel so, when revealed truth of God is of one scale and a good opinions of even my brethren in the other, and I do not consider this as thinking lightly of their approbation.

Although I am not disposed to say much on Brother Beebe's account, In this case, as he is fully able to answer for himself, I will remark that I still think, he justly considered himself called upon, by the position brethren had taken, in threatening to withdraw their patronage from the Signs, to let them know the ground which he should occupy, as editor that he wouldn't sooner abandon the station, than give up the right of exercising his own judgment in deciding what is proper to be inserted in his paper; that the object of increase, or the to prevent decrease of patronage, should not sway him on this ground. Could we expect the Signs to remain a consistent old-school paper on any other ground?

While I say thus much in our defense, I cheerfully acknowledged that although the information that brethren were disposed to resort that this kind of argument, to show their disapprobation of my writing, and brother Beebe's, On what we considered correct views on justification, seem to require a corresponding answer from us both; yet as brother Clark had conveyed the information to me as a friendly caution and in a private letter, I ought not in my communication to have made so direct a reference to his letter. Hence as he must have felt himself somewhat injured in that case, and is, besides, relative to the subject of justification on the farther point in opposition to our views, it is not surprising that he should not view the difficulties that have arisen, on this subject, in the light in which we view them.

It is truly an unpleasant circumstance, that this difficulty should have occurred, and such feelings as have been manifested should have been excited, better such is the case, I cannot think it consistent with the cause in which we are engaged, to heal the wound slightly or to daub with untempered mortar. No, let us meet the difficulty firmly, and patiently probit to the bottom; wherein we have erred, Let us retrace every false step. In this way, it may result in an increase of unity and brotherly love among us and tend to make us more watchful. Were it not for these considerations I should have judged it prudent to pass in silence the expressions in Brother Clark's letter thus far noticed. From the appeal which I made in a former communication, for brethren to show from scriptures wherein I was wrong, or why my views of justification were not entitled to a place in the Signs equally with those brethren on the opposite side; and as brother Beebe has made a similar appeal, I will add nothing here on that point, as I may have to touch this again, in the course of this response.

I will now proceed to such of Brother Clark's remarks touching justification as seem to require notice on this occasion.

1st the following "It would be a herculean task to lead all the Saints to believe that the doctrine of justification has never been properly understood since the Apostolic age until now." I presume Brother Clark, in this remark, has referenced some things I said in the apology prefixed to my "thoughts on justification" I said more in that way, by way of apology, than was necessary or of any advantage to the cause of truth. The fact is, I wrote that communication under considerable embarrassment of feeling, owning to the circumstance that the licking circular advocating eternal justification had been published and it came from an association, to which I had long been in feeling, peculiarly attached, and was written by a brother to whom I was peculiarly partial. Hence I felt solicitous that my communication should not be considered in the light of an attack upon that circular. Indeed, my simple design was to, bring to the Kent consideration of my brethren the scriptural objections I had to the sentiment of eternal justification, and to state plainly my own views on that subject. How much candor it met with from some of my brethren, I will leave for them to judge. I was therefore disposed to give my brethren all the advantages they could derive on their side of the question, from human authors.

But Brother Clark has quite mistaken, I think, the import of my remarks, if he understood them as conveying the idea that the doctrine in question had not been understood since the apostle's days. I mentioned that a certain class of authors, for the last hundred years had differed from my views on this subject; I intended by this. Fully to cover the time since Doctor Gill, by his writings first introduced the notion of the eternity of the act of justification among the Baptists. On further reflection, I conclude that seventy years would have fully embraced this period. There were previous to gills works coming out, certain Lutheran and Calvinistic authors, on the continent of Europe and certain of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland, who from the representation given by Mosheim and others, of their sentiments, must have held the notion of eternal justification. For they are represented as holding, that God never saw any sin in the elect, which must imply that the elect had been from eternity justified or cleared from the demands of the law. But remember I spoke only of writers on this subject; otherwise, I have known excellent brethren with whom it was my privilege to agree on this subject.

Again I said I had met with no human author who had advanced my views on this point. And esteemed brother has since reminded me that Doctor Gill refers to several authors of note who held the justification of the church's I do; at the resurrection of Christ. I had formerly read Gill's Body of Divinity, but having at that time full confidence in a doctrine of eternal justification, I did not probably so particularly notice a different view that he ascribes to these authors. Having since procured the loan of a copy of Staughton's abridgment of this work, I will here give the paragraph wherein reference is had to those authors, as also other quotations from the doctor on the subject. The reference to those authors as it stands in Gill's Body of Divinity as abridged by Doctor Stoughton, page 135, is this, "all the elect of God were justified in Christ, their head and representative, when he rose from the dead; hence when he rose, they rose with him, and when he rose justified, they were justified in him; for he was delivered for their offenses, and raised again for their justification Romans 4.25; first Timothy 3.16, and this is the sense and judgment of many sound and learn that divines; as Sanford, Doctor Goodwin, the learned Amesius, Hornbeck, Witsius, and others."

And page 355 Doctor Gill says, "God the Father contrived a scheme and method of justification. He sent in the fullness of time to execute this scheme." And again page 361, "the complete justification of the Sinner does not seem to be finished by Christ until his resurrection, after his obedience and suffering of death; For he was delivered for our offenses, and raised again for our justification, Romans 4.25. In short, the righteousness by which we are justified, as Doctor Ames says, is to be sought from his whole obedience." Who would imagine that Doctor Gill, after thus showing that the justification of the elect was not completed until the resurrection of Christ, would go on to argue that they were actually justified from eternity? But such are the inconsistencies of men, even the greatest and best, when they allow scholastic logic to usurp the place of revelation. I will give a specimen of its argument derived from the doctrine of election. It is found on the same page directly following the 1st of the above quotations, page 135. He says, "Justification is not only before faith, but it is from eternity as may be concluded" (well did he say concluded not proved.) 1st "from eternal election; who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect, it is God that justifies; (Romans 8.33,) by electing grace men were put into Christ, and were considered as in him before the foundation of the world; and if they were considered as in him, they must be considered as righteous or unrighteous, not surely as unrighteous, unjustified as in a state of condemnation, for there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus (Romans 8.1,) and therefore must be considered as righteous and so justified."

In noticing this quotation, I will 1st call the attention of my brethren to the two texts that he quotes in support of his position and beg them to read in connection with the first quotation the 34th verse, and in connection with the second the whole of the verse in other words verse 1st. And they will find it both texts relate to experimental justification? I presume the doctor so applies them in this exposition. Must he then, in this case, have been hard run for scripture proof, to have resorted to such a dissection, such a perversion of these texts from their connection and intent.

2nd I will request my brethren to notice the doctor's position concerning the union of Christ and his people, that it is only a constituted union; that men therefore as previously existing in Adam, were put into Christ by election. If I believed the union of Christ and his people was originally formed by constituting him one by the act of election, with the fallen polluted sons of Adam I should think it necessary, to render the position consistent not only to believe them previously justified, but also to consider them previously sanctified. It would be quite as absurd to consider such a pure and holy head, by an arbitrary act of God constituted one with such a mass of corrupt polluted creatures, as to consider him thus united with them in an unjustified state.

For justification, remember, does not clear away pollution, it only clears from the demands of the law. But I am thankful that the scriptures authorize me to believe that the union between Christ and his people is a vital union and that the life that constitutes the union is far more heavenly and glorious than that which is of the earth, earthy, that is as far above that which was created under the law, as Christ, as a head, is above Adam.

Leaving Doctor Gill, to return to Brother Clark, I will add, that if he intended by the expression under consideration to convey the idea, that actually all sound christians, from the apostolic age to this time, held to the sentiment of eternal justification, I would ask him to explain how it is that none of the ancient and sound articles of faith a vow the sentiment? They all speak of justification? And I would ask him also, whether his sentiment of justification was ever declared by inspired or uninspired writers until after the Reformation? Or after that., until Doctor Gill wrote on it, accepting from the reformers, that is, those who belonged to some of the daughters of the mother of harlots? I was more lavish in allowing my brother and human authorities on their side than I ought to have been, or than I probably should have been, had I not supposed, I was writing to those who would consider the scriptures the alone proper standard by which to test the views advanced.

A second remark of Brother Clark's requiring notice is this; "he that brings into existence or furthers any little foundling at the present day among old school Baptists must be prepared to show that it is a legitimate offspring of heavenly birth, or it will not be admitted into society." This is no doubt Brother Clark's representation of my views of justification, and it's perhaps also derived from what I said in my apology. I among other things said I never learned of my views on this point from men. But as I once held other views on the subject, my brethren may perhaps feel a solicitude to know where I picked up this little foundling, I will therefore give them a brief history of the little thing.

As I was passing through a mountainous, lonely district, on my way to fill one of my stated appointments with the Hardeston church, in New Jersey, in June 1824, from reflecting on something that had occurred at the then-recent session of the New York association, I was led into a train of thoughts on the doctrine of justification and while thus meditating on this subject, the scriptural view of this doctrine was so clearly opened to my mind as at once to sweep all my notions of eternal justification from me; and the impression made by this change of views was so sensible on my mind, that the very curve in the road as it rounded the mountain, where the change took place, is at this moment as if present to my view. Every succeeding view of this subject in the light of the scriptures has but confirmed me in my views then giving me, at which I advanced in my thoughts on justification. But knowing that most of those whom I delighted to acknowledge as brethren, of my acquaintance, held with doctor gill on this subject, and not considering the difference in our views A cause for a breach of fellowship, I seldom declared my dissent from them, unless one particularly asked my views on this point.

But when the old school stand was taken, and the signs introduced as a vehicle of communication among us, I then felt increased anxiety that every point of doctrine, as well as practice, advocated through the Signs, should be strictly scriptural, that we should renounce human authors and all scholastic notions as our guides, and test everything by the word of truth. Hence when Brother Kitts 'written letter on eternal justification was republished in the Signs, I over the signature of, a Waldensis proposed to him certain objections to his views, requesting that he would answer them. See Signs, volume one, #5, page 67. I hope thereby to bring about a candid discussion of the subject and thus to lend my brethren generally to investigate it on the ground of scriptural testimony. Failing to bring Brother Kitts or any other brother out, to answer my objections, I passed on as before; Seeing no opportunity to bring the subject forward, without its appearing like an abrupt attack upon the views of those whom I esteemed as brethren, until in preaching at the Baltimore association in 1837, I was led by certain circumstances to advance my peculiar views on this point. Finding that several brethren were somewhat alarmed at what I advanced, and the notice of a correspondence growing out of this, having got into this Signs, I concluded that it was proper to regard to my own standing among the brethren, to give an explicit statement of my reasons for differing from them on this subject, and a fit opportunity to bring the subject before them for their candid consideration.

From this history of the foundling, others may judge for themselves, whether my bringing this subject forward was from a conscientious regard to scripture truth, or from an ambitious spirit to be a leader, as has been kindly intimated. If Brother Clark had considered what I said upon this point in my apology for publishing my "thoughts on justification" together with the remark in my letter, he would, I think, have spared himself the trouble of writing; and me, the unpleasantness of reading this sentence; "as far as I know or I've heard no one judged brother Trott to be Arminian ground until those views came out."

As for being prepared to show that this little foundling is a legitimate offspring of heavenly birth; I think myself fully armed to the point; And the demand for testimony comes I think with an ill grace, until I originally brought forward is invalidated.

1st in reference to my rejection of the sentiment of eternal justification, I have presented that, as my ground forward, which ought to be decisive with all old-school Baptists, that it is not written in the standard of our faith; that there is not a single text in which the sentiment is declared in the direct terms, or by necessary construction. And I do think that old-school Baptists ought to pause seriously before they contend for a sentiment as religious that is thus destitute of a divine warrant.

Brother Pitcher certainly brought forward in his queries those scriptural truths that seemed most like involving the sentiment of eternal justification, and yet as I showed there is no necessary implication of such an idea in them. And that the principle that would establish this inference, would with equal force establish the idea of eternal regeneration, and eternal sanctification. It is true this latter objection has been attempted to be obviated as made by others, by saying "that the matter of our justification before God is a righteousness wholly without us, and the whole business is an act of God's free grace toward us, accounting and sustaining us righteous in the estimation of the divine mind through the righteousness of his dearly beloved son." See Vol. 1, page 15.

But I would inquire, whether the righteousness which is a matter of justification of the elect before God, was wholly without Christ, as the head of his people? And whether such scriptures as the following do not teach that Christ's righteousness which was this matter of justification, was not wrought out by him in being made and serving under the law, "being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus," Romans 3.24; "for he has made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him," 2nd Corinthians 5.21. "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one, shall many be made righteous," Romans 5.19. If these things are so, Christ having actually existed under the law and having brought in as the head of his people that righteousness which the law required, was as necessary a prerequisite to their actual justification in him, as their actual existence in the flesh is to their being actually regenerated. If a justification is spoken of that is without Christ, and in which he is not embraced as the head of his body, and is independent of the existence of his righteousness to answer the full demands of the law, it is one which the scriptures do not speak of, and with which I wish to have no acquaintance.

In reference to that part of my thoughts which have developed my own views on this subject, that the church the body of Christ, collectively was justified before God when he, the head was justified, or declared by his resurrection cleared from the demands of the law, I brought forward from the records of this whole transaction, the scriptures, several testimonies, to the fact unimpeached and unimpeachable. I will here give three, "who was delivered for our offenses and was raised again for our justification," Romans 4.25. "But now once at the end of the world has he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," Hebrews 9.26. "For by one offering, he has perfected forever them that are sanctified," Hebrews 10.14. Whilst it is written, "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established," (2nd Corinthians 13.1) will Brother Clark call for any more testimony to establish the claim of this little foundling to a heavenly birth? Are not the putting away of sin, perfecting, essentially and inseparably connected with the actual justification of the elect? And are not these witnesses then exactly in point to my views?

In reference to the argument that Brother Clark uses to justify brethren in the course they have pursued relative to this subject, the prediction of others that as soon as we have done fighting them we will turn in upon each other, I simply would ask, is it so that old school Baptists are to avoid all discussion of subjects were in they differ? Are they to wrap up everything that they think wrong in their brethren without seeking to correct the error, lest their adversaries should accuse them of being contentious? I would ask further, is it consistent with old-school Baptists, to hold sentiments that they are afraid to have brought to the test of scriptures, or have called in question on scriptural grounds? My brethren, whatever our opponents may say of us as being fighting characters, let them not have these things to say to us.

Again Brother Clark says, "As to Doctor Gill's system on this point, there are many brethren who have never read the doctor's views and who yet believe in eternal justification." This sentence no doubt has reference to my having spoken of this sentiment is being derived from Doctor Gill's writings. It has also been remarked with that my frequent reference to Doctor Gill's system has led brethren to consider themselves as held up as having no mind of their own. In answer to this, I would say, that I am sorry to represent my brethren in this light, but I am confident of being correct when I say that the sentiment of eternal justification was originally introduced among the American Baptists by Doctor Gill's writing; Hence that on a general scale he is the father of that sentiment as existing among us.

That my brethren do have not the right it direct from the scriptures, I infer 1st from the fact that justification is not revealed in the scriptures as being an act passed in eternity. Second from the consideration that if they had derived the sentiment directly from the scriptures they would have been ready, not with their far-fetched inference, but with texts to the point, to support it against the objections raised against it.

They will therefore please bear with me, in saying that when they met my objections to their sentiments of eternal justification, not as old school Baptists, with a thus says the Lord, but as new school Baptists, with general assertions, such as that the scriptures are full of the sentiment, whilst they named not a single text to point or with an interferential course of reasoning, or with general denunciations of the mischievous tendency, of the publication of my "thoughts" it was as strong and evidence as I could have, that they had not learned the sentiment from the scriptures nor from the teachings of the holy spirit. 3rd from my own experience in the case; I had drank in the sentiment in my intercourse with preachers and other brethren in whom I had confidence and never called in question its being revealed in the scriptures until the scriptures on the subject were open to my mind in the manner before described.

Secondly from what I have already noticed of Doctor Gill as having been the First Baptist writer of note who advanced a sentiment, it is evident that his writings from their extensive circulation have been the means of disseminating it largely through the country. Certain preachers have taken up the sentiment as truth from reading his writings, they have again advanced it as truth, and as intimately connected with predestination. Others have received it from them and again advanced it, and so on. Begin at the 4th or even the 10th remove, and trace it back and you will find it originated from reading Doctor Gill.

I now passed a notice of certain remarks that Brother Clark mentions as being made by other brethren. 1st the middle ground party, and through new school, almost to a man received those views; And whatever they receive and support must be false of course. In the first place, I think the inference drawn in this case is broad. In the second place, there is certainly a mistake in one of two cases. Either those persons have altogether mistaken my views, or those brethren are mistaken as to their receiving them.

It is I believe a general fact that the middle ground and new school classes are both either Fullerites or more directly Arminians. It is an equally unknown fact, that all the grades of these, from Fuller down, unite in denying the eternal union of Christ and his people, and holding faith to be the bond of union. Hence it is not possible that they can receive my views of justification consistently with their own systems, standing as these views manifestly do, so intimately connected with, and involved in the doctrine of the vital and eternal union of Christ and his people.

The connection of these two points of doctrine is fully carried out in my views as published in my "thoughts," And in what I have since written on the subject; in reference to the priority of the existence of the children of God in Christ, and therefore an existing in him, beyond the necessity of legal justifying righteousness being imputed to them in order to their being loved and chosen of God; and my view is thus distinguished from doctor gill's notion of the priority of their existence in Adam, that is, in purpose and afterward put into Christ by election. Also in the view given of that complete oneness of Christ and his people, being such, that when one, either the head or the body, Christ or his people, was involved in the demands of the law, the other was; That it was in consequence of this oneness of Christ with his people, that justice held the demand against him, which resulted in his death, under the curse, and hence that in his bearing the penalty of the law, they bore it in him and when he arose, justified from all other demands of the law, they rose and were justified in him. This constitutes a material distinction between my views as before shown, and that separating sentiment advanced into linking circular and by others, by which they would sever Christ from his church, the head from the body, in the article of justification, a dilemma from which they cannot extricate themselves without abandoning their system. If Fullerites in sincerity embraced these views I shall rejoice, but if they do, they will drop Fuller, they cannot go both roads. The fact is the notion of eternal justification verges much higher towards Fullerism than do the views I have advanced, on the point of the union of Christ and his people in particular.

In connection with this, I will notice the remark that has been made by a brother that there is too much Arminianism in my "thoughts on justification" for him to embrace them. Such slang will do for a put-off, and as a scarecrow to deter others from examining and receiving the views I advanced; but is there any reality, any Christian candor in them? I will not challenge him or other brethren who have charged my views with being Arminian To prove it, but I do entreat them, in consideration of my standing with them, and by their regard for the honor of the old school cause, if they can by strictest scrutiny of what I have written on the subject have written on this subject of justification, find a single sentiment which leads to Arminianism, a single idea, which, if carried out in its legitimate bearings, involves an idea of conditional acceptance with god, or of dependence on creaturely exertions for salvation, that they would expose it, in its true colors through the Signs.

Another brother as noticed by Brother Clark, says that I shall have to surrender a part of my theory, that is, that the act of justification was not passed until Christ was raised again. From Brother Clark's remarks and the connection, it strikes me that there must be somewhere, some mistake in a representation here given of this brother's remarks. If however, the representation here is correct, I suppose this brother would have me exchange my views for the idea that the elect was collectively justified when the first promise of Christ was made in the garden of Eden; but before I can adopt that idea, he must show me, that what their appears to me, given in promise, was a narrative of what had been done, that is, that satan's head had been bruised, or he must show me how the body can be justified, cleared from all obligations to the law, while the head remains bound to the law, without there being severed, and the life which consists in their union being therefore destroyed. Or if this brother's views are misrepresented, and he would have me believe that the people of God are not actually justified before God only as they are brought to experience justification by faith; I must say that I cannot be brought to surrender upon that ground while I have so many scriptures declarations to support my views, such as those already quoted, Romans 4.25; Hebrews 9.26; 10.4, and these, "your dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise," Isaiah 26.9. "After two days will he receive a; In the third, he will raise us up and we shall live in his sight," Hosea 6.2. Perhaps some may not consider this text in point; But I do consider it strictly in point, that it is a prophecy of the resurrection of Christ on the third day, and that the personification is charged from the Lord whose going forth is prepared as the mourning, to the us, the true spiritual of Israel of God as contrasted with Ephraim Spoken of before, and this change was to show that when he, the Lord was raised up, they would be raised up, and when he lived, they would live in his sight, Ephesians 2.4-6.

A few observations shall not close this lengthy response. 1st I would in reference to brother pictures inquiries published and answered through the Signs Say, that in the blame I have attached to my brethren, I wish to be understood as accepting him, for though I thought that if he had more carefully examined my "thoughts on justification," he would have seen some of the inquiries previously answered, yet there was throughout his communication a disposition manifested to inquire, and to discuss the subject as become brethren.

2nd my brethren generally, I would caution, not to fear a candid discussion of any sentiment that they may hold; if it is truth, they cannot be too well grounded in it, and canvassing it will have that tendency; if it is error they cannot be too soon convinced of it and made willing to give it up. Or are you, my brethren, of those who never found themselves holding error for truth; If so, instead of rejoicing a juror escape, I might pity you. For I do not believe that any have steered entirely clear of error in this day of darkness through which the church has been passing, and never to have been convinced of error therefore, argues too much of that obstinate kind of spirit, which will never acknowledge itself wrong. Such a spirit is unbecoming a Christian and is also a disposition to be afraid of being shown our errors, and to resort to other means to maintain our sentiments when we cannot find scripture arguments and prove to support them. Perhaps my brethren may think they see something of this disposition manifested in this communication. I know we are apt to be blind on our own behalf, apt to see the mole before the beam; but if this is now the case with me, I know it not. I think I have been actuated in this thing, by a regard, to truth and to a consistency with our old school stand. The course pursued relative to this subject has in my estimation added importance to the controversy, as I perhaps ought to call the affair, rather than discussion. The importance of having correct scriptural views of justification is not diminished; In addition to this, or yielding to the opposing current in this case, would be like establishing the principle among us, that however fully we may, any of us, be convinced of our brethren being an error, on any point, we must not expose that error, and tried to lead them out of it by discussing the subject in the signs lest we provoke contention; and we may be fully satisfied from scripture testimony of the truth of any sentiment; yet we must not advance in the signs unless we know that it will be well received of the brethren, all that they have so seen it. Such principle I cannot sanction, hence I did not write hastily or inconsiderately when I made the proposition to be made a Jonah of; I had this very principle that in view as tending to be established by the course pursued by brethren. And I felt dent, as I now feel, that rather than have such shackles riveted on me, or rather than sacrifice the signs in contesting this point of Christian liberty with them, I would prefer being excluded therefrom.

A word to those brethren who admit that the justification of the elect existed in purpose only, and eternity, and as an act was consummated in time, and you yet advocate the use of the term eternal, as prefixed to the article of justification. Let us come right to the point. Did the eternal purpose to justify the elect, constitute itself from the act of their justification from all things? Or did that purpose appoint their justification to be through the redemption to be wrought by Christ, and to be one with his justification from the demands of the law, as he represented them? If the former is the case, you are right in contending for the term eternal as a prefix to the word justification, for the purpose was certainly eternal, but remember in taking this position you exclude Christian actual obedience to the law from being any part in the act of justification; the act being completed long before this obedience was rendered. If you admit the other side of the question, then must you not admit that God's raising Christ, by his right hand, without seeing corruption was the act by which he was declared acquitted; justified from all demands of law, and if so was it not that, by which the elect were declared acquitted in him? Why then in persisting in your use of the term eternal thus confound the purpose going before, with the act which was to follow as appointed by that purpose? 2nd if the Holy Spirit had seen the idea of eternity in reference to the origin of the existence of the act of justification necessary to be conveyed, in giving a full corrector relation of the doctrine of justification, should we have not found the term eternal or its equivalent, thus connected in the revelation of this doctrine in the scriptures? As it is written you're not, in this instance, assuming to be wiser than God, in trying to establish a use of this term which he does not thought proper? What do you gain by this hitching on, the term eternal to justification? It certainly is not, necessary to establish a fact of the infallibility and eternity of the purpose of God concerning justification; this is clearly revealed in the scriptures without any such confounding of the purpose with the act. Or is it, my brethren that you cannot conceive of God's declaring the end from the beginning with absolute certainty, and lest there should be a failure by so long a period intervening between the beginning and the end, the purpose and act, you are therefore trying to bring the two together, or confound the one with the other? Pardon me, my brethren for this suggestion, for really you're contending for that which in this case you admit is not strictly true, looks very much like human policy to help God out with his purpose.

To conclude, while I would approve of discussing this or any other subject with a view to the producing of a greater oneness of views and practice, and a greater oneness of doctrine among us, and so long as it may be found to have such tendency, I would urge upon my brethren to guard against indulging in bitter feelings and reflection, and against resorting to uncanned arguments to supply a point, or even against trying to maintain a point, when you find yourselves without scriptural proofs. In a word let us buy the truth, even at the expense of every tradition and every notion that we may have derived from the schools and systems of men, and sell it not. Let us pursue peace among ourselves, but not at the expense of truth and Christian liberty.

- S. Trott Fairfax CH, (Va) August 2, 1838
- P. S. This response is rather late in appearing; But in the 1st place, the affliction in my family, and since that other engagements must bleed my excuse.

NOTICE OF BROTHER CROOKS' LETTER ON JUSTIFICATION

Brother Beebe: as Brother Crooks requests an answer from me to certain points in his letter, and as he has taken hold of the subject manifestly in a spirit of candor and disgusted in a way in which I had hoped it would have been discussed when I first introduced it, that is, assigning his reasons and the scriptures on which he sounds his objections to my views, and his belief in eternal justification, I with pleasure meet his inquiries, and engage in a discussion with him; Hoping that while thus pursued it may not injure any, either in feelings or otherwise.

I will first notice this remark of his, "Brother Trott requires direct scriptural testimony in this and yet admits that in some points of theology, it cannot be had in just so many words." Brother Crooks has certainly come I presume undesignedly, mistaken my meaning, if not my expressions in this case. I stated as a first objection, to the doctrine of eternal justification, that according to our old school stand, a "thus says the Lord" is requisite to justify us in what we believe. I immediately added, "I do not mean by this, that the doctrine must always be expressed in so many identical words," an instanced as a little station of this, the doctrine of eternal union of Christ and his people; showing thereby that a doctrine may be clearly revealed without being declared in a set form of the word; and at such clear revelation, comes up to the import of the expression, a thus says the Lord. I think if Brother Crooks will again read my remarks upon this point in "Thoughts on Justification," he will be convinced that this is their import.

Brother Crooks thinks that the doctrine of eternal justification is fairly implied, that is, in the scriptures. While he thus thinks, he is right in believing it. But I must examine the correctness of his proofs before I can think with him; and if I should be unable to show him clearly that his proofs are not correctly drawn, I hope, from his candor, he will abandon them, and with them the theory he has built upon them.

He commences his proofs with an explanation of what he understands by their terms, eternal, and justification. As I presumed that by his definition of eternal, he means the idea, of never beginning, or of never-ending, either alone, as well as both combined, constitutes the idea of eternal, I have no objection to it. And I have no objection to the term eternal being prefixed to justification, in reference to the idea of its never-ending, because among other reasons, I have an equivalent expression of scripture direct to the point, Hebrews 10.14, "for by one offering he has perfected forever them that are sanctified."

Brother Crooks says, "To justify and justification certainly means defense or vindication as well as a legal pronouncing 1 clear from guilt." Brother crooks should remember that in discussions upon the scriptural authority for any point of doctrine, we cannot with propriety take any man's bare assertion as proof. I cannot acknowledge the correctness of the former part of his definition of justification, and he has produced no instance of the term being so used in the scriptures. The question here is, not in what sense the term might be used, but what is the legitimate meaning of the term, according to its etymology, and according to its uniform use about that branch of the doctrine of salvation of which we are speaking.

To justify is according to its etymology, to make just, or righteous; And its uniform primary meaning, according to general usage both in the scriptures and otherwise, is a judicial decision, by which a person is made, that is, pronounced just or righteous according to law, about the charges made against him, and is thus the direct opposite of to condemn, Genesis 18.25; Deuteronomy 25.1; Romans 3.19-26; 5.16-19. It was in this sense that I have used a term, as referring to a judicial decision by which the body of Christ is publicly cleared from the demand and charges of the law, and so I presume brother crooks and others understood me. And when persons speak of the elect having been eternally justified I understand them to convey the idea, that they were eternally cleared from the demands of the law, and so I think they are generally understood, whether they mean to convey the idea or not; some do mean to convey it, and some do not.

The point is, is not this the legitimate idea conveyed by the expression? From a passage quoted from Doctor Gill in my response to Brother Clark, it is evident that he has so understood, and so used the term.

Brother Crooks says in the text, "who was delivered for our offenses and was raised again for our justification," Romans 4.25, he cannot think as a reference to the subject of justification at all! Why, my brother, is it possible that the inspired writer was mistaken in this point? If he was not mistaken, is it not evident that the passage is intimately connected with the subject of justification when he says and was raised again for our justification? Brother Crooks should have given us an expression of the passage showing its proper reference. But perhaps he means to distinguish between the ground of our justification and the act, four he says it is the judge that justifies. True; but has not the death and resurrection of Christ any bearing upon the act? If not, why does Paul after saying it is God that justifies, immediately add, "it is Christ that died yes rather that is risen again," Romans 8.34.

But let us examine the text a little, first "who (Christ) was delivered for offenses;" that is delivered up to suffer the penalty due to divine justice for our offenses. What, after we by the decision of the judge, were actually declared clear of all offenses, of all demands of law? Certainly not, for God himself is the judge. As Brother Crooks refers immediately following to the circumstance of a husband paying a debt contracted by his bride, I would ask him, if, after the creditor had given the wife a receipt in full for all the demands, arising from the debt she had before contracted, he could then come upon the husband for the payment of that debt? And is not the deliberate decision of the supreme judge, of acquittal from all charges, or of justification, as valid as any receipt in the case of debt? And are not Christ and his church as much one, as a husband and his bride are?

2nd "and was raised again for our justification." Now admitting that the cause of our justification is distinct from the act, does not the expressions here use clearly completely convey the idea, from their natural construction, that the cause, the resurrection of Christ, was brought into existence that the act might take place? If so, it could not have taken place before. To refer again to the husband and bride, if the husband's paying the debt she had contracted, was not itself her justification or clearance from the demand, was it not just ground for him to demand a receipt in full on her behalf? And could the creditor, have previously given her a receipt in full for the debt without clearing her husband from the demand seeing they are both one in the eyes of the law? And so of Christ in his church? Brother Crooks says if I inform him when God first acted in the capacity of a judge in the court of heaven regarding his chosen, he will fix the same date in their justification. I have no hesitation in telling him when according to divine revelation God did first act as a judge, that is in the court of heaven. But to come to this subject a right we must lay aside the deficiencies of all figures in the case, and view the subject as it is manifested in the clear light of revelation or at the point where all figures center.

1st. Then, the elect were all guilty, transgressors of the law, from the apostasy of Adam on, as connected with him under the law; so that by the deeds of the law no flesh could be justified in his sight. Had God assumed the judgment seat at any period previous to his coming of the Messiah, arranged the transgressors, and ordered the penalty to be inflicted upon them, there being no days man, known mediator present to interpose and receive the stroke in the place of the chosen, they must have received it on themselves and sunk forever. But this could not be, the eternal purpose of God, which he had purposed in Christ Jesus, his having made his surety of the better testament, having reposed full trust in him. All forbid that God should thus assume that judgment seemed until the fullness of time arrived, fixed in the eternal purpose when Christ should be made under the law to meet and satisfy its demands for his bride, his sheep. Thus we see generation after generation pass away until Shiloh came, but not summoning the human family, as such, to judgment. But when his hour came, not a moment before, the judge assumes to seat, that the man is made, the shepherd interposes in behalf of his sheep; Gives himself up, and says if you seek me let these go their way (John 18.8-9) justice receives its dread command "awake O sword against my shepherd, and against a man that is my fellow says the Lord of hosts;" he is given over to the will of his enemies, his father withdraws his presence, nothing but the rigid demands of stern justice before him, his sole agonize under the curse of the law, under the horrors of hell at length he dies, but not till he says it is finished.

Had he been left here, his bride would have had no testimony of her release, but behold, he rises again without seeing corruption, shows himself to chosen witnesses, as a receipt from the court of heaven that law and justice were satisfied in full for the demands which had stood against for whose offenses he had been delivered. The Holy Ghost confirms it on the day of Pentecost. Now, my brother, did not God act as judge in this case, and in the court of heaven? Is there any scriptural evidence of his having so acted before? He acted as the God and father of his people, in Christ, from eternity, making full provision in his eternal purpose that they as children shall be put in possession of their inheritance, God also had repeatedly acted as judge on earth, as in the case of Adam, Kane, the old world etcetera.

I now pass to some of Brother Crook's remarks on Revelation 13.8, the lamb slain from the foundation of the world. He says, "not in types and shadows, but he stood so under the sentence of the law, viewed so according to the eternal purpose of god. And if, so slain his bride was so redeemed with eternal redemption." Here I will stop and review. And 1st. I would ask, if his bride was so redeemed, thus early with eternal redemption, who those were, that were under the law, whom, he, in the fullness of time was away made of a woman and made under the law to redeem? Galatians 4.4-5. Brother Crooks I presume does not believe he ever redeemed any but his bride. You, my brother, may, and probably, have a clearer head than mind, and can see how these things can harmonize together. But to me, bear with me in so saying, if it appears perfect jargon. On the one hand, I am informed by the best authority, that in the fullness of time, God sent forth his son to redeem not because he had redeemed them that were under the law; again that about 1800 years ago, the son of man, told his disciples he came not to be ministered to but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many (Matthew 20.28) on the other hand I am told that very people, he then came to redeem, had been redeemed from the foundation of the world. Brethren must excuse me for not believing both of these positions.

Again he says viewed the soul (that is, slain) According to the eternal purpose of God. Now I had not thought that he had done so viewed only from the foundation of the world; and I still think he was so viewed before the foundation of the world, from eternity. He says further, that he stood so under the sentence of the law, that is as slain from the foundation of the world. That is a strange doctrine to me. Does this passage Philippians 2.6-7, "who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God but made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant." Look like his having stood from the foundation of the world in servitude under the law and under its sentence? I will not multiply remarks upon this, for I am sure, on a momentous reflection, Brother Crooks will recall this expression, as reflected much on him whom we delight to honor, as standing from eternity, as head of his church, not in the degradation of a servant, lower than the angels, but in the glory of the only begotten of the father full of grace and truth. If Brother Crooks should demur from these remarks, I would ask him to explain how Christ could be under the sentence of the law, without being under the law. Again he says, not in types and shadows. I'll then? If the promises, types going before had not a special reference to Christ's death, I have been mistaken altogether in them; and if they had the reference, then I am sure Christ did stand so set forth in them; And that, as an object of faith, from the declaration made in the garden concerning the seed of the woman; which reaches back very near, or quite, as far as the expression from, or since (as it might be rendered,) the foundation of the world. I think Brother Crooks's proofs from this text must fail him. Brother Crooks concludes from Romans 8.29-36 that justification is as old as predestination. And why not conclude that the calling of the elect is equally as old? Had the apostle written thus, whom he did predestinate, then he also called, justified and glorified, it would have appeared less presumptuous in men to undertake to transpose the order laid down. But when he writes that thus, "whom he did predestinate them he also called; And whom he called, them he also justified," thus welding so firmly each link, in this, which has been called the golden chain of salvation, in its divinely appropriated position, it is truly astonishing to me that such men as brother crooks, doctor gill, should attempt to wrest justification from its place, to put it alongside predestination. Whom did he justify? Does not Paul declare as emphatically as words could do it, that they were them whom he had called? Whom he called, them he also justified. As I have formally said, so I now repeat, that experimental justification is evidently that which is here spoken of.

I will now notice the following remark of Brother Crooks "She (the church) was created in Christ Jesus and there stood always justified, or just as if you would rather have it so, that there was neither spot nor blemish in her." I like Brother Crook's idea of the church having been created in Christ, and hence having a distinct existence in him, better, as being more scriptural, than Doctor Gill's notion that the children of God were primarily created in Adam, and then put into Christ by-election. That the church, in that life which Christ is, and is the head and fountain of, to his people, stood ever perfect brother crooks must be aware I have uniformly contended for. I will add she thus stood essentially righteous according to the spirit of the law, but not, as having a wrought righteousness according to the letter of the law. This constitutes one of the original objections to the notion of eternal justification because such a notion implies that the church as originally brought forth and as eternally stood in her head, Christ, was subject to charges of transgression that needed clearing away before she could be recognized as the object of God's love. According to the proper import of the term justification as shown before, the fact that the church eternally stood in Christ her head complete, and from the infallibility of him in whom she stood, without the possibility of a charge of sin, or of blemish, being made against her, instead of proving her having been eternally justified, proofs, that is thus standing in, and represented before God, by, her head lowered, and life, Christ, she was not the possible subject of the act of justification.

Brother crooks and most who have written on this subject, seemed to me, to lose sight of the scriptural fact that Christ and Adam were as distinct in their headships, as in their persons, and were set up under economies as distinct, as are the law, and the everlasting covenant. The one is the Lord from heaven the sun, and not a servant; the other was of the earth, earthy a servant, bound to obey. Each head as originally brought forth, and of course, in him, his distinct body or seed, and their seeds consequently were as distinct as their headships. "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such as the day that our heavenly." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, And that which is born of the spirit is spirit." 1st Corinthians 15.47-49; John 3.6.

Now the elect of God had stood in a relation to both these headships; their natural life they derive from Adam, and thus are his posterity; their spiritual life they received from Christ and are thus his seed.

Brother crooks I think must admit that the Lord from heaven, as such, and as eternally brought forth and his bride in him, was not subject to legal charges, and therefore not an object of legal justification, or condemnation. If he was not, neither was his bride as represented by him. But it was the eternal purpose of God to create his children in an earthly head, Adam, and leave them to fall, that the riches of his grace might be displayed in the exultation of such worms of the dust to the privilege and manifestation of sons of God, by being regenerated and born again, that is being brought into actual existence as the seed of Christ, by being vivified with that life that was in him from the beginning and thus growing out as branches from him, the vine. Now, would the law let go of its hold and demand upon these children of Adam that they might be exalted beyond its fear without their being redeemed and cleared or justified from all its demands? Romans 8.1-16; Galatians 4.1-7. Hence the provisions made in the everlasting covenant to meet the demands of law and justice.

The above I should suppose fully met Brother Crooks's inquiry concerning what it was, that was justified in time. But as I have repeatedly referred to this distinction between the two headships, and to its importance in the discussion of this subject, without any having noticed it either pro or con, I will in further answering Brother Crooks' inquiry, illustrate this point by experience. I will therefore refer to the experimental fact, that in the intimate personal connection which takes place in the believer, at the new birth, between the flesh and spirit, between the old man that is corrupt, and the new man that is created in righteousness and true holiness. It is not that the new man comes in as a servant to the old and to be involved with it, in the bondage and curse of the law, but he comes in to take the head and government, here represented to have his seat in the heart, the throne as it were, in man; and not only to take this seat but to be acknowledged as the head and person in the believer. Hence these texts improve, "it was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger" (Romans 9.12; Genesis 25.23) "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new" (2nd Corinthians 5.17,) and concerning the identity of the believer's person, Paul says, "it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwells in me." Romans 7.20; and the master to the same effect, says of his disciples, "They are not of the world even as I am not of the world" John 17.16. Hence when the law in its letter, comes to the believer, it finds itself mistaken, he is not the person it took him to be, it has no authority over this person, (the believer) no power to curse him, Christ, and not Adam is now sitting at the head and this body which was once only earthly in its principles.

Hence the apostle's remark, "for you are not under the law, but under grace" Romans 6.14. Now, brother crooks I ask you, which is most scriptural or even most consistent to suppose; that, that life of the believer which was conceived and brought forth from everlasting which is no other than Christ, (Colossians 3.3-4) and therefore no other than the brightness of the father's glory, Hebrews 1.3, should be subject to redemption from under the law, and legal justification that it might be brought into a personal connection with the earthy nature of the elect Raising that nature in its hopes, prospects, and joys, here, and ultimately taking it, changed from corruption to incorruption from a natural body to a spiritual one, home with it to eternal glory? Or that the nature of the elect which was originally created under the law, should be thus redeemed and justified that it might be made manifest in its blessed connection with life, with Christ with glory?

If you say that it was the former, the spirit, that needed justification, then you might with some propriety suppose justification to have been eternal; but if you admit that it was the elect, alone as they were related to Adam, or their human nature that needed justification, then be consistent, you must admit that this justification did not actually pass until since time commenced; for this nature itself, had not an actual existence, neither personal nor representative, until the 6th day of the creation, Genesis 1.27; verse 1 and 2; Hebrews 214; John 1.14; Galatians 4.4.

S. Trott Fairfax CH Va. August 28, 1838

MY THOUGHTS ON JUSTIFICATION

Brother Beebe: – In heading this communication as "My Thoughts", I have only reference to the fact known to many of the Old School brethren that I differ in my views from them on this important article of gospel doctrine, or at least in my manner of treating the subject. Whether these views are thoughts of my own hatching, or whether I have received them from Him whose office it is to guide the disciples into all truth I leave for my brethren to judge for themselves.

I have for some time intended, as soon as opportunity would serve, to communicate my views on this subject. My wish for doing so has arisen from the circumstance that in occasionally touching on this subject in preaching, my brethren have discovered a difference, without perhaps being able to discover, wherefore and wherein, I thus chose to make myself singular in departing from the beaten trail of our Old School brethren on this point. And I freely admit that my brethren have on their side all the true advocates for the doctrine of Sovereign grace, who have published anything on this subject, perhaps for the last hundred years; that is, so far as I have been acquainted with their writings. On the other hand, I have met with no human author who has advanced my views on this doctrine. But thought I thus stand alone on the point, if it should be that my views, weak as I am, are sustained by the Scriptures of truth, they will stand the test.

I am further induced to publish my views from the circumstance that the fact of a difference on this subject having existed has been brought to the notice of the readers of the SIGNS through your Baltimore correspondent, (SIGNS, Vol. 5, #13, pg. 103). I would here just reply to our esteemed Baltimore friend that the correspondence between brother Hezekiah West and myself was not designed for publication, but merely for a free interchange between ourselves of the reasons of our different views on this point.

Lengthy as my apologies have already been touching the communication, I have still another one to offer, before I can enter upon the subject before me; that is, for coming out with this communication so soon after the publication of the recent Circular of the Licking Association lest any should suppose that I had the vanity to design this as an attack upon that ably written Letter. As I have already remarked, I have for some time had this communication in view; and I had intended writing it as soon as I had done with Mr. Giddings. Another inducement has pressed upon my mind for not delaying it, which I will not mention. Perhaps, however, it is quite as well on a general scale, though not so pleasant to me, that the two pieces should appear near together, as our brethren at large can thus conveniently compare the two, and see more clearly wherein the difference of our views consist and thus be able more clearly to judge of the correctness or incorrectness of my grounds for differing from my brethren on this point, I will now drop apologies and come to my subject.

My first objection to the term "Eternal Justification" as used by my brethren, or to the sentiment that the justification of the elect was an act of God passed in eternity, grows out of that prominent sentiment embraced in our Old School stand, namely: that a "Thus saith the Lord" is requisite to justify us in what we believe as well as in what we practice. I do not mean by this that the doctrine must always be expressed in the Scriptures in so many identical words. The doctrine of the "eternal union" of Christ and His people is not, that I know of, declared in just so many words in the Scriptures, yet I think this doctrine is therein clearly revealed. For instance compare Hebrews 2:11, "For both He that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all of one for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren," with Romans 8:29, "For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son that He might be the first-born among many brethren," and they show that the oneness or the union is of as old a date as the predestinating decree of God; and that we know that from Ephesians 1:4-5, to have been from before the foundation of the world. Inference is thus plain, because according to Hebrews 2:11, Christ recognized His people as brethren on the ground of their oneness with Him; and according to Romans 8:29, the predestinating decree of God recognized them as the many brethren among whom Christ was first-born. This doctrine is also taught by the several figures by which the union is illustrated in the Scriptures. For instance, in the figure of the creation of Adam and Eve. As Eve was of Adam's body, of his flesh, and of his bones, so the church of Christ (See Ephesians 5:25-32). Eve was created in Adam in his original creation. Genesis 5:1-2, That the figure as used by the Apostle may hold good, we must therefore admit that the church was brought forth and set up in Christ, her Head, when He was brought forth from everlasting, when there were no depths, etc. Proverbs 8:23-24. The same is further confirmed by the general doctrine of the gospel such as that they were chosen in Him, etc. Ephesians 1:4. I would here remark that the doctrine contained in this text is not that they were chosen into Christ; but chosen in Him. Neither does it sustain Doctor Watts in the following couplet:

"Christ be my first-elect He said, Then choose our souls in Christ our Head."

These lines found in that otherwise excellent hymn of Dr. Watts, 54th, 1st book, are in my estimation an entire departure from the Scripture doctrine; both in reference to the idea that our being chosen was as after act, and as to the notion of our souls being chosen in Christ.

But to return to the subject, if there are any passages of Scripture having reference to justification, which thus represent it or bring it to view as an act passed in eternity, I have never discovered them, neither have the advocates of that sentiment, as far as I have seen, brought them forward. Besides there are texts which, so far as I understand them, plainly contradict that idea. As in Romans 4:25, "Who was delivered for our offenses and was raised again for our justification." If the sentence of justification in behalf of the church of Christ was actually passed in eternity I cannot conceive how Christ only eighteen hundred years ago was raise for our justification. We needed not to be twice justified before God. "For by one offering He (Christ) hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." (Hebrews 10:14).

Remember, it was by one offering He perfected. They could not be justified from all things without being perfected, and the one offering which perfected them was that making His soul an offering for sin; that offering of His body once for all, which He has accomplished on Calvary, as a time act. (Isaiah 53:10 & Hebrews 10:10).

Again, according to Romans 3:24, we are "justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." This justification must be the act of God, being "freely by His grace," and it is through the "redemption that is in Christ Jesus." If so, the act of justification cannot be considered as actually passed until the redemption was actually made. Redemption is "through His blood." (Ephesians 1:7 & Colossians 1:14). Again, "In the fullness of time, God sent forth His Son made of woman and made under the law to redeem them that were under the law." (Galatians 4:4-5). Hence, as redemption is so manifestly a time act for those who before "were under the law," I cannot believe that the act of justification was passed until Christ was raised again. It is true Christ said in Hebrews 9:12, "To have obtained eternal redemption for us;" but a moment's reflection on the passage and its connection will, I think, convince any one that the redemption is here called eternal, not because it existed from eternity, but because it shall be, in its effects, of eternal or everlasting duration. The fact of Christ's obtaining it denies its having eternally been, as well as the connection.

I will not multiply testimonies upon this point seeing that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. I will just ask how it is, if justification was designed to be received as an eternal act of God that it is never thus declared in the Scriptures? The choice and predestination of God are revealed as being before the foundation of the world; also that the "purpose and grace of God" were given in Christ before the world began.

I pass to a second objection – namely: That the sentiment of eternal justification as contended for perverts the plain Scriptural use and design of the term "justification." To "justify" and "justification" are terms which have special reference to legal proceedings as admitted by all writers on the subject and signify the act of pronouncing a person clear from charges which may have been exhibited against him. In this sense these terms are evidently used in the Scriptures. We find them connected with law, Acts 13:39, with offenses, Romans 4:25, with redemption, which, of course, refers to law, Romans 3:24. It is true that as taught in the gospel, justification has a more extensive bearing as used in other cases. The decisions of human judges whether in relation to the Sinai or other laws cannot embrace futurity; but the justification which the gospel reveals embraces all futurity, as well as past transgressions; it is a clearance from all the demands of the law past, present and to come; it is a judicial pronouncing of those whom Christ hath redeemed from under the law, as legally perfect, and that forever, as Christ "by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" Hebrews 10:14. Hence justification is in this sense, as is the redemption obtained by Christ, eternal; that is, eternal in its duration. If then the meaning of the term "justification" refers exclusively to legal proceedings, and if it is uniformly so used in the Scriptures, what can it have to do with any period before the foundation of the world? Before creatures had an actual existence and before the obligations of law had any place? "Where no law is, there is no transgression" so of course no charge? How then can a legal sentence of justification be passed in the absence of all charge, of all law? It will be asked, had not the children of God an existence before the foundation of the world? I answer "yes" as is evinced by that I have said of the union of Christ and His people. They existed in Christ, as His seed, His bride, His body; as Adam's bride and posterity existed in him in his original creation. But this existence was as distinct from their existence in Adam and his posterity as Christ is distinct from Adam. And the Covenant under which they were set up and existed in Christ was equally distinct from the law under which Adam was created. This Covenant was "ordered in all things and sure;" had no requisitions to make excepting of Christ as its surety (Hebrews 7:22). This existence therefore opened no room for the requisition of a legal justification. A legal righteousness could just as soon be required of the Son in order to His enjoying the love of the Father, as it could be required of His seed and bride as they thus stood in Him, heirs with Him, to the same inheritance.

Herein, I cannot help imagining that my brethren have confounded, or at least, have not kept clearly in view the distinction between the headship of Christ and Adam, and between the law and the everlasting covenant. Herein also I object to the system of my brethren upon this point as transporting the act of justification from its relation to the law, to a provision to meet a demand of the everlasting covenant.

Should any say that they do not view the sentence of justification as actually passed in eternity, but only existing in purpose to meet the predetermined event of the elect's being created in a fallible head, and being left to fall into sin, etc., I would remark that I believe in the pre-existence of such a purpose, as strongly as any of my brethren do; and not only that such purpose existed in the Divine mind, but also that God made sure and full provisions in Christ as the surety of the better testament to meet all the demands of law and justice, that, should stand against the elect, as they were to be related in time to the earthly head, Adam. But why confound language by representing that which existed only in the predeterminate purpose of God as being actually past in eternity? The creation of man was as much predetermined and stood as present to the view of God as did the justification of the elect. But I have heard of none who pretended to say that man was created in eternity. Why then say that the elect were justified in eternity? By this confusion of language will you not lead men to think that when you say that the people of God were elected in eternity you mean only that God proposed to elect them in time?

I will now notice some of the arguments used to support the sentiment of eternal justification. 1st. The argument drawn from the everlasting love of God to His people. This argument is that God could not have loved them as sinners, and therefore that He must have previously justified them that He might love them. But really if these premises were correct I do not see how this provision of justification would help the difficulty any. For according to this argument God must have extended His electing love to a people who were not then fit objects of His love, and provided for them a redemption in His Son, the strongest possible expression of His love, in order to justify them, and this done, that He might love them.

The premises, however, on which this, to me, absurd conclusion rests is wrong. Christ and not Adam is the channel through which the love of God flows to His people. Viewed in Christ their Head, and in that life which they had in Him, I may confidently ask what sin was then in Him as their Head to bar the love of the Father from them?

And what love was there to charge a failure upon Him? Christ speaks of the Father having "loved them as He had loved Him." (John 17:23). The Father loved Him as His only begotten Son, and not as having a legal righteousness to justify Him. And if He loved them as He loved Him, He loved them in Christ as His children and joint heirs with Christ; and above that a legal righteousness could entitle them to. The truth is, Christ as the only begotten Son of God and Head of the church, had a glory with the Father before the world was, which no law servitude, no legal obedience could add to; and when about finishing His servitude under the law as the Redeemer of His people, He prays the Father to restore Him to that same glory. And what is more, He says to the Father, "the glory which Thou gavest Me, I have given them." (John 17:5 & 22.) And surely, if Christ had given them, through their union with Him, that glory which He had with the Father, nothing which the law could impart could be necessary to make them lovely in the sight of God. Again, although it pleased the Father that the members of Christ's body should have an earthly existence, as such be under the law and fall under its curse; yet that law with all its divine rigor could no more destroy the love which God in eternity had placed upon them in His Son, than the Sinai law thundering its curses from Mount Ebal (Deut. 27:13-26) against the posterity of Abraham, could disannul the promise which had been confirmed only four hundred and thirty years before, of God in Christ, that is, to Abraham (Galatians 3:16-17).

As another plea for the doctrine of eternal justification, it is asked, if we admit that the sentence of justification was passed eighteen hundred years ago in behalf of the whole church of Christ, why not admit that it was passed before the foundation of the world? I answer, for two of the best possible reasons. First, because eighteen hundred years ago, Christ completed the redemption of His church, by which they were cleared from all the demands of the law in Him, it was therefore fitting that the sentence of justification should then be declared in their favor, in and through Him their Head. But previous to Christ's being made of a woman and made under the law, the redemption of His church from under the law was not actually paid, and the sentence of justification could not therefore previously be passed in their favor, without clearing Him, as He stood as their Head through whom the sentence must pass, and as one with them, from His obligation to suffer the penalty of the law, and without making void the law. Second, the Scriptures declare that Christ, eighteen hundred years ago, was raised for our (the church's) justification, but they nowhere declare that she was justified antecedent to His redemption.

Again it is argued from the doctrine of imputation that the church was justified in eternity. To carry this out it has been said that it was in consequence of the sins of the elect having been imputed to Christ, and His righteousness, which if it had remained His own, would have sustained Him under the load of their guilt, having been imputed to them, that He was subjected to fall under the curse of the law. But this is not the way I have read the Scriptures. If I have read them right, this position must fall. First, it calls for a double righteousness; for if Christ originally had such a righteousness as the sins of His people called for, to shelter them, He needed it not, only as He was one with them; and if therefore it sheltered them it must equally have sheltered Him as one with them, so that the curse could not have troubled either, the Head or the body. In the second place, the Scriptures teach me that Christ had not originally such a righteousness as was called for by the sins of His people to cover them. What righteousness was this? Remember that their sins were altogether sins under the law, the righteousness therefore which could counterbalance them could be nothing other than a perfect actual obedience to the law, a complete honoring it as a transgressed law. This righteousness, holy and pure as He was before, Christ had not actually, until He was made under the law, took upon Him the form of a servant, became obedient unto death, etc. Let us see how the Scriptures read upon this point. "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." (Hebrews 5:9).

Hence, there was a perfection, a completing, wanting in Christ as He stood connected with His people in their apostasy, and as their Deliverer from sin, until He was "made perfect through suffering". Again, "He made Him to be sin for us," not because we had been made the righteousness of God out of Him – but, "that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." (2 Corinthians 5:21.) More I need not repeat, but read for yourselves.

Another argument in support of eternal justification is drawn from the fact of the Old Testament saints having been accounted righteous, or justified. The conclusion drawn is that if the sentence of justification was not passed until the resurrection of Christ, all that lived before His coming must have remained under the condemnation of the law. If there was nothing brought to light touching this point in the Scriptures, the above would appear a very plausible conclusion. Justification as presented to view in the Scriptures is in a two-fold relation.

The first is the public declaration from the throne of God of the justification of the whole body of Christ collectively, though having reference to every individual member thereof. This transaction was wholly with and through Christ as the Husband, and Surety of His church. Her sins were laid on Him, law and justice looked to Him for satisfaction; He met the demand in that nature from which the law required it, and having in His death fully satisfied the demand, was raised again for the justification of His people. In the resurrection of Jesus by the power of God, in the same body in which He was delivered for the offenses of His people, not only was justice declared to be satisfied, and therefore their justification made manifest in Him; but also the righteousness of God was made manifest in justifying whosoever believeth in Jesus and also in the remission of sins that were past, or previous to the coming of Christ, Romans 3:35-26 & Hebrews 9:15. Here, therefore in this public declaration of justification, there was a reference to the individual justification of the saints under the former dispensation, as though that had been done in anticipation of the great sacrifice to be offered by Christ.

The second relation is the experimental justification of individuals. This is at the bar of the believer's conscience, faith is the medium by which this act of justification is communicated. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." (Romans 5:1). This justification is necessary to our enjoying peace with God, and secures it. As it is by that faith which "is the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen;" and as Christ was set forth from the beginning as the object of faith;

hence said to be the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelations 13:8). I see not why the Old Testament saints might not realize something of this justification and peace which we experience. But that they did not experience it in the same perfection I shall have occasion shortly to show. But Christ's being the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," I presume no one will contend that He was then actually sacrificed, and by the expression "from the foundation of the world," I do not understand the act of appointing Christ, by the Father to be a sacrifice of His people, intended for that was from before the foundation of the world. I consider the expression as having special reference to the fact of His being set forth from the first introduction of sin; in promises, types, etc., as the Lamb which God had provided for sacrifice, and as the object of faith. Thus Abel offered his lamb in faith, (Hebrews 11:4) not faith in his sacrifice, but in the bloody sacrifice of the Lamb of God as showed forth by his. "For without the shedding of blood there is no remission, (Hebrews 9:22), consequently no justification. How does this stand with eternal justification?

My brethren, I think, ought to admit that if the act of justification in behalf of the saints was passed before the foundation of the world, the faith of all must look back to that act to find their justification in experience, seeing this is no other than a receiving and applying by faith the justification as found in Christ. According to the notion of eternal justification, Abel's faith must have had the same back and perfect view of justification as have ours. And we to find peace with God must not stop in our view by faith at Calvary. If then the Scriptures show that the faith of the Old Testament saints looked forward instead of backward for this justification, it is proof positive against the notion of their justification having been in eternity. Not to multiply proofs where one case in point is sufficient, I will just cite to Abraham's faith, the object of which "was accounted to him for righteousness;" and ask was that in a revelation which God made to him for something past? Or was it in the promise of something future? The Apostle says, and that settles the point, "that God gave it to Abraham by promise." (Galatians 3:18). See also Romans 4:20, 24, and notice the difference brought to view in this passage, in the manner in which the object of faith is presented to Abraham from what it is to us. Abraham believed that God "was able to perform that which He had promised." We believe He has performed it in that He "has raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." I will also notice one instance of prophetic faith, namely: Isaiah 45:25, "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory." This surely presents justification of something then future. Other passages will be found to correspond with the above, as this is the name whereby "He shall be called the Lord our Righteousness." (Not was called.) (Jeremiah 23:6). Hence the Apostle's account of those worthies who went before (Hebrews 11:39-40), "And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." They received a good report - the report of good to come, but the manifestation of this promised good they received not. This text not only manifests that the faith of the ancients was in anticipation of good to come, but it also shows that there was an imperfection connected with their faith which nothing but the coming of the gospel day could do away. "That they without us should not be made perfect." Hence it is no wonder that the prophets enquired -"searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory which should follow," (1 Peter 1:10-11). There is a glory connected with the full manifestation of justification, which they had not. For though as the redeeming Lamb, Christ was "foreordained before the foundation of the world," yet He was not manifested until these last times, for those that believe. (1 Peter 1:19-21). If these texts consist with the idea that the justification of the elect was completed in eternity, I must confess my utter inability so to understand them.

From the remarks which I have interspersed with my objections to the doctrine of eternal justification, it will be discovered that my thoughts concerning justification are that as it is presented in the Scriptures, it is altogether a legal transaction; though a gospel or gracious provision that has to do with the people of God, only as they stood connected with Adam, and under the law; and with Christ, as He was involved by His union with them in the demand of the law.

That its use is to manifest their clearance by the redemption of Christ from under the law, and the righteousness of God in bestowing upon them, encompassed as they are with humanity and sin, the adoption of children. It is, I think, altogether a mistaken notion that justification is what entitles the saints to heaven. Equally erroneous is the notion that Christ by His death purchased heaven for His people. This union to Christ as His bride, His body, and being the children of God, is what entitles them to the heavenly glory.

Justification could no more entitle them to heaven than the law could give life. (Galatians 3:27). Hence, my view of justification is that it was a provision made for the people of God in Christ, and which they needed, wholly as they are creatures of time, and from the nature of it, that it is altogether a time act, though appointed and provided for in the counsel of eternity, as were all other time things.

In reference to the eternal standing of the elect before God, as they were set up in Christ, they forever possessed in Him a spiritual beauty, excellency, and glory which nothing arising from their connection with Adam and the law could ever add to, or diminish from, excepting on the one hand this connection was till they were delivered from it, an insuperable barrier to their inheriting the kingdom prepared for them, and indeed to their being manifested as the sons of God; and on the other hand the experimental knowledge which they thereby have of the evil and misery of sin, and of the grace, love and mercy of God, manifested in delivering them from their thralldom and sin, will enhance to them the excellency and enjoyment of their heavenly inheritance.

I have thus given a summary of my thoughts upon this subject. If they are wrong, it is because I have a wrong understanding of the Scriptures upon this point. If they are right, it is because God has graciously given me to understand the Scriptures concerning this doctrine, for I certainly never learned it from men. Were it not that the Scriptural account of this doctrine appears to me so clearly to support this view concerning justification being a law, a time transaction, the circumstance that so many more excellent, and more gifted brethren differ from me in their judgment concerning it, together with the reflect, what am I that I should be made thus to differ; would lead me much to doubt the correctness of this view. As it is, I must retain them, till I am led to see some direct Scriptural authority for the doctrine of eternal justification.

With love to the brethren, and a hope that I may be found to share with them in the perfection there is in Christ Jesus our Lord. I subscribe myself yours, Samuel Trott, Nov. 22, 1837 Fairfax Court House, Virginia THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES: Vol. 5.

==========

P.S. I wish not my apologies, with which I commenced this communication, construed as a plea with my brethren not to answer my objections if they see fit. As I wish on this and all other religious subjects to see eye to eye with them, if any of them can give a more correct view of this subject founded upon direct Scriptural authority I shall be glad to see it. I would further remark that perhaps some may think the view I have given of justification, and especially from my remarks being especially designed to illustrate those views in distinction from the sentiment of eternal justification are calculated to diminish the importance of this gospel doctrine; but I do not view it as presented in the Scriptures in a light any less important by its standing so immediately and intimately connected with the actual obedience of the Son of God unto death; an obedience yielded especially to bring about the accomplishment of this act, than though it was revealed as, like predestination, an absolute act of the Divine Mind, or as being passed in anticipation of the obedience of Christ. The fact is, the grace, love and mercy of God is far more displayed in the act of justification by viewing it as thus involving as essential to it, the actual obedience unto death of the Son of God, than they could be, by separating the act in any measure from the obedience and sufferings of Christ. And it can be no less precious to the believer by viewing it as coming to him, a poor, guilty, lawcondemned sinner of Adam's race, alone through the righteousness of Christ brought in by His actual substitution of his law place. And as they are made to view it, in their experience, whatever may be said of their having been eternally justified.

THE TRANSACTION RECORDED IN ACTS 15 CONSIDERED

Brother Beebe: from the frequent reference had to the transaction above referred to, by brethren in support of constituted associations, I am induced to offer some remarks illustrative of the true design of that portion of the scripture record.

I would hear remark that I do not design, in this communication to investigate the subject of constituted associations, any further than this subject has been connected with the transaction to be considered, and to notice of few brother James West's remarks in his letter, Signs, Vol. 6, No. 16, pg. 125.

The inquiry before us, is, whether the assemblage mentioned in Acts 15 was designed as a pattern for any similar assemblage in after ages, under the idea of councils, advisory councils, and associations.

By a pattern, I understand a perfect sampler of all the essential parts of that which is to be made or done. Thus God says to Moses, "According to all that I show you, after the pattern of the Tabernacle and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, Even so shall you make it." Exodus 25.9. And we find in the connection, God describing every part of the Tabernacle and all the vessels thereof. Again he commanded him, verse 40, to look to the pattern. We also find David giving Solomon a particular description, of the porch of the house, of all the instruments even to the weight of gold or of silver to each vessel and he said unto him, "All this the Lord made me to understand, in writing by his hand upon me; Even all the work of this pattern." First Chronicles 28.11-19. And can our spiritual David have been any less particular in reference to his spiritual temple? And does not the apostles' reference to the command of God to Moses, (Hebrews 8.5) imply that the heavenly or gospel things should be conformed to the pattern shown, equally with the earthly things?

Brother Culp's remark in his letter on this subject, (Signs, Vol. 6, No. 8, pg. 60) "with that only an outline of that council, (meaning the meeting at Jerusalem) was recorded, that those coming after, should have an example; it is pretty much the case would all scripture, just enough is written to establish their fact," contains a sentiment that I cannot countenance for a moment. What profess to believe the scriptures are a perfect rule of faith and practice, and yet admit that they only contain an outline, to be filled up by us, to suit circumstances? Believe that they are given by inspiration of God that the man of God may be perfectly thoroughly furnished unto all good works, and yet believe that the spirit has barely given an outline of what we are to believe and do?

I think Brother Culp must have written this Pedo Baptist new school sentiment thoughtlessly, and that on reflection, he will not admit what his expressions here imply.

I wish here, before proceeding to the inquiry before us, to notice the inconsistency of brethren in contending for the assemblage described, acts 15 being a pattern for associations, and yet contending for associations to be constituted bodies. I am certain that there is not a brother who can read for himself, that can, with an honest mind, assert that there is anything in this record to warrant the idea, that the churches at Jerusalem and Antioch, previously, or at this meeting, united together in an associational constitution, binding themselves to hold such stated meetings together as an Advisory Council, and to send messengers, from time to time to attend it; Or anything of the kind. It is not evident from the whole connection that these churches in this whole transaction acted freely, without any written, humanly devised formulas to bind and govern them, in this procedure? Brethren if you would be consistent and pretend to pattern after this meeting, away with your written constitutions and rules of decorum. In pursuing the inquiry whether the meeting mentioned, Acts 15 was designed as a pattern for similar assemblages to be held in after ages as counsels, associations, or the like, I shall at once take the negative, and endeavor to show that it was not thus designed.

1. From the impossibility of similar meetings, composed of such persons, alike capable of giving correct counsel, being held.

Let us examine carefully who they were, and who were principally concerned in this transaction. By looking at verse 2, we find that the messengers were sent from the church at Antioch to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem about this matter. From verse 6, we learn "that the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter." Again in consultation on the case certain of the apostles, alone, were speakers except that Barnabas and Paul declared what miracles and wonders God had wrought by their hands among the gentiles. The whole church also came together on the occasion and assented to the decision of the apostles, and of the Holy Spirit, as expressed by James. But that it was a case referred to the apostles and elders, and by them decided through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is evident not only from what has been quoted but also from chapter 16.4, where it is said of Paul and Silas that "as they went through the cities they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders that were at Jerusalem."

Brethren Culp, West, must be aware, that the 12 apostles possessed extraordinary gifts, not to be conferred on others after them; that they were especially inspired, and had peculiar authority given them to plant and regulate churches, and to establish gospel doctrine and order. Hence it was set up the 3,000, that they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine. We find the master saying unto them, after giving them directions concerning the discipline in cases of individual offenses, "whatsoever you shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; And whatsoever you shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven." Again, "that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that shall ask, it will be done for them of my father which is in heaven." Matthew 18.18-19. By comparing verse 18 with Matthew 16.19, where addressing himself more immediately to Peter, he says, "I will give unto you the keys of the Kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever you shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven;" it appears that this was addressed to him as well of the apostles, and therefore designed to include the others with him.

The idea uniformly conveyed by the expression of giving the keys to anyone, as used, both in the scriptures and among men, is that of giving full authority to open and shut at pleasure. Thus of Eliakim It is said, (Isaiah 22.22) "and the keys of the House of David will I lay upon his shoulder, so he shall open and none shall shut, And he shall shut and none shall open." Again revelation 3.7 "These things said he that is holy, he that is true, he has the keys of David, he that opens and no man shuts and shuts and no man opens." So that the expression evidently conveys the idea of authority to open and shut at pleasure, or as the Holy Spirit directed, so far as the power imparted by the keys. But here the Lord again to the apostles, "As my father has sent me Even so send I you." And when he had said this, he breathed on them and said, receive you the Holy Spirit, whosoever sins you remit, they are remitted unto them; And whosoever sins ye retain, but they are retained." John 20.21-23.

From this view of the peculiar power and authority given to the apostles, is it not evident that they were specially authorized by the Lord, to give decisions to ordained decrees to be kept by the churches, the loose the gentile churches from such Jewish ceremonies, as seemed to them good, and to bind upon them such things as they esteemed right? Yes, did they not in this case say without presumption, "it seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden" (verse 28) thus claiming without hesitancy, infallibility to their decision and decrees? Will brethren Culp, West, or others, presume to say that any set of men since the apostles' days have been authorized and qualified to ordain their decrees to be kept by the churches, and to decide alike infallibility in any cases of difficulty? If not, they must acknowledge that this Apostolic meeting could not have been designed for a pattern, for counsels, advisory councils, associations, and afterages; because it is evident there can be no true copy of this meeting.

2. A second reason I shall assign for taking a negative in this inquiry, is, the abuse, that in every age, has uniformly grown out of men's assuming a pattern after this Apostolic transaction.

I will commence with the early church. About the middle of the 2nd century, and not before, the churches among the Greeks, began to unite together to hold stated councils not associations, to enact rules of faith and practice. We are told that they at first appeared unassuming, but that they soon changed the whole face of the church, the bishops, or elders, at first met as the delegates of the church; but they soon turned their influence into dominion, and their councils into laws, and openly asserted at length that Christ had empowered them to prescribe to his people authoritative rules of faith and practice, Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, Cent. Ii, Part 2, Chapter ii. The above was but carrying out their pretensions of imitating the apostles and elders in the transaction recorded in Acts 15 and assuming their authority. And the Catholics upon the principle of patterning after the apostles in that transaction are certainly consistent in claiming infallibility for their general counsels. But look at the result of those smaller councils first, and after that of the general counsel; From the smaller we soon find sponsors, infant baptism, chrism, and a multitude of ceremonies introduced; From the general counsels, from the council of Nicea to the Council of Trent, nothing but corruption, imposition of edicts and creeds, contentions and persecutions have followed.

I might notice the different ecclesiastical establishments among the reformed churches, and show the authority they assume over their churches, as deriving their power from Acts 15, but I passed them by, to come to the Baptists. These also, must follow suit since the Reformation, with the dissenting churches in England, and have their associations, for which they soon claimed the title and dignity of being advisory councils, pleading Acts 15, as their pattern. But with all of this pretension, they could do but little towards exalting the preachers above the churches, excepting the getting up with their Bristol school in England, and the College in Rhode Island, until within the last 30 years. And why? Evidently, because the Lord would continue them as his visible church, and therefore kept them down by oppression, and persecutions, the preachers as well as the churches, were kept low. But when the time came for the image of the beast to arise out of the visible church, the materials and machinery were at hand for rearing it. Aspiring college bread ministry, and other formalists, had obtained an ascendancy in the denomination; And the associations generally claimed to be and were acknowledged as advisory councils to the churches; their resolutions therefore were not to be despised. Hence the first step was to get associations and pass resolutions, recommending certain plans to be adopted by the churches. Three out of four of the churches were not independency enough to resist these innovations coming as they were recommended by the associations. These plans that is true appeared less open and dangerous at first, until they began to assume a rapid growth. But in this way, it is, that the associations have been the hotbeds and nurseries of all the various religious societies, and schemes of the day, among the Baptists.

Luther Rice when he commenced his career, knew well the proper spring to touch, in order to get this machine in motion. Hence, he would ride night and day, and kill horse after horse, to get from one association to another, knowing that, as they were acknowledged as advisory councils, if he could induce them to come into his measures, they would be able to lead the churches along; and he succeeded but too well. Some associations stood firm against these things; And several churches revolted and would not obey their advisors.

Brother West they denominate this, burlesque; but it is not, my brother; It is simply a glance at facts, showing what has, in our day, grown out of associations assuming to be advisory councils, in imitation of Acts 15.

There has been another kind of councils prevalent among the Baptists, in some sections of our country. These were occasional counsels, sometimes appointed by an association, sometimes called by the churches; And in some instances, self-called, the object, to settle some difficulty which may have gotten into a church, or to try, or gained a preacher. These have assumed all the power and authority which the apostles and elders exercise in the case of the difficulty at Antioch, taking the whole affair into their hands, and requiring the church to submit to their decision. As specimens of the usurpations of these councils, I will give two instances from the Signs, the first recorded, 2nd, page 230-237, elder Salmon and the church at West Turin, New York. The other relates to the Canton church, New Jersey, and Elder Miller, Signs, V. 5th, page 131-132. These are enough to show what may grow out of such councils. Other instances of their assumed power are fresh in the memories of some.

But that I may not be understood as confounding these councils, with helps, I will remark that a church which is in difficulty, sending to sister churches to send them helps, is a different thing from these councils. For these helps, when they come, instead of taking the discipline out of the hands of the church and requiring beforehand both parties to promise submission to their decision as these councils have done, telling her the same things which the apostles had decided, as did the messengers from the church at Jerusalem to the church at Antioch, acts 15.27. If these should not succeed in being instrumental in uniting the church, and a split takes place, still there is this advantage of a tensor visit, they will report to their respective churches the state of the case, and thus these churches will be prepared to decide which division to acknowledge as the true church.

To return, the last and most unpleasant of the claims set up to the seat of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem, Which I shall notice, is that of certain of our old school Baptist brethren, principally, I believe in the south and southwest, in favor of their associations. My brethren, I truly fear for you, in making this assumption. Not that I am afraid, that generally you have, at this time, any intention or inclination to assume Apostolic authority over the churches; but you are men of like passions with others, and your associations will continue to be composed of such men. It has been said that all men have the principles of tyranny in their nature, And I partly believe it; So that, for myself, I feel afraid of exercising too much personal influence over churches, lest it extend to an assumption of authority, and I do not wish to see power put into the hands of my ministering brethren, or lodged in associations or other humanly constituted bodies, lest being persuaded in our minds that we have scriptural authority to exercise this power, and a lesson of temptation suiting, we might attempt to Lord it over God's heritage, if not to persecute. It is true, that God has kept his church and ministers from acting the wolf, by the Gracie has afforded them, and by keeping them humble under the rod, but if he should leave any of us, who now hope that we are called by him to the ministry, to persuade ourselves, or to be persuaded of the adversary that we personally, or the association to which we belong, have the right to exercise Apostolic authority in imitation of the transaction recorded acts 15, there is no knowing how far we may be left to extend the exercise of that authority.

My brethren, we cannot be too well guarded against anything like an assumption of power over the churches and their discipline. You may be already too well guarded in your own minds against this assumption of power over the churches, to be yourselves swayed by your own arguments in this case. But let those who come in, young, among you, with their early religious expansion of mind; Imbibe from your arguments, the idea that the associations set in the apostles' seats, and as they come to have influence in these associations, there is reason to fear that they will be urging those bodies, when occasion suits, up to the exercise of the authority belonging to those seats.

If we look into the history of the church in past ages, we see a teeming with the deleterious effects, of combinations of churches assuming, an imitation of the Apostolic transaction recorded in Acts 15, an authority over the faith and discipline of the churches. And we cannot at this day, open our eyes upon the state of the Baptist denomination around us, without the same pernicious effects, flowing from the same cause, staring us in the face, brought in, to be sure, in a more insidious way. And will you, my brethren, persist in following up the same track, and claiming for your associations, the authority of advisory councils? Much more is on my mind to say by way of persuading you to beware of treading upon this dangerous ground. But I forbear.

Yours in the afflictions of the gospel,

S. Trott Fairfax CH Va. September 5, 1838

THE TRANSACTION RECORDED IN ACTS 15 CONSIDERED

Concluded.

Brother Beebe: I will now assign a third reason for assuming the negative in the inquiry before us, that the plain example set in the transaction, is very different from that of leading our churches to look to uninspired men, for council, and to settle their difficulties for them.

How stood the case? A difficulty was introduced into the church at Antioch, relative to circumcision, by certain Judaizing teachers, those disturbers of the peace of the churches in every age. There arose a discussion on the subject. Although Barnabas and Paul both appear to have had Apostolic gifts, and Paul evidently has Apostolic authority, they were not so acknowledged by those Judaizing teachers, because they were not of the original twelve, hence their decisions were disregarded. What was to be done? The scriptures of the Old Testament did not clearly decide the case; the New Testament was not then written, at least not the greater part of it. This was an important circumstance attending a difficulty, which cannot occur in our day. An infallible decision it seems they wanted, and such, and such only ought our churches to seek for, in any difficulty which may arise.

Where was the church at Antioch to look for this? Where did they look! To the twelve apostles at Jerusalem, whom the Lord having qualified with special gifts and inspiration for the office, had appointed and enthroned as judges, with this seal already set to their decisions, that "whatsoever you shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever you shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven." For in addition to what I have already quoted relative to the special appointment of the Twelve, we find the Lord said unto them, "You that have followed me in the regeneration, when the son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, you also shall sit upon twelve Thrones, judging the 12 tribes of Israel." Matthew 19.28. Again, "you are they which have continued with me in my temptations; and I appoint unto you a Kingdom as my father has appointed unto me; that you may eat and drink at my table in my Kingdom," (in other words be acknowledged as especially associated with me in the government of the Kingdom,) "and sit on Thrones judging the 12 tribes of Israel," Luke 22.28-30. And so it had been foretold, Isaiah 32.1, "a king shall reign in righteousness and Princess shall rule in judgment". The apostles being here denominated Princes, both the four shoulders being enthroned as judges, and in reference to the heads of the 12 tribes of Israel being called Princes, numbers 7.2. The inquiry here arises, when is the period of the son of man's "being seated in the throne of his glory"?

The scriptures answer, from the time that he "ascended up far above" all heavens" until the "last enemy shall be destroyed," which is death, Ephesians 4.9-10; 1st Corinthians 15.25-26. During that period the twelve apostles, then, shall sit on twelve Thrones as the Lord's judges, for when the son of man shall sit, you also shall sit. They are as much enthroned now, according to this, as to judges appointed of the Lord, to decide all cases relating to his Kingdom, as they were when the church at Antioch sent her messengers to them; with this difference, then instead of now having to send up to Jerusalem to consult them in any case of difficulty, we have their decisions already written out, at hand in a New Testament; and we have it in the New Testament, in addition to the instructions of the Old Testament, all that the Holy Spirit has seen necessary for the churches to have as a perfect rule of faith and practice, to which he has a fixed this broad seal at the conclusion of the last book, "if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues written in this book. And if any man shall take away," Revelation 22.18-19.

When the pattern here set is so plain, for appealing to the Lord's Princess and judges for counsel; will old school brethren advocate the idea of churches appealing to humanly devised self-constituted advisory councils, to settle their difficulties for them to the neglect of the Lord's appointed judges, in the face of the example set by Paul and Barnabas and the church at Antioch, and all this under the notion that they are copying after the pattern set in that transaction.

Perhaps someone may say that difficulties may arise in our churches on the subjects about which the New Testament is silent. I have only to say on this head, that the fact that the New Testament is silent concerning any subject of doctrine or practice, is conclusive testimony to a Church of Christ, that such subject ought not to be discussed by her; And members persisting in bringing such subjects into the church, after she by a careful examination, has satisfied herself that the New Testament is silent concerning it, is good ground for those members, "after the 1st and 2nd admonition," being rejected as heretics.

Others may say that the appeal by the church at Antioch was to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. True; And it is equally true, that we have in the New Testament, the writings of elders, other than the original 12 apostles, Mark, Luke, and Paul.

I have brought to view the testimony of scripture, concerning the special authority vested in the 12 apostles as judges to the 12 tribes of Israel, that is spiritually, to the visible Church of Christ in all ages. Why the Holy Spirit did not influence the church at Antioch to make their appeal alone to the apostles, or why the Lord did not direct a New Testament wholly to be written out by the apostles, and that we should have something therein from each apostle, is not for me to say; For us, is it, that apostles were associated in both cases, and therefore that Apostolic authority rests upon both; that the decision concerning circumcision at Jerusalem, and the whole New Testament bear the stamp both of Apostolic authority and on the inspiration of God.

1. The whole church coming together, and the subject being examined and decided in general church meeting, is worthy of notice.

Some of the circumstances connected with this transaction, it may not be amiss here to notice, and all are undoubtedly recorded for our instruction.

The apostles and elders might have come together to consider this matter without troubling the whole church to assemble. But that might in after ages, have been pled as an example for the elders of the churches, to take the discipline into their own hands, and decide independently of the churches, as we see in the discipline of the Presbyterian Church, and in the principle of the government of the Methodist, episcopalian, and other churches. But that the dignity of the church, the bride of Christ, might in this case, be set forth and acknowledged, the church came together on the occasion, and her voice was heard as approving the decision, in the sending of letter and messengers to the church at Antioch, verse 22.

2. As the Church of Jerusalem was the mother church, and therefore properly the pattern of all gospel churches, it was proper that she in the absence, by reason of distance, from the apostles of the Antioch church, should represent the church requiring an Apostolic decision. In this view of the subject, what does the pattern teach? Evidently this: that would a church is difficulted upon any point, instead of the members contenting themselves with looking into the scriptures at home, and as is too often the case column merely to furnish themselves with arguments to defend their points in the debate before the church, when the churches come together, let the appeal be made direct to the apostles and elders, and let the New Testament be read and examined before the whole, or so much of it as to satisfy them what the apostles decision is in this case. And when does decision is found, let them acquiesce in it as that which is bound in heaven. And I verily believe that if churches, when difficulties arise in them, would promptly pursue this course in dependence on God for wisdom to direct, they would find much fewer occasions for going to advisory councils to decide, and therefore to exercise their government, for them.

Neither would this course altogether preclude the aid of helps when convenient to be had, of which I have already spoken. Barnabas, and Paul the messengers from the church at Antioch, were undoubtedly helps in this case.

The relation they gave "of the miracles and wonders that God had wrought by their hands among the gentiles," to which all the multitude gained an audience, had I presume a solitary effect on the mind of those Jewish disciples of which this church was composed, to reconcile them to the decision of the apostles in the case. It is equally evident that Judas and Silas, the messenger sent from Jerusalem to Antioch on this occasion, to "tell the same things by mouth" which the apostles had decreed, were also helpful to the church at Antioch to calm their minds; for it is said they confirmed them, verse 32. So brethren from other churches coming in and sitting with a church, now, may be helps to her in her difficulties. But let them after being informed as to the death difficulty confine themselves to relating the experience they have had, like Barnabas and Paul, of God's dealings in similar cases, and to stating the same things which the apostles have decreed in the case. As recorded in the New Testament, with exhortations to a steadfast and united adherence to the apostles' doctrine and order, like Jude and Silas.

3. The messengers from the church at Antioch being received by the Church of Jerusalem, And they, in turn, sending messengers to the church at Antioch, and those being received by them, it is an example of a correspondence being conducted between two churches, through the instrumentality of messengers, and by the churches themselves, without the intervention of any other body like an association being constituted out of the churches to govern and manage the correspondence.

I will now pass to notice some parts of Brother James West's letter already referred to.

1. The sentiment that Brother West's remarks seemed to convey, is that there is no constitutional compact entered into, to bind; No rules of decorum drawn up to govern, messengers from other churches meeting with a church, as in the corresponding meeting described by Brother Chrisman, must constitute a lawless assembly, having no rule, no government.

Let us notice this point. Those who unite in their meetings for correspondence, meet as messengers of churches of Christ, or as brethren of the same faith and order, and with a church assembled as a Church of Christ. Hence the same provisions that the New Testament contains for the orderly conducting of a church in meetings they consider as binding upon them. If their love for the brethren, a respect for their fellowship and feelings, a regard for the honor of the cause of Christ, and a reference for that God, as a God of order, whom they have met together to worship, and of whose dealings they would talk, will not constrain old school Baptists to an orderly department in their meeting together, and to a strict regard to the exhortations of the New Testament in the transactions of their meeting, I apprehend that the chords and bands of humanly written constitutions, and rules of decorum will be but of little avail to do it. And if they are not drawn to meet together by brotherly love and fellowship, I think they might as well stay separate.

I will now mention a little of my experience in the case for if Brother Wesr should see nothing better in it than he did in Brother Chrismas' report invitation of the brotherly love, and sense of the presence of God which pervaded the corresponding meeting with the Bethlehem church, yet others may.

I will notice foremost our old school meetings. We have now held several of them in succession, in which brethren, not only of different churches but from different sections of our have congregated together. And I appeal to those brethren who have attended these meetings the most favorably to constituted associations, to say whether they have ever attended the same number of successive meetings of any kind, were more order, more harmony, more regular attendance to the objects of the meeting, more brotherly love moral the spirit of the gospel was manifested that in these meetings. And yet these meetings have never been constituted into a standing body, nor any written human formulas whether adopted to control their meeting, or govern them when met. Again I have been with churches that have thought it necessary to maintain order in their church meetings, to have a standing set of rules of decorum of their own devising to govern them. I have been with other churches that would esteem the introduction of any such human rules among them for the government of their meetings, to be like Uzzah's unhallowed touch of the ark; and my experience, in this case, compels me to say that this latter class of churches has greatly the preference the other in reference to a real respect to the feelings and fellowship of brethren, and strict regard to the order marked out in the New Testament this is what we might expect, for the introduction of those human rules, is a virtual declaration of a want of confidence, in a New Testament as being a suitable rule of government to a church and in the members, as being capable of being restrained by brotherly love, the fear of God. Hence it is no wonder that the members of such churches should in their church meetings, have respect to no other principles of restraint in their debates, than what their rules of decorum prescribe. There is to be sure a great difference in members and churches and disrespect, many while they have their rules of decorum, are governed by a higher principle in their church transactions. Of our corresponding meetings I will not further speak, after what Brother Chrisman has said, and Brother West's conclusions drawn therefrom; but will return to the 15th of Acts for examples in the case. We have a net chapter 2 assemblages mentioned one with the church at Jerusalem, the other with the church at Antioch, and in each of which meetings there were messengers from the other church. Reward of no human constitution or rules being provided to govern either of these meetings, and yet I can find nothing in the description given of them, that would lead me to consider them lawless assemblages, having no rule, no government.

To conclude, I have said that the idea, that the signing of a temperance pledge is necessary or proper to keep Christians from drunkenness, is a libel upon the religion of Christ. And were I to speak unreservedly my views of the sentiment, in itself considered, that human constitutions, rules, are necessary to constrain brethren to conduct orderly when met together from fellowship and love, and for mutual correspondence in the worship of God. I should pronounce it equally as bad as the other. But I will not say it, for my brethren and companion sake, whom I esteemed, who from long custom, have been so attached to constituted associations, that they cannot think of giving them up. I rather say to such, my brethren, so long as the Lord is pleased to leave you to go on without seeing the inconsistency of keeping up these human guards and bands, and you associate together only to keep up a correspondence among the churches, I wish to bear with that thing, and still to mingle in your meetings. But if you undertake the claim for your associations' authority from the 15th of acts, to assume the apostolic throne, and to sit as judges to decide the difficulties and exercise the discipline of the churches for them, I must drop intercourse with you, as I would with a new school state convention or the like.

I do desire that our southern, and all other brethren who still hold up their associations as advisory councils, would seriously reflect on this subject, and examine it in the light of the New Testament before they go further in the steps of, I will not say what; for I wish not to offend.

Yours in the bonds of the Gospel of Christ,

S. Trott Fairfax CH, Va., September 7, 1838

THE NATURE OF THE ATONEMENT MADE FOR SIN.

Circular Letter: The Corresponding Association of Old School Baptists, held with the church at Mount Pleasant, To her brethren scattered abroad sends greeting.

Dear Brethren: - It is under peculiar and trying circumstances that we address you in this our annual epistle. Peculiar because hitherto we have been permitted to regard all who wear the cognomen of Old School as being partakers of our joys and sorrows and although not particularly connected in our correspondence, we felt that their God was our God, and their Christ our Christ. Trying because, we have seen such a disposition for strife manifested by many, and to set up new and unheard of tests of fellowship, so that instead of feeling assured as formerly that we have the prayers and sympathies of many with whom we have been in habit of associating as brethren, some have withdrawn themselves from us, who, if they read our epistles at all, read them for criticism and not for edification. And why this strife? Or whence these estranged feelings? It is difficult for us to believe that the principles of the religion of Christ or the fruits of the spirit are productive of such results, we must therefore look to a departure from those principles and to the depraved nature of man, to find an origin for such a state of things. We are all doubtless striving for the faith of the gospel, but are we according to the apostles admonition striving together? And not rather about a difference of opinion upon extraneous matters that do not effect the principles of the faith of the gospel? The limits of a circular forbid that we should notice all the points upon which a difference of opinion exists, nor do we think it necessary; but we would call your attention to the Nature of that Atonement or Sacrifice which has been made for Sin. In doing which we will try to divest ourselves of all preconceived opinions and utterly disregarding the views or opinions of others, take the scriptures as the man of our counsel, as the lamp to our feet and the light of our path. Whilst we have but little hope of being able to reconcile conflicting views upon this subject, we pray you brethren to hear us patiently and weigh well the scriptural evidence we bring in support of our views, before you judge us harshly or decide that we are heretics. We are perhaps all agreed that the sacrifice upon which sinners alone can have any hope of acceptance with God, is that of His own Son, this at any rate is the position we occupy, and as we do not intend to advance a single idea unsustained by the scriptures of truth we will before we proceed further, introduce some scripture proof relative to this point.

In Romans 5:10, it is recorded: "We were reconciled to God by the death of His Son." Rom.8:3 - "For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh" and 8:32 - "He that spared not His own Son but delivered Him up for us all." Gal.4:4 - "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son made of a woman, &c. I John 4:9 - "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world that we might live through Him," see 10th verse also. The point being fully established, we next proceed to enquire what constitutes the Son of God? Was it the human nature in which He appeared, the Deity and humanity combined, or was it a real existence as the first born among many brethren. If the human nature alone, then as a matter of course there was no such thing as the Son of God until He was thus curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth, see Psa.139:15. If it be the deity and humanity united, then there was no Son until this union took place. And do the scriptures authorize us to believe that 4000 years of time should roll away and that Abel, Noah, Lot, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Gideon, Barak, Sampson and all the long train of patriarchs and prophets should live and die without any real Redeemer, but such as existed merely in the design and purpose of God. No, but on the contrary we hear Christ declare: "Before Abraham was, I am." We cannot therefore think it was the seed of Abraham which He took upon Him, but rather, He that took the seed of Abraham was the Son of God. This conclusion we find sustained by scriptures both of the old and new testament, not only as being before Abraham, but before all things, and by whom all things consist. When four men were seen walking in the fiery furnace, it was said that the form of the fourth was like the Son of God; and how we ask, could there be a likeness of that which had no existence? In Proverbs 8:23 (where it is generally admitted that the writer, under the name of Wisdom is personating Christ,) it is said -"I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was &c., read to verse 30. Again, in Proverbs 30:4 hear the words of Agur: "Who hath ascended up into heaven or descended? Who hath gathered the wind in His fists? Who hath bound the waters in a garment? Who hath established all the ends of the earth? What is His name, and what is His Son's name, if thou canst tell?" Job exclaims in the depth of affliction as though it were the only comfort he had: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." In John 6:62, Jesus asks, "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where He was before," and also in Eph.4:9 & 10 - "Now that He ascended, what is it but that He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that He might fill all things." In the John 17:5, Jesus asks to be glorified with that glory which He had with the Father before the world was. Therefore it seems clear that in ascending up where He was before. He was going to return to some position that He occupied with the Father, not only before He was born in Bethlehem, but before the world began. Again, if He had no existence prior to His incarnation we are at a loss to know how it was that the saints were blessed and chosen in Him before the foundation of the world. Now brethren we think from these and other considerations we might notice, we are fully warranted in contending for the doctrine, that the Son of God existed before time began, and that therefore neither His humanity, nor deity and humanity united constituted Him such. The essence of sonship we cannot attempt to define any further than to say that He was and is a spiritual head of a spiritual family. But some may be ready to enquire, How long has He existed as such? To which enquiry we can only reply in the language of the same divine authority by which we have established the positions already taken, and we wish it borne in mind that we are not treating of His self existence as Jehovah, but of Him as the only begotten Son. And whilst we acknowledge ourselves utterly unable to trace His existence as such to any point, the scriptures everywhere speak of that existence as posterior to the existence of His Godhead. In Proverbs 8, already referred to, He is represented as having been set up from everlasting. In John 1:1, it is written: "In the beginning was the Word." In Col.1:15, He is said to be the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature; verse 17 - "He is before all things," 18 - "who is the beginning." And in Rev.3:14, He styles Himself - "The Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." And we acknowledge ourselves unable to see any difference in the language last quoted, which are the words of Christ Himself, and an expression found in the Signs of the Times, much caviled at, that "He is the first production of Divine Power."

Nor does it become cavilers to dispute the doctrine that Christ, as the Son of God, is the production of God, until they can show that these scriptures do not mean what they say, and discard the idea that His Sonship consists in His humanity which is to all intents and purposes a creature; for He was made of a woman. He is spoken of frequently as the begotten of God, the sent of God, the messenger of God, and as coming to do not His own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. When He comes He is manifest as the Mighty God, though veiled in humanity, because it pleased the Father that in Him all fulness should dwell, and His humanity no more constituted Him the Son of God than it did God Himself. Then why was He clothed with humanity? Because the children are partakers of flesh and blood, therefore He took part of the same, and we may add, for the same reason that Moses put a veil upon his face when he came down from the top of Sinai. Moses had been upon the mountain and talked with God, and his face in consequence shone with such a glory that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold him. Christ proceeded forth and came from God, yea has His dwelling in the bosom of the Father. If then it was necessary that the mediator of the administration of condemnation should veil his face, how much more that the mediator of the administration of righteousness which exceedeth in glory should veil Himself. This He has done, hence says Paul, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which He has consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, His flesh." Here His flesh is expressly called a veil, and was not therefore that which constituted Him the Christ. He comes at the appointed time and this is the manner of His appearing, clothed with humanity and embodying the whole of Deity. At the appointed time He was delivered up and dies. Forsaken of the Father, insulted by devils, and denied by friends, is yet borne testimony to so strongly by the Father, who hides the sun and rends the rocks, that the amazed centurion cries, "This is the Son of God!"

Now we ask, is not such a sacrifice of infinitely more value than that which is merely human? If the blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God.

"So great, so vast a sacrifice, May well our hopes revive; If God's own Son thus bleeds and dies, The sinner sure may live."

If this brethren be the doctrine of the Bible it should not be withheld because some do not believe it, nor because they refuse to worship this Son of God, though God has said "Let all the angels of God worship Him," and those who would convince us that we are in error must bring some scripture proof rather than to say falsely, that this is Arianism, new things, heresy, idolatry, &c.

This sacrifice we do not regard as being only the substitution of one person or thing for another; but as the sacrifice of the head for the body, which is His church, and the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Nor do we imagine that although the Son of God was delivered up and put to death, that He for one moment ceased to be; but that in Him at His death was fulfilled the word of the Lord by the prophet Isaiah, 54:7,9 - "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee," &c., and that though passing in connection with the body through the vale of terrors, He was the same vital head, and when He arose, it was with His body completely justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Our present meeting has been one of peculiar interest evincing as it has done, how christians can dwell together in unity. We have none of Hagar's mocking children among us, and although a much larger number than usual of our brethren have been together, they seemed to be one of heart and one soul. Our ministering brethren have come to us in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and their preaching has been a full exhibition of the glories of our Redeemer in the full and complete salvation of His elect. We feel thankful to God and those of our sister associations who have thought enough of us to send us their minutes and messengers, and desire to reciprocate their kindness. Our next meeting is appointed to be held with the church at Upper Broad Run, to commence on the Thursday before the second Lord's Day in August 1854, when and where we hope to great you again and enjoy another season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

S.TROTT. 1853.

THE NEW BIRTH.

Brother Beebe: - I received, a short time since, a letter from brother Davis S. Woody, of Missouri, in which he makes the following request:

"Dear Brother: For the satisfaction of some of my dear brethren, who I think do not understand you and brother T.P. Dudley, on the subject of the new birth or regeneration, I would like to have your views on that subject, and what it is that is born again. Dear brother, the reason in particular that I ask your views on this subject is that some of the brethren think that brother Dudley laid down premises which would justify the non-resurrection principle. If you see proper to give your views, I would rather have them through the Signs."

In accordance with brother Woody's wishes, I forward my answer to you for publication in the Signs, if you think it proper to publish it. If you have any objection to doing so as tending to revive controversy, please so enclose this in another envelope, and direct it to brother Woody, Mexico, Osage County, MO. If he gets the answer in manuscript, he can probably show it to such brethren as he pleases.

Brother Woody, in replying to your enquiries, in order, if possible, for me to make my views plain, I wish first, if I can command language to do it, to explain myself on one important point connected therewith. The point is this: that a person, one who exists as an individual being, may have a distinct nature from what he before existed in, superadded to him, so as to be made to exist in that distinct nature, without destroying his former personality, and yet changing his personal relations into conformity to his new nature, or new birth; for since the creation of Adam and Eve, I know of no way in which an individual existence in nature is produced but by a birth. Many brethren seem not only entirely indisposed to admit the correctness of such an idea as the above, but also to allow me and others to believe it. But if the above position, in substance, is not correct, I am ignorant, and must remain so, of the testimony of Scripture concerning both the new birth and the incarnation of Christ; as well as concerning His spiritual headship.

As I understand the Scriptures, the correctness of the position I have above laid down is fully demonstrated in the testimony given concerning the incarnation of Christ.

According to the testimony of Scripture, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" John 1:1. Again in verse 14, it is said, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." And according to Gal.4:4, "God sent forth His Son, made of a woman and made under the law." Now I presume no Old School Baptist will understand by the declaration, John 1:14, that the Word, the Godhead, was changed into flesh, nor by that of Gal.4:4, that the pre-existence of the Son was destroyed, and that He was made the Son of God of the woman. Yet the declaration, "made of a woman and made under the law," is affirmed of the Son, as in the other text, the affirmation is, "The Word was made flesh." What is it then but that a fleshly nature, in which He did not before exist, was superadded to Him personally, as the Word, and as the Son sent forth? Here then my position is fully proved. Christ is made to exist distinctively in a fleshly nature, or as man, in being born of the Virgin, yet this fleshy birth in no sense destroys His personal identity as the Son, or as the Word, but He remains the Son sent forth to serve, and to learn obedience by the things He suffered, is still the Word made flesh, is one with the Father, is God manifest in the flesh, and brings into His servitude under the law, and in the things which He suffered, all the majesty, power, dignity, and even all the fullness of the Godhead. Yet while His original personality is not changed, His personal relation is changed; from being the giver of the law, He now in being made of woman is made under the law, made subject to its demands; and we behold Him in the flesh of a servant under it, a minister of the circumcision, come to minister, and not to be ministered unto. So I understand Christ's existing in the beginning, as the only begotten of the Father, as the production of God, or the beginning of the creation of God, in that life which is the light of men, and which constitutes Him the Head of His church, the life of His people, and their elder brother, to be His existing in that superadded life to His Godhead, and which in no sense destroyed His personal identity as God, but that He remains, whilst thus personally related to, and one with His people, to be the Jehovah, the self-existing God. The reason why some have charged me with being an Arian for holding Christ to exist in this near relation to His people, is that they will not allow, notwithstanding the proof I have presented of the fact, that a distinct nature can be superadded, of God, personally to Himself, without destroying His personal identity as God.

I now come, brother Woody, to give you my views, briefly, on the new birth, as to what it is. Regeneration, as I hold it, is the implanting in an individual, or adding to his mind, that incorruptible seed which Peter speaks of, even the spiritual seed of Abraham, which is Christ, Christ in you, and which is that life that was in the Word, which is the light of men; for Christ is the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world John 1:9. Hence this individual sees his relation and accountability to God and to the law, and sees his sinfulness as he never saw or felt it before, for by the law is the knowledge of sin. He sees this as the natural man cannot see it, for the law is spiritual. And he so sees and knows the reality of these things, that he cannot shake off or drive them from him as he could former impressions, which arose from mere fleshly views, or a natural conscience. The reason of this is, that whilst the implantation of this seed is of God, and of God only, and not through any instrumentalities of men, the seed itself being life and light, quickens the mind and conscience to such a sense of the reality of these things, that the individual feels himself as standing before a heart searching and rein trying God; and in the ultimate view of this, and of the purity of the law, all his goodness and doings are turned to corruption, and he falls helpless at the footstool of mercy, or at the feet of that God against whom he has sinned. Being thus stripped and killed by the law, he is prepared to be married to another, even Christ, or brought to view in his relation to a crucified and risen Jesus.

The new birth I understand to be the being born again of the incorruptible seed by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. Whether by the word of God in this text is understood the essential Word, who is God, or, as is frequently intended by the word of God, that which God directly speaks or communicates to a person, is immaterial, for both ideas are true. For Christ said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live" John 5:25. This person being, as we showed, dead, killed by the law, is now made to hear the voice of the Son of God, the proclamation of pardon and salvation through Christ's atonement. And every child of grace knows that it took something more than the power of man to make him hear; that it came with the power and as the word of God; and he already having Christ or the seed of life in him, he is enabled to receive, believe and rejoice in that word, and feels himself standing in a new relation to God, no longer a condemned and banished one, but a pardoned, justified one; has peace with God, and is enabled to cry Abba, Father; that is, he feels that God is his Father. Thus in the new birth there is a striking correspondence to the natural birth; to each there is a seed implanted, and then a quickening by which life is manifested. And when the natural child is brought to the birth, the sorrows of the woman in travail, the fetus being broke loose from that by which alone it had been hitherto nourished, strongly represents the agonies and the killing by the law belonging to the second birth. But then there is a contrast in the births. In the first birth the child comes into the world in the image of Adam, an alien from God and subject to pain, disease and death, as the fruits of depravity and condemnation. In the second birth, he comes into the kingdom of heaven, where grace reigns through righteousness; has communion with God as a Father through Christ; stands manifested as one with Christ; and having a common interest with all the members of Christ's body, in all that Christ accomplished by redemption, in all the promises of God, and in that inheritance which is reserved for the saints in light.

I now come, brother Woody, to your second point of enquiry, namely: "What it is that is born again?" If by this enquiry, you mean what is the production of the new birth? I answer, the "New man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness" Eph.4:24. This new man I believe to be Christ in you the hope of glory; for Paul said, It was Christ that lived in him. See Col. 1:27 & Gal.2:20. But I presume that your enquiry relates to that which has been the matter of discussion in the Signs formerly. I therefore answer, our Lord said, "Except a man be born again;" and I know not what right I have to suppose He did not mean as He said, did not mean the man. In conformity to this I say, in reference to brother

Woody's being born again, that it is brother Woody himself in his whole person that was born again. And here is the application of the position with which I started, namely: That a distinct nature may be superadded to a person so that he shall actually exist in that new nature, without destroying his former personal identity, or his former existence. This I illustrated in the case of the Word being made flesh. So I understand that a spiritual nature called life has been superadded to brother Woody by the spiritual seed being implanted, and he being brought to the birth, by his being brought to live the life he now lives in the flesh, by the faith of the Son of God, that is, as before God. Yet his individuality is not changed, it is Davis S. Woody, his old man or nature is the same as it was before, his rational powers the same. And yet his personal relations by the new birth are altogether changed. He no longer belongs to Adam's family, but to Christ's; is a living member of Christ's body; is not under the law, but under grace; is not of the world, as Christ is not of the world; is not under condemnation, but in a state of justification; although he feels the workings of depravity in all he does, it is no more he that does it, but sin that dwells in him. He is, in a word, a son of God, and a joint heir with Christ to glory; although he has in the old man all the elements that would constitute him a child of hell if still standing in his relation to Adam and under the law.

In reference to the idea that the principles laid down by brother Dudley favoring the non-resurrection notion, I will say that so far as I have understood brother D., I know of no material difference between his views and mine in relation to the new birth. And the views I have above advanced as to what is born again are the only views, in my estimation, consistent with the idea of the resurrection of the bodies of the saints to glory. For I cannot believe that whatever is not born again of God can ever enter heaven to participate in the glory of Christ. Whilst what ever is born of God through Christ, the only begotten of the Father, must partake with Him in glory. Hence if I believed that only the souls of persons were the subjects of regeneration and the new birth, I must believe that only their souls enter heavenly glory. But believing as I do, that it is the man that is born again; that after the second birth he exists personally in a spiritual life, whilst he retains all that in which he before existed as a natural person, and in which he still exists in his fleshly life, and therefore believing that his whole person was represented by Christ in His atonement, I must believe that in his whole person, soul and body, he must enter glory, as a member of Christ's body, and as a trophy of Christ's redemption and of His conquest over death. And I can see nothing in this sentiment concerning the new birth that can favor the non-resurrection notion.

Thus, my brother, I have tried with plainness to give my views on these points; it is for you to examine the Scriptures for yourself, to judge of their correctness. Yours with kind regards, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 27, 1853.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.21 (1853)

Writings of Elder Samuel Trott pages

404 - 409

THE NEW BIRTH: EXPERIMENTALLY CONSIDERED.

Circular Letter: The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, to the several churches therein represented, send love in the Lord.

Beloved Brethren: - In addressing to you this token of our particular relationship and regard to you, we would call your attention to the subject of the new birth. This doctrine in all by-gone ages has been almost as distinguishing a mark of the Regular Baptists, as is baptism. Although the multitude bearing the name of Baptists have dwindled down the idea of a second birth to a mere wordy phantom, a change which an individual can procure, if not accomplish for himself by his efforts, and others claiming to be Regular or Old School Baptists, have substituted for it, imaginations of the human mind, having no direct resemblance to the idea of a birth, the scripture testimony still is: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." And the necessity for it remains as strong as in past ages, for still it remains true, that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." We do not contemplate entering into, in this letter, an elaborate argument in support of the doctrine of an actual new birth, but would content ourselves with giving you a brief view of what it is, as illustrated in the scriptures. For this end, we beg leave to call your attention to the births of Ishmael and Isaac. Perhaps it may be thought that the birth of Jacob and Esau are similar in their figurative application to the above, but the scriptures do not so represent them. Jacob and Esau are brought to view as illustrating the sovereignty of God in election from among the posterity of Adam. See Rom., chap. 9-12. Hence they were both of the same birth, and therefore alike after the flesh. As their mothers were allegorical of the two covenants, so they represented in their births the children of the two covenants. But the things of the new covenant are spiritual, or things of the spirit of God, and therefore are only known by the spiritual man. (See I Cor.

2:12-15.) Hence Ishmael is said to have been born after the flesh, and Isaac in distinction from him, is said to have been by promise; and the promises of God we know do not run through Adam, but through Christ Jesus. See Gal.4:22,23 & Rom.9:7-9. So that whilst Ishmael represents the natural seed of Abraham, or fleshly birth, Isaac represents the spiritual seed, or the spiritual birth; and Christ is that spiritual seed, and the believer is of the seed of Abraham as he is Christ's. See Gal.3:15 & 29. Not that we do not suppose that Isaac was a fleshly man in his birth; but we believe that his birth had those peculiar characteristics connected with it which made it a fit allegory of the spiritual birth in distinction from the fleshly. Hence in further confirmation of this view, we have taken of the birth's of Isaac and Ishmael. Whilst the scriptures represent the birth of Ishmael as being altogether without faith, being the result of human reasoning or contrivance, and fleshly actings, they represent that in the birth of Isaac all fleshly powers were previously dead, and that it was only through faith that Sarah received strength to conceive seed &c., Heb.11:11, and faith is not a fruit of the flesh, but of the Spirit.

Having thus far, as we think fully established the position that the birth of Isaac was a figure of the spiritual birth, in distinction from the birth of the flesh, we will proceed to illustrate the new birth by it.

1. We will remark that this birth in the figure had its particular seed, that faith was connected with its conception, and therefore points to that incorruptible seed which Peter declares the saints to be born of, by the word of God. I Pet. 1:23. It was the promise of God that secured the birth of Isaac, so it is the word of God or His declared promise, or purpose and grace that secures the spiritual birth of all the elect; and as before noticed, all the promises of God are in Christ Jesus, so the purpose and grace of God which secures the salvation of all who are saved is in Him, excluding all our Adamic powers from any part in accomplishing it. Christ is the substance, the grand whole of all the revelation of God, of all the promises, the grace and purpose of God; as we have Christ we have the promises and grace of God. And He is the life and therefore the embodiment of His church; hence they are saved according to God's purpose and grace given in Him, See II Tim.1:9. We might go on to notice the effect of the conception of this incorruptible seed, how it produces faith in God, quickens the man to a sense of his relations, and accountability to God, of the spirituality and broadness of the law, and of the sin in his acts, thoughts, and nature; of the distress occasioned thereby; of the darkness that covers the whole operation within, hiding all excepting certain external effects from the individual view, so that he is a mystery to himself, and can tell no more why he is thus, than he can tell of the wind whence it cometh or whither it goeth. We might show that whilst the soul is thus guickened to such a deep sense of the law or of sin as being against God, that it still evidently is not changed from a natural to a spiritual soul, and therefore it cannot receive the things of the Spirit, or the things freely given us of God, but entirely looks to the deeds of the law as the way of acceptance with God. But we forbear, and come to the birth. We are told that Sarah bear to Abraham a son at the set time of which God had spoken to him; and that Abraham called the name of his son whom Sarah bear to him, Isaac; also that Sarah said on the occasion. "God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me." And she further said, "Who would have said unto Abraham that Sarah would have given children suck &c." Gen.21:1-7. The name Isaac signifies laughter, as Sarah says, God has made me to laugh. Laughter is an expression of sudden, but transient and light joy. The name Isaac therefore and Sarah's being said to laugh, is strikingly expressive of that joy which is experienced when a person is first born again, or brought by faith to behold the light of the Sun of Righteousness into liberty. It is all joy and excitement at beholding the way of pardon and acceptance with God. But as it is a general, but rather superficial view which the child of grace has at this time of the way of salvation, and not that full understanding which he has afterwards when taught of Christ as the way, his joy is easily and quickly turned again to sorrow and grief, and his light is obscured soon by clouds and darkness. Still with the very first burst of joy, there is a feeling in the individual that it is God and no other that hath made me to laugh. There is also a feeling as with Sarah, that all who hear shall laugh, and he is therefore anxious for the moment to impart the good news to others, some under the idea of publishing it to all, and therefore as having a kind of preaching excitement. As Isaac retained his name of laughter through life, so the believer in his after pilgrimage has his times of this transient excitable joy. (Note: There is much of humility and astonishment connected with this laughing. Who would have said that Sarah should give suck, &c. So says the new born child of grace, who would have thought that ever I should have found pardon, that all my distress which I have suffered on account of my sins should have been but preparing me to know and rejoice in salvation by Christ; that such a vile sinner should have been an object of God's love.) But brethren, let us not stop merely to laugh with Sarah, let us inquire what has transpired to occasion it. It was not that any change had taken place in Ishmael, he had not been transformed to be the son of the free woman, or of Sarah; he remained to be the son of Hagar, and subject to bondage with his mother. But it was that a new and distinct existence had come to light in the family, that Sarah had a son of her own, and that as she was a free woman so her son was free born. As she represented the children, or child of the new covenant; the spiritual man, for there is one spirit, and the Lord (Christ) is that Spirit; and it is Christ in all the saints, their life, and the hope of glory. Thus we have the new birth in a figure before us. That which was born of the flesh, the whole natural man, soul and body, remains fleshly and under bondage, after the new birth as before. It remains subject to notions of legality and bondage, and therefore subject to be continually annoyed with doubts and fears. It remains subject to all that depravity and all those afflictions, and diseases, and that death which was entailed upon man by the transgression of the natural Adam. It is true that in reference to the believer, the whole curse has been removed by the atonement of Christ from all these evils of sin; but they in themselves remain to disturb his peace and hopes, only when faith is in exercise, then he can view and rejoice in the whole as blessings. But there is a new existence, spiritual in its nature, that opens its eyes from the first, not to behold the light of the natural sun, but to delight in the shining of the Sun of Righteousness; not to behold the alternate blaze and thick darkness of Mt. Sinai, but to rejoice in the light of life; not to cry and fret, and to labor and toil for that which is not bread, and which satisfieth not, but to behold and feast upon the rich supply of the bread of life, the bread which came down from heaven ready prepared at his hands. It is true that faith when looking through the natural senses as it sometimes does, takes a view of natural things; but instead of seeing the curse written upon them, views engraven on all, from the blaze of the sun to the glimmering of the glow- worm, the glorious truth, that God is love. But it is not by the fleshly senses that this spiritual child, this new man sees or judges of anything, it is by faith; faith is to it what the senses are to the natural man. Hence when faith is not in exercise and we look at, and attempt to judge of things by our senses and the faculties of our souls, much of clouds and darkness obscure our vision, and much that appears threatening and injurious hovers over us. But all that faith looks upon is light and peace, with no darkness to obscure, nor any threatenings to create fear; that which is most gloomy to sense, is light to faith. It beholds God in all, and God as He is manifested in Christ Jesus.

Hence as the two, the Ishmael and the Isaac in the believer, are so different in their birth, look at and judge of things so differently, and are so different in their pursuits; the one being earthy and clinging to earthly things, the other being heavenly and soaring towards heaven, and that which is heavenly, it is no wonder that there is a continued warfare going on in the breast of the believer; making him feel that whilst he would fly heavenward, he is still confined to the earth, that when he would do good, he is full of evil. But leaving this point with much that might be said on it, we pass in the next place to notice the weaning time, and the events connected with it. We are told that the child grew and was weaned; and Abraham made a great feast the same day that Isaac was weaned. Also that "Sarah saw the son of Hagar mocking," and she said to Abraham, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son, &c." Gen.21:5-12. Milk is a light food prepared in the order of nature to suit the tender stomach of the young infant. It is sought after by the infant as a balm for all its little ills and griefs. But it is necessary for the relief of the mother, that she may obey the mandate of God, to be fruitful and multiply, and that her children may be proper and healthy; as well as for the child, that it should be fitted to fill its station in the world, that it should be weaned from the breast and learn to live on stronger food. So for the spiritual Isaac's, the children of God; they at first live on such food only as they look to their mother - the church for, that which has a good deal of animal sympathy, and creaturely doing in it. They look to their frames and feelings and to the discharge of what they call duty, for their nourishment and growth as well as for the healing of their woes. This is all light food, it is momentary in its effects, it may occasion them to laugh, but there is nothing solid like the feast we have to speak of. They are continually changing either up or down. Hence the importance of being weaned from the breast and of being fed with meat. But some even in the apostles' days did not get weaned. Paul complains of the Corinthians that he had fed them with milk and not with meat, for hitherto they were not able to bear it; and adds, "neither yet are ye now able." This he says to show that they were yet carnal, and that he could not speak to them as spiritual, but as carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I Cor. 3:1-3. In like manner he complains of the Hebrews, that instead of being teachers, they needed to be taught first principles, to be fed with milk; and adds, "For every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe." Heb.5:12-14. It would appear that many also among us are in the same condition, not weaned from the breast.

Hence, the cry for what they call practical preaching, and the fondness for hearing and reading of first experiences to the exclusion of doctrine, &c. It would seem that the complaint against Ephraim, that "he is an unwise son, for he should not stay long in the breaking forth of children," applied to them.

(See Hosea 13:13., with the words in italics omitted.) As for the mother, so for the churches, it is necessary if they would have proper and healthy children, and have them grow up to a vigorous manhood, to see that they are weaned from milk, and fed through the ministry with sound doctrine, such as the scriptures and the whole experiences of the children of God correspond with. Isaiah asks: "Whom shall He teach knowledge? and whom shall He make to understand doctrine?" And he himself answers the inquiries thus: "Them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts." Isa.25:9. The enquiry is, not whom shall men, but whom shall He, that is, the Lord, mentioned in verse 5. So that according to this scripture the Lord leaves them who hang on to the breast, to continue in a puny state.

But when are they weaned? The natural child as was Isaac is generally weaned at a certain period; not so with the spiritual Isaacs, with them there is no fixed time. They have to do, not with time, but with spiritual things. Some begin their weaning and feasting on doctrine almost as soon as they are born, whilst all have more or less of the weaning process to experience through life. How about the feast? At feasts it is usual to have a rich supply of choice provisions, accompanied with wine. Such is the doctrine of Christ. It is true persons may speculate on this doctrine, and may discuss and argue it in a carnal spirit, and produce only coldness. But when any one is led to seek of God - His teachings in the revelation He has made of Himself in Christ Jesus, and enabled by faith to receive any part of that glorious truth, he finds in it a feast of fat things. How can it be otherwise? There is not only the fullness of Christ's atonement, the purpose and grace of God in Christ Jesus, but God in all His attributes, as He could not be known in all the works of creation and providence, couched in it. Hence, even the angels desire to look into these things. And the love of God, as wine on the lees well refined, flows through the whole of it, to cheer, to invigorate and to strengthen the child of grace to bear all the fatigues and trials of the way, and to support him under them. As he is led to feast on this glorious doctrine, he is weaned from the light food of frames, excitements, and creaturely discharge of duties. Not only this, but also as he is thus weaned from creaturely dependencies, he with Sarah sees the son of the bond-woman, the fleshly nature mocking. He sees how it has mocked him, disappointing him in all his fleshly expectations for solid, lasting comfort, and spiritual enjoyment, how much soever they may have made him laugh at the time; and even when the rich feast of gospel grace is spread before him, the flesh mocks him, by suggesting to him that those consolations are not for him; that he, a poor sinful wretch as he is, can have no claim to those consolations, that it would be presumptuous for him to trust in the absolute promises of God, unless he could find something in himself more worthy of God's favor, and the like. But God has confirmed the declaration of Sarah, "Cast out this bond-woman and her son; for the son of this bond- woman shall not be heir with my son, with Isaac." Not only is it decreed that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, but also we find that whenever we are led to God for consolations we have to cast out everything fleshly, in feelings and in action, and to depend alone on the mercy of God in Christ for acceptance, and we receive the blessings as coming alone through that channel.

Brethren, we have thus given you what we understand to be some of the outlines of the new birth, and of its effects as illustrated in the birth of Isaac. In conclusion let us say, brethren, that in this season of commotions, religious and political, separate and combined, shaking the heavens and the earth of the mere human mind, we need some stronger food to support and steady us than we can draw from excited feelings, human reasonings, or even acts of obedience. May we follow the example of David. He says, "Surely, I have behaved and quieted myself as a child that is weaned of its mother. My soul is even as a weaned child." How this is, he shows by saying, "Let Israel hope in the Lord from henceforth and forever." Psa.131:2, 3. Again we find him quieting himself thus: "Why art thou Psa.131:2, 3. Again we find him quieting himself thus: "Why art thou cast down O my soul?

And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him who is the health of my countenance and my God." Psa.42:11. Brethren, farewell.

S.TROTT. Moderator, 1855.

NOT A NOVICE &c.

Brother Beebe: - I see by Signs for Dec.15, 1845, that brother Mitchell of Alabama requests my views of 1 Timothy 3:6 – "Not a novice; lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil." I have never had any special light on this text; my views must, therefore, be such as arise from a comparison of this with other Scriptures according to my understanding of them. Sickness in my family, with my being much from home, prevented for a time my attending to this request.

The subject of which the Apostle is here treating, as seen by the context, is that of the qualifications which he mentions is that of being a novice, and the reason for its being such is assigned in the text proposed for consideration. A novice, properly signifies, one new-made a disciple, or new-born into the gospel faith. Such persons have not experienced enough of the warfare within, nor of the wiles of the devil, to serve as a proper ballast and to prevent them, if too much prompted and flattered in the church, from becoming inflated and top-heavy.

But Brother Mitchell more particularly inquires about falling into the condemnation of the devil. 1st. What is intended by the condemnation of the devil? I presume no one will seriously entertain the idea that condemnation here, as referring to the devil, is to be taken in an active sense; that is, the devil sitting as judge will condemn him for being lifted up with pride. Neither do I think it will be supposed that the devil will comparatively condemn him as being worse than himself; as our Lord said the Ninevites should condemn that generation Luke 11:32. How else, then, can we understand this than in a passive sense; that is, as the condemnation into which the devil is fallen, or to which he is adjudged?

This, therefore necessarily involves in it the idea that the devil, like Adam and his posterity, is under condemnation; hence also it involves the idea that the devil was originally under the law, and therefore a creature of God.

Again, the Apostle speaks of this condemnation of the devil as a something known. He may have referred to some particular sentence of condemnation passed upon the devil and handed down by tradition, and now first confirmed by the spirit of inspiration in Paul; as was the case about Michael and the Devil's disputing about the body of Moses, as recorded by Jude, verse 9. But, I am inclined to the belief that this relates to the state of the devil as understood among the disciples, and as referred to in a different form in other portions of Scripture. Thus Jude refers to the angels which kept not their first estate, as being reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, &c.

I, with some others, understand these angels to be those evil spirits called devils. So our Lord spake of the Devil not as having never been in any other state; but, as having not abode in the truth as though that was the first estate in which he was created. And why? Because, there is no truth in him; Christ, or the Truth, having been no more implanted in him by the Spirit, than he was in Adam in his first creation.

Christ says further of him, "When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own; for he is a liar and the father of it" John 8:44. Such appears manifestly to be the condemnation into which multitudes of young upstarts have fallen, having been lifted up with pride and self-conceit; their minds evidently being chained down under darkness as to the truth revealed in the Scriptures and are retailers, if not manufactures, of false systems of religion, or lies. And even there are persons whom some of us have known, who, when they first commenced preaching, appeared to know something of the truth experimentally, but being much flattered and caressed, began to go off into the popular current; and now their minds seem entirely dark as to the authority and import of God's revelation, and are the strenuous advocates for what we understand to be doctrines of devils, or false doctrines, of which the devil is the father.

Now, in my opinion, these have fallen into the condemnation of the devil; how long they will remain there is not for me to say. Such, therefore, I give as my opinion of this text in connection with those others; and I give it only as my opinion, though the text (I Tim.4:1 & 2), "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the last times shall depart from the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the last times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy," &c., I think tends to confirm the correctness of this opinion. When they depart from the faith they give heed to seducing spirits, as in themselves or in others, and to the doctrines of devils, and, of course, they fall into the same condemnation, under darkness and falsehood.

My brother, if we have been kept from this condemnation, may the same grace continue thus to keep us. Yours, &c.,

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Feb.13, 1846.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 14 (1846)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 330 - 332

On Faith.

Brother Beebe: - I thought my pen was nearly laid by, excepting for private correspondence. I had concluded the readers of the Signs were tired of discussions; and nothing of a different class seemed to present itself to my mind. But brother Johnson's request through the Signs for my views of Heb.11:1, affords an occasion for again writing, which I readily embrace. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Heb.11:1

The Apostle having in the preceding part of this epistle drawn a comparison and a contrast between the carnal things of the earthly or typical dispensation, and the spiritual things of the anti-typical or heavenly dispensation, comes in this 11th chapter to describe that faith by which these spiritual things are known and received in distinction from our natural faculties, by which those carnal ceremonies were apprehended. He commences his description of faith with the position laid down in our text, and then illustrates it by showing its power as exemplified in the experience of the ancient worthies.

Whether we consider the faith here described, in its special relation to the spiritual things of the gospel, as contrasted with the carnal ceremonies of the law, or as exemplified in the experience of the patriarchs, or in the position laid down in the text before us, we must in either case arrive at the conclusion that, it is a spiritual exercise, and as distinct from natural belief, as are the spiritual truths of the gospel from the external ordinances of the law. The requisitions of the law upon national Israel as such, consisting only in the letter, could be taught by parents to their children, and were required so to be taught; and therefore could be understood by their natural faculties, and be believed as their natural judgments were enlightened. But the knowledge of the truths of the gospel in their spirituality, is not imparted by, nor received from human instruction. Even after all the oral instruction which Christ had given His disciples while in the flesh, He had, after His resurrection, to open their understanding that they might understand the scriptures; that is, in their application to Him. Luke 24:45. And before this, when Peter declared his faith in Christ as the Son of God; Jesus said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Barjonah, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven; thus showing this knowledge of Jesus, was not science, but direct revelation from the Father. Hence Paul says, "No man can say Jesus is Lord but by the Holy Ghost." I Cor.12:3. See also Paul's own experience in the case. Gal.1:11,12. But why multiply proofs on this point? For after all that men may do, in their attempts to carnalize the gospel so as to make it a subject for human instruction, the testimony of God will stand sure, that, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God," and that, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the things of the kingdom of God." I Cor.2:14 & John 3:3.

But to the Apostle's position: Faith is the substance of things hoped for, &c. What are the things hoped for? They are the perfect deliverance from sin &c., which is promised to the saints. Or they may be any particular instance of a promise, applied to us, like the special promise which God made to Abraham. Gen. 15:5, 6. There are many things which we at times hope for, which have no substance but in our imaginations, for God has never promised them to us, and consequently, with such, faith hath nothing to do. Faith is the substance of those things hoped for, that is, with a true gospel hope. The word here translated substance is different from the word so rendered in the tenth chapter and 34th verse. The lexicons give an explanation to this word evidently with reference to its use here, as meaning to be present to the mind; that is, to be seen or felt by the mind, as natural substances are seen or felt by the outward senses. It seems explained as by contrast, by chapter 10:1 - "The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things," &c. That is, the legal ceremonies could only present a shadow of spiritual things, and therefore left the comers thereunto without an actual sense of their sins being cleared away as before God; or as the Apostle says, could not make them perfect. It is true, faith, in those who had it, gave them the assurance that there was a substance thus shadowed forth, and therefore gave them hope of acceptance with God. Now, instead of this shadowy, imperfect view, faith under the gospel, presents to the believer the salvation of sinners, as finished in Christ Jesus, and also, all the promises of God as flowing through Him, and as being in Him yea, and Amen.

Thus through faith the believer rests in this salvation, and these promises as solid substances. Again, the Apostle describes this faith by another mode of expression, namely as: The evidence of things not seen. Things hoped for, are things not seen, for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for? Rom.8:24. These are things spiritual and not apprehended by the natural senses; but faith being the substance of them, is the evidence of their reality to the mind; and it is also the evidence of our enjoying them, as it apprehends and gives us the assurance of the faithfulness of God, in bestowing what He has promised in Christ. So clear and decisive, is the evidence of faith in such cases, that wherein it is in exercise all doubt is removed.

Now the faith that can do this, that can present unseen things to the mind, and constrain the mind to rest upon them as present realities, must be a living principle, and possess a power independent of anything belonging to the natural mind. It is very different from that belief which is an exercise of the natural mind, and which is produced by instruction, or external evidence, acting upon the mind and convincing the judgment of the truth of the thing. Hereby we may be assisted in drawing the distinction between the living and dead faith, in their essences, which James speaks of. (James chapter 2). That the dead faith, cannot be the faith which is of the operation of God, I think every child of grace will admit. Of course, it can be nothing more than an exercise of the natural mind. The living faith has, as already noticed, a controlling power over the mind, bringing it with all its powers into submission, to the will of God; but natural belief being but an exercise of the mind, produced by the exercise of other faculties of the mind, has of course no necessary control over the mind; though it may influence the mind to determine on action. Thus two persons may each be led by conclusive evidence, to believe that he has an estate left him in England; the one may be influenced by his belief to take measures to obtain his, whilst the other, from other considerations, may altogether neglect his. What is commonly called belief, that is, of the natural mind, is of two kinds. One is a mere passive assent to the truth of a thing. It is a belief arising from education, or produced by the declarations of others, without their ever investigating the subject, or judging for themselves. This has no claim to the name of faith; yet a little examination will convince any one, that on the subject of religion, this is all the faith which the greater production of professors have claim to; they being in their religious characters either the mere creatures of education, or the dupes of artful priests.

Again, there are others, who are accustomed to investigating subjects for themselves; and who have thus investigated the subject of religion, and what they believe concerning it, they believe because according to the light they have, or use, their judgments are convinced of the truth of it. This is often mistaken for true gospel faith, and yet it is only a belief produced by the exercise of the rational faculties. This was the faith with which Simon believed, from seeing the miracles performed by Philip, (Acts 8:5-13,) and with which many believed, from seeing the miracles of Christ. This is the faith which the Campbellites claim as the gospel faith; though many of those they baptize evidently have nothing more than the passive belief before described. This rational faith may influence to many things called religious works. Yea, it may influence to a regular attention to the outward performances enjoined upon believers by the New Testament; such as a submission to the ordinances, and order of the gospel. It may lead to a bestowing of their goods to feed the poor, and to meet persecution, and a giving of their bodies to be burned. I Cor.13:3. Or a person may have this faith, and yet not be influenced by it in his life, or to any act of religious obedience, or separation from the world. But whatever effect it may have upon the outward life, it is still nothing but a dead faith. It has no spiritual life, and therefore produces no spiritual action, nor makes any true application of the consolations of the gospel. It is an exercise of the powers of the natural man, and, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." I Cor. 2:14. It knows nothing of resting, with the depravity and vileness of our hearts in view, upon Christ for full salvation. It knows nothing of a going out of heart in love to a poor sinner, because he has such a discovery of the awful depravity of his heart as to have lost all confidence in his own exertions, nor because it discovers that his hope is fixed alone on Christ for salvation. It may produce a love to sinners because it discovers them engaged on the subject of religion, or because it sees them conforming in doctrine and practice to particular views of religion. It knows not the sealing of the Spirit of God, whereby believers are sealed with the spirit of adoption, and are led to approach God with that confidence with which a child approaches its parent.

Neither does it know anything of resting upon the promises of God, excepting as we can discover some supposed ground in us, or outwardly, why we should hope for the thing promised. The child of grace, though probably he is at no time without some traces of the actings of a living faith in Him, yet has much of this dead faith blended in his exercises, and which he often mistakes for the only faith he has; and finding it to want that power which in the New Testament is ascribed to true faith, he at times, concludes that he has been altogether deceived in himself. In most cases, the child of grace has this dead faith to a much fuller extent, than any unregenerated person can have it; from his being led through the teachings of the Holy Spirit, to a fuller and more intimate acquaintance with the truths of divine revelation. Hence it is that we frequently find the child of grace under disappointments, and afflictions of various kinds, complaining of a want of submission and reconciliation of mind to God's dealings with them.

Tell them, God is doing it in wisdom, and love, they will reply, "We believe it, and know we ought to be submissive, but we cannot bring our stubborn minds to it;" which shows this belief to be but a dead faith. Were the Holy Spirit to bring their living faith into exercise, in relation to this dispensation of God toward them, it would present to their minds such a feeling sense of the goodness of God, as revealed to it, that their minds would be brought at once, into patient and cheerful submission to His will.

Again, our minds are frequently led to contemplate some particular promise, we see how appropriate it is to our case, and we have heretofore been enabled by a living faith so to apprehend Christ Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness, and as the medium of gracious communications between God and poor, vile sinners like ourselves, that we believe, unworthy as we are, that we may hope for an interest in it, and do believe that it will be verified, and yet this belief does not enable us to exercise that comfortable reliance on it, and that patient waiting for it, which we desire. Now if the Holy Spirit were to lead us to exercise faith in reference to that promise, or in other words, were He to apply the promise with power to us, we should receive it at once as the word of the living God, and all the powers of our mind would be made to rejoice in it as ours, and to admire the goodness of God in it, and to realize in sweet anticipation, the gracious fulfillment of it.

Thus brethren, I think, by a little attention to their experience, may readily trace, in this case, and in reference to the preached word, and to the various dealings of God with them, a manifest distinction between these two kinds of faith, as exemplified in them. Many of the children of God, at this day, I have no doubt, go for years, without any special exercise of this living faith; other than in its exercise towards the one great object which is necessary to their being known as believers, namely: its exercise in apprehending the blood and righteousness of Christ, as our plea at the throne of grace, and the ground of our hope of acceptance with God. But the inquiry may further be made, Whence is this living faith, and how is it brought into exercise? It is a spiritual exercise, as before shown, and can therefore be the actings only of the spiritual life of the believer.

This life, although implanted in the soul, is not subject to the control of the natural mind, and therefore cannot be called into exercise at our will. As its being brought into existence in the soul is not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of men, but of God, it is the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, who alone controls its action, in faith. It is itself love to God, and to holiness, and therefore from its indwelling in us, we are made to feel a going out of love to God, to His ways, and to His people, and a corresponding loathing of sin and ourselves on account of it. But the Holy Ghost, who knoweth the will of God, knoweth when to call forth the exercises of faith to apprehend Christ as our salvation, and when to lay hold of any special promise, or any unfoldings of the Scriptures; and when, through our faith, to make intercession for us in prayer, according to the will of God, and He only knows, and therefore has never left the exercise of our faith, to the control of our wills. Or perhaps a more correct illustration of this point, is this: Faith must have an object to be believed, set before it. The word of God is the proper object of faith.

And by the word of God, I do not understand the scriptures, as such, although they are the proper standard by which to know what is the word of God; but I mean by it, the special application of some portion of scripture to us as a promise, a command, a consolation, or as instruction in doctrine or practice, so that we receive it as the word of God, entering our hearts with power. Now as the scriptures are thus applied by the Holy Spirit, faith is called forth and we believe. Thus when the revelation of Christ Jesus is made to the regenerated person, then he believes, and cannot before.

Again, by the illustration which the Apostle gives of this faith in the following part of the chapter, it is evident its exercise is what we call grace, when he says, "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness," &c. verses 33 & 34. We in similar cases, would say, the grace of God enabled them to do it, and we should say right, and yet it was through being enabled to exercise faith in God, and in His word, that they were strengthened to endure that to which they were called. Now as the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God, (I Cor.2:10,) He as the Comforter knoweth when the exercise of faith is needed, and in such cases in faithfulness brings it into exercise, and not otherwise. Hence the early disciples who were called to meet persecution, were full of faith. Most of believers when called to depart have faith given them as a shield in the conflict with death. And how often do we see those christians who are much afflicted manifest stronger and clearer faith than others, not so called to suffer. And thus when it is the pleasure of God to bestow some special blessing upon any of His children, He gives them to ask for it in faith frequently, and when we so ask we have the assurance of His hearing us, and therefore of receiving what we ask. See I John 5:14,15. If the Lord is withholding from many of His children, at this day, those special exercises of faith, which to us would be desirable, it is in chastisement, or because in His present dispensation towards His church, He sees it not required.

Though really it would seem to us that we have need with the Apostles to pray: "Lord, increase our faith." Luke 17:5.

I fear I have not done full justice to this subject. I have advanced some ideas which may appear new. But experienced christians will know whether they accord with christian experience or not. If they do not, reject them. I have been led sometimes, since I commenced writing this, to doubt whether I know anything as I ought to know. Not whether I know anything, but whether I have that clear knowledge of it, which I ought to have; and this from the little experience we have of those special acts of living faith. Yours in a hope of salvation, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Feb. 13, 1845.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol 13 (1845)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 316 - 323

ON THE ATONEMENT.

Brother Beebe: - The third and last subject which has been proposed for me to give my views on is the Atonement. This is of itself a copious subject: it will, therefore, readily be expected that I shall be rather lengthy on it; and I may as well at once divide it into chapters to relieve in some measure its tediousness.

Chapter 1

Atonement, what it is, and its inseparable connection with redemption, as taught in the Scriptures.

I would here premise that the atonement made by Christ is shorn of much of its glory by being represented as a provision entirely distinct from redemption, or if redemption is spoken of in connection with it, there is no more extended idea given to it than what is contained in atonement or forgiveness of sin. This is a convenient way of representing the subject for those who will have the redeemed still retained under the law, or subject to conditions as grounds of their acceptance with God. But it is rather a matter of surprise that persons who contend for the scriptural doctrine of redemption have so frequently suffered themselves to be dragged into an argument on the subject of atonement alone. It is true there is a distinction of idea conveyed by each term, and the two are mostly represented by distinct figures in the Old Testament; but that evidently arises from a deficiency in the types fully to represent the perfection of Christ's offering.

We will, in the first place, notice the distinct idea conveyed by each in their use in the Scriptures. First, Atonement: This word is found but once in our translation of the New Testament, though the same idea is abundantly taught therein. This instance is in Rom. 5:11. The word in the original is derived from the verb which in verse 10 is translated reconciled, and this word is in other passages rendered reconciliation, and such is evidently its import; that is, as representing a restoration of peace where wrath had before existed; of course, it has particular reference to God's wrath as manifested in the law. In the Old Testament, particularly in the law, we repeatedly find the word atonement. As in Lev.4, 5 and 16. It is there used to denote a covering over of sin by sacrifice, so that the sinner is freed from the penalty, or is forgiven of his sins, whilst the law in its penal requisition, is honored and hence there is reconciliation for his sins, and the sinner is reinstated in the favor of the law; so says the Psalmist: "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered" (32:1). But this, as by verse 2, is spoken more in reference to Christ's atonement; see Rom.4:6. Atonement, thus in type as under the law, falls far short of representing the redemption and atonement as accomplished by Christ's blood, for though it represented a clearing away or covering over transgressions as past, it left the Israelite still subject to the law, and liable to its curse, in case of future transgression. And so I cannot see how atonement or reconciliation alone, even by Christ's blood, if that was all that was accomplished, could have secured any from future condemnation as it would leave them still subject to the demands and bondage of the law, unless there were ability secured to those whose sins were forgiven, to obey fully the law in future. The apostle notices the insufficiency of the legal sacrifices to make the comers thereunto perfectHeb. 10:1. Hence, because typical expiation of sin could not represent the redemption accomplished by Christ's blood in the sacrifice He offered for sin, there were distinct types appointed representing His redemption. This leads us secondly to notice the idea embraced in the term redemption as used in the Scriptures. 1st, we find it declared that the Lord redeemed Israel out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh. &c. Deut.7:8, and in many other places this deliverance of Israel from Egypt is represented as a redemption. And this was clearly typical of the redemption of spiritual Israel. This was nothing less than an entire breaking of Pharaoh's yoke from off their necks and bringing them out of the house of bondage and into the promised land, and giving them a standing there as an independent nation, and as the people of God. Surely this is more than a mere expiation for sin; leaving His people still subject to the law. Again, God claimed specially all the first born of Israel being males, of man and of beast, as His, in consequence of His sparing Israel on the night He smote the firstborn of Egypt. The first-born of man and of the ass He required to be redeemed Ex. 13:11-16, & 34:20. By this redemption they were freed forever from that special demand, and were placed in similar circumstances with other Israelites. Here, then, we have another figure of redemption by which complete deliverance is accomplished. In the case of the Israelite who had waxed poor, and his inheritance or himself had been sold for debt; we have another illustration of gospel redemption. The redeemer must be one of his kin; and being redeemed, he is completely released from bondage and from all claims of his old master; and so of the inheritance. See Lev.25:23-25, also from verse 47 to 55. It is true this Israelite might wax poor again and be again sold into servitude; the type could not prevent that. But the claim of the original creditor was in the redemption fully consulted, and this is what we contend is implied in redemption. I will now give one instance from the New Testament showing that the redemption by Christ fully meets these types, accomplishing a complete release from the bondage of the law Gal.4: 1-7. The expression in verse 5, "To redeem them that were under the law;" has been somewhat involved in obscurity by the different constructions put upon it. Some have supposed it had reference only to the Jewish disciples as having been under the law of Moses, and some one thing, and some another. This shows the necessity of attending to the connection, or the design of the apostle's argument. He was writing to the churches of Galatia, and, of course, to Gentiles, as is also evident in his warning them against being circumcised. His object appears to be to guard them against the errors of judaizing teachers, and of being involved in their minds in bondage under the law by being circumcised.

In the 3rd chapter he shows that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek; that if they were Christ's, then were they Abraham's seed. He then goes on in this chapter to show, that according to the Roman law which held minors in the same bondage to their fathers, and gave the father the same right to sell them as though they were children of slaves, it required the going through a form of redemption or emancipation to give them the standing of citizens. Both forms were before they could be acknowledged by adoption the successors to the rights and estate of other persons, that they when children. Previous to their manifestations as citizens, and as having right to the privileges of the gospel kingdom, they were in bondage under the elements of the world. And what were these elements but law as established in creation both upon matter and mind, varying according to the nature of each? Hence the necessity of being redeemed from under this bondage to the law before they could receive the adoption of sons. The extent and limitation of the redemption is found, not in being under the law, for according to the figure, the servants as contrasted with the heirs, were in the same bondage, that is, under the law; but in being predestinated sons or heirs. Now the redemption of the servant, though it would free him from bondage, would not of itself entitle him to be accounted a son and heir of his redeemer; as in this case, it was not their being redeemed that entitled them to the adoption of sons; but it was because they were sons, that the spirit of God's Son was communicated to them. But as shown, it was necessary that they should be redeemed from the bondage under the law; otherwise to bar them from the privileges and liberty of sons. The redemption, therefore, must be a complete and final redemption from the bondage of the law, and from its demands. So Paul says, verse 7th: "Wherefore thou art no more a servant but a son, &c." And this is the redemption represented as accomplished by Christ in being made of a woman and made under the law, and is therefore gospel redemption.

We pass to our second general head, which is to show the intimate connection there is between, or rather the oneness of redemption and atonement, as accomplished by our Lord. Both must go together in order to bring the children of God into the comfortable enjoyment of the relation of sons.

Atonement or expiation for sins alone would, as showed, leave them in bondage under the law; and redemption, that is, complete deliverance from the law without expiation for their sins, never could satisfy those who have been truly convinced of the evil of sin, nor give them confidence in approaching a holy God.

The idea has long been entertained by many and advanced in books, &c., that redemption from the law, as requiring perfect obedience, was distinct from atonement in that the one was by Christ's obedience to the preceptive requisition of the law, and the other was by His death as enduring its penalty; the one has been called His active, and the other His passive obedience. So of justification in distinction from pardon, which are but the results of redemption and atonement. This has heretofore been my view of the subject, and which I am now convinced I derived from tradition, that is from my early religious intercourse with men and books; and having not been particularly led to doubt its correctness, and I have held on to it; and when I have been led particularly to notice texts which did not read in accordance with those views, I have had the awful presumption to suppose it necessary to add something explanatory of that which is divinely perfect, as the revelation of God. Being now convinced of my error in this thing, I think it proper to confess and abandon it. It may be proper to assign some reasons for my present different view of this subject. I will, therefore, try to present my proofs of the oneness of atonement and redemption, as considered in the work of Christ, so as to meet both cases. 1st, then, I will say, I have no doubt that Christ Jesus, in His manhood and life, was perfectly conformed to the law, loving God and his neighbor as it required. This was essential to His being holy, harmless and undefiled in His manhood and necessary to His being a suitable offering for sin. But I much doubt whether this could have been accepted by the law as a redemption price from the obligations His people were under to obey it. The original obligation man was under in his creation, to love God with all of his heart, &c., and to love his neighbor as himself, would have been perpetual had he continued in his state of uprightness, and one act in opposition would have incurred the penalty. Could the law have accepted any extra obedience as a redemption price for man's being released from his obligation thus to love God and his neighbor? I think not. At any rate, I have never seen any intimation in the Scriptures that man ever would or could have been redeemed from the obligation he was under to the law had he not first incurred the penalty. If preceptive obedience by another could not have been a redemption price for man, then I see not how it could enter into his redemption price now. 2nd. The penalty for transgression was death, and this eternal in its duration as borne by the creature. This being inflicted and borne, could the law demand anything more?

Would not this, therefore, be an end to all its demands? If then the law looked to Christ as the Head, Husband and Surety of His people for satisfaction for their transgressions, and He could and did, in a limited period of time, bear the full weight of the curse or penalty thus due, would it not equally be an end to its demands on Him and them, and therefore a redemption from it? Paul certainly took this view of this subject, when (Rom.7:6) he compared the relation between man and the law, to the relation of husband and wife. Could a man love and cherish his wife so faithfully for a given period, or could anybody else for him, as to release him from any further obligation to her as his wife, both still living? No. But let death take place in reference to either party, and the relation and obligation is at once dissolved. It is then death, and not life, that dissolves the relation between man and the law, or redemption from it.

- 3rd. The Scriptures no where ascribe the redemption of Christ's people to His life or obedience to the precepts of the law; but repeatedly and directly do they ascribe it to His blood or death. See Eph. 1:7 & Col. 1:14: "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins. Here, not only is redemption spoken of as through His blood, but forgiveness of sins, or atonement is represented as one and the same with it. Thus also justification is spoken of as being through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:24), and is said to be by His blood (Rom.5:9). Peter also ascribes redemption to the blood of Christ, as of a lamb, &c. I Peter 1:18,19. So the elders, Rev.5:9, in their song to the Lamb, sing, "For Thou wast slain and has redeemed us unto God by Thy blood, &c."
- 4th. Not Christ living under the law, but Christ crucified, is the theme of gospel preaching. "We preach Christ crucified," &c. I Cor. 1:23. "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified" I Cor.2:2.
- 5th. But some may object to this view, on account of Christ's being revealed as our righteousness, &c., supposing that this must be by His conformity to the law in living under it. But, I would ask, is there not as much righteousness in the penal as in the preceptive requisitions of God's perfect law? I think there is. How is it that we were made the righteousness of God in Christ, but by His being made sin or a sin offering for us? See II Cor. 5:21. And how was He raised for our justification, but by being first delivered for our offenses? See Rom.4:25. Examine also Rom. 3:21-26, and see if the righteousness of God, there spoken of, is not declared through Christ's being set forth to be a propitiation, &c. If these things be so, the redemption accomplished by Christ for His people is nothing other than the perfection of His atonement. As is said, Heb. 10:14, as contrasted with the deficiency of the atoning sacrifices under the law, that "by one offering He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." And; "We are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all." See verse 10, same chapter. If then we are perfected by the one offering by which we are sanctified or cleansed from sin, I think the atonement and redemption in the work of Christ, and in reference to the price of redemption, is one; and that perfecting us, we need nothing further on that score. As to the carrying out of this redemption in the complete salvation or deliverance of His people, that is by His life at the right hand of God. See Rom.5:10.

There is one objection more I ought to meet: that is, an objection to publishing this in the Signs. For I shall probably be considered, by some of the readers, as treading on their toes. I can only say, in obviation of it, that I will promise not to reply to anything it may draw forth, leaving what I have written to stand by itself, unless the remarks may be written in that candor which shall evince a simple regard to truth, and shall call for something from me in the same spirit. Here I close chapter 1st.

Chapter II

The particularity of the Atonement, as shown by the Old Testament Types.

As Atonement and Redemption are set forth in the Scriptures, as so intimately connected, and one in substance, in the offering of Christ, one would think that no reflecting person could entertain the idea that atonement was any other than for particular designated persons. It is absurdity itself to talk of a redemption price being paid, and that for no specific object; no designated persons, or persons not designed to be redeemed. Yet the ideas of indefinite atonement, or atonement for sin, general atonement, and universal atonement, are so prevalent, and that among the learned and wise of the world, that even the minds of honest enquirers after truth are frequently so difficultied therewith, that there is propriety in presenting for their consideration the testimony of Scripture on this head.

I propose, in this chapter, to bring forward some of the types of the Old Testament in proof of particular atonement.

I will commence with the Passover lambs (Ex. 12). That these lambs were typical of Christ is evident from what is said, I Cor.5:7, "For even Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us," as well as from the direction, "Neither shall ye break a bone thereof" (Ex. 12:46), being quoted and applied to Christ John 19:36. This appointment presupposed that the Israelites, in themselves considered, were equally obnoxious to the plagues about to be inflicted, as were the Egyptians, and therefore that both were equally sinners before God, and equally subject to the curse of the law. The sacrifice, therefore, of the paschal lamb more fully represented both atonement, or a covering over of sin, and redemption (for it was a redemption from the plaque), than perhaps any other type of the Old Testament. So Peter seems to have understood it when he said, "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, &c. But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world" I Peter 1:18-20.

Here he evidently refers to this and applies it to Christ, in speaking of Him as a lamb without blemish, as the paschal lamb was required to be; and as being foreordained before the foundation of the world, showing the design of the type in requiring that the lambs should be taken out on the tenth day of the month, and kept up until the fourteenth day Ex.

12:3-6. These five days seem very clearly to prefigure the period of Christ's offering. The tenth pointing to His foreordination or being set up before the foundation of the world; the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth, to the four thousand years before the coming of Christ, and the being slain in the evening of the fourteenth, to His being sacrificed at the close of that period. In this important type there was nothing like indefinite atonement or general provision. It was as particular in its provision as in its application. It was appointed alone for the families of Israel, and to be according to their eating. If one family were too small, two must join in one lamb; while the Egyptians were left exposed to the plague. It must be special in its application to each family. The blood of each lamb must be by the family who ate it, put upon the lintel and sideposts of the door of the house in which they were, as a covering from the plague. Could this type in any way have more fully shadowed forth a particular and definite atonement? Was there anything in it like a common or general stock for everybody?

We pass to the redemption of the first born, being males. Ex. 13:12-15 & 34:19. This type is full of instruction on the subject of redemption.

- 1st. The special claim which God made upon these first born, being males, on account of having spared them when He slew the first born of Egypt, shows the claim He made upon His elect in common with others, through the law, as His creatures.
- 2nd. The firstling of clean animals might not be redeemed: showing there was no redemption for his son from the curse; and that there could have been no redemption for the elect had they not become unclean by transgression.
- 3rd. The firstling of the ass must be redeemed with a lamb. This relates to the natural stupidity and uncleanness of the elect; and nothing but the sacrifice of the spotless Lamb of God could redeem them. Or, as asses are in some other Scriptures made to prefigure ministers of the gospel, it may show the necessity of their being redeemed, as well as the heirs of promise to whom they minister. The injunction that if they would not redeem the ass, they should break its neck, that is, kill it without shedding its blood, shows that, as without shedding of blood is no remission (Heb.9:22), so without redemption there is no remission of sins, or atonement.
- 4th. The first born of man, being a son, must be redeemed. There is a particular discrimination as to who were the subjects of redemption. The first born son, according to the usage and law of Israel, was the special heir, entitled to peculiar privileges. See, among other texts: Gen.25:31-34, 27:29-37 & Deut.21:15-17. We have then here a particular correspondence of this type to the redemption of Christ; those redeemed by Him being heirs, as shown (chapter first) in our remarks on Gal.4: 1-6. The heirs redeemed by Christ are made such by the predestinating purpose of God Eph. 1:5, Rom.8:29. These predestinated heirs, according to this type, and according to Gal.4: 1-6, were those whom God specially sent His Son to redeem. So particular is redemption, and of course atonement, according to this type, that, as this law concerning their redeeming their first born was not to go into effect until they came into the land of the Canaanites (see Ex. 13:11), the Lord designing to take the Levites instead of those already born, thus showing redemption by substitution; He had the Levites and the first born each numbered, and there being an excess of two hundred three score and thirteen of the first born over the Levites, He required these to be redeemed at five shekels apiece by the poll Num.3: 12,13, 39-51. Does not this show that everything like an indefinite or general provision transaction is excluded from the work of redemption?

To avoid tediousness on these types, as far as I can, I will notice but one more: that of the great day of atonement Lev. 16. By the contrast which is drawn (Heb.9 & 10) between the order observed on this day of atonement and Christ's entering into heaven with His own blood, now to appear in the presence of God for us, there can be no doubt but the atonement made yearly for Israel on this appointed day was typical, or, as there said, a figure of that eternal redemption which Christ obtained for us. It is true, as is shown (Heb.7), Christ is a High Priest of a far higher order than that of the Aaronic priesthood, He being after the order of Melchisedec; yet it is, I think, equally evident from what is said of Christ's offering and blood, &c., as contrasted with the offerings of the high priests under the law, that they were typical of His priesthood; for there is no account of Melchisedec's offering sacrifices, &c. Thinking this will not be disputed, I will not stop to argue the point, but will in proof thereof simply refer to Heb.5:1-5; 8:1-6; 9:1-14& 10:1-23. In the first place, it was only the high priest that might enter into the most holy place, that is, within the veil; and that but once every year on this day of atonement, and not without blood, Lev. 16:1,2; Heb.9: 1-7. In order to his lawfully officiating as the high priest, Aaron, and after him his son, must be consecrated. See Ex.28 & 29. Lev.8: 1-12. To be consecrated he had to wear the holy garments, among which was the ephod having two precious stones engraven with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, six on each stone, fastened in the two shoulder pieces thereof, so that he should bear their names upon his two shoulders for a memorial. Also, there was the breast plate containing twelve precious stones, engraven with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, that Aaron should bear their names in the breastplate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth into the holy place for a memorial before the Lord continually.

Thus showing that in officiating as the high priest, in going into the holy place to make atonement, he represented the twelve tribes of Israel, as a designated people, and none other. And thus typifying Christ as officiating in making atonement in behalf of a designated people known by name (for He calls His own sheep by name, John 10:3), whom He bears upon His heart as the objects of His love Rom.5:8 & John 13:1. And also whom He bore with Him as upon His shoulders, when He entered into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us, not for anybody, everybody, and nobody; but for us a present and known people. (See Eph. 2:4-7.) As well also as showing that they were a people whom He bore and carried all the days of old; and in all their afflictions He was afflicted (Isa.63:9). So on the day of atonement the high priest, in making atonement for Israel, was to take two kids of the goats, one for a sin offering and the other for a scapegoat, in order to show the perfection of Christ's one offering of Himself, which He should make, that in bearing the sins of His people in His own body on the tree, and in suffering the penalty due thereunto, He should conquer death, finish transgression, make an end of sin, and accomplish a complete redemption. The one for a sin offering could not have shown this; being burned to ashes it could only show the wrath of God against sin. But the scapegoat, in bearing the sins, after the sacrifice of the other, away to a land uninhabited, showed the perfection of Christ's atonement that He buried the sins He bore in the depths of the sea. In sending the scapegoat away, to carry out the type, Aaron must lay his hands on its head and confess over all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat. And it was said, the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities to a land uninhabited Lev. 16:21 & 22. Aaron, in thus officiating as a type of Christ, did not lay upon the head of the goat sin in general, nor the sins of all nations, but specially and only the sins and iniquities of Israel. Thus whilst there is a full and perfect atonement prefigured for all the iniquities and transgressions of God's Israel, a peculiar and special people; there is no representation of an atonement and redemption for any that God did not design should be redeemed and delivered thereby. I here close chapter 2.

Chapter III

A brief view of New Testament testimony relative to Particular Atonement, with a notice of certain texts relied on as standing in opposition to it.

In turning to the New Testament we find, no less than in the types of the Old, a specific purpose declared in the birth and death of Christ in the flesh. Thus, in the declaration of the angel to Joseph (Mt. 1:21), "Thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins. Here is a special purpose declared in reference to Christ's coming into the world, namely: that He should be manifested as a Saviour; for He "shall save His people from their sins." Here is, therefore, a special people, the antitype of national Israel, a people whom He already knew as His, that are to be saved, and a special salvation with which they are to be saved.

Hence here is nothing to warrant the idea of a general salvation, which is no salvation unless persons make it such by delivering themselves from their sins. On the contrary, everything is positive. He shall save His people, and shall save them from their sins; and He has His name Jesus, or Saviour, because He shall save this special people with this special salvation. Hence any one that says that Christ's being Jesus or a Saviour warrants the conclusion that any one may be saved by hitching himself to His atonement, sets aside the purpose of God, as declared in this text. The idea is entertained by some learned men that there was sufficient value in the blood or atonement of Christ, as they speak, to save the whole world, if applied, and therefore, though only the elect will be saved, yet others might be saved if they would make an application of His blood to themselves, by believing. But, learned as they may be in other things, they manifest great ignorance in this, in supposing that atonement consists merely in blood being shed, without any reference to the object for which that blood was shed, as an expiatory sacrifice or otherwise. According to this, there was as much virtue in the blood daily shed by the Israelites in killing animals for food as in that shed on the day of atonement.

Let us look back to the Passover. Suppose a spirit of sympathy and universal charity had got hold on the Israelites at that time, such as pervades the religious world at this day, and they had sent out their missionaries among the Egyptians to say to them: "That the Lord is about to pass through the land of Egypt; and He has given us directions to kill certain lambs this evening, and to sprinkle the blood upon the side posts and upper door posts of our houses, and to eat the flesh roast with fire, and He will pass by us and not suffer the destroyer to enter our houses. Now it is true you Egyptians have no sheep, as the keeping of sheep, or shepherds, are an abomination unto you (Gen.46:34), but we shall have a great deal more blood than we shall need to sprinkle the door posts of our houses, and if you will come and get for yourselves and sprinkle the posts of your doors, you will be saved. It is true that if Moses was here he would say that something more is necessary than a mere self application of blood, but he is one of those stiff old fellows that will not allow the human mind to have any scope in religion, but holds that everything must be limited and bounded by a Thus saith the Lord. Now, our life for yours, if you will try it, the blood will protect you, for here it is, in Moses' own words, 'For the Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians, and when He seeth the blood upon the lintel and two side posts, the Lord will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroyer to come in unto your houses to smite you.' Now here we have a general declaration on that when He seeth the blood, &c., without any specification of one man's house more than another's. It is true, when we notice the expressions your houses and you, and the general connection, we must admit that something might be made out of it to seem to confine it to the Israelites; but we do not think God to be any such partial being as not to give everyone a chance, and therefore we do not stop to enquire about connections, but catch a text where we can find it." Now if some of the Egyptians had been persuaded to try the experiment, is there a candid reflecting person, even among those who are at this day practicing the very chicanery above described in reference to the blood of Christ, that will venture the supposition that they would have been spared, and God's declaration concerning their destruction have been falsified?

No; and why? Because, they would say, God had never directed it and He is not to be deceived in that way, and that the protection was not in the simple sprinkling of blood, but in the purpose of God, made known and carried out in the type, in the obedience of the Israelites. As typical of Christ as a redemption price, those lambs were appointed as a redemption price of Israel from the destroyer. So specific was the appointment, as heretofore shown, that each family must have its selected lamb to be slain and eaten by the family.

Here was the redemption of the family in the lamb being made to represent the family: the blood on the door posts was but a token to them, (Ex. 12:13), a token of what? Why, that a substitute had been beforehand appointed and slain for the first born of the family, and that they were living by its death as expressed in their eating its flesh. Here were the appointment, the promise, and the direction of God, all uniting in reference to the Passover. These, and these alone, gave efficiency to the blood of those lambs. So of Christ's death; it was of God's appointment. If so, it must have been for a certain object. God would not have made the appointment without an object. We believe in the infinite value of Christ's blood, and of course, we believe that, being of such value, it could not fail to accomplish the object for which it was shed. It was shed for the expiation of sins.

Whose sins? He had none of His own. It would be absurd to talk of His dying as an expiatory sacrifice or satisfaction for sins, when no sins were charged to Him, and He made accountable for them. His being thus accountable could only be by His representing sinners as a Surety. So says Paul, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" II Tim. 1:9. So Gal. 1:4: "Who gave Himself for our sins, &c. according to the will of God and our Father." And so I Peter 2:24: "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree," &c.

Thus examine the New Testament through and we find that it was a particular people whom Christ died for, a people given Him of the Father, whom He represented, and that according to the will and purpose of God. Just so far then as the purpose of God in the promises extended, so far the atonement extended; and as we shown by the types of the Old Testament, and now by the New, it can be made to extend no further. All for whom Christ's blood was shed are redeemed and, of course, cannot suffer under the penalty of the law, but shall be saved. Can men or angels make any person a redeemed one, whom Christ has not redeemed?

As we have extended our remarks so largely on this point, it seems not necessary to quote other texts proving the particularity of the atonement, only as we may name a few. But in passing we will notice John 10:15, where Christ says: "I lay down my life for the sheep." In the connection He shuts every avenue for a general provision to come in. 1st.

He contrasts Himself with, as distinct from, the hireling whose own the sheep are not. Hence He was not hired to make an atonement for sin by the promise of a certain portion being given Him. They were His already, given to Him of His Father, and because they were His, He laid down His life to protect them Jn. 10:14,16, 29. But that which I wish particularly to call attention to is the striking personification there is in this hireling shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, of the saviour of the general atonement holders of the present day. They will not admit that their Christ has any claim to any part of the human family as His while in a state of nature, though they perhaps admit that believers are His, in a special manner, when they believe and give themselves up to Him. So that the hireling is the saviour of the day. As to his fleeing, this is much like their representation of Christ as standing back and not interfering to save any, according to their notions of salvation, that is, to convert, lest He should destroy free agency and make machines of men. No: he fleeth; and if any choose to follow him and give themselves up to him, he will save them. Is not this the religion of the day? And if so, is not the hireling shepherd the saviour of the day?

Again, as a further proof that everything relative to the atonement is according to the fixed purpose of God, as Jesus says, He came down from heaven to do the will of Him that sent Him (John 6:38,39), we are assured that He was raised again for the justification of those for whose offences He was delivered (Rom.4:25.). And Paul is very confident that those who were reconciled to God by the death of His Son will be saved by His life Rom.5:10. If then all those for whom Christ was delivered, and who were reconciled to God by His death, shall be assuredly justified and saved, if any others could be saved it must be independent of Christ's suffering for them, or of their being reconciled by His death. They must then abandon their hopes built simply on the infinite value of Christ's blood, and seek some other subterfuge.

It appears to be proper to notice one or two classes of texts touching this subject. I will first notice this class: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life" John 3:14,15. Again, verse 16, John 6:40, and others. A special purpose of God in Christ's death is no less positively declared in these texts than in those we have been noticing, showing a sure salvation. But here is a difference; salvation, or eternal life, is not here predicated as of the elect, but of whomsoever believeth in Christ. Hence those who know of no faith but that which is the act of the natural mind lay hold with avidity of those texts to support the idea that faith is a condition of salvation, and, of course, that the atonement is general, subject to this condition, losing sight of all those texts which declare a specific object in the death of Christ. But, what is more, they appear to be ignorant of the testimony of God concerning faith, that it is spiritual and not a natural act, that "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," and that It is not of the flesh, but of the Spirit. it is not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man; but of GodJohn 3:3,6 & 1:13.

What advantage then can Free Will derive from these texts, when it is thus testified that there can be no spiritual discernment without a spiritual birth; and this not of man's will, but of God? In accordance with this view, faith is declared to be a fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22), to be the gift of God (Eph.2:8 & Phil. 1:29), and to be of the operation of God (Col.2:12 & I Pet.1:21).

Hence, those who have in experience been taught the spirituality of the religion of Christ would as soon be persuaded that they could atone for their own sins as that they could believe in Christ of their own power; that their faith must be as special an operation of God as is the atonement. While to those without, all these things are done in parables, &c.

It may be asked why this mode of expression was used in the texts above referred to, if it was not to countenance conditional salvation. That it could not have been designed to countenance such an idea is evident. 1st, from the testimony the New Testament bears of faith, or believing, as being of God, and not of the creature, as we have shown: 2nd, there is nothing in the expressions to countenance in the least the idea that conditions are thereby proposed. It is not that whosoever will believe, &c., nor anything like it; but, as before noticed, the declarations are positive and absolute.

But the reason is obvious why these texts are so absolutely free in their declarations, to the characters designated and those characteristics drawn from christian experience. If there had been no declarations given but such as that: "He gave Himself for the church"; "laid down His life for the sheep," or "gave Himself for us," as it is frequently expressed, what would the poor lambs of Christ do with all their doubts, and their deep sense of their own unworthiness? They could not pry into the counsel of God's will, to see whether their names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. While Satan would have emboldened thousands to claim to be the elect and the favorites of heaven, the child of grace would be the last to make any such claims, or to feel worthy to make them. How good and how kind then the provision which has brought down the test of individual salvation to one single point, and that an infallible test. Whosoever believeth in Him, without any exception, or any other limitation. Wherever it has been given it will show itself, and will produce hope. The individual may not know, nor be willing to acknowledge that he has true faith; but he knows that he believes in Christ as once he did not; that he once had no conception of that fullness and suitableness of Christ as a Saviour for lost sinners, as he now believes Him to be. In a word, he knows Him to be full and sufficient and the only Saviour, or the only Way in which a sinner can be saved. Knowing this, hope springs up in his breast that he may be saved, and sticks there in spite of all his efforts at times to shake it off. Thus we see the peculiar use and suitableness of this class of texts, to the children of God, though others may wrest them as they do other Scriptures to their own destruction.

There is another class of texts which, according to the construction which the advocates of a general atonement put upon the letter of them, must involve universal salvation. It will not answer to intrude upon the readers of the Signs to notice more than one of them; but I have selected the one they think the most direct in their favor, namely: I John 2:2, "And He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." While the Arminians of every grade make so much reliance on this text to support their system, merely from the expression "the whole world," there is not another text in the Bible whose instruction they so completely turn their backs upon, and whose direction and authority they so completely trample under foot, as they do those of this text. Its declaration is that, He is the propitiation for our sins, &c., and for the sins of the whole world, and if He is the propitiation, He is the only one for the whole world and for every part of it. What is the import of the word? Its import appears to be that which pacifies or makes peace, or, rather, through which the sinner can approach God in peace. The text informs us that Christ Jesus is that propitiation provided of God, or the way in which the sinner may approach in peace; not for a part of the world only, but for the whole world. That is, there is no other propitiation; no other way in which any individual of the human family can approach in peace; and the way in which any individual who feels the weight of his sins, as separating between him and God, so that he cannot approach in dependence on any effort or offering of his own, and has faith given him so to enable him to behold Christ as having by the one offering of Himself so removed sin and taken the curse of the law out of the way, in behalf of guilty, helpless sinners, that he can with confidence rely on the work of Christ for acceptance, I say, any such sinner, whoever or whatever he may have been, may approach thus and find peace. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." As certain as that the religion of Christ is a spiritual and experimental religion, and a religion of faith, so certain is it that spiritual experience and faith have as much to do with this very point as with any other point. But persons are apt, when their minds become confused by the wiles of men in handling such texts as these, to lose sight of that important fact. Does the text say that the whole world rely on the blood of Christ as their propitiation? No. Do we find the whole world thus relying on it? No. Look around you. The Catholic, if he sins to wound his conscience, goes to confession; has his penalty or penance prescribed; pays it, and that is his propitiation. The Protestant, of the stricter and more legal class, if he thus sins, resorts to fasting and to increasing his tasks of praying and reading; and that is his propitiation. Those of the looser classes, when they thus sin, go to the next protracted meeting and get converted over; and that is their propitiation. Those who make no profession, instead of being pointed to Christ as the propitiation, are told that they must make their peace with God. So they trample under foot the declaration and authority of this text. But still perhaps some one is ready to say, there must be something more general in this text than you have admitted, as it speaks of the sins of the whole world. It is true it speaks particularly of the sins, for that is what propitiation has to do with. But here is the mistake: you do not distinguish between the import of the noun, as here used, and what would have been that of the corresponding verb, had it been used. Had it been written, He has propitiated for our sins, and not our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world, there would have been at once a positive declaration of universal salvation, and of a salvation of that kind that would have excluded from it all idea of the necessity of faith or spiritual experience. But it is not so written, at all. Christ is the one propitiation, as He is the one way; but no man will come to the Father by Him, nor trust in His blood as that which alone can be his peace with God, till faith is given him so to apprehend and trust in Christ.

But I must close this lengthy chapter and subject. If I have written anything that will be profitable to the honest inquirer, or any whose minds may have been puzzled with the cavils of men on the subject, I shall be satisfied, not having any expectation, or aiming to convince the opposers of this doctrine.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, March 4, 1848.

S. Trots.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.16 (1848)

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.1.

BROTHER BEEBE: - As I am at this time pretty much confined at home by indisposition, I will, in accordance with the request of our brother J.D. Green, of Georgia, commence some remarks on the 4th chapter of Isaiah.

In being thus forward with my observations, I do not wish to forestall brother Leland, should he be disposed to give his views on this portion of scripture. The fact is, that even if I should be so happy as to agree in views with him, there is no danger of my so exhausting the important subject before us, as not to leave abundant room for brother Leland to bring forward something new. The probability is, that we may differ in our exposition of parts of the chapter, hence our different views may be presented for the consideration of our brethren.

The chapter commences with this well known passage, "And in that day seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, we will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach."

The expression, in that day, will lead us to look to the preceding chapter for the time referred to; following the 3rd chapter back to its beginning, we shall find that also directly connected in subject and in form of expression, with the 2nd chapter, thus shall we be led back to find the period of this prophecy designated in these words, in chapter 2, "and it shall come to pass that in the last days the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, &c." Thus we have the period of this prophecy fixed under the gospel dispensation; the expression last days being a Jewish phrase to denote the reign of the Messiah as being the grand concluding dispensation. Besides the event in this and the following verses, and those in verse 2, chapter 4 can only refer to this dispensation. But the enquiry arises, is the phrase, the last days to be limited to the beginning of the gospel dispensation? Or does it embrace the dispensation at large; leaving the particular periods of this dispensation to be determined by the nature and order of events? The enquiries here suggested are important for the right understanding of the subject before us. For if the phrase used, fixes the period of the prophecy, to the commencement of the gospel dispensation, then the denunciations and the sins against which they are leveled, mentioned in these several chapters, must be referred to the Jews nationally. But if the period extends more generally through the gospel dispensation, then these predicted crimes must be considered as belonging to the anti-christian interest, or perhaps, more particularly in some of the instances, to the corrupted gospel churches; that is, such as have fallen off from the simplicity of the gospel in which they once stood, and hence still called daughters of Zion. By reference to particular events of this prophecy, we shall be led unavoidably to the conclusion, that the last days here spoken of cannot be limited to the beginning of the gospel. The events, for instance, predicted in verse 4, chapter 2, have not yet had their accomplishment, neither will they until after the destruction of the anti-christian powers. The prediction in verses 11 – 17, chapter 2, will only receive their general accomplishment when there shall be one Lord, and his name one over the whole earth. Again, the prediction, verse 19, chapter 2, and that which is very similar in verse 21, is, by divine inspiration, applied both to the Jews and to others; verse 19 reads, "And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth." The Master foretelling to the women which followed him, the awful destruction coming upon the Jews, says (Luke 23:30,) "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the rocks, Cover us;" intimating that the above quoted prophecy would then begin to receive its accomplishment in them. Again, at the opening of the sixth seal (Rev.6:12-17,) when heathen or imperial Rome fell with a great destruction, it is said, "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondsman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the rocks and mountains, Fall on us, &c.," thus showing that the above prophecy had an accomplishment when the powerful interest fell. If thus referred to both these interests, it can scarcely be doubted, that it will have an equally full accomplishment in the destruction of that interest, the Romish Anti-Christ or Beast, which is made up of parts borrowed from both the others; the ceremonies of the Church of Rome having been borrowed both from heathenism, and Judaism. And in the destruction of this power the Lord will arise no less terribly to shake the earth, than in the other cases.

Having thus clearly established the facts that the general prophecy connected with this 4th chapter, has a reference, as well to the Romish as to the Jewish Anti-christ; or perhaps more correctly, to Anti-christ at large; I will briefly notice, as I pass, with a view to this general application to Anti-christ, that a portion of the prophecy more immediately connected with this 1st verse, chapter 4; namely, that beginning with verse 16, chapter 3, "Moreover the Lord saith because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with outstretched necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet." As Jerusalem which is above, is the mother of us all, those churches which were constituted in accordance with gospel principles, are fitly termed her daughters, or the daughters of Zion. What a full portrait picture is here given of many of the churches of this very day, which a few years ago, stood upon gospel principles! How manifestly drawn by him who, with certain eye, looks through all futurity, declaring the end from the beginning! For instance, is there not a great deal of pomposity displayed from their pulpits? And do they not frequently treat with much haughtiness those who will not submit to their conversions or to their dictations? Do they not with many wanton looks and actions court the embraces of the world? Many of their plans and forms being avowedly adopted, for the purpose of attracting the attention of the learned and great, and of obtaining what they call respectable congregations. And do they not occasionally cast forth lascivious looks toward governmental patronage? Again, do they not make a great tinkling with their feet? If they walk forth in the Mission, the Bible, the Sunday School, or even the Tract or Temperance cause, their silver lea bands (ornaments, verse 20,) must tinkle. Not only must there be a tinkling of money, but also a noise made to attract the gaze of the multitude toward all their benevolent steps, with the same immodesty that would be manifested by a female should she deck her feet with tinkling ornaments to attract notice. Without stopping to give a particular illustration, I will just call the attention of my readers to the representation given in the following verses of this chapter, of the precious jewels and ornaments of human device, with which the churches of this day are decking themselves. More especially would I entreat them to mark well the denunciations of God upon all these ornaments, and upon those that wear them. And may these denunciations be a warning to the children of God to separate themselves from all such wanton churches and professors.

And in that day, at the period when it shall come, in which God shall thus visit these corrupted daughters of Zion for their abominations, they will have arrived at such a pitch of madness in their religious zeal, or to such a state of desperation, that seven women will take hold of one man, saying, "We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." The impression of many is, that this prophecy is fulfilled in the popular frenzy of the day, of making profession of religion. By way of accommodation, this text certainly serves, aptly, to illustrate much that is passing, at this time, in religion. It has become quite a reproach, to make no profession of religion, especially not to join any of the popular societies. And the most that appears to be wanted, is to be called christians. They can mostly weave, what they think, a very good covering of righteousness; they want not the imputed righteousness of Christ for justification. And they can fatten or bloat upon their frames and feelings, and benevolent doings; they of course want no other bread. In fact it is to be seriously apprehended that two-thirds of those who join the Baptist Churches at this day, do it for the purpose of taking away their reproach. Their teachers and their consciences reproach them with being sinners; and with not having done what is necessary to make peace with God. To remove this reproach, they engage in making their peace. What they have to do, according to the present standard, is to bring their minds to a willingness to be saved by Christ, submit to the ordinance, join a church, and adopt a certain prescribed religious form and zeal. Having done this, they set down satisfied, without ever having been brought to such a sense of their wretched, starving state, as to know, that unless Christ gives them of his flesh for bread they must forever perish; or of their loathsomeness and nakedness being such that unless washed in a Savior's blood, and clothed in his pure righteousness, they must remain eternally condemned and banished from the presence of God. Whereas those who are truly taught of God, go to Christ, far more from a sense of the necessity of being fed with that bread which he alone giveth, and of being covered over with his righteousness, than from any desire to be called by his name before men. The circumstances, that the affirmation is of women, might be considered to correspond with the fact of females being so much foremost in professions of religion.

But still if we consider this passage as having any reference beyond its literal accomplishment in the Jews, and the whole connection of the prophecy, I think, obliges us thus to consider it, we must see the phrase seven women as having a definite meaning. And what other meaning are we authorized from Scriptural use to affix to the term women in a spiritual sense, than that of denominations or sects of religion, distinct from the true church or bride of Christ? For says Christ in the Songs, "My dove, my undefiled, is but one; she is the only one of her mother, &c." It is true that the church of Christ in reference to her being divided into distinct branches, is spoken of in the plural; but in this case, if I mistake not, the term uniformly used, is daughters, daughters of Zion, &c. The term virgins, as used in Psalms 45:14 & Rev.14:4, I think used rather to express the distinguishing quality of Christ's sheep. And in the last quoted text, we have the term women, evidently used in the sense I have above given to it, as meaning false religions or false churches, and religious societies. The term seven being so frequently used in Scripture, to denote the completeness or fulness of what is represented by it; that I think the term seven women in this case can mean nothing other than the various denominations and societies that are distinct from the true church generally, or in the whole. But what one man will these denominations take hold of? I answer, the leader of some system, or perhaps nothing more is meant, than that they will agree on some connecting point or bond of human designation. Though, from the views I have entertained on the 20th chapter of Isaiah, in connection with this, I am inclined to believe that the Pope of Rome will be the man, and papacy, popery, &c., the name sought.

But brother Green will anxiously enquire, what is the reproach they will seek to escape by this art? Not only do the Catholics reproach the Protestants for being divided into so many sects and parties, but others point to it as a reproach upon their religion; and they reproach one another for adhering so closely to sectarian views. And the various denominations seem, at this day, to feel that it is a reproach to them, to keep up their sectarian barriers; hence the disposition manifested, to keep those barriers, or denominational peculiarities, as much as possible from public view. Hence also the boast of the superiority of the great national societies, seeing that in them, all which they are pleased to term evangelical denominations, unite in one common cause.

What I therefore think, intended by this prophecy, is that the various denominations will unite in one general name, and under one general head, while each will retain its own peculiar views of religion or doctrine; eat their own bread, and retain its own particular forms; wear their own apparel. Something like this I think must be intended by this text.

And nothing less than this can be implied, as I presume will be admitted, in these texts: "All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him (the beast,) whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," Rev.13:8; and this; "And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark, &c." Rev.13:13. However improbable such an event may appear, certainly those texts imply submission to one general head. Besides the idea of a general union has been repeatedly mentioned, and even the beast has been made, that the different denominations are approximating toward such a union. I know not, however, that the plan of uniting under popery, or any one name, has as yet been proposed.

When in connection with these several prophecies, and the circumstances above mentioned, we take into consideration the frenzied state of the religious and political world, and the evidence from past history, of how men will rush headlong to destruction, when given up of God to their own confusion, and to believe a lie, the improbability of this general union under one head, and even under popery, in name will vanish. In this way the anti-christian party will prepare themselves for the destruction, which is to come upon all whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb, &c., compare Rev.13:8, with Rev.14:9-11.

Under this view of the subject, how precious, and how applicable, how important to be attended to, is the heavenly proclamation, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev.18:4.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., Feb.1st, 1837.

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.2.

Verse 2: "In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel."

We here have the same day referred to, which was noticed in the preceding; namely, the period when a general falling away of the churches shall have prevailed, and when God shall visit them for this apostasy. But the reference is to show the state of the true disciples of Christ during, or at that period, described as those "who are escaped of Israel."

The term Branch is so frequently used by the prophets to denote the Messiah, that there can be no hesitancy as to the Lord Jesus Christ's being here intended. The term Branch in most of the texts in which it occurs, has a special reference to Christ in his kingly office, or as the Son of David. This is very clearly the case in Isaiah 11:1, Jer.23:5, Zech.6:12, and it of course may be supposed to have such reference in this passage. In Isaiah 11:1, there is also an allusion to the circumstance of Christ's birth, as being at the time when the house of David would be very low, or nearly extinct. Joseph could trace his lineage to David, but was in obscurity, and the throne was possessed by the family of the Herods. After the destruction of Jerusalem, if after the butchery of the infants about Bethlehem, the lineage of David was no further to be traced, and was probably extinct, excepting as it existed in this one righteous Branch. Hence in that passage the figure employed is that of a stem, or branch, springing up from the roots of a tree, which had been cut down, or become dead.

We have, in the circumstances connected with the birth of Christ one of those special instances in which God accomplishes his wise purposes by instruments, to human view, entirely foreign; and by leaving those instruments to follow their own ambitious inclinations. It was important that the fact of Joseph's being of the house of David should be publicly established; and this not by the design of men, lest it should be thought to be a mere device to raise the reputation of Jesus of Nazareth. This was fully accomplished. A "decree went forth from Cesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed." Under the operation of this decree, Joseph is brought to Bethlehem to show his lineage and be taxed. Jesus was then, and there, born manifestly as a branch of the house of David.

In this passage Christ is called emphatically the Branch of the Lord; by which we are evidently taught that this was the peculiar King, the Lord had in view in raising David to the throne of Israel, and in establishing his covenant with him, and his seed after him. See in confirmation of this, II Sam.

7:12-17, and Psalms 89:3,4, compared with several following verses.

The term, Branch of the Lord, may also be used to show the divine superiority of Christ, as king of Israel, over David and all his natural posterity. He is the root, as well as offspring of David, and David's Lord. See Rev.22:16, and Matt.22:42.

Christ as king, is called a righteous Branch, Jer.23:5. It is said he shall reign in righteousness, Isa.32:1. And he is called king of righteousness, Heb.7:2. From all which it is evident that Christ's becoming the end of the law for righteousness, and bringing in an everlasting righteousness, is connected with his kingly office, or in other words, that he establishes the law, and fulfils its righteous and eternal demands, in the stead of his people, whilst he delivers them from under it, and makes them kings and priests unto God. Again the term, the Fruit of the earth, is evidently used to present the Lord Jesus Christ in a different point of view. It has, I think a special reference to the atonement of Christ, or to Christ's death and resurrection as the substitute of his people. Hence the comparison which Christ makes relative to himself when he says, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12:24. It may also be used to designate Christ as that peculiar and precious fruit which the earth was destined to bring forth from the beginning. Isa.66:8. Under this view of the subject, we shall be led to contemplate the creation of the world, and of men upon it, the entrance of sin, the preservation of man amidst all his corruption, rebellion and depravity, the dividing and dispensing the families of the earth, the various promises, and institutions of God, all as parts of the husbandry of God in the culture of this precious faith. See John 15:1.

I will now notice the persons here connected with Christ, and described as them that are escaped of Israel. Not national Israel; though what is here affirmed is true of those Israelites or Jews who escaped in the sense here intended. The fact is, that as the term Israel, originally belonging to the whole twelve tribes, and was afterwards retained by the revolting tribes, so the term used in a figurative sense, frequently denotes the whole professed or visible Church of Christ. As in the division, ten tribes revolted from the house of David and turned from the Temple of the Lord, so of the professed Church of Christ, a great proportion has in ages past, revolted from the government of our spiritual David, and turned to their golden calves. It is remarkable that the anti- christian interest is represented by ten horns, or kingdoms.

That we are not to understand what is here said of Israel literally, will be manifest from a notice of the fifth verse, as it is evident that cannot be taken in a literal sense. Of the characteristic here given to the people designed, there is an escape which the children of grace experience in their new birth. As they lay exposed to the everlasting wretchedness, and all hope of deliverance by human exertions has failed, the Holy Ghost opens to their view a safe way of escape, and leads them into it. That way is Christ Jesus. As Israel on the shore of the Red Sea, sang the delivering hand of the Lord, who had made a way through the sea, for their escape from the Egyptians; so the believer, in view of what he feels is a miraculous escape, in songs of praise, ascribing his salvation to the Lord.

But the escape which I understand to be more immediately intended here, is an escape from being carried away by the flood of errors which is cast out of the mouth of the serpent. This escape the Apostle Peter aptly defines as an escape from the pollution that is in the world through lust. II Pet.1:4. This escape is often spoken of in the scriptures as a narrow escape, and is ascribed to the electing Grace of God; and so the believer in his experience finds it. The Master's declaration is, "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Again, speaking as before in reference to his coming in the destruction of Jerusalem, but also in reference to his future comings, he describes the signs and wonders shown by the false christs and false prophets to be such that "if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect." Matt.24:13-24. Here we are taught that nothing short of the electing love of Godcould preserve them. Peter also speaks of this escape as a very narrow one; his words are, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" I Pet.4:18. Once more, Paul, speaking of the man of sin, and of the strong delusions by which others would be led to believe a lie, expresses his confidence in the escape of the Thessalonian brethren with thankfulness to God on the ground of God's having "from the beginning chosen them to salvation." II Thes.2:13. These facts also afford the precious assurance that the elect of God shall all finally escape.

When we come to experience on this point, we find the believer ever ready with a deep felt sense of the fact, to respond the language of Paul and say, "By the grace of God I am what I am." The natural feelings of the child of grace so strongly incite him to avoid reproach, and to seek worldly ease and applause, his natural propensity to go along with the multitude is so great, the current of his affections run so strongly toward his listening to the affectionate persuasions of others, and toward his going with his old friends and associates, those whom he had accompanied with delight to the house of God into those measures which they recommend so highly as calculated to promote the cause of Christ, and as productive of such good feelings, &c., but more than these, the finding himself so much alone, whilst the more talented, more learned, the wealthier, and more showy baptists, have engaged with zeal in the promotion of the new measures; and connected with this, the sense he has of his own weakness, and the distrust he has of his own heart, and the consequent fears that he may not be actuated by right motives; and worse than all, he feels himself to be such a disobedient, ungrateful child, if a child, that he is often ready to doubt whether it can be possible that the Lord should so distinguish him, as to give him so much clearer light in the doctrine and order of the gospel; I say the child of grace having all these struggles within, together with fightings without, and finding himself still urged by a sense of duty to maintain in the face of opposition, a steadfast adherence to the word of God, as the rule of his faith and practice, realizes in the following language of the poet, the breathings of his heart,

"O! To grace, how great a debtor, Daily, I'm constrained to be!

Let that grace, Lord, like a fetter, Bind my wandering heart to thee!"

Whilst he knows how to appreciate the feelings of David when he says, "As for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well night slipped;" he, like him, also finds his relief in going into the sanctuary of God. That is, when he tests by the scriptures the religious notions of those, at whose prosperity he had felt envious; when the preached gospel, like the dew, distils upon his soul; or when he can truly wait upon God for guidance and support, he realizes such a divine beauty and excellency in the simple gospel of Christ, and order of his house, and such a difference between these and the devises of men; Christ to be so sure a foundation to rest his own salvation, and the salvation of the church of God upon; and the standing of those who depend on human exertions for salvation, to be so slippery, that he finds his mind settled in the conclusion, that whoever else may leave Christ, to follow the contrivances of men, and how popular soever it may be to trust to an arm of flesh, he must trust in Christ as his only hope, and follow him as his only guide, the captain of his salvation. See Psalms 73.

But I must pass to the consideration of what Christ, as the Branch of the Lord, and as the fruit of the earth, is to those who have experienced this escape.

As the branch of the Lord, or as the King of righteousness, and King of Zion, he is to his people beautiful and glorious; or as some render the original, for beauty and for glory. 1st. Whilst the deceived ones are seeking to adorn the gospel of Christ with their school divinity, and with their additional ceremonies and plans, thinking it too plain without such embellishments to attract the attention of the polite; the escaped from Israel see such a divine beauty in Christ, as that branch which the Lord alone brought forth, and caused to grow, as they are enabled to discover him budding and spreading throughout the scriptures, and as he is manifested in their experience of salvation, that in their estimation, nothing has been or can be, added by man to the revelation made by him, which does not tend to deformity. 2nd. Whilst others are decking themselves with their faith, their repentance, and their benevolent doings, &c., to render themselves beautiful as religionists in the eyes of man, and as they vainly think in the sight of God, the child of grace has seen so much pollution attached to all creaturely acts, that he wishes to be clothed only in the righteousness of Christ; to appear clad alone in that before men, as the ground of his hope, and before God, as his plea for acceptance. Having the evidence that he is covered over with the robe of Christ's righteousness, he feels a confidence in professing his religion before men, and in pleading at the throne of grace, disturbed with the apprehension that he has substituted something else in the place of Christ's righteousness, he feels ashamed and confounded, both before God and men. Thus Christ is to the believer, for glory as well as for beauty, as he is received as the Lord their righteousness. 3rd. Christ considered as King of Zion. Whilst others esteem the bulls of Popes, the decrees of councils, the decisions of assemblies, the recommendations of conventions, or the precedents of certain eminent D.D.'s, as giving great importance to religious ceremonies and plans, and whilst the simple institutions and orders established by Zion's King, are pronounced by such, as inert and inefficient; a thus saith the Lord, is that alone, which to the true disciple of Jesus gives beauty to a religious rite, and renders it precious in his sight; and without that nothing can give value to a ceremony in his estimation. The knowledge that his Lord has commanded it, is to the believer, a ground of glorying in what he performs as religious, which no sarcasm, no reproach of men, can diminish in his esteem. With this plea, he with confidence can face councils, and kings in justification of his acts. In a word, the escaped of Israel would put on Christ as their only beauty, and glory alone in the conquests of his grace.

As the fruit of the earth – Christ is to the escaped of Israel, excellent and comely, or for excellency and for comeliness.

First: Christ viewed as the fruit of the earth in relation to his atonement. Whilst those who follow new systems, divest the atonement of Christ of its divine excellency, representing it as indefinite, uncertain, and an unsafe thing to trust in for salvation; even practically, ascribing more direct effect to tears, repentance, and prayers of an individual toward making his peace with God, than to the blood of Christ; and presumptuously boast of a virtue in missionary money to save souls which the death of Christ would leave to sink to hell; those, who by grace, have escaped those delusions, not only have seen the entire deficiency of everything else to redeem them from destruction, and to make their peace with God, but have also revealed to them by the Holy Ghost, such an excellency in the atonement of Christ, that with confidence they trust their whole salvation there; and knowing its excellency, from its meeting their own ruined, helpless case, they feel the assurance that not a soul for whom Christ died can be lost.

Second: From the little which has been said in these days, of the work of Christ, and the abundance that has been said, of what men can and must do to save themselves and others; we must judge that the multitude of professors see no comeliness in the atonement of Christ. But the escaped of Israel see such a comeliness in it, that they not only delight to look upon it themselves, but they wish constantly to be presenting it to the view of others, as the way of salvation. They feel that there is a kind of peculiar comeliness or suitableness (as the word might be rendered,) in it to their case. They feel its suitableness, as meeting the awful guilt and pollution of their case, from which nothing but the blood of the Son of God could redeem and cleanse them; as honoring the Divine law, and maintaining the purity of the Divine throne, whilst it constitutes a channel through which mercy flows freely to them, as condemned sinners; and bringing them to feel their entire dependence for salvation on that God against whom they had sinned, cutting off all boasting, excepting in the grace of God and all glorying save in the cross of Christ.

Third: Christ viewed as that fruit which the earth from the beginning was destined to bring forth. The believer has seen such an emptiness in the world, and such an excellency and comeliness in this fruit, that he has been made willing to give up the world with all its allurements as his inheritance, and to take Christ as his only portion. Whilst others manifest a disposition to make worldly gain of all their religious acts; the child of grace, however much he may, at times, be tried by a worldly mind, when brought to the test will cheerfully forego all worldly advantages, for Christ and for the honor of his cause. The world without Christ, can afford the believer no happiness, no real enjoyment; with the assurance that Christ is his, and he is Christ's, he is happy in any situation; the frowns of the world cannot mar his peace.

It is true, that in the present tried state of the church, the believer has often to mourn in darkness; many and long are the seasons when his Son of righteousness withdraws his shining, when he dares hardly say, that he sees any beauty and glory in Christ, when he doubts whether he ever has known the excellency and comeliness of Christ in truth. But can he in those gloomy periods find anything in the world to make up the deficiency he feels, or to satisfy the mind? No, he is like the lonely dove, which mourns the absence of her mate. But even these gloomy feelings afford him a gleam of hope that he has known something of Christ, and that he shall again be brought forth to the light. And at times, his mind experiences a temporary relief from the application of some precious promise to his case, from a manifestation of the love of God to him, or from a review of his past experiences. The prophecy before us, as I understand it, gives the precious assurance, that at the period intended, when the apostate ones have got to the worst, then they who are escaped of Israel, will realize such beauty and glory in Christ as the branch of the Lord, such excellency and comeliness in him as the fruit of the earth, that their minds will be fully sustained under whatever persecutions they may be called to experience, and with the disciples of old, will "take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves, that they have in heaven a better and an enduring substance." Hence also will be fulfilled the prophecy of Zechariah, that, "At evening time it shall be light." Zech.14:7.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., Feb.9th, 1837.

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.3.

Verse 3,4: "And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem; when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning."

We have here a purer state of the gospel church mentioned as succeeding the period referred to in the preceding verses. But to arrive at this purity, the visible churches must be purged of God, from their filth and blood, or from their borrowed schemes, represented under the figure of vain female ornaments, in the latter verses of the 3rd chapter.

As the state of the church described in verse 3, is the result of what God will do to the daughters of Zion, as mentioned in verse 4, and consequently in the order of events, follows verse 4; I will notice the latter verse first.

Before speaking of the filth of the daughters of Zion, I will speak more particularly of what is properly intended by the daughters of Zion. In No.1, I represented them rather as corrupted or fallen off gospel churches, but on a further examination of the subject, I am convinced that we must understand gospel churches at large; that is, those constituted upon gospel principles and order, and still professing to be on that ground, whether fallen away in reality or not.

The terms daughter and daughters are frequently used in scripture, to denote a people, or people dependent on that which is represented as the mother, either in regard to government or by descent. Thus we read of the daughter of Babylon, of Edom, of Egypt, &c., denoting the community or people under those respective governments. So also we read of the daughters of Samaria, of Sodom, of Tyrus, meaning the different towns or cities dependent on the government of those metropolises. When the people of the Jews are meant; I think the term daughter in the singular is used, as the daughters of Zion, of Jerusalem, of my people, &c., and with propriety, for the Jews remain, as they ever have been, one peculiar people. But the term daughters is also used in reference to the gospel church, or that people of whom Christ is the Salvation and the King. As in Isaiah 62:11, "Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh;" and Zech. 9:9, "Rejoice greatly O daughter of Zion; shout O daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee," &c. The term daughters of Zion is used only in this prophecy; that is, in this passage and in the preceding chapter, verse 16, 17; and in Song 3:11, and as before observed refers to the gospel church as divided into branches. In Song 3:11, considering Solomon as representing Christ, we can I think understand no other than gospel churches represented by the term daughters of Zion, and also by the term daughters of Jerusalem in the preceding verse.

That the term in the passage under consideration cannot be designed to represent the Jews is to me evident. For 1st, if the passage be applied to them, in reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, then the prophecy fails, for there were none left in Jerusalem, and those who were spared of them have not been holy in the special sense of our text.

2nd. If it were applied to them, as a scattered people, and in reference to what is future, I think the scriptures will not support such reference; for, not only does the Master speak of the days of God's judgment upon them being shortened for the elects sake (Matt.24:22,) and the Apostle said that, "the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost," (I Thes. 2:16,) but their being left in unbelief is rather for the sake of the Gentiles, than for purging away their iniquities, see Rom. 11:11-13. Besides, though according to the declaration, Lev. 26:39, they are left to pine away in their sins, yet instead of being threatened with any future judgments for cleansing them, God has promised to cleanse them from all their filthiness, &c, by sprinkling clean water upon them, &c. Ezek. 36:25-33.

The term daughters of Jerusalem, or of Zion, properly belongs to the gospel churches, not only as they are the descendants, in a strict sense, of the church at Jerusalem, but also the gospel church, in its visible form, lay in embryo and in type, in the Jewish church state. Hence Zion is represented as travailing in the birth of Christ and of the gospel church called a nation, Isa.66:7-12.

I therefore see no other place to look for the filth spoken of in the passage under consideration, than the visible churches of Christ, or those constituted according to the pattern in the mother church at Jerusalem.

In entering upon this part of my subject, I am admonished that I shall have to refer to portions of the scriptures and use allusions, which to the polite will appear unseemly. But whilst I would avoid an unnecessary use of expressions or allusions, which might offend the most delicate, I believe every figure, and every illustration, employed by the Holy Ghost to have been chosen with wisdom and propriety, and to be holy in their use; I therefore, dare not neglect on proper occasion, to bring forward the instruction thereby given, for fear of being thought impolite. The fact is, that if we could examine those texts of scripture, to which I shall have occasion to refer, with that sober mindedness of which I may again speak, instead of being offended at the indelicacy of the figures employed we should only be disgusted at that wretched vileness of our own hearts, and with those awful pollutions which even the churches of Christ have contracted by their inconstancies, and which nothing short of such figures would represent.

I shall notice the term filth or filthiness, as the Hebrew word is more generally rendered, in two senses in which it is used in the scriptures, as being found in the visible churches.

1st. It denotes excremental uncleanness – see Isa.28:8. This figure strongly illustrates the vile eruptions of our hearts. Says the Psalmist, I hate vain thoughts, Psal.119:113. So I think every child of grace will say; and yet, in this day of declensions, instead of covering over these thoughts, as they arise from our hearts, according to the law relating to the figure, (Deut.23:13,) how many of us too often suffer them to flow disgustingly out to public view, in our conversation and actions. Addison, I think it is, has said,

Pocket Trott 1.0 824 of 1338

"If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of a wise man, and that of a fool. There are infinite reveries, numberless extravagancies, and a succession of vanities, which pass through both. The great difference is, the first knows how to pick and cull his thoughts for conversation, &c." The same may be said in reference to a prudent christian, and others, with this exception, that vain thoughts and conversation indulged in, generally engender other thoughts and actions of the same, or a more corrupt kind. This course again leads others, with whom we have intercourse, especially if they have confidence in us, into the same habits. Upon this point, confident I am, from the information I have received, that persons who can look back with distinct recollection on the subject, see a very great difference between the baptist churches now in their outward acts, and those of that period, and also in the general walk of members now and then. There was formerly a regularity of deportment, a strict integrity, a sober mindedness, a separation from the world &c., manifested in the whole walk of the baptists, which is seldom seen at this day. Now we are much more assimilated to the world in our outward walk. I am no less confident that no christian can read the New Testament with attention, without feeling conscious that we fall very short of the pattern there drawn of the walk of a disciple of Jesus. I would not have it understood that I am an advocate for that sanctimonious face, and air, and voice which some assume on special occasions. I dislike a mask. I have thought that a disgust at these borrowed appearances, has been one means of leading some of us to indulge too much in lightness, and to lay too little restraint upon our vain thoughts from flying out. And the flowing out of evil thoughts, is that which defileth the man, see Matt.15:19,20. The fact is, that sober mindedness, whilst it restrains us from lightness and corruption, has a direct tendency to promote cheerfulness in mind and appearance. This is evident to the experienced christian. I have touched but one point of this subject. The corruption has spread its defilement over us as preachers. It has produced on us too much of worldly speculations, and ideas of worldly respectability, on our entering and pursuing the ministry. We are not reconciled to be accounted the filth of the world; we therefore defile our consciences by conforming too much to the notions and spirit of the world.

A similar contamination has been extended to the churches. It may be seen in our discipline and order, or rather in the manner in which they are maintained; in a disposition to construe scriptural doctrine and commands with as favorable a leaning to the prejudices of the world as we can, &c. My brethren generally may not view these things thus, or be perplexed with them as I am, but I think I speak the experience of some at least, when I complain of not being in any relation I sustain, what I believe the primitive disciples were; and I may add, that I find myself altogether inadequate to bring myself, in feeling and practice, to what I believe a disciple ought to be.

But perhaps this figure may more properly refer to such as Jude speaks of, as having crept in unawares, and whom he denominates filthy dreamers, and who instead of preaching the word preach their own speculations in religion, or the lucubrations of those, who in more senses than one, have studied out their systems of divinity by night.

The other sense which I shall notice, in which the filthiness is used in the scriptures, is its denoting the abominations of idolatry, as illustrated by the uncleanness of an elicit and debasing intercourse of the sexes. It is thus used, Ezek. 16:36. The Lord frequently uses the figure of adultery, &c., to illustrate the baseness of his professed people in departing from him and his ways, and choosing their own ways and religion. Adultery is strictly the proper figure. In relation to national Israel, the covenant relation in which they stood to God was similar to the marriage of man and wife. For whilst God chose and redeemed them to be a peculiar people unto himself, he required them to have no other gods before him; to honor him as the exclusive object of their fear, their worship, their trust, &c. Hence he says unto them, I am married unto you. Jer.3:14. Although many who may admit the truth of these remarks as relating to national Israel, seem to have no sense of their just application to Christ and his church, yet the scriptures authorize me to say, that this relation in its fullest and strictest sense, even as in the case of Adam and Eve, exists spiritually between them, see Eph. 5:22-33. Hence there is evidently a corresponding baseness manifested by the visible churches of Christ, when they depart from him as their only Lord, fear, trust, &c., and go after other lovers, or embrace systems, and practice forms of religion, which he has never instituted. Consequently the figurative language employed in Jer.2:33-36, 3:1-5, Ezek., chapters 16 & 23, Hosea chapters 1,2,3, and other places, serve to illustrate, as well the extreme vileness of the corrupted daughters of Zion, in tampering with false religions, as of the Jews in practicing idolatry. Does not the Apostle so teach us, when he says, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning?" Rom.15:4. Again he says, after naming some of the corruptions of Israel, "Now these things happened unto them for examples; and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come." I Cor.10:11. I will therefore briefly notice a few of the instances in which the daughters of Zion in our day, have like ancient Israel and Judah, defiled themselves, as shown by the Prophets above referred to. For instance, as Ezekiel charges Jerusalem, Ezek.16:25, so the baptist churches, for some years back, have to a great extent, welcomed to their embrace every stranger that passed by; have given countenance to every new religious society and religious scheme; have admitted to their pulpits, every one who came as a baptist preacher, whatever kind of a gospel he may bring; yea, they have manifested a fondness for new things, and a great partiality for the vermilion painted gentlemen (Ezek.23:14) of the schools, in preference to those plain gospel preachers, whom the knowledge of their own hearts, has made humble and unassuming, and whose knowledge of the preciousness of Jesus has made them solicitous, to know nothing, and to hold forth nothing, in their preaching, save Christ and him crucified. Again, as Ezekiel depicts the extreme baseness of Jerusalem, chap.16:32-34, so with the baptist churches; the strangers above mentioned, have not come to them, without their hire. The churches have lavished upon them their contributions of money. Had these been withheld, the strangers had not come to them. So, also like their type, other denominations and societies have not followed them to imitate their doctrine and order; but they have followed others, see Ezek.23:14-30. When they saw the church of Rome sending out their Jesuit Missionaries, they doted upon the missionary plans; when others formed their Home Mission Society for securing the whole West to themselves, they must also have to do with this scheme, and for the same object; when others turned Sunday Schools into a religious machine for discipling the children of the country sectarianly to themselves; they also must have in their embrace the lovely object; when the enlightened of France employed tracts to disseminate infidelity, they also fell in love with this scheme, and must have Tract Societies in their bosom. We might follow on the detail in reference to Theological Schools and other things, but enough has been said to show the filthiness of the daughters of Zion.

I will conclude this head with one other remark; the idolatrous Jews that went into Egypt, answered Jeremiah thus, "When we burnt incense to the gueen of heaven, and poured out drink offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink offerings unto her, without our men?" Jer.44:19. So the mission baptists say, that since they have commenced practicing these new measures, their churches have increased much more rapidly than before. Yea, from time to time in their reports, they glory on this account over those churches which remain faithful to Christ and to his doctrine and institutions, and wish no increase, but such as have him for their Father. These mission baptists and churches also justify their connection with those babylonish strangers, to refer back to the figure of Ezekiel, on the ground that they are thereby converting the people, and increasing the family of Christ much faster than it would increase were they to remain faithful to him as their only Lord and Husband. But, alas, for those churches, when the Lord shall visit them with the spirit of judgment and the spirit of burning! Will he then claim their base born children as his sons? No, they shall be burned up as stubble, and it shall be with such churches as with those Jews in Egypt, above referred to, according to the declaration of Jeremiah, verses 26-28, of the same 44th chapter, or like Jerusalem shall they be destroyed.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., Feb.24th, 1837.

P.S. On looking over the 1st Number of my remarks on this 4th chapter as published in No.5 of this Volume of the SIGNS, I discover that I expressed myself in one instance, in a way quite contrary to my views of the subject. The instance is where I commence remarking on the 1st verse of chapter

4. I say, "And in that day, at that period, when it shall come, in which God shall thus visit these corrupted daughters of Zion for their abominations, they will have arrived at such a pitch of madness, &c." From which expression it would appear that I meant to represent the seven women as the same with the daughters of Zion. It is true that I afterwards show that I consider them entirely different; which of course appears a contradiction to the sentence just quoted. I will therefore here say, as I shall have occasion hereafter to show, that the daughters of Zion, or those constituted according to the pattern of the mother church at Jerusalem, will, excepting in cases where they have gone clear off so as not to have any spiritual life or living members in them, he purged and kept distinct from the Beast or their Image. I ought therefore have said in that passage – And in that day, &c., in which God shall thus visit these corrupted daughters of Zion for their abominations, the various denominations or religious societies other than gospel churches, will have arrived at such a pitch of madness, &c. I will just remark that there can in reality, be but little difference between the various religious combinations, excepting in the enormities they practice, however constituted, if not constituted according to gospel order - that is, whether constituted on the basis of money, of birth-right or any other human devise, whether by law or otherwise. It is true, the scriptures make a distinction, in name, between the two later classes, representing the one as being wedded to the kings and governments of the earth, the other class as having or seeking to have intercourse with the governments of the world, but not established by law. Hence the one class are called queens, the other concubines, as in Songs 6:9. For these as might be showed, do in many instances praise the apostolic or gospel church, but only the daughters bless her.

S.T.

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.4.

Verse 5: "And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night, for upon all the glory shall be a defense."

I have already remarked that the cleansing which the churches are to pass through, as described in verses 3 & 4, is a preparing of them for entering upon that happy state, which is to succeed the destruction of the man of sin. In this, and the following verse, some things relative to that purified state of the church are brought to view. In the intervening time, when the churches, by the spirit of judgment and the spirit of burning, are prepared for it, and before the man of sin is destroyed the Witnesses must be killed. The affliction consequent upon this event will be short – but three years and a half. Hence says the prophet, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian; he shall smite thee with the rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee after the manner of Egypt.

For yet a little while and the indignation shall cease, and my anger in their destruction." Isa.10:24 & 25. It would seem from this that the Assyrian is to smite the people of Zion, with the rod, the sign of civil authority, and to lift up the staff against them; the crosier, the sign of ecclesiastical authority, with the attempt to bring them into bondage to his ceremonies, as the Egyptian attempted to keep Israel in bondage.

The descriptive expressions used in the verse under consideration are, as I understand them, applicable to the church in all periods; the promise that of an increased blessing at the period in view. I will notice the expressions having this general application. First, the dwelling places of Mount Zion. This has evidently a reference to the distinct branches of Zion. The expression dwelling places answers well to another figurative expression found in Jeremiah 31:1, "At the same time saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel," &c. As spiritual Israel or the Church of Christ is divided into these families, so each has its home or dwelling place. Thus the church is called a house, and is said to be builded, &c., in Jer. 30:18 – the dwelling places are called tents.

As these figurative expressions are calculated to cast some light upon the relation of gospel churches, one to the other, I will offer a few reflections upon the term families of Israel, as well as that of dwelling places.

First. The families of Israel. This expression, whilst it shows the church divided into families or distinct branches, shows also a peculiar relation as existing between them. Though national Israel was divided into families, these families were not independent of each other. They were bound together by the ties of brotherhood, were one people, had one father, Abraham, lived under one covenant, under one set of laws, and bound to see that each other observed those laws. See for instance the law concerning idolatry, Deut.13:12 - 18, "If thou shalt hear say in one of thy cities, which the Lord thy God hath given thee to dwell there, saying, Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which ye have not known; then shalt thou inquire, and make search, and ask diligently; and behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought among you; thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the sword, destroying it utterly, and all that is therein, &c."

The spiritual relation among the families of Zion, can be no less close than was the natural relation of the families of national Israel. These are members of the same one Body, profess the same salvation, faith, order, &c., own the same Lord, have the same father, (not as Abraham was the father of the nation of Israel,) but Christ the Everlasting Father of his people, being the Husband of his bride in all her branches, is the Head of each gospel family, and the immediate Father of all their true born children. The ties therefore of fellowship among these ought to be considered no less binding than were the ties of nature among the other. If when one of the families of Israel were reported to have gone into the idolatry of that dispensation, the other families to clear themselves from being accessories to the same crime and to vindicate the honor of God and his religion, were required to enquire diligently, &c., and finding the thing so, to destroy the idolatrous family, or city, with the edge of the sword, that is, so cut them off from their land of promise, and to cut off the natural relation that existed; can it be any less obligatory on the families of spiritual Israel when one of the families, or churches shall be reported to have gone into the idolatry of this dispensation, to enquire concerning it, and if found true, to cut off such family from the claims of relationship to them, by severing publicly the ties of church fellowship, and thus to wipe the stain of such crime from the religion of Christ, which they profess, and to clear themselves from the charge of holding fellowship with those who thus basely desert from the God of salvation.

Second. The dwelling places of Mount Zion. These, as already said, are the homes of spiritual Israel. This therefore brings to view the separate interest of each family. Here each family apart meets in its family circle, attends to its own affairs, partakes of the family repasts, if the Master is present, they are truly feasts of fat things. Here they retire from the storms that are abroad, and if the Father of the family is with them, feeling composed under his protecting wing, the raging without is like the storm against the wall; they hear the sound of the blast, but it only makes them feel the preciousness of their shelter. Here they talk over the incidents of the way, which each has met with, whether of joy, or of grief; where proper affection, or fellowship reigns in a family, with what heartfelt confidence do they unburden their minds one to the other, and listen to the advice of the older members of the family, especially to the words of their Father. Whilst their friends, who may be occasionally with them, participate in the repasts, the joys, sorrows, &c., in the family circle, there are certain circumstances connected with the family circle, and dwelling place, which it would be intrusion, in these friends, to intermeddle with, unless requested. I have here drawn, probably in too high colors, the happiness of these dwelling places to suit the experience of most of our churches at this day, but some of our brethren have in recollection pleasant scenes like these, in their church relations in times past, and such scenes will again be realized, when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the

As a brother has recently, by letter, requested me to give my views, through the SIGNS, relative to the propriety of our Old School Brethren uniting with a mixed church, where the original constitution was sound; and it seems with some degree of propriety to come in, in this connection. I will offer some additional thoughts relative to that point.

First. When a person is received as an inmate into a family, it is usually under the impression that he comes in for peace, and with a disposition to submit to the order and regulations of the family. If however, disorderly members have been received, the order of the family is attempted to be subverted, and confusion is in the house, it appears to me not consistent with the gospel of grace, to become an inmate in this confusion. As I have already remarked, there is a common interest among the families of spiritual Israel, or ought to be, if therefore wickedness or disorder prevails in one family, others will feel the wound, and for the honor of the cause seek to correct the abuse, but if the disorder so prevails as not to be corrected by the counsel and admonition of brethren, and if the members of the church professedly adhering to the original constitution will not clear the church from the disorder by exercising gospel discipline, or themselves from it, by separation, they themselves become implicated in the disorder, and hence orderly churches should disown them, until they see their error and correct it.

Perhaps the typical law concerning leprosy in a house, may cast some light upon this subject, as being strictly applicable to it. For I think a little reflection will convince any one that the house in the type, built up of stones, &c., can only represent the spiritual house built up of lively stones, or those professedly so. This law is found in Lev.14:33-53. Verse 35, "And he that owneth the house shall come to the priest saying, &c." The owner of the house is the Lord Jesus, the chief shepherd; but the elders of the church are pastors and shepherds, and they should not be hirelings, or take the oversight of the flock for filthy lucre, but being ensamples to the flock, and as having an interest in their welfare; and being watchman, it is their duty to watch and give warning at the approach of any evil or error.

The owner was not to decide himself on the leprosy, but must go to the priest. The Lord Jesus is the high priest of our profession, but his people are made kings and priests unto God and the Lamb. We have in the New Testament the decision of our High Priest, through his apostles, upon all things belonging to his church; and it is the duty of the priests, the members of the church, to bring every difficulty to the test of the word. The house was first to be emptied of everything, &c. Does this not teach that the church cannot travel while she is in difficulty, owing to corruptions, errors, &c., and therefore ought to suspend the ordinances, and everything else religious, to attend to the removing of the plague. Must not the communion and worship of the church, if attended to whilst the minds of the brethren are fretted with the confusion and disorder among them, partake of the uncleanness of the plague? Verse 37.

The signs of the leprosy. If the plague be in the walls of the house with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, &c. All error, whether in doctrine, in order, or in discipline, is of an eating nature; it takes away from the foundation, the truth of the gospel, or from the liberty, the privileges, the consolation, &c., of the people of God, and leaves a hollow, an unevenness in the walls, in the harmony and fellowship of the church, and something wanting to form a consistency.

These errors when introduced appear greenish, young, something new, which attract, by their novelty, are new gods that have come newly up. They also assume a reddish hue, in a little while they burn, in their votaries with anger against the truth and those who advocate it. It must be in the wall to occasion this attention, in those who are built into the church, and effect the plastering, the fellowship. Verse 38.

The priest, after looking upon the plague, shuts up the house seven days for further observation. So the church, having taken this difficulty under investigation, it is proper she should not proceed too hastily, but give time for cool reflection to those who have imbibed the error, or are under the influence of the corruption. Seven days, that is from one regular meeting to the next, whether it be weekly or longer.

Verses 39,40 & 41. If on the priest's further examination, the plague be spread, &c. If these persons, instead of seeing the evil of their error and repenting, become more confirmed, and are trying to disseminate it, &c., as the stones of the wall in which the plague was, were to be taken out and thrown into an unclean place, so these members, being heretics, and having received the first and second admonition, should be rejected, cast out into the world. The walls of the house were to be scraped inside. What heart searchings do these difficulties in the church, produce in the people of God? How careful to clear themselves in this matter, should they be?

And to cast away all the dust they find in themselves, and all the coldness and formality which had taken the place of true fellowship in the church, whilst this error or corruption was tolerated? See II Cor.7:11. Verse 42. They were to take other stones and put in the places of those removed, so the stations in the church of those removed, if officers, are to be filled with other members, and the church again to move on, and receive into fellowship such as the Lord may add unto them. They were also to take fresh mortar and plaster the house. Not untempered mortar, nor are they to daub the wall. And is it not the genuine effort of a church of Christ's having passed through such heart searching difficulties, that the members which have stood fast, get fresh evidences of their own, and of each other's gracious state, feel a fresh and increased fellowship for each other, and now move on with affection and harmony? Verse 43-45. The type goes on to say that if the plague come again after the stones have been removed, &c., the house is to be broken down, &c. In this, and all other simple types, there must be a deficiency to shadow forth the substance clearly. The one figure could not illustrate the course of procedure, where but a few members of a church are affected with a plague of error, &c., and at the same time, show the proper course, where the majority, or body of the church is effected with it, but by this supposition and regulation. But this addition I think sufficiently clear to be understood, shadows forth the case in distinction from the preceding, of an error or corruption prevailing in the church, so that in regular order, the sound part being the minority cannot deal with, and exclude the errorists. In this case the house is to be broken down, or in other words, the true, orderly members are to come out of the disordered body which will in effect be pulling it down as a Church of Christ, however firm it may continue to stand as an unclean anti-christian interest. Or there being none to come out, other orderly churches should disown it. Verses 46 & 47. Which speak of persons contracting uncleanness by going into the house, eating, or sleeping in it during its being shut up, teaches that those who extend tokens of fellowship to a church while in its manifested unclean, disordered state, participate in the sin of the corruption by countenancing it. In reference to the form of cleansing the house, Dr. Watt's brief application of the type, though not properly an explanation must suffice at this time:

"No outward forms can make me clean; The leprosy lies deep within.

No bleeding bird, nor bleeding beast, Nor hyssop branch, nor sprinkling priest, Nor running brook, nor flood, nor sea, Can wash the dismal stain away.

Jesus, my God, thy blood alone, Hath power sufficient to atone."

So feels the child of grace under a sense of his various wanderings.

To return to my subject. The term assemblies as connected with the dwelling places, is I think used to show what I have tried to keep in view, that by the dwelling places are not to be understood any of those material places which the fashionable world call churches, but the assembly or the gathering together of the disciples in one place.

I will now defer the remainder of this subject to another letter; and here meet with a few remarks, an objection which I am aware will be made to my quoting so much from the Levitical law, to illustrate gospel order. 1st. An inspired apostle has authorized us to consider this law as having a shadow of good things to come. Heb.10:1. Being then shadows or types given by divine revelation, they must have been designed by infinite wisdom to teach the knowledge of the substance. And thus the apostle employs many of them in the epistle just quoted. See for instance, Hebrews, chapter 9. 2nd. We are told that, "all scripture is given by the inspiration of God, and is profitable, &c." II Tim.3:16. 3rd. Paul says thus relative to his preaching, "Saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." Acts 26:22. With such an example, and such authority, I think I shall be sustained in these references to the Old Testament, providing always that I do not darken counsel with words without knowledge.

Yours, as ever.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., April 26th, 1837.

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.4.

(Continued)

Verse 5. "And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a defense."

I come now to notice the expression, A cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night. The figure is a little varied, but the spiritual idea is, no doubt the same as that represented by the pillar of cloud and pillar of fire in which the Lord went before Israel by day to lead them in the way, and by night to give them light, to go by day and night. Neh.9:19. This I take uniformly understood as typifying the gospel ministry, which is given for a guide and light to the Israel of God, by day and night. As this cloud, when the angel moved between Israel and the Egyptians, was a cloud and darkness to the latter, whilst it was light to the former, (Exod.14:19, 20,) so is the gospel ministry; it is a light to the people of God, but darkness to the legalists or bondmen of our day; and a faithful gospel ministry will in a great measure keep a separation between the two. As the cloud produced a refreshing shadow to Israel in that parched desert during the day, so is the preached gospel to the people of God, when scorched with persecution or legality, &c. Again, there are other instances in which clouds are made to represent the ministry of the word as in God's covenant with Noah. He says, "I do set my bow in the cloud;" again, "And it shall come to pass, when I bring a cloud over the earth, that the bow shall be seen in the cloud." Gen. 9:13,14. So in the ministry of God's raising up, the bow of the everlasting covenant is always to be seen. Again, Zechariah says, (10:1,) "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain; so the Lord shall make bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, &c." So the gospel clouds or ministry, which the Lord maketh are bright clouds - not towering - and they give refreshing rain. Hence false teachers are compared by Jude to clouds without water, carried about by winds, of course only calculated to deceive and bewilder those who would follow them.

But I will notice the other expression; that is, the smoke by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night. It is a well known fact, that when the fire burns sufficiently clear, that which appears as smoke by day, is a shining flame by night. Hence, the smoke here spoken of, which is as the shining of a flaming torch by night must proceed from a burning fire. I had occasion in the preceding number to show that truth or doctrine of the gospel is comparable to fire and is so repeatedly denominated in the scriptures. It is equally true that pure gospel preaching proceeds from the fire of divine truth burning in the heart of the preacher. Thus Jeremiah, when he would refrain from speaking any more in the name of the Lord, says, "His word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay." Jer. 20:9. Thus Paul says, "A necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." I Cor.9:16. So when Isaiah was to have his mind prepared to offer himself willingly to go and publish the message of the Lord, and was depressed under a sense of his entire uncleanness, "then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar." Isa.6:6. Thus the true gospel minister often feels his entire unfitness to preach the gospel, on account of the awful corruptions of his heart; but when the gospel in its cleansing nature is applied by the Holy Spirit, to his case he goes forth willingly, and with delight preaches that gospel which he so sensibly feels the power thereof in his own heart. Every gospel minister also knows how much of a task it is to attempt to preach when he has to go to the people with a cold, stale, relation of what he knows to be sure, is truth; and how pleasant it is to preach when his lips are touched with a live coal from off the altar, when there is given to him a fresh view, by faith, of the doctrine of the cross. When the fire thus burns in the heart of the preacher, the people of God will see and feel the effects of the preaching. If it is a time of darkness with them, they will see the shining of the flaming fire, and know that the gospel cloud is still near as their guide. If it is a time of light to their soul, they will feel the evidence that the true fire is burning in the preacher, and as Israel by marking their course by the cloud, knew that they were traveling in the right way, so these by comparing their experience with this gospel smoke, know that they and the preacher are taught by the same Spirit, and that their teaching is in accordance with the word. If true gospel preaching is like the smoke which rises hot from the fire, then that preaching which is so fashionable as this day, and which is no other than a flowery composition made up in the coolness of the study, of parts, of gospel doctrine, of human reason, of the science of the schools, and of quotations from the scriptures, and from the poets, or consist of recitations of what the preacher has stored his mind with, of dead men's brains; though it may reflect the colors of the rainbow from being opposite to Christ, the believer's sun, and with its beauties, please the fancy of the hearers, still not being sent forth by the fire of gospel truth, being not the effect of heat, but of cold, it is nothing but fog. So the people of God have ever found it by its producing chills and fevers upon them.

Another kind of preaching, very popular, is more like a cloud of dust than smoke. It consists of exhortations to creaturely duties, and of legal threatenings for failures to perform. And as dust it clouds the eyes and obstructs the breathings, so this kind of preaching beclouds the faith of the believer, when exposed to its influence, leading his views off from Christ, and directing them to his own doings for comfort and acceptance, and by obscuring his views of Christ, it hinders his prayers, or obstructs the breathings of his soul.

In reference to smoke, properly so called, it is sometimes unpleasant, and to weak eyes and weak nerves it is painful; but this is only when the fire does not burn clear, or there is some obstruction in the atmosphere or otherwise to its ascending up. So when the gospel preacher is left to himself, and his mind becomes confused, his preaching is often unpleasant to gospel hearers. And when the faith of believers has become weakened by their being overcome by the world or other temptations, or when they have been exposed to the blasts of the winds of doctrine, the declaration of clear gospel truth becomes painful to them. But still the preaching of the gospel will be of use in such cases; for as smoke expels noxious vapors, frost, &c., and drives away mosquitoes, so faithful gospel preaching, though at first painful to the believer in a backslidden state, will be likely to produce a reaction, reclaim him from his wanderings, and expel those vapors and frosts which had preyed upon his soul. It will drive from him also those swarms of modern mendicants, which had been sucking - not his blood - but an eleven-penny bit here, and an eleven-penny bit there, whilst he was exposed to their ravages, in the darkness of new-schoolism, or in the swamps of middle-groundism. It is not the sucking of blood, but the person infused, by the mosquitoes that causes the swelling and pain; so it is not the extracting by these traveling agents of the money from the pockets of those on whom they prey, that does the mischief, but the infusing into their minds the vain idea that they are thus doing something to help on God's work, and the leading them to bid God-speed to this iniquitous course. Some reasons why the gospel ministry is pre-figured by smoke, I shall have occasion to notice before I close this.

I will now notice the special promise contained in this passage; namely, that "the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke &c." The import of this evidently is, that in that day the Lord will provide all his churches with the stated ministry of the word – with "pastors after his own heart, who shall feed his people with knowledge and understanding;" for they shall be of the Lord's creating, such as the Lord shall qualify and call to the work. What then will become of the various machinery for manufacturing ministers, and the multitude which they have produced? They will all fall; no place any longer to be found for them among the churches of Christ.

As this happy day has not yet arrived, and I have no idea of men's hastening it, I will here notice an enquiry which naturally arises from this subject, relative to the present time; namely, whether it is now the duty of each church to have its own pastor, and preaching every Lord's day? That in the apostolic age, elders were ordained in every church, and the churches met regularly for worship on the first day of the week is to me clear. The Romish Church appears to have continued this as a uniform practice. Those denominations which have reformed from that church, have also generally followed the same practice; perhaps not so much in reference to apostolic example, as from their bondage to the notion of a legal Sabbath. The Baptists in England, when they began to aim at being on an equality with the other dissenting denominations, as noticed in a former number, seem also to have copied after them in this thing. As the Baptist emigrants from England to this country, have formerly, more generally settled in the Northern and Middle States, and thither their educated preachers have principally been imported; there we find a general conformity to the English Baptists. There a Baptist College was early established; and there, were early established the notions of a legal Sabbath, and of having a pastor to each church, and he somewhat educated for the work, if it was only to go to a common school, or to some supposed Gamaliel for a time, after his first impressions to preach.

But the early start of the Baptists in the Southern States, appears to have been in a great measure independent of this foreign influence. Take Virginia for a specimen; a few plain preachers came here from the Middle States, and a few others the Lord soon raised under their ministry of the same uneducated stamp. The motive which these had to preach, appears to have been their love to Christ and his cause, their pay mostly persecution, and their guide, as to their field of labors, the openings of Providence; and their calls here and there, where there was an anxiety manifested to hear. Thus following the leadings of Providence, they preached one Lord's day in this place, another in that; and as the Lord raised up churches under their ministry at different places, instead of confining their pastoral care to one church, and leaving the others destitute, they preached each, to several churches exercising a pastoral care over them. Hence the difference in the customs of the Southern Baptists from those in the more Northern States and in England. The question is, which order is most correct? But say some of my Northern brethren, can there be any question upon this point, when in the apostolic age, elders were ordained in every church? Do you not hold that apostolic example is binding upon the churches in every age? I do; but there is no example, remember, for a legal Sabbath to be observed by the churches, nor for the churches to provide themselves with gifts for the ministry, or to make themselves preachers, or to establish schools to make preachers for them; that is in the scriptures; in the practices of the two Beasts there are examples enough of this sort. The case before us is similar to that of adding members. There was an instance in the church at Jerusalem of three thousand being added in one day. The number then added depended altogether on the sovereign act of the Holy Ghost in regenerating them; the number therefore can be no example for churches in after ages to imitate. The order of their being added, was then established by apostolic example, as the order in all after ages; such as being first baptized after receiving the word with joy and then being added to the churches, &c. So in the case of pastors or elders. The Master gives but one direction upon the point of providing for this office. It is this; "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." Matt.9:37. This amounts to a prohibition of the churches attempting to provide them themselves. In accordance with this is the Apostle's testimony; namely, that the Lord Jesus when he ascended up on high, gave gifts unto men; and this, not according to the notions of men, but according to the purpose of the Father, for he received these gifts. According to this purpose, he gave some Apostles, &c., and some pastors and teachers. Eph.4:8-11. Consequently it is not the work of men or money to provide these. But then the ordaining to the work, those which the Lord gives for it, even to a plurality of elders in every church, is Apostolic example. The pattern for ordaining elders is given, as I think, in the case of Barnabas and Saul, Acts 13:2,3. As several worthy brethren differ from me on this point, I will beg the indulgence here to say – not to provoke disputation, but to explain my own views – that it was in defense of a cardinal point in our Old School principles, that on a former occasion, well recollected by some, I thought it important to write on this subject. I still attach more importance to the subject than some others do - not to the form, as a form simply considered – but on account of that point in our principles above referred to; namely, the perfection of the Scriptures as a Rule, both of Faith and Practice. Throw away Acts 13:2,3, as a pattern for ordaining to the ministry, and we find it appointed to ordain elders, without any direction or example by which to inform us in what this ordaining consists. And throw away Acts, chapter 6, as a pattern for appointing and setting apart to the office of deacons, and we shall have certain officers named in the apostolic churches, as in Phil.1:1 & I Tim.3:8, and no intimation given how they were introduced into the churches, what is their office, or how they are to be appointed to it. If the scriptures are thus deficient in those points, their perfection, as a Rule, is destroyed; we are at sea without compass or stars. Such a view of the revelation which God has made of the religion of his own appointing I cannot admit. To return to my subject; admit Acts 13:2,3, to be a pattern in the case, and we shall find the order for setting apart to the ministry, harmonizing with the testimony that the gifts are imparted by Christ according to the purpose of the Father, for they must first be designated to the office by the Holy Ghost; that is, in their special call to the work, before being ordained. Thus as is salvation, so is the gospel minister, the work of the Three that bear record in heaven.

Here is the grand error, upon this point, of the English and our Northern Baptists, they appear to have taken the example of ordaining those gifts which the Lord gave and manifested to the primitive churches as a pattern for providing themselves with a supply of preachers. And they not only have absorbed all the gifts for exhortation in furnishing their supply of preachers, but in many instances where those have offered who did not possess the requisite gifts, they have concluded that by sending them to some famed Gamaliel, or school, or college, an image of the gift might be carved out of the candidate's mind, or be stamped upon it by communicated ideas. Thus have they presumed to usurp that prerogative which the Lord has reserved in his own hands. And this awful presumption, with its accompanying filthiness and idolatry, has, lamentable to say, not been staid at the North, but all its evil consequences has overspread the South and West.

If it should be asked, Why are not the churches now as fully supplied with gifts as were those in the early ages of the gospel? I answer, because the Lord hath so purposed, hence the churches were left to corrupt their ways, and were allured and brought into the wilderness (Hosea 2:14,) which is of course a state of considerable privations. See also Psa.81:13-16. Hence when the Lord shall have performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and upon Jerusalem, he not only will give her, her vineyards from thence, (from the wilderness,) Hosea 2:15, but he willagain "create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, &c.," will furnish every church with a full supply of gifts of his own providing, and which he himself will call into active exercise. And this promise fully sustains the position I have taken; for it clearly presupposes that such was not the state of the churches previous to the period intended.

One more enquiry I must anticipate; namely, whether during the continuance of the wilderness state of the church, those gifts which the Lord does impart to the churches for the ministry, should be confined, each, to one particular church, or whether those endowed with them, should labor to feed the sheep and lambs of Christ, wherever they find them bleating for food, within the reasonable range of the locations respectively assigned to each by Providence? To me it appears clear, that the scriptural direction and example is in favor of a pastor or teachers extending the sphere of his labors beyond the limits of his one church. We read, it is true, of the elders of the church at Ephesus, and of elders being ordained in every church. These scriptures show that they are to take the oversight of the churches where their lot is cast, but cannot, I conceive, be justly construed to imply that their labors were to be confined each to one church.

Hence, Paul's address to the Ephesian elders; he says, "Take heed to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers." What are we to understand by all the flock in this case? The Apostle himself explains it in the next clause. "To feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Will any Old School Baptist say, that the church of God which he has purchased with his own blood, and which of course Christ loved and gave himself for, was no other than that particular branch or church planted at Ephesus? I think not. The direction then must be general, to feed the church of God over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers, that is to labor where he specially calls them, according to Acts 13:2, or in other words, wherever the Holy Ghost gives them to see it is their duty to go, there do the work of an overseer in taking heed of all the flock, to feed, not the goats, but the church of God, &c. Peter's direction to the elders which were among those to whom he wrote, is equally general – not to feed their respective flocks – that appears to be a more modern idea – but to feed the flock of God, not everywhere; that those elders could not do but which is among you, &c. That is, the flock of God is to be fed, and wherever the elders find it, among them or themselves among it, let their attention be turned to this work.

I now leave this, which may be considered a long digression, and come to the last clause of the verse under consideration; namely, "for upon all the glory shall be a defense." This evidently has reference to the preceding part of the verse.

The glory may be the glory of that purified state of the church, when the glory of the Lord shall have arisen upon her, and the Gentiles (the nations) shall come to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising. Isa.60:1-3. The defense, the Lord having set watchmen upon the walls of Jerusalem that will never hold their peace – that will see eye to eye, (Isa.62:6,) and the light of the gospel being so clear, the enemy will no more be able to make inroads with his other gospels, or to set up in the churches his ministers transformed into the apostles of Christ. Or the glory may be, the peculiar glory and light of the gospel in that day; and the defense, the dispensation of the gospel being still committed to men of like passions with others; this treasure will still be in earthen vessels. And herein is the reason I was to give, why the gospel ministry is compared to smoke. The smoke is not the pure fire, but the heat and light of the fire ascending through the evaporation it causes from the fuel. So the preached gospel is not the pure revelation of God which he makes of himself in Christ; but it is that revelation and truth irradiating the human mind, and through that denser medium shining forth for the instruction and comfort of the people of God with a tempered brightness, so that the word of life as thus declared and manifested unto us, we mortals, can look upon, and handle, can examine it deliberately and composedly. See I John 1:1-3. Hence by this defense upon the glorious brightness of the divine truth of the gospel of the Son of God, it is tempered to suit mortal vision.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., April 27th, 1837.

ON THE FOURTH CHAPTER OF ISAIAH. No.5. (Continued.)

Verse 6: "And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from the storm, and from rain."

From what is said here, and in other passages of Scripture, it is evident that what is called the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, has its antitype under the gospel dispensation, and that this anti-type, as to its external protecting coverings, and to its glory, will be more fully displayed at a further day. In Ezekiel 37:27, having reference to the same period with the above, God says, "My tabernacle also shall be with them." In Rev.21:3, it is said, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men and he will dwell with them." This anti- typical tabernacle the Apostle describes as one which "the Lord pitched, and not man," (Heb.8:3,) and again as being a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands; that is to say, not of this building, and of which Christ is the High Priest. Heb.9:11.

This anti-type is what we have now to show. By the tabernacle proper, that is the curtains of fine linen and the boards of the tabernacle, (Exod.40:18,) together with what it contained, I understand the gospel church, with its Head and under its peculiar dispensation prefigured; by the several coverings, that protection which is provided for it.

The several parts of the type we will briefly notice. First, the ark of testimony, with its enclosed tables of the Law, and covered over with the mercy seat of pure gold represented the Law as magnified and made honorable by the obedience of Christ, and as covered over, or divided from his people by that perfect and divine atonement which he made, pure, and independent of all the works, exercises, feelings, &c., of creatures. As the Ark with the mercy seat and cherubim upon it, the golden pot of manna, the golden censor, with Aaron's rod that budded, were all placed in the most holy place where alone the high priest had access, so Christ as the head of his church, is seated on the throne of his glory, where he remains as their life, as their righteousness to perfume their prayers, as the fountain of gifts, sovereignly to dispense them to his church; and where he will ever remain to be seen as their bread of life. As the high priest entered into the holiest once every year, not without blood, &c., so Christ as the High Priest of spiritual Israel, entered in once into Heaven itself, having obtained eternal redemption for us, and to appear in the presence of God for us. Heb.9:7,12 & 24. As the Ark was brought forth and carried in the center of the hosts of Israel in their journeyings, so Christ walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and is with his churches in all their difficulties and tribulation.

Second. In the holy place where the golden candlestick, the incense altar and the table of shew-bread; so in the gospel church and in its gifts for the ministry, we have the golden candle stick and its lamps burning, to give light to all that are in the house, and answering to the pure olive oil, which the bowls of the candlestick contained to feed the light, we have the Holy Spirit who dwells with and is in the saints, and who feeds the gifts for the ministry, making them useful. In the ministry of the word, and in the supper is held forth as the Lord our righteousness, by which the people of God are encouraged to go to the throne of grace, as if encompassed with a cloud of smoking incense; and is thus also held to view as the bread of life. The priests, the sons of Aaron only might enter the holy place; to them it appertained to order and trim the lamps, to burn incense on the golden altar, and to set in order the shew-bread on the table and to eat thereof; so none but believers, the sons of Christ our Spiritual Aaron, and who are made kings and priests unto God and the Lamb, have a right in the church or to interfere in its institutions, and it is their province, being in the church, to order and trim the lamps, to judge of the gifts, and to see that they give true light; and no stranger might come nigh to meddle with these things; yea, not even the Levites, lest they and the priests both die. See Num.18:3,5 & 7. How will mission societies, mission boards, theological schools &c., compare with this ordering of the furniture, and Law of the tabernacle?

Third. The Altar for burnt offerings, was in the outer-court, before and near the door of the tabernacle, and the brazen laver between that and the door of the tabernacle. The altar being thus without the tabernacle, taught first that Christ and him crucified is to be preached to the world at large as the only way of salvation; second, that the atonement or offering of Christ should be applied and received by faith before a person should be admitted into the church. As the altar was near the door of the tabernacle, so there needs not much space between a person's laying the hand of his faith on Christ as his great sacrifice, and coming to the door of the church. As the altar and its vessels were under the charge of the priests alone, (Num.18:3 & 5,) so the preaching of Christ crucified to the world, belongs only to believers, and to be under the direction of the royal priesthood, the church, and no stranger should be allowed to interfere in these things, even though he would give his hundred dollars, twice told, for directorship.

Fourth. As the laver was placed between the altar and the door of the tabernacle for the priests to wash their hands and feet at before they entered into the tabernacle, or came near to the altar, Ex.40:30-32; so believers, notwithstanding their having felt an application of the blood of Christ for pardon, should have clean hands and feet, an upright walk and conduct, before they are allowed to enter and enjoy the privileges of the church, or to minister at the altar. The Master saith, "He that is washed, (that is in the fountain of a Savior's blood,) needeth not, save to wash his feet;" implying that if the walk of a believer is clean, he is altogether clean.

I now pass to the tabernacle proper. Here a difficulty presents itself as to which is innermost, the boards, or the curtains of fine linen. The general idea is that the boards are innermost, thus it has been described, and thus Calmet, and others have given drawings of it; and so any of us, no doubt would have made and set it up, if left to our own discretion. But Moses had the pattern showed to him in the mount.

From all the examination I have been able to make of the descriptions given in the word concerning the tabernacle, I find nothing warranting this general idea; but by comparing Exodus 36:13 & 14, with 40:18 & 19, I am constrained to believe that the tabernacle of fine linen was set up innermost, and the boards being put together by their tenons and bars, formed a protection to it; the tent of goat's hair, with the other coverings, being over the whole.

Hence the tabernacle of fine linen is first to be noticed. "Moreover thou shalt make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen and blue and purple and scarlet; with cherubims of cunning work shalt thou make them." Ex.26:1. By this tabernacle I understand the everlasting covenant, as being the heavenly places in which the people of God are blessed with all spiritual blessings, (Eph.1:3,) to be represented. Parkhurst, in his Lexicon on the word shesh, here rendered fine linen, makes it so named to denote the cheerful, vivid whiteness which linen is susceptible of. The root signifies to be sprightly, cheerful, to rejoice, &c. It therefore fitly represents that peace and joy which a soul feels when by faith it views itself sheltered under the provisions of the everlasting covenant, or enabled to take hold of its better promises. It was twined linen, made strong; so the covenant in all its provisions is made sure, and all its blessings ultimately connected together, not to be separated, its promises are not yea and nay. These curtains were also made with blue, azure, or sky blue. So the blessings of this covenant, are not earthly, but heavenly and spiritual. They were also made with scarlet and purple. So the everlasting covenant, whilst it recognizes the inflexible demands and purity of the fiery law, shows also the purple fountain of a Savior's blood as having satisfied the law's demands, removed its wrath, and changed it, from being an object of dread, to an object of delight and confidence to the believers.

These curtains were also wrought with cherubims of cunning work. There a difficulty occurs as to what the cherubs were, and consequently as to what they represent. The literal idea of the term, may be as a child, or young man, to increase in knowledge, or to become great, &c. If we look for a description of them, we find none in the history of the tabernacle or temple, excepting that they had wings and faces. In Ez.1:5-12, compared with 10:6-9, we have a particular description of the cherubim which he saw, and which corresponds with the four beasts or more properly four living creatures, of Rev.4:6-8, and which are generally thought to be like the cherubims on the mercy seat. By turning to Rev.5:8-10, it is evident these unite with the Elders in worshipping the Lamb, and in saying, "Thou hast redeemed us unto God by thy blood, out of every kindred, tongue and people, &c." Hence the cherubims could be designed to represent, neither the Trinity in union with the man Christ, or angels, for these were not redeemed out of the kindreds, people and nations. They must represent some chosen from among men. And from their standing upon the mercy seat which represents the atonement of Christ, one on the one end and the other, on the other, with their faces inward looking toward the mercy seat, I think the prophets which prophesied before the coming of Christ, and the Apostles are intended, or rather the prophetic gifts; hence Christ is spoken of as the foundation of the apostles and prophets. Eph.2:20. The appearance and several faces of these cherubims, were designed to represent the qualifications of those for their office; but I will now take time to particularize. As the apostolic stands at the head of the several gifts for the ministry, so through them I understand the ordinary gifts according to their measure represented. But corresponding to the cherubims on these curtains, we find cherubims and palm trees carved on the wall of Solomon's temple. I Kings 6:29. And corresponding to these we find Ezekiel describing the cherubims and palm trees carved on the wall of the temple of which he had a vision. Ez.4:1,18 & 19. As these cherubims were so intimately connected with palm trees, so that each of the faces of a cherub described looked toward a palm tree, and as palm trees seems intended, as from Ps.92:12, and Songs 7:7 & 8, to represent gospel churches, they seemed intended to represent ordinary gospel ministers. These cherubs had only two faces, the face of a man, denoting that they possessed understanding, and the face of a lion to denote their boldness in declaring the truth and testimony of God, and each face looking toward a palm tree to denote their entire relation to, and dependence on the churches.

Therefore they are not our modern missionaries. Whether these cherubs had the bodily appearance of a man, to denote the ministers of the gospel being men of like passions with others; straight feet and divided hoof, to denote the steadfastness and correct walk which ought to belong to a minister, and wings to denote their soaring above the earth and earthly considerations in the ministry of the word, as those described, Ez.1:6-12, had, is not said. But from their bearing the same name it is presumable they had the same general appearance. Now from the cherubims being wrought on these curtains we are taught that the gifts for the ministry are an important provision in the everlasting covenant.

Next to, and connected with the tabernacle were the boards of shittim wood, overlaid with gold, and fastened together by tenons and bars, so as to form one building. These boards, being of incorruptible wood, and overlaid with gold, and thus closely connected together, represented the whole mediation of Christ in its various parts, and as embracing the union of his divine and human natures. As the tabernacle was thus encompassed with these boards, so by the mediation of Christ the church is secured and the everlasting covenant is sealed and its blessings made sure to the heirs of promise. The sides only were enclosed with the boards, the top only being left open, teaching that the mediation of Christ was not designed to secure to the people of God an earthly inheritance, nor to confine their views and expectations here but to lead them to look forward toward a heavenly and eternal inheritance; and also to raise their hopes and expectations heavenward for their salvation and defense. The east side was not enclosed with boards, but pillars of the same wood, and overlaid in the same manner with gold were placed on that side; and on these were suspended for the door of the tabernacle, a hanging of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine

The hanging, like the curtains of the tabernacle represented the spiritual blessings with which the people of God are here blessed, as before showed. But no cherubims on it; ministerial gifts are not to be manifested, but in the church; neither are they to be the door of entrance into the church. This hanging was wrought with needle work and suspended on the pillars, to show that the blessings thereby represented must not be merely learned but wrought in the experience of a person, and he brought to hang entirely on the mediation of Christ, without any other standing as to his acceptance with God; in order to his being entitled to the privileges of the house of God.

I now pass to notice the coverings of the tabernacle. The first was the tents of goat's hair, that is curtains made of goat's hair spun. This formed a tent well calculated to turn the weather. As goat's hair is distinct from sheep's clothing, there may be some difficulty as to what is to be understood by it.

It may denote that outward protection to the church and religion of Christ derived from the world, signified by the earth's helping the woman. Rev.12:16. Or rather I think, it denotes the worldly deportment of believers; that is, their intercourse with the world, and in the business thereof. This being upright and harmless as it ought to be, is well calculated to secure to them toleration of their religion and protection to their persons. This may properly be denoted by goat's hair; first, to distinguish it from their religious acts and exercise, more properly termed sheep's clothing, and because this intercourse is the actings of the natural life, and relating to its concerns; though it ought always to be under the influence of their religion. Second, because when believers look at their own outward deportment they see nothing good in it, and often think it bespeaks their being goats. Hence the surprise of those on the right hand; Matt.

25:37-38.

Over this tent was a covering of ram's skins died red. This was calculated to denote the fiery law of God and the influence it often has in restraining the enemies of the cross from doing violence to the people of God.

Outside of all was a covering of badger's skin. There is a great diversity among Lexicographers and translators as to the true meaning of the word thehashim rendered by our translators badgers. That badgers were not intended is pretty evident from the fact that they are northern animals and not likely to be found in Arabia. Calmet thinks a color resembling sky colors was intended. The Editor of Calmet suggests that seals were the animals intended. Pagninus gives as the meaning of the word, the yew-tree, hence supposes the bark of that tree used, but quotes the Targum as thinking an animal of many colors designed. Parkhurst gives azure blue as the meaning, but thinks it a lighter sky color, than the color generally called blue, and suiting the more ordinary appearance of the sky. This also was the rendering of all the ancient translators. Hence the two leading ideas on the subject have been; on the one hand, that something coarse was intended, on the other, that the colors of the heavens are designed. To us the most natural idea would be that this outside covering designed to protect the others from the weather was something coarse. And in reference to the church, as it has existed, it is evident that its having been led to assume the coarseness incident to a wilderness and obscure state has been a great protection to it. But to me it is no less certain, that, that heavenly and divine interposition (denoted by the sky colors of this covering, which after the destruction of the Beast and the churches coming up out of the wilderness, will be so clearly seen as having been exerted in her preservation during the reign of the Beast, and now so gloriously exerted in her deliverance, the God of Jeshurun being seen riding upon the heavens in her help and in his excellency on the skies (Deut.33:26,) will strike a dread upon all who remain unregenerated, and deter them from making any attempts to annoy the people of God; as the miraculous deliverance of Israel from Egypt, struck a dread upon the nations around. Hence I believe it was designed of God that these two ideas should be attached to that word, suiting the two states of the church, its oppressed, and its more glorious state.

The promise in the passage under consideration contains two leading ideas. 1st. As suiting also the promise already quoted from Ezekiel 37:27. "My tabernacle shall be with them," it implies that as the tabernacle was, in all its parts made according to the pattern showed in the mount, and of God's appointing, no human planning about it, so that the church, when it shall have been washed from all its defilements, and brought out of the wilderness, shall be in all things conformed to the word of God, that God shall then be worshipped and served, not according to the plans of men, but according to his own revealed order, and by his own appointed institutions. 2nd. That then the protecting coverings of the church will have their full effect to preserve the people and religion of God from every annoyance, so that, according to Isa.11:9, "They shall not hurt, nor destroy in all God's holy mountain."

We are not to understand by this that the Church of Christ has not now, all these protecting coverings for her defense. But as I have before noted in the course of my remarks upon this chapter, God has left his church and people to experience these buffetings for their good, and to reclaim them from their base wanderings from him; and that they might experience these severe rebukes from those lovers which they have gone after in their conformity to human religions. God, as he hardened the heart of Pharaoh, has suffered the hearts of the enemies of truth to become enthralled by their false systems of religion, has given them up to believe a lie, and thus to become emboldened to assault the truth and people of God, in the face of those awful threatenings in his word against them. But then these false systems by which men are led to think that they are doing God service in reviling and persecuting the saints, will all have been swept away in the destruction of the man of sin, and the saints will be shielded by a correct walk, protected by the declarations of the divine law, and upheld by the manifest interposition of an arm almighty, so that none will dare to molest them. May this glorious period soon arrive, and may we in the mean time, have grace to take patiently all the ignominy and persecutions that may be heaped upon us by those who are rearing the Image of the Beast.

S.TROTT.

Fairfax Court House, Va., July 7th, 1837.

MINUTES OF A CORRESPONDING MEETING HELD WITH THE BETHLEHEM CHURCH 1837 (TROTT)

1 Brother Trott preached from Isaiah 63.9. "In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them, in his love and in his pity, he redeemed them, And he bore them and carried them all the days of old.

2 owing to the great rain, but few brethren having arrived, after preaching, adjourned until Saturday morning at 9:00. Saturday, August 12th

Met pursuant to adjournment. After worship, Brother Trott was chosen moderator, and Brother Clark clerk.

3 the doctrine of principles in the plan of correspondence, therefore agreed upon by the churches being read, the invitation was given by the moderator to the messengers present from such churches as accorded with those principles, and the plan of correspondence, to present their letters, whereupon letters from the following churches were presented and read: 1st from fryingpan, by her messengers, S. Trot, Thomas Lee, Charles Gullant, John Cocherell, Charles Roby, and Joseph Blincoe. 2nd Bethlehem – Messengers FM Lewis, Benjamin Pridmore, 3rd Occoquan, George Selecman, James Davis, Barton Windsor, James Arnols, M. Arnold, M. Lynn. 4th Mount Pleasant, N. Martin, William Kidwell, James Roby. 5th Elk Run, Elijah Hansbrough, William Bowersm 6th Fredericksburg, John Clark. 7th White Oak, John Clark, Chappawamsick, B. Cole, William W. West, B. Wamsley, P. Carter, G. Tansell.

4 invitation be given to such brethren present, not messengers from churches, as were with us in doctrine, in the old school stand, and as felt disposed to unite in our meeting, to report themselves, brethren Gilbert Beebe, and S. Barnes, of the Alexandrian Baptist Church, came forward and gave a satisfactory statement concerning that church, of its soundness in the faith, its healthy condition, and being on the old school ground, and expressed their desire to unite with us in this meeting. Brother Isaac Chrisman is also, of Zion church.

Frederick County, gave a similar statement of that church, as being sound and old school church, but as adhering to the plan of constituted associations. He also expressed his entire accordance with us, and our views and order, and took a seat with us. He further delivered a message from Brother T. Buck, junior, expressing his Christian love for us.

- 5 invitations were given the messengers from old school associations, to present their letters. Brother Gilbert Beebe reported himself as one of the several brethren appointed to meet us, by the Baltimore association; And also handed in three copies of their minutes.
- 6 it was agreed that Brother Trott prepare a circular letter, to be addressed to the churches, corresponding, and to all of like precious faith with us.
- 8 adjourned till Monday morning, 9:00, preaching by brethren Beebe, Hansbrough, and Clark.

(Sunday, August 13th. Preaching by brethren Hansbrough, Clark, and Trott; brethren Beebe having returned home.)
Monday, August 14th

- 7 met according to adjournment. After worship, Brother Trott presented a circular which was read and unanimously adopted as the sentiments of this meeting.
- 8 brother trot, hands bro, Clark, and Gullat agree, God willing, to go as messengers of the Baltimore association to be held with the Warren church, Baltimore County Maryland, Thursday before the 3rd Lord's Day in May 1838, and also to the old school meeting to be held at the same time and place.
- 11 it is agreed that these minutes, together with the circular, be printed into Signs of The Times, under the superintendence of Brother Trott.

12 The Chappawamsick Church, having invited the next corresponding meeting to be held with them, agreed to appoint such meeting, God willing, to be held with that church, (upper edge of Stafford County 7 miles from Dumfries) commence Thursday before the 2nd Lord today in August 1838 to continue on the Lord's day. We unite with that church in inviting all old-school churches, meetings, and associations, to correspond with that meeting by letter, or messengers, or both an old school brethren, those who are such in principle and practice, to attend it. This invitation is not limited to any section of our country. 13 In concluding the meeting several brethren addressed a word of exertion and encouragement to the meeting and spoke in grateful acknowledgments of the manifestations of the divine presence with us. Preaching again by brethren Clark and Hansbrough.

Circular

the brethren composing the meeting of correspondence held with Bethlehem church, Prince William County, Virginia August 11th, 1837.

To the churches whose messengers we are, and to our old school brethren universally, would express love in the Lord:

Dear Brethren: the letters from the several churches uniting in this correspondence were read in the meeting, and the views of the few brethren present with us, not being messengers, were freely given relative, to our old school stand, to the correspondence of the churches. And we can truly say that there was a oneness of views and of feeling pervading the whole correspondence and communications; such as is not often witnessed in these days of darkness among brethren from different churches and sections of country. The preaching, we rejoice to say, and our general interview together has been of the same one piece. God be praised, who alone could make us thus united, scattered as we are among the errorists of the day, and exposed to be more scattered, by the flattering and ensnaring schemes put afloat, under the plausible pretense of thereby glorifying God.

But we will, brethren, briefly state that we understand by the union of brethren and notice from whence this union springs.

There are various kinds of unions among the professed religionists of the day. There is, what is called the union of effort, which is considered religious. Persons are induced to unite in these religious objects for various reasons; some because they think it is pious, some because they think it is reputable, and others because they think it will promote their worldly interests or their desires for promotion.

In order to secure union in these efforts, whilst a multitude may have the credit of being engaged in them, on pledging their money and their influence to promote the cause, the whole disposal of the funds and ordering of the affair is committed to a few choice spirits under the name of a board of managers.

There is another union into which persons are collected in churches, and churches in associations, which is formed by proposing certain general principles in loose terms as take a bond of union, to which there will be no difficulty of any of Hagar's children agreeing; particular points of doctrine being passed over as too obtuse to be understood by persons generally.

A third kind of union quite common, is that in which those uniting agree that each shall have and be in a measure governed by his own religious views, on conditions of mutual toleration, or of thinking all right because sincere, and of being governed by certain rules of order.

A fourth kind of union is that founded upon persons being taught to believe certain articles of faith and consenting to submit to certain rules of discipline. But none of these is the union we speak of. All these may exist, and the heartbeat untouched. The union wheat prize is one which God has appointed, and which his grace alone produces, it is a being of one heart and of one soul. In ordering this union, the only wise God, who knew exactly what was necessary to produce such union in such creatures as we are, has revealed in the scriptures, the provisions made to ensure it: "one body and one spirit, even as you are called in one hope of your calling; 1 Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and father of all," Ephesians 4.4, 6.

We will briefly notice the several branches of this provision.

1st one body: the Church of Jesus Christ in all its branches and members, has, like one human body, one origin, the love and purpose of God in Christ; one production, created in Christ Jesus; One head, Christ; One birth, the same pangs and throws bring all the members into visibility. Hence as the body is thus 1 the senses, the taste, sight, and feelings, are one; and the interest and welfare, the joys and the sorrows of the whole, are one.

2nd one spirit: this body is an animated body, animated in all its members, by 1 spirit. Hence says the apostle, "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his," Romans 8.9. The spirit being that life which was in the worker, and which is the light of men, (John 1.4.) They have the one light and of course the one vision, as well as the one animation, and one set of spiritual faculties.

3rd the one hope of their calling: called by the same voice of the son of God, to behold the same glorious prize, as theirs, in prospect and hope.

4th one Lord: one sovereign and master. Consequently, his commands are one period hence not look everyone for his gain, nor his direction, from his quarter. No clashing interest to serve.

5th one faith: one and the same doctrine revealed, and the same experimental knowledge of that doctrine imparted.

6th one baptism: we understand baptism to be here used as in mark 16.16. It is according to the Apostolic order, the first appointed act of obedience after believing, and being thus at the head, is put for the whole system of gospel order and obedience. This is given in the one standard, the scriptures, to be one and the same among all the followers of Christ, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," Matthew 28. 20.

Lastly. One God and father of all: the one God revealed as the father of all in Christ, and as the sole object of their fear, their love, trust, and worship.

Destroy one link of this chain and the perfection of the union is destroyed. And in proportion, as any of these links are destroyed in the system we embrace or in speculation, the union of feeling, of sentiment, or of action will be destroyed.

For instance, destroy the eternal union of the whole body with, and in Christ, as the head, and you destroy the harmony and oneness of feeling and interest. Embrace the system of a union with Christ which is founded on our faith, and the priority of our believing and the difference in the strength of our faith, render imperfect the union of the body. Destroy the oneness of the spirit by which we are quickened; Suppose one to be converted or regenerated by this man's preaching, and another by that preacher, one to have this man for his spiritual father and another that; or suppose each to be regenerated by his own exertions in beginning the work; and as the stream partakes of the peculiar quality of its fountain, the regeneration of each must partake of the peculiar selfish qualities of its author; And what oneness or union could there be among the regenerate more than among the unregenerate?

Take away the one hope of Our Calling, admit the notion of different grades of happiness in heaven; And selfish ambition at once takes possession of each breast, disciple to this system, and destroys the union. Drive the one Lord from his throne, let one look to this body of men, or another to that, as Lords of his conscience, and arbiters of his faith and practice, and how is it possible that union can exist? Take away the one perfect rule of faith and practice, the scriptures of truth, and let men at their will, invent systems of faith and rules of practice for us, and union must assuredly give way to divisions.

The wise men said of one, "As he thinks in his heart, so is he;"
Proverbs 23.7; how important then, to our realizing in our experience, what it is to be of one heart, and one soul, with our brethren, that we should have right thoughts of the whole system of this union which God has appointed. Let us suffer none of the human system makers to cut away a single link from this glorious chain of union. The more our heads drink into, and our hearts are imbued with all the parts of this heavenly union, the more shall we know how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

Our churches, we have to say, that we find no occasion to go back to constituted associations for a pleasant and refreshing correspondence with each other; yet we have not had, for some cause or other, that encouragement extended to us by our brethren, those whom we esteem as brethren around us, which we had anticipated. But three brethren, in any way connected with constituted associations, appeared to art with us in our meeting. They were valuable brethren, and their coming among us was much prized. Brethren from the Baltimore association, we know, we're appointed to meet us, and at 1:00 or two other brethren had purposed to visit us; what prevented their coming we know not; Or whether contrary to Paul, they purposed according to the flesh, we know not, see 2nd Corinthians 1.17. We should have rejoiced in their coming and uniting with us in our meeting; And we could but feel disappointed in their, and other brethren, not extending to us their tokens of fellowship.

But, dear brethren, you, we trust, have been taught not to depend on men for your support. The main inquiry is, are we right? Is the chain of union which God has provided, sufficient to draw and bind us together? Or is it essential that we add an associational constitution as an additional link to the chain, to make it effectual? If so, what a pity the apostles did not so understand it, and give us the pattern; for one, "thus said the Lord" is of more importance than even the uniform example of the church in every age since the apostle's days.

Brethren, let us more and more try everything by the scriptures. If we had gone wrong according to that sure standard, may we have the grace to retrace our steps. If we find the scriptures support us, let us continue, though faint, yet pursuing the path marked out for us, depending on God to strengthen us.

To our old school brethren abroad, we would say, we have we think, pointed out the true source of union, the source of divisions you have been somewhat acquainted with for several years past. Baptist churches anciently required evidence of the one birth, and that of God, of being called in the one hope of their calling, in order to membership. They referred to the scriptures as the divine rule of their faith and practice and required conformity to that standard, and there was heart union, and true fellowship among them.

Afterward, professorships of divinity were established in colleges, and theological schools have been gotten up, Each to teach a peculiar system of divinity. Different expositors of scripture have been resorted to as guides; and lately, men have set themselves to inventing plans of action for God, and for his people; And each has attracted followers to his system or plan. And can any candid man say, that continuing to walk in the old Baptist path, and not turning aside one to the right, and one to the left, to follow different leaders, has caused divisions? Certainly not. Can we expect union if we walk with the multitude in these diverse paths? No.

But as we return to, and continue in the ancient footsteps, of the flock of Christ; though they may be comparatively but few to accompany us, those few will realize what it is to dwell together in unity. Hence the one language spoken by our old-school Baptists, in their communications from all sections of our country. Hence in addressing our circular to them in connection with our churches, we feel confident that we are addressing our brethren, those who understand our language, who have a common interest, and one hope with us. And to such we say, godspeed you, in a good way, and in your withdrawing entirely from by paths.

The Chappawamsic Church, (upper edge of Stafford County Virginia) having invited our next meeting to be held with them, we have, agreeable to their request, and according to the plan of these meetings appointed by a corresponding meeting to be held with that church to commence on the Thursday preceding the second Lord's day in August 1838, which meeting we invite all old school churches, meetings and associations that correspond with by letter or messengers, or both, and old school brethren, those who are such in principle and practice, to attend it. This invitation is not limited to any section of our country.

We subscribe ourselves, brethren, your servants for Christ's sake.

Signed on behalf of the meeting this day of August 1837.

S. Trott, Moderator John Clark, Clerk

ON THE IMPORT OF THE TERMS, EVERLASTING, ETERNAL, &c.

Brother Beebe: - I see that Brother William Moseley of Georgia, requests, through the Primitive Baptist, that you or I, or both, would give the legitimate meaning of the terms everlasting and eternal; and to show the difference, if any, between them. As he includes you as well as myself in the request, I presume he expects the answer through the Signs; and as you are absent, I will take it upon myself to attend to the request.

The etymology of our English word everlasting, ever lasting - that is, lasting unlimitedly, shows the import to be unlimited duration. The words eternal and eternity are from the Latin words aeternus and aeternitas, signifying infinite or unlimited duration.

But the import of these words as found in the Scriptures may perhaps be more accurately defined by an examination of the Hebrew and Greek words so rendered, and the subjects to which they are applied, &c. 1st. In the Old Testament there are several words which, by the translators of our Bible, are rendered everlasting, eternal, forever, &c. The word more frequently found in the Hebrew as answering to these English terms is from a root which signifies to hide, conceal, &c.; and therefore denotes primarily, hidden, or unknown duration. It is applied to time things and thus used necessarily implies a duration limited by the continuance of time or perhaps, in some cases, by a shorter period. We thus find it used to denote a temporal, but otherwise a continued, unknown duration, in Gen. 17:8-13, as applied to the Abrahamic covenant and the land of Canaan, and in other instances. It is used in other cases without any such limitations being implied in the application or connection, and therefore with propriety in such cases is considered as conveying the idea of duration, unbounded, or extending ad infinitum. This word also is used both in reference to past and to future duration. Another Hebrew word rendered everlasting, &c., has for its primary idea beyond, further, &c.; and as a noun denotes time or duration, and hence when not limited in its extent by the connection or the nature of the subject to which it is implied, it denotes an unlimited or infinitive continuance onward that is most generally an eternity to come or future. The two words above defined we find sometimes combined, and translated world without end, evermore, &c., that is, as denoting an eternity to come.

Again, these two words are frequently found connected, but not combined, and according to the import of the particles by which they are connected, they are either both considered as having a future reference and are translated forever more, henceforth even forever, and forever and ever, &c., as Psal.

10:16; 18:50; Isa.9:7; (in Isa.57:15, they are rendered eternity); or one has a past, and the other a future reference, and are translated from everlasting to everlasting.

The word translated eternal in Deut. 33:27, is from a root signifying to remain, dwell, &c. Another Hebrew word which we find translated evermore, eternity, &c, has for its primary ideas, superiority, enduring, &c., and when applied to time or duration imports continuing, enduring, &c., that is, overcoming and outlasting all the changes of time.

In the New Testament we find different Greek words used corresponding to the Hebrew words above noticed, and translated everlasting, eternal, forever, evermore, &c.

AIONIOS in its formations is that which is principally used. This word is from AION, signifying eternity, age, &c.; this again is from AEI, always and on, being, that is always being the proper import of the word. AIONIOS is sometimes doubled, and then translated, forever and ever.

From what has been said, it is evident that the translators considered the words EVERLASTING and ETERNAL as being of the same import, as are also forever, evermore, &c., excepting that these latter words are confined to the idea of future duration, and the other are used both in reference to past and future duration. There are other equivalent words used in our translation confined in their idea to past duration, as ancient times of old, &c.

But from the diversity there is in the applications of the same original words, as well as of the English words: ETERNAL and EVERLASTING, it may appear on a superficial observation that there is a good deal of uncertainty in their use, whether importing future, or past duration, or both; and whether importing a temporal duration, or absolutely an infinite one.

But not so, in reality, if common sense be allowed to decide on the point. It is unfortunately the case, however, that there are those who are so exalted with their attainments as linguists, that they would think it vulgar to submit to a common sense exposition of the expressions of Scripture, and who think their learned verbal criticisms lead them to a deeper and more refined understanding of the Scriptures than the common people can have. These often mistake the plain import of scriptural expressions, being led into mazes by their critical definitions.

Unprincipled cavilers also, by a resort to verbal criticisms, can make a show of establishing their own positions and of overturning the arguments and proofs of those whom they oppose, when in fact it is all a deception. It is a matter of manifest fact that what would be called learned criticisms upon the Scriptures have tended as much as any one circumstance to darken and confuse the plain meaning thereof. It is equally manifest that the Scriptures, as originally written, were adapted to the understanding of uneducated and common sense readers, and that this excellent trait in them has been preserved, with few exceptions, in our common translation, through the interposing providence of that God who has all hearts in His hand and under His control.

I presume that I shall be understood as speaking here of the literal import of Scripture, not of that hidden wisdom, that spiritual mystery, which none of the princes of this world knew, and which the Holy Spirit alone can make known to any. But to return to the subject under consideration. There is perhaps no word that is always used to convey the same one definite idea, hence the connection in which a word is used must be taken into consideration in order to decide on the precise idea intended to be conveyed by it. So in reference to the words eternal, everlasting, &c., their connection as used in the Scripture will be found to have some bearing on their import, and will enable a candid, common sense observer to determine in any, or at least most, cases, whether they are used to denote duration absolutely infinite, or simply duration unknown in its extent to man but limited by the continuance of time; also whether they refer particularly to duration either past or future, or absolutely' to the eternity or existence of God.

The primary ideas of the original words which they represent as has been shown, are those of continued and unlimited or indefinite duration. Hence when used in reference to existence, either before or after the period bounded by time and its changes, we can conceive of no periods by which they can be limited in their import and are therefore necessarily led to understand them as conveying the idea of duration extending to infinitude. On the other hand, when either of these terms are applied to a subject that we know belongs exclusively to time, surely common sense would forbid our supposing that it was there used to convey the idea that such a time subject had infinite duration belonging to it. As, for instance, when hills and mountains are spoken of as everlasting, we certainly cannot, with propriety, suppose that literally there are any hills or mountains belonging to this earth which will escape the general conflagration of the world; neither that the literal priesthood of Aaron, because said to be an everlasting priesthood, was actually to exist beyond the limits which the purpose of God had fixed to that dispensation. But at the same time this term denotes that these time subjects were to have a continuance, and that of a duration unknown and unlimited in its extent in reference to the knowledge of those to whom these things were addressed. And further I think it will be found that all those time subjects to which the term everlasting is applied have a figurative reference to things not temporal in their duration, but heavenly and truly eternal.

In reference to a distinction to be made between past duration and duration onwards, I have already noticed that in the Hebrew this distinction is generally marked by the use of distinct words. The words eternal and everlasting, as used in our translation, do not of themselves mark this distinction, they being used indiscriminately to denote past duration or future, or the existence of God absolutely without the intervention of time, as when God is said to inhabit eternity.

The translators, however, have frequently substituted other words, more definite to denote duration onward or an extending forward ad infinitum, such as forever, ever more, world without end, &c. And the instances are, I think, very few where the words everlasting or eternal are used in which there will be any difficulty in deciding whether such terms denote past or future duration, or duration undivided by time. For instance, when the existence of God or the actings of the Divine Mind are spoken of, it would be absurd to suppose them bounded in either sense by the limits of time. Thus the terms eternal and everlasting prefixed to the purpose of God and the love of God, as these are the actings and exercise of the Divine Mind, must import that such purpose and love exist exterior to all the changes of time, and unchanged by them.

Again, when terms are used in the connection pointing out the beginning of a thing which is said to be everlasting, I should suppose that common sense would at once decide that the term everlasting or eternal in such case was intended to convey the idea only of duration onward ad infinitum. Thus when Messiah is spoken of as bringing in, within a limited time (seventy weeks), everlasting righteousness, (Dan.9:24,) if the terms, bring in do not import the bringing into actual or manifest existence the particular righteousness there intended, I do not know what they can import in that case. And if that is their meaning, then the term everlasting denotes only the infinite continuance of that righteousness. Should any one say, not so; the term everlasting must denote the past duration of that righteousness to have been infinite as much so as the future; then I will say that if such idea is absolutely essential to the use of the term everlasting, we must suppose that circumcision actually existed in the flesh of Abraham and of his seed from everlasting, that is from before the foundation of the world, for this is said to be for an everlasting covenant in their flesh. Gen. 17:13, compared with verses 10,11. The same remarks will hold good concerning the expression eternal redemption (Heb.9: 12) as the expression having obtained imports a beginning to that redemption, if it imports anything.

I would remark further that when the terms eternal and everlasting are used in relation to that whose existence is manifestly after the dissolution of the world, as God has revealed no after terminating period, the Holy Ghost, in directing to the use of these terms in such relation, must surely have designed to convey the idea that such things are to have an infinite duration, as when we read of everlasting punishment and life eternal as existing after the close of time or the final judgment. And this, for this very plain reason that these terms as have been shown, denote of themselves continued, indefinite or unlimited duration, and if therefore there is nothing in the connection implying a limit to the extent of such duration, they necessarily denote its continuance ad infinitum.

I have thus, Brother Beebe, given in obedience to the request of Brother Mosely, what I understand to be the manifest import of the words everlasting and eternal as found in different passages of Scripture. If what I have said should be of any use to him in defining their import, he can apply it as he may have occasion for, whether in reference to the doctrine of justification, or to the sentiment of universalism, or to any other subject. I remain yours, and His, to serve.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, June 13, 1839.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.7(1839)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 153-158

ON THE REIGN OF CHRIST.

Circular Letter: The Baltimore Association of Old School Baptists, convened with the church at Black Rock, Md., May 18, 19 & 20, to the churches of which she is composed, greeting.

Time like some mighty whirlpool will sooner or later engulf all that floats in its channel. Every returning period tells of many that have already been swallowed up, and we too are hastening to the vortex. But while upon the surface we would indulge another opportunity afforded us of communicating with those we love of the things that make for our peace, as children of the same family, and things whereby one may edify another. Considering the uncertainty and many changing scenes of time, the thousand allurements and great oppositions that are in the world, the wily arts of the Devil with his armed legions, the lust of our flesh with its propensity to evil, and above all the rapid strides and boasting threats of the man of sin, it is thought there is no subject we can contemplate with greater pleasure or profit than that of the Reign of Christ. He is that King that Isaiah said should reign in righteousness and whose princes should rule in judgment. The prophets universally ascribe sovereignty to God, and David says, Psa.62:11, "God has spoken once; twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God." Christ, not as the essential God, but as the head of His church and the executor of the Father's will possesses a delegated power, conferred upon Him for a special purpose and for a limited period, and the question as to how far that power extends or what it is made to effect, is one that forever separates between Christ and antichrist, or the children of God and the children of the Devil: the one believing it to be omnipotent, the other that it is limited; the one, that He does His pleasure and none can let Him; the other, that it is dependent for its execution upon the co-operation of His creatures; and while the saints are hailing Him as King of kings and Lord of lords, and rejoicing that there is one possessed of all power that careth for them; the whole antichristian brood are very busy in taking care of their little idol, which they call Jesus, and transporting him from one country to another. Now, in all the little that we may write upon this important subject, we wish to take divine inspiration as our guide, and in order to render the subject intelligible, we will briefly consider it in three branches, namely: Its extent, its nature and its duration. In considering first the extent of the reign of Christ, it is needful that we take into consideration the object for which it is conferred upon Him, in order to ascertain how far it was needful that power should extend. That object is declared in scripture, and that by Himself, to be that He should give eternal life to as many as the Father had given Him. These are in the world, have to do with the things of the world, stand connected with the rest of mankind, and have a frail and evil nature in common with all the human family. It therefore became necessary that Christ, in order to secure to them eternal life, should have unreserved control over all things that stand in the least degree connected with them, as it is written, "As thou hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given Him." John 17:2. Nor does He simply possess a power in earth and over flesh, but He informed His disciples after His resurrection from the dead that All power was given unto Him in heaven and in earth, Mt.28:18; by which we may learn that the eternal power of the Godhead, and whatever power the Prophets and the Psalmist speak of as belonging to God is involved in the mediatorial reign of Christ. Old Testament scriptures are therefore as applicable to define the power of Christ as those of the new, for "it pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." It is not to be expected that we should find in the scriptures an express declaration that the power of Christ embraces this, that, and the other particular thing or occurrence; it is enough that we find evidence of its extending to all things in all worlds. We have already shown that it embraces heaven and earth, as Peter says, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto Him. It now remains to show that it extends over hell and the power there. He is regarded by us as the mighty angel that John saw descend with a great chain, and lay hold of the dragon, and bind him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up. The apostles having fulfilled their mission and returned on a certain occasion said, Lord, even the devils are subject to us through Thy name. This power is not only declared but acknowledged, for, said the devils to the seven sons of Sceva, Jesus we know, and Paul we

This power is not only declared but acknowledged, for, said the devils to the seven sons of Sceva, Jesus we know, and Paul we know, but who are ye? We might here make a number of other quotations to the same import, but these are deemed sufficient. Here let us ask what comfort or enjoyment could christians feel in view of the storms and tempests that are howling around them, did they not know that in Jesus dwelt a power that rules the raging of the sea and stills its angry waves. What security could they feel in a world of opposition, did they not know that He made the wrath of man to praise Him, and restrained the rest. In short what hope could they have of final blessedness, but in the belief that Jesus holds the keys of hell and death, controls all the angry passions of their natures, and every being, every thing, and every act; whether standing in opposition or needful to be employed for their comfort. So they can unite their voices with, and make up that great multitude, many waters and mighty thunders spoken of in the book of Revelation, saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. He reigns over Heaven, earth, and hell. The winds and the seas obey Him. The sparrows in their flight are moved and directed by His care, and not one of the countless hairs that deck our heads can fall or remain unmoved but by His government. His is a power to wound and a power to heal, a power to kill and a power to make alive, this is the King that saves His subjects and destroys their foes.

In the second place we are to consider the nature or character of this reign, and wish it borne in mind that there is no reign but His, for the kingdoms of this world are become "the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ," and Solomon says, Proverbs 8:15,16 - "By me kings reign and princes decree justice. By me princes rule and nobles, even all the judges of the earth." It is also written in the New Testament: There is no power, but of God. The powers that be, are ordained of God. We wish it also borne in mind that He reigns for the exclusive good of his people, His chosen. Isaiah has characterized His reign as a reign in righteousness. Whether we consider Him, then, as dethroning kings, or exalting to scepters base and blood thirsty tyrants; whether as sending wars with all the evils that follow in their train, or causing the clarion of peace and good will to men to be blown, still His reign is in righteousness, because so it seems good in His sight. "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments," Psalms 119:137. He governs the world by a power which they neither see nor acknowledge, and to describe it fully, would be beyond the capacity of angels. It is to His reign in Zion, where His power is both felt and acknowledged, that we would confine ourselves in treating upon this branch of our subject. It is there that He has laws, or more properly, a law, which is unchanging as His own eternal throne, and extending to all the subjects of His kingdom in all time and eternity too. It needs no fire and fagot, no sword or bayonet to enforce it; it exerts no tyrannical influence, holds to view no terrors; promises no rewards. It is not recorded upon tables of stone or pieces of parchment, and deposited in the archives of some moldering edifice; nor is it subject to abrogation or amendment like the laws of men. This law is the law of love. The promptings of this law are recorded in the New Testament; but let this be obliterated, let bonfires be lighted up with the pages of scripture, still the law is in their hearts and will teach them the way that they should go. Whilst then in the precepts and commandments of the New Testament, we have a transcript of the mind and will of God, they furnish us also with an expression of christian desire. They delight to do the will of God; a service called forth by any other law, either looks for a reward or dreads punishment; but this is all performed for the sake of Him who hath loved them and given Himself for them. If a man preaches truth and does not love it, he is no better off than if he had preached error, and he that practices morality and loves iniquity, is no better off than if he practiced iniquity. Self love has a governing influence over us in nature; but here: "the love of Christ constraineth us." But whence this love? Paul in his letter to the Romans informs us that it is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. So that, as Solomon says, If a man should give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned. As it exists independent of the creature, so it operates independent of his mind and will. It extends to all the family of God and no further. It is therefore no marvel that christians cannot love those that give no evidence that they love God. But we now pass to the consideration of the third and last branch of our subject, which is, the duration of this reign. While we are utterly unable to find any limit to the extent of His reign, the scriptures justify us in fixing a period to its duration and this is no other than the full completion of all that work for which His power was conferred upon Him.

Viewing Him as Jehovah the scriptures speak of Him as reigning for ever and ever, but in His mediatorial character they figuratively speak of Him as reigning a thousand years. When that thousand years shall expire no man can tell; but certain it is that He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy to be destroyed is death.

When He shall have called up the slumbering bodies of His saints from their graves, and thus taken the prey from the mighty, then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power, See I Cor.

15:24; and when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all; verse 28. And now brethren, may we not rejoice in the universal power of Christ, since being controlled by His power no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper and every tongue that shall rise up in judgment against us we shall condemn. May we not confidently look for the complete glorification of all the election of grace since it is His will that they may behold His glory, and all power is His to execute that will. May we not rejoice in the nature of His reign, since, all His works being done in righteousness, all things work together for good to them that love God and are the called according to His purpose. Being by the law of love, we have nothing to dread from our many short comings and repeated wanderings; He heals our back slidings and loves us freely. He holds no threatening judgments over us; nor spurns us from His face.

"The poorer the wretch, the welcomer here."

Lastly, may we not rejoice in the termination of that reign, since with its end will be the eternal overthrow of the kingdom of antichrist, the complete destruction of all enemies including the last, which is death, and the raising up of His church, both soul and body, to dwell with Him in bliss forever. Finally, brethren, farewell; the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

S.TROTT. 1848.

Parable of What Has Been Called the Prodigal Son

Having been requested in a letter from brother James P. Howell of Michigan to give through the Signs my views of the Parable in Luke 15:11-32; I will extend this communication, with your permission, Brother Beebe, to the giving of my views of it. This passage, is not by itself directly styled a parable, though from its connection with the parable of the lost sheep, (Lk.15:3-7), and from its style, it has been generally, and I think rightly understood to be a parable. By a parable is understood a similitude, or relation, founded upon things natural or commonly believed, and designed to illustrate things spiritual; the persons or things therein mentioned being designed to illustrate characters spiritually, and the events related, to illustrate divine truth. But as these circumstances are such as relate to things natural, it is perhaps an error to suppose that in all cases, every incidental circumstance has a correspondency in that which is prefigured.

Brother Howell wishes to know who or what characters (to express his queries in my own language) are designed by the two sons; when the younger left his father's house; and what was the design of the parable in general. The design of the parable, I understand, was primarily to illustrate more fully and distinctly the two characters brought to view in the commencement of the chapter, the publicans and sinners as the one; and the Pharisees and Scribes as the other, and to show the purpose of the grace of God toward the former.

Before we proceed to enquire who are represented by the two sons it seems proper to enquire who is designed by the father. Generally I believe, persons, who have attempted an illustration of this parable, have assumed the idea the God is immediately intended by the father; but I am led to the conclusion that Abraham is immediately intended. This idea is certainly countenanced by the fact that Abraham is prominently brought to view in the New Testament as having two sons, two distinct seeds, the one born after the flesh, the other of promise; the one natural, the other spiritual.

Abraham occupies a peculiar station in the Scriptures. This name Abram, signifies high-father; this was altered of God to Abraham, signifying a father of multitude or many nations. Rom.4:11-18; to his being the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised or be of the law, or of his natural seed. He stands also at the head of the two covenants, or as the father of those existing under each of the two covenants, the earthly Jerusalem and the Jerusalem which is above; Hagar and Sarah representing these two covenants figuratively. Gal.4:21-31. He represents both covenants, or testaments, in the case of his offering his son Isaac. In binding him and taking the knife to slay him, he evidently represented the law as about to inflict its penalty; and in taking the ram and offering him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son, he no less evidently represented the new covenant in its provision of a substitute, a sacrifice for God's Isaacs, those who as Isaac was, are the children of promise. Gen., chapter 12 and Gal.4:28.

It is frequently said that Abraham was a type of Christ; I find no authority for it in the Scriptures. Christ is declared to be Abraham's seed, Gal.3:16. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, (Luke 16:19-31,) the rich man I think represents the self-righteous Jews; and Lazarus is said to be carried, when dead, by angels, to Abraham's bosom, which can mean no less than his being put in possession of the full blessing of the new covenant; Abraham thus representing it. On the other hand the rich man calls Abraham father, and Abraham recognizes him as his son. Perhaps I have thus sufficiently fortified my position that Abraham is the intended father in this parable. Of course the two sons must mean his two seeds, the natural, and spiritual seeds; as Paul said on another occasion, "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, afterwards that which is spiritual," I Cor.15:46, so in this case, the types as in Ishmael and Isaac, and in Esau and Jacob, represent the natural seed as the first-born, of course the spiritual seed is the younger son.

The law as spiritual must therefore be the younger son's portion. But these spiritual ones, first exist as natural persons, and as such hold on to as long as they can in common with Jews; and which like Saul of Tarsus they esteem as gain. On the other hand the covenant of circumcision, including the Sinai covenant, and all therein promised in the letter of them, relative to the land of Canaan, &c., was the elder son's portion. Thus was divided unto them, Abraham's living, that which God secured unto him by covenant.

The enquiry next in order, is, when did the younger son receive his portion and leave his father's house? Of course not until he began to exist as Abraham's seed, or had spiritual life imparted to him. The idea appears to be this, that the elect of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, whilst in a state of nature, are living, in common with the nation of Israel, as under Abraham's roof, that is, they, like the Jews, expect justification, as Paul says, "As it were by the works of the law." Rom.9:32. They feel at home there, as well as in the possession of an earthly inheritance, like the Canaan of the Jews. But when quickened by the Spirit, they begin to desire the portion of goods that falleth to them; that is, they desire to know more of God and of His law, and also to gather all together, or in other words to bring every good thing and good feeling &c., forward that they can, to render themselves righteous and acceptable to God. But they soon find that the law is spiritual, that they have to do with a God who searcheth the hearts and trieth the reins; the consequence is, they feel no longer at home in the possession of the things of this world, nor under Abraham's roof, or the Abrahamic covenant, nor sheltered by anything substituted for it, they willingly retreat from all such shelters; and indeed find themselves strangers in a strange land, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel; and as soon find all their substance wasted by riotous living, their good hearts, good deeds, sincere seeking &c., all gone, all vilely cast away as they think, by their carnality, their badness of heart, &c.

Then comes a famine, they have spent their labor for that which is not bread; they are in a starving situation; they cannot feed upon their tears or prayers, they are loathsome. He joined himself to a citizen of that country. Many such citizens there are, who only know God and the things of religion by education, who are ready to receive these prodigals and give them such employment.

And he sent him into his fields to feed swine. This would look like making legal preachers of these children of Abraham.

They however get but few of them so far entangled as that; though they may get many of them into their churches, or have done so in times past. Some of them stay there starving, without coming to themselves, probably till near their death, and then experience deliverance. Others may have Abraham's faith given them to receive Christ as their righteousness, and yet be so entangled in mind, or by family connections, or by being put forward and into office in those churches, that they still remain in those fields, until God takes them away. Others come to themselves and come out. But to return to the import of the parable in this thing. The joining himself to a citizen of that country, seemed designed to show the propensity of these perishing sinners to adhere to the suggestions of natural reason, which is indeed a citizen of that country, and to be persuaded by it, or which is the same by their unbelief; that there can be no hope of God's saving them as they are, they must in some way become better; and as they have failed of coming up to the law, they must try to love God, and to repent and believe, and that God will meet them on this ground. The idea of sending them into the field, is that reason provides no shelter for the sinner, it leaves such cast out into the open field, to the loathing of their persons.

The feeding swine, as these are unclean animals and fond of filth, show that they succeed no better in performing the work of prayer and repentance &c., than in doing the works of the law; their hearts are seen to be so corrupt that the tears they shed are so polluted therewith as to be fit for nothing but for the swine to wallow in, and none but swinish multitude could be satisfied with them. And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks (the outside shells) which the swine did eat, and no man gave unto him. These poor sinners would be satisfied, if they could, with the outside repentance and faith, and perhaps at times fret that God does not meet and bless them in their praying and weeping before Him. But no man gave unto them, either to be satisfied with the outward shell of religious exercises; or which perhaps is the true meaning of this sentence, no man gave unto them bread that they could eat, or gave them the bread of life, they heard it preached, but it was not for them.

And when he came to himself; when these come to know themselves, come to their proper place as creatures of God, they see their entire, dependence on Him to sustain them in existence; and their no less dependence on His sovereign mercy to save them. They with this prodigal say how many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger. Yes, they look around them and see multitudes who are working for hire, as mere day laborers, under the law of the Abrahamic covenant, who seem to have plenty of goods, or that for which they expect acceptance, but alas, for me! says this poor one, I am such a sinner; there is none like me; there is but one thing left for me; that is, I will arise and go to my father. For what? Again to attempt to obtain justification by the deeds of the law? No, not that. Is it then to declare off from all relationship to your father, and to live in the full indulgence of sin, as without law, seeing you have no hope of salvation? No, no! What then? To give honor to God and the law; I will, say, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants. This exercise of these experimentally lost sinners, is fitly represented as going back to Abraham as a father; for, "Though Abraham be ignorant of them, and Israel acknowledge them not" yet it is a going back to the law of which, as has been showed, Abraham was a covenant head, to honor it in its sentence, and to acknowledge the justice of God in their condemnation, and to renounce all claim to be accounted as Abraham's sons, or to receive the blessing promised to his seed. And this expression put into the mouth of this returning son, Make me as one of thy hired servants is strikingly illustrative of the truly subdued spirit of those who are thus humbled before God. For though all hope of justification by the law, from such, is gone, yet let what will become of them, they do not wish to sin against God, but rather to continue to serve under the restraints of the law, though it be but serving as hired servants, having no claim to Abraham's blessing as sons.

"And he arose and came to his father." Yes, these poor sinners are no sooner brought to this last resolve, than in true supplication of heart, true lifting up of their souls to God, they cast themselves upon His mercy. "But when he was yet a great way off" - No exercise of the sinner brings him nigher or gives him to feel that he is nigher to God; God must come to him. "His father saw him, and had compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." His father saw him, saw his heart thus humbled and prepared for receiving pardon. And ran and fell on his neck, &c. This illustrates that first exercise the sinner passes through in experiencing deliverance. Suddenly and unexpectedly, as expressed by the father's running, the cloud is removed, the sense of wrath taken away, and peace and joy fills his mind.

Still it seems impossible that he should be an heir of salvation, he is if anything more sensible of his vileness and unworthiness; and therefore with the son says, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight and am no more worthy to be called thy son." But the delightful peace he feels in being resigned into the hands of God, who, he now sees is Love, together with the consequent hope of salvation, prevents his going further and saying, make me as one of thy hired servants. The father without appearing to notice the sentence of condemnation he pronounces against himself, "Said to his servants, bring forth the best robe and put it on him and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet, and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it and let us eat and be merry. For this my son was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found." There is work for gospel ministers to do, this is the proper sphere for the gospel ministry toward sinners, the pointing them to the Lamb of God. The whole of the above quotation, illustrates that view which is now given to the sinner through the gospel, as preached or as in some way brought to his mind, of the atonement of Christ and the consequent effect. I say, now given, as being the next view given, though hours, and even days may intervene, between his experiencing that peace, and his viewing Christ by faith; and he may endure much of distress in the mean time lest he was deceived in that peace and that as his burden is gone, he is in a worse state than before. Bring forth the best robe; Christ as of God made unto him righteousness, through that perfect satisfaction He rendered in His obedience and death, to law and justice, which as the sinner now sees by faith, was wrought for such lost sinners as he is. Well is this called the best robe, as far surpassing any righteousness which Israelites could attain to under the law, or even the righteousness of angels. And put a ring on his hand. He is led to view the everlasting love of God in Christ; and to feel that it embraces him. And shoes on his feet. He is made to feel that his poor crippled feet are bound up by the promised grace of God, to go forward in obedience to the commands of the Lord. And bring hither the fatted calf and kill it and let us eat and be merry. The sinner is thus led to rest in the atonement of Christ, receives and rejoices in Christ's flesh as meat indeed and in His blood as drink indeed; as that which his soul relishes, and on which he can live as before God. Now as Abraham is the father of all that believe, this is properly represented as coming and being received as a son of Abraham; as a partaking of Abraham's faith, and a receiving the blessing of Abraham; a being grafted in and made to partake of the root and fatness of the olive tree. (By which I understand the promise made to Abraham and his seed.) See Rom.4:11; Gal.3:14 & Rom.11:17.

"For this my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found." He was lost and dead as under the law, but was found and raised to newness of life by the promised blessing. For, "The law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." - Gal.3:17 - "And they began to be merry." Both this now believing son of Abraham, and the other members of his spiritual family, who hear what the Lord has done for his soul.

The account given in the remaining verses, of the elder son's conduct on the occasion, is characteristic of the conduct, not only of those Pharisees mentioned at the beginning of the chapter, but also of the Jews toward the gospel in its being preached to, and received by the Gentiles. His declaration to his father, "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment; and yet thou never gavest me a kid that I might make merry with my friends," is strikingly descriptive of them and of their situation under the law. Not that Israel never transgressed the law, but they esteemed themselves at that day as living up to it; see the Pharisee's prayer, Luke 18:11 & 12. Neither the covenant of circumcision, nor the law gave them a kid; they provided no substitute for them, but demanded all of them, even the daily and special sacrifices; all depended on their obedience.

The declaration of the father, "Son, thou art ever with me and all that I have is thine," is appropriate in the mouth of Abraham toward the Jews his natural seed in the line of Isaac and Jacob; for they were included with Abraham in the covenant of circumcision; and all that God gave to Abraham in that covenant, including the land of Canaan, was theirs and that forever. The declarations of the covenant were, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant," &c. Gen.17:7 & 8. The further declaration of the father, "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this thy brother was dead,"&c., also befitted Abraham toward them. Because they had been taught in their Scriptures to expect that the Gentiles, even all families of the earth should share in the blessing promised to Abraham and to his seed; and also by the type of Isaac as the child of promise, as well as by the prophets, that Abraham should have a spiritual seed; and of course a seed that should be their brother as they were the brother of Ishmael. It was, therefore, meet that they should be glad and welcome the bringing of their spiritual brother from the dead: for Abraham their father rejoiced to see the day of Christ; he saw it and was glad; and the day of Christ was the day of this spiritual seed's being made manifest. John 8:56. I have given and endeavored to sustain the views I have of this parable; if brother Howell, brother Beebe, or any other brother does not consider them supported by the testimony, I would be glad that either of them would give a more scriptural and consistent view of it.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Sept.23, 1847.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.15 (1847)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 353 - 359

THE PARABLE OF THE WHEAT AND THE TARES.

BROTHER JEWETT: - I send you my views of this parable, as found in Matt.13:24-30 & 36-40. It is one among the many which our Lord used, to teach the nature of his kingdom and the events which should be connected therewith. And "without a parable spake he not to the multitude," that the prophecy (Ps.78:2) might be fulfilled. See verses 34 & 35 of this chapter. These parables were designed for the instruction of his disciples in every age, but to the Jews they were like tongues, for a sign.

This parable he declares is a similitude of the kingdom of heaven, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is likened," &c. From the different applications, which have been made of this parable, it seems important to examine the import of the expression "the kingdom of heaven." It is a term repeatedly used by Matthew, and I believe only by him of all the New Testament writers; a corresponding as used by the other evangelists, is the kingdom of God. This kingdom of heaven or kingdom of God, evidently relates to the new dispensation which Christ was bringing in. Hence the preaching of John, as well as of our Lord, was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" that is, it is about to be set up. Matt.3:2 & 4:17. This idea of the setting up of a distinct kingdom by the Messiah, answers to the prophecies going before; as in Dan. 2:44, "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a Kingdom, which shall never be destroyed," &c. See also Isa.32:2 & Micah 4:7,8. This kingdom of the Messiah, or kingdom of heaven, is not of this world; "My kingdom is not of this world." John 18:36. It was to be set up in the world; hence Christ says to his Father, "I pray not, that thou shouldst take them out of the world," &c., and adds, "they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. John 17:15,16. This he says of the subjects of his kingdom. God had set up a kingdom in the fleshly Israel, but that was a kingdom of this world; those who were born of the flesh were the subjects of it. Not so of this kingdom of heaven; "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." That fleshly kingdom was ultimately given to other people, but this kingdom shall not be given to other people. Dan.

2:44. In the former kingdom, God ruled over his subjects by external laws, written on tables of stone; in this spiritual kingdom, God reigns in the hearts of the subjects; his Law is written in their hearts. Hence Christ says, "the kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation, for behold the kingdom of God is within you." Luke 17:20,21. Hence it must be manifest, that this kingdom of heaven is peculiar in its nature, and therefore what is distinctly said of it, we are not justifiable in applying to any of the kingdoms of this world.

Elder Parker applies this parable to the introduction of sin into the world, making the good seed to represent the elect, as created in Adam; the tares, the non-elect and as such the seed of the serpent. He thus makes the parable a similitude of the world in its natural creation, instead of Messiah's kingdom to be "set up" in the world. And in so applying it, he makes the similitude rather a riddle, than a parable, as being a representation of things past instead of things to come.

Again, others have given an application of this and similar parables to the Jews. But the Jewish dispensation had long been, instead of being about to be manifested, or being at hand, when John commenced his ministry. Besides, that dispensation was earthly and carnal, instead of being heavenly and spiritual, as the Scriptures point out the distinct character of the other. But this is confounding the kingdom of Heaven with that which was earthly, and Christ with Moses.

I must therefore, as I said before, understand this parable as having a distinct reference to the Gospel dispensation, or that kingdom which Christ set up in the world. Considering it as having this application, we will notice, First; The Field. In the parable it is said, in his field, (verse 24.) In the explanation given by Christ we are told the field is the world, and the Son of man is he who sowed the good seed, (verses 37, 38.) So that the Son of man, he who was manifested in the flesh, claims the world as his field; that in which he was to accomplish the great work of Redemption and Salvation. Indeed it was created by him and for him. Col.1:16. When the earth and all the inhabitants thereof were dissolved, he bore up the pillars thereof, (Psal.75:3,) and that for the sake of the elect; here they must be born and born again, and power was given him over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him. Into this field he sends forth his laborers; and here he is accomplishing the whole purpose of God in giving occasion and opportunity for the man of sin, or the tares to be fully developed and thereby, as by contrast, showing the glory of his religion, the riches of his grace and His power to save.

Second. The good seed; these are the children of the kingdom. Verse 38. The preached gospel is represented as seed in the parable of the sower, verses 3-8 & 18-23 of the same chapter. Again, Christ represents himself as seed or wheat sown, when he says, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12:24. But in this case our Lord expressly declares, that "the good seed are the children of the kingdom;" and so of course we must understand it. And who are more definitely "the children of the kingdom," than the apostles? As seed, when sown, is scattered over the field, so Christ sowed his twelve Apostles in the field of the world, sending them forth into all the world, &c.; and hence he says unto them, "I have chosen you and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit and that your fruit should remain." John 15:16. And they have been bringing forth fruit unto this day, in the believers and gospel churches which have been growing up from their testimony or gospel. For it is through a belief of the gospel which they testified unto, that persons are brought into the liberty of gospel grace; and it is through a belief in and submission to the order which they established, that gospel churches have grown up.

Third. The tares. These are the children of the wicked; the translators add the word one, "the wicked one," hence the word is printed in italics. I know not, that the passage needed that addition from them. I am inclined to believe, that by the wicked here is meant the same as by "that wicked," in II Thes.2:8; namely, the man of sin, or that antichristian interest, which should grow up in the world. The original word here rendered tares, is supposed to mean a plant, which much resembles wheat in appearance until the fruit be formed; and so the words of the parable clearly imply. The seed of this plant when mixed and manufactured with wheat, is said to be hurtful. The tares therefore not only prefigure, but also strikingly represent that hurtful interest, which began to be manifested even in the apostles' days, and which has grown up from another gospel than the gospel of Christ, and is in its branches the product of those "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves as the apostles of Christ." II Cor.11:13. They assume to be believers in Christ and churches of Christ, growing up among them and for a time not distinguished from them, until they begin to bring forth their fruit of opposition to the truth and order of the Gospel. Instead of resting in the truth, in the doctrine of the apostles, they receive and advocate the doctrines of devils; having many systems. He, that sowed them, is the devil, hence Paul represents those false apostles as Satan's ministers, II Cor.11:15. He instigated those persons to be disciples of Christ, and filled their imaginations with falsehood or false doctrines, and induced them to preach "their dreams" for the doctrine of Christ, and thus multiply disciples to their imaginary gospel. Satan set this interest afoot, as an enemy; thinking by the plausibility of his systems to drown the truth; or to render it and those, who adhere to it, odious, as contrasted with his flattering doctrines, and so to cause the truth to be perverted and put down. He sowed these tares whilst men slept. These false systems have generally been disseminated imperceptibly and the churches have slept over them, till they have been awakened by the awful inroads made upon the truth and order professed by the church, and the strong party, formed in the church against that truth and order, having ripened are sowing their fruits of bitter opposition.

Fourth. The enquiry of the servants, "Wilt thou that we go and gather them up?" and the answer, "Nay, lest whilst ye gather up the tares ye root up also the wheat with them." We are here to bear in mind, that the field is not the church, but the world; and therefore the direction here given interferes not with that discipline, which the New Testament enjoins on the churches, such as to "Put away from among you that wicked person." &c. It may be asked, whether the churches and servants of Christ have ever had power to root up or destroy the antichristian interest in the world. Not to any great extent. They might however had they not been restrained, have applied to the governments under which they lived, to put down these false interests and thus have manifested a persecuting spirit. To guard the disciples of Jesus against indulging in such a spirit, this instruction is here given. It is the nature of tares to supplant and root out the wheat; but the wheat yields to such encroachments upon it, rather than having a tendency to root out other plants that get among it. And herein is manifested the spirit of the Gospel, in distinction from Antichrist, as being of a yielding, and not of a persecuting nature. Where we see men disposed to put down by worldly force those, who differ from them in religion, or to use any other weapons against them than the sword of the Spirit and a faithful gospel testimony, there is not the spirit of Christ; he came not to destroy men's lives, but to save. In the second place, this instruction of our Lord may be designed to show the tendency of a persecuting spirit; it knows no stopping place short of entire uniformity. It may begin with tares, but it will soon attack the wheat. The early professing church began with persecuting the Arians and other like sects, but it soon turned the army of Constantine against the Novatians and Donatists; because they would not fellowship the corruptions of the popular churches, in receiving members and restoring those, who had fallen away on account of persecution. So the recent persecutions in our country raised by popular excitements, have commenced with the Mormons and Catholics; but let

O.S. Baptists look for the sequel. When we reflect, that so murderous an excitement could be raised against the Catholics in Philadelphia, and that a grand jury taken from that intelligent community, could be found to excuse, in their presentment, such excitement, on the ground that the Catholics had provoked it by contending for equal religious rights with the Protestants in reference to the public schools; and if at the same we consider how odious we, Old School Baptists are to the popular religionists on account of our opposition to their principles and measures, and also how far the public mind has been already excited against us by the degrading, opprobrious descriptions given of us by the popular party, we shall be satisfied, that not much more will be needed than Benedict, Peck & Co.'s perverted historical account of our religious character, and that generally circulated, to prepare the public mind, throughout the country, for as bloody an excitement to be raised against us, as was raised against the Catholics in Philadelphia.

In the third place; there may be some wheat entwined among the roots or branches of the tares, which may or may not as yet have put forth the blade; this of course would be rooted up with the tares, if they were pulled up in this state. That is, there may be some of the elect yet in the loins of those who are manifested as tares, or there may be yet some of the children of God intermixed with the antichristian professors, without discovering their error, consequently were the one destroyed, the other would be involved in the destruction. But preparatory to the harvest each will be ripened, so that each may be distinguished. Hence the prophetic declaration, "Come out of her, my people." &c. Hence the Lord's time is the only safe time to gather the tares to burn. Let us then beware of encouraging the putting forth of any legal or popular force for putting down any religionists as such.

Fifth. The harvest. This is the end of the world. Dr. George Campbell, in his translation, has the "conclusion of this state," instead of the end of the world; and in his Notes he says, he renders the word, here used, conclusion, in distinction from another word which more definitely signifies the end or termination. At any rate, the general range of prophecy and Scripture declaration, seems to require that, by the expression in the end of the world as here used, we should understand rather the concluding period, than the final termination of the world in its present state. For I think, we are clearly taught, that at the final termination, Christ shall come a second time in Person; whereas in this case he only sends "his angels." Besides his Second Coming is to receive his saints to himself, raised and changed into his likeness; and this before the resurrection of the non-elect; but in this case the angels are to be sent to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, &c., which appears to correspond with the destruction of the man of sin and the whole Antichristian interest, and which evidently is to take place before the termination of the world. See Rev. from 14th to 19th inclusive. Sixth. The reapers. These are the angels. This corresponds with Rev.14:17-20. I see no reason, why we should not understand by the angels, in this case, those spiritual beings, which are sent forth to minister to them, who shall be heirs of salvation. Gospel ministers certainly cannot be intended here by the term angels; for it is not the province of such to destroy the wicked, or to inflict those judgments upon the antichristian interest which are denounced against it, and which, I think, are here intended. The furnace here spoken of, corresponds with the wine press of the wrath of God.

As there are repeated instances, mentioned in the Scriptures, of angels being employed in executing the purposes of God in providence, both for good to Christ and his people, and for evil to their enemies; I see not why we should not believe, that God still employs these invisible spirits in accomplishing those special dispensations of his providence, which are manifestly beyond the agency of man. I certainly need not stop to prove, that angels were employed in acts of kindness, as in delivering Peter out of prison and other instances; but the idea of those pure spirits being employed in executing evil, may not be so readily received; I will therefore notice some instances in point, recorded in Scripture. Their being employed in pouring out the seven vials of the wrath of God, is fully in point. Rev.15:6-8 & 16th chapter. When our Lord said, "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" Matt.26:53, he evidently intended to convey the idea of their being given for the purpose of defending him against those who would take him. It was an angel of the Lord, that smote the camp of the Assyrians, II Kings 19:35. It was an angel of the Lord also that smote Herod, Acts 12:23. The angels spoken of, Psal.78:49, being called evil angels, may denote the character of those angels sent among the Egyptians, as being such as had not kept their first estate, or they may have been called evil from their being sent to inflict evil on Egypt, though for good to Israel. In either case it shows the employment of angels in the administration of God's providence. Any person, who can believe that, in either of the above cases, mere human beings were intended by the term angels, must be able to believe more without proof or reason, that I can.

Seventh. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. This corresponds with Isa.30:26, "Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wound." This I think, has special reference to the restoration of the Jews and their conversion; and also corresponds in idea with Zech. 12:8. These texts thus show that the moon, the church, is yet in this world to be clothed with the full and perfect light of the gospel, and therefore to shine forth as the sun; and so of course will the righteous.

The above are what I conceive to be the leading ideas taught in this parable. And thus understood, it unfolds the nature and origin of those systems of religion, which have accompanied the Gospel and gospel Church thus far, in their spread in the world; and which, whilst they have assumed to be the gospel, and their votaries have claimed to be believers in Christ, they have no real affinity to the Gospel and gospel churches, and are therefore destined to be burned.

Yours, &c., S. TROTT. December, 1844.

VIEWS ON PHILIPPIANS 3:10 & 11.

"That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

Brother Beebe: - As your Correspondent F. refers to me as well as to yourself for an exposition of Phil.3:10-11, and you have seen fit to submit the subject to me, I will give such views as I have of the passage.

Paul having in some of the preceding verses, showed his superior religious advantages in his natural state, over many, in reference to legal or conditional acceptance, and consequently the great advantage he had on the ground of creaturely boasting; then states the great change he had experienced, in being brought to count those religious advantages which he had considered a great gain, a loss, a real nuisance, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, his Lord; and speaks of so accounting them that he might win Christ. The term win is here not used in the sense of obtaining a prize by venture or exertion, but in the sense of esteeming Christ as his prize or gain in contradistinction from those things he formerly counted gain. Then to have Christ would have been esteemed by him as a loss, now, those things he formerly prized, he knows to be loss, and Christ he esteems and desires as his gain. That is, not merely to have Him in name, but - "to be found in Him, not having," he says, "mine own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." How completely does the Apostle here cut off all creaturely means in the article of a justifying righteousness; it is through faith - not of works; it is by faith, not of the preacher or hearer, but of God.

Paul goes on to say in the 10 & 11 verses; "That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings; being made conformable unto His death. If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." That I may know Him: Not that Paul did not know Him as the long expected Messiah, as the God of Abraham, the Immanuel; nor that he did not know Christ crucified as the only way of salvation, as the end of the law for righteousness &c. But the sense here may be, the same as he told the Corinthians, "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified;" that is, as the subject of gospel preaching, or the ground of gospel hope, so in reference to himself he desires to know Him as the only ground of his hope and trust. Formerly he knew many things, when under the law, as grounds of hope, such as his circumcision, his blameless life, his zeal &c., but when sin revived and he died, all the goodness of these was destroyed; and now Christ Jesus only does he know, or even desire to know, as his trust and plea for acceptance with God. We may in some measure appreciate the force of the Apostle's expression: "That I may know Him," when we consider how prone we are to look to other things as grounds of our hope and confidence, such as our love, religious zeal, upright walk &c. Again Paul may have desired to know Christ, or God in Christ, in the sense in which he says, "now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known," I Cor.13:12, that is, he desires a more perfect knowledge of the "Only wise God our Saviour." We know but in part in reference to His exalted, glorified state. We have but a faint conception of the putting forth by our exalted Jesus of all the attributes of Jehovah for the salvation of His church and people. If we did but know Him more; know more of His love, truth, power, wisdom, and of the riches of His grace &c., we should not be so often doubting whether He could or would save such poor wandering sinners, who have no other hope. Paul partook of this imperfection of knowledge and was therefore susceptible of a growth in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ; and this he desired.

"And the power of His resurrection." In considering the power of His resurrection, we must remember that He died as the Head and Representative of His people, having all their iniquities upon Him, when He arose, He arose triumphant over their killing power, had expiated them, and left them buried, never to arise for His people's condemnation; and as He represented His people, in bearing sin and dying; so He in His triumph, brought them forth freed from the curse of the law.

Again, He was under the law to redeem His people from under the law; to Him therefore the law looked for the redemption price as standing between His people and its demands; when therefore He came forth from its servitude, having canceled its demand, and was "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead," He brought them forth with Him, from bondage into the same relation of sonship to God, as brethren and joint heirs with Him; and therefore brought in a dispensation of sonship under the new covenant in the place of legal bondage. There His people were quickened together with Him, and raised up together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Eph.2:5 &6.) So that when any are born again, they are born free from the curse, born in a state of justification, of liberty, of sonship and receive the spirit of adoption, crying Abba Father.

No wonder then, that Paul wished to know the power of Christ's resurrection; to have a constant and sweet experience of it, in enjoying the privilege and confidence of a son and heir of God; and to have an abiding sense that all this comes by Christ's resurrection. How much more glorious a state this, than that of legal servitude! What a display does it afford of the grace of God! What confidence does a knowledge of these things give in approaching God; beyond what we could have while dependent on our own faithfulness and acceptance with Him.

"And the fellowship of His sufferings." Christ in His sufferings under the law, on account of sin, and in enduring its penalty, suffered, as has been noticed, as representing His people: They have therefore a mutual fellowship or participation in those sufferings, and the redemption wrought thereby. They have thus through Christ their Head, received what the prophet calls, Double for all their sins; have received full punishment due for them and rendered full satisfaction to law and Justice. (Isa.40:2) No Fullerite evasion of the demands of the law, in this thing. When we so feel our sinfulness, as to query whether a just God can have compassion on such base transgressors; how comfortable to know our fellowship in Christ's sufferings, and that thereby our sins have been expiated, and justice on their account satisfied. We then know that a just and holy God can be favorable to us, notwithstanding our vileness as sinners. Alas, how few and scattered are the moments when, in this day of coldness, we know these things in real heart experience.

"Being made conformable to His death." This is an important consideration. Neither Paul, nor any other subject of grace would be satisfied with knowing the above things, whilst sin had its full dominion over them. We are told of Christ, that, "In that He died, He died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God." Rom.6:10. In regeneration and the new birth we are in this thing made conformable unto His death.

When the commandment comes, sin revives and we die. We so know and feel the exceeding sinfulness of sin, that we fully acquiesce in the justice of the sentence of death, which the law passes upon us. And instead of wishing to live any longer in our sins, we desire to be saved from them. And when born again, or brought into gospel liberty, we are born of a principle of life which lives not unto sin, but unto God. It has no delight in sin, but delights in God, and in a conformity to His will.

This is a source of many doubts, particularly to young christians; these are apt to suppose that this dying unto sin, is a being delivered from the sinful propensities of nature.

Hence when they feel these working in them, they fear they have been deceived in their hopes of having passed from death unto life. Paul felt the same propensities, with his flesh he served the law of sin &c. Rom.7:15-25. This death unto sin has often been represented, a being dead to the love of it. But this helps not the matter; for the natural affections are no more changed than in nature itself. Hence we find our affections setting towards that which is sinful, like a current. As Watts expresses it:

"The fondness of a creature's love, How strong it strikes the sense; Thither the warm affections move, Nor can we call them thence."

Christ did not die unto the love of sin; for He never did love it. But He died under the sentence of the law on account of the sins of His people laid upon Him. And if we have been made conformable unto His death, we die daily to all creaturely glorying, and creaturely confidence on account of finding sin mixed in every thing we do; so that we no more have any confidence in the flesh, in our gracious exercises; nor love for it or its doings; but have confidence in God and a desire after Him, and after a conformity to His will. Thus, we see the propriety of the Apostle's exhortation - "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin &c." Rom.6:11-13. No more consider sin your proper element. Again, Christ died unto the servitude of the law, and if we are made conformable unto His death, we have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but we have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father. And therefore we serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. Rom.8:15 & 7:6. Now when we are thus made conformable to Christ's death, an increased knowledge of the power of His resurrection, and of the fellowship of His sufferings; instead of leading to looseness of life, will lead us the more earnestly to desire to live unto God.

"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Not to stop to inquire what any supposable meanings of this text may be, I will inquire what the resurrection of the dead is, and let Paul answer. He says, "it is raised in incorruption; it is raised in glory; it is raised in power; it is raised a spiritual body." I Cor.15:42-44. Who that knows the internal warfare of the christian, does not, when his desires are not benumbed by the world or the flesh, desire like the Apostle to attain to this holy perfection in body as well as in spirit? Not that they are so anxious to be sown, or to be dead and buried; as the Apostle shows by another figure when he says, "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." II Cor. 5:4. Paul with propriety illustrates the extent of the desires of the new man by the idea of the resurrection of the dead, because he well knew, that neither he, nor any other christian would realize the satisfaction of these desires, short of the resurrection of the dead, as says the Psalmist: "I shall be satisfied, when I awake with Thy likeness." Ps.17:15. That Paul designed thus to express his earnest desire after entire perfection in heart and life, and therefore did not rest satisfied with any attainments short of it, is evident, from the further explanation which he gives in the following verses of the chapter, and which those who wish for satisfaction on the subject will do well to read. Here I will stop, lest remarking further on this verse, I should touch on controversy.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Sept. 24, 1846.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 14 (1846)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 342 - 347

PRAYER OF THE UNREGENERATE.

Brother Beebe: - The following letter I had written in a private answer to brother Erastus Maynard of Penn., but having occasion to write to you, and thinking that others besides brother Maynard had objections to the conclusion I mention in the 1st Number of the relation of my experience, being led to by certain circumstances, I have concluded to address it to you for publication in the Signs, if it does not over step your bounds.

S. T.

Brother Maynard, Yours of Feb. 24th came to hand, in which you object to the conclusion I arrived at from my experience in a certain case, and you ask further explanation relative to it. That to which you object is the idea that unregenerated persons may supplicate God's throne and be heard in cases of providential needs. The conclusion I consider a legitimate one from the circumstances I related. I had myself at that time no spiritual faith, and knew nothing of Christ as the way of acceptance with God. I had, as thousands of other unregenerated persons no doubt have, a rational faith in the providential government of God. Hence the conclusion that if I could be heard, other unregenerated persons who were under similar circumstances might be heard. The circumstances I related are to me known facts; and they may be, to you, my brother, facts, so far as you have confidence in the truth of my statement. My being involved in difficulty, my being led to look to God by prayer for deliverance, and my being delivered, must all alike have been under the control of God's providence; or all must have occurred by chance. I leave you to choose which position you please. For myself, I prefer acknowledging God's government in the whole affair. You say, you cannot see how persons can pray acceptably to God unless they have faith. I say, in substance, the same in reference to everything relating to the great matter of salvation, in connection with that to which you object. But since you have led me by your letter more to reflect on the subject, I think perhaps I went too far in saying in reference to salvation, No person can approach God with acceptance but through faith in Christ. I will now say, no person can have the assurance of being heard in reference to any of the blessings of salvation, excepting as he is enabled to pray in faith, nor can he receive and know those blessings, but through the faith of Christ. But the Publican's cry of, God be merciful to me, a sinner, I think was accepted, though he had not, when he uttered it, faith in Christ. And the similar cry of thousands since have been accepted before they had faith to behold Christ as the way of acceptance. They had faith in God, and in their just condemnation as transgressors of His law.

To return to the explanation you request. I understand from the Scriptures that God is the God of creation, of providence, and of salvation by grace; and that although creation and providence are subservient to the great purpose of salvation, yet in many points they are distinct from it; are subject to a different law from the law of the spirit of life in Christ

Jesus, to which salvation is subject. Many persons were created in Adam, who have not spiritual life in Christ, and who have never, therefore, by the law of the spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus been made free from the law of sin and death. Yet, these are subjects of God's providential goodness; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain upon the just and on the unjust. Thus also He is "the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe." That is, as I understand this text, He saves temporally all men from some calamities and evils to which they might be exposed. It is said, Acts 14:17,

"Nevertheless He left not Him-self without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness." I do not see any inconsistency with the purpose of salvation in supposing that as a witness of God's providential goodness to the children of men and of their dependence on Him, He should, in many cases like mine where He has purposed to make manifest His delivering hand, first bring the persons to cry to Him for help. Thus in the 107th Psalm, while there is in it a spiritual reference to God's wonders of salvation, there is also a literal reference to God's providential goodness in delivering persons, when they cry unto Him, out of their temporal distresses. See verses 13, 19 & 28, with their connections.

There is nothing there said about their crying in faith; yea, one class is denominated fools. So Nehemiah, whilst he gave to the children of Israel a character very different from that of believers in Christ, speaks of their crying unto God in their distresses and of His hearing and delivering them. Nehemiah 9:27, 28, and following verses. Look at Jacob fleeing from the consequences of the fraud he had practiced upon his brother Esau, and of the deception upon his father Isaac. He is met by a vision at night, in which he is assured of God's providential care and protection over him as the son of Abraham, through the ministry of angels. I have no idea that he then had faith in Christ as the way of acceptance with God; nor had he this faith until he wrestled with the angel, and received the name of Israel, or a prince having power with God and men and having prevailed Gen. 32:24-30.

Hence in the instance above referred to (Gen.28: 12-22), we find Jacob bargaining with God by a vow that if God would do so and so to him, then God should be his God, and on his return he would give to Him the tenth of all God should give him. I know it has been generally understood that the ladder which Jacob saw prefigured to him Christ as the medium of communication with God. This is inferred from what our Lord said, John 1:51. I do not so view the matter, I understand Christ's remark to Nathanael to be a contrast to Jacob's vision, and not as a comparison, as of the type and the antitype. Nathanael and the Jewish nation had seen, for ages past, the angels of God ascending and descending upon the ladder which Jacob saw in a vision; that is, they had seen God holding intercourse with that nation through the provisions of that covenant which He had established with Abraham. But says Christ to him, "Thou shalt see greater things than these." Hereafter, ye shall see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man."

That is, ye shall see God holding communion with His people through Christ Jesus and His atonement; a medium in which there are no rungs or steps to climb.

In conclusion I would say, we shall more clearly expose the delusions of men by which they suppose they are authorized by the Scriptures to believe they can climb to heaven by repentance, prayers &c., as so many rungs of Jacob's ladder, by observing and showing the distinction between the dispensations of God's providence and His grace, than by blending the two together, and thereby denying His providential goodness towards those that are without. Hoping that this may be satisfactory, or if it is not, you will again write me and show its defects, I subscribe myself affectionately yours, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, March 12, 1851.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.19 (1851)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 401-404

PRESENT STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Circular Letter: The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association met with the Church at Black Rock, May 19th, 20th & 21st, 1858, to the Churches connected therewith.

Beloved Brethren: - Permit us to address you on this occasion on the Present State of the Church of Christ. That the Church is at this time surrounded with darkness in a peculiar manner, is generally admitted. It is like the plague of darkness of Egypt, a darkness that may be felt. It is a wintry state of the Church. The sun occasionally shines, but its shining has not that warming, enlivening and cheering influence upon the plants as at other times it has had, and it is soon obscured by cold bleak clouds. There are clouds rising from the mists of this world, from the various agitations in the world at this time, politically and otherwise, which much darken the hemisphere of the Church and saints, and produce a corresponding chilliness. There is not that liveliness in our love to the brethren, nor to the truth and ordinances of the Gospel, nor that engagedness in religious exercises, and in religious conversation, and meditations, as have at other times been felt. As in night and wintry seasons beasts of prey crowd round the settlements of men, to raven; so it is with the Church at this time. There are those around the saints and among them, that would persuade to scare the sheep from their fenced folds to ramble with them in the wild rages of human wisdom, and to repose with them with them in their dens that they may prey upon them, and no doubt they have bewitched some of the sheep. There are others again who would persuade the children of God, that they ought not to follow or receive the light which God has given to their continual guide - the Scriptures and blessed teachings of the Spirit but to be guided in their belief and practice by the mixture of light and shade which is found in the writings of eminent men of past ages; and as these are various, so as they are followed they produce different views and dissensions among the saints. Again, Satan takes the advantage of this darkness, to assault the saints with temptations. It is an old complaint with the children of God that,

"Temptations every where annoy, And sins and snares my peace destroy."

How it may be with the brethren generally at this time we know not, but some are peculiarly tried with temptations. Satan so stirs up their passions, appetites, &c., that they think it is altogether themselves. And indeed it is their own vile nature that thus shows itself; and what is a worse annoyance to them, the old man when left to act itself loves as much as ever it did, the indulgence of itself in its corruptions, and hence under this wildness and darkness, or in other words not having the spiritual man in lively exercise, we are led on under the influence of our corruptions, till we are on the very brink of acting them out, and were it not for the faithfulness of God who has promised that with the temptations He will make a way for our escape, we should plunge into actual sin. Though the escape is brought about, we know that it is not of ourselves, but that the sin is ours, though we were not left to carry it out; then arises the trying doubts, whether, if we loved God and His cause and believed the declarations of His word, &c., we could be led on thus contrary to His word and to the exposing of His cause to reproach. We are sometimes thus tossed upon the billows of temptations, until like Jonah, we become exceedingly displeased, and angry, and pray the Lord to take away our life, thinking it better for us to die than to live; yea, with Job, our souls, those souls which others tell us are made heavenly in regeneration, choose strangling and death rather than life.

Again, as in wintry seasons, clouds have heretofore at times gathered over the Church, but at this time they appear to be gathering thicker than ever, as though preparing to burst in a storm upon us. The Young Men's Christian Associations which are organized in most of our towns, and united throughout the country in a general convention, appear as very innocent combinations at first sight; but when we consider that they are composed of persons of different denominations and likewise of those who are not professors, all united together for promoting religion, though they appear like the little cloud which Elijah's servant saw rising out of the sea, yet there is evidently in them the elements of a great rain, tending as they are to promote a matured, combined and concentrated effort in their religious enterprise. Again, these union prayer meetings which are said to have originated from these young men's associations, are tending still more fully to concentrate and combine all the sects of Protestantism in a grand effort to bring the country and the government under the control of their religious influence, and thus enable them to dictate to the government, and to silence opposition to their plans and measures. Indeed the unprecedented and wonderful effects of these union prayer meetings, in making converts, looks more like making fire come down from heaven in the sight of men, and of consummating the power of the Protestant Beast, than anything that has appeared yet. How soon it will be consummated is not our province to say.

But, brethren, it is with the Church now as it was with Israel during the plague of darkness in Egypt. All the children of Israel had light in their dwellings. So we think the churches of the saints have at this time as clear light in the great truths of the Gospel as in any former period; and it is more distinguishable from every false system then formerly as it makes manifest the darkness without, by being so contrasted with it. The ministers of Christ, although frequently on account of the wintry darkness when going to their appointments, feel more as though they were on some worldly concern than to deliver a message of peace, yet are enabled generally to preach the gospel with much clearness, to feel while preaching the vast weight of their subject, the precious fulness and freeness of the gospel of salvation, and the importance of contending earnestly for the faith, and of preaching Christ as the only way of salvation. Private members are as well established in the truth, and have as clear a discerning spirit to distinguish between truth and error when preached, as at any former period; and whilst complaining of many doubts, fears and temptations, are as well established in the truth that their whole salvation is in Christ Jesus as in any former period, and manifest as much anxiety to know the Scriptures, and to be in

The enquiry is frequently made, What can be the reason of the Church's being in this dark wintry state, and whether it is not owing to the unfaithfulness of the Church that this has come upon her? The inquiry is also made whether the Church cannot adopt some course, whether some measures cannot be taken to bring the Church back to more sunny seasons, and whether individuals by proper efforts, by prayer, &c., cannot deliver themselves from their coldness? Some few have urged the making certain exertions to relieve the Church and saints from this unpleasant situation. Brethren, does not the same God reign in the heavenly kingdom as in the earthly? Does He not reign as supremely in the one as in the other? Does not the declaration of the Lord, "I form the light and create darkness, I make peace and create evil; I the Lord do all these things" apply as fully to the spiritual world and its government as to the natural? Try your powers, brethren, in mid winter to clear away the storm clouds, to avert the long, dark cold nights and to bring the sun back to its summer solstice, and if ye can do this, then may ye hope by your efforts to hasten on again the period when in reference to the Church ye may sing, "For lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land," and not till then. We know, brethren, that all this coldness and darkness and the corruptions, that cause us to doubt and fret, and are the materials for Satan's temptations to act upon, are in us. We cannot say with our Lord, "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me." No, the evil is all in us, and when we rightly feel, we take all the shame and blame to ourselves. But can we shake off to overcome these evils of ourselves? No, the more we feel the evil of these corruptions and coldness, we feel the more our entire impotency to relieve ourselves from them, we cry for God to interpose His grace or we must fall under them. It is true, that amid the severest colds and storms of winter, if God in His providence provide us with shelter, with food and clothing we may keep from perishing, so under all these dark and wintry seasons spiritually, God's grace will be sufficient for His people to secure that their faith fail not. He will keep them by His power through faith unto salvation, though He may leave them, for more humbling of themselves, and for the trying their faith, to fall into the mire.

The people of God, are likened to sheep. Sheep are feeble, defenseless creatures of themselves, very simple in providing for their defense against their enemies, or in providing for, and protecting themselves and their young from perishing in the wintry storms. They need the constant care of a shepherd to provide food and shelter for them, and to protect them by keeping them embosomed, or by watching over them, or they will wander off, get scattered and devoured.

The people of God are equally as dependent upon the care of their Shepherd. But David personating Christ in His body, the Church, says, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me besides the still waters. He restoreth my soul, &c." So that even the souls of the children, get off at times from the simplicity of gospel truth and order and need to be restored by the great Shepherd. This does not look like the souls of saints have been changed into heavenly souls.

As to the reason why the church is in this dark and wintry state; we would say, it is not that the Shepherd is unfaithful to His charge; not because He has not power to preserve His sheep in perfect peace, and to keep them in the constant enjoyment of light; nor because they are left to their own care; but because He has seen it best for the church to be in this state. In a word, because it is so written, and the Scriptures must be fulfilled. The present dark and cold state of the church, will no doubt be more for the glory of God, more for a manifestation of the power and exceeding riches of His grace; more fully to display to the admiration of saints and angels, the divine efficacy of the blood of Jesus to cleanse from all sin, and that perfect fulness there is in Him to present the vilest sinner without spot or blemish before the throne of God, than would the church's being kept in the constant exercise of that faith and love and zeal such as characterized the lives of Peter, John and Paul. Because now it appears so manifest that it is all of grace that they are saved and kept, all of Christ in which they will appear with acceptance before God, and shine in glory.

Let us then, Brethren, amidst all the darkness around, rejoice in the power and faithful care of our Shepherd and may we be found walking as children of light.

S.TROTT - 1858.

PUBLIC FASTING

Dear Brother Beebe: You have requested my views on Public Fasting, and by whose authority it was introduced into the Christian church. I presume the readers of the Southern Baptist Messenger are fully aware of the difference between the legal and the gospel dispensations. The worship under the former, as prescribed by the ceremonial law, consisted in outward forms, based upon creaturely sacrifices; whereas, under the gospel dispensation, the worship recognized by the New Testament is spiritual, and based upon the one sacrifice offered by Christ in His own person. Hence, under the law, mourning, affliction and contrition were, with propriety, expressed by putting on sackcloth, fasting, &c., while joy and thankfulness were expressed by feasting. But fasting is neither commanded by Christ or His apostles in the New Testament, nor by God in the law, unless the command to Israel, in connection with the yearly day of atonement, that on that day they should afflict their souls, be considered as embracing fasting. See Lev. 16:29. So that fasting, unless the legal service of the day of atonement be an exception, was altogether a voluntary form, until it became established among the Jews, by the tradition of the Elders. The first account of fasting as a form in earnestly seeking God is that of Israel's fasting in their war with Benjamin. Judges 20:26. After that, we find occasional instances of fasting during the time of Samuel's judging Israel in the two books of Samuel; also, of David's fasting, on account of the sickness of his child. In this case, David seems to have done it as an act of humiliation and supplication to God for the life of his child. But his servants seem to have viewed fasting simply as an expression of sorrow. See II Sam. 12:16-23. The first instance in Scripture of a fast being proclaimed by authority is certainly not a very commendable example to be followed. It was made by Jezebel at the time she would take the life of Naboth, by false witnesses, I Kings 21:3-14; though we afterwards find Jehoshaphat proclaiming a fast as an act of seeking help from God (and was heard of God in his supplication). In the times of Isaiah and Jeremiah, fasts appear to have become common, and much of hypocrisy in them. In the time of Zechariah, there were two stated yearly fasts among the Jews; one in commemoration of the destruction of the Temple by the king of Babylon, the other, as

But let us pass to the New Testament and see what authority we have there for Christians fasting. The first instance we have of instruction concerning fasting is in Mt. 6:16-18. Our Lord directs His disciples that when they fast to be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance, &c. "But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast." Here our Lord does not forbid His disciples to fast, but forbids their assuming the outward appearance of it, so as to appear unto men to fast. Consequently, it forbids public fasting to His disciples, though it admits of their fasting in secret or private, as before God. But I apprehend that many, in some measure, misapprehend much of Christ's instruction to His disciples in this discourse on the mount. It contains much instruction that applies to His disciples under the gospel, showing the spirituality of the worship belonging to His kingdom, in opposition to legal forms and outward ostentation. But, at the same time, it is addressed to them as under the law, as they were. Christ Himself, for the time He served, was a minister of the circumcision, and so were His disciples bound to observe the rites and forms of the law until Christ, by His death, redeemed them from under the law, and blotted out the handwriting of ordinances, nailing them to the cross. Hence, Christ said to the multitude, to His disciples, "The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; all, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works" Mat.23: 1-3. Another case is: The disciples of John came to Christ and said, "Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not? And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bride-groom is with them? But the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast" Mt. 9:14,15. The first idea here presented is that Christ represents mourning the same with fasting. The second is that in this case He justifies His disciples in departing from the tradition of the Elders. But, what is taught by our Lord's figure? The idea of the children of the bride-chamber, and of the bride-groom being with them, is that of a marriage feast, and joy. Was this feast and joy which the disciples of Christ experienced in having with them, carnal or earthly? Certainly not. They had not much of such feasting. But they joyed in His presence with them as the Messiah, and feasted on His word. So, from that day to this day, whenever the Blessed Bridegroom is present with the children of God, they have enjoyed a wedding feast, though suffering much worldly privation; it is spiritual. So the feeling or *mourning*which Christ intended must evidently be spiritual. In this sense, the children of God have experienced much of mourning, or fasting, since Christ ascended. That this was the idea intended is confirmed by the parables in the following verse, of the old garment, and old bottles, by which Christ teaches that gospel grace and blessings are not to be patched on to the old garment of legal rites and ceremonies, nor put into the old bottles of the legal covenant. Hence, this text affords us no authority for fasting from natural food.

But, the instances which, more than any other, sanctions the practice of fasting among Christians are found in Acts 13:2,3 & 14:23, because we there have apostolic example for fasting. Apostolic example is, next to command, the best authority we have for religious order. But these practices, in all cases, are certainly not to be received as binding examples to the saints in after ages. Because the prejudices of the early disciples were so strong in favor of Jewish rites and customs, that even Paul, in many instances, was constrained to conform to their prejudice, differently from what he taught the Gentiles. Thus he circumcised Timothy, and by the request of the apostles at Jerusalem, he shaved his head, and went through other forms as though he had a vow upon him. See Acts 21:20-25. And I am inclined to the belief that these instances above referred to were in conformity to Jewish prejudices and customs. Seeing there is no command for it in the whole Bible, fasting looks to me so much like will-worship and false humility, and neglecting of the body, not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh, that I feel like touching not. See Col.2:21-23. Besides, if I were to fast twice a week, I must rely alone on the atonement of Christ as my plea for my pardon and acceptance with God.

But still, in view of these examples in the apostolic church, I do not wish to condemn such saints and churches as feel their minds led to practice fasting, provided they observe the directions of our Lord. Matthew 6:16-18.

Brother Beebe, you also requested me to state by whose authority fasting was introduced into the Christian church. Bodily mortification seems, in all ages, to have been a favorite element in natural religion, both among the Jews and heathen. Hence, the early disciples clung to it, and the Catholic church, when they commenced multiplying ceremonies, encouraged the practice of it as an act of penance. And Calvin also, in his blending much of legality with his system of religion, encouraged its being practiced in his church upon the Pharisaical plan. But since the Jews nationally ceased, I know of no instance on record of fasting being observed as a national act, or by the authority of national governments, until the Puritans introduced it into New England. Soon after their settlement there, in view of their troubles with the Indians, and on account of their severe winters, and unimproved country, the General Assembly of Massachusetts appointed the observance of fasts twice a year, one in the spring, and one in the fall. This practice was continued for a number of years until, on one occasion, the General Assembly was about to appoint a Colonial fast for the fall, when a member arose, and with a good deal of national propriety, if nothing more, said they had repeatedly appointed days of fasting to supplicate God's protection, but had never appointed a season of thanksgiving to Him for the mercies they had received. He, therefore, moved that instead of appointing a day of fasting for the fall, they appoint a day of thanksgiving. It was carried, and from that day to this, Massachusetts, and the other New England Colonies, and States, have had appointed for them a day of fasting in the spring, and a day of thanksgiving in the fall, with, perhaps, the exception of Rhode Island. For a number of years past, New England influence, by means of New England settlers, has induced the Governors of several of the other States to appoint for their people days of thanksgiving, though seldom days of fasting. The influence has caused several of the Presidents of the United States to appoint days of fasting, and I think, in one instance, a day of thanksgiving. One of the Presidents, Jackson, I think it was, when petitioned to appoint a day of national fasting, refused, as did Governor Wise reject a like petition to appoint a day of thanksgiving for Virginia. Both assigned as the reason of their refusal that the observance of such days must be considered religious performances, with which they, as Magistrates had not right to interfere. It may be argued that as an example of natural religion, it may be proper, on special occasions, for a nation, or people, to humble themselves before God by fasting; and, that God has favorably respected such acts, as in the case of Ahab, I Kings 21:27-29; and of the king of Nineveh, Jonah 3:6-10. If nations observe such days without having any reference to Christ and His religion, I have nothing to say. But, this much I must say: That if rulers appoint the religious observance of such days, whether on the principle of natural or revealed religion, we as Christians cannot consistently participate in the observance, because that in all things pertaining to our religion, we should acknowledge no king but Christ, and no rule but His word. In other matters it becomes us to be obedient to Magistrates.

Dear Brother William, I have given you my views, and such information as I have, on this subject. I hope I may not have written anything which will be offensive to any of the brethren. I am not favorably situated for writing, living, as I do, within a seven mile space that divides the guards of the two contending armies, liable to be visited with scouts from Lincoln's army, as well as by our own scouts, and in daily expectation, and have been for weeks, of the advance of one or the other army to bring on a battle. But we know the Lord has the control of every move, great or small.

Yours, with Christian regard, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, July 8th, 1861.

Elder Samuel Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 30 (1862)

REGARDING A LETTER BY OSBOURN.

BROTHER BEEBE: - I fear I shall make myself liable to the charge of being censorious, and also that I shall intrude upon the patrons of the SIGNS by the frequency of my communications recently. I had scarcely finished my remarks occasioned by brother S.'s letter, when I received the 14th number of the SIGNS, containing Elder James Osbourn's Letter, No.1 & 2, to Brother Hassell, in which there are two or three points, upon which I was truly constrained by my feelings (and I hope they were correct feelings) to drop a few remarks.

1st. He has brought to view certain ideas relative to the present and succeeding state of the church for many years to come, which have not to my knowledge, been generally entertained. The ideas are that the saints are dying a mystical death, are suffering an inward martyrdom, from a famine that is now upon us, &c., and that this state of things is to remain for many years; that this is all the suffering worth speaking of that they need to fear for many years, &c.; that this famine is not to be accompanied by the sword; that we are not near unto persecuting times, &c. Now these are Elder Osbourn's thoughts; and they may be correct thoughts; but his thinking so can be no authority for my thinking so. If he shows me good and Scriptural grounds for his conclusions, then I shall receive them as true. I am not; and I hope most of our Old School Baptists are not disposed to receive any man's assertions as authority in religion. Now what I want upon this point is that Elder Osbourn should give us his authority from the word of God for these views if he wishes us instructed by them. The Lord by Amos says, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Amos 3:7. If therefore the Lord has determined to bring and continue such a state of things upon the church as Elder Osbourn describes it stands recorded in prophecy, in the scriptures of truth; and as he speaks positive as to what God's thoughts are in this matter, I think we have good right to expect of him that he will show us the prophecy and its application to this time and case. He has, it is true, given us some texts. But the point is; has he applied them correctly? He quotes Jer.14:2 & 3, as being a prophecy of the calamity that is now upon gospel Zion. I am not disposed to dispute its application, but if admitted, his hypothesis falls, for the sword and the famine and the pestilence are to go together, see verses 12, 15 -18. And so we know in fact, they went together in the primary fulfillment of this prophecy as it relates to the Jews. Lam. 1:6, is liable to a similar remark. Again, he quotes Dan.11:34, evidently as a prophecy relating to this event, saying, "But in this calamity (that is of the famine,) of ours, we shall be holpen, &c." Now by taking verses 33 and 34 together, we find that the calamity from which they are to be holpen is that of the sword and flame and captivity. So that I cannot find anything there to support his view. Again, Jer.30:17, is no more favorable, for it is from the wounds of a cruel enemy that they are to be healed, and those that have devoured Zion, and who were adversaries and preyed upon her, &c., that were to be destroyed; see the connection from verse 14. He also quotes Rev.3:2, as applicable. I will not say it is not, but am however inclined to believe that in the order it refers to an earlier period than this. And whether it does or not; it is not those who are ready to die, but, the things which remained that are ready to die, as it stands in the text.

The 2nd point relates to what he says of those who preach the truth of the gospel, in distinction from those judaizing teachers. In the first place I would like to know whether the nine tenths who are on the sick list, and whom he calls gospel preachers; are to be considered persons who are subjects of grace, and whom the Lord has sent forth as laborers into his harvest or not? From the expressions above quoted I should conclude he views them as such; but what he says in his 1st Letter, and quotes I Cor.13 to support, and from his saying that most of our pulpits where the truth in the letter is preached, are void of holy unction and heavenly dew, and some other expressions, I should conclude he meant to represent them as total strangers to a life of faith on the Son of God and to true gospel grace in their hearts.

Then the Lord have mercy on us, for I know not who of us will stand. If such a portion of those whom, we Old School Baptists are used to consider gospel preachers are to fall short at last, I have every reason to fear that I shall be of that miserable number. I would like to be informed of what he means by that holy unction, which the few have? I have read of an unction from the Holy One, which is distinguished as teaching all things &c. I John 2:20, 27. And I have thought that those whom we call gospel preachers manifest more of this latterly than formerly, in the clear illustrations they give of scripture and scriptural truth.

If he considers these nine tenths as persons whom Christ has gifted and called into the ministry; the next enquiry I would make is, whether the ministry mostly becoming a dry breast, and clouds without water, &c., is a fault of ours or owing to a peculiar dispensation of God wherein he would afflict his church? If the former, may the Lord give us repentance; if the latter, I entreat the few favored ones to have compassion on us, and not speak tauntingly concerning us; for surely the affliction of being thus barren, towards our brethren is sufficient.

I know very well that gospel preachers, at this day labor under very peculiar discouragements, both from within and without, that they truly prophecy in sackcloth. I also know that there is a general dearth in Zion, and I have myself concluded that a famine was coming upon the church. But the idea that it is a separate thing from the persecution which awaits the church in the last struggle of the beast, and to last of itself for many years, throws such an additional gloom upon the prospect before us, and appears so different from anything I had conceived of the prophecies concerning Zion, and of Christ's tender care of his church as the Great Shepherd, that I cannot give in to it without some pretty clear Scriptural proofs in point. And yet if I have been deceived in my views upon these points, I wish to be undeceived.

And in reference to what he says of the ministry; that is, what he admits to be gospel ministry, I may misapprehend him; but I think he speaks rather too contemptuous of us, and not to manifest that fellow sympathy which he ought to feel for our deplorable state if we indeed are Christ's ministers. If he is more favored in his own soul, and in being enabled to administer savoury food such as deeply exercised can feed on, he has nothing whereof to glory.

But the 3rd point is one in which as Paul said to Peter (Gal. 2:11,) he is, as I think, to be blamed. It is simply an allusion in his 2nd Letter; but he refers to the ninth part of his life, (a work which he published this past winter,) for a full account. He in that chapter of his own biography, speaks very disrespectfully of a brother who stands firm as an Old School Baptist. This brother is considered by some as rather severe in his manner of preaching against errors; but it is nothing he has borrowed, it is simply his own peculiar manner of expressing himself, and to those of us who have had some familiar acquaintance with him, he appears to possess much of the spirit of meekness and humility; yea, in every respect more of the spirit of the gospel than many who make higher pretensions to holiness. I will not say what was th substance of this brother's preaching at the period to which Elder Osbourn alludes, for he was at that time on a high pinnacle of popularity, a station which I do not myself believe favorable for administering wholesome food to the poor or afflicted of the flock, but since that, he has been through the fire, with the furnace much heated, and during the whole has been a steadfast, firm advocate for gospel truth. If Elder Osbourn cannot be himself reconciled to him, so as to fellowship him as a brother, still as others whom he acknowledges as saints, do feel a fellowship for him; I should consider it more consistent with a gospel order and spirit for him to have borne his grievance by himself, seeing it is nothing he can make a proper subject of discipline, rather than to have published him as he has done. And especially I think the SIGNS ought by no means to be made a vehicle for conveying these attacks on the feelings of a brother already suffering oppression on every hand. This I think my brethren will generally admit, when in addition to what has been said, we consider his steadfast and disinterested course in support of truth, notwithstanding all the opposition and discouragements he has had to contend with in the city where he resides. Instead of leaving the little company of disciples, who adhered to him for the truth's sake, to be scattered or find pasture where they could, because they could not furnish him a support, as others have done, he has engaged in a laborious but honest business for his own support while he continues to preach regularly unto them.

In conclusion I will observe that my remarks on the first two points might more properly have been omitted till I had an opportunity of seeing his third Letter, should it be published, were it not that I knew the feelings of our brother must be wounded at seeing such an allusion to him in the SIGNS, and I did not feel disposed to leave him any longer than I could help, to feel as though he had no brother to sympathize with him. Besides from the manner in which Elder Osbourn appeared to shape his subject, I thought it not likely he would furnish any more light upon the points on which I wanted information, and if this should reach him before his other was published he might perhaps be disposed to gratify my wishes before he closed his subject. For I truly wish to know the ground upon which he establishes his views relative to the present state of the church.

S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., July 15, 1835.

A MINI EXPERIENCE OF Elder TROTT'S MINISTRY (TROTT) 1836

Brother Beebe: Having been prevented going as I had appointed to visit the brethren in Chesterfield County first; By an uncommonly heavy fall of rain at the time I intended starting, and before the rain ceased, by a severe attack of rheumatism which still bids fair to confine me pretty close for a season, I again address you, and through you the readers of the Signs, especially those in Virginia. I'm sorry that the subject is not one of more general interests, and better calculated to impart edification to your readers. Circumstances however seemed to require that I should meet certain reports, which I am told are industrial Circulated, and with some effect in places off, from my regular rounds.

I have apprised some length of time since that these reports were in circulation among certain classes of Baptists in the country, but as I presumed that both of those who received and those who retailed them, acted towards all consistent old school Baptists, upon the old plan, of the report and we will report, I thought it best to take no notice of them. But having recently understood that considerable exertions are made to prevent certain brethren from hearing me, who I think love the truth when they have an opportunity of hearing it, which, by the by, is not often, by persuading them that however good or correct my preaching may be, as they are pleased to say, it is not proper to countenance it while things are thus, I have thought it advisable to give a relation of the facts from Wednesday's reports have been raised. But I rely with more confidence on this simple statement knowing that these things are not done in a corner.

One charge is, that I am removing from place to place, creating divisions in the churches I preach to, wherever I go.

The other is, that my whole opposition to the course of elder Gilmore has arisen from my having been disappointed of a certain $150.00, which I had expected to receive from him, on my first coming into Virginia.

These I believe are the substance of the charges, if not the identical words used.

The first of these charges I have understood grew out of a report that this was my course, whilst I lived in Kentucky, put in circulation in the broad run neighborhood, where else I do not, by the great champion of missionary agents, Luther Rice. It was very easy to infer from this report, that I had caused the division in the Ebenezer church, and this was my general course; Especially by persons who had been previously trying to prejudice churches and the public against me, as being an antinomian, as they said, and preaching a doctrine which made God the author of sin, because I hold the doctrine of absolute predestination. But one inference manifests in them, about as much candor as the other period but to the ground of Mr. Rice's report: the dry run church, Scott County Kentucky of which I was a pastor most of the time I resided in that state, had experienced a division at the time of the great split in the Elkhorn association, out of which the licking association grew; the church going with the other licking brethren, and on account of which several of the members left the church. This took place before I went to the West.

After I had been preaching for this church for some time, and during my absence on a tour of several months, these brethren returned and were reconciled to the church. This indeed had been somewhat entrained before I left. Soon after my return, one of these restored members began to manifest a good deal of opposition to the doctrinal views advanced by me. After having manifested his opposition abroad for several months, he at a certain time invited me to come to his house and talk over our difference of views. I was appointed. I took one of the deacons of the church with me; When we arrived at his house we found him waiting for us, having as an assistant a young, Christian, or free will Baptist, or as called there a new light preacher. During the interview, he made a full disclosure of his views, which went to the full extent of the free will Baptists. The brother who accompanied me, of his own accord, being constrained to do so, from what he had heard took this person one side and cited him to appear at the next church meeting and answered to charges which he should lay in against him, for departure from the faith. At the next Saturday meeting, the charge was accordingly laid in, and the consideration of it, if I mistake not, deferred to the following meeting. Meanwhile, the subject was noised abroad, and a neighboring preacher of the Elkhorn association was appointed to be with us at the Lord's Day meeting. He went on to preach from Hebrews 2.9, the latter clause. I soon found his object was to draw a middle line between the doctrine of particular atonement held by me, and the views held by the brother under censure.

The position he took was that Christ tasted death for the elect to procure for them salvation and for the rest of the human family, to procure for them a respite from punishment for a season, and the comfort of life. Thus on that point, the views of this brother were that the object of Christ's death was to procure for the human family, time and opportunity for repentance. I felt it my duty when this preacher had finished this discourse, to arise and bare my decided testimony against the sentiments he had delivered; And this I did without much reserve. He replied; I again answered him; And whilst doing it, the brother under censure, who was sitting under the pulpit, went upon the seat, reached up his hand, and took hold of the Cape of my great coat evidently with the intention of pulling me out of the pulpit, but was prevented by some of the brethren catching his arm. Some of the members who had considerable confidence in this visiting preacher and did not notice the peculiar ground he then occupied, or did not reflect on the consequence of his position, were at the time considerably hurt at my opposing him thus publicly, but after reflection, and conversation with others of the brethren and with me, they appeared to be and I think were not fully satisfied with the course I took. The brother under censure at the next meeting was excluded, and in consequence of this another of these restored brethren asked for a letter for himself and his wife and another brother for himself, which 3 letters were granted. This was the extent of the division. Those who remained I left united, and I believe in fellowship with me when I left Kentucky. There was another instance in which considerable division of feeling occurred, though I believe no separation, at that time, and which perhaps was in part charged upon me. It was in the old Georgetown Baptist Church not the old school church, which had recently been constituted. I was never the pastor of this church, though I at one time preached statedly for them, as also did two other preachers at the same time. And I afterward occasionally for a while, had appointments in their house.

About this time Doctor Fishback was advancing publicly his views relative to the spirit, denying as Campbell has since done, any special operation of the Holy Spirit in the Christian experience. Hearing him come out very fully on that point at Georgetown, I on the one or two appointments I afterward had dared, opposed quite pointedly his views. There was considerable division among the members upon that and other points. And as I understood there was strong opposition to me in the church, on the ground that I decided to stand against Fishback, and against certain popular Arian preachers in that neighborhood, and perhaps in connection with these, on account of my having separated from the Kentucky Indian Mission, after Luther rice succeeded in bringing the society over to a connection with the general board, I declined to make any further appointments there.

Thus much for the divisions I had any special hand in producing in Kentucky.

Now in reference to churches elsewhere, at the time the Welsh Tract Church (Delaware) voted to call me, as their pastor, I being at the time in New Jersey, one brother asked for a letter for himself and a wife, and received it, being dissatisfied with their calling me, because, (as I have understood, he said) that I was an enemy to all righteousness.

This brings me to the next course, to the difficulty in the Ebenezer church in Virginia.

The committee of the Ketockton association who sat on this case, reported the division grew out of my being called to the pastoral care of this church. As they qualified this by admitting the right of the majority to call me, and my right to accept such a call, I did not object to the report, because I believed that they had done what they thought best calculated to bring about a reconciliation between the church and those whom they pronounced in their report correctly excluded, and I wish to do nothing to prevent such a result. But a kind Providence has furnished decisive testimony, not only that the division existed but also that it showed itself before I came into Virginia, and before I knew anything of this church except from the recommendations of Brother Polkinghorn and Elder Gilmore, or they of me but from the same sources, and perhaps some of them from seeing my name connected with the black rock meeting. The church in a statement they published, showed the division began to show itself shortly after the church had unanimously voted to send an invitation to me. This was in February and in March after the invitation had been sent on to me as unanimous, and as understood by the church and by me, through the communication of Elder Gilmore, as an additional inducement in connection with the cause of two other churches, to move to Virginia with my family, the person who had moved that the invitation should thus be sent, used his influence and his exertions to induce the church to call another preacher, though without effect save with a few.

On the other hand the disaffected members, in a letter they addressed to me in June following, being a month after the church had voted to me, a call as their pastor, and containing the first intimation they ever gave me either by letter before I came on, or by verbal communication afterward, that the church was not all united in the invitation, that is, by the disaffected members, they say, speaking for the meeting in February when the invitation was agreed on, here commenced that discord which is now causing a once peaceful, united and happy band of brethren to bleed at every pore. Hence the testimony of both parties is decisive in proving that the division commenced at a period when I could have had no agency in producing it, I being not in Virginia, and not having any intimation of there was anything but a perfect union invitation sent on to me. But it may be thought that this division would not have resulted in an actual separation at that time, had I not accepted the call of the majority, and probably it would not, if the majority instead of deciding on calling me had consented to unite with the minority and calling a preacher of their choice.

But in reference to my accepting a call presented under such circumstances; I have only to say that from what I could learn of the division after I found there was one existing in a church, I was led to believe that the majority were from principal decidedly old school baptists, both as to doctrine and practice, and therefore in favor of the stand taken at the Black Rock meeting, and the leaders of the other party were as decidedly opposed to what they call black rockism, and would never have consent to the call of a preacher not opposed to the Black Rock stand. Hence there was no prospect of their uniting in the call of a preacher unless the majority would yield to the minority in the sting, or unless the minority should on reflection conclude to me into the express wishes of the majority. Such were the views under which I accepted the call, and that as has been before published, only conditionally and I have seen nothing to this day to alter these views, but much to confirm them.

In addition to the acknowledgment above made of having occasioned in any measure divisions in churches, I will further say, 1st that I would not have it understood that every individual member in any Church of which I have been pastor, was altogether pleased with my preaching.

And secondly; that I have ever endeavored in my preaching to hold forth what I believe to be gospel truth, in opposition to false doctrine; And what I believe a gospel experience in opposition to delusion, and what I consider gospel order, in opposition to the devices of men. Having myself been brought as I hope by grace divine, out from my connection which I cannot consider a Church of Christ, and from the ordinances of man as substituted for the ordinances of Christ, and for what I now know to have been a delusive hope, I have ever since felt a peculiar solicitude to convince others of their error who I fear were in either case, in that situation I had been in.

How far my preaching has been instrumental in leading others to distinguish between truth and error and to contend for the one in opposition to the other, is not for me to say, but I will say, that it has had this effect, very far less than I have desired.

Thus far, and no farther do I plead guilty of having occasion divisions in churches. I challenged Luther Rice and any other person to produce proof of my having to any greater extent occasion divisions, or in any other way than as above described. Or that out of 13 churches, situated in six different states of the union, of which I've had the pastoral care, in leaving any of them, I have not left them in as much peace and union as I found them, with a strong expression of their fellowship towards me as I had at any time enjoyed.

A consideration of the other charge, I must defer to another letter.

Your companion under tribulation and reproaches.

S. Trott Fairfax, CH Virginia, January 13, 1836

FROM THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST

Fairfax, CH, Va., July 5th 1836

Dear Brother Bennett:

I received your kind letter of March 29th in due time, and immediately wrote in answer directing to Tarboro in which I requested the "Primitive Baptist" to be sent on to me; but as the paper has never come to hand, I have concluded my letter must have been miscarried. In my former letter I remarked in reference to your paper, that I felt myself peculiarly pledged to support the "Signs of the Times" according to my ability, from the fact that brother Beebe stepped forward at a time when we much felt the need of some vehicle of intercommunication among the old school Baptists, and whilst no other one of us, would venture a publication of the kind apprehending that in a pecuniary point of view it would be a losing concern; As also that brother Beebe had as an editor quote manifested hitherto an undeviating fidelity to the old school stand and cause, and a talent quite equal to our utmost expectation. I further remarked, that I was fearful the expense of a second publication would not be met without depriving the first of its efficient support. But that as you had ventured the experiment I wished it a fair trial and was willing to encourage it and extend my feeble support to it, if I found it faithful to the cause of truth and gospel order, so far as i found i could do it without injury to the support of the "Signs."

I will in addition to the above remarks assure you, my brother, that if the "Primitive Baptist" is and remains to be, what, from the information I have of it, I presume it is. I shall rejoice at its meeting with abundant success in conjunction with the "signs." There is no danger of too much light being disseminated among the churches, whereby the enormity of the abominations which are this day, palmed upon the public, as benevolence and religious zeal, may be exposed, and the beautiful simplicity of gospel truth and order, as contrasted with those corruptions which are resort to human contrivance, instead of reliance on divine revelation and appointment, has introduced; Be more fully displayed. Nor can too much talent be employed in exposing these abominations, and drawing this contrast, providing it be talent subdued by divine grace, and humbly exerted under its influence. There is much talent manifested among the religionists of the day, which rushes forward to the contest, secure a victory, from its confidence in its own native strength and in the armor it has borrowed of human science. But God grant, that no old school stripling may be left to go forth to the battle glad in any other armor than the name of the Lord of hosts, or with any other weapons than the shepherds staff and sling and bag with the five smooth stones out of the brook, therein. If it will not be considered as dreaming; I would add, that if for Davids fine smooth stones, we should substitute the epistles of the five apostles, Paul, James, Peter, John and Jude, we shall have in the unadorned New Testament shepherd's bag What the Holy Ghost has been pleased to give us, as amply sufficient to determine all points relative to gospel doctrine, and practice, being the decision of the 12 judges whom the Lord himself has seen it upon 12 Thrones, to judge the 12 tribes of Israel, spiritual Israel; and by whose judgment thus given will all controversy concerning gospel doctrine, order and practice, be ultimately determined.

In a recent tour of the north, I was for all the acquaintance sake, invited, and accepted the invitation to preach in the pulpit of one justly esteemed a Goliath in the science of religious literature, (if you can comprehend the idea intended to be conveyed by this phraseology.) In preaching on the occasion I can find myself principally to my text, endeavoring to explain its meaning and illustrate its doctrine and application, without going aside to notice in any way the modern plans of human benevolence. When I had finished my discourse, the pastor felt himself constrained to address the congregation for a considerable length, and with some warmth of feeling. In his remarks he repeatedly observed that I had preached the truth, but he labored much, (whether in the Lord, Or not, I will not attempt to say,) to clear himself from what he apparently considered and implied reproof in my preaching, for his having Adopted new measures in religion since our former acquaintance. Some of my friends afterward, as I have been informed, Speaking of this occurrence, and perhaps rather complaining of the course of their pastor towards my preaching, seeing that I had not touched any of his favorite plans; a gentleman present justified that course on the ground that I had taken a text which, as he said, I knew would directly cross the path of that preacher. If a smooth stone thus taken from the shepherd's bag, and thrown by my simple shepherd sling, instead of being hurled by the engines of human wisdom, should have the effect on this Goliath to induce him to place himself, before his people, in the awkward attitude of acknowledging the truth of what I had preached, and yet manifesting himself much hurt thereby, surely none of us, in fighting the good fight of faith, and contending with principalities and powers, need seek any, more efficient weapons than the smooth stones and shepherds sling.

I commenced this letter as I before remarked under the impression that you had not received my other, and for the simple purpose of wiping away any impression on your mind of my having treated with neglect your kind and sympathetic letter to me, as also to renew the request that you would send me your paper, but having been led to enlarge on certain points touched, if there should be anything in it which you might think profitable to others, you may give it a place indeed Primitive Baptist.

Accept my kind regards, S. Trott

CIRCULATION OF THE SCRIPTURES

Brother Beebe: there fell into my hands, about a year since, a pamphlet then recently published in the city of New York, entitled "A summary of Faith and Articles of a Covenant" with an appendix by the author. In appendix #2, in which the author labors to prove that Hebrew 6.2, does not refer to laying on of hands under the gospel but under the law, which, by the by, I should suppose no judicious advocate for laying on of hands disputes, he makes a digression of two or three pages, to bring in by a course of reasoning from inferences, the following conclusion:

"that no nation or people can be required, or even authorized, to receive the gospel without access directly or indirectly, to the inspired books of the old and new testaments; The former being the record of promises and predictions respecting the Messiah; And the latter, the record of their fulfillment in Jesus of Nazareth."

From this conclusion, he infers to following:

"that if we love the souls of the heathen and long for their salvation, we shall be willing to spend and be spent in furnishing them with the gospel and its inspired authorities in language or languages which they shall be able to read and understand. Until this, they can have no authorized hope."

He refers to Ephesians 2.12, for proof, as though the Ephesians being aliens and having no hope and without God in this world was the result of men's not furnishing them with the gospel and its inspired authority; Or in other words, their being made nigh by the blood of Christ was the result merely of the gospel, together with the scriptures, being furnished to them.

But there is an entire failure of proof to make good his position. There is no proof that they had no access to the Greek copy of the scriptures, which as we shall shortly show had been in circulation for 200 years.

And 2nd, there is no proof that Paul when he went among them, or any other disciple furnished them with a copy of the scriptures to read, to her being brought to receive the gospel. Besides, in the whole connection, Paul ascribes dare to receive the gospel to a higher source. When I consider the respectable standing this author has sustained as an able, sound gospel preacher, and the general tenor of the pamphlet as containing a consistent summary of gospel truth and the slipping in thus edgewise, a platform as broad as the whole extension of the foreign mission plea, I could but view it as an ingenious strategy for filling off to the ranks of the new school.

I commenced some remarks on this pamphlet for the signs just before my tour to the West, last winter, but being too much occupied then to finish them, I laid them aside and decided to let the thing pass unnoticed.

But at the late Ketocton association, I heard, without an opportunity to reply, an argument advanced in favor of the mission scheme of this amount; That if we contend for the order of publishing the gospel, observe the Apostolic age, we, to the be consistent, mostly outside our printed bibles, and resort to written copies.

Thus making them multiplying the copies of the scriptures, and the preaching of the gospel, alike ordinances of divine appointment; Or alike, left subject to the device of men. That writer thus proves, as he appears to suppose, the obligation devolving upon Christians to furnish to heathen with the scriptures, and the importance of attending to it, as being quite equal to that of preaching the gospel to them; and the speaker referred to above, assuming the position as granted that the circulating of the scriptures and the preaching of the gospel, stood upon the similar ground as to being of divine appointment; And therefore as we admitted that it was a thing indifferent whether one Bible was printed or written, or how printed by whom, so we ought to consider it alike in different how, or by whom, the gospel is published.

I have been led to think that this notion of blending the circulation of the scriptures with preaching the gospel, was pretty general; and that this is the reason why so many persons who admitted the abuses connected with the Bible society, still think that nothing must be said against it, and that it must at all events be supported.

Hence I've considered it a matter of some importance to inquire what we are taught by the revelation and by the Providence of God upon this subject, I have concluded to trouble your readers with some of the results of my inquiries.

1st what the scriptures teach us upon this subject.

If we look into the New Testament we find the importance of having access to the scriptures as the only correct standard in religious concerns abundantly manifest. We of course shall not find fault with any for insisting strongly that all who have any desire to know the truth should search the scriptures diligently, and that they should be made the only test in everything pertaining to that religion which is from heaven. But of how we are to procure copies of the scriptures, or, about providing them for others, the New Testament says nothing.

And even if we examine the Old Testament, we shall find no law among all the writings of Moses prescribing in what way copies of the law are to be procured or making it a duty of any individuals, or any tribe, to furnish others or the nation at large with copies. There is a law requiring him, who should be set as king over Israel, to write out a copy of the law in a book that it should be with him, Deuteronomy 17.18, 19. There is another law requiring Israel generally, to lay up the words which Moses had spoken to them in their hearts, and in their souls, and to bind them for a sign upon their hands, and to teach them to their children, speaking of them when they set in their houses and when they walked by the way, and to write them upon them the posts of their doors, Deuteronomy 6 6, 9, and 11.18, 20, thus requiring them to be familiar with the law. And thus teaching typically, spiritual Israel to be alike familiar with the words of Zion's lawgiver; the church to talk of them, by the ministry, to let her children also among themselves, to bind them as signs upon her hands, and as frontlets between her eyes that in all her acts she may reflect Jesus, and show that she has a thus said the Lord for what she does; And also to write them upon the posts of her doors, that none may obtain admission to her communion, but upon a professed subjection to the laws of the Lord.

The scriptures being thus silent as to any requisition upon the churches or upon Christians, to provide for the circulation of the scriptures abroad; we will notice what the Providence of God indicates on this subject.

If we look at the Jews we find no deficiency of copies of the law or of the prophets complained of. Those who wish to possess copies could either write them out for themselves or procure them written out. The persons turned scribes in the New Testament, became distinguished, as a religious class, under that name, from having at first, made it their employment to write out copies of the scriptures, for the emolument of it; and from the acquaintance they thus obtained with the letter of the scriptures, their opinions on religious matters were much respected. Hence their lucrative employment came to be, in the days of our savior, a very religious calling; As the circulation of the Bible has become to this day. But the illustration of their religion, as we have it in the gospels, shows clearly its character.

When the long-promised arrived for Shiloh coming, and for the gathering of the people to him, what provision was made that those to be gathered from among the Gentiles should have the scriptures to examine for themselves? Were messengers sent, as was John for another object, to translate the scriptures into the various languages, and to multiply the copies of them? Or did Jesus send his 12 or 70 disciples to perform this work in connection with preaching the gospel? Or did he, will command his disciples to go into the world and preach the gospel to every creature, give any directions to attend to furnishing the people among them whom they came with copies of the scriptures? Or give any intimation that their successors, in the ministry of the word, must attend to this business?

The answer to these inquiries is plain to those acquainted with the scriptures. And that answer shows that once a deficiency in the provision which Christ made for his gospels being received, or the utter futility of the conclusions which I have quoted from the pamphlet. Is it a scriptural fact that the blessed master considered access to the scriptures of no account to those who should be discipled to his religion? No, by no means. But he well knew that nothing but human learning, and human art and exertion were necessary for furnishing copies of the scriptures, they haven't been given by inspiration, in any language in which they might be required; and that persons would be found ready, at any period, to furnish copies to any extent that might be called for, merely for the profits thereof, and in his divine wisdom he thought it not good to connect the circulating of the scriptures, it requiring mere human exertion, with the preaching of the gospel or the other ordinances of the church as an institution of his Kingdom; these all requiring spiritual action, to being attended to acceptably to God, or with profit to the child of grace, and the first more properly under control of his Providence, as a mere human art, then under his government as king of Zion. And his over-ruling Providence as will be seen, has by the instrumentality of the natural disposition of the human mind, provided a supply of the scriptures to suit every emergency, so far as his wisdom saw needful.

Thus, the same over ruling Providence which made the ambition of Alexander instrumental in introducing by his conquest the Greek language into general use among most of the countries of Asia and parts of Africa and Europe; And which made the ambition and valor of Rome instrumental in bringing the Jews and most of the then known nations into subjection under one empire, thus giving facilities to the disciples of Jesus in preaching the gospel among different nations which they could not otherwise have enjoyed; that same Providence unseen and unknown in its operations, though manifesting its goodness, power and wisdom by its effects, made the ambition of Ptolemy Philadelphus, to have a library that should excel all others in a number of value of its volumes, instrumental in opening the way for a general circulation of the scriptures, he having at a vast expense, had the sacred scriptures translated by learned Jews, into the Greek language and deposited in his library; and that 272 years before the coming of Christ.

Thus giving an opportunity, for those persons who, from mere love of literature, wished it to perfect cure for themselves copies of this translation of the scriptures, which is still known as the Septuagint version, as well as to those Grecian Jews who had in a great measure lost the knowledge of the Hebrew language, the furnished themselves with copies of their scriptures in a language which was familiar to them. And by these means the scriptures became generally known and circulated at the time the Lord had need of them for the use of his disciples among the gentiles. Each of the above-named events was like preparatory to the spread of the gospel, And this extensive circulation of the scriptures was no less an effect merely of the providential government of God than was either of the others.

The early disciples, relying on the Providence of God to prepare the way for the scriptures to be acceptable to all who should have need of them, went everywhere preaching the gospel; not diverting their attention from the peculiar work to which they had been called, to copy out the scriptures beforehand for those who should be disciples, or to form Bible societies; and not even delivering any directions to the churches planted, to attend to the business, of supplying the destitute with the scriptures.

But according to the position taken in the pamphlet to which I have referred, that the inspired record of miracles, is to the ordinary gospel minister, what the gift of miracles were to the apostles; and as the apostles did work miracles and not to station of the truth of their testimony, it may be supposed that there was not the same necessity for the people to whom they came, being furnished beforehand with the scriptures, as since the cessation of miracles; Especially, according to another position contained in the pamphlet, that the unbelieving world have a need of the testimony afforded by the divine record, which believers have not.

But do matters of fact agree with this theory, however plausible it may appear? I think not. In the first place, I think it very evident both from scripture and experience, that it is to the quickened soul not the unregenerate, that the scriptures chiefly recommend themselves as the light that shines in a dark place. And when quickened, and not till then, persons come to the scriptures, searching them with a sincere desire to know the truth therein revealed. And thus the master has told us that he that does truth comes to the light, but everyone that does evil hates the light neither comes to the light lest his deeds should be reproved, John 3.20, 21. In the second place God has said, Speaking of his saved ones, "You are my witnesses said the Lord," Isaiah 43.10, 11, and 44.8. And in reference to the unbelieving world, I think in accordance with this divine declaration from Isaiah, that the change which takes place in a person when brought from darkness to light, and his after walk, then consistent with the gospel has much more effect in shaking the consciousness of the unbelievers and in giving them a rational conviction of the truth of the religion of Jesus Christ, then seeing the miracles performed by the apostles had, over reading of the inspired record of miracles has.

Thirdly, was it, child of grace, the miraculous testimony given to the gospel report, or was it the gospel itself, coming to you, in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, that constrained you to receive its joyful report, and made you feel that it was the revelation of God? If these things are sold, and if they only whose hearts have been opened, by the power of God, to attend to the word spoken, are the ones who truly feel their need of the scriptures, and who profit by them, then we may insist that the example of the primitive disciples in going everywhere preaching the word, without forming Bible societies, or sending persons beforehand to translate the scriptures, may be safely followed by the ministers of Christ, at this, or any future day, when, or were ever, the Holy Ghost moves upon their hearts to go; and that they may go, resting assured that, that providential government, which has ever harmonized with the purposes of grace and prepared the way beforehand for his gospels going to and being received in any place, still slumbers not, and is unrestrained in its operations. They may go, therefore, when, and where, the scent of God, not doubting but that all things are ready, even to providing access to the scriptures for those who shall have need of them.

We see that this all-wise and ever-vigilant Providence has in every age, down to the present, provided a supply of scriptures at hand, to meet any of the wants of his church. When the Reformation by Luther, was about to rise, seeing that the copies of the scriptures then extent were confined principally to the monasteries and that the suddenness with which the Reformation was spread, would call for a rapid and greatly enlarged circulation of the scriptures, how was it to be accomplished? Was the poor afflicted Church of Christ, as she lay hidden in the valleys of Piedmont to provide for this emergency? No; The Providence of God was all sufficient to make the necessary provision. This Providence led to the invention of the art of printing about 60 or 70 years before the Reformation and additions of both the Hebrew scriptures and the Vulgate Bible were printed ready at hand. And from that. Translations of the scriptures, into different languages, were undertaken by individuals upon their own responsibility, until the translations into English became so numerous with their various readings, as to render it highly important, if not necessary, that there should be a standard translation in English.

This again was not a work to which the poor oppressed followers of Christ were well adequate. They have never been many learned, or many wealthy among the true followers of the lamb. And the Church of Christ has not generally had that public influence that would enable them to give precedence to a translation which they might adopt. But King James by his royal authority and an act of parliament would have it accomplished; And on his bishops and learned ones, was the task imposed. And there has since been no deficiency of Bibles. Individual printing establishments, in the regular course of their business, have been ready to strike off, and to bring into market any quantity of bibles, and in any language that should be called for. And the competition in business was sufficient to secure them at moderate prices. What use could there be then for such an institution as the American Bible Society in our country?

But it may be said that the time is approaching for the eastern nations to be brought to the knowledge of salvation, and that therefore they should have the scriptures as preparatory to this event in their own languages. This I admit is the case. And I further believe that God is making use of the foreign mission and Bible societies of this, and other countries, to accomplish this object.

I also think it will be found that the establishment of the British power in the east, notwithstanding the cold-blooded and gold-speculating cruelty by which they extended their conquest in that country, especially under the administration of Lord Hastings, is as much a preparatory step towards the spread of the gospel there as is the present exertions to give them the scriptures. And although there may be many more religious persons engaged in the one enterprise than any other, yet to me, the spirit and power by which the one enterprise is undertaken, appears as far and from the gospel of Christ as was the other. At any rate, I cannot see how the undertaking to translate and print the Bible in Hindu or Burmese, should of itself entitle those engaged in it to Christian fellowship, any more than the king of Egypt's having the scriptures translated into Greek entitled him to religious fellowship. Both Ptolemy and the mission and Bible societies, are of God made instrumental in accomplishing his gracious purposes concerning his church, whilst Ptolemy was left to fill up the measure of his iniquity, and those combinations are maturing into the image of the beast, and a Rainer forces preparatory to oppressing and persecuting the Church of Christ. In the meanwhile, about the great event of the nations of the east being given to the church as children, she has but to await God's appointed time, his Providence in rolling on his glorious purpose, and by and by when the 6th Angel shall pour out his vial of the wrath of God upon the great river of Euphrates, and the waters thereof shall be dried up (Revelation 16.12) then shall the gospel preachers, truly be sent of God, among those nations, who showed their clear unto them that salvation which alone is in Christ, and those nations shall be seen flocking into the standard of Jesus as doves to their windows Isaiah 6.8. Then also shall it be known that the council of God has accomplished this, whilst the wisdom of bin has been brought to naught.

It is thus I think manifest that neither the scriptures nor the Providence of God make it the duty of the church to attend to giving the Bible to the heathen. And though god is making use of these moneyed combinations called bible and mission societies, it is by that over-ruling Providence by which he causes the wrath of men to praise him; knocked by their subjection to the institutions of the gospel.

About the argument used by the speaker in the Ketocton association referred to, I would just ask can it be that any person who has ever read with any attention to the New Testament and noticed the divine authority by which the preaching of the gospel is instituted, and the precision, both by precept and example, with which the whole order respecting the gospel ministry is delivered, could place the gospel institution on a level with the mere human art of printing bibles? Or if they could do it in argument, what kind of candor must they possess?

Please do pardon the length of this communication, for I have tried to be as brief as I could, and for the sake of brevity have left out many important ideas that might have been properly taken in connection with this subject.

S. Trott Fairfax CH, Va, October 13, 1835

MINUTES OF A MEETING HELD WITH THE OCCOQUAN CHURCH, OCTOBER 29-30, 1836 (TROTT, CLARK)

1st brother John Clark preached from 2nd Thessalonians 3.6.

2nd brother Trott was called to the chair, and Brother Clark was chosen as clerk.

2nd communications were received from the following churches, Hartwood, verbal communication through Brother Clark; Fryingpan, by her messengers, S. Trott and Charles Gallatt; Mount Pleasant, by her messengers, Noah Martin, William Kidwell and William T. Allen; White Oak, by her messenger, john clark; Occoquan, by her messengers George Selecman and James Davis; Fredericksburg, by letter; Bethlehem, by her messengers, Francis M. Lewis and Benjamin Pridmore. From these communications, it appeared, that those churches were severally opposed to associations as at present organized and conducted, and were agreed in the declaration of principles, and a plan of correspondence, which had been previously presented to their consideration, by correspondence among the churches.

3rd the declaration of principles in which these churches agree is as follows:

That the scriptures of the old and new testaments contain the full and perfect revelation which God has been pleased to make of himself, of man, and of his will concerning man; and that nothing in relation either to the predictions, the doctrine, order of practice delivered therefrom, is to be taken therefrom, or added thereto.

That God is one, is a spirit; Self-existent, eternal, without change, and perfect in all his divine attributes his being, and his purposes; is the independent creator and sovereign of the universe, in its whole, and in its most minute parts, governing the whole, and every part, with all the sins and corruptions therein, according to his eternal purpose, and so that he causes the wrath of man to praise him, and works all things after the counsel of his own will.

That God exists as father, word, and Holy Ghost; Each being truly Jehovah God; God being truly free, and truly one.

That man exists as the creature of God, who is accountable to him for all his actions and thoughts, is under natural and continued obligation to love and obey God, with all the faculties he possesses;

That he was originally created in uprightness, but fell in Adam, into a state of condemnation and death in sin, so that the human family universally, while unregenerate, are in their minds and the key against God, will only what is ultimately evil, and by their acts, whether religion or otherwise, are only procuring to themselves wrath.

That the gospel is a revelation of salvation, that salvation which is of god, the salvation, from their sins, of a people given to christ and chosen in him before the foundation of the world and which is a result of the purpose and grace of God, the father, given them in Christ Jesus before the world began, was accomplished by God the son, who was made under the law and brought in an everlasting righteousness in their behalf, made by his death, a full atonement for their sins, and was raised again for their justification, having accomplished their complete redemption in himself, as their head, and by virtue of their previous union to him, will raise them to live and reign as joint heirs with him in glory; And his witness too, and applied by god the holy ghost, who by his divine and sovereign energies, infallibly regenerates all who were elected by the father and redeemed by the son, reveals Christ in them, dwells in them as the comforter, and works in them to will and to do of his good pleasure.

That the gospel ministry as an institution of Christ, given to the churches, true ministers of Christ received their gifts and qualifications for the ministry, from him; Our specially called to the work of the Holy Ghost, and have their gifts made manifest to their respective churches: hence, those only are to be received as such, who have been sent into the work by a Church of Christ, in its fellowship, and according to gospel order, and who minister as standing thus related to a gospel church. Their office is to preach the word, administer the ordinances, and feed the flock of Christ, that the invitations and promises of the gospel, being made to peculiar, specified characters, are to be addressed only to such.

A visible Church of Christ is a body of baptized believers, who have given themselves to one another, walking together in fellowship, continuing steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, observing the ordinances and traditions as delivered by the apostles, maintaining a regular gospel discipline, and keeping themselves, and all their religious transactions separate, as a Kingdom not of this world; and to no other religious body or society, as connected with the Kingdom of Christ, is known or authorized in the scriptures.

That the officers of our church to be set apart as such are elders or bishops, and deacons.

That gospel baptism is an immersion of the subject in water in the name of the Father and of the Son of the holy ghost, the subject having given evidence of faith in Christ, and the administrator, having been regularly ordained as a minister of Christ, having an orderly standing in a Church of Christ, and officiating in gospel relation thereto.

That the Lord's supper is an ordinance of Christ, to be observed when the church comes together on the first day of the week, that communicants being baptized believers in regular standing in a Church of Christ; The elephants being bread and wine, the juice of the grape, and administered according to the pattern set.

That Christ has committed the administration of his government in Zion, alone, to his churches as distinct organized bodies, but as standing in relation 1 to the other, as members of the one body of Christ and bound to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, and to seek the good of the whole.

That an opposite religious interest, as foretold in the scriptures has arisen out of the visible Church of Christ, and from a falling away of the members thereof, which the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming; that the coming of this man of sin he's after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders; that Christ has given his word as a standard by which to test his ministers and people, and to mark their distinction from others; that a falling away from his word is an evident manifestation of the man of sin; and that from those who thus fall away, it is our duty, as disciples of Christ, to withdraw ourselves.

Finally, there will be a resurrection, of the bodies both of the righteous and wicked, of the former, to honor and life eternal, of the latter, to a final judgment and everlasting punishment.

4th a meeting for correspondence with old school or particular Baptists will be held (God willing) with the church at Bethlehem, (Prince William County, Virginia) commencing on Friday before the 2nd Lord's day in August 1837, (11:00, am to be continued until Monday;) agreeable to the plan of correspondence approved by our churches, which follows:

That a meeting for correspondence be held annually, the time and place of each succeeding meeting is to be agreed on by the messengers at the previous meeting. That each several meeting be composed of the messengers present from each church, only, as at the time, profess and maintain adherence to the above declaration of principles, and give evidence thereof, in the ministry they support, and in withholding church fellowship from those churches and persons that encourage any of the religious systems and plans not known in the New Testament as belonging to the Kingdom of Christ, and has maintained a correct gospel discipline; Also of the messengers present from associations, that hold the same principles, in substance with us, and maintain a stand of separation from the devices of men in religion, and carried the same out in the correspondence; Together with such a visiting, orderly brethren as hold and maintain the same gospel principles and stand with us. That churches and associations, wherever situated coming within the above-specified limits, B, and may hereby R, invited to correspond with us, through these meetings, by letters or messengers, or both, as may suit their convenience.

That any difficulties in or between the churches that may interfere in the correspondence, be referred immediately to the churches, or to certain named churches to be by them settled, or in some way disposed of. That no business whatever shall be acted on, or introduced into these meetings, accepting what he immediately relates to an orderly conducting of the correspondence.

That in conducting the correspondence, on the part of the meeting, a moderator and clerk shall be appointed, the correspondence addressed to the meeting shall be read and the verbal communications by brethren coming without letters, and who according to the above limitations and provisions, are entitled to seats with us, be heard providing such communications be a simple statement of facts relative to the state, standing, or difficulties of their churches; A circular or address shall be prepared, embodying such important information as may have been received, and other relative matters; Also special letters addressed to the several associations heard from, and to particular churches, when circumstances require it, to be sent in writing, shall be prepared, and messengers appointed to bear them, or other means of conveyance be designated. Minutes shall be made by the clerk, simply of the names of the churches and associations heard from, whether by letters or messengers, the names of the messengers and other brethren composing the meeting, the order of the business and preaching; Which minutes, together with the address or circular shall be printed. The business is to be conducted in a familiar but orderly manner so as to produce unanimity as far as practicable, and so arranged just to give as much time for preaching without interfering therewith, as prudence shall dictate.

5th that our brethren generally, and the public, may be informed of the reasons for our several churches withdrawing from the Columbia association, it is unanimously agreed by the messenger's present, that a copy of the paper which was formally presented to that body, be published with these minutes, in the signs of the times.

S. Trott, Moderator John Clark, Clerk

Declaration of withdrawal.

Brother moderator: On behalf and by the authority of our several churches, we beg leave to declare their entire separation from all associational connection with the remaining churches of this association. In making this declaration, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we act altogether from principle. When our messengers voted in 1833, against the reception of elder Broaddus as corresponding messenger from the Shiloh association, we as churches appropriated their vote, not from any personal opposition to the said elder, but because we could not extend fellowship to his religious course, believing it had perversion both of the doctrine and order which we have received as taught in the word of God; and which force we consider as embracing those several plans called benevolent operations, as well as the machinery for producing revivals. And as the remaining churches comprising this association, have by their letter of manifested a disposition to retire from the stand of 1833, and do sanction the extending of fellowship to others, who practiced the same schemes, we can but feel a want of confidence in you as regular Baptists and a fellowship for your course, and therefore, to be honest, we must separate from you.

In addition to the above, we cannot approve of the decision you made as an association to the Fredericksburg affair, by which, that which we consider properly the Fredericksburg Baptist Church was constrained last year, to separate from you; nor of sanctioning the arbitrary decision of your moderator over the heads of three churches, relative to the Alexandria church, at your present session.

We in thus withdrawing our fellowship from you, do not believe that we leave no Christians behind; but we do believe it to be our duty to separate from such, so far as stayed apart from the word of God, leaving them in the hands of God to reclaim them from their errors in his own good time and way. At the same time, we would warn such of the chastising rod that awaits them, if they will, with the light of God's word before them, thus continuing to sanction the placing of the devices of men on a footing with the institutions of the gospel.

Signed,

For Elkrun Church, William Bower; Hartwood, George Honey, James W. Stone; Fryingpan, S. Trott, Charles Gallat; Mount Pleasant, William Kidwell, Lloyd Kidwell; White Oak, John Clark, William Fulcher, Occoquan, James Davis, David T. Arrington

Brother Beebe: as the opportunity would not well admit of an address being prepared and adopted by the meeting with the Occoquan church, I will trouble you with a few remarks, relative to what was adopted, as a plan of future correspondence. My first remark is designed for those associations, and churches, which have manifested in determination to be separated, from the corrupting schemes of men, in religion; and which do not like the Colombia associations expressed in their late corresponding letter, vainly thinking of promoting the redeemer's cause, in forwarding the benevolent institutions of the day.

To such, I would say, that by a reference to our plan of correspondence, it will be seen, that although we are not disposed to be any longer connected with associations, as parts of such constituted bodies, if our old school brethren, choose to continue under an associational constitution, we by no means wish to make that circumstance a bar to correspondence with them. We have, therefore, invited associations as well as churches, such as have inscribed on their acts holiness to the Lord, in departing from what is not of God's appointing in religion, to correspond with us. Having done this, we must leave it to their determination whether they will thus sanction our principles and plan, by opening correspondence with us.

2nd Another class to which I wish to offer a few remarks is composed of such brethren, as may object to our plan of correspondence, on the ground of its being a departure from the beaten path of churches associating together in organized bodies, as well as an account of its being something new. As such I would observe, that, although associations have been so long in use as to be considered, by many an indispensable appendage to the order of gospel churches, yet, they are entirely of two recent dates, to stand as a precedent for old-school Baptists. I have not the data before me, by which to find the period, at which constitutional associations were first formed. According to Benedict, the particular Baptists in England first associated together in 1689 in something like a yearly meeting to consult for the protection and welfare of the churches; it was a time of legal oppression and persecution. It was not for several years after this that the churches formed themselves into sectional associations hence the Baptist confession of faith was first put forth, not by associations, but by congregations (or churches.) Still, however, if ours, is a greater departure from the New Testament order, dynasty associational, or constitutional plan, our brethren may well blame us, and use schoolists glory over us. If, on the other hand, we have assimilated our plan of correspondence more to New Testament order, then are we but carrying out our old-school principles.

According to general admission upon the point, it is evident, that we have not departed from the scriptures, in laying aside associations. It is equally certain that the churches in the apostles' days, held intercourse and correspondence with each other; There were also meetings of the brethren and preaching. In promoting these things then we are not departing from the New Testament. As to the particular form of conducting the meetings of their brethren in their church relations, or the correspondence among the churches, I find no direct pattern given; the form in either case appears to have been left as a thing indifferent, with these exceptions, that in the case of the correspondence, messengers and letters were sent from certain churches to others, and on one occasion at least, the apostles, elders, and brethren came together to consider of the matter which was the subject of correspondence; Acts 15.6 compared with verse 23. And in the meetings, the worship of God, preaching the word, and the affairs of the church, were attended to.

Also that the apostle has left direction, that all things be done decently and in order; and has assured us that God is not the author of confusion but of peace, 1st Corinthians 14.33, 40. Hence, if conducting our meetings as churches either those held on Lord's days, or others, and also the correspondence among the churches we should adopt an orderly and regular form and should seek to exclude from their confusion and contentions, and the occasions of them, we shall, I think, not be chargeable with a departure from the word of God as our rule.

3rd I wish also to see a few things to those brethren, who think it necessary in churches uniting in associations, or in general intercourse with each other, that their coming together should be guarded by constitutional provisions, and governed by the rules of decorum, list one church should have the advantage of another, in debates, in votes, also fewer brethren coming from other local combinations, although invited to seats as brethren and fellowship, should be allowed to intermeddle too far with the local concerns of the neighboring churches by voting on subjects. Guards, and prescribed regulations, are necessary in all worldly combinations, and in associations where persons of different religious views come together, each seeking for mastery.

But does the New Testament sanction any such contentious combinations or associations in religion? Certainly not. And associations composed of churches and persons of contradictory sentiments and views, have been too long continued among the Baptists, for the peace of Zion, or the honor of religion. No person who conscientiously derives his religious principles from the scriptures of truth, and who is honest to his principles, can sanction what he believes contradictory thereto. But in these mixed associations, he will often find himself required either to sanction or oppose, what he believes is wrong.

If passing resolutions of non-fellowship for those who persevere in upholding those schemes of men, the introduction of which has been the source of so much strife, bitter feelings, and disorder among the Baptists, and in carrying out those resolutions in separations, the old school Baptist had only in view to get rid of those scenes of contests and confusion with which they have been so long burdened, the course they have adopted would be well worthy of their steadfast adherence.

And strange, that when, both for conscience, and for peace's sake, we are seeking to be separated from those who prefer practicing the devices of men, in religion, to honoring Christ as king of Zion, and preserving the peace of the churches, we should be charged with being persecutors! Just as much as Abraham a persecutor of Lot, when said to him, "Is not the whole land before you? Separate yourself I pray you from me" Genesis 13.9. It is true, that we and our brethren have not, in all cases, pursued this justifiable course, with the same spirit of mildness as did Abraham. But it is equally true that Abraham, as we ought to have done, acted promptly, so soon as he discovered the occasion for strife between him and lot arising, he, without giving time for bitter feelings to be engendered, proposed a separation.

But to return to the point in hand, if we have correctly separated from contention, shall we meet our brethren with whom we agree in faith and practice armed, as if to provoke contention, and guarded as if to show we have no confidence in their religion? If I understand the gospel, both the spirit and letter of it enjoying upon us, to exercise towards our brethren, love, fellowship, and confidence to love as brethren; that is so far as they walk according to their profession; And we're in a walk disorderly, the New Testament provides a remedy in its discipline. Hence the directions the master gives his disciples concerning oaths; "let your communications be yay and yay and nay and nay for whatsoever is more than these comes of evil" Matthew 6.27.

As I understand this passage, comparing it with Hebrews 6.13, 16, and Titus 3.1; the evil our Lord here speaks of, is the corruption and falsehood which are in the world by reason of which men have not full confidence in each other's assertions. Hence magistrates have to require an oath for confirmation; and requiring it of one, they must of all. But the Church of Christ is designed to be composed of men who have escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust men, whom their heavenly birth has made honest and true; Whatever confidence, therefore or want of confidence, the world may have in the influence of their religion, they knowing the purity of the religion they possess, ought for the honor of that religion, in their simplest assertions, to pay a strict regard for truth and also to exercise full confidence in the assertions of those they fellowship as brethren; and more especially, in all their religious intercourse this confidence in each other's assertions to be fully maintained, without requiring oaths for confirmation.

If in coming together as brethren, or as churches, we cannot do it in the exercise of brotherly love and confidence, we had better keep apart. It is true we are not to expect, never to be deceived in persons in whom we repose confidence as brethren, otherwise there would be no occasion for the discipline prescribed in the New Testament. But still, to manifest a general distrust of those whom we esteem as Christians, and in whom we discover no falling away from the rectitude of the gospel, would be to betray a want of confidence in the Christian religion itself.

Herein we discover the wisdom of the great head of the church, and constituting no other bond by which churches are to be bound together in their visible standing, than their fellowship for each other, as being of one body, having manifestly one Lord, one faith, and one baptism; knowing, as he did, that the tears would grow with the wheat, that false churches would arise, assuming to the churches of Christ, and for a while maintained the appearance of true churches;

And that from other places where true churches have been planted, the Candlestick would be removed leaving only a name to live. Had it been appointed that all visible churches should be bound together in one general, or several smaller bodies, upon similar principles to that of members being constituted into a church; Or upon any other general basis, even upon that which the Columbia association decided that they were constituted, simply a professing of their articles of faith, regardless of the morality or immorality of the churches, that is, that they should thus be bound together not to be separated, but by mutual consent or by exclusion, nothing else could reasonably be expected, but differences, hard feelings, and strife; So many difficulties would be in the way of using the same caution, which ought to be used in receiving members into the church, and no fewer obstacles would intervene to prevent a prompt and impartial discipline.

But upon gospel principles, where fellowship does not exist to unite churches in mutual intercourse, or it has been broken, each is at liberty to go its own way, unclogged by any alliances with others, who wish to pursue different courses.

Strange that such a frenzy should have possessed the churches of Christ to become integral parts of other bodies, whether single-headed or many-headed, and thus, to a certain extent, to give up their independence, and become bound to exercise fellowship according to the will of others.

Where, according to the plan of our meetings for correspondence, the fellowship, and the meetings from time are composed only of those thus drawn together, fellowship and harmony must prevail in the meetings. And so far as fellowship and love cease to influence them to meet, they have but to remain apart. Here is no galling yoke, like the associational one we have escaped, nor any occasion for guards and armor. In this liberty may all our Old School churches participate and stand fast.

S. Trott Fairfax CH Va., November 11, 1836

REGULATION OF GOSPEL CHURCHES.

BROTHER MEREDITH: - Please to bear with me a little in noticing your communication, in the Advocate for Feb.1845. You may not have had any particular circumstance in view, but may have merely designed to notice a too great neglect of the command of our Lord, laid down in Matt.18; if I had supposed this to be the case, I should not think it necessary to notice your remarks; but your mentioning ready-tohalt men, has led me to think you had some special object in view, and that you have rather misapprehended the subject, and therefore that the carrying out your position, in that case, might occasion an ism, or schism, or division too nigh home to yourself to be pleasant.

In the first place; according to the broad application which you give to the precept in the 18th of Matthew, and if the supposition, under which I write, as above noticed, be correct, you are, my brother, culpable yourself. Have you not occasionally access to those brethren, who you suppose have gone to an extreme of severity? And have you not neglected to pursue that course toward them which you so correctly point out as the proper one, that is, I mean, the proper one in the cases to which that rule applies?

But the truth is; that rule was never designed to embrace the whole course of church discipline; if it had been, we should not have found other directions given on the subject in the New Testament; and the holding it in that light by so many, tends evidently to produce a looseness of discipline in many churches in reference to several important subjects. For instance, brother Meredith and myself may be members of the same church, I may broach some new idea upon the resurrection, virtually denying the resurrection of the body, and consequently of Christ's ever having redeemed the bodies of his people, or his being able to preserve the body with the soul and spirit blameless unto his coming. You think it is an important error, you believe the Scriptures plainly teach that the bodies of the saints are to be raised in a glorified state, and that Christ is able and faithful to save, wholly and fully, all that the Father hath given him. But how are you by any course of consistent reasoning to make this error of mine a trespass against yourself? The word is, "If thy brother shall trespass against thee." I break none of your bones, by advancing this error, nor bruise your flesh; neither do I take away your liberty to think for yourself or to advocate your own views. And I am certain, that your christian humility would not allow you to assume the ground that you have authority to think for others, and that they are bound just to take your opinion as theirs, and therefore that in thinking for myself, I was transgressing against your authority. How then would you make it a trespass against yourself? You cannot in any way without assuming to yourself that judgment which belongs alone to the church collectively. What then is to be done? Why, you believe it to be a trespass against the faith of the church and the cause of Christ, and as a faithful brother you bring the case directly before the (earthly) judgment seat of Christ, the church. The church on examining my views and comparing them with the standard, pronounce them heresy, and admonish me of it; they find me persisting in it, they admonish me again, I still persist, they reject me; that is, exclude me. Thus we find a rule, that meets the case, and that without one individual's undertaking to pass a judgment upon the faith of another member, which Christ has vested only in the Church the right to do. See Titus 3:10, 11. And why, my brother, is this rule to be rejected more than the one in Matthew 18? Christ did not deliver it in person, but delivered it through one of his apostles; it therefore emanated from the same divine authority with the other. If we had no other rules given, for the regulation of the gospel churches, than what Christ delivered in person, we should come very far short of having a full pattern. He did not deliver his apostles a body of rules, and send them forth with their lessons ready learned, for the whole campaign; as our modern, theological students go forth; but they were as dependent on him from time to time, for a revelation of his will, to meet the various circumstances that occurred, in planting and setting in order the churches, even as we are to understand what they have delivered as his revealed will; so that the words of Christ were equally true in reference to them with all their gifts, as they are in relation to us, that "Without me ye can do nothing." John 15:5. Christ commanded his disciples to "Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," &c. We find them (Acts 2,) teaching & baptizing, but we find something more, about which nothing is said in the commission; there were added to them, that is, to the apostles or church. Now do you not believe, that this adding to the church is equally binding upon the disciples in after ages, as is the teaching and baptizing? So far as the Commission went, it was necessary as authority for them to go forth; and when the Lord gave efficacy to their word, the Holy Ghost was present to guide them as to the next step after baptism. So the rule in the 18th of Matthew was necessary for the disciples in their then state, as it is for the disciples in all ages. Christ therefore then gave it to them. But, it was not till after churches were formed in full gospel order and liberty, that cases could occur directly against the church and cause of Christ; and as they occurred, the apostles were by inspiration empowered to give the necessary rules, and did give them. And if you can tell, why the churches are not under as much obligation to act in obedience to those rules in the cases to which they apply, as they are to observe that in Matthew 18th in its proper place, I would like to know.

As I have supposed the case of a denial of the resurrection, I will remark, that brother Blakeslee in his generally excellent communication in the same number of the ADVOCATE, on the resurrection, has suffered, I think, his modesty to carry him so far as to say that, "While I feel no disposition to charge with heresy or unchristianize any of my brethren who may differ from me on this subject; believing that the faith of some in this matter may be overthrown by some means (doctrinally considered) while the grace of faith still remains unmoved," and quotes II Tim.2:13 perhaps he meant 18. As to unchristianizing, if he means by that the excluding them from the benefits of Christ's atonement, neither individual members, nor the churches have anything to do with it. "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal: The Lord knoweth them that are his." We have no means of judging what degree of heresy a person may embrace and yet be a subject of grace. And yet I think it would puzzle brother Blakeslee to reconcile his above quoted position with I Cor.

15:16,17, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins." With regard to charging with heresy, if brother Blakeslee meant by his remarks on that point simply that he felt no disposition to set himself up individually to denounce as heretics, brethren who might differ with him on this point, I have not so much to object, excepting that I would wish he had expressed himself a little more definitely. But taking the whole of the above quoted sentence together, it is certainly calculated to convey the idea, that in his estimation, a denial of the resurrection of the bodies of men, is not to be accounted a heresy, and therefore not a proper ground for church discipline; but that the subject is to be treated by the churches, as one of those measurably harmless differences of opinion, which may occur without breaking fellowship. If this was the idea Brother Blakeslee intended to convey, and if it is to be the position taken by the O. S. brethren, those who believe in the resurrection of the bodies, I for one, and I think some others, would like to know it. From the view I take of the subject as presented in the New Testament defined as it is, and with the involved consequences of a denial of the resurrection of the dead so fully expressed, if it does not show such denial to be a heresy, I feel prepared to defy anyone to prove any specific sentiments, by the New Testament to be a heresy, excepting an actual denial of the Lord Jesus Christ, or that he has come in the flesh. I may not be able to define why so much more stress is laid upon this error than upon some other errors noticed in the New Testament. But this is another thing. Has the apostolic decision been delivered on the subject, and have they decided that a denial of the resurrection of the dead subverts the very foundation of a believer's hope, the resurrection of Christ? Then upon O. S. Baptist principles, the churches are bound to be governed by such decision, whether they understand the whys and wherefores or not. And if they are bound earnestly to contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints (Jude verse 3,) then certainly that which overthrows the faith, which they are thus to contend for, (II Tim.2:18,) is not to be winked at as an indifferent thing. It is true, that for taking this very stand in former discussions on this subject I have had many hard things said of me by O. S. brethren, have been charged with having been in a pet, with being too censorious, with aiming to lord it over the faith of others, or as one expressed it, to condemn all who would not hew to my line &c. But so long as I have the apostolic decision so manifestly on my side, I ought to be contented. If the judgment thus passed upon me is just, I of course would wish to submit, and if it is not just, I stand at the judgment seat of one who can reverse it at his pleasure; and so I would leave it; but still as the blame of harshness and bitterness was principally laid on me at the time in the controversies had, when I see the thing referred to by brethren with censure, as I occasionally do, old nature, like the worm when trod on, will squirm in spite of me. But excuse me, my Brother, for this digression, and I will return to your communication.

To return back to examples and rules of discipline, given in the New Testament, we find in the 15th of Acts, that when certain men which came down from Jerusalem to Antioch, taught the brethren that except they were circumcised &c., that Paul and Barnabas instead of dealing with them according to the 18th of Matthew had public dissensions and disputations with them; and when the matter could not be settled among them, an appeal was made to the apostles. So you know the New and Old School Baptists were once connected together in churches and associations, and when new measures were first introduced among us in our Associations, we had to combat them publicly till we had much dissension and disputation, and when we appealed to the apostles; or their writings, and asked them to show us one precept or example for the measures they would force upon us, and they refused to abide by the decisions of the apostles, we were bound by the command of the apostle in the name of his Lord Jesus Christ, as given II Thes.3:6, to withdraw from them, and by the same rule to withdraw from others, who though not having gone into their measures, refused to withdraw from them. And having withdrawn from them, we could no longer recognize them as brethren or as disciples of Christ. In fact they have gone on from step to step, like the first Beast, to show the marks of the man of sin, sitting in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. As 1st, The gospel dispensation is the kingdom of God, and He of course has the sole and sovereign right of establishing all the rules and regulations concerning it; but they, as God, have assumed the right to set aside some of the regulations made of God; and to establish other rules and regulations, both for the government of churches and for the proclamation of the gospel. 2nd, The gospel is the gospel of God, and of course is of his revelation. But they, as God, have set aside his revealed Truth, pronouncing it not fit to be preached, and his ministers, as not qualified to preach; and have substituted another gospel of their own device and preachers of their own qualifying and calling. 3rd, The Holy Ghost, the Comforter, is sent of the Father in Christ's name; but they; as God, pretend to dispense with his operations in many things; which are his peculiar prerogative; and to command his presence and influence at their own pleasure in other cases, as in getting up revivals, &c. Now it must be self-evident, that we cannot both be right, we in depending, entirely on the God of heaven to do his own work, and by his own power, and in his own way and time, to accomplish his own purposes; and they, as God, claiming to accomplish God's purpose of salvation in their own ways and time. If we are right, they are diametrically wrong, and so of the opposite. Hence we infer, that in truth no man can fellowship both them and us, as the kingdom of Christ, and therefore we cannot fellowship those, who can profess fellowship with the other interest. And herein, my brother, is where I suppose you have misapprehended the subject.

You say, Have we not heard it said, that ready-to-halt men are as bad as, if not worse than, an avowed enemy or arminian? I will not say that you have not heard this said, but to my recollection, I have never heard it said; neither have I ever seen the disposition manifested by my brethren to treat that class of persons in that light. I have heard it said; and have said it, that middle-grounders are worse than the avowed New School. The latter we know where to find, the others we do not; the one class manifests more moral honesty and courage in avowing their sentiments, than the other does in keeping dark. But these are a very different class of persons from those properly denominated ready-to- halt. These ready-to-halt are such to be sure; as are wanting in fortitude to face the enemy, but they have an understanding of and a hankering after the truth; and though they will not come fully into the ranks, they will flow after and generally try to keep in sight of the army; and you will see the soldiers, instead of driving them from them as enemies, occasionally falling back with them in their march and trying to encourage them to persevere and to come into the ranks as good soldiers of the Cross. And sometimes they have for a time been deceived with the middle-grounders, thinking them to be of the other class, and have thus been friendly with then, till they have found them out as spies or pilferers.

The middle-grounders are of three classes. 1st, Those who are missionists in the general extent, but do not approve of camp and protracted meeting excitements. 2nd, Those who advocate Bible, temperance and domestic mission societies, but go not to the full length of missionism, and profess to preach sound doctrine. They go just far enough into popular measures and preaching to escape reproach, but not so far as to be very expensive in money contributions. The 3rd class are principally preachers with certain adherents, that they lead. These, though they may not be theological students, have studied, as their guides in preaching, certain old Baptist and other authors, called sound; hence their preaching passes for sound preaching. They are from circumstances connected with the O. S. Baptists in associations, but manifest by action no wish to be with the

O.S. preachers at meetings, associations &c., except merely to attend the association to which they are connected, and then are with their wives, rather than with their brother preachers, and give clear manifestation, that if they could only get a call and comfortable location among the 2nd class of middle-grounders they would gladly shift their connection. Yet, when thrown into company with decided O.S. brethren, they are very friendly and tender, but give you to feel that there is a certain dignity of age, station, &c., which they claim. On the other hand, when they meet with middle-ground preachers, and they seek such meetings, they are very friendly with them, calling them brothers, and telling them that, though they are among the O.S. they do not go with Beebe, and that class in their abuse of others, but wish to be sociable with others; and they take every occasion, where they can do it without reproof; for abusing the SIGNS and the O.S. preachers for their harshness in preaching &c.

Now, Brother Meredith, how is it possible, when we see persons pursuing the above course, and that for years, that we can have any confidence in them or in their heart attachment to O.S. principles? Can we with consistency extend the right hand of fellowship to them, whilst they are showing their attachment to those, who are building up the interests of the man of sin, they themselves helping, in trying to destroy the force of our testimony, calling it abuse? Christ says, "He that is not with me, is against the; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Matt.12:30. So that he admits of no neutrality, no middle-groundism in his cause. If we are wrong in our Old School stand, others need not wish our fellowship. If we are right, and sustained, as we are, by the New Testament, we cannot without going wrong extend fellowship to those, who are seeking the friendship and welfare of another interest. Paul speaks of certain "false brethren," who were unawares brought in, and who came in; privily to spy out their liberty &c. They dealt very summarily with such, not going to the 18th of Matt. in the case, but not giving place to them by subjection even for an hour. Gal. 2:4,5. Why ought we not to follow their example with such characters, when they become manifest? In quoting some of the characters, when they become manifest? In quoting some of the words from Galatians, chapter 2, I have placed a comma after the phrase, who came in, though our translators put none there, believing it important to show the connection of the word privily with the verb to spy.

I write this, Brother M., not to raise an argument with you; but if it may be, to induce you to examine the subject again. If I have mistaken your object, I hope what I have written may do no hurt to the cause of truth.

Yours with Christian regards, S. TROTT. Centreville, Va., March 6, 1845.

P.S. – Brother Jewett, I do not mean what I have said in reference to Brother Blakeslee's communication as an attack upon him. But the point which I have touched, I think of great importance, considering the great inroads the non- resurrection sentiment is making among us. I do not think, that I have any right to fellowship it. Yours, &c. - S.T.

RELATION OF GOSPEL CHURCHES AND MINISTERS.

Circular Letter: The Delaware Baptist Association, to the Churches they represent.

Beloved Brethren: - Having again been permitted through the mercy of God, which endureth forever, to meet in our associate relation; and to receive, as tokens of your mutual fellowship, the epistles sent by your messengers; we in turn address you by Letter, praying that grace and peace may be multiplied unto you.

As a subject that may be interesting and profitable unto you, we present for your consideration a view of the relation of gospel Churches and Ministers, as we believe is revealed in the word of God, the only correct standard of gospel order.

This relation is therein represented as a household or family relation. The churches, as the bride of Christ, are the mistresses of their respective families. For although the term bride is more generally applied to the collective church, or body of Christ, yet as each branch into which the body is divided, is individually spoken of in the New Testament as a distinct church, and as an independent body is entrusted with an administration of the discipline and order of Christ's house, in its own sphere, (see, for instance, Paul's direction to the church at Corinth, concerning the disciplining of its members, I Cor.5:1-13 & II Cor.2:6-10,) each branch may be considered as the bride of Christ, owning Him for her Head and Husband, and as the Father of her children.

The gospel ministers, stand to the respective families or churches with which they are severally connected, in the relation of servants, as the term minister denotes. The minister of the gospel is primarily the minister or servant of Christ, being by Him entrusted with the ministry, (see I Tim. 1:11 & Col.4:17.) Hence says the Apostle, "Let a man so account of us, as the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God." I Cor.4:1. Being the servants of Christ, they are of course, especially called by Him, and gifted or qualified for the work assigned them. Hence in all their ministration they are to be governed by the New Testament; it being the law of Christ, which they are to seek at His mouth, as the High Priest of our profession. See Mal.2:7. To Him they must also ultimately account for the manner in which they have discharged their stewardship. Luke 12:42-48 & I Cor.4:2-5.

But whilst the gospel minister is to act as the servant of Christ, he is also to consider himself as a servant of the church of which he is a member, and which he is appointed to serve; and is therefore to act under her direction in all things committed to her government by her and his Lord. And surely the Lord has not appointed His bride to be subject to the servants, as many will have it, but His servants to be subject to the church. Paul says to the church at Corinth, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus sake." II Cor.4:5.

To the churches it belongs in administering the government of their Lord's house, to set her servants to work, or in other words, to call into public service the gifts bestowed upon them respectively. But in doing this as they are so abundantly cautioned by their Lord to "beware of false prophets, which come in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are raving wolves," and to "try the spirits," &c., it becomes them to be very cautious that they set none to work whom the Lord has not sent forth into His harvest. And to the churches it belongs to examine the credentials of those who would introduce themselves into the family of the Lord's servants.

They are to examine the certificate of their appointment to His service; that is, the gift imparted for the work of the ministry; namely, aptness to teach; and their experimental call to it, and discovering their Lord's signature, which is nothing less than an experimental witness in their own breast, that the messages delivered are from God; then, and not otherwise, to appoint them to their work, as the case may require; either to labor as a pastor in the duties of that office, or as teachers simply, that is as preachers not having a pastoral care. The appointment to be manifested according to the pattern given, namely: by prayer, and the laying on the hands of the Elders; as in the case of setting apart Paul and Barnabas to the work whereunto the Holy Ghost had called them. Acts 13:1-3.

We are aware, brethren, that in the above remarks we pass by one practice common in our Baptist churches, namely: that of licensing preachers. Upon this point we will propose, for the candid consideration of our brethren, the following queries: 1st. Do we anywhere in the New Testament, find any pattern or direction for licensing preachers? 2nd. Does our Lord anywhere commission any to preach His gospel, whom He does not commission to baptize? We know that we ought to "lay hands suddenly on no man," nor ought we in anyway to send them out into the world as Christ's ministers, without a thorough trial.

But in the case of licensing preachers, this caution is not always sufficiently regarded. Too many churches, in sending out preachers in this way, act under the impression that it is only a licensing of them, and therefore think it not necessary to have the same full evidence of the individual's being called of Christ to this work as in the case of ordination; as though a person being imposed upon the churches and the world as a gospel preacher without having the gospel of consequence than his baptizing without being specially called to do it. Another evil arising from the plan of licensing, is that many persons who are fellowshiped by their churches, as having been called of Christ to preach, but whose gifts are not great, or who have not confidence to crowd themselves forward, are left to labor for years under the difficulty of being allowed to obey but one part of their Lord's command. He says to His ministers, "Go and teach all nations, baptizing them," &c., but the churches say to these, "No, you may go and teach, but not baptize."

Christ committed, of God, to his trust, was of much less

Again, gospel ministers, whether pastors or others, being servants of the church, and connected with the churches where they severally belong as members of the family, are as much under the watch and care of the church as are the other members. Consequently if it is the duty of each church, as it manifestly is, in maintaining the order and discipline of Christ's house, to know how its members attend upon the institutions of the gospel; and to call those to an account who shall be found treating with neglect, or turning from the gospel and its ordinances, as they professed to receive them; it is equally its duty to see that each minister belonging to the church faithfully discharge the duties of his station; and not only to know that he preaches Christ's gospel, but also to know that with fidelity, as providential circumstances permit, he exercises the gift committed to him in the work of the ministry. Thus Paul and Barnabas, although specially sent forth by the Holy Ghost to a certain work, yet considered it their duty to account to the church, how they had fulfilled the work assigned to them. Compare Acts 13:2 with 14:26,27.

But how different from this is the present state of things among the Baptist churches generally. They leave the preachers which are among them, other than the pastors, to roam at large; and if they abstain from immoral conduct, and from the grosser errors, such as Universalism, or Campbellism, or the like, the churches exercise no more watch over them, either as to the exercising of their gifts, or to their doctrine, than over those who are not members with them. In consequence of this, among those who profess to have been called by the Lord, to go and preach His gospel, even with the urgent direction to let the dead bury their dead, rather than neglect this work; and whose call their churches have declared a fellowship for by licensing them, we find one engaged in the business of the world, preaching but seldom, if at all; another is wandering far and wide, probably more intent to hunt a settlement than to preach the gospel; a third we find in a seminary of learning, studying the heathenish writings of the ancient Greeks and Latins to qualify him to preach the gospel of Christ; a fourth is traveling as an agent of some society, to collect monies, &c.; a fifth has engaged as a missionary, to some mission board, to be subject to their direction, to hold himself accountable to them, and to acknowledge his dependence on them for his reward. Thus we find him a member of two distinct families; one the household of faith, by which he was licensed, the other a household of human contrivance. To the latter he cleaves, and owns their government; the other he despises as an inefficient institution for spreading the gospel. We would not have it understood by these expressions that we are opposed to spreading the gospel upon New Testament principles. Perhaps a sixth may be found living within the bounds of his church, and engaged as far as circumstances permit, in preaching the gospel to the destitute.

But to return; the duty of the churches to watch over the preachers, as such, which are among them, involves in it their accountability to their Lord, for the employment of those gifts which He has bestowed upon them. For the apostle tells us, Eph.4:11-13, that "He gave some, Apostles," that is, evidently, to some churches, as in the first age of the gospel. "And some Pastors and Teachers," and they were given for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. By the body of Christ, in the passage, as appears from what is said in the following verse, we are evidently to understand the whole collective body, of which each church is a branch. Hence though these gifts are given to the individual churches, yet as they are designed for the edifying of the whole body, it becomes the duty of the churches, to see, according to circumstances, that they are thus employed. It is true that as each church can only act in a limited sphere, and as each gift can only be employed in a like sphere, a church will feel the propriety of requiring the gifts committed to it, especially in the connection with the good of the whole, it is judged proper. Not that the labors even of the Pastor should be wholly confined within the bounds of his church; much less that the other gifts, in the office of Teachers, should be thus confined.

pastoral office, to be employed for its own edification, so far as in

We do think, brethren, that the churches have been too remiss upon this point. They have of late years acted too much upon the principle of mine and thine, as though the pastor was exclusively for the church to which he belonged, and as though the individual church had no concern in the whole body's being edified. Poor and destitute churches have been left to shift for themselves as well as they could. For that care which the churches ought to have exercised towards the feeble branches of the body, and towards destitute neighbors, human contrivance has been substituted in the form of Mission Societies; whereas let the churches but discharge their duty towards, and with the gifts entrusted to them, and it will be found that the institutions of the great Head of the Church are perfectly adequate to the edifying of His body, and the accomplishing of His purpose of salvation, without the intervention of human wisdom to guide His affairs.

You will perhaps say, that we do not feel able to support more than one preacher, nor hardly that; and we should not like to insist on a man's leaving his business, and going from home to preach, without being able to secure him a compensation for his time, &c. How was it, brethren, in the early ages of the church? Oh! but, say some, that was a day of miracles; and we cannot now expect preachers to be supported by miracle. Jesus has the same power as then, and the promise that He will be with His ministers to the end of the world still holds good. But where have we an instance of the Apostles performing a miracle to procure themselves substance? Paul's own hands ministered unto his necessities, when the churches did not communicate to him; and he tells the elders of the church at Ephesus, I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak.

Hence we have here an example for preachers, when the churches fail to minister to their necessities, that they should labor, working with their hands, to support themselves while preaching the gospel. See Acts 20:34,35. It is true, the Lord has ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel; but He has never appointed that his ministers should wait till they have competent wages secured to them, before they go forth to preach the gospel.

And if they have put their hands to the gospel plough in a right spirit, they will not be looking back for their gains, before they can move on.

But let not the churches conclude that they are not under obligation to communicate a support to those who preach the gospel, or to their families. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things, is the direction of Zion's King. Gal.6:6.

An important enquiry arises, how this support is to be communicated; whether as a fixed salary, or otherwise. Much is said in favor of salaries on worldly principles; but we no where find this to be the New Testament plan; nor is it congenial with the gospel spirit. It places the preacher and church in opposite scales, as much as are the parties to a mercantile transaction. Indeed this stipulating with a preacher to give him a certain annual sum on condition of his being their preacher, looks too much like a worldly bargain, and places the preacher in circumstances very much like those of a hireling. It deprives the preacher of the sweet consolation of receiving the communications from the church and individuals as a token of love for his work's sake; for they are naturally received as the fulfillment of a contract.

Many other evils arising from this plan might be specified, had we room.

On the other hand, by a due regard to the family relation, in which the churches and preachers are connected, the occasion for a stipulated salary for the ministerial support will be excluded. In a family where proper equality reigns, those members of the family who are laboring in the harvest field, or engaged in tending the flocks, will come to a family table, and partake equally free with those who have been concerned in making ready the provisions. So the preachers being called to labor in the gospel field, or as shepherds to take the oversight of the family in spiritual things, are or ought to be principally engaged in these things; whilst the other members of the family are attending to their worldly avocations, and thereby collecting the meat that perishes.

Now as these come and freely receive for the supply of their spiritual wants, out of that distribution which the preachers make, as stewards of the mysteries of God, is it anything more than a proper equality that the preachers should be allowed to come freely for the supply of their temporal wants to the stock which the others have collected? This is evidently the New Testament view of the subject. See Gal.

6:6. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things." And I Cor.9:7 - "Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?" Again, verse 11 - "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your carnal things?"

A correct view of this relation, and a conformity to it in practice, will place the preacher in a happy remove from the two extremes; that of being engaged as a hireling, and that of being supported upon the ground of common charity. It will place him at home among his brethren.

But you are ready to enquire how this thing is to be come at; and whether your property is all to be thrown into common stock? This was the case in the beginning of the gospel church, and that by the voluntary act of the disciples, from an ardent love to the gospel cause, and a sense of the present necessity. Compare Acts 4:32-37 with I Cor. 7:26. But the peculiar circumstances of the first church, which called for these great individual sacrifices, having passed away with the increase of disciples and churches, with it passed away, even in the Apostles' days, the practice of having all things common. Still, however, a circumstance arose out of this which produced a peculiar demand upon the liberality of the Gentile churches; and Paul speaks of it as an act of just return in these churches; his words are: "and their debtors they are." See Rom.15:26-27. That is, as we understand the Apostle, as the liberality of the saints in Jerusalem, in giving up their individual possessions to the church, enabled the Apostles and the other gifted brethren, to give themselves to the ministry of the word; and be supported, without a miracle too, by which means the knowledge of salvation was extended to the Gentiles, and Gentile churches were planted; so the after suffering state of these disciples, in consequence of their voluntary poverty, in connection with the oppression of the church at Jerusalem, called for a suitable return of liberality from the Gentile churches, to supply their temporal wants. The Holy Ghost, in handing down the particular description of the management of this collection, contained in Romans, chapter 15; I Cor.16:1-3 & II Cor., chapters 8 & 9 appears to have designed it as a pattern to the churches in after ages, in reference to those demands which the gospel would at all times have upon their liberality, for the support of its preachers and the poor of the church. Taking this collection then as our pattern, we conclude that the preachers are not to be supported by tithing, taxing, or restraint in any way, but by a voluntary and liberal return made for benefits received. We also conclude that no individual is required to throw his possessions into a common stock, but to improve them with care and industry. Upon the proceeds, however he will find, and feel too, if he feels aright, that the gospel has a claim, for a due share. Let every man lay by him in store as God has prospered him, is the direction: I Cor.16:2. Not that the preacher should be eased and they burdened; but that, whilst he is engaged in feeding the flock with the bread of eternal life, they by a proper distribution of their worldly increase may yield him a supply for his wants; and thus there may be equality. For to be placed on an equality, as to the circumstances of temporal support, for himself and family, with the other members of the church, is what the preacher has a right to expect, for services rendered, in the gospel; and with which he ought to be satisfied. If the preachers could feel and exercise that humbleness of heart which is proper to the servants of Jesus, and if the other members of the churches, instead of expending the surplus of their incomes in vain trappings, that their families may make a show in the world, or in adding farm to farm or stock to stock, would freely allow the gospel claim to its share of what God from time to time is pleased to bless them with; many churches, which now think, they cannot give one preacher a support, would find themselves able not only to make their Pastor comfortable, but also to say to other preachers which they may have among them, "go preach the gospel to the destitute around, as the Lord opens a door for you, and the wants of yourself and family in the mean time will be our care." Or if they had no gifts among them save the Pastor, they could contribute something towards the support of those who were laboring with small and poor churches, or in destitute neighborhoods, as did the Philippians to Paul, while laboring in Thessalonica and Corinth, Phil.4:16 & II Cor.11:9.

In a word, when we get back to the proper state of gospel feeling, to be of one heart and of one soul, to realize that we are one body, animated by one spirit, even as we are called in one hope of our calling, owning and loving the one Lord, one faith, and one baptism; then will vanish all difficulties from the way, in supporting the gospel ministry according to the gospel pattern and order, even to any extent to which the Lord may send forth laborers into His vineyard.

Brethren, let us, both preachers and churches, strive more to cultivate the spirit of the gospel; and to act more in conformity to that family relation by which we are bound together, and as those who are to give an account, not unto men, but unto our Lord. In proportion as this is the case, we shall find it good to stand in the ways, and to see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and to walk therein, for we shall find rest to our souls. Jer.6:16. Though others may say, we will not walk therein, yet we should find our confidence in the Lord's wisdom and power to accomplish His own gracious purposes increasing, according to the plan laid down by Himself in His word; and of course shall be less disposed to wander after the traditions and inventions of men.

The Lord, we judge from the signs of the times, will suddenly come to His temple. But who may abide the day of His coming? How many, alas, will He have to scourge out, for having made His Father's house a house of merchandise?

Brethren, may all our loins be girded, and our lights burning, that when He comes, we may welcome His approach with the salutation, "EVEN SO COME, LORD JESUS." Amen.

S.TROTT. Moderator, 1833.

REMARKS ON ELDER WILLIAMS' LETTER & QUERIES.

BROTHER BEEBE: - It may appear superfluous for me to attempt any reply to brother Williams' letter, after the able answer you have given to his queries, (SIGNS for June 15th.) But, first, I only am responsible for spreading the extract from Elder Dudley's pamphlet before the readers of the SIGNS, to which brother Williams objects; I therefore feel bound to defend it, and this I feel a willingness to do, from being satisfied of the truth of its sentiment. Secondly, There are apparently certain sentiments intimated in brother Williams' queries and remarks, upon which I feel a wish to reason a little with him. I may have misapprehended his intended meaning, I hope I have, and that he will correct me by answering the enquiries I beg leave to make of him. The queries direct, I do not intend replying to, unless it be, I may offer some remarks to the first.

1st. I would ask brother Williams whether by exhorting the brethren to "be willing to be little christians" he intended to exhort them to be satisfied with knowing but little of the doctrine of Christ, to be ignorant christians? The connecting remarks tend to convey that idea. If so, I would ask him, whether, when he was young and little in experience and in the doctrine, he felt the same humbling sense of his own vileness and insufficiency to any good thing, as now? Or whether as he has grown in the knowledge of Christ, he has become bigger in his own estimation and more self- confident? I know there are other brethren besides brother Williams, who charge those who would know for themselves, what is the meaning of the Holy Spirit in the different parts of the scriptures, instead of being satisfied with what others have said is the gospel doctrine, with aiming to be big and to dig so deep as to get out of sight of others, &c. My understanding of the matter, so far as I do understand, is that every part of gospel doctrine has a relation to Christ, and tends to exalt him; and the more therefore we know of doctrine, in its relation to experience, the more we shall see of the glory of Christ, and the more abased in our own estimation. What kind of a spirit can that be, which would lead us to say, "We know that Christ is the Savior of sinners, and that we have pardon through his blood, but we do not wish to trouble ourselves with any further knowledge of him or of his doctrine? Brother Williams, if I have rightly apprehended the import of your remarks, do they not tend to cultivate just such a spirit among the brethren? Bear with me, my brother, in being plain. If a knowledge of doctrine is of so little amount, or perhaps injurious, why are the brethren reproved for their "unskillfulness in the word of righteousness," &c. Heb.5:2-14? Why did Paul pray that the love of the brethren "might abound more and more in knowledge and in all judgment," (Phil.1:9,) and that the brethren at Colosse, "might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding," &c. Col. 1:9.

2nd. From the general current of brother Williams' queries and remarks I should infer that with him, the "new creature" is a mere change in the natural man, in that they imply that there is nothing in the new creature that was not through Adam dead in sins, and needed salvation. This change in the natural man can of course be nothing more than a change of views concerning God and his relation to him, and a consequent change of desires, affections, and pursuits, occasioned by being taught, and receiving the declarations of Scripture. If this be his ground, then he occupies the very position from whence originates all the difference between Old School Baptists and most popular religionists in reference to experience. For although brother Williams may hold in distinction from the Reformers or Campbellites that the natural man cannot arrive at the knowledge of spiritual religion only as he is taught by the Holy Spirit, yet the moment he assumes that no new faculty is imparted to the man, that it is a mere enlightening of his natural or rational faculties to understand spiritual things, he places this knowledge within the scope of human reason; and I have a right to challenge him to show according to the principles of reason why a man cannot impart to others, of like rational faculties, any knowledge which he has himself received by the powers of his natural mind. Let me be discipled to this belief that the natural mind is capable of receiving the things of the Spirit of God, and I shall be an advocate for the popular course of religious instruction by Sunday Schools, &c. If this be the ground really occupied by our brother, (which by the way, I still hope is not the case;) he has evidently overlooked the true import of what the Scriptures deny to the natural powers of man. It is not merely that they deny man's capability of teaching, they deny also his capability of receiving the knowledge of spiritual things, by the exercise of any natural powers of his mind. See I Cor.1:21. "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God," &c. What is human wisdom, other than the highest attainments of which the natural mind is capable? Yet by this God is not known, but God has made foolish this wisdom, in things of religion, as is manifest in the religions of the world, and in the experience of the children of God, when all their attained knowledge was turned into ignorance and confusion. Christ thanked his Father that he had "hid these things from the wise and prudent," (Matt.11:25,) from these who have made the highest attainments in knowledge of which the natural mind is capable. But see the full denial of the capability of the natural or Adamic man of receiving the things of the Spirit of God in I Cor.2:14. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The natural man embraces all that belongs to man as he was originally created in Adam. As to the idea that the new birth is a production in the soul of a spiritual existence or life by immediate creation, instead of the being produced by regeneration from an original creation in Christ as a Head, as brother Williams' queries and remarks do not involve it, I will not now notice.

3rd. In reference to brother Williams' first query; namely, "Did any of the Apostles and Prophets ever write anything about the bond of union?" I must take somewhat different ground from you, brother Beebe. I agree with you that not only the Apostles and Prophets, but that all the sacred writers from Moses on, wrote about the union of Christ and his people. In Moses, the substitution of the animal for a sin offering in the place of the Israelite who had sinned; the high priest's bearing on his breast plate and on his shoulders the names of the twelve tribes of Israel when he officiated in his office, and the right of redemption being in one who was near akin, all typified a union of Christ and his people in that great work of redemption. It is true these were only shadows of a real union, but shall we find in the anti-type that to which we look for in the substance, no more reality, than in the shadow? It may be said there was a foreordained union between Christ and the elect; but there was a foreordained union also between the sinning Israelite and the sin offering; hence when the animal was offered and his blood sprinkled, &c., it was as though the sinner himself had suffered the penalty of the law of Moses. But it was the individual's bringing the animal to the priest for sacrifice that made him actually interested in the efficacy of the offering. So if there is only a foreordained union between Christ and his people, it is their believing in him as their sin offering, that makes them actually interested in his death; and therefore according to this view, faith would be the bond of union. But as to the term, "bond of union," I do not find it in the scriptures; I cannot discover the idea in those texts which you quote, that is as that which binds Christ and his church together in a union. It is an old term consecrated by its use among religionists. And many persons I have no doubt use it from custom, when they mean only the union itself. Others again, need and mean the very idea of a bond of union, or that which binds together, in a nominal or acknowledged union, parts which before or otherwise had separate existences. As for instance, those who believe christians to be no other than reformed Adamites, or natural persons changed, must have to connect them with Christ, something to bind them to him, and faith as before remarked, according to their view, appears the proper bond. Again, those who hold that the quickening of the soul with spiritual life, is not the imparting to that soul this life by regeneration from Christ, but actually a distinct creation of this life direct in them, as some of our brethren appear to hold, if I can understand them, of course need also, in order to connect this new creation to Christ, something to bind it to him. And perhaps love is as good a bond as they can have. But those of us who hold that Christ himself, as such, is the quickening spirit, that the new life, or new creature, or new man, is the spirit of Christ, or is Christ in us, imparted not by a new creation, but in regeneration; as says John, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." I John 5:11,12. And says Peter, "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever." I Pet.1:28. I say those of us who thus believe, do not need any bond of union, the union itself is a being all of one; it is Christ in us, the hope of glory. Heb.2:11, Col.1:27. Adam and Eve did not need any bond of union to make them one flesh, they were already such in their creation. As natural persons, we had a distinct existence in Adam, as such we needed something to constitute us members of the body of Christ; this something is found in the one spirit, ("there is one body and one spirit,") being quickened with that one spirit, the spirit of Christ, we stand manifest as members of the one body, knit together by it. This spirit thus animating us individually, is as joints and bands, giving individual action in our union with the body, as moved by the same spirit, as is the case with the members of the natural body. And all the nourishment by which this body increaseth manifestively, according to the increase of God, that is according to his purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus, is from Christ the Head.

4th. The quotation from Elder Dudley, I will now notice. Whether brother Williams intended to dress the sentiment borrowed from Elder Dudley, in false colors I will not say. I trust he did not; but certainly there is nothing in the quotation, nor in Elder Dudley's pamphlet, neither in any thing I wrote on the subject, which warrants such constructions as he puts upon the extract, by confounding that which is derived from Christ the Quickening Spirit, with that which is derived from Adam, so as to represent the persons quickened as not having been dead in sins and as not needing salvation. The terms Quickened Spirits as found in the extract, used instead of Quickening Spirit, which on reflection, I think I should prefer, might occasion some obscurity in the sentence, were it not that the connection shows so clearly that by these expressions is intended that spiritual life which is derived from Christ, and is contrasted with the living souls which we derive from Adam. As it stands I can see no obscurity in the meaning. But if it is the sentiment conveyed in the quotation, that brother Williams thereby aims to deride, let us look at the Scriptures referred to, and see if the doctrine does not stand on too strong ground to be shaken by anything which men may bring against it, whether scoffs or philosophy. The Scripture to which Elder Dudley referred is found in I Cor.15:45-49. In this passage the two Adams are spoken of and contrasted.

And is it not too manifest to be denied by any candid enquirer after truth, that they are presented to view as two Heads, having each a distinct posterity or seed like unto himself, the one earthy as is the earthy, the other heavenly as is the heavenly? If the first Adam was an actual head having an actual seed; was not the last Adam an actual Head having an actual seed? If the posterity of the first were created and received a being in him, when he was made a living soul, were not the posterity of the last Adam, in like manner created in him, when he was made a Quickening Spirit? Again, does not verse 49, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly," clearly show that the same we who bear the image of the heavenly, and are thereby manifested as his seed, also bear the image of the earthy, and are thereby manifested as his seed; first manifested as the seed of the natural, and afterwards as the seed of the spiritual? How are any manifested in the image of the earthy as to his nature, and in his likeness as to his depravity? We are told (Gen.

5:3) that Adam, "begat a son in his own likeness and after his image." There then is the answer. May we not then safely conclude that the seed of Christ are manifested in his image as spiritual, by being born of the Spirit, and in his likeness as the glorified Jesus, by their resurrection or being born from the dead, according to the two begettings ascribed to their Head, Christ Jesus? He was manifested as the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, when in the flesh. John 1:14. And he was the first born from the dead, Col.1:18, and said to be begotten in his resurrection, Psa.2:7, compared with Acts 13:33. And further, as the saints are brought to view as the seed of Christ, Psa.22:30, and Isa.53:10 and as his children, (Isa.8:18, compared with Heb.2:13,) will not brother Williams be constrained to acknowledge this comparison between the two Adams and their seeds as holding good? If so, all ground is taken from him to infer that, because we have been quickened by the spirit of Christ and therefore existed in him, as his seed before the foundation of the world, we therefore never existed in Adam, were not dead as his seed in sin, and did not need salvation. Indeed I cannot conceive how he could ever draw such an inference, if he admits that those who have been born of the flesh may actually be born again of the Spirit. As to the new man, the spiritual life of the believer, as Christ is that life, I am free to admit, that it was not created in Adam, did not fall in him, and never needed salvation any more than did Christ personally. But to draw the conclusion from this, that the persons quickened with this life, were never in a lost state needing salvation, is to me strange logic, and stranger divinity.

5th. As to eternal justification, I see not that it is involved in the subject of his queries. Besides, brother Williams probably was not aware that the first complaining among the readers of the SIGNS about doctrinal controversies, arose from our opposing the idea of the saints being justified from eternity, as he has in his communications.

6th. Brother Williams in speaking of the time when the saints first tasted that the Lord was gracious says, "You did not then think of an eternal actual existence with Christ, &c." I have sometimes described the proper act of faith to be an embracing of Jesus Christ as the Savior of lost sinners, such as the individual felt himself to be without any special reference to his own being represented by Christ. I was wrong. A few nights since as I was reflecting on this point, my own experience when faith was first given me came forcibly to my mind. And I recollected that I then saw, that Christ as substituted to endure the penalty of the law due to condemned sinners was so exactly suited to my case that the conclusion was manifested to me that I once had in view when he was provided as a substitute, and therefore that he bore my sins. So that my faith embraced in substance a union with Christ as far back as his death; and I think, I was led to contemplate the provision as made in eternity. And I am now confident, I never could have hoped for salvation from a mere view of him as suffering the penalty due to sinners. For I then viewed my case an aggravated one, as I still do, and myself worse than any other, and therefore without having faith to view him as standing between me personally, and the law, I could not have had confidence to trust in him as my salvation. I think the same in substance must be the experience of all who are brought into liberty. They must view him as suffering in their stead, and therefore in effect view their union with him. They probably did not at the time have a clear view of all the details of that glorious union with Christ as their Head and Husband, by which he of right stood between them and all the demands of law. If they had, they would since have experienced no growth in the knowledge of Christ. But it is very strange to me that christians should be exhorted to make their first exercise of faith their exclusive standard of the doctrine of Christ, to the overlooking of all the enlargement of their understanding in that doctrine which they have since experienced. I hope brother Williams will reflect on these things and let us know where he stands. I have used plainness; I was not offended at his communication, but I have been impressed with the idea that it called for great plainness of speech. If he is a child of God and minister of Christ, as I hope he is, this will not hurt him; though he and others may be offended at me for it. May he be disposed to leave the a,b,c, of the doctrine of Christ, and go on unto perfection. If I have erred and thereby dealt wrongfully with his communication, may he feel to forgive me.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., July 18, 1849.

REMARKS ON GEN. 6:6.

Dear Brother Beebe: - I see that sister Ball, in the 1st number of the present volume of the Signs, has requested my views of Gen. 6:6,

"And it repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart."

I presume an explanation of this text can be given satisfactory to sister Ball, and other honest enquirers after truth; but to give an exposition that would stop the mouths of gainsayers is perhaps difficult. That God possesses such perfection, that there can be no repentance, or grief at heart, in His essential mind is evident from the general revelation? which He has made of Himself, as well as from positive declarations in His word to the point. James says, speaking of the Father of Lights, "With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," chap. 1:17. Job says, "He is of one mind, and who can turn Him," chap. 23:13. God says, "I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient time, the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure" Isa.46:9, 10. Even Balaam is compelled to say, "God is not a man that He should lie, neither the son of man that He should repent;" Num. 23:19. Samuel says, "The strength of Israel will not lie nor repent, for He is not a man that He should repent" I Sam. 15:29. These texts as clearly show that God's perfection of mind is such that He cannot be subject to any such change as repentance, implies in man, as do the Scriptures, that God is a Spirit, and therefore that when bodily organs and limbs are ascribed to Him, the expressions are not to be taken in a literal, but in a figurative sense. Even those who are so ready to think that God can be made to see such imperfections in His past course as to repent of it literally, will admit that when God speaks of His arm, His feet, &c., that the expressions are not to be taken in a literal sense, that they are figurative expressions, used to convey more forcibly to the comprehension of weak man, a sense of God's power and presence, &c. Those who are so disposed to contend that repentance, when ascribed to God, is to be taken literally, as implying a change in the divine mind, thereby making the Scriptures contradict themselves, and contradict the immutability of God, may think to relieve their minds of any restraint from the Scriptures; but they are not aware that if they could succeed in destroying the absolute immutability of God, in His purpose, they would destroy the whole ground on which man's safety and preservation on earth rests. If God could be induced to change His purpose one way, it could, with equal ease, be changed the other way. Hence, if we can believe that God has been induced by anything in us to change His purpose of cursing us to that of blessing us, we ought to believe that He would, by our acts of ingratitude and sin, again be provoked to change His purpose back, and at once to cut us off. Hence, to relieve His people from such a gloomy idea as this, God says, "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed" Mal.3:6. Thus showing that their preservation and safety, instead of being subject to their changeableness, rests upon His own unchangeableness.

Viewing the terms repent, repentance, &c., when spoken of God, as figurative, we shall find them strikingly illustrative of God's dealings with men, under the law dispensation, and upon legal principles, whilst no ways effecting the immutability of God's mind or purpose.

According to the legal dispensation, God's dealings with men were made to depend on their conduct, they were blessed or cursed, prospered or afflicted, that is, in a worldly or outward sense, according as they did good or evil. There were those in Jeremiah's time that said, "Where is the word of the Lord?" Intimating that God said, and did not; that His mind changed. Wherefore, after giving to Jeremiah the figure of the potter, to show His sovereign right to deal with nations as seemed Him good, He declared to him the principle upon which He dealt with nations, saying, "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them." So also, in the event of their changing from good to doing evil, God would repent of the good He thought to do unto them. See Jer. 17, 15, 18:1-10. God thus shows that His doing good or evil to a nation depended on their obeying or not obeying His voice, according to the nature of the legal dispensation. This also shows that God's repenting does not imply any change of mind with Him; that it is only a change of His course towards them consequent upon their change of conduct, according to His sovereign right to deal with nations, as they did good or evil. Again, in the days of Ezekiel, there were those who complained that God's ways were not equal.

But, God shows that the unequalness was with them, that His ways were uniform and just, that "when the righteous turneth from his righteousness and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby. But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby" Ez. 33:12-20. Then the Lord shows that His dealings with individuals, in their national or worldly relations under the legal dispensation, were the same as with nations.

Thus when the Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonah, God repented, that is, turned from the evil He had threatened them with, in accordance with the principle by which He governs nations Jonah 3:10. So God's repenting concerning the pestilence, and staying the angel's hand from Jerusalem, evidently was not that He was sorry for having sent the pestilence; but it was that having visited His designed chastisement upon Israel, that sufficiently humbled David's mind, He stayed the sword which threatened destruction to Jerusalem II Sam. 24:15-17. Having thus allowed that God is not like man, subject to change of mind, but is immutable in His purpose, and that His repenting or changing from threatened evils or promised good, according as men repented of their evils or turned from their righteousness, was but the result of His equitable dealings with nations and men according to the nature of the legal dispensation under which they were, we are prepared, methinks, for understanding the expressions used in Gen.

6:6. It is true the expressions used in this passage are much stronger than those we have been noticing, but not more so than was the destruction thereby intimated greater than others with which He has visited the earth. For as a man having formed something for which he truly "repented and grieved at heart," would seek to efface it and the remembrance of it from existence, so God, by the use of these expressions, showed that it was His purpose, although He had created man and by His benign providence caused him to greatly multiply upon the earth, now to turn and destroy that whole race of men, and wash the remembrance of them and their evil doings from the earth by a flood, and re-people it directly from another, through an intermediate head, Noah, who had found grace in His sight. Thus, in accordance with the general testimony of the Scriptures concerning God and concerning His government, I understand the expressions used in this verse as figurative and as designed more strongly to impress upon Noah and others the fixedness of His purpose to destroy that race of men from the earth, and at the same time to show that this signal judgment was an expression of His abhorrence of, and the opposition of His nature to, the wickedness of man, though He had permitted it upon earth. The construction I have here given of this passage is confirmed by a similar use of the term "repent" in I Sam. 15:11, "The word of the Lord came unto Samuel, saying, it repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king." And yet in that same chapter, verse 29, as quoted before, Samuel says: "The strength of Israel will not lie or repent, for He is not a man that He should repent," thus showing that he did not understand the expression, "it repenteth me," as implying anything like sorrow or change of mind with God, such as is implied in men's repenting. We must, therefore, understand these words as merely expressive of a change of God's providence toward Saul, consequent upon Saul's sin in disobeying the command of God, and showing God's displeasure at such disobedience.

I have gone into a lengthier examination of the Scriptures upon this subject than perhaps others will think was necessary; but I wished to show, and I think I have shown, that the uniform testimony of the Scriptures concerning God and the general use of the word "repent" by Him proves that when God speaks of "repenting" in reference to Himself, He speaks in a figurative sense, the same as when He speaks of "His hand, His arms," &c. I have thus complied with sister Ball's request. Whether what I have written is sufficiently instructive or interesting to justify its publication, I know not. I leave it with you, brother Beebe, to dispose of it as you think best, and subscribe myself yours,

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.25 (1857)

S. Trott.

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott

REMARKS ON I JOHN 1:3.

Circular Letter: The Corresponding Association held with the Mt. Pleasant Church, Fairfax County, Va., to all Old School brethren, churches, associations, corresponding and annual meetings, sendeth christian salutation:

Beloved Brethren: - "That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ." I John 1:3. The Apostle in the above text seems to express a desire to cultivate christian fellowship with those to whom he is writing, and to this end declares unto them what he has seen and heard; and as ours is the same desire, we wish in the following address to confine ourselves to what we have seen and heard, believing as we do, that the believers in Christ, in every age and country, were all embraced in the same eternal purpose; were all interested in the same grace which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began; are all watched over by the same kind Providence which brings them to, and preserves them in their natural existence; are all sanctified by the same God and Father, preserved in the same Christ Jesus; called with the same holy calling; the same pangs and sorrows bring them all into their spiritual existence; the same provision is the support of each, while on his pilgrimage; and the same heaven will be their home, when mortal scenes shall end. We can but believe also that the language of one who is in the light will be the language of all; and if we would all speak the same things, we must walk in the same light; and if we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another. Here two questions arise for our consideration. 1st. What is light? And secondly, What is fellowship?

In answer to the first of these enquiries, it is not our purpose to enter into an illustration of the various significations with which the term light is used in the scriptures, nor to direct you to any new light which has sprung up in these modern times; but to ascertain if we can, what is the nature of that light in which the saints are called to walk. And 1st. It is not the light of human reason; for this is often at war with the whole government of God, instead of enjoying fellowship with Him. It is not the light of nature; for this is called in the scriptures a darkness, which will eventually lead those who follow it into interminable woe, unless God call them out if it into His marvelous light. It is no blazing comet beheld by the natural eye; for, "We walk by faith, and not by sight." Nor is it the pillar of fire literally, that was the directory of national Israel through the wilderness into Canaan; but what this pillar of fire was to them figuratively the Lord Jesus Christ is to His church substantially; hence they are required to follow Him; to hear Him, &c. "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." God has given Him for a light of the Gentiles.

Isa.42:6. Again, He is said to be the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. John 1:9. And John 3:19, where it is said that men loved darkness rather than light; and concerning Christ it is said: "He was despised and rejected of men." And Christ says of Himself, "I am the Light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8:12. Without multiplying quotations, we think the above sufficient to establish the fact that Christ is the light in which the saints are called to walk. But it may be asked, since Christ has ascended up on high, are we not each at liberty to walk according to our own sense of propriety, and to put our own construction upon His own word, and walk accordingly? We answer, No! There has been too much of this done, hence the lack of fellowship and union among us. This would be like departing from the Lord, and thinking to have peace by walking in the imagination of our own heart. Deut.29:19. What then are we to understand by following Christ, or walking in Him as our light? And where shall we find the substance of what was shadowed forth in the pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night, that guided Israel after the flesh in their windings through the wilderness? The spiritual Israel experience, both darkness and day, and it is truly a wilderness through which they are called to pass. How important then that we should have a safe Directory, a bright and shining Light to conduct us on our pilgrimage. Well, our strong Deliverer has not left us to grope our way in the dark, but has afforded us a Light whereunto we do well that we take heed. "Is not my word like as a fire, saith the Lord?" Jer. 23:29. And says the psalmist, "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path." Psa.119:105. It is Christ Jesus who shines in this word, that makes it a fire and a light. And as this is evidently a night season with the church, how important that we should give the more earnest heed to this light, and have our eye steadily fixed on Him who is clothed with light, as with a garment. We know that there are many who profess to be the children of God, and profess to be governed by His word, and yet are pursuing different plans and schemes; but we are inclined to believe that by far the greatest part are following some fancy of their own, instead of waiting for the moving of this fiery pillar. The scriptures in themselves are but as a dark body, even to the children of God, only when Christ, who is our light and life shines therein. And whilst, dear brethren, we are wading through this dark night, anxiously watching for the morning, let us be still, like our ancient types, when the pillar of fire is not moving before us, that is, let our lips be sealed in silence, and our pens keep their places where nature grew them, rather than advance one sentiment, either in doctrine or practice, much less move therein, if we have not a thus saith the Lord for it. When there exists a diversity of opinion among brethren, touching any one point of doctrine, it is clear that they are not all following the light, in contending each for their peculiar sentiments; and as these things are confined chiefly to the ministry, it only goes to show that the cloudy pillar will not do to follow in the night; but when the morning shall again dawn upon the church; when "Zion's watchmen shall see eye to eye;" when the ministers of the gospel who are also called clouds, shall be embodied as one pillar; then may Zion's children follow on; then our peace shall be as a river; and then shall our fellowship be sweet.

But to our second enquiry, what is christian fellowship?

This term, as used in the scriptures, and experienced by christians, means something more than formal friendship or kindness. This kind is experienced by the world, and by the various anti-christian societies that are in the world, consequently is nothing more than a fleshly feeling, while the saints are required to "know no man after the flesh," all fleshly attachments and preferences should be laid aside; no creature fondness should be suffered to predominate over that fellowship which is of God. This term is not particularly defined in the scriptures of truth, but according to its application as there used, seems to be somewhat synonymous with love, and is an inevitable consequence of fellowship or communion with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ; "For if we love Him that begat, we love them also that are begotten of Him." This fellowship with God is brought about alone by being born of God, having our souls washed in the blood of Jesus and made holy, otherwise there could be no communion with Him; for as soon might we expect that light and darkness might have fellowship one with the other, or righteousness and unrighteousness; but being purified we become experimentally connected with Christ, and in Him enjoy communion with God, as did Noah in the big ark, while it rode sturdily upon the bosom of the mighty deep. There is a fellowship that is merely nominal, but like that which exists merely in the flesh, it always fails to produce those delightful effects flowing from a fellowship of kindred spirits - this is to take an individual by the hand and call him brother, for whom we do not feel that endearing relationship, and to whom we are not bound by any fleshly ties. This kind is sometimes expressed towards those who have gone out from us, that it might be made manifest that they were not of us contrary to the Apostle's injunction, that we have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them. Christian fellowship is a union of soul, and does not exist towards an individual because he is called an Old School Baptist, or because he professors to be a believer in Jesus; but because he gives evidence of being born of God, and manifests a conformity in his life to the precepts of the gospel; and in his conversation an unyielding attachment to the doctrine of Jesus, thus bearing His image; and the more christians discover of this in one another, the more closely will they be knit together in the bonds of christian love and union; and where this exists, instead of opposition and persecution from their many enemies, having a tendency to untwist the chains that bind them together, it will but rivet them more firmly; lead them to speak often one to another, and endeavor to comfort and console each other with the rich promises of the gospel; to administer to each other's necessities; and to drive them often to a throne of grace, to tell God their sorrows.

Fellowship with God, and with one another, is what constitutes our happiness here below; but more particularly the former; for by it we have the promise made to us of a rich inheritance beyond the narrow bounds of time, when we shall be fully fitted to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light; 'twas this that burst off the prison bonds of Paul and Silas, and lightened up their dark abode; 'twas this that made the burning furnace a pleasant palace for Shadrech, Meschech and Abednego; 'twas this that buoys up our fainting spirits, in our lonely sojournings. But when we meet the children of God associated together for the worship of their Father, and enjoy the comfortable evidence that He is in the midst; we unite our melodies in praise to His name; we unite our supplications to a throne of grace; we are charmed alike with the gospel proclamation, and we are led to enquire, "From whence doth this union arise?" The answer can be found alone in Him who has made us one; and who has made it our desire to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of our lives; to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in His temple, Psa.27:4.

Our meeting has truly been a season of refreshing to our souls, having enjoyed, as we trust, the presence of our God, and the visits of a goodly number of our brethren. The letters from the churches express peace and love among themselves, and they seem to enjoy an unshaken confidence in God.

Finally, brethren, farewell. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might."

S. TROTT. Moderator, 1842.

REMARKS ON PHIL. 3:21.

Dear Brother Beebe: - Some months since, I received a letter from brother F.J. Beal, dated in Missouri, requesting my views through the Signs on the text, Phil. 3:21. I think I have at some former time expressed my views on this text, but out of respect to brother Beal and his kind and interesting letter, I will, with your approbation, give such views as may be presented to my mind on the passage.

The text is this: "Who will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself." The preceding verse reads thus: "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence, also, we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ," &c.

I will offer a few remarks on the word "conversation." According to the modern use of this term, it signifies a familiar talking with others, and therefore is understood by many to relate to our talk or speech. But at the time of the translation it evidently had a more extended import. The original word rendered "conversation" by the translators, signifies citizenship, and relates to that general intercourse as citizens of the same city or government, which the saints should have with each other, not as citizens of this world, but of heaven. "From whence, also, we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ." The idea of this looking for the Saviour clearly implies an expectation and an authorized expectation of His coming in a sense in which He had not come, and was not then present with His Apostles and Church. This, therefore, in connection with other texts of Scripture which it is not now necessary to refer to, confirms me in the belief that there is to be a second personal appearing of Christ Jesus to the saints on this earth. And it is at this appearing of our Lord in the air with the trump of God, that I understand the change spoken of in our text, is to take place, according to First Corinthians 15:51-53 & I Thes.4: 17.

In order to properly appreciate the change which these "vile," or earthly bodies of the saints are to experience, it will be necessary to notice the "glorious body" of the Lord Jesus, to which they are to be like. The whole testimony of the New Testament confirms the fact that Christ arose from the dead in the same body in which He died, and with it unchanged in its flesh and bone nature. Christ said to His disciples, "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have" Luke 24:39. And He ate before them (see verses 42,43). Peter says they did eat and drink with Him Acts 10:41.

In Christ's thus rising from the dead in the same body in which He entered the grave, and with His wounds on Him, we have the most complete testimony which could be given, not only that He had exhausted the curse that was due for the transgressions of His people, and which justice rigidly inflicted on Him as their life and head, and therefore their embodiment, so that His soul was not left in hell; but also, that in dying, He had so entirely destroyed the power of death, and obtained the victory over it, that no corruption could pass upon Him. Now if Christ died for, or as representing His people, then He must have arisen in the same relation to them, and therefore in His destroying the power of death, it was that power over their bodies that was destroyed, just as much in His taking the curse out of the way so that His soul was not left in hell, was a delivering them from the curse. If the dominion of sin over the bodies of Christ's people was not to be broken, as well as the redemption of their souls from destruction by His death, I cannot conceive how His body could have been raised, seeing He was made sin for us, and bore our sins in His own body on the tree; for it was the power of our sins which sunk Him into the grave. If that power had not been broken by His death, it must still have held Him there. And as it was our sins which He bore in His own body, if the power of them was broken by His death, then they can no more hold our bodies in the grave than they could hold His body there. Hence Paul's declaration, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen I Cor. 15:13. And well might he ask, "Now if Christ be preached that He rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" verse 12.

But the enquiry arises whether the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ, like unto which the saints' bodies are to be changed, is that body still remaining in its flesh and bone nature, receiving nourishment from food and drink, or whether it was changed at His ascension from a material to a spiritual body? There is no direct declaration that I know of in the Scriptures that His body was thus changed. But it appears to me evident from the general tenor of the New Testament, that His body was changed. If it remains a material body, then the bodies of the saints to be like His glorious body must, in their resurrection, remain material bodies, and what change they will experience to be fashioned like His, I am not prepared to say. But we are assured that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;" and that the body though sown a natural body is raised a spiritual body I Cor. 15:44 & 50. Indeed, Christ's transfiguration (Mt. 17:1-5) is, as I understand it, a representation given beforehand of the change which should take place in His body when He should enter into His glory.

But it is not necessary that we should dwell upon this point now. For whether we admit that Christ's body was changed from a natural to a spiritual body or not, all who admit the truth of the Scripture testimony, must admit that Christ arose from the dead and ascended in the same body in which He was crucified. And as our text assures us that the bodies of the saints shall be fashioned like unto His glorious body, it is self-evident that they must be raised from the dead in order to be thus fashioned. Indeed, I have briefly, though I think clearly showed, that the resurrection of Christ and of the saints, go together. If He has arisen then must their bodies be raised; if they are not to be raised, then He has not arisen. The questions were asked in Paul's day: "How are the dead raised? And with what body do they come?" I Cor.

15:35. Paul goes on to answer these questions in the following verses to the 46th. As the same questions are asked in our day, I will notice one or two other considerations to show that Paul's use of the pronoun it in his description of the sowing and raising of the body, is definite and specific.

Some say there is a resurrection, but deny that the material body which turns to dust, is raised. Others say that in the resurrection of the body all that ever constituted parts of the body must be raised with it; if a person has lost an arm or leg in some foreign country, or his limb is bitten off by a shark in the ocean, and he dies and is buried in this country, in his resurrection that lost limb will be reunited with his body. By the same rule they may, and some I think do say that all the particles of matter that ever belonged to the body must be raised with it, and therefore that those particles, wherever they have been extorted or dropped, must be gathered to the body. But Paul's it, in my estimation, justifies neither one nor the other of these ideas. We will take

Christ, the first-fruits, as an illustration of what is raised. It was the same Jesus, in person, who was born in Bethlehem, and in that identical body which was nailed to the cross, and died on it, that was raised up, with the wounds on it, as was showed to Thomas John 20:27. And it was Jesus in that very body in which He had showed Himself alive unto His disciples, that was parted from them and taken up into heaven. See Luke 24:50,5 1 & Acts 1:1-11. Again, those that are alive and remain at the coming of the Lord, are to be changed. And the words seem clearly to convey the idea that just as they existed at the moment of their Lord's coming, their bodies will be changed from corruptible to incorruptible, and caught up, the identical persons, who, having been alive, and being changed in a moment to meet the Lord in the air. See I Cor.15:51-54 & I Thes.4:15-17. These cases thus illustrate what Paul means by his its, when he says, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body" I Cor.

15:44; namely, that it is the same identical body that is sown, which is raised, though changed from a natural to a spiritual body.

This is a mystery, and a great mystery; but that by no means justifies our rejecting or caviling at the declarations of God's word. We ought to remember that the power put forth in accomplishing this glorious work of the resurrection of the saints is as incomprehensible as is the work. It is according to that working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself. It is the working of God in His infinite wisdom and almighty power. When we see what God by His working has subdued unto Himself, that He subdued the chaos so as to form the heavens and the earth in their beauty and order; subdued darkness in saying, Let there be light, &c., and made Satan and sin itself in their evil workings to result in the glory of God and in the redemption and salvation of His people; surely, we cannot doubt His being able to subdue death and the grave, so as to make them give up their dead and to make them yield them back, purified from all that is earthly and sensual about them.

I doubt, my brother, if any who dispute the doctrine of the resurrection should read this, whether they will be convinced of its truth. The Scriptures are so plain and pointed on the subject, it is useless for us to expect them to believe what we say, if they can reject what is there written. Still it is our duty to follow the pattern of the apostles, in giving witness to the resurrection of Jesus, and consequently of His saints. For I cannot conceive how we can be co-heirs or joint-heirs with Christ, seeing that in His body He has entered in as heir of all things, if in our bodies also we are not made to participate in the inheritance, nor how we can be glorified together, that is, with Him, seeing that He has been glorified in His risen body, if our bodies are to remain subject to corruption. But I will here leave the subject. Yours in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Jan. 10, 1859.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 27(1859)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 465-469

REMARKS RESPECTING THE SABBAHH, &c.

Brother Beebe: - In attending further to the enquiries of Brother Moore, the perpetuity of the Sabbath comes next in order. This subject has been already two or three times discussed in the Signs. Brother Beebe has once given his views thereon, and I have once, if not twice, given mine. But Brother Moore and perhaps other readers of the Signs, may have seen neither of the communications heretofore published on this subject. I will therefore again give my opinion concerning the Sabbath, in as brief a manner as I can, consistently with the nature of the subject.

Admit the correctness of the position I took on the subject of the washing of feet, namely: that the Apostles, being seated on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel, are to determine (that is, by their writings), all things pertaining to the kingdom of God, or the gospel dispensation, and this subject is decided at once. For neither the Apostles, nor their Lord, have anywhere enjoined the observance of a seventh- day Sabbath on the disciples under the gospel. Neither have we any instance in the New Testament of Sabbath breaking that is, in a literal sense, being reproved as a sin, excepting by the Scribes and Pharisees. When, in addition to these facts, we recollect that the Apostles when sitting in council on the case of the Gentile disciples concerning their keeping the law of Moses, decided, and that by the guidance of the Holy Ghost, that no greater burden should be laid upon them than these necessary things; that they abstain from meats offered unto idols," &c. (Acts 15:28,29), we certainly must conclude that the Gentile churches are loosed from the observance of the Sabbath in its typical and ceremonial relation. But it is said by those who hold to the perpetuity of the obligation to observe one day in seven as the Sabbath, that the law requiring the observance of this day was included in the Ten Commandments, written on tables of stone, and therefore, like the rest of the decalogue, it must be perpetual in its obligation. But it should be remembered that the law is spiritual, also that under the gospel, God is peculiarly revealed as a Spirit, and as requiring them that worship Him, to worship Him in spirit and in truth John 4:23,24. I cannot conceive of any good reason that can be given why the observance of one day in seven as holy time, in distinction from the other six, is not as much external and carnal as is the holding of one place, such as Jerusalem, to be more holy than another as a place of worship. But further we find all the other commands of the decalogue, in the spirit and substance of them, recognized by Christ and His Apostles, and the observance of them enforced upon the churches, whilst the observance of the Sabbath, in the letter of it, is no where, as has been before noticed, in the New Testament required.

My understanding of the fourth command of the decalogue is that it is ceremonial and typical in the letter of it, and moral, or perpetually obligatory, in the spirit of it. That it is ceremonial is shown from Ezek. 20:12, if not by its being so completely connected with the other ceremonies of the law.

In the text just referred to, God says of Israel, "I gave them my sabbaths to be a sign between me and them," &c. And it is evidently shown in Heb.4:3-11, that the seventh-day Sabbath was typical of that rest which Christ gives to His people when they come to Him or believe in Him, because He hath ceased from His own work - the work of redemption

- as God did from His. Why then, it may be enquired, was this command inserted in the decalogue? Because there is a spirituality in it which is morally obligatory. The number seven and seventh is used typically to denote completion or fullness; hence Israel's being required nationally to observe the seventh day as holy time taught the obligation of man, and his sinfulness for not complying therewith, to consider his whole existence as holy to the Lord, and not therefore to have served self by doing his own acts, or thinking his own thoughts. In this sense the obligation of this command is recognized by the Apostles in the New Testament. The strictness also of the Levitical law in enforcing the observance of the typical Sabbath upon Israel, and upon Israel alone, teaching the awful penalty which stands against those who, professing to rest by faith in Christ, are doing their own works for acceptance with God, and thus polluting the gospel Sabbath.

There are others who hold to the perpetuity of the command to observe the seventh-day Sabbath, who yet observe the first day instead of the seventh, pretending that the day has been changed by divine appointment. This they infer from the fact of the disciples meeting together on the first day of the week to break bread, &c. But this is altogether human assumption; for the Scriptures nowhere declare God's having authorized the change of the first day for the seventh, in the keeping of the fourth command. So long, therefore, as we walk in obedience to the Scriptures as our only rule of faith and practice in religion, and reject the traditions of men as a rule, we must reject this idea of the first day's being the legal Sabbath. But we have also very pointed proof to show that the writers of the New Testament did not understand this more modern doctrine of the substitution of the first day, for the seventh, as the Sabbath of the law; for they uniformly, not only before the resurrection of Christ, but throughout the New Testament, make use of the term Sabbath to denote the seventh-day, the day which the Jews observed as such. Thus; Matt.28:1, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn towards the first of the week," or first day of the week, "came Mary, &c." See also Luke 23:56; 24:1, in connection as being more full. We read also throughout the Acts of the Apostles, of Paul's going into the Jewish Synagogues on the Sabbath days. These were the days on which the Jews were assembled therein, and, of course, their Sabbaths. On the other hand, whenever the day is named on which the disciples met together, it is always said to be, not on the Sabbath, but on the first day of the week. See John 20:19; Acts 20:7; I Corinthians. 16:2. Is there not then a manifest line of distinction kept up throughout the entire New Testament between the first day of the week, that on which the disciples met together to break bread, and the Sabbath of the Scriptures? Who then, since the Apostles had sealed up their decisions, has had any authority to take away this line of demarkation, or "remove this ancient landmark"?

It may then be asked, Do you esteem every day alike? In point of holiness I do. I do not conceive that we have a right to sin against God one day or hour, more than another, but that we should at all times: "Glorify God with our bodies and our spirits which are His." As the Apostles appear to have established among the churches the practice of meeting together on the first day of the week for worship, I esteem it an apostolic pattern set for the churches in all after ages. And I care not how particular any are, in setting apart this day as a day of worship, when circumstances will so admit, providing they do it on gospel principles; that is as a voluntary setting it apart for the observance of the institutions of the gospel, such as the church's meeting together for worship, and in grateful remembrance of the resurrection of Christ as the Head and Representative of His people, having finished the work of redemption in their behalf, from under the law. But the observance of this day as the Sabbath, and in obedience to the law, savors too much of legality for such as have become "Dead to the law by the body of Christ." I know that judaizing teachers may bewitch the children of God into legal observances, as they did the Galatians; but, as said the Apostle on that occasion, so I would say to these: "Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?" &c. Gal.4:21-31; see also Col. 2:16-23.

The next subject of enquiry is Acts 15:29. "That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well," &c. Here we have the decision direct of the Lord's enthroned judges, on these points, binding the observance of these several prohibitions upon the disciples from among the Gentiles. It must extend, therefore, to us.

I would here remark that the obligation to abstain from the fourth item in this catalogue, namely: fornication, is so generally admitted and so fully enforced by the Apostles in their epistles that I need not say any more. And in reference to the first item, the abstaining from meats offered unto idols, the Apostle, in writing unto the churches, owing to their being so much intermixed among idolaters, had occasion to enlarge so much on this prohibition that I might, with propriety, pass it by were it not that it gives me occasion to remark that the anti-christian idolatry of our day may well be considered as embraced, in substance, in the same prohibition. Hence, those brethren who, trusting to their knowledge, think they can stay with safety in connection with churches where the worship of mammon, or the potency of moneyed institutions to further religion, is maintained, and thinking that they can take the good and leave the bad, or join in the worship of God without participating in the moneyed plans, may with propriety consider the Apostle as addressing them when he says, "If any see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols?" Or, in other words, to participate in the idolatrous schemes there practiced? "And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died." That is, dwindle away and become useless to the body, the church, or be cast away from it. "But when ye sin so against the brethren and wound their weak consciences, ye sin against Christ" I Cor. 8:10-12.

The parts of this verse which Brother Moore, I presume, had more immediately in view, are, the abstaining from blood and from things strangled. These two points amount to nearly the same. One refers to eating the blood drawn from animals killed, the other to eating animals killed without being bled, which is mostly done by strangling. There are, I am inclined to think, many who profess to receive the Scriptures as their guide, who yet pay no kind regard to this apostolic prohibition. They probably have adopted the idea that the obligation to abstain from blood was imposed only by the Levitical law, was on a footing with the prohibition to eat swine's flesh, and like that abrogated under the gospel, or rather, never binding upon the Gentiles.

But it is not so. If it had been, I cannot think it would have seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to the Apostles to have decreed this restraint to be put upon the disciples at Antioch. The fact is, the eating of the blood of animals was prohibited to Noah, when the license was first given to man to eat animal food. Gen. 9:3-6. The license and prohibition thus go together. "Every moving thing shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things. But the flesh with the life thereof which is the blood thereof shall ye not eat. And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it." &c.

As this restriction was laid upon Noah as the Progenitor of the postdeluvian world, it must be binding upon the whole human family, Gentiles as well as Jews; all being his posterity. Hence the original and universality of this prohibition of the eating of blood shows the propriety of the Apostles' thus establishing its force upon the Gentile disciples. It is an acknowledgment which God thus early required man, in allowing him the use of meats, to make, that He alone was the giver of life and Creator of all things; and that man in taking it, is taking what God alone can give. And I see no good reason why, under the full light and liberty of the gospel, whilst still enjoying the privilege of the use of animal food, we should not be under as strong obligation to acknowledge God as the giver thereof and the alone Author of all life, as were those in the earlier ages of the world.

As for myself, although I frequently see the blood of animals designed for food, shed without being duly impressed with the idea that the act of pouring out the blood thus upon the ground was designed of God as an expression of returning the life of the animal to Him as the alone giver of it, and as an acknowledgment of Him as the Creator of all things, and Author of all our mercies; yet I have for years been so convinced of the divine authority of the apostolic restriction in this case, that I object in my family to the life even of fowls designed for food being taken without its being done by the shedding of their blood; and also to the practice of snaring game designed for food, it being a species of strangling.

As the apostolic injunction requiring the abstaining from things strangled and from blood was intimately connected with that requiring the abstaining from meats offered to idols, the direction which Paul gives in reference to eating at another's table; to whatsoever is purchased in market; concerning meat offered to idols will, I presume, hold equally good in this other case, namely: "Whatsoever is sold in the shambles (or butcher's stall), that eat, asking no question for conscience sake: For the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof. If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake, &c." I Cor. 10:25-34.

The other subjects embraced in Brother Moore's enquiries I will leave for another communication. I remain as hitherto, Yours to serve in the gospel.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Jan. 6, S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.8 (1840)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 194-200

REMARKS ON ROMANS 8:28.

Brother Beebe: - Brother S. Mabey, of Albany County, N.Y, in writing to me, some months since, requested me to give through the Signs of the Times, such views as I may have of the text, Romans 8:28.

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose."

As this text contains independent matter enough in itself for one communication, I will pass directly to its consideration, without stopping to notice the important subjects contained in the preceding context. First: Paul's assertion, We know, &c. He evidently intended in the we, the saints to whom he wrote with himself, therefore, the saints in all ages, for all bear the same characteristic marks. But Jacob was evidently a subject of grace, a saint, yet when Joseph had been mysteriously taken from him, and his sons would take Benjamin also into Egypt, and famine stared him in the face, unless he let him go, he did not know that all these things were working together for his good, but undoubtedly spoke what he thought, when he said, All these things are against me. So in reference to ourselves, there are many things we meet with in our experiences of ourselves, and in the dealings of God with us, that as men and women we do not at the time know are working for our good, but think them dark evidences against us, that we are not objects of God's love. Paul did not intend to assert that by our natural senses we know, but by faith we know. Thus we often worry and distress ourselves because we cannot find in our natural man those characteristics which the New Testament gives of the child of grace; as though there was in the christian no difference between the old man and the new, between reason and faith. It is by faith, and by faith only, that we know spiritual things. And that faith which constitutes a person a believer in Christ is actual knowledge of the thing or truth which it receives. It is the evidence of things not seen. "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God" Heb. 11:3. Thus the faith of the gospel is materially different from the belief which is produced by education. Well may those who have only this latter belief cry up charity for those who differ from them in religious sentiments; because the one has no more claim to being the truth than others, they are all the product of human teaching. But you may as well undertake to convince the child of grace that the sun is the source of darkness to the earth as to attempt to persuade him that there is uncertainty about the truth of what his faith has actually received; for that which is received by faith is not learned of men, but is received by the revelation of Jesus Christ, and comes with that power that he knows it is God's truth. See Gal. 1:12 & I Thes. 1:5. But it is not everything which the child of God receives and contends for as truth that he has received by faith. Hence we may all have more or less errors about us. But we may, I think, by a careful examination, distinguish between what we know by faith and what we have received as truth from men or books, or from our own reasonings. Second: That all things work together for good. We might prove by arguments drawn from the Scripture testimony that all things work together for good to the people of God, and your mind may become fully satisfied of the truth of it, but this would not be knowing it for yourself; it would not bring it to your feelings when tried by afflictions or temptations. It requires that knowledge which faith gives to make us feel the truth of it. Yet it is proper to notice the Scripture testimony showing the correctness of faith's knowledge on the point; or in other words, showing that the revelation made to faith is from the same spirit of truth who made the revelation contained in the Scriptures.

The Scriptures testify that Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us. Yes, redeemed us from under the law, so that the children are not under the law but under grace, so that sin shall not have dominion over them. Hence the sin that they feel in them cannot reign unto death or to the infliction of the penalty of the law. And Christ declares these children, as He characterizes them, Mt.5:3-12, blessed. Now, where there is no curse, how can any evil come? And wherever they are blessed of God, how can anything but goodness and mercy follow them all the days of their lives? But it may be thought that this may be the case in God's immediate dealings with His people, but that events may arise from other sources, as from our corruptions, from Satan and from the world, &c., that will work evil to the children of God. But we are assured, Eph. 1:11, that God worketh all things after the counsel of His own will. The all things in this text are as extensive as the all things in the other text. The Scriptures also reveal God as infinite in wisdom and knowledge, infinite in power and goodness. All things must have been present to the infinite knowledge of God when His will counseled the disposal of them, and His infinite wisdom must have seen the direct bearing that everything would have and enabled Him to order all things so as to accomplish what His infinite goodness willed. And His infinite power certainly would enable Him to carry out His purpose of making all things work together for that good which He purposed. Herein we have the absolute of God's sovereign predestination of all things. Some will say God is infinite. O, yes, there is nothing too great for God to do. But again; they will say, There are things too small for God's immediate notice, and special providence; that He has established certain general rules and laws, and has left men and devils, &c., to pursue their own volitions, subject to the consequences. Such persons lose sight of the fact that if there are things too small for God's knowledge to embrace, or His government to control, the infinitude of God and of His attributes are as effectually denied as though it was contended there are things too large for His government. That which is infinite cannot be limited by either large or small things; God being infinite, His knowledge and government must embrace alike the largest and smallest things. Hence it is said, "God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, &c." Ecl.

12:14. It may be asked, Are not some things evil in themselves? Truly, they are. It is not said that all things are good to them, &c, in our text; but that all things work together for good, &c. The treachery of Joseph's brethren, and of Potiphar's wife, were in themselves evil acts, but they were important parts in the arrangement of God's providence whereby He brought about good to Jacob and his posterity.

Peter's denying his Lord, after having made such strong assertions of his faithfulness, was in itself an evil act; yet on a little reflection, I think no discerning person can doubt its having an important effect in connection with other circumstances, such as Christ's looking upon him, &c., in converting him from that self-confidence which he had so lately manifested, and thereby worked together with the other parts of Christ's government over him for his good.

I might notice the crucifixion of our Lord as confirming the same point, but I will come, my brother, to your own experience. In your exercises under the law, did not your failing to keep your resolutions to do better, and the bursting forth of the corruptions of your nature on every temptation, work together with the teachings you were receiving concerning the law to abase you, to strip you of your own righteousness, to make you feel how exceedingly sinful sin is, and to kill you to all legal hopes, and thus prepare your heart for receiving and rejoicing in the gospel plan of salvation? So I think, if you do not at all times know it, that you will find in the end, that,

"Temptations, trials, doubts and fears, Wants, losses, crosses, groans and tears, Will, thro' the grace of God, our friend, In everlasting triumphs end."

But faith in its exercises does not stop thus to reason us into the belief of these things. It lays hold at once on the blood of Christ; presents God to us in Christ as a Father, and makes us feel that He is love. Not as the rainbow which hems the passing cloud, and gives us to feel, notwithstanding the devastations which the hail and the wind may have made around us, that we are yet spared, and that there is still hope for us; but faith burnishes the whole cloud with love, and makes us to feel that the affliction is sweet, that the temptation was needed to humble us, and gives us to praise God that we are not left to pass on carelessly without chastisement. It is a sweet knowledge which faith gives that all things are working together for good. Third: To them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose. As I have been so lengthy on the former parts of this subject, I shall try to be brief on this part. We have in these words two important characteristics by which those who are born of God and are the objects of His love, are distinguished from others. 1. They love God. The religion of Christ is a religion of love. Its subjects are drawn by the cords of love, not drawn by fear of punishment in their obedience to God, because they love God, they love His revealed will and the ways He has appointed. They love the children of God when they see, and as they see, the image of Christ in them, the evidence of their love to God, and see them walking in the truth, or in obedience to His word. They loathe themselves because they see so little in themselves, like God, and so much that is opposite to Him, so little of conformity to His word. These are decisive evidences of being born of God. "For every one that loveth God is born of God" I John 4:7. And these evidences are more or less manifested in the experience and walk of the child of God. Yet the child of grace, while having these evidences about him, often doubts whether it can be possible that he loves God. The Comforter, and He only, can clear away these doubts. Yet, we may appeal to such to say whether amidst all the workings of their corruptions there is not evidently in them a desire after God, and to be brought more into conformity to His word and will, and whether these desires could be in their breasts, if there was there no love to God. 2. Them who are called according to His purpose. It appears then that there is a special call by which the predestinated children of God are called from darkness into the light and liberty of the gospel; for it is according to God's purpose. It is also an effectual call. For whom He called, them He also justified, and whom He justified, them He also glorified, &c., verse 30. This call is internal, but irresistible. It draws the subject on from step to step, though he knows not why, and though Satan and his own unbelief tells him all is wrong, that every step is leading more into sin and farther from God, until at length his astonished soul beholds the light of the gospel, and he sees that he had been called and led from Sinai to Calvary, from self to Christ as his only hope of salvation. If God has thus called us to a knowledge of His salvation and given us to love it, He is for us, and "if God be for us who can be against us?" verse 31. These remarks fall far short of giving an adequate view of the subject, but they are the best I have to offer. I have written this while laboring under a cold, which indisposes me both in body and mind, so that I have hardly energy enough to write. Yours, I trust in love;

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 27

(1859) S. Trott.

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 456-460

REPLY TO BRETHREN: SONSHIP & UNION.

BROTHER BEEBE: - I would not reply to these brethren, and especially so soon after sending you a communication on a similar subject, were it not that they have given so wrong representations of the views of myself and others, on this side of the question, that I cannot for the truth's sake, nor for the sake of my standing among brethren consent to leave the matter here.

Discussions on religious subjects, when conducted in a spirit of enquiry after truth, and of mutual submission to the testimony of the scriptures as the standard, are calculated to be both pleasant and profitable. But when otherwise conducted, they may as well be let alone, any further than as they may be in defense of truth. For these reasons, I am constrained to reply to these brethren, and in so doing, review some of their positions. I desire to do it, as briefly as I consistently can, in candor, and in love of the truth. I esteem these brethren as christians, as Old School Baptists, and on account of my intercourse with them. In my communication, in the 10th number, present volume of the SIGNS, in replying to brother Barton's query concerning the churches being created in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, I took the ground, that the expressions "created in Christ Jesus," naturally involved the idea that his church was created in his creation, as the Head of his church, and of course, as far back as he stood as her Head. I referred to I Cor.15:45, as sustaining the same idea, and also to Rev.3:14 & Col.1:15 as further justifying the application of the idea of creatureship to our Lord in reference to his headship. It used to be that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word should be established; but it seems it is not so now. These brethren in replying to that communication, do not notice the text, Eph.2:10 ("For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, &c.,") although I founded my main arguments on it. The other three scripture passages above named they notice, and how they dispose of them shall now occupy our attention.

They ask, "Do the Scriptures give any information of anything being created before the beginning?" If they mean by beginning the beginning of the creation of God; I answer no, for Christ is that beginning. But, if they mean by it, the beginning of time, as in Gen.1:1, I say yes; for in that beginning God created the heavens and the earth, but Christ, being the Beginning of the creation of God, and the First born of every creature, must in this sense have been created or brought into existence before these, and therefore before time. As no other reading has been attempted to be given to these texts, Rev.3:14 & Col.1:15, I still think them good authority as they read. But as they do not satisfy these brethren, I will produce other corresponding texts. In John 1:4, we read, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." This is said of the Word as he in the beginning was with God, and was God. John 1:1. Will any person after candid reflection say of this life that is so particularly spoken of as distinct from the Word, as being described to be in the Word, and again as if to prevent mistake, it is said, and the "life was the light of men," not simply that it was the light, &c., that it is itself the Word or the essential existence of the Godhead? If not, must they not admit that this life was produced, that is begotten or created existence in the Word, or be driven to the necessity that there are other selfexistencies than God, and therefore other gods? If then this life was not a self-existence, then it may properly be termed a creature, as being produced of God. Remember, Christ is that light. Again, in Isaiah 51, the LORD, or Jehovah addressing himself to that personage in the singular number, of whom he calls himself, verse 13, The LORD thy Maker, and in verse 15, says, "I am the Lord thy God," says in verse 16, "And I have put my words in thy mouth, and have covered thee in the shadow of my hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people." These brethren certainly must admit that this personage of whom the Lord says, that he is his Maker and that he hath covered him in the shadows of his hand, &c., is not himself the essential self-existent God, in the sense in which he is spoken of; but that he is a creature. This is said of him before the planting of the heavens, &c., and therefore the beginning of time. It cannot with any consistency be said that this was spoken merely by a decree of fore-ordination of what should take place in time, because it is expressly said, "I have put my words in thy mouth, &c.," that "I may plant the heavens, &c.," and therefore spoken of as an antecedent work, preparatory to planting the heavens, &c. (I have left it for these brethren to decide for themselves who this personage is, whether Christ personally as the Head of his church, or the church as in him; they amount to the same thing. By a comparison with Isa.49:2, I should think it is Christ personally; but then his church was thus in him. Ps. 90:1,2, & 91:1, and Prov.8, as compared with chapter 7.) Other like texts I might quote, but if these can be thrown aside, fifty might be, I therefore forbear.

I next pass to their notice of the two texts, Rev.3:14 & Col. 1:15. They say in reference to them, "We desire to give the fairest construction we can, according to the tenor of truth." Why not according to the reading of the texts? This tenor of truth I presume is the same with the analogy of faith, which we have heard so frequently spoken of. Brethren, I would reason with you a little on this point, if it be not taken as presuming in me, considering my inferiority to you, and my being so full of inconsistencies myself. But whatever I may be, I would like to see in my brethren a going on to perfection, and not a setting down satisfied that our fathers have provided for us a sufficiency of knowledge, and that their cisterns are better to draw from, than the fountain of living waters. Brethren, if we consider, that not only the matter of the Scriptures is by divine inspiration, but also that an Apostle has said, "Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual," (I Cor.2:13,) shall we not feel bound to respect each text, and the words of it, as resting upon the authority of God; unless the text be an interpolation, or the translation be not a correct representation of the original? Second. Is not this tenor of truth or analogy of faith, a matured opinion, we, or others, have formed of what, to be consistent as we think, must compose the parts of God's revealed truth? If so, and we further consider that our knowledge is so imperfect as to lead Paul to say, "If any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing, yet as he ought to know," (I Cor. 8:2,) would it not much better consist with that humility which becometh us, to admit the truth of what each portion of Scripture declares in reference to the subject spoken of, and according to its plain import, than to implicate the Holy Ghost with saying what is not so, that our views of the tenor of truth may stand?

To return to our subject, we will now notice how this tenor of truth works in reference to those texts. First. In reference to Rev.3:14, "The beginning of the creation of God." They quote the text, and without attempting to show that there is any mistake in the reading, or that the word beginning does not properly mean beginning, but beginner, they try to show that the text does not mean what it says. Their modus operandi it is not necessary for me to notice. They next come to Col.

1:15, "The First-born of every creature." By quoting the following verses, in which in connection with the 15th verse, Paul is giving such a representation of the Son of God and Redeemer as to show that in his complex person, He in all things has the pre-eminence. But they would thereby make the impression that he is not the first-born of every creature, and of course that in this particular he has not the pre-eminence over his brethren, and is not like them, though verse 18 says, "That in all things he might have the pre-eminence," and Heb.2:17, reads, "In all things it behooved him to be made like his brethren," in that they are born of God, and he not according to these brethren, for if born of God he has a derived existence, and therein is a creature in distinction from the self-existent Godhead. The same course of reasoning would also prove that he is not the First-born from the dead. For if his being God forbids the idea of his having a created existence in personal union with his Godhead, he never could have been in the state of the dead, to be born from it. They ask in reference to the declaration, "Who is the image of the invisible God," former part of verse 15, "Can a creature be the image of the invisible God?" It seems Adam was created in the image of God, (Gen.1:27,) and so is the new man renewed after the image of him that created him. (Col.3:10.) But wishing to answer them more fully on this point, I will ask them, if according to their views the Son as such does not exist as God, and only as God? If so, is he not the invisible God equally with the Father? And third; Can the invisible God be an image of the invisible God? I say, no; for an image, according to the general and natural import of the word, means a visible representation former of some person or idea; as the image of liberty, &c. I do not believe that the self-existence, as such, of God was ever represented in an image, but all the attributes of God I believe are expressly represented in and through the Son or Christ. And I know not that God has ever been represented or declared to men, but by Christ. John 1:18. If God is declared in the works of creation, all things were created by the Son, (Col.1:16,) but then God "made the worlds by him," as Solomon made all the vessels for the temple through Hiram. I Kings 7:14-48. See Heb.1:1-2. So "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." II Cor.5:18,19. Thus we see that God acts through Christ or the Son as an agent, and therefore as the Son, Christ must have an existence distinct from the invisible God, though personally one with him. From the notice we have taken of the attempts of these brethren to deny the correctness of the declarations of these several texts, we see the tendency of their attempts to square the Scriptures according to their views of the tenor of truth. And it is evident that the dispute about these texts, is no longer between me and them, but between them and the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost says that Christ, is the beginning of the creation of God, and the First-born of every creature, and that his people were created in him, &c.; they, in effect, say it is not so. Hundreds of other texts might be named on which the same dispute would arise; but I will forbear.

I now come to the wrong representations these brethren have given of the views advanced by me and others, on this subject. When I first read their piece I felt so sensibly the injustice of their representations, that I was ready to pronounce the whole a base slander and there leave it. But on a little reflection I concluded that these brethren did not design to slander us; that they honestly, though strangely, had misconstructed our views. One wrong representation is found in this sentence and connection, "Now the fancied system of our dear brethren, that this eternal new creation has nothing to do with the soul or body; the soul is not prepared for eternal life by its implantation nor any influence at all to control any of the disordered passions of nature," &c. This contains such a sweeping charge that I hardly know how to get at all its points, without taking it word by word. But let us examine the two, and see which has the advantage in these particulars, the life with which they fancy they have been quickened, or the life with which we fancy we have been quickened; though indeed, I did hope, this being quickened was something more than fancy, both in them and us, as also the system of doctrine taught in the Scriptures. They believe that the Holy Ghost is the quickening power, but that he does not create little gods in them; of course it is not a communication of himself, so as to become their life, and that he does not purify the Adamic nature in whole or in part, of course neither soul nor body is changed; but he implants new spiritual life in the soul; and this spiritual life is entirely distinct from their natural life, &c. This life then must be a creature, a distinct existence, created in them by the Holy Ghost. Is it any better to be created in them, than to have been created in Christ Jesus?

As the quickening of each individual must be a distinct putting forth of the power of the Holy Ghost, the life in each must be a distinct creature, having no relation to one another, other than of being alike the creatures of the Holy Ghost; and they are creatures of time too. Hence, there is no being the seed of Christ, no actual relation to him as a head, no being of his bones and his flesh in their life. If these brethren can make any thing different out of the description they have given, I cannot. No wonder they want a bond of union to form a body of Christ out of these separately existing branches. There is no analogy to such a body as this in any kind of body God has ever formed. Christ says, "I am the vine, ye are the branches," but they would have his body made up as they make brush brooms to sweep their yards.

The life with which we believe the soul is quickened is Christ – Christ in you the hope of glory. Col.1:27 & 3:3,4. Christ who is the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; begotten or created in the Word, and his people in him, and thus ever existing in personal union with the Godhead, both from eternity, and as he is manifested in the new birth in the believer, as he says, "As thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Again, "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." John 17:21,23. Thus Christ our life existed as the Head and Husband of his church, before the heavens were planted, or the foundations of the earth laid, in the secret place of the Most High, in the shadow of God's hand, and as one with God, and therefore as God whilst he is the Son of God. Hence when persons are born again, born of the Quickening Spirit, they are manifested as members of Christ's body, as his seed, and through him - the only begotten of the Father, they are born of God, and are the sons of God. Now if your life dwelling in the soul as a detached lonely creature, can prepare the soul for heaven and exercise an influence over the person, &c., one would think that Christ in the soul and God in Christ, would be quite as likely to produce these effects. You say the soul is not prepared for eternal life by its implantation. Why, it is eternal life in the soul, (John 3:36, 17:2-4 & I John 5:12,) not a creature of time as you describe, but a life existing from eternity in union with God, and existing to eternity with him. You say the eternal new creation, meaning by this epithet the Christ of God, as the Christ, has nothing to do with the souls and bodies of men. Strange he has not, with his people, when they are his sheep that shall never perish, the gift of his Father, and he is their life, their Redeemer, their salvation and their sanctification. But perhaps you have reference in the remarks above noticed to my having spoken of the new man in the believer, as a dependent infant, that cannot bring forth its fruits of love, faith, patience, &c., only as the Comforter, the Holy Ghost brings them into exercise. If your life gives you an independency in these things, and strength to love and to exercise faith, patience, &c., at your own pleasure, I have only to say, (I speak in this only for myself,) your experience and mine in this differ significantly. To will and desire is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not, only as an influence independent of me, may graciously bring these fruits into exercise, in a measure, and that but momentarily. But perhaps you meant by this charge, to imply that our belief is not as productive of good works in us, as is yours, in you. If so, whilst I positively deny the correctness of the charge, as it relates to the brethren implicated with me, for myself, I am dumb, if a child, I am the vilest, and am still the chief of sinners. Lord save, or I perish, is my cry.

Another wrong representation of my views, and the views of others, is found in their having throughout their communication, spoken of our views, as though we held that Christ as the Head of his church existed personally distinct from God and therefore distinctly as a creature. Where as we have never admitted that as a person he is a creature, but on the contrary, whilst we say that as man he was a creature, and that as Son, or as the Head of his church, or as Mediator, and Christ he is a creature; that is, that the existence in him which constituted him these, was not self-existent, but was brought into existence of God, yet that he took both of these existences into union with himself as God, the latter in eternity, the former in time, thus existing as God, as the Son of God, and the son of man, in one complex person. He thus exists as a distinct person, having distinct personal qualities from the Father and the Holy Ghost, but one with them in the Godhead, thus constituting him a fit and adequate person to be the one Mediator between the one God, and men. And thus in his complex person, whilst he is one with the church, he is one with the Father, whilst he is the husband of the church, he is her Maker and Lord; and whilst he is the elder brother of his people and joint heir with them, he is their God, and the alone proper and delightful object of their worship. This is the ground I occupy and have occupied, how far the brethren implicated with me, agree with me in all these points is not for me to say. When it is recollected that in the close of the communication to which these brethren have replied, I remarked among other things, in substance, that his being created as the Head of his church no more conflicted with his essential Godhead as God; than his being made flesh did, I think these brethren on reflection will acknowledge they were not warranted from the premises, not from former communications, to give the representation they did of my views, and therefore that the charge is unjust. I am willing to meet these brethren in argument in reference to the proper grounds we each occupy, and if they from the Scriptures can show that they are right, and I wrong, so be it; but I do not like this fending off these blows aimed at an effigy of their own, and christened with my name.

One more remark of theirs I will notice; they say in a parenthesis in reference to our having advocated the doctrine of the church's having been created in Christ as her Head, &c. "Which has caused so much unnecessary talk and writing." Why brethren, if you could be divested of your notions, of making your views of the tenor of truth a standard by which to determine the meaning of Scripture, so as to receive as truth just what the Scriptures declare as such; and could give up the idea of a begotten person in the Godhead, which amounts to a begotten God, shape it as you may, and look at the Son of God, self-existent as God, but begotten as the life and head of his people, and they in him, you would see such glory and majesty in the undivided Godhead, such a fullness and excellency in Christ as the Head of his church, and as the one Mediator; such glory and stability in the union of Christ and his church, as having commenced in eternity and not subject to the changes which attend time things; such security in the believers life being hid with Christ in God, and such harmony, beauty and fitness in the whole scripture testimony, that you would feel, if you were to hold your peace from declaring these things, as though stones would immediately cry out.

It would be useless to ask to be excused for the length of this communication, but I will ask the brethren to forgive me, and to forgive anything which may appear harsh or incorrect.

S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., July 18, 1849.

REPLY TO BRETHREN: THE NEW BIRTH. PART I

BROTHER BEEBE: - I wish to connect these brethren together in a reply, because in some instances an answer to one, is a reply to another.

1.BROTHER CLARK on I Cor.15:45 – Brother Cark commences with some remarks relative to the words, was made, being a supply, to which I should have no objection, were it not for his saying, "These supplied words are very convenient things, as they can be cashiered or retained, as it suits the fancy or according to the use we wish to make of the passage," thus insinuating that I made such use of these words without due regard to the sense of the text. He seems however not to have found any iniquity in me in the cases referred to, until he had found me using such words to wrest the meaning of the Scriptures, he might have spared himself the trouble, and me the pain, of such an unkind insinuation.

Brother Clark's first argument on the text is to sustain him in denying the correctness of my former assertion, that to be made is equivalent to being created. I admit what he takes considerable trouble to prove; namely, that the Greek word here used is of very general import, but one of its primary meanings is, to be made. I also admit that to create in its strict sense differs from to make; thus, man can make, but not create. Still these words are frequently used in the Scriptures as of the same import. In Gen.1:26, it reads, "Let us make man," and in verse 27, "So God created man." The same idea is intended to be conveyed in both verses. In verse 31, made is used as meaning the same as created. See also Gen.5:1 & 2. What I said was, "To be made is equivalent to being created." Is it not so? Has brother Clark proved anything else by his many references to the use of the Greek word? Is not the thing made the production of him that made it, and therefore the creature in the common acceptation of the word? Is the thing that is created anything more? But let us come to the text itself. Brother Clark admits that the words, was made, in the latter part of the text is a supply; I am glad he does; for otherwise we might have had some more criticism to show they did not mean the same, as do the same words in the former part. As it is, he must admit that the words, quickening spirit, stand in the same grammatical construction with the one verb, was made, as do the words - living soul. Hence the was made has the same bearing on the one as on the other. He also admits the former part is a quotation from Gen.2:7, which reads, "And man became a living soul." The Hebrew word here used is of the same general import as the Greek word used by the Apostle, and like it having for one of its primary meanings, to make, and to be made. The question is, was Adam's becoming a living soul the result of his own will, was he self- existent as such? Or was it the result of God's breathing into his nostrils the breath of life? If the latter is the case, as I presume all will admit, then Adam in becoming a living soul was as much the creature of God as in being formed of the dust of the ground; and the expression, was made, is correct in the text I Cor.15:45. And as both parts of the text are in the same grammatical construction; that is, the Apostle makes exactly the same affirmation concerning the last Adam's being a quickening spirit, as he does concerning the first's being a living soul, the legitimate conclusion is that the last Adam was made a quickening spirit, and as such is as much the production or creature of God, as was the former in being a living soul. And brother Clark's many references to show the various uses of the Greek word amount to nothing.

Brother Clark uses a more plausible argument against the conclusion I have before drawn from this text, in assuming that it only has reference to the resurrection. But his position, "That if therefore it means a creature, Christ was not created until after Adam was, because he is declared to be the second Adam," will not stand. In the 47th verse, where the Apostle is not speaking of their being made, but of their distinct natures, he calls the earthy man the first man, and the Lord from heaven, the second man; he might therefore just as well conclude that from the terms first and second in this verse, that the earthy man existed before the Lord from heaven did, as to infer from the other text that Adam was made first. Paul is not here saying when they were made, but what they were made; and he uses the terms, first and last, and first and second, to designate them one from the other, having reference by these terms, not to the commencement of their existence, but to their manifestations in the world.

Neither will his other position, that the Apostle in this and the following verses had reference only to the resurrection, stand any better; for in that case Adam in being made a living soul would be, and only be the contrast to Christ as the resurrection. But not so, for the Apostle had before shown in verse 21 & 22 wherein Adam was the contrast to Christ as the resurrection, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Here then is the contrast in reference to the resurrection, death is the counterpart to it. Paul having pursued the subject of the resurrection on to verse 44, where making the assertion that, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," he proceeds in verse 45-49 to show whence these different bodies come; namely, "from two distinct Adams or Heads, and draws the contrast between them as such, showing their different natures, the one made a living soul, the other a quickening spirit; the one natural, the other spiritual; the one, of the earth earthy, the other, the Lord from heaven. He then shows that the distinguishing characteristics of this second Head or Adam are to be carried out even to the bodies of his posterity in the resurrection. This appears to me as the only consistent view of this passage. So that I think brother Clark will have to let my former inference from it still stand, unless he can bring something more weighty against it.

Brother Clark, on this text has passed over the idea of being made a quickening spirit, but I will notice it, and notice it in connection with some remarks of his in his preceding communication on this subject. He said, "To quicken is to give life to the dead and this is conceded to be equivalent to regeneration or the new birth." It may be so conceded by many, and I may have so conceded, but I cannot now. I conclude that to quicken is to restore life to the dead, and in some instances that it means a reviving of a person who is in a lifeless or stupid state. I understand the word to be used in this last sense in Psal.80:18 & 119:25, and other verses. In the other sense to quicken the dead, that it is a restoring to life to that which has died is evident from Paul's declaration, speaking in reference to the resurrection, he says, I Cor.

15:36, "Thou fool; that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die." Hence according to Paul, a quickening implies a previous dying. Again, I admit that there is a quickening connected with regeneration, and the new birth, but it is as distinct from regeneration, as sowing the seed is from its vegetating. I think there is an analogy between all natural seeds; I will therefore say the sower sows the seed, but he does not quicken it, that is another process; so in a natural birth, and of course so in regeneration. Of all the texts which brother Clark quotes on this subject, there are but three or four which I supposed anybody thought had reference to regeneration. John 6:63 is considered as having that reference; but this I have disputed and still do, on what ground is known. Eph.2:1 & 5, and Col.2:13, have been explained as referring to regeneration. But in Ephesians there is a raising connected with the quickening, just as in John 5:21, and both in Ephesians and Colossians they are said to be quickened together with him, that is Christ. It is therefore something in which Christ participated with his people and they with him. Will brethren persist in an opinion which so fully involves the idea, that Christ participates with his people in regeneration. As they were quickened together with him, this must imply that they were quickened when he was quickened. Peter tells us when that was, when he says, "For Christ was once offered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit." I Pet.3:18. In being offered the just for the unjust, were not the unjust offered with him, and did he in being offered and put to death in the flesh leave them in the grave; or were they not quickened together with him, and raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus? Not earthly places, not again under the Sinai covenant, but in heavenly places, under the provisions and protection of the heavenly covenant which would secure their being preserved and called, as the other could not. Our Lord uses the same figure of seed sown, in reference to his own death and resurrection, as above quoted from I Cor.15:36. He says, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12:24. Here a quickening is evidently implied. When a corn of wheat first vegetates or is quickened and sprouts, is there not in the sprout the germ of all the fruit it will afterwards mature? So Christ in being quickened and raised, brought up with him under the requisitions of the law, all the fruit or people represented by him. Well therefore does the Apostle say in reference to this, quickened together with him and raised up together, &c. "That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Jesus Christ." Eph.2:7. That is, the all of the *us*being quickened and raised up together with Christ from under the demands of the law, God might in every after age be showing his grace and kindness toward us as born into the world in calling us to the knowledge of salvation, &c. Thus we see there is a harmony and beauty in thus applying these texts in Ephesians and Colossians which cannot be in the other application.

Something more in reference to this quickening spirit as illustrated in Christ and in the experience of the believer, for the subject of grace has a fellowship in experience, as well as in fact, in the death and quickening of Jesus Christ. Peter says of Christ, "being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit;" but not quickened until after he was put to death, though he evidently had the spirit before, thus showing as in grain sown, death must precede the guickening, and that as in grain there must be a quickening principle not involved in the death. I have before spoken of the quickening as commencing with the first influence of the implanted spirit in regeneration upon the soul, but I was wrong, as brother Thompson says, death must first come before quickening, as illustrated by the seed sown and illustrated in Christ Jesus. Now we see how the quickening spirit worked in Christ, for it is to that, which I understand Peter to refer. This spirit, this life constituted him the actual Head of his people, as they were in this life in him. Hence as the Head and Husband of the church, he was involved in the demands of the law against them and must therefore come under the law to meet those demands. Now it was just so far as he was made under the law, and no further, that he died and that was as made flesh or man, (for his soul participated in the sufferings.) Now however perfect were his sufferings, if Christ had only existed in this fleshly relation to his people, and therefore as under the law, I do not know that there could have been any security of his release from death, for the law knows nothing about release. But standing in this spiritual relation to them and under a covenant ordered in all things and sure, established before the law came into existence, which while it involved him in the demands of the law, secured his not being left alone and that his soul should not be left in hell, nor be suffered as the Holy One to see corruption, this could secure his release. Hence Peter said, "It was not possible he should be holden of it;" that is, death.

Acts 2:24-28. Now Peter does not ground this impossibility upon the Godhead of Christ, but upon those promises through David made to him. I hope brethren will not hereby infer that I deny his Godhead. If his being God would admit of his being made under the law, it would, I should think, admit of his being made the Head of his people, and as such under covenant and promise. Hence we find promises made to him. See Psalms 89, and Isaiah 42. These same things were typified by the promises to Abraham and the Sinai law. See Gal.3:16-18. Thus this life was in Christ a quickening spirit. So in his people. In its first implantation it brings them experimentally under the law. This life being the light of men, it enlightens the soul to see and know the law as spiritual, and thereby to know sin. Hence by it he is slain. Now the soul being in this situation, could reason ever quicken itself, as in the case of grain sown? No, because reason of itself never could comprehend or receive the idea of acceptance with God in any other way than by the law. For God has "hid these things from the wise and prudent," Matt.11:25; and, "the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God

... neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." I Cor.2:14. This then establishes this point. Here then this life is manifested as a quickening spirit; it can and does by faith hear the voice of the Son of God, and receive the tidings of salvation through Christ, and thus quickens the soul to newness of hope of acceptance with God. Paul says of the seed sown, "Thou sowest not that body which shall be, &c." I Cor.15:37. So Christ in dying died as a Servant under the law, but in being quickened, he arose as the Son of God and above the law. See Rom.1:4. So the believer is not quickened to the legal life in which he died, but is quickened and raised to a life of justification, to be no more a servant, but a son, and an heir of God. Gal.4:7. Of all seeds in the vegetable kingdom, I know of but one that does not in its sprouting leave the old body dead in the ground. The bean is an exception, in this the sprout brings the old grain up with it on its top. This completes the figure found in the vegetable world of spiritual things. Christ's soul and body were quickened, his soul not left in hell, nor his body to see corruption. So in experience, in the quickening, the whole person is brought forth with the new life in the new birth, into a state of liberty; and the person now exists as standing in a new relation to God as his Father through Christ Jesus; and to the saints as brethren.

The balance of brother Clark's communication, I will leave to stand with the 'thousand and one things' which have been spoken and written for an effect. He must know, that in taking my positions in their connection, he can draw from them no such idea as he conveys by the expression, a created Son of God. Though by taking detached positions and expressions he might do it, and lead others to do it; just as by taking detached texts I might represent Christ as altogether inferior to the Father. If the scriptures can thus be distorted, no wonder my feeble writings can. I speak thus with plainness because I think the occasion justifies it. The terms creature, created and made are used in the Scriptures in relation to Christ; and I dare not alter their plain meaning and application to please brother Clark or any other brother.

S.TROTT.

P.S. – Brother Beebe, after having mailed my letter, containing the reply to brother Clark, &c., I recollected that I had left myself liable to be charged, from it, with representing the quickening spirit as raising Christ from the dead, &c., that is, according to the manner in which my communications have of late, been construed, and I see no more convenient way to remedy it than to send you this postscript to be inserted with the reply. Brother Clark it seems, does not understand that my representing wherein both yourself and he had misapprehended my intended meaning concerning the text, "It is the spirit that quickeneth," though my carelessness, implied, of course, an intimation that he had misrepresented my views. Hence, his twice repeated declaration that I had not charged him with misrepresenting my views. I am not now disposed so to charge him, as it would imply a willful misconstruction, but as a fair specimen of the manner in which he has throughout represented my views, I would request of brethren and of him to turn to the 2nd number, present volume of the SIGNS, and read what I say, concerning God's regenerating persons; and then notice his declaration in his letter in number 9, same volume, in which he says of me, that "He says he knows of no authority in the scriptures to believe that it is the province of the Holy Ghost or God to quicken or first regenerate dead sinners?" Those who do thus read the two passages will I think be satisfied, that let me be guarded as I may in expression, I may be wrongly represented. Still I wish to use due precaution. My mind is quite defective, more so than it once was, so that when I have one subject or point anywise intensely in view, I am apt to lose sight too much of other circumstances connected with it. Thus in the above reply to brother Clark, in endeavoring to illustrate how that Christ as the life of his people was the quickening spirit, even in his own case, in that the promise, as that "his soul should not be left in hell, &c.," were made to him as the Head of this life, rather than to his manhood, which was made under the law, and the law strictly knows neither promises or release, I omitted distinctly to say, that he was raised by the power of God in conformity with those promises made to him, though it was implied in referring to them. But to prevent misapprehension, I now say, that Christ was raised from the dead by the power of God; and not only that, but that it was "according to the exceeding greatness of his power," as Paul speaks, Eph.1:19 & 20. So in speaking of regeneration, as a distinct operation from the guickening of the soul, having so recently declared my belief, that it was God who regenerates, I omitted distinctly to repeat it in this case, I therefore now say as then, that it is God who regenerates and none other, though I still doubt the authority for confining the work of regeneration to the Holy Ghost distinctively from the Father and the Word. Again, in speaking of the soul's being guickened from its death and condemnation under the law, to a state of justification, &c., by faith as an exercise of Christ in us, or of the life which he is, and also of the necessity of a revelation being made to this faith of Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, I may have omitted to say by whom this revelation is made. I therefore now say that the idea of a revelation is that it is a direct communication from God, and further that I understand it to be peculiarly the province of the Holy Ghost, to make this first revelation of Christ to faith and all after revelations made to it of God's truth, as being the Comforter and Teacher, and he who shall take of the things of Christ and show them unto his people.

There is one thing more, though it is swelling this postscript unreasonably, I wish to notice. In my remarks on brother Clark's chapter, I used this expression, "Let them receive in heart this third existence of our Lord, &c." When I first saw it as published I was convinced that many brethren would understand me as having reference to an experimental receiving of this truth by faith. As that was not at all my meaning, (I was not speaking of experience, but of theory,) I determined I would embrace the first opportunity to correct it. But in brother Clark's answer it was not noticed in that way, and at the same time there appeared such a determination on his part to force a split, I thought I would let him have what capital he could make from it. But on second thought I have concluded to explain and say that I had no disposition to call in question the genuineness of their faith in Christ; but at the same time I cannot comprehend how in theory they can heartily and truly, (and this is what I meant by the expression in heart,) believe two such opposite positions, as that Christ as God is absolutely self existent, and yet in reference to the same identical existence as God he is the begotten Son of God. Brother Clark says in his last letter, that he was satisfied there would be too many scriptures. Quite too many; they prove that Jesus is God, is the Son of God, and is man. Just my position. Can he now prove that three are only two?

S.T. April 21, 1850.

REPLY TO BRETHREN: THE NEW BIRTH.

PART II

2. BROTHER WILLIAMS, ON I PETER 1:23 - Brother

Williams says, "Let the brethren read that letter again, (the Salem Circular,) and they will find many passages of scripture quoted there to prove the doctrine," &c., namely; that in regeneration the soul is born again and becomes a new creature. At his suggestion I have read it over again, and I do assure brother Williams that whilst I find several texts quoted which represent the soul as affected in the work of regeneration, I have not found one quoted which declare or imply that the soul distinctly from the person is that which is born again. I however found that they make convert, as well as resurrect and quicken to mean the same thing with regenerate. This I do not like to find among us. Ever since my first acquaintance with the Baptists, I have found this difference between the Old Baptists and the popular religionists of every name. The latter were zealous advocates for conversion, and evidently put it in the place of regeneration. But the Old Baptists contended that conversion was not enough; that it would never constitute one a child of God; that they must be born again. This is then an old landmark, and I believe a scriptural one, I therefore dislike to see it removed by blending the two together, lest too many get in among us, who under pretence of preaching Old School Baptist doctrine, know and preach in effect nothing but conversion. I think I need to bring but one proof to convince brother Williams that regeneration and conversion are materially distinct. He I trust will readily admit that the law cannot regenerate or produce the new birth, yet David says, "The law of the Lord

is perfect converting the soul." Psa.19:7. If the law cannot regenerate and yet does convert the soul, it is evident that conversion and regeneration are distinct things. How the law does convert the souls of persons regenerated, from their self-righteousness and all their old notions of acceptance with God, is manifest in the believer. Brother Williams appears to discover some contradiction between my remarks relative to brother Thompson's letter and something I had said before.

Conversion and regeneration I hold to be two things, besides he does not notice the import of my expression, born over again instead of born again. And as I discover from the 9th number, that brother Meredith also has misunderstood me on that point, I will try to explain. I have never denied, or at least never intended to deny that the soul was born again in common with the person. But this is the point, I have understood brother Williams and others to contend, that the soul alone was included in the new birth; and this birth, I have understood them to represent by the use of other expressions, to be a passing of the soul through a second birth, without any distinct seed from which the birth proceeds, and that this birth is a change of the soul from a natural soul to a spiritual existence; hence that it is rather a new formation of the soul than a birth. As I have repeatedly given this in substance as my understanding of their views, and as brother Williams has never given any explanation of his views as being different, I presume I am correct. It is this idea that I have opposed, as not being conformable to the Scripture testimony on the point, and as involving other difficulties; and in designating it I have used various expressions, among others I have used the one above referred to, born over again, and this, the soul being born again distinctly from the person. On the other hand, I have contended that the whole person was embraced in the new birth, and of course included the soul. Brother Williams in one case so understands me and argues against the idea of the body's being included. In another instance he ascribes to me the idea that the quickening spirit only is included in the birth. Brother Williams expresses himself unable to comprehend my meaning. It is probable this may arise in a considerable degree from the imperfect manner in which I have expressed myself. I discover an expression in a quotation he has made from me, which of itself, without regard to the connection, might imply what he ascribes to me. I said, "The quickening spirit is the subject of his second birth." But as a catching of words is so much the order of the day, to be guarded, I should have said, "The quickening spirit is the seed from which his second birth proceeds." I will now try to explain my views on this subject, in contrast with brother Williams. In doing it I will take the text he has given me - I Pet.1:22 & 23. He could not have given me a better one for the subject; though I was surprised at his quoting it in support of his views. In reference to verse 22, "Seeing ye have purified your souls," &c. I cannot see how he would apply it. He certainly cannot consider this purifying the same as being born again; for he will not admit, I think, that persons regenerate themselves; but Peter says,

"Seeing ye have purified your souls." Again, as he holds that the soul in being born again is changed from a natural to a spiritual soul, and therefore is "created in righteousness and true holiness," I cannot conceive how it could need any further purifying by the person or be the subject of it. But according to my experience and corresponding views that it remains a natural soul, it needed after its conversion by the law, and after the new birth, much purifying in obeying the gospel truth, unto unfeigned love of the brethren; and still needs more of the same. In coming to the 23rd verse, brother Beebe and others must bear with me if I should use some expressions a little too undisguised, the shape the discussion has assumed compels me. Brother Williams quotes our Lord's declaration to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again," John 3:7, and adds, "I believe he meant what he said." This I am glad to hear, it is the point to which I do wish to see us all come, to believe that the scriptures mean just what they say, and be satisfied; not when they say brick to understand them to mean mortar, like the builders of Babel; not when they speak of a birth to understand them to mean conversion or a quickening, or a resurrection only. All these words were at the command of the Holy Ghost, and when he designed to express the distinctive idea conveyed by either of them, he could and I believe did direct to the use of it; or its equivalent in the original. Now what are the distinctive ideas of a birth? Is it not that a child is brought into a state of existence and into new relations? And is there not necessarily involved in this, the idea that this child had a father by whom it was generated, or that a seed was deposited in its proper receptacle, that it was then quickened; and that this quickened child is brought forth into distinct existence, &c.? Our Lord in explaining this subject to Nicodemus, says, verse 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit." Does he not here clearly convey the idea that there is a correspondency between the two births; that they are both distinctively births; that the one being of fleshly seed, is flesh; the other being of the spiritual seed is spirit? Having given this explanation, he in verse 7, makes the declaration, "Ye must be born again," and that with a caution to marvel not at it. He does not say, Your souls must be born again; but, Ye must be born again, &c. Does not, my brethren, the word again in this connection, convey the idea that the same persons who have been born of the flesh, must experience a corresponding birth of the spirit? This is what I believe on the point.

Now to come to the text, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, &c." Here I think it evident that Peter is following out the ideas advanced by his Lord as above noticed. Here are the two distinct seeds called corruptible and incorruptible, which our Lord spoke of as flesh and spirit. The flesh, I presume no brother will dispute, is the corruptible seed, as descending from Adam a corruptible head. Is not the spirit then the incorruptible seed? And must it not have an incorruptible head also, or whence the comparison we have noticed? Is not Christ of whom Adam was a figure, and who is spoken of as having a seed and who is the life and the truth, this Head?

How will brother Williams' idea that the new birth consists in a change of the soul correspond with this text? If it is simply a change of the soul, then there is of course, as in Peter's birth, no seed about it. If brother Williams contends that the old soul is the seed from whence the new creature is formed, then as the old soul was corruptible, it could not be an incorruptible seed. So that I cannot conceive how he can make this text harmonize with the views he has advanced, and allow the text to mean what it says. On the other hand, just such an actual and distinct birth, as I believe is brought to view by our Lord, and here by Peter, is what I have been contending for; and that the incorruptible seed from whence this distinct birth proceeds is not Adam in any shape or form you can place him, by conversions and changes, but that it is Christ the quickening spirit. And hence that the new birth is a being born in the image of Christ, as the Son of God, in a state of freedom from the law, and in the relation of sons and heirs of God, &c. But as I have endeavored to illustrate in my reply to brother Clark on the subject of quickening, there is an important distinction between this, and a natural birth, though in each case, the birth partakes of the nature and image of the head of its distinct seed, yet in this case as the quickening is not a quickening of the seed, that being life and a quickening spirit, but of the soul and person, so the birth is a birth of the soul, and whole person, with the spirit of Christ or the life in it, as illustrated in the resurrection of Christ. If only the soul and not the whole person was the subject of this birth, I know not why gospel ordinances were instituted in which the body participates. Nor should I have reason to believe that the body is redeemed, if not a sharer in the new birth, for that which was redeemed was to receive the adoption of sons. Gal.4:4-7. Again, I cannot conceive that the soul could be changed of itself from its nature as a rational soul, and remain a human soul. But by this new birth, from a distinct seed, or in other words the soul having a distinct and heavenly principle of life imparted to it has two existences – a natural and spiritual; and the person exists as the seed of Adam, and the seed of Christ in one person, being subject to the infirmities of the former, but not to the curse, in consequence of the redemption by the latter. Hence he is subject both to earthly and heavenly influences, to earthly and heavenly desires, &c. Once more, as the experience of regeneration and the new birth is not bodily exercise, but an exercise of the understanding or mind, the soul is that which is manifestly affected and exercised by it. Hence the scriptures speak of soul exercises in reference to true religion. I hope brother Williams will now be able to comprehend my views on this subject, though still imperfectly expressed.

One point more in reference to his letter. He speaks of my manifesting a desire to have a little more information, &c. I did; and I proposed certain difficulties that to me appear in the way of his views being correct which I wished him to explain, or in case he found he could not, I hoped he would review the correctness of his positions. But from the manner in which he passed by them, and from the general tone of his last letter, I judge he felt a little cross on the subject. Not that he has said anything directly offensive. For myself, I feel bound if a brother brings to my notice any difficulties apparently involved in views I had advanced to give an explanation, or if I could not, to abandon such views, and to give any other reasonable explanation asked, and I think I have generally manifested a willingness to do it. Therefore seeing these difficulties involved in the position of the Salem

Circular, I did not think of giving offence in proposing them to brother Williams to solve, seeing he had endorsed them. In reference to experience in relation to temptations, &c., I am conscious of soul temptations, and soul sins, and I often doubt the genuineness of my experience on account thereof. I therefore candidly wished to know whether his experience was different, corresponding with his views of the soul being changed, and whether he actually was not conscious of any soul sin or temptation. He says he thinks he knows what sore temptations mean, but does not hint whether his soul has any participation in them, so that I am as much in the dark on the subject as before.

3. BROTHER G.M. THOMPSON, SIGNS: NUMBER 8 - I hope brother Thompson will not be offended at my giving him the last and least share of my reply. I have in my replies to brethren Clark and Williams anticipated much that would have been otherwise due to his communication, to which I beg leave to refer him. Brother Thompson complains of not being able to comprehend my views on the subject of quickening, regeneration, &c. I am extremely sorry that I am not able to make myself more intelligible to him. Whilst I am willing to ascribe much of this defect to my own awkwardness of expression, I think in part that it is ascribable to him, in that he appears not to have caught the first and leading idea for which I contend and without this the balance is thrown into confusion. How I shall make the thing any more plain to him I know not. For of the details of the work of regeneration and of the quickening of the soul, &c., I am as ignorant as I am how the seed that is cast in the ground dies, is quickened, sprouts, &c. I believe these things are so, because they are so revealed in the Scriptures.

Cannot brother Thompson comprehend what it is to be born of the flesh? That it is the production of a distinct natural person, a child, according to the laws of nature. If so, may there not be such a thing as this same person's being born again, born of the spirit, or of a distinct and spiritual seed? May not this new birth be a production in his soul of a spiritual existence as distinct, in its nature, power, and faculties from his natural existence, as are the two seeds, one from the other from whence the two births proceed, and yet it be the same person, having these two natures, the one earthly and capable of attending to earthly things, the other spiritual and capable of knowing and enjoying spiritual things; he having thus both Adam and Christ in him? If brother Thompson can comprehend such an idea, then he may apprehend what I mean. But if he cannot, I of course shall not be able to make myself understood. However for a further illustration of my views of the new birth, and of its effect on the soul, I refer him to what I have said above in reply to brother Williams, and for my views concerning the guickening of the soul, and person, I refer him to my reply to brother Clark. Brother Thompson asks, "If the soul is converted from a state of darkness and enmity to God and his truth, is not its condition changed, or am I to understand brother Trott as conveying the idea that conversion produces no change?" I answer that conversion does not imply a change of nature; but it produces a change of condition, according to the nature of the conversion. If a drunken man is converted to a sober man there is a change in his condition, but he may remain a natural man. If a person is converted from an erroneous idea to the truth, or from one erroneous idea to another, there is a change in the condition of his mind. So when the soul is converted from its darkness and converted by the law, &c., there is a great change in its condition. He says speaking of the soul, "If it bears precisely the same relation to the body that it did before, wherein consists its conversion?" Does not the sober man bear precisely the same relation to his wife, that he did when he was a drunkard, and yet you can see wherein there is a conversion. Again, brother Thompson says, "If the soul is destitute of faith, &c." I am not disposed to say that the soul of a believer is destitute of faith, because it possesses it, as the existence of spiritual life. But I have no more idea that the soul of its own proper powers can exercise gospel faith, than I have that a natural man can enjoy heaven. The soul is the rational part of man, and it is not the province of rationality to receive the things of the spirit. Faith is a fruit of the spirit. It is not the Adam in us that believes with gospel faith, but the Christ. Hence, faith is called the faith of the Son of God, and the faith of Jesus Christ. Gal.2:20 & 3:22.

Brother Thompson seems to have difficulty in comprehending how the soul can receive its knowledge of natural things by the senses of the body, and its knowledge of spiritual things by the faith of the new man or the Christ in us. Faith in the Scriptures is frequently described by the same terms as denote the senses of the body, as the eyes of your understanding, ears to hear, &c., thus showing that to the new man it stands in the place of the senses to the old. I should suppose that brother Thompson would discover this difference between faith and rationality in his every day's experience. Through faith he understands that the worlds were framed by the word of God. (Heb.11:3) How? From revelation, which his faith receives. Do geologists with all their researches understand this? No, they run into skepticism. By faith he knows that the salvation of sinners is wholly in and by Christ Jesus. How? From the revelation of Christ to his faith. Supposing that brother Thompson was placed on a jury in a murder case wherein there was a train of circumstantial evidences from which to make up the verdict; would he sit there expecting a revelation made to his faith whether the man was guilty or not, by which he might understand the proper verdict? No, he would exercise his senses and rationality just as any natural rational man, in attending to the testimony and in comparing and weighing it, &c., that he might make up a proper opinion. Again. He knows that the spring has opened. How? By a revelation to his faith? No; by discovering the signs of its opening in the vegetating of the trees, &c. Brother Thompson then arrives at the knowledge of natural things as a natural, rational man, and he understands spiritual things as a spiritual man, by faith. Must he not then exist both as a natural man and as a spiritual man? Let brother Thompson reconcile the above facts, if he can, with the idea that the soul in regeneration is changed from a natural, and therefore from a rational soul, to a spiritual one.

If brethren Clark, Williams & Thompson do not comprehend what are my views on these points, I fear I shall never be able to convey my ideas intelligibly to them. But I hope they will; and whether they and others reject me and my sentiments or not, I do beg that they will not so misrepresent me and my views as brother Clark still persists in doing, even in his letter in the 9th number. If it is not asking too much I would request brethren, that before they make up their minds to read the two communications together.

I remain yours, perplexed, but not in despair, cast down, but not destroyed; and I sometimes feel as though I might almost add, persecuted, but not forsaken.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., April 26, 1850.

THE RESURRECTION. Reply To Elder Goldsmith On The Resurrection.

BROTHER BEEBE: - Elder Goldsmith's queries touching the resurrection now demand some attention from me, as my name is particularly referred to therein. His first position or query, imports that the resurrection spoken of in the New Testament is one and the same thing with being born again, or that the impartation of spiritual life in regeneration is the resurrection. His words are, "Now we believe that the whole body of the church were dead in trespasses and sins, according to the Apostles' doctrine; resurrection is the opposite of death, or deliverance from it; and there is no deliverance from death, but resurrection, &c." I do not wish to be severe, but really these expressions imply that Elder Goldsmith is as ignorant of the nature of the new-birth as was Nicodemus; for they imply that the being born of God, is only the having a life again brought into exercise which had been before lost in death, as Nicodemus supposed from Christ's doctrine that his natural life must be a second time brought into existence. The natural and scriptural import of the word resurrection being that of reinstating in a life which had been lost in death; so also the word raised as used in reference to the dead, as in the case of Lazarus, John 11:23-25; and 12:1-9; and Matt.11:5, also in reference to the bringing up from the grave the body of Jesus, as in Matt. 16:21; Acts 2:31,32; 4:2; and 17:31,32, and other places. Indeed the proper import of the word resurrection, is a revival from the dead; a return from the grave; so also the Greek word anastasis, rendered resurrection from the word anisteemi, to excite, to awake or stir up. Our English word resurrection is formed from the Latin word resurgo, which signifies to rise again, to flourish again, to be renewed. So that the idea conveyed by this word is clearly that of a renewal of a former principle of life or action; very different this from the idea of bringing in a new and distinct life or principle of action, which is embraced in the notion of being born again. Being born is never understood to be a reviving up of an old existence; it is a beginning to exist. Consequently, being born again or with another birth, is the commencement of a new and distinct existence, not a new beginning of the old existence as was Nicodemus' notion of being born again, and as is implied in the idea of a resurrection. According to the view I have given of the new birth, the Master explains it, when he says, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit." John 3:6. A resurrection does not come up to this idea at all, it is a raising up of that which had before died, a springing up of that which had been sown; whereas the believer is manifested in a spiritual existence, in a relation to another headship. And thus other scriptures describe it, Peter says, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, &c." I Pet.1:23. Paul says, "Therefore if any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature, &c." "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works, &c." II Cor.5:17; and Eph. 2:10. As the texts in Eph.2:1-5; and Col.2:13, are frequently applied to the new birth, and as the expressions used, might be construed to import something like a resurrection, though not necessarily involving that idea, I will assign my reasons for believing that regeneration is not what is intended by those declarations of the Apostle. The quickening is one in which Christ participated with his people in; and their quickening being with, must have been in Christ. The expressions are, hath quickened us together with Christ; and in Col.2:13, the same in substance. Now this mode of expressions, is never used, nor the idea ever conveyed by the description given in the scriptures, of regeneration or the new birth, the latter being, if I understand it, descriptive of a work performed in the creature. And the idea of Christ's participating in such a second-birth, such as he informed Nicodemus was necessary to enable a person to see the kingdom of God, is contrary to the whole of divine revelation. But in the execution of the judgment to condemnation, upon the posterity of Adam, the people of Christ lay under the curse of the law, or in a state of banishment from God, which is no other than a state of death in sin, having lost that uprightness in which man was created, and being barred from the tree of life; and thus held by the law in a state of corruption and depravity; this is of course fitly denominated a being dead, &c. This legal condemnation, this curse of the law, Christ became subject to, when he came into the law place of his people; not to their depravity, but without this, to the full curse or hell which the law could inflict. Hence the expression, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell." From this death Christ was quickened, in receiving a full discharge from the demands of the law, when he arose without seeing corruption; and as he was raised again for the justification of those for whose offences he was delivered, they participated in his quickening; that is, they were together with or in him quickened or raised up from the judgment to condemnation. Although some seem to think there is no distinction between this and regeneration, yet those whose eyes have been opened, will I think on reflection see just the difference between the two doctrines, that there is between our relations to Adam and to Christ as heads, or between redemption and regeneration. This quickening was accomplished by Christ for his people in his own person; hence they are quickened together with him. Not so with regeneration, his people are not regenerated together with him; they are regenerated individually when they are made to receive the spirit of Christ, or the spirit that is of God. If indeed the death we died in Adam were a spiritual death, or a loss of the same life, which Christ's people

afterwards

received from him as a Head, then with propriety might regeneration be termed a resurrection, because it would be a reinstating us in the same life we had once lost in death. And if a single text of scripture can be produced which manifestly speaks of regeneration or the being born again as a resurrection, then I must believe that God's sending forth the spirit of his Son into our hearts, is nothing more than a raising us up again to the same life or standing which Adam had before he fell, and of course that heaven is nothing more than an earthly paradise. And then might we believe that the whole glory of the New Jerusalem church is seen in this life, and that the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, which the saints through Titus were exhorted to look for, was nothing more than his executing judgment upon Jerusalem. Let these believe such notions who desire it, but I desire to thank God that I have a hope that goes beyond the events of this life, as my anchor. But I feel confident that no text can be produced in which the distinctive idea of being born again is represented as a resurrection or being raised up; the two ideas, that of being raised from the dead, and that of being brought into distinct existence as the seed of Christ, are kept separate in the scriptures, by the use of distinct terms and modes of expression. It is surprising that a man of Elder Goldsmith's mind and acquaintance with the scriptures, and withal his freeness from prejudice, should so confound ideas and doctrines which the Holy Ghost has so manifestly kept separated, and more so, considering that he himself speaks of the confusion which results from getting aside from truth and the consistency that is in it.

Another query is, whether we can receive Christ without receiving the resurrection? I answer, No. For as he is the Lord our righteousness, in receiving him, we receive a release from the judgment to condemnation, and are raised up from that death under the sentence of the law which came by the disobedience of one man. And as Christ has triumphed over death and the grave as the representative and first fruits of his people, in receiving him we receive the pledge of a glorious resurrection from our corruption and graves.

Elder Goldsmith's 3rd set of queries are these, "Does not animal life belong to animal bodies, or natural life to natural bodies? And is the resurrection only a resurrection of natural life to mankind? It seems to me that Elder Trott's notion lead to the last named conclusion, &c. It appears to me that the saints of God are to have a body like the seed from whence it grows, of course to a spiritual seed a spiritual body. Is not Elder Trott's notion, that the spiritual seed shall have a natural body, or their old body reanimated?" These queries lead at once to a consideration, not of my notions, but of the doctrine of the resurrection as taught in the New Testament. My notion, if it be a notion, is, that what is declared in the plain language of scripture concerning this subject, will stand true, whether we can comprehend the whys and wherefores thereof or not. Elder Goldsmith and some others speak of the old body of dust as though it were a very contemptible thing. I wonder if, like the Quakers, to show his contempt of the body and the idea of its being raised again, he would carry into practice the principle of Pope, "And not a stone tell where I lie," or, if after going thus far with them, he would not, as do they, still show some great regard for this old body, by having the place of its deposit fenced with great strength and care. But contemptible as the body may be thought to be, remember that the Son of God not only condescended to be clothed in one, but after his death he raised it again and took it with him in his ascension to his glory with the Father. And I do not believe the three disciples thought it so very contemptible a thing when they saw it in his transfiguration on the mount.

But let the Apostle speak on this subject, and upon what he says, fairly interpreted, in the 15th chapter of I Cor., passing by other proofs to the same point, I am willing to rest the support of all I have written in favor of the resurrection of the body. His words are, "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain, &c." Verses 12-14. Here the Apostle connects the resurrection of the dead so intimately with the resurrection of Christ, that to deny the one, is in his estimation to deny the other, and to overturn the whole doctrine of the gospel. Let not Elder Goldsmith think this an error to be easily overlooked. Now if it be insisted that the resurrection of the dead here spoken of, is no other than the being born again, then it follows necessarily that the doctrine of Christ's resurrection, is no other than that he was born of the water and of the spirit, preparatory to his being able to see the kingdom of God; for the Apostle so connects the two that what is the resurrection in the one case, is in the other. But the expressions here used will not admit of the idea of the impartation of a new and spiritual life; they are, the resurrection of the dead, the dead raised, &c. Can these literally or strictly mean anything else than that the very identical part which was dead, is in itself the subject of the change expressed by the words, resurrection and raised up? Should it be asserted that it is only in reference to the resurrection of Christ that the Apostle is here speaking, we have but to refer to some of the following verses to refute such idea. After using several modes of expression showing that he is contending for the resurrection of the saints, he says in verses 22,28, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." It must be then that the Apostle is here treating of a resurrection of the saints corresponding to the resurrection of Christ; if, of course, we can understand what is meant by Christ's being raised up, we shall arrive at a clear understanding of what is meant by the resurrection of the dead. Need I argue the point to show that the resurrection of Christ means that the very same body of his which died on the cross was raised up, was reanimated? The disciples had full proof of this fact, as when he said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger and behold my hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side and be not faithless, but believing." And when he again said to his disciples, "Behold, my hands and my feet, that it is I, myself. Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." John 20:27; Luke 24:39. This then being so clearly a fact that the resurrection of Christ, consisted in his being raised up in that same body in which he was crucified, it must be that the Apostle means by the resurrection of the dead, their being raised up in the same bodies in which they died. Again, the Apostle speaks of Christ's being the first fruits of them that slept. What were the first fruits under the former dispensation, but a part and of the same kind and an exact representation of the coming harvest? What then can he mean by this expression, other than that the resurrection of Christ was an exact representation, and sure pledge of the resurrection of them that slept, and of the same kind? If he means what his words in this case plainly imply, then he means that as Christ was raised, so will they be that are his, at his coming; that is, in the same bodies in which they died. Before Elder Goldsmith can get rid of these conclusions, and admit the Apostle's doctrine, he must show that he did not mean what he said; an unenviable task. Elder Goldsmith quotes verse 38, "But God giveth it a body, as it hath pleased him and to every seed its own body," or rather he makes an assertion, founded I presume, upon this text. But he certainly could not have noticed the connection in which that text stands, or methinks he could not have thought of a spiritual seed in this relation; and, indeed, I should have thought him too well acquainted with the nature of seeds in general not to have talked of a spiritual seed producing a spiritual body, &c., even if the Apostle had said nothing on the subject. But what says the Apostle in the immediate connection? See verse 36, "Thou fool; that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." Here the nature of seeds is presented in few words. But it is proper here to notice the ground on which the Apostle introduces this and the following figures. He seems to anticipate in verse 35, some man, making the same objection to his doctrine, which Elder Goldsmith has actually made to it, on the occasion of my having incidentally referred to it, without having given any illustration of my views thereon; the objection appears to be, that there cannot be a resurrection of the body without its being raised in the same corruptible earthly state in which it was sown. To refute this notion by plain common sense observations, he brings forward the figure of seeds sown, in which resurrection in figure is an every day occurrence. The seed in its original form does not come up; it dies, becomes extinct in that form, and yet there is in that very body sown a principle which is quickened, and identity of the body which springs up, and this identity is fully preserved in the after growth, so much so, that you have no expectation from a seed of wheat sown to reap barley, as the Apostle illustrates in the 37, 38th verses. This figure, to be sure, falls short, as all figures do, of a full illustration of the subject, but as far as it goes it illustrates what Elder Goldsmith calls my notion.

The fact is, I have no notion on the subject, excepting just what the Apostle has taught in this chapter, with the further illustrations and confirmations found in other portions of scripture. I make no pretensions to ability to philosophize on the subject, or to understand the modus operandi. The Apostle then goes on further to illustrate, and insist on the fact, that the identity of the body must be preserved in the resurrection, though it be raised a heavenly and not an earthly body, by showing that every distinct body must have its peculiarities, as in the different flesh of different things, and also that there may be a difference of glory between the heavenly or risen body, and the earthly or sown body, and yet the identity be preserved, by showing that visible heavenly bodies have their distinct glories, as that "there is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, &c." And this is what the connection shows is the import of the Apostle's argument in saying, "For one star differeth from another star in glory;" a text which men are fond of abusing, to support their notion of different grades in glory among the saints. See verses 37-41. He then goes on to declare, not in a figure, but in plain terms, what is the fact relative to the resurrection. He says, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption," &c. Verse 42, and on to verse 45. He herein clearly shows, not only that it is the resurrection of the body, and not of the soul of which he is speaking, but also that the identity of the body is preserved in the resurrection. He declares that the same thing, the same it, which is sown in dishonor, is raised in glory, &c. He goes further, he names the body, and declares that, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body," &c. How can Elder Goldsmith get rid of these positive declarations of the Apostle in support of the doctrine of the same body that dies, being raised, not in its earthly form, but in a heavenly, without wresting the scriptures from their plain import? Some difficulty may be stated to this view of the subject, from the fact that Christ arose with his body in its natural state, having flesh and bones, &c., as is evidenced, as already noticed from his disciples handling him, and also from his eating before them after his resurrection. See Luke 24:42,43. It was necessary that he should be thus raised, to show that he saw no corruption, and thereby to show that in his death justice had received its full satisfaction for the sins of his people; as it was necessary that he should die in the peculiar manner he did, to show that in it he was being made a curse for them. But the peculiarity of his resurrection no more than the peculiarity of his death, affects the general principle of his being in his resurrection, the first fruits of them that slept. It is the fact of the resurrection of the body, and of its identity in its resurrection, that the Apostle shows is established by the resurrection of Christ. I will now state what is my own notion on this subject; though even in this, I consider my views sustained by plain inferences from scripture. My notion is this, that though Christ was raised with his body in its fleshly state, yet that it was changed at his ascension, to a spiritual body. I infer this from the text, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," (I Cor.15:50,) compared with this, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," &c., Phil.3:21, taken also in connection with the fact that those saints who do not sleep at the coming of Christ, will be changed at their being caught up to meet him; and also that Christ gave an example of the change in his transfiguration. See I Cor.

15:51,52; I Thes.4:16,17 & Matt.17:2.

One remark more, of Elder Goldsmith's, demands some little notice; he says, "Nor does it appear matter to break fellowship on." I have no wish lightly to withdraw fellowship from those who have been recognized as brethren, nor excepting on scriptural grounds. But does Elder Goldsmith, or does he not hold that any other resurrection awaits the saints, than that which they experienced in receiving Christ by faith? Does he, or does he not hold that those bodies which return to dust are again raised? If he does not hold those points, does not his views relative to the resurrection imply that it has passed already in reference to all that have believed? If so; wherein do his views differ from the declaration of Hymeneus and Philetus? If he cannot show an important difference, am I not required by what the Apostle says to Timothy, to withdraw fellowship from him? He says, "But shun profane and vain babblings, for they increase unto more ungodliness; and their word will eat as doth a canker, of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred; saying, that the resurrection is passed already, and overthrow the faith of some." II Tim.2:16-18. I shall be glad to know that Elder Goldsmith is not involved in this Apostolic sentence; and that all other correspondents of the SIGNS escape it, in carrying out their positions. I wish no break in our ranks if it can be avoided, and truth and order maintained.

I remain your brother, S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., Jan.7, 1842.

THE RESURRECTION. # 2.

A Reconsideration Of Reply To Elder Goldsmith.

BROTHER BEEBE: - On looking over my reply to Elder Goldsmith, touching the resurrection, as published in the fourth number of the SIGNS, current volume, I find one expression which I much regret should have slipped my pen. It was this, "But really these expressions imply that Elder Goldsmith is as ignorant of the nature of the new-birth as was Nicodemus." In the first draught of that communication I find there is a little variation of expression, and additional word which perhaps would have prevented the force of the expression being applied to an object different from what I intended. For it is not the severity of the expression that I now regret, but its liability to a wrong conclusion, as though I intended to infer from Elder Goldsmith's remarks, that he was experimentally ignorant of the new birth, that he was not a regenerated man. It was not my intention at all to convey such an idea, but only to convey the idea that his expressions, in themselves, conveyed as wrong a notion of the new birth as did Nicodemus' remarks, as I go on to show in what follows. I have no disposition to judge the man, but only to judge his sentiments. Indeed, I have seen nothing in Elder Goldsmith's writings, (and through them is the only acquaintance I have with him,) that would lead me to believe that he is not a subject of grace. We frequently hear and see a direct denial of what the christian knows is the essence of an experience of grace and also a denial of the true ground of a believer's hope; in such cases we are constrained to believe that the persons are ignorant of an experience of grace; but on the other points, I am far from being prepared to set the limits as to how far a person may advance error and yet be a subject of grace, unless the criterion is discovered in the spirit manifested. But this I know that God hath purposed to destroy the wisdom of the wise, and to make foolish the wisdom of this world, and therefore, it is that he doth not suffer even his children to attempt to be wise beyond what is written on subjects of revelation without making foolish their wisdom by leaving them to run into error; and the stronger confidence they have in their own understanding, or that others have in the powers of their mind, perhaps the greater error they run into.

But to return to the subject. I regret the more the unguardedness of my expression above referred to, lest any should suppose that I was hurt of Elder Goldsmith's accusing me of prejudice, and that I said what I did in answer to his views, in a spirit of retaliation. It is true, I noticed that accusation for the sake of other remarks, and afterwards touched the subject once and again in a jocular way, to show that I was not hurt at it, and that my object in writing was not to retaliate for that. The fact is, I felt more deeply wounded, than such an expression would wound. I felt as though, instead of having the SIGNS continued as a faithful beacon, a banner, a kind of rallying point, we were likely through it, to be split all to pieces. A series of communications were being published, in which, although a denial of the resurrection was not directly made, yet according to my understanding of things was fully implied.

For if the coming of Christ promised in the scriptures were consummated in his coming to take vengeance on the Jews; and therefore no future coming is to be looked for; then of course no future resurrection is to be looked for; and then when Elder Goldsmith by his queries implied a direct denial of the resurrection of the body, I felt as though Quakerism; yea, infidelity was to be inscribed on our flag in company with truth. I therefore designed and aimed to present the subject of the resurrection in the strong light in which it is presented in the New Testament, in hopes it might lead those who had erred, to a reconsideration, and awaken our brethren generally to a consideration of the importance of that doctrine. That the scriptures declare that a denial of the resurrection involves fully a denial of the resurrection of Christ, and therefore involves infidelity; and also that the advancing of the sentiment that the resurrection was passed, was not future, tended to overthrow the faith of those that received it. Hence it is evident that this point of gospel doctrine is placed on no ordinary footing in the New Testament; it is declared, defined, and the consequences of its rejection are pointed out with peculiar care. I remark further, that this point of doctrine is presented to us in the New Testament as pure revelation, as exclusively an object of faith, human reason cannot begin to investigate it further than to enquire what is written; it must at once be resolved into the display of that sovereign power which the Father hath committed unto the Son according to his declared will.

The instant we depart from this rule we plunge into error.

So far as anything is contained in my communication, that has the appearance of sparks of anger towards the man, or that may be construed as judging him, I beg leave to recall it, so far as it is an expression of my decided testimony against the ideas involved in his queries; and of a determination to hold such sentiments as entirely heterogeneous to the Old School Baptist doctrine, so far it must stand until refuted by the scriptures.

And I beg that what I have herein said may not be construed as an attempt to set myself up as a standard; no, my brethren, let the New Testament, and that alone, be our standard, and let everything be tried by that.

Neither would I wish by any means to dictate, brother Beebe, to you what is to be admitted into the SIGNS; that is, what is to be admitted as Old School sentiments, for error may be published as error, without incurring the charge of sanctioning it. Nor do I desire the SIGNS to be closed against a candid discussion of such points of doctrine, or of circumstances connected therewith; such, as brethren may honestly differ on. But what I wish to be at is, that there are certain limits relating to doctrine, as well as to measures, which, when passed, it ceases to belong to the Old School cause; and whilst my confidence, brother Beebe, in you remains firm, that you would not directly sanction what would be a passing such bounds, I would say, let not your confidence in man, neither in brother Trott, nor any other brother, lead you to admit speculation, as from them, and as Old School sentiments; which are manifest and self-evident departures from, or going beyond the limits of consistency, as Old School views.

I may be too strenuous on the subject of the resurrection and other points connected therewith in the estimation of my brethren. Well, brethren, let the New Testament, in the plain declarations thereof decide. I ask no quarters, no stay of judgment, no wrapping up, if I stand condemned at that judgment seat of Christ; that is, by his Apostles, so let it be declared. But at the hands of Christ, I do ask for mercy, mercy to forgive my errors and backslidings, and mercy to deliver me from falling into error.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., Feb.22, 1842.

THE SABBATH

Remarks on Isaiah 58:13,14.

Brother Beebe: - Having been led recently to speak from Isaiah 58:13,14, I was somewhat impressed, from reflection on the subject, with a sense of the great extent of the gospel standard, of holiness to the Lord; at any rate my judgment was convinced on the subject. As to feeling impressed with its importance, or with the beauty and excellency of walking after the Spirit, and not after the flesh, I do not feel as I would wish. But whatever may be my own, or the feelings of others on the subject, an examination of it, as presented to view in that text, and illustrated in the New Testament, may not be unprofitable to me or my brethren.

The words of the text are these: If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and shalt honour Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

By the Sabbath here, I think the gospel Sabbath evidently intended, as there are requisitions mentioned concerning it, such as are not named in the fourth command, or by Moses, in reference to the seventh-day Sabbath. Whilst a fresh zeal is now being manifested in enforcing an observance of the Jewish Sabbath in a transposed state from the seventh to the first day of the week, surely we who have a hope of having been delivered from the bondage of the law may well be engaged in inquiring and doing what the Lord requires of us, to honor Him, and that rest which He gives.

I have formerly given through the Signs, my views of the seventhday sabbath as being typical of that rest which the believer enjoys through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as shown in Hebrews chapter 4. The text now before us is, in my estimation, a confirmation of those views. They were briefly these: 1st. That as Israel was required to keep the seventh day holy, as a rest, in acknowledgment of God's having finished the work of creation in six days, having made all things very good, having given to man and beast for meat that which He had caused the earth spontaneously to produce, thus Himself making ample provision to meet every want His creating power had produced. So Christ also having finished the work of redemption; having brought in everlasting righteousness; made an end of sin, removed the curse, and provided an ample fullness to meet the wants of every sinner, who, under a sense of his guilt and ruin, is drawn to Him for salvation. He, having removed every barrier to this fullness flowing spontaneously to sinners has entered into His rest, having ceased from his own works, as God did from His(Heb.4:10), and gospel faith apprehending this, leads the individual to cease from his works under the law, to rest in Christ. He is further required to keep holy this rest in honor of what Christ has done. As under the law, the Israelite who did any work on the seventh day practically denied God's having made ample provision for the wants of man in the six days creation; so under the gospel, the individual who works for acceptance with God denies Christ's having finished the work of redemption, and is a sabbath breaker.

2nd. That as seven in the figures of types and prophecy was used to prefigure a fullness or a whole, &c., so the observance of the seventh day, seventh year, &c., showed that under the gospel there should be, to the true Israel of God, not merely a rest of one day in seven, and one year in seven from the toils of the law, but a complete and continued rest from all its toils and burdens. And as the seventh day rest was to be holy to the Lord, so the believer in Christ is to believe all his time and himself holy to the Lord, and not to be satisfied with keeping one day in seven holy. Or as the Apostle teaches, they are to consider themselves not their own, that they are bought with a price, and that they should glorify God in their bodies and in their spirits which are His I Cor. 6:19,20. But the same law which required the Israelites to rest the seventh day from all their work, also required them to labor six days. The same law, therefore, which was designed to bear testimony to God's having finished the work of creation, and made all good, all subserving the wants of man, and anticipating them, was also a standing witness of the curse that was upon the ground on account of man's sin, whereby man, instead of finding it continuing to bring forth spontaneously for his wants, was doomed to eat his bread in the sweat of his face; thus showing also the curse of the law that was upon man, so that by it he was debarred from attaining to the tree of life, and eating and living forever. Not so under the gospel; Christ having become the end of the law for righteousness, and having taken the curse out of the way, the believer has but to eat His flesh and drink His blood which He giveth, and he hath eternal life. Hence as life and salvation flow spontaneously to the believer through Christ Jesus, he has no occasion to sweat and toil for a righteousness of his own to save him from the curse of the law, but may devote himself and all his time to glorifying God, that whether he eat or drink, or whatever he does, he may do all to the glory of God I Cor. 10:31. Do those great Doctors of the Lord's-day conventions, who are so zealous for a legal sabbath, know anything of this spiritual rest which remains unto the people of God from all the demands of the law?

After this lengthy preface, I will proceed with as much brevity as I can to notice the several parts of the text. It divides itself into two general heads: First; What God requires of His people, that they may honor Him in a due observance of the gospel Sabbath. Secondly; Certain promised blessings, consequent upon the right observance of those requisitions.

1st. The requisitions: If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day. Our turning away our foot from it, as showed by the connection, does not mean a turning away from it in not observing it; but we are to turn away our foot from it, in that we are not to trample upon it as something common, or which may be thrown aside, for our own works or exercises. We are also to turn away our foot from it, in not doing our own pleasure on His holy day. The gospel dispensation is brought to view as one day. It is the day which the Lord hath made Psalm 118:24. It is the day made by His resurrection, and which He rules, as He made the sun to rule by day in natural time. It is holy, in that it is the period devoted to the exercise of the power of the exalted Jesus over all flesh, that He may give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given Him. It is holy to the triumphs of the cross, and to the treading down of His enemies. It is holy as the day allotted to the church of Christ, from age to age, to bear witness to the truth of the gospel testimony, to the power of Jesus to save ruined sinners, to the nature of His salvation as a salvation from sin, and to show her love and subjection to Him as her Lord. As such should believers esteem it. To this end are all the trials and deliverances of the saints, all their joys and sorrows, their seasons of light and of darkness, of temptations and persecutions, made by grace subservient. Not doing their own pleasure. The term pleasure here, according to the original, signifies, not amusement, but inclination, will or desire. The import of this passage, therefore, is that as the gospel day is holy to the power and reign of the Lord Jesus, those who profess to be of the Israel of God are not to consult their own inclination, not lean to their own understanding, nor depend on their own strength in things pertaining to His kingdom, but to be in entire submission to His revealed will, and dependent on His arm to save. Thus, for instance, those who claim liberty to consult their own inclination instead of the Scriptures, whether to contribute their money or otherwise support the popular inventions for moralizing or evangelizing the world, are doing their own pleasure on the Lord's holy day, are breaking His Sabbath. So those who consult their own inclination to avoid reproach, by not contending for the faith and order of the gospel, by not bearing faithful testimony against the subversions of the gospel, by countenancing those who do subvert it in its doctrine or order, by meeting and associating with them in worship and other things pertaining to religion, &c., are more doing their own pleasure than honoring the Lord and His truth: they are not regarding the holiness of the day. Again; when preachers consult their own convenience, ease or worldly interest, in their manner of preaching, or in attending to their appointments, or to occupying the field the Lord in His providence has directed them to; or when private members consult their convenience, ease, or worldly business in reference to assembling with the church, and govern their contributions for the support of the gospel and other purposes, not according as the Lord has prospered them, but according as they think they can spare from their plans for enlarging their funds or business, or farms, or from furnishing themselves and family with every desired extravagancy, such are doing their own pleasure, and not acting under a sense of not being their own, but the Lord's.

So also when we intemperately indulge in any of our appetites and passions, or give way to a conformity to the world, we are doing our own pleasure, and are not being separate to the Lord. Indeed, there is at this day too much of a propensity among christians to follow their own inclinations, to do our own pleasure on the Lord's holy day.

2nd. And call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honourable. Call that is manifest that it is their delight, their happiness, to trust in the Lord Jesus alone, and to give Him the glory of their salvation; to sit at His feet and wait to be led and taught of Him, and to have His word as authority for what they believe and do. If I know anything of a christian's experience, there is a principle within him which, how much soever nature may oppose, leads him to desire not to do his own pleasure, nor to have his own way, and, of course, which causes him to be truly happy, as he can feel that he has laid his own wisdom and all that is of himself in the dust, and is receiving what the Spirit makes known to him, and as he makes it known, as truth; and that he is leaning alone on the Lord for his wisdom, his quidance, his strength and keeping, as well as for his final salvation. And the holy of the Lord honourable: The salvation by Christ Jesus, and His religion throughout, is a revelation from God, and is therefore as such wholly separate from all human wisdom and creaturely doings, and hence is truly the holy of the Lord. If every human mixture, made with the holy appointments of God in the tabernacle service, received a just recompense of reward, surely the mixtures which are made under the light of the gospel, with the holy of the Lord, will receive an awful retribution. When we, in preference to the applause bestowed upon those who conform to the world and its notions of religion, choose to meet the reproaches attendant upon a strict conformity to the revealed truth and will of God, and to be marked as companions of the Lord's afflicted and despised people, and as separate from the popular religious combinations, we practically call the holy of the Lord honourable. And when we, with patience and meekness bear the reproach and contempt thus cast upon us, we show that we not only call, but we esteem the holy of the Lord honourable.

3rd. And shalt honour Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words. We honor the Lord by showing an implicit confidence in Him, in His promises and declarations, and by strict obedience to His word, and not otherwise. We in many cases would obey the Lord, but we do it in our own way. Moses, in obedience to the Lord, gathered the congregation together at the rock, and took the rod to smite it, but he did his own way in the thing, finding his own pleasure. He spoke unadvisedly with his lips, and did not sanctify the Lord before the people. Numbers 20:12 & Psalm 106:33. So we may be zealous to bear our testimony against error, but instead of in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves we may suffer our zeal to lead us to speak unadvisedly, and to speak language which has the appearance of bringing railing accusations against those who hold the error. We may be obedient to preach the word; but instead of being only intent to honor the Lord by a plain declaration of His word and manifestation of His truth, we may do our own ways. We too often, instead of losing sight of ourselves in a view of the glory of the Lord, like to attract a little attention to ourselves; we would be thought something; we would be noticed either as bold or as mild, as good speakers, or as oddities, as sons of thunder, or as sons of consolation, &c. Consequently we find much to lament in our services, as having too much of self in them. So in all the relations which we sustain as disciples, in our submission to ordinances, in attending to church discipline, to keeping up an intercourse and correspondence with brethren, &c., there is a doing these things so as to find our own pleasure and do our own ways, instead of doing just what the Lord has commanded, and as He has directed. We are too apt to think that we may consult our own notions and feelings in many things pertaining to religion. Some may be too fond of going before as leaders; but a great many more keep back from a faithful discharge of duty in various ways, from fear of incurring some special responsibility or blame. Again, in our intercourse with the world, in our transactions of business, and even in our choosing our locations and our course of pursuit, we ought no less to act under a sense that we are not our own, that we are members of the one body of Christ; and therefore at no more liberty to do our own ways, and find our own pleasure; that is, regardless of the fellowship of our brethren, of our usefulness in the cause of Christ, and of the honor of His cause, than in things more immediately religious.

Not speaking thine own words. Many professors are very fond of speaking their own words, or of giving their own imaginary construction to the words of Scripture, instead of seeking the plain meaning of the Holy Spirit therein. This is certainly not honoring the Lord, but our own judgments. We are frequently too little impressed with a sense of the holiness of the revelation which the Holy Ghost has given, and hence too often take the liberty of displaying our ingenuity in giving to the words of Scripture a turn to suit our sentiments; as do lawyers their law books in their pleadings. This is not what the Apostles did. Paul says, "Not handling the word of God deceitfully." Again, "Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual" II Cor. 4:2; I Cor. 2:13. We are not to understand by the Apostle's expressions here, the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth, that the Holy Ghost taught the Apostles any different language from what is common among men. The words used in the Scriptures have the same grammatical construction and the same literal meaning as when used in reference to natural things. But when the Holy Ghost revealed to them a spiritual truth, they declared it in plain, unequivocal language; not in words representing it as human wisdom would apprehend it, but in words conveying the very idea taught by the Holy Spirit: comparing spiritual things with spiritual; comparing them with Christ and His salvation, not with the Sinai covenant, nor with philosophy, or husbandry, &c. The not speaking our own words has also no doubt a reference to the same idea taught in Zeph. 3:9, "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent." There is, no doubt, an allusion here to the language taught Adam in the garden when he gave names to every beast of the field, and every foul of the air, &c. Those names given being descriptive of some peculiar characteristic of each beast and fowl. Hence the words taught him were not like the words of modern languages in their refinements, mere signs of our ideas, but they were his ideas themselves, embodied in expressions. By the expression, to call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent, there seems also a reference in that text to the fact that the whole earth was of one language and one speech until God confounded the language of the people for their presumption in building the tower of Babel. Throughout the former dispensation, the service consisting in outward forms, much of their fear towards the Lord was taught by the precepts of men; they were taught, from father to son, a form of expressions in their worship, which they used without regard to the feelings of their hearts. Such also is the case with much of the language used in religious services at this day; the words spoken are not even signs of their ideas. But grace teaches under the gospel that only the language of the heart, the feelings thereof embodied in suitable expressions, is acceptable to God, and the child of grace, so far as acting from grace, is led to use this language of his heart in all his intercourse with God and men. Hence there is a oneness of language among the children of God in speaking of what they know of religion by experience; for whatever diversity there may be among them in their manners of expressing themselves, whether they speak in broken or distinct words, when one hears another declare his experience, he at once recognizes it as the language of his own heart; they understand one another. So when a preacher preaches the preaching which God has bidden him, the believer, from the correspondence which he finds in his own heart with the words spoken, is prepared to say amen. So grace would lead the believer also in his more general intercourse with men, uniformly so to speak the unequivocal language of his heart, that with all who knew him, his yea would stand for yea, and his nay for nay. So in the case under consideration that we are not to speak our own words. Whenever we are disposed, plainly and unequivocally, to declare the real sentiments and feelings of our hearts, we have no need to hunt round for words, expressions will spontaneously flow out; our words may be few and not so elegant as we might have found by studying, but they will be expressive of our feelings, and so understood. But when we want to equivocate, to deceive, or hide our feelings or sentiments, we have to guard against letting the language of our hearts come out, and to hunt for other words to speak. This is what is forbidden in this clause relative to the gospel Sabbath, no labored expressions to be used in our approach to God, but the spontaneous language of our hearts. And in speaking in His name publicly or privately, we are to speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen. But in speaking the language of our hearts, we should be careful that it is the language of the renewed heart. The language of the old heart, which is corrupt, may be full of bitterness, strife, and every vile thing.

I now come to the second branch of the subject contained in Isaiah 58:13 & 14, namely: The blessings promised as consequent upon a right observance of the Gospel Sabbath, as declared in the 14th verse: "Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Taking this subject in the connection, the if of the preceding verse with the declaration of this, and it might very readily be taken for a conditional promise, the same as the legal promises made to national Israel, which ran thus: I will if thou wilt, contrary to the order of the new covenant, which is I will, and they shall. God has evidently made wisely and graciously the present enjoyments of the comforts of religion intimately to depend on the believer's correct gospel walk; and so of the prosperous state of the church. But to avoid mistake here, we must know what is a correct gospel walk. It is very far from a self-confident going forward in religious, or moral duties, as though we would show our zeal for the Lord, like Jehu, or like Peter when he said, Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. It is described in the Scriptures thus; "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" Micah 6:8. It is; To work out our salvation (that is, from the daily snares, temptations, corruptions, and errors, with which we are beset), with fear and trembling, from a sense of our weakness, but trusting in the Lord to work in us to will and to do of His own good pleasure Phil.2:12,13. It is; To be poor and of a contrite spirit, and to tremble at God's word Isa.66:2. Hence it is frequently the case that while the believer is ashamed and debased in spirit on account of his past improper walk, he receives some precious promise applied to his case. But I was going to remark that it is quite a difficult part in the gospel ministry to represent the comforts of religion as thus dependent on a proper walk without representing them as conditional, and thus sowing the vineyard with divers seeds; and ploughing with an ox and ass together Deut. 22:9,10. But we should ever bear in mind the declaration of the Apostle that the Son of God, as preached of him, was not yea and nay, and that "All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him amen, unto the glory of God by us" II Cor. 1:19,20. The subject before us having a special reference as before showed to be the gospel rest, and gospel day, must be understood as harmonizing with this Apostolic declaration. Therefore, whilst we have no right to expect or to represent that the church collectively will be seen riding upon the high places of the earth, whilst she does not rightly honor the Lord and His Sabbath, but finds her own pleasure, and does her own ways; nor that individual churches will be in a truly flourishing and exalted state, enjoying the manifestation of the Spirit's presence among them, whilst the members thereof are consulting more their own worldly interests and comforts than honoring of the Lord and His truth, and a doing of His ways. Whilst they are going after a covetousness instead of manifesting a fellowship for the gospel, by contributing freely for its support, as the Lord has prospered them, and for the support of them that preach it, and by a regular attendance upon it, and a steadfast adherence to it, how can they expect it to be blessed to them for their increase, and for their being built up in the truth and consolations thereof? Neither that we as individual christians or as preachers, can expect to find our evidences bright, or the promises of God our support, whilst we are indulging in our corruptions, are going after the world, neglecting our privileges, and an attendance upon our religious exercises, or performing them as a lifeless task. And whilst we as preachers ought, perhaps more than we have done, to enforce upon the churches and the brethren the importance of honoring the Lord, and His holy day, by close observance of all that He has enjoined upon His people, and as individual members should exhort one another to love and good works, and to hold out to one another the encouragements which the word gives to a faithful discharge of duty; yet we have no right to tell the churches and the saints, neither can we, if led by the Spirit, that the increase of the churches, the prosperity and triumph of Zion, the steadfastness of the saints or their growth in grace, or any other blessings promised are subject to their exertions, or neglect; that by their own efforts they can forward the promises of God, or by their neglect they can retard them.

We can, if left to ourselves, bring darkness upon our own souls, and disorder into the church; but the Lord alone can restore life and order to the churches, and comfort to our souls; and this He will do at His own pleasure, and prepare our hearts to look to Him for it. The blessing must come from Him; the blame is ours. So far from our being able, from any efforts of ours, to raise the churches from their present low and trodden down estate, it is more than probable that were it the Lord's pleasure now to revive His work in His churches, and the graces of His Spirit in the saints, their trials and their persecutions would in the same proportion be increased. But in this case, the saints would be better prepared to bear those trials with christian meekness and patience, and thus more to honor the Lord under them. And indeed if we felt right, I think we should feel that if we could but honor the Lord we should have but little choice, whether it was on the mount or in the fire.

Should it be asked, then, What are we to do with the if in this passage? I answer, the text is a prophetic promise concerning Zion, and looks forward to the period when the church shall have been delivered from all those corruptions which have crept into her through the influence of anti-christ, marring her beauty and her peace, and bringing coldness upon her. The prophesy embraces in it this purging of the churches, and a bringing them back to an entire subjection to the gospel, and an entire resting in Christ, as well as the exaltation of Zion. And the ifteaches that whilst the churches and saints are found trampling upon the Lord's

Sabbath, finding their own pleasure, and doing their own ways, they may not expect to witness that exalted state of the church herein promised. On the other hand, it teaches that when the churches shall be restored to the purity of gospel doctrine and practice, and as we see them thus restored, we may confidently look for the downfall of the man of sin, the breaking to pieces, like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, the four great monarchies of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, in their present subdivisions and intermixtures of iron and clay; and for the church and gospel of Christ to fill the whole earth. The blessings promised in the prophecy are, 1st. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord. The experience of the children of God, if I am not mistaken, shows that we cannot delight ourselves in the Lord and in the world both at the same time, that if our delight is in the world and the things of the world, though we may have some remembrance of the Lord's excellency, and of His love and mercy to our souls, some little reviving at times under preaching, &c., of our remembrance of Him, and some momentary seasons in which we feel our hearts drawn off from the world to delight in Him, yet the main current of our desire will be after the world, in one shape or another; even our prayers will show the object of our delight. On the other hand, when our delight is in the Lord, as when we were first brought into gospel liberty, and perhaps at some other special moments, the world, with all its concerns, appears as vanity itself; we can then cheerfully let them all go, having the Lord for our portion, it is enough. So frequently with the saints when about to depart; their delight is so in the Lord, that their having to leave the world is to them no loss, they anticipate the event as joyful. I will not say that all our delight in the world is wrong; much of it is sinful, vile, and, loathsome; but I have thought that, in our present state, a certain portion of it is necessary, to enable us to fill, with fidelity, our several stations and relations in the world. But it is all earthy, and therefore it brings forth its thorns and its thistles to us. On the other hand, the saint's delight in the Lord is all heavenly, all very good, nothing in it to vex or annoy, or to cause the sweat of the face. A happy period of the church will that be when this promise shall be realized by her, when the saints shall so delight themselves in the Lord that with David they can say, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want;" and with the spouse, "I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine." When they can so realize the Lord's presence with them as to make the world and all its concerns sit easy about them, and to view the world as a platform, provided of their Father's goodness, for them to stand on till the door is opened for their entrance into their house not made with hands; a stage on which, not to represent the human passions, but to display their love to Jesus, and bear their witness to His power to save, and to His grace and faithfulness to sustain.

2nd. And I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth. Solomon says, "There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from the ruler: Folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low places. I have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth" Ecc. 10:5-7. This evil has been for ages fully manifested in most countries, and is beginning to be plainly seen in this. The rich in faith, and the princes of the kingdom, are being put down, whilst religious folly and Moses' servants are being exalted to dignity. But the tables will, by and by, be turned. The Lord will yet appear for the destruction of the man of sin, and for vindicating the cause of His people. His church will be seen riding (a mark of dignity), and riding upon the high places of the earth, treading them under foot. By the high places, we may understand both the high places of religious establishments, and the high places of worldly governments and honor; answering to the ancient high places in which they worshipped, and to the high places in which is spiritual wickedness I Kings 11:7,8; Eph. 6:12. The church will be exalted above these, ride upon them, be exalted above the hills. John had a vision of the church as thus triumphing over anti-christ and the kings of the earth Rev.19:11-21.

3rd. And feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father. Jacob is here represented as a father of the gospel church, or spiritual Israel. He was such, in fact, as he was one of the fathers from whom Christ (concerning the flesh) came. Hence God promised unto him that, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" Gen. 28:14. Secondly, Jacob was the representative father of the gospel church or spiritual Israel, in that he was a special example of God's electing love, that as he was made to inherit the blessings of Israel before his elder brother Esau, by the purpose of God according to election, so the spiritual Israel was preferred before the elder brother, national Israel, to the blessings of the Messiah. And so of the saints severally, being preferred according to their being chosen in Christ, and not according to their creation in Adam, and the elder or first manifested. Thirdly, Jacob was such to the gospel church in being made a special object of God's overruling providence and care, as an example for the encouragement of the saints in all after ages to commit their ways unto the Lord, and to wait patiently for Him; so that God in His promises unto Christ and to His church repeatedly declares Himself as the God of Jacob. See among other texts, Psal. 20:1 & 46:7, 11. This special providence was exemplified, first: In causing the law of nature in a special manner to favor Jacob, as in the increase of his cattle Gen.

30:31-43 & 31:7-13. Secondly, In providing before hand for Jacob's preservation and sustenance, when God's judgment was upon the land in the seven years famine, and in overruling the wicked intent of his sons, for the accomplishment of this object, as well as that of Potiphar's wife Gen.45:4-1 1. Thirdly, In causing even his family afflictions to work for his good. Fourthly, In restraining the wrath of men against him, so that they should not hurt him; as in the case of Laban, Gen.3 1:24, 42; in the case of the Shemites, Gen.35:5; and of Esau. Fifthly, In God's imparting to him from time to time special manifestations of the angels of God as God's host, thus encouraging him to seek a meeting with Esau Gen.32:1-5.

Surely in this history of God's dealings with Jacob, the saints may see exemplified how "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Whilst others with their Canaanitish and Ishmaelitish wives may dwell at ease in the fat of the land, those who are called of God, in all their wanderings and pilgrimages, are better provided for in having the God of Jacob for their help. By the heritage of Jacob with which the church and saints of God are to be fed we may understand, both that providential care which God exercised towards Jacob as above exemplified, and that blessing which he inherited from his father Isaac, as preferred before Esau, namely: "God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and the plenty of corn and wine: Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee; cursed be every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee" Gen. 27:28,29. Moses, describing the land of Canaan, says - "It is not as the land of Egypt from whence ye came out, where thou sowest thy seed and wateredst it with thy foot, like a garden of herbs," &c. Deut. 11:10. He refers here to the case of Egypt where they have no rain, that they have to dig pits, &c., in which water may remain from the annual overflowing of the Nile; with this they watered their seeds, raising it by buckets frequently worked by treadwheels. But the blessing of Jacob was the dew of heaven which descends without the labor of man, and distils, softly moistening and softening the earth, not washing and hardening the ground as do beating rains.

Again: Moses says in his song (Deut.32:2), "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herbs, &c." There is much of watering the seed planted, with the children of God; but a full supply to the churches, and to the saints individually, of the bread and consolation of the gospel. So of the other branches of this heritage. People and nations, instead of oppressing and persecuting the church, as they have done from the dawn of the gospel day to this hour, will serve her and bow down to her. And her mother's sons, those leaders who, departing from the faith of the gospel and from the church in her order, have introduced systems of their own, and drawn away disciples after them. These, instead of glorying over the church as they now do, boasting of their popularity, will be humbled and brought down, and their systems given to the moles and to the bats when anti-christ goes down. These false teachers are not Christ's seed, but only the sons of the church; as they were brought into a profession of faith in the church, and then went out from it, because not of it. See Acts 20:30. Cursed be every one that curs eth thee; and blessed be he that blesseth thee. All who have received the mark of the beast, and therefore united with that interest in opposing and reproaching the gospel and gospel church, are under the curse that is denounced against such, and shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, &c. Rev. 14:9,10. Whilst he that blessed the true church, acknowledging her as the church of Christ, and her doctrine as the doctrine of Christ, and being thus kept from worshipping the beast, will be kept also from the judgment that awaits it, and afterwards be brought to experience the blessings of the gospel, because his name is written in the book of life of the Lomb slain from the foundation of the world. See Rev. 13:8. The declaration before us is that the Lord will feed the church with the heritage of Jacob, &c. This is different from God's dealing with national Israel in giving them the land in possession, and which they again lost. Feeding implies administering from time to time to the present want, as the manna was distilled daily upon the camp of Israel. The church and saints are not to be, neither have they ever been, as is the Arminian in his estimation, like a child that can run to the cupboard and help himself as he pleases, and therefore thanks no one for it; but they are like the infant which is I constantly dependent on its nurse to be fed, and therefore shows sense of its dependence by crying. The Lord, like a faithful nurse, will feed His people with this rich heritage, administering to them as their case may require, and keeping them sensible of their dependence.

Fourthly, The certainty of these promised blessings: For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Even Balaam testified that, "God is not a man that He should lie, neither the son of man that He should repent: hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken and shall He not make it good?" Num.

23:19. Yes, as He has spoken, so He will make it good; and that He may thus bless, He will bring the church properly to reverence His Sabbath, that is, the gospel and its order, and that rest which it inculcates and gives. I have represented this passage as prophecy, as having a reference still future, whilst it teaches that holiness to the Lord, which the gospel revelation has in all ages inculcated, and because it is so inculcated, I believe the church must yet reflect it. If you and I, brother Beebe, now differ on this point, it is because the church is not yet brought to that full unity which the gospel inculcates, and we must wait the Lord's time. And in His time I think He will show He has spoken nothing in vain. Hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good? Yours with christian regards, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Feb. 8, 1844.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES. Vol.12 (1844)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott Pages 276-291

THE SABBATH.

BROTHER BEEBE: - Though an abiding inhabitant of the Valley of Trouble, which the Lord I trust, has given me for a door of hope, I nevertheless feel considerable anxiety about what is passing on the hills of worldly and religious establishments, believing that numbers of my Father's children are wandering there. I am therefore induced to trouble you occasionally with my views on such subjects, as I feel particularly interested in; hoping that they may prove beneficial to others. For instance, I wish to bear my testimony against anything which is calculated to make those hills more troublesome to the children of God.

Finding from a quotation in the first number of the SIGNS, from the BAPTIST REPOSITORY, that the cry of infidelity is still kept up against Col. R.M. Johnson, on account of his Report on the Sunday Mail Question; the object of which is evidently, to prejudice the minds of the public against the principles of that Report, and to prepare the way for establishing the opposite principles; I wish therefore to bear my feeble testimony against those charges.

Let us examine the ground upon which Col. Johnson is charged with infidelity. First, he denies the necessity and the right of Congress to legislate upon matters of religion, or to establish by law the creed of one party, and thus to infringe upon the equal rights of others. It is then in the estimation of those persons, unbelief, or infidelity, to believe that the Kingdom of Christ is not of this world; and that Christ is able to do it and will sustain his own religion, alone by the word of his power, and will by the power of Divine love shed abroad in their hearts, constrain his people to receive his doctrine, and to observe his institutions, and that independent of any coercive aid of human laws? If this is Deism, what is Christianity? What is it to believe the opposite of this kind of Deism, but to deny Christ? And what is this, but Anti-christ?

But again Col. Johnson evidently favors the opinion of those Christians who observe the first day of the week, not as a requirement of the law, but as a Gospel Institution; these observe it not as Disciples of Moses, but as Disciples of Christ. This was enough to draw upon him the charge of Deism from all the Legalists in the Country. Such charges, however contain no other proof, than that of a want of argument with those who make them. The important inquiry is, Do the Scriptures support the views of these Christians relative to the first day of the week? If the word of God was allowed to contain a perfect revelation of the will of God upon this question, the question would at once be decided, for it contains no direct authority for observing this day peculiarly as a day of worship, but that of Apostolic example. If any deny this assertion, we challenge proof, Scripture proof, to the contrary.

It cannot require any argument to show that whatever is practiced on the ground of Apostolic authority, is practiced as a Gospel Institution, and not as a legal requirement. I know that many inferences are drawn, and positions are assumed to establish, if possible, the fact that the Apostles only changed the day of the Sabbath from the *seventh*to the first, still observing it in obedience to the fourth Command; it is also assumed as a granted point, that the fourth Command in the letter of it, is a moral precept, equally with the other Commands of the Decalogue. But perhaps we may be allowed to draw a few inferences on the other side of the question, and to test the correctness by the word of God.

If so, we infer, first, that neither Christ or his Apostles ever instituted meeting together of the Disciples on the first day of the week, as an observance of the Sabbath of the Decalogue.

We draw this inference from the fact, that although Christ sanctioned this practice by once and again meeting with his Disciples on the first day of the week, and the Apostles as in Acts 20:7 & I Cor.16:1,2; yet this is never in the New Testament denominated the Sabbath; that term being still used to designate the seventh day. This could not have been the case, if the first day had become the proper Sabbath of the law, unless we were to admit that the Apostolic history was designed to mislead us upon this point.

Second: We infer that the Command to observe the seventh day as a Sabbath, was not in the letter of it, a moral precept, like the other Commands of the Decalogue. By a moral precept we mean that which enjoins the observance of such things as were morally obligatory upon man as the creature of God, and which do not depend on any express Command for their fitness and obligation; and which of course can never cease to be obligatory and fit, so long as man stands in the relation of a creature to God, such are the other nine Commands of the Decalogue. We infer that the Command to keep the seventh day holy, as a Sabbath is not in this sense a moral precept, from the following Scriptural facts: First, had it been thus moral, as delivered from Sinai, it would have remained obligatory upon man, under the Gospel as under the former dispensation, the Gospel not altering, but establishing the law, Rom.3:31. We should also in this case find the New Testament sanctioning the observance of this Command, and the Churches cautioning against the sin of transgressing it, as is the case in reference to each of the other of the Ten Commands. Instead of this we do not find the observance of this Command once enjoined upon the Disciples, either by the Lord or his Apostles; nor Sabbath breaking once noticed in the New Testament, excepting as it was charged upon Christ and his Disciples by the Jews. When therefore we look into the New Testament we readily discover to whose company those belong who are so zealous about the Sabbath.

Second, the law, in reference to its moral precepts, we are informed is spiritual (Rom.7:14,) but the separating a specified portion of time to be holy to the worship of God, is as much a thing of sense, as the setting a part a particular place to be holy to his worship. But the Master informed the Woman of Samaria, that the Spiritual worship required under the Gospel was opposed to such local holiness. John 4:21-24. It is equally opposed to such periodical holiness, for we are authorized to worship at all times, as well as in all places, and therefore have one High Priest, who ever liveth to make intercession.

Third, the Institution of the Sabbath is spoken of in the Old Testament as a positive Institution, given to the House of Israel for a sign. "Moreover also I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." Ezek.20:12 & 20. See also Exod.31:12 & Neh.9:14. In conformity with this idea the Lord Jesus told those who accused him of Sabbath breaking, that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath," Mark 2:27; and in the following verse, we are told that, "the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." This can mean nothing less than that he has authority to dispense with the observance of the Sabbath. Were we to admit, that as God, it is consistent with his nature to dispense with any moral obligation, of the law, which however we do not, yet when we consider that as the Son of man, he was made under the law, and came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many; that he came not to destroy the law or the Prophets, but to fulfill (Matt.5:17, 20:28 & Gal.4:4,) it certainly cannot be supposed that as such he had authority to dispense with any moral precept of the law. The conclusion is therefore irresistible that the Jewish Sabbath was a positive and not a moral Institution.

But fourth, whilst the Sabbath was given to National Israel, as a positive Institution, it was designed in reference to Spiritual Israel, to be a shadow of another rest, see Heb. 4:4-10. Hence the Apostle connects Sabbath-days with New- moons, and with meats and drinks and other shadows, whose body was of Christ; see Col.2:16,17. Again, the Apostles speaking of Jewish days in which the Sabbath of course, must have been included, considers the observance of one day above another as a thing indifferent; his expression is, "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Rom.4:5. The Body – Christ, having come, the shadow is of course done away.

We therefore think our inference, that the fourth Command in the letter of it, was not given as a moral precept is amply sustained by the Scriptures of truth; that instead thereof it was in reference to the Gospel dispensation, only a shadow. Hence, our other inference that the meeting together of the Disciples on the first day of the week for worship, was not an observance of the Sabbath of the Decalogue, stands also well sustained by the Scripture view of the subject.

Still however, the question may be urged with some plausibility, Why is the Command to Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy, placed among the moral precepts of the Decalogue?

Many suppose it is because its literal requirements are equally moral with the other precepts. Of this class among the professors of Christianity, the seventh day Baptists are alone consistent in practice with their belief. To believe that the requisitions of this Command are morally obligatory, and to believe that, "one jot, or one title (the smallest letter or even point,) shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled," and at the same time to believe that in this Command, one word or day, may be substituted for another, involves a complete absurdity. In addition to this absurdity, by this alteration, the reason assigned for the Command; namely, that the Lord rested the seventh-day, is completely made void. Others suppose that this Command was included in the Decalogue, because that, although the requisition to observe the seventh day was positive, yet the obligation to observe one day in seven was moral. This explanation refutes itself. If man is under moral obligation to devote one day in seven to the service of God; why not the seventh day agreeable to the reason given for the Command. This explanation, however is very convenient for those religionists, who think the seventh part of their time is enough to devote to the service of God, or to be religious in. The spiritual Christian can never adapt such an idea to his feelings. He wishes all his time to be holy to God, and to be spent in his service. Such will consider the following explanation of the subject, as more accordant with the spirit of the law as written upon their hearts; namely, that as the term seven and seventh are repeatedly used in the Scriptures to denote a full amount or a completeness; so this Command, while in the letter of it, was a positive Institution to the Jews, and a shadow of good things to come to the Gospel Church, had a spirituality in it, like the other parts of the Decalogue, figuratively set forth by the letter, which included a moral obligation, to wit, that the fulness of our time, or in other words all our time, as well as all our faculties, should be holy to the service of God, as the Apostle explains it, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do," "do all to the glory of God." I Cor.10:31. Hence we see a propriety in its being placed in the Decalogue, as it is like the other Commands Spiritual, and as such moral, though the letter of it being adapted to the external religion of National Israel, was not moral, but positive. Had the letter of this Command as delivered to National Israel, been commensurate with its Spiritual requisition, considering the nature of their service being external, it would have allowed them no time to till their land.

When therefore the Christian, taking the New Testament for his guide, devotes the first day of the week to the exercises of public worship; he does it in commemoration of the Resurrection of Christ, in obedience to Apostolic example, upon Gospel principles. He will not on this account be disposed to neglect this any more, than any other Gospel Institution. Yea, he feels it to be a privilege to assemble himself with the people of God. As he does not need, so neither can he approve of the compulsion of human laws to enforce the observance of this day, more than in the case of Baptism or other New Testament ordinances.

There is at this day, as there was in the Apostle's days, much Judaism prevalent among Christians. Those who are under the influence of this, will still be disposed to look at the day with Moses' veil on. The Apostle's direction is, Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. I wish not to offend the conscience of a Brother, whose mind is thus shackled; but I wish each one to examine the subject for himself, in the light of the New Testament. If after such examination, any should not be satisfied, relative to the day, to leave Moses the servant, and follow Christ the Son; still I think they will not be disposed to denounce as Deists, all who differ from them relative to the obligation to observe the day; especially if they attentively consider Rom.14:1-10; not the gloss that may be put upon it, but the passage itself.

THE WALDENSIS. Valley of Achor, Feb.20th, 1833.

Elder Samuel Trott

THE SARDIS CHURCH STATE - REV. 3:1-5. PART I

BROTHER BEEBE: - Sister Izor, in her valuable communication in the SIGNS, Aug.15th, has made two requests of me; one in common with others to write our experiences; the other to give my views on Rev. 3:1-5. I have been so much from home since August, that I have not had time to attend to private correspondence as I ought. But I will now give such views as I have on the passage in Revelations, and hope next if spared to attempt to the other request.

I understand the seven churches addressed in this, and the preceding chapter to represent the church in its several changes, and periods on from the days of the Apostles, to the coming of Christ to take his church home to himself. I however differ perhaps from most others; in that, I do not consider the mere nominal church or professing world thus represented, but the true visible church, as professing the doctrine and order established in the New Testament. The several states of the church, as thus pointed out, may probably be understood to be as follows: The 1st as representing the apostolic age; the 2nd the period from that age to the establishing of religion by Constantine; the 3rd from that period, including the separating of the church from the nominal or antichristian interest, until its location in the wilderness, or the commencement of the prophesying of the two witnesses; the 4th, the state of the church in the wilderness until it had again become corrupted; the 5th or SARDIS state of the church, as commencing with the scattering of the church in consequence of its corruptness, in its being driven from the valley's of Piedmont, or to a future period. I have formerly thought that this church state terminated about the time of the church's having again become corrupted through the influence of the two horned or second Beast, and the separation of the church as Old School Baptists from the mass of corrupted baptists, and therefore that we were in the Philadelphian church state; but I do not now believe that the church has as yet, that open door which is to characterize the Philadelphian state. (Besides the promise to the Philadelphia church to be kept from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, and try them that dwell upon the earth, cannot belong to the church at the present time any more than in the past ages. For whilst anti-christ still sits as a queen, and sees no sorrow, the church is still reviled and persecuted and will continue to be, until the Witnesses are killed. But when they are raised up again, the tables will be turned; then will come the hour of temptation upon anti-christ and the world, from which the church will be exempt, and she will have an open door set before her. Hence I now conclude that the Sardis church state will continue until the raising up of the Witnesses, and then will commence the Philadelphian church state.) We are therefore now in Sardis, and the message of that church belongs to us; our work is not perfect. In thus considering the text, I will first notice the particular descriptive character which our Lord assumes in addressing this church; namely, "He that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars."

1st. The seven spirits of God. One important point of difference between me and some of the brethren in the recent controversy, is that I do not believe that the Holy Ghost in his distinctive being, or God as he exists as the Holy Ghost, is intended by the term spirit as generally used in the Scriptures, nor even by the term spirit of God in every instance; so in this case I cannot think that the essential Holy Ghost is meant by the seven spirits of God, for I understand him to be one. Neither do I understand them to intend the Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ. But I understand by them that universal power given to him as the exalted Head of the church by which he exercises a providential government over all things in heaven and in earth, and which is subordinate to none, but to him who "put all things under him." I Cor.15:27. Hence these seven spirits of God are represented by seven eyes, Rev.5:6; see also Zech.3:9, compared with 4:10. Hence also the four chariots which Zechariah saw coming out from between two mountains of brass are said to be, "Four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth." Zech.6:1-8. By the two mountains of brass, I would understand predestination and election, or God's purpose and grace, and by the chariots coming out from between them, I suppose the particular providences thereby indicated were subordinate to God's purpose and grace, or God's decrees concerning the world and concerning the elect. As these chariots were bounded by the two mountains of brass, so the all power given to Christ as Head of the church is exercised specifically for giving eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him. John 17:2. Hence the Apostle's assertion as above quoted, that "He is excepted which did put all things under him." These seven spirits of God being represented by seven eyes shows the perfect foresight and knowledge by which Christ governs all things and events. Hence the propriety of our Lord's declaring himself as having this important characteristic in reference to this church state, for the encouragement of his church to trust in him amid all the great and important events that have transpired and are still transpiring in the political and religious world, during this period of the church; such as the church's being driven from her retreat in the valleys of Piedmont and another asylum being provided for her by the discovery, settlement, &c., of America; and the rapid strides of the second Beast to power and in putting the mark of the Beast on all whose names are not written in the Lamb's Book of Life, &c.

2nd. Having the seven stars. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches, chapter 1:20. Those angels have been generally understood to be the pastors of the churches. But angels signify messengers. Hence, I conclude that if those stars have reference to the gospel ministers, as probably they have, they relate to them rather as messengers of Christ, and of the churches sent forth to preach the gospel, than as exercising the pastoral office. Hence the propriety of the expression in each case, "Unto the angel of the church ... write, &c.," that is, transmit to him to be delivered to the church; one angel representing all the ministers of that period, as the churches are represented by one church. Thus we find the several messages apply directly to the churches and not to the ministers only, as is evident in this to the church at Sardis and in most of the others, it being addressed to a collection of persons and not an individual. Also at the conclusion of each message it is said, "He that hath an ear let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches." So in fact, in all ages gospel ministers are Christ's messengers to the churches, and whatever treasure he puts into their earthen vessels, it is that they should empty it out to the churches, and I do not think that any of us have a right to keep back any of the treasures committed to us, for fear of being butted by our brethren for bringing forward some ideas which may be to Christ's having the seven stars, and having them in his right hand - chapter 1:16 – denotes his having both the gifts for the ministry and the ministers at his own disposal, and under his protection and direction; and that all concerning them is ordered with divine skill. He sends his messages by whom he will, and when and where he pleases; and that is, wherever in his infinite wisdom he, in his walks "in the midst of the golden candlesticks," sees occasion for it. So that the churches may with confidence look to him to supply all their needs, and the ministers, commit themselves to his disposal, provision and direction. And either churches or ministers by looking to any other sources, dishonor him; the one, as their husband; the other, as their master. But let the churches beware of false prophets or messengers, those who come in his name, with messages from others, or run without being sent of him.

them new things.

3rd. We now come to our Lord's address to this church state, or to the churches of this period.

1st. His complaint against them. "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest and art dead;" again verse 2, "For I have not found thy works perfect before God." We have been accustomed to speak so highly of the Waldenses as comprising the true church in its external form, during the dark ages, that it may surprise some that I should consider these charges as having any bearing upon them. But as in individual christians, they generally render themselves needful of chastisement by in some way leaving their first love, before God sends it, so I think of the church, it needed being driven from the valleys of Piedmont and scattered, for its purification from corruptions. The occasion for the churches becoming corrupted in these valleys was very natural. They were in a great measure insulated from other people, knew no other religion than that which they professed, except the Catholic, and that, they held in abhorrence. Parents and children thus living together as a distinct community from generation to generation, alike prejudiced by education against the Catholics, and in favor of their own religion, it is no wonder that they should have sunken into a formal state, and the unregenerated portion, if they did not, many of them, actually got by profession into the churches, yet should exercise a strong influence in their religious affairs. Hence whilst they had a name that they lived they had become dead and formal as a body, and their work therefore of separating themselves from unregenerated professors and formal worship, to the spiritual religion and worship of Christ's gospel, was not fully carried out, and therefore "not perfect before God." Hence being in this state, no wonder that when Calvin and the Geneva church sent their messengers among them, with professions of friendship and sympathy for them, they by their superior advantages of education, and persuasion, should disciple many of this simple people to Calvin's creed and infant sprinkling. Hence the claim set up by the Paedobaptists that the Waldenses were paedobaptists. Hence they had a name that they lived, were members of the true living church, but were as to the great body of them, a dead mass; and their works were not perfect before God, they did not maintain the perfect order of the gospel; did not go on unto perfection, but rather into corruption. These complaints against the church in Sardis, are evidently given as the general characteristic of that church state. Hence we shall find these complaints remaining equally good against the church since its being driven from the valleys of Piedmont as before. It is true that those few of whom it was said "they shall walk with me in light, &c.," who had known the truth experimentally or spiritually, and were preserved from the general destruction of that people, being driven from their valleys, wandered over the various Protestant countries of Europe, hoping to be protected, as Protestants, particularly Calvinists had appeared to take so much interest in their behalf, but as wherever they went, they were constrained to bear their testimony to the truth, and that to the simple gospel truth as they had received it from the Scriptures, and to believers' baptism; they soon drew down upon them persecution from the Protestants. In England in particular, although persecuted, the members discipled to the truth and order of the gospel increased, and among these were some learned men, and others who were impatient of persecution and who persuaded the body of these Waldenses, or Lollards, or Baptists, as they were called, to associate together in associations, and to put forth as their united belief a Confession of their faith, as a protection against persecutions; and further took steps to have schools established in order to educate men for the ministry, &c. But in these Articles of Faith, they still professed believers' baptism as the only gospel baptism, how then could this course screen them from persecution? 1st. They had before, in common with the Baptists in Germany, been charged with Arianism and many other monstrous ideas, but now with Calvin adopting the substance of the Nicene Creed, and Calvin's views generally of doctrine, they showed that they were with the Presbyterians in doctrine, and hence were known as Calvinistic Baptists. 2nd. By forming associations they were enabled more fully to show their numbers and increase, and the men of influence they had among them, and thus to show they were not so despicable a class as they had been held to be. 3rd. By establishing schools of learning and taking care to have learned ministers among them; they obviated the charge of ignorance made against them. Hence whilst Mosheim in his Ecclesiastical History speaks with the utmost contempt of what he terms the Ana-Baptists on the continent, he exempts the Particular Baptists of England from this censure, and speaks of their doctrine and order with commendation and that "their community is ruled by men eminent for piety and learning." Cent. 15th, Sect.3, Part 2D. These Articles of Faith became through their associations a test of fellowship, and were adopted by most of the Baptists in this country as such. I have no doubt that our churches and brethren mostly have held on to these Articles, &c., as necessity safeguards against the introduction of error and carnal professors among them; but experience has undeniably proved that instead of being safeguards they were no other, than sheeps clothing, ready made, for wolves to put on. This may appear harsh; but where is there the O.S. Baptist who was such thirty or even twenty years ago, who does not remember the annoyance he used to experience at seeing churches, and ministers, coming forward and claiming fellowship and seats in associations, upon the ground of their holding to the Baptist Confession of Faith, when it was known that they were bitterly opposed to those ministers who preached experimentally the doctrine set forth in that same Confession, and were preaching and countenancing a system of doctrine opposite to it. And did the grievance wax worse, until a majority of the churches and associations of the Baptist denomination had become completely leavened with this deception of carrying one Confession of Faith in their letters to the associations, and another into the pulpits, and on their tongues generally; until the Old School Baptists had to come out from this deceptive and dead mass by the skin of their teeth?

Can there then be any doubt as to the Baptist denomination, that their work was not perfect before God, and that whilst they had a name as the living or visible church of Christ, they were collectively a dead mass?

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., Dec.5, 1850.

THE SARDIS CHURCH STATE - REV. 3:1-5. PART II

BROTHER BEEBE: - In the former Number, I briefly stated the history of the Sardis church state, from the scattering of the Waldenses to the separation of the Old School from the New School Baptists. The enquiry will arise, whether the work of the Old School in separating from the corruptions among the Baptists, was a perfect work before God; and whether they came out altogether a living body? I think not, for we are yet in Sardis, and the complaint still stands against us. The fact is that as Rachel in leaving her father to go with Jacob to Isaac, in the land of promise, took with her the images or gods of her father, so the Old School Baptists have brought out with them customs established by their fathers, such as Confessions of Faith and Associations; and they can make no better plea for them, than Rachel made to hide those she had stolen and which involved in it an acknowledgement of present barrenness. Excuse me for the reference, "For whatever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through faith and comfort of the Scriptures - (not of men's productions) - might have hope." Rom.15:4. Whether these things will have any less evil effect among the Old School in the end, than they had among the Baptists formerly, is difficult to say. But generally it may be assumed that like causes under similar circumstances, will produce like effects. It is true we have no schools among us for educating young men for the ministry, and have as yet made no move toward it. Our associations appear pretty well guarded against any encroachment of power over the churches, but not more so than were the constitutions of the early associations among the Baptists. The fact is, let there be in an association one or two leading brethren, who have obtained the confidence of the churches, and let there be in them, a secret, but governing hankering either for popularity, or for power over the churches and with the advantages of the associational compact, they will lead the churches into bondage before they are aware that their safequards have been encroached upon; as past experience abundantly shows. As to written Confessions of Faith, they are what they ever have been from the day that Constantine's Council first established one at Nice, until the present moment; a ground for persecuting in one way or other, all who dared honestly to enquire for themselves on the several points embraced, and were thereby led to differ from them, even in expression. But the images or gods were all given up to Jacob before he went up to Bethel, the house of God, and hid under an oak in Shechem. So before the visible church will again be truly distinguished as the house of God, all these devices of men will be given up, by Rachel, or the sheep, as Rachel signifies. Rachel also died whilst in travail with her last son. So I think before the raising up again, the two Witnesses, even the Old School Baptist Church in its form and present organization will die. And the Witnesses that are raised will be indeed a man child; a Benoni, a son of the church's sorrow in her last persecution, in the killing of the Witnesses; a Benjamin, the son of Jacob's right hand, but left handed men that can sling stones at an hair's breath and not miss. They will rule all nations with a rod of iron, beating down everything that is in opposition to the truth and order of the gospel. See Gen.35:4 & 18, Judges 20:16 & Rev.12:5.

I have showed how that the works of the Waldenses, and of the Baptists were not perfect, and how they were dead, &c., and have glanced at the same complaints as standing against the Old School Baptists; but I wish to offer a few more remarks on these points with particular reference to the Old School Baptists.

First: I cannot think our work is perfect before God until we come explicitly to his standard. And this certainly is not, and will not be the case, so long as we adhere to the productions of men, (as are the Articles of Faith,) as a more correct delineation of God's truth, and a more perfect test of truth and error, or discrimination between them, than are the Scriptures, which are God's own revelation on the subject. As to being dead whilst we have a name to live as the church of Christ; I have a hope that the great body of the Old School Baptists are not at this time a dead mass, but as before remarked I see not why the same causes may not produce the same effects among us, as they produced formerly in the Baptist denomination. We have the same elements of death among us as were among them, for whilst we profess to receive the Scriptures as a perfect standard of truth and order, a great majority perhaps, of us hold to the Confessions of Faith, as a more convenient, if not a more perfect criteria of truth, and to associations, as an order that cannot be dispensed with. Associations are the creatures of men, and are therefore liable to be used of men for any purpose, and molded into any shape. The Confessions of Faith are but a dead letterstandard, for it is impossible for men to infuse into their productions, that spirit and life which are in the words of Christ. Hence, natural persons can receive sentimentally all that is contained in them; and children can be educated in the belief of all they contain as easily as they can in the Episcopal Creed or the Westminster Standards; and we, some of us, know what strenuous advocates many persons formerly were for the doctrine of the catechism, who gave no evidence of being anything but natural persons. But it may be asked, Would the Scriptures be any more of a definite standard by which to discriminate between truth and error, and between true and false believers, than are Confessions of Faith? I answer no, not in the mere letter of them; for where is there the religionist that professes not to believe the Scriptures? Dead letter preaching and believing, amounts to nothing, whether the Scriptures or Creeds be the standard. There are a good many of those whom I hope are subjects of grace, that seem to lose sight of the fact that the words which Christ speaks, are spirit and are life, and therefore that the flesh profiteth nothing in understanding or receiving the doctrine of Christ. But the flesh does profit a good deal in knowing and understanding the letter of the Scriptures, for it is by our natural powers that we learn to read them, &c. The spiritalone quickeneth to an understanding of the truth as it is in Jesus. And the spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God, and therefore he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." God never designed that natural persons should know the doctrine of Christ, he has hid these things from the wise and prudent. Hence, I believe that it is the spirit of the word, it is "Christ in you the hope of glory," that is alone the criterion between truth and falsehood in religion, and he alone who is spiritual, is capable of judging of these things. Set up any dead letter standard you please, and you make the church accessible to any one who has experienced a conversion; and by conversion I do not mean regeneration, natural persons can be converted. Hence I cannot think that the works of the church will be perfect before God, till laying aside all other standards she comes and by conversion I do not mean regeneration, natural persons can be converted. Hence I cannot think that the works of the church will be perfect before God, till laying aside all other standards she comes to the spiritual standard. But it does appear to me that the tendency of things among us at this time, is the other way. A quotation of texts of Scripture to support a position, both in preaching and in writing, with a mere reference to the sound of the words, without considering the idea intended by the Holy Ghost to be conveyed thereby is too common. The Scriptures may be more readily, and more deceptively perverted by quoting them in false connection; than in any other way.

Second: I come to Christ's words of commendation and promise concerning a few in Sardis.

1st. "Thou hast a few names, even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments." This expression, even in Sardis, shows the church is here described, to be in her lowest state, unless perhaps the Laodicean may be worse. There were those among the Waldenses, who were experimentally established in the truth and order of the gospel, and who therefore could not be persuaded by Calvin's missionaries, nor driven by the severe persecutions of the Papists, to depart therefrom. These therefore did not corrupt their profession by a departure therefrom, nor defile their garments by an intercourse with the Mother of Harlots, or with any of the Protestant daughters. So in reference to the Baptist denomination, there were as has been manifested, even in the church as existing among them, those who did not defile their garments, by the corruptions brought in with the second Beast, but separated themselves therefrom. So also however corrupted the church may become as now existing among the Old School Baptists, there will undoubtedly a few be found at the last who have not defiled their garments; but will endure faithfully the persecutions connected with the killing of the Witnesses.

2nd. "And they shall walk with me in white for they are worthy." Walking does not seem to indicate that resting from their labors in glory which awaits all saints; but rather their travels here in the wilderness. Christ walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and they walk with him as followers of him. They walk with him in white. It is said of the bride, that; "She should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints;" (Rev. 19:8;) and Christ is their righteousness. Hence as the saints walk by faith, they view themselves as clean and white before God, how much soever they may see their own pollutions, and the world may esteem them vile. But again it is said of that innumerable multitude which John saw around the throne, "These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev.7:14. The washing of the saints from their sins is ascribed to Christ, "Who hath washed us from our sins in his own blood." Rev.1:5. But in the other text, they are said to have washed their garments, &c., and this in connection with their having come out of great tribulation, and therefore to their having endured persecution. This is what I think is intended in the expression, "They shall walk with me in white," that they shall be honored with suffering persecution for Christ's sake. There is nothing short of the drawings of God's love, that has so great a tendency, as persecutions for the truth's sake, to lead the saints not only to seek to keep themselves unspotted from the world, but also to adhere more closely to, and more earnestly to contend for the doctrine of the cross, or Christ's special atonement, in distinction from all compositions, and mixtures of men's devising; and therefore to keep their garments or profession free from pollution.

Besides, their being persecuted for the truth's sake, shows clearly that they are virgins, (Rev.14:4,) and therefore emblematically clad in white. Thus, those Waldenses, who escaped from the valley of Piedmont, and those who succeeded them as Baptists, were severely persecuted by the Protestant States of Europe. So those Old School Baptists that shall be found standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, will have in the end, to suffer persecution.

3rd. "For they are worthy." Yes, even of so great a privilege. But wherein? Not, in themselves more than others; but in the worthiness which Christ has been pleased to put upon them, in enabling them faithfully to follow him.

4th. "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment." John saith, "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." I John 5:4. Faith then is that by which believers overcome the world. As Watts sings,

"Faith hath an overcoming power, It triumphs in the dying hour."

It enables the saint to resist the allurements and flatteries of the world, to face its scorn and frowns, and even its persecutions unto death, with triumph. This faith, which is not the result of testimony, nor in any way the exercise of the rational faculties of man, but is spiritual, and is the gift of God, will be tried in those saints who live at the time of the slaying of the Witnesses; and in a measure, in those who live from this time on, as it has been in times past; but it will overcome, and bear the saints triumphantly through.

"The same shall be clothed in white raiment." This may have reference to the saint's ultimate triumph in glory. Though I think it probable that it has special reference to those who shall continue steadfast in the faith and out live the killing of the Witnesses, and their being raised again; for then all the reproaches will be cleared away from the faithful in Christ Jesus; they will be generally acknowledged as the church of Christ, whilst Babylon with all its confederacies will sink under the scorn and hatred of the nations of the earth, to rise no more.

5th. "And I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels." And I will not blot out his name out of the book of life. Were not similar expressions found in other texts, there would be no difficulty in understanding this declaration as designed to give confidence to Christ's doubting, tempted, persecuted ones, that they will not be disowned of their Lord, notwithstanding all their fears to the contrary, arising from a sense of their own unworthiness, and from seeing so many turn from the truth and order of the gospel, for the sake of shunning persecution. But as in Rev.22:19, we read, "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, &c.," and in Psal.69:28, concerning some, "Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous;" there seems to be a call for some further explanation of this expression, of blotting out of the book of life. I have no idea that the Lamb has literally a book which are recorded the names of his people; but as typical Israel were so regularly numbered, and their names and genealogies so particularly recorded and transmitted down in the books of the Old Testament, we are thereby taught the particular knowledge the Lord has of his people, of what kindred soever they may be. Hence the declaration of the Apostle, "The foundation of God standeth sure having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his." II Tim.2:19. Again on the return of the Jews from their captivity, there were among them those who were accounted and named as priests, who could not find their register when they came to be reckoned by genealogy, that is their register as being of the sons of Aaron, and were therefore "as polluted put from the priesthood." Ezra 2:61 & 62. And this is the idea intended to be conveyed by the expressions under consideration as I understand them; namely, that among those who have a name to live, as being members of the church of Christ in its visible form, but are dead will not when their faith is tried find their register, or show that faith which proves their genealogy to be from Christ the great High Priest, and will therefore as polluted, in some way, be severed from the priesthood, or church of Christ. Whereas those who have that overcoming faith which shows their genealogy to be from Christ, will be owned of him, as members of his church, in its triumph over antichrist, and in its triumph over death; or in its being brought out from the captivity of each.

Third: I now will notice Christ's exhortations to this church or to his church in this state, as found in the 2nd and 3rd verses.

1st. "Be watchful and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die." This intimates that what we still have among us of a spiritual and living nature are ready to sink into a cold and lifeless formality. May we then be led to watch, that nothing further of dead letter forms be admitted among us in doctrine and worship, and that our churches be not further filled with formal professors. And may our attachment and regard be strengthened toward those things which we have received by faith, and not of men; for those only have life. What we are taught of God is spirit and is life; what we learn from men, however correct it may be in theory, is mere dead letter knowledge. Let us then pay more respect to experience, and less to the opinions of men.

2nd. "Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard." Paul says to the Galatians, "This only would I learn of you, Received ye the spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" And again, "Are ye so foolish; having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Gal.3:2 & 3. These enquiries are highly important to be considered by us, in remembering how we have received and heard, that we may know for ourselves, whether we received the gospel, on which we hope for salvation, of man or were taught it by the revelation of Jesus Christ. That which we have received of the Lord, let us hold fast; that which is after man, is of no value.

"And repent." Certainly not of that which we are to hold fast, for that would be contradictory. But whilst we hold fast that which the Lord has taught us, and was received by faith, and which therefore is life, may we repent of every system and notion of man's devising, these are dead; and dead notions work death in our minds to that which is spiritual and even a persecuting spirit towards those who contend for that which is spirit and is life.

We as the professed living church are with propriety called upon to repent. But still we shall not truly repent unless the Lord is pleased to give us repentance. Repentance he will give to some, but whether he will grant it to us generally as a church and people, or whether he will leave us to go on self- confident in our own opinions and ways, until the troubles connected with the killing of the Witnesses come suddenly upon us like a thief in the night, is not for me to say. But indications certainly more and more appear to be that the latter will be the case.

But, brethren, May the Lord, if consistent with his will grant repentance both to you and me, and count us worthy to walk with him in white.

Brother Beebe, I have been led in this communication to dwell somewhat on some points which have been heretofore controverted through the SIGNS. I have not done it with any desire to provoke a revival of those controversies, or to give offense, but simply to give what I honestly believe to be a correct exposition of this prophecy. If any brother not satisfied with this, will give a more Scriptural exposition, I shall be glad to see it, and will not reply in controversy.

Yours with kind regards, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Dec.17, 1850.

SAVED BY THE LORD.

Corresponding Letter: The Fryingpan Old School Baptist Church and the churches and brethren uniting with her in a meeting for correspondence, - To the churches and Associations corresponding with us together, with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and walk in truth: Send brotherly greetings.

Beloved Brethren: - In addressing to you this our letter of correspondence, we would call your attention to the declaration found in Deut.33 - part of verse 29, as a theme of contemplation. "Happy art thou O, Israel: who is like unto thee, O, people, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency."

Moses having in the preceding part of the chapter pronounced prophetically a blessing upon each tribe severally, then addresses Israel collectively, first as Jeshurun, and in the text above quoted as Israel.

"Happy art thou O, Israel." Israel is here addressed as singular, as one whilst she is spoken of as a people. Wherein was this unity found but in him to whom this name Israel was given, and from whom as his posterity they inherited it, together with the blessing therein implied? This was evidently the case with national Israel, and can be no less so with spiritual Israel the antitype. At the time Jacob received this name he was in very straightened circumstances. He had just received word that his brother Esau was coming to meet him, and four hundred men with him; he knew Esau's enmity against him, he no doubt felt conscious of the provocation he had given him. He therefore feared that himself, his wives and children and all that he had would fall a prey to Esau's vengeance. After making certain arrangements, and having sent all over the brook, "Jacob was left alone, and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day, and when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh, and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint as he wrestled with him. And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh, And he said I will not let thee go except thou bless me. And he said, What is thy name? And he said, Jacob. And he said, thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Gen.32:24 - 28. This has all undoubtedly a typical reference to the spiritual Israel, but we cannot now go into a full illustration of it, lest it swell our letter to too great a length. We will remark that Jacob's posterity were all involved in his sin toward Esau, and in the threatened vengeance, and in his prevailing to clear away his sin before God, and to have Esau's enmity subdued, his posterity, those already born, as well as those that should be born after, participated in the same blessing. Hence the name Israel was attached to them, and so recognized of God. Exod.4:22 - "And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my firstborn." Now brethren, would we not insult your feelings, were we to ask you whether as spiritual Israelites, you in your own persons, as princes have power with God and with men? How then have you prevailed, and have been manifested as Israelites? National Israel as we have seen thus prevailed in an eternal sense and obtained the name Israel through and in their immediate head Jacob. Have we not a Head, a Jacob through whom as Israelites we have power with God and with men?

Jacob was so named from the circumstance of his hand's taking hold of Esau's heel. Esau as from his names, Esau and Edom, as well as from his being the first born and being disappointed of the blessing was evidently typical of national Israel as manifested under the Sinai covenant. Had not Christ hold of the heel of national Israel, in all the manifestation or birth of that people from the promise to Abraham to give him a seed on through the giving of the law with all its ceremonies and forms? That is, was not all, designed to prefigure the coming of the Messiah, and to introduce Him to the view of faith as well as to prepare the way for His manifestation in the flesh? Thus we see His hand hold of Esau's heel in the declaration to Abrham, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," as well as in His being the substance of all the sacrifices of the law. Again Jacob was distinguished as the elect of God. See Rom.9:10, 13. So Christ is declared as the elect of God. See Isa.42:1 & 65:9. But the posterity of Jacob were elected in him to be participants in the blessing of Isaac, and that whilst Jacob was yet in the womb, and therefore it must be as they existed in him, and hence it was said to Rebekah: "Two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels" which could only immediately have taken place in the birth of Esau and Jacob. Gen.25:23. So the children of God are said to have been chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. See Eph.1:4. If before the foundation of the world, of course when He only, as their life existed in God, before sin existed and therefore before He could be manifested or declared in the world. And if then chosen in Him, it must have been, that according to the type, they were chosen in His election, and must have existed in Him and were a distinct manner of people in time to proceed from Him. Brethren, is it not in Christ and in Him only, that you find your Israel, your power with God and with men? Is it not alone through His atonement, and intercession that you have confidence to approach God with your supplications, and hope for acceptance with Him? Is it not Christ in you the hope of glory. Christ living in you (Col.1:27, Gal.2:20) that gives you the victory over the old man and over the allurements and opposition of men? Or is it from some new strength that you have obtained of your own? In other words, Is that faith which is the victory &c. a faith of your own, or is it not the faith of the Son of God? See Gal.2:16,

20. Happy indeed art thou, O, Israel; thy life being one with the Son of God. I John 5:12. Christ being thy life, thy salvation and righteousness, no curse can now reach thee, nor any plague come nigh thy dwelling in a spiritual sense. The blessing of God rests upon thy head and therefore upon His body and upon each member thereof. Thy very afflictions are blessings, and not in disguise neither, but often seen openly as such.

"Who is like thee, O, people saved by the Lord?" Truly in all times, the spiritual Israel, the members and body of Christ, have been singular, a different manner of people from others, in their salvation. Saved by the Lord, by Jehovah as it is in the original. As He is, as His name signifies, self-existent, He is all that He is, absolutely of Himself, therefore in the manifestation of Himself in His power, in His grace, or in His holiness, or in His love and mercy, He cannot be controlled, influenced, nor helped by any other, nor governed in the manifestations of any of His attributes, but by His own purpose and His purpose and design, must be like Himself eternal. Hence His people in being brought to know His salvation, are brought off from every idea of conditions. Their repentance instead of being viewed by them as a condition, is in itself a turning with loathing from every doing and exercise, yea from their whole Adamic nature, with all its works and faculties, as being depraved and rendering them unworthy of the favor of God. Instead of viewing their faith as a means of their salvation it gives them to see their salvation as already complete in Christ Jesus, that He is that salvation, (Isa.62:11) so that we might as well talk of faith's being the means of Christ's existence, as of its being the means of salvation. As we are saved by Jehovah, Christ must be, and is Jehovah, existing of Himself, and not of another. If the life which is the light of men, was in Him in the beginning, He was still the Word and the Word was God. If He is the only begotten Son, He is in the bosom of the Father, He and the Father are one. John 1:18 & 10:30. Hence the life of believers is hid with Christ in God. If Christ is in His people, the hope of glory liveth in them. Col.1:27, Gal.2:20. God, even the Father is in them there, "I in them, and thou in me." John 17:23. If that as the Mediator, He might make that offering to law and justice which was required for the redemption of His people. He partook with them of flesh and blood, He was still, God manifest in the flesh. Contemplate the salvation of Israel as you may as completed in Christ or as existing experimentally in the believer, his hope of glory, it is by the Lord; it was His purpose, it is all His work, all that was necessary for accomplishing it, He provided in Himself, and communicates it with Himself as the life, to His people, as His body. Hence the church of which He is Head is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Eph.1:22, 23. Who then is like thee, O, people? Who is there of all the shades of religion in the world that do not manifest their opposition to Thy salvation? "The shield of thy help." That is, Jehovah is the shield &c. Israel by his relation to Adam was ruined, condemned and helpless. But God laid help upon one that is mighty, exalted one chosen out of the people. Psa.89:19. By David in this connection, we are evidently to understand the antitype of David, He who was David's Lord and Son, Jesus Christ as we have showed is mighty as the Jehovah, and He is called the Mighty God, Isa.9:6. Help was laid on Him, in that He was appointed the Surety of the better testament, a Mediator between God and men, and the High Priest of our profession. Israelites are made to know by experience that all their help must come from Him. As He said to His disciples "Without me ye can do nothing;" (John 15:5) and that they can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth them. Phil 4:13. And Christ says, "Because I live, ye shall live also."

A shield is an armour of defense. Christ as the helper of His people was assaulted with the wrath of the law, it met Him at His birth and pursued Him to His tomb. He was assaulted by all the rage of Satan. Nothing short of the Godhead could have sustained Him under the assaults and enabled Him to triumph over them, and to bring His body the church out with Him unharmed from the contest. The help itself, the salvation of Israel is assaulted by many enemies, external and internal, but Jehovah shields it. "He that keepeth Israel, &c., Psal.121:4,5. "And who is the sword of thy excellency." The word here rendered excellency, signifies exalted, or exaltation. In the passage already quoted, Psal.89:19 where David is spoken of as the type of Christ, it is written: "I have exalted one chosen out of the people." David was chosen from among his brethren and exalted to the throne of Israel. So Christ is manifested as one with His brethren. Thus, it is written: "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren." Heb.2:11. And thus Christ said to Mary; "Go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." John 20:17. Here He fully acknowledges a brotherhood with His disciples, as having with them one common Father, and one God. Not only this, but it is also written that: "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same, that through death, &c." Heb.2:14. In the foregoing verses He had both acknowledged them as brethren and as children, and thus claims a father and a brother's right to redeem them. And that the law might recognize His right to redeem, and accept of satisfaction at His hands He came into the law place of the children by taking part of the flesh and blood of which they partook and in which they had sinned. He thus humbled Himself to come under the law, both as God (Phil.2:6,7) and as the Son. Hence it is written: "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." Heb. 5:8. His humiliation thus was the ground of His exaltation as spoken of in the text above quoted from Psal.89. See Eph. 4:9 & 10, and Phil.2:6 - 10. As the condemnation of Christ to death lawfully, could only be by His standing in that relation to His people as their life, by which the law could hold Him as one with them and their sins as the sins of His body and members, and hence could inflict the penalty on Him. If their sins were not thus considered as His, how could David when speaking of Christ in Psal.40 represent Him in verse 12, as saying "Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head, &c." Christ individually had no sin.

If then Christ is so one with His people, He the life and head, and they the body and members in particular, (I Cor.

12:12-27), that their sins were His, did not Paul rightly say "I am crucified with Christ"? Gal.2:20. If crucified together, were they not raised up together? Hear what Paul testifies: "But God who is rich in mercy, for His great love wherewith He loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Eph.2:4-6. Notice that this quickening, this raising &c., is not only together with Christ, but it is in Christ Jesus, it must therefore have been in His being quickened, in His being raised; and therefore as one with Him. And who is it that has the presumption to call in question a truth so divinely testified to by an inspired Apostle? In the exaltation or excellency of Israel; the Lord is the sword of this excellency. By this sword, by the power of His self-existent Godhead, Christ cut His way through the curse of the law, through death and the grave to the exaltation of His people. This sword was stronger then the flaming sword placed at the east of Eden. Jesus by His death vanguished that. The religion of Christ is a living and experimental religion; it is not to be supposed that Christ as the head and life of His people hath ascended to glory with the purpose of leaving His body or a single member of His body behind. The head cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you. I Cor.12:21. As every member of a body is quickened by the same life which animates the head, so every member of Christ's body must be quickened with that life which animates Him as the head, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His," and they must be born of the seed of Abraham, of Israel, or they are not Israelites. Again the saints must be kept and their bodies raised spiritual bodies before they can participate individually in the glory, the exaltation of Christ. But when we consider that Jehovah Himself is the sword by which this excellency, this high exaltation is achieved, who can doubt its accomplishment, whatever obstacles we see in the way, whether within us or without?

Brethren, this is the salvation in which we believe, and to which we would bear our testimony. It meets with opposition and false representations even from some who once professedly walked in fellowship with us. But we rejoice to know and to testify that this is the God we worship, the Saviour we adore, the Mediator in whom we trust. Even Him of whom John testifies that, "This is the true God and eternal life." I John 5:20. Therefore though reviled and reproached, we would rejoice in the consolations of our trust.

Our meeting which is drawing to a close has been truly refreshing and comforting to us, we have been highly grateful at receiving a goodly number of corresponding messengers from our sister associations, ministers and other brethren. The preaching that we have had has been of Christ and His salvation and in opposition to all the attempts of men to save themselves; so that we have been made to think the language of Moses to Israel applies to us. "Happy art thou O Israel, who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help and the sword of thine excellency."

To our sister Associations we would say, we desire a continuance of your correspondence by minutes and messengers. Our next association will be held by appointment, the Lord willing, with the church at Mt. Pleasant Fairfax Co. Va. on Thursday before the second Lord's day in August 1853.

S.TROTT. Moderator, 1852.

SCRIPTURE: THE ONLY CERTAIN RULE & FINAL AUTHORITY.

BROTHER BEEBE: - Agreeable to my promise to Mr. Dennison, in my last, I will now examine the correctness of his intimations concerning those practices which he mentions, as not being warranted by Scripture.

Mr. Dennison addresses his enquiries to those brethren referred to, as to Particular Baptists; and from what he has before said concerning their views, I presume they are "Old School" Particular Baptists. As one of this class of Baptists, I will, previous to enter into an examination of the particular circumstances, lay down the following general position as received by us; namely, that what the Apostles loosed, is as much loosed to us, as what they bound, are bound to us. That is, wherein they left on record, a circumstantial practice as having no specific order to be observed, we are warranted from Scripture to observe that order which appears most convenient, as much so, as we are required to confine ourselves to a specific order or practice, when such are particularly pointed out. And we of course, will no sooner submit to be bound by men to a particular order in the one, than to be led into an indifferent practice in the other case.

Now with this general principle in view, we will proceed to notice the particular articles of inquiry. Mr. Dennison's first inquiry is, "Have you any Scripture warrant for formularies of faith?" I answer that we have the following Scriptures as proofs, that the primitive Church was of one faith: Acts 2:42, "and they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine." Acts 4:32, "and the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul." Jude 3, "that ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints;" and from I Cor.1:10, it is equally evident that it is incumbent upon the Gentile Churches to maintain the same unity of faith; for the apostle says, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." From these texts it is manifest, that there was in the primitive church, and that there is required in the Gentile Churches, a perfect understanding of the faith received, and to be contended for &c.; but whether this understanding among the Members of the Church was had, or is to be obtained merely by their conversing together upon the doctrine preached by the Apostles, or whether this doctrine was committed to writing for the mutual examination of the views of the members of the church, is not said.

Hence the fair conclusion is, that whilst the Churches are warranted and required by Scripture, to maintain a unity of faith among the members, they are left at liberty either to have their views of doctrine, or faith, committed to writing, for the convenient comparing of the views of persons to be received; or to enter into a verbal examination and comparison of their views. So much for formularies of faith.

His next inquiry is relative to "plans of decorum," – in answer to this inquiry I observe that old fashioned Particular Baptists think themselves by a divine right, entitled to the plan of decorum which the Apostle has left them; I Cor.14:40, "let all things be done decently and in order;" and with this they generally are contented. If he means by plans of decorum, certain written rules, drawn up by the wisdom of men and taken from the usages of worldly bodies, not from Scripture, he must propose his inquiry to those who adopt such in their churches, not to us; for we do not approve of them.

Mr. Dennison's third inquiry is relative to our Scripture authority for a medium of record attached to each Church. That there was some medium of record, or remembrance connected with the Apostolic Churches, that portion of Scripture called the Acts of the Apostles is a standing proof; and a further proof we have from the accounts given in that book of the number of the disciples at one time, as in Acts 1:15, of the number added at one time, as in Acts 2:41, and of certain transactions that took place in particular Churches; as in the Church at Antioch, Acts 13:1,3; 14:27 & 15:1,2, in the Church at Jerusalem, Acts 6:1,7; 15:5 – to the 30th, as well as in other cases. Whether this medium was in the first place traditional, or whether it was a committing of the events, &c., to writing we are not told. It is enough for us to know that there was some medium of record attached to the first Churches, and that we are left at liberty to adopt such a medium as is most convenient.

The fourth inquiry is, "Where is your Bible authority for choosing moderators and clerks;" as to choosing moderators, in case the Pastor is present in the Church, there is no Bible authority for it, but it is an infringement upon a divinely appointed office. If a church has a right to act upon business in the absence of a Pastor, it is right for some one to lead either voluntarily or by the request of the church. And it is more conformable to that scriptural rule; "let each esteem others better than themselves," to wait to be invited.

With regard to choosing Clerks, as we have Scripture proof that there was some medium of record in the primitive churches, and as we have no proof that this was merely traditional, we are authorized to keep in remembrance the transactions of a Church by means of a written record, consequently the Church is left at liberty to appoint someone to record the additions and transactions which they wish remembered.

The fifth inquiry is, after our Bible authority for singing and praying before preaching. We have Bible authority for singing and praying in the Church, and that as spiritual worship, see I Cor.14:14,16, Col.3:16, Acts 12:5, Eph.6:18, and many other passages; and it is equally evident that there is no established order given to us in the word, as to the time of singing and praying, consequently we are left at liberty to adopt what order we please; so that we do not introduce confusion, as was the case in the Church at Corinth, by neglecting all order. I Cor.14:26,33. But we are not left at liberty to give up the singing in the Church to a choir of unregenerated youths, because we are required to sing with the spirit.

The sixth inquiry is, "Where that authority for partaking of the Lord's Supper in a sitting, instead of a reclining position." With the strongest confidence we may demand of Mr.

Dennison, to show us any command to confine ourselves to a reclining, or to any other posture in partaking of the Lord's Supper; or to prove from Scripture that the Apostolic Churches confined themselves to any one posture in observing the ordinance. Without the command of Christ, or uniform example of the Apostles, no man may bind us to a particular posture or form. Paul states to the Church at Corinth; what he received of the Lord relative to this ordinance, but does not mention having received or having delivered to them a command to observe any particular posture in receiving the Lord's Supper. And we do believe that as a faithful servant, he delivered to them the whole message received, and therefore, that he specified to them everything essential in this ordinance. He adds, and we have confidence in what he says; "as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he comes," without any limitation as to the posture of the body. I Cor.11:23,26.

The seventh inquiry relates to the same ordinance, and demands our authority for omitting to administer that holy ordinance always in an upper chamber. I answer it is plainly contained in the passage we have just noticed, I Cor.

11:23,26; the latter verse evidently contains full liberty to administer it and to receive it, in remembrance of Christ, and in any convenient place, where it may be done decently, and where the Church has come together into one place, verse 20 of same chapter.

His last inquiry is, "Where even that for the erection of Meeting Houses, with their cushioned pews and baptisteries?" As to cushioned pews, baptisteries and other furniture, and ornaments of worldly splendor, we old fashioned Baptists plead not guilty. Such things, as well as extravagant houses are generally found among those Baptists who boast so much of their benevolent exertions for the salvation of men, and preach so strongly the necessity of giving money to their benevolent institutions, in order to help save the heathen from perishing in their sins. If you believe what you preach, why not sell your damask cushions, costly carpeting, extravagant chandeliers, &c., and content yourselves to worship in a plain house, that you might have more to give yourselves, and show yourselves less conformed to the world. But the evil of this extravagance does not stop here; many of these churches have run heavily in debt to get up this pompous show, and then admit anything into their pulpits, but the Gospel, that they may draw a congregation of the rich to help them keep down their interest. Yea, some of these popular benevolent Churches have contrived to cheat their creditors out of their just dues, and still hold their splendid Meeting Houses.

But in reference to our authority for building Meeting Houses; if we have no example of the primitive Churches, building houses particularly for worshiping in, we have abundant authority from the example of the Apostles to consider the place of meeting altogether an indifferent thing. We find the disciples meeting in the temple, a house built purposely for worship, Acts 2:46; in an upper room, Acts 1:13. We find Paul preaching by the river side; in the Jailor's house and in Synagogues, buildings erected expressly for worship; in his own hired house and in the schoolof Tyrannus. Hence, we have Bible authority for meeting in any place, most convenient, and even of occupying houses built for worship, when such can be had in peace, see Acts 19:8,9. But we have no authority for consecrating houses, for places of worship, or in any way giving sanction to the idea of one place being more holy than another; for not only did the Apostles teach us by their example to consider the place as a thing indifferent; but the Master has also taught us the same; see John 4:21,24. It is manifest, who they are that ascribe peculiar holiness to particular places, such as certain houses, and certain seats in the houses; not the Old School Particular Baptist.

Thus, we see that of this mighty catalogue of charges which Mr. Dennison has brought forward against the old Baptists, of departures from the word of God, there is but the one, of choosing Moderators that will stand against them; and even that fails, unless it can be proved that a Church has no right to transact business in the absence of a Pastor, unless there are Churches, who in the presence of their Pastor, throw contempt upon that scriptural office, by choosing one to preside in their meetings, if so they must answer for themselves. Now one word, upon Mr. Dennison's very modest remark, "We for one shall be satisfied to go on as we have commenced, desiring to labor, with all our might in the broad field of benevolent effort." This broad field of benevolent effort evidently is the charitable institutions of the age, which he tacitly acknowledges have no other scriptural warrant, but what he calls authorized implication. It of course, is not the field which the Baptists of past ages, nor even the Apostles labored in. This he modestly terms the broad field of benevolent effort; theirs by authorized implication was the narrow field of scriptural selfishness.

His authorized implication, to which he alludes as warranting the practice of those humanly contrived institutions, is we presume, the success which they boast of as attending them. How long have the Paedobaptist been raising this same argument to support infant sprinkling? As long as I have known anything about them; but to all such arguments, and warrants, we may well say, we have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place.

Farewell, A WALDENSIS.

Elder Samuel Trott

THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE OF JUSTIFICATION.

Explanation Of Views Heretofore Advanced On Justification.
BROTHER BEEBE: - In offering an explanation of my views of the scriptural doctrine of Justification, it seems necessary to give a very brief view of my understanding of the distinct headships of Christ and Adam, and of the distinct relation which the children of God bear to each.

In reference to the headship of Christ, my understanding is that the children of God derive from him a real principle of life, a spiritual life which constitutes them children of God, manifests them to be of his flesh and his bones, or one with him; and which is as distinct from the existence they derive from Adam as a head, as Christ is from Adam. Brother Beebe, in giving his views on Eph.2:5, (No.4, of present volume of the SIGNS,) has so fully anticipated me on this point, that I need not now dwell on it. I will just repeat in substance what I said on this point, in my second communication on Elder Water's pamphlet, namely; that as the children of God as they were produced in Christ, being one with him, and with him, sons and heirs of God, like him they stood, not under the law, but under grace. Hence I cannot conceive that in this, their standing in Christ, and oneness with him from eternity, as he ever dwelled in the bosom of the Father, they ever needed to be, or there was any room for their being justified from the demands of the law, their existence in Christ being as independent of the law under which creatures exist, as was that of the Son of God their Head. And they also, were like him pure and holy.

But, whilst it was the pleasure of God to bring forth Christ as a head, from everlasting, having his posterity in him, called his seed; it was his purpose that this spiritual seed should in time, become one with creatures of the dust, and be manifested only in this connection; and that the individuals thus quickened, should in this complex existence, as born of two heads, in their first, and second birth, be recognized as the sons of God. Hence for this purpose, man was to be created, of the earth earthy, in the image and after the likeness of his Creator; that is, Christ, having his bride and his posterity in him; and to be created a rational and accountable being. From the posterity of this man, as present with God in eternity, an election was made of those predestinated to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself; and given to Christ, to be by him, preserved, redeemed, and quickened with that life which was in him. Hence the purpose of God, given to the elect in Christ from before the foundation of the world, as I understand it to be developed in the scriptures, instead of being a purpose to hold them from eternity justified from the demands of the law and freed from sin, was a purpose to create them in Adam under the law, and leave them in him, to fall into sin and depravity, that they might thus become proper subjects to be redeemed from under the law, and that, becoming dead to the law, and of course, to their relation to Adam, as their head under the law, through an application of the law by the Holy Spirit, they might in their whole complex persons as born of Adam, and born again of Christ, or of the Spirit, be recognized according to their second birth, as members of Christ's body, and sons and heirs of God; and through Christ's conquest over death and the grave, to be raised with their bodies changed to spiritual and incorruptible bodies, to live and reign with Christ in glory. And thus where sin reigned unto death, the grace given them in Christ before the world began, shall reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord; making even the reign of sin subservient to the eternal purpose of bringing the elect to reign in glory.

Having premised thus much concerning the two headships, and the distinct relation which the people of God bear to each; that from the one, the first Adam in reference to the manifestations of the elect, they derive an earthly, but rational and accountable existence, together with depravity and condemnation; from the other, the Lord from heaven, a spiritual, eternal and heaven-born life. I will now show what part I understand Justification to bear in this great and glorious purpose.

I will here repeat, what I have heretofore said, that Justification is a legal term, and relates to the law under which man was created. The text (Rom.3:24,)

"Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus;" compared with Gal. 3:13, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us," would satisfy me that Justification relates to the clearance of the elect from the law, were their no other texts to the same point. Hence it is a provision made in Christ to meet the situation of the elect, as under the law in their relation to Adam.

It appears to me, that God, in his purpose to unite that life which was in the Word, with human beings created under the law, and left to fall into sin, designed both to make them know and rightly appreciate the good of holiness, of submission to God, of the heavenly inheritance, &c., by their experience of the contrast thereof, sin and misery, and thus making the forbidden tree to them, truly the tree of knowledge of good and evil, also to make himself known to them, and angels, in his glory as the only object of love, trust, &c., by a display, in their salvation, of all his divine attributes; his justice, holiness, sovereignty and power; as well as his love, mercy, &c. Whilst God therefore created man under a law as the standard of eternal right, and left him to his own creaturely weakness, and thus to fall, that creatures might see manifested their entire dependence on God, and that sin might appear as exceeding sinful, in being a transgression of that which is holy, just and good, and the love and mercy, &c., of God might be fully manifested in redeeming, saving and glorifying such transgressors; his holiness, justice and truth must also be maintained and shine forth in their deliverance. This could not be done, without the inflexible purity and majesty of the divine law being maintained. This again could not be done by inflicting its rigorous demands on fallen creatures, without sinking them to eternal ruin, as showed in the case of devils and impenitent men. Nor by inflicting those demands on another, on their account, excepting it should be one on whom the law had no demand on his own account, one who could honor the law and live, of whom the law could in justice demand and receive satisfaction in behalf of those for whom he undertook; and who by stepping into their law place could actually represent them, so that his obeying and bearing the curse should be as though, they did it in person. These requisitions could be found in none but in Christ. On him therefore help was laid; he perfectly answered to the occasion. For, as I have on a former occasion observed, Christ in being brought forth in that life which constituted him the Head and Representative of his people, was not brought forth as a distinct being or person, but that life was conceived in him as God, as the self-existent and independent Jehovah. This life never existed in a relation distinct from him as God, so that he, who is Christ, and the Head of the Church, having his people in him, is the essential Jehovah, equally with the Father. And the Church as the bride of Christ, and his people as the seed of Christ, are nowhere known as distinct from Christ, but as personally one with him. He is the Head, and the Church is his body, the fulness of him, that filleth all in all. Eph.1:23. He is the life of his people, and their life is hid with Christ in God. Col.3:3,4. Hence, the law, or any enemy spiritual or temporal, before it can come at that life which constitutes the believer a son of God, must come at Christ. This being the relation in which the Church, and children of God have ever stood in to Christ, being in him and one with him; they as such have ever been dealt with and viewed only in and through Christ. No evil could come to them in this relation without coming through Christ, and no good comes to them but through him. Hence, Christ could and must represent the Church and people of God, or they could not as such be represented; for I know of none having a right to represent a bride but her husband, or an unborn posterity but their head. Hence, I cannot think that the Church could have been justified before the foundation of the world, excepting in and through her Head and Husband Christ as representing her; and if this had been the case, he could not afterwards have been condemned, or made a curse as her representative.

Again, Christ being the self-existent Jehovah equally with the Father, he was dependent on, and accountable to none; no law therefore could bind him, none could exact of him obedience as in himself considered. Hence when he condescended to be made under the law, that as Husband and Representative of the Church, he might meet and cancel the demands the law had against her, he could obey in her behalf; which no created being could do, because on such, the law would have a previous demand on the ground of their creaturely existence. And the law could in right demand and receive of him obedience, when he thus came into her law place, in being made flesh, seeing that the Church was represented by him, she being in him. Until he proved inadequate to answer all the demands of the law against his Church, the penalty could never reach her; seeing it was, as she antecedently existed in him, that in her members, she was afterwards created in Adam under the law; hence, he as her then representative, was of right considered her Surety, that the law should be honored. When he thus by his obedience unto death, fully satisfied the demands, law and justice had against his people, it was as though they had made the satisfaction in person.

And as the act of Justification is nothing other than a public declaration by the judge of the clearance of a person against whom charges had been preferred, so I understand the act of the Justification of the Church was, when the eternal Judge declared her cleared in, and through her Head and Husband, from all the demands of law, by his resurrection from the dead without seeing corruption; or, in other words, when it was thus made manifest, that through the satisfaction rendered by Christ as the Substitute of his people, the divine law was honored, and eternal justice now harmonized in the entire deliverance of his people from the demands of the law, and from sin.

Here perhaps some further explanation may be necessary. It may be asked how the transgressions of the law by the elect could involve Christ in accountability to the law as their Head, if, as I have said, there is a plain distinction between the headships of Christ and Adam, and between their respective seeds or posterities, and the law has a demand upon the elect, only as they exist as the seed of Adam.

I answer, 1st. That I certainly do not conceive that the natural life of the elect, that corrupt nature which they derive from Adam, constitutes at all, their union with Christ; they never derived it from him as a Head. Hence in their experience, they must die unto Adam as a head, or to the law which is the same thing, before they can be married to Christ, or made manifest in their union to him. Rom.7:1,6.

The elect children of Adam were given to Christ in the everlasting covenant, they were his portion, (Deut.32:9,) as such they were known and preserved of him, in their seminal existence from the creation of Adam on down to their being born in the flesh, and from that, until they are born again, so that not one of their ancestry could be destroyed until their descent was or is secured. In reference to their natural life, they only stand in the above relation to Christ; they do not actually exist as members of Christ's body, until they are born again, born of that life which is in him.

But, 2nd. Christ as the Head of his Church, was the Head of her as composed of the elect quickened by life which was in him. This was the eternal purpose as has been showed, in the production of that life, that it should be communicated to creatures of the dust, and that it should be made manifest only in its communication to such creatures. For the accomplishment of this purpose also, Adam was created and the elect in him, that this life should be communicated to them; they are born that they should be born again. And as the elect when born again are recognized as members of Christ's body, or as his posterity, so as Adam represented all his posterity that ever should descend from him, involving them all in depravity by his fall, all being known to God; thus Christ represented all his posterity that should be born of him, known as his from eternity, given to him, that they might be made partakers of the life which was in him, and left to fall that they might be redeemed by him, &c. Hence as Adam was constituted in his creation the head of his posterity as they should be born into the world, and therefore when they come into the world they are born in a state of depravity, so Christ in being brought forth, and constituted as the Head of his Church and people, was thus constituted their head as they should be born again; and therefore when born of God, whether before the coming of Christ in the flesh, or since, they are born into a state of Justification, and of peace with God, those before the coming of Christ being thus born in anticipation of Christ's redeeming them from under the law, and their faith embracing him as revealed by types and in promise. Hence again as Adam was the head of all his posterity by anticipation of their being born of him, so Christ was the Head of his posterity in anticipation of their being born of God, and as Adam's posterity were involved in his previous transgression by their union to him, and as he went with his bride into transgression, so Christ was involved in the previous transgression of his posterity by his union to them, and he voluntarily without being deceived, went with his bride into the transgression in which she had gone. The union in both cases being so close, that where either the head or the body had transgressed, the other must be involved in the same transgression, vice versa, when the Head, as did Christ, honored the law, the body were considered as honoring it in him, and were therefore in him justified from its demands, by virtue of the same union, which involved him in the transgression of his body.

Again. I would remark, that as it was only in and through Christ, that the people of God could be justified, or in other words, that the law could be honored, and the justice of God made apparent in delivering them from under the law, so it is only as persons are born again that their individual Justification can be manifested, for it is only by this second birth that they are made manifest as members of Christ's body. Herein I think some seem to err, in supposing that it is the elect as such that are justified. God can view them redeemed and justified, because their second birth is as present with him as is their first birth; but as creatures they cannot be known in their relation either to the first or second Adam, only by their being manifested. Hence as has been showed, Justification through Christ being a Justification for his people as represented by him their Head, so the scriptures I think speak of none being righteous or justified in a gospel sense, but believers. Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness. If I could be made to know any as being of the elect while in a state of unregeneracy, I should think myself required by the scriptures to speak of them as children of wrath, even as others, (Eph.2:3,) and to say unto them, "Except ye are born again, ye cannot see the Kingdom of God." John 3:3. But when they are born again, they are born right into that state of Justification in which Christ has placed his Church by redeeming her from under the law. And this is what I understand to be experimental Justification or Justification by faith. And as the experimental Justification of the Old Testament saints was in anticipation of the redemption of Christ, so that redemption looked back to their Justification, and manifested the justice of God therein, as well as in the Justification of those that believe in Jesus under the gospel. See Rom.3:35,26.

I will now notice the text, (Songs 4:7,) which some think cannot consist with the idea, that the act of Justification of the body of Christ did not take place until Christ was manifested to take away our sins. This text I apprehend is like Psa.45:13,14, a prophetic description of the gospel church. Yet I admit that it is true of the Church of Christ; as such, in all ages, in certain views of her, that, "Thou art all fair my love, there is no spot in thee." I will show wherein.

1st. The Church as brought forth in Christ, and ever being in him, must always have been viewed of the Father as having that spotless purity, and heavenly glory which he, her Head and Covering possesses as the only begotten of the Father. 2nd. The body of Christ as manifested in the world, whether in its scattered state under the former dispensation, or in its collected state under the gospel, is and must be composed only of those who are actual believers in Christ as revealed either in promise before his coming or in gospel testimony of his having come; hence it is composed wholly of such as are born of God, and therefore born into that state in which the righteousness of Christ, as a spotless robe, covers them, leaving no legal blemish on them.

One word now to those who seem so hard to comprehend how the saints under the former dispensation, could receive the effects of Justification in their experience, if the body of Christ collectively, were not then actually justified. 1st. Was the infallible purpose of God which he purposed in Christ Jesus a sufficient authority for him absolutely to promise Christ unto the fathers as a Redeemer and Savior? 2nd. Was the absolute promises of God made unto the fathers sufficient authority to warrant the faith of the Old Testament saints therein, and for them to rest upon in the hope that they should be redeemed from under the law and saved from their sins by the promised Messiah? If so, I can apprehend no difficulty in their enjoying peace with God; not in God's accounting them righteous as foreseeing that Christ would bring in everlasting righteousness in their behalf. But if these were not sufficient grounds for God's promise and their faith, then I conceive there could have been no safe grounds short of Christ's having actually died on the cross for their redemption before they became sinners.

There are some points which have been brought into this discussion which I might have noticed, but I pass them.

I have given, I hope such an explanation of my views of Justification as will be understood by those who are disposed candidly to examine it. And such I trust, whether they receive my views as correct, or not, will not find anything in them so very alarming to an Old School Predestinarian Baptist as to justify the demand to have them excluded from the SIGNS. It is true that the ingenuity which could deny the truth of a self-evident proposition and which had been advanced by an inspired Apostle, in order to represent me as taking false grounds. See Elder Waters' pamphlet, (page 12,) on the text Rom.4:15; "For where no law is, there is no transgression;" and which, for the same object attempts to show by a Greek criticism upon Heb.9:26, that instead of Christ's having appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, the putting away of sin was a something which previously existed, abstractly from, and independent of Christ's coming in the flesh, and which he, when he appeared in the flesh, entered into as a something prepared to receive him. See pages 11 & 12, of same pamphlet. I say, the ingenuity that can thus torture both the letter and the doctrine of scripture, can make anything but truth and sense out of this explanation I have given. My object however in writing this was not for the accommodation of such, but for the satisfaction of those who would not designedly misapprehend me. Brother Allen thinks I was not sufficiently plain in giving my views in my "Thoughts," but it is to be remembered that "My Thoughts" were not written so much to illustrate my views, as to assign some of my objections, and the ground of them, to the use of the expression eternal justification by Old School Baptists. My views of the subject were but incidentally and briefly given. I thought that probably that communication would produce such enquiries or discussions as would lead me to a full expression of my views. Instead of this however, it drew forth attacks and answers such as I had no anticipation of. The kind of opposition my "Thoughts" met with from many Old School Baptists, was to me entirely unexpected, as coming from such, and I really cannot to this day see what there was in that communication which could give such offence to those who are Old School Baptists in principle. I had conscientious objections to the use of that term among us, as calculated to convey wrong notions, and which was not in itself a scriptural term; those objections or some of them, I published, designedly for the candid consideration of my brethren; in doing this I tried to use language respectful to their feelings. I will not pretend to say that in answering some of those attacks, I have pursued a correct gospel course. I find it very hard for me to obey the Apostle's injunction, "Be ye angry and sin not." Eph.4:26. And I certainly have felt wounded by some things published, and others not published in the SIGNS. But having given the above explanation, I have done I think with the discussion, in this way, of the subject of justification, unless I should have occasion incidentally to touch it in discussing other subjects.

There are some points touched in this communication, my views of which brethren may not fully comprehend, and at which they may feel objections; should they feel disposed to bring forward their objections to those points in such a way that the subjects may be discussed in the spirit of meekness, I shall have no objection thus to discuss them, and to explain my views fully on them. I entertain no views which I do not conscientiously believe to be truth and supported by scripture; I am therefore not ashamed of them, nor unwilling to have them canvassed in the spirit of candor; but of the kind of discussion, such as the greatest share which has been had on the subject of Justification, I think myself we have had enough through the SIGNS.

Before taking my leave of this subject, I wish to express my thankfulness that such able advocates as Brethren Goldsmith, Beebe, and others have stepped forward to my aid in discussing it. I also would say that I think I have felt grateful and humbled before God when brethren have acknowledged themselves either instructed or comforted by my writings on the subject of Justification, as some have done through the SIGNS, and others in communications to me.

Farewell, S.TROTT. Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., March 5, 1839.

A BRIEF VIEW OF THE SEVERAL ANTI-CHRISTIAN BEASTS DESCRIBED IN REVELATION 12-13, 17

Brother Beebe: the requests of brethren Compton and barbary for my views of those portions of scripture, mentioned in their respective communications, in #5, the present volume of the Signs came at an unfavorable time for me; my mind and even time, have been for some time past, so taken up, with the multiplied difficulties which seemed to crowd upon me at this time, that I have but little opportunity, or mine left for reflection. Surely the legacy holds, good, that "in the world you shall have tribulation." The requests of these brethren however shall receive such attention as I can give.

I will commence with Brother Compton's request concerning the beasts. My views of this subject having formerly been published in a series of letters, and I not having seen occasion as yet to alter those views, in any material point, my personal communications on this subject, will probably be but a sketch of what was then published: though there may be some difference of illustration, as in writing these, I shall not consult the former publication.

Before I proceed to the subject, I will briefly notice Brother Bloomingdale's remarks on the two witnesses, in number six of the present volume, Brother Bloomingdale has I think fallen into an error in confounding the religious establishment of Constantine and his successors with popery. The revelator as I think plainly marked the distinction between them. The former he has described as a great red dragon, (revelation 12.3-4) the latter as a beast rising up out of the sea, (revelation 13) as I shall have occasion more particularly to notice. Brother Bloomingdale's notion that gospel churches are designed by the two witnesses I should not so much object to, were it not, that to carry out his views, he is under the necessity of supposing the killing of the witnesses denotes a succession of events such as the wasting of the churches one after another during the whole reign of the beast; whereas the scriptures if I understand them speak of the killing of the witnesses as one act, and that a determination of the period in which they were to prophecy and sackcloth; the one 1260 days, or years. Brother Bloomingdale's position further leads him to the conclusion that the witnesses have long since been killed, of course, that the time of their prophesying and sackcloth has ended; and the gospel churches are of course now enjoying that triumphant glory which is denoted by the spirit of life from God entering into them, and they're ascending up to heaven. If these things be so, I think it will be difficult to find any gospel churches on earth at this day, for there is no denomination found but has a very different state of things existing among them from what is thus implied. And the old school Baptists which Brother Bloomingdale seems to recognize as gospel churches and preachers, are now as much enduring those difficulties denoted by a wilderness state; And as much in a state of mourning and humiliation, signified by sackcloth, as many have been given in former periods.

Another difficulty in the way of Brother Bloomingdale's position is, that he has to make the dead bodies of the witnesses lie unburied during the whole space of 1260 days; during in fact, the very. In which the scriptures represent them as prophesying and sackcloth. And three days and 1/2 according to his calculations, if I understand him, amongst the same. As does 1260 days. These are serious difficulties in the way of my being convinced of the correctness of Brother Bloomingdale's position.

In coming to the subject before me, the dragon described (revelation 12) first demands attention. This dragon I understand according to the odor of prophecy, represents the establishment of the Christian religion, and its incorporation with the government of the empire by Constantine and his successors. Dragons are frequently spoken of in the scriptures; They sometimes evidently denote crocodiles or sea monsters, and other times large overgrown land serpents.

It has its name in Hebrew, from its mournful whining noise. The name I think was given to Constantines' establishment to denote that, that and all like establishments are of that old serpent, the devil, who had now taken this new turn to destroy the religion of Christ. It also points out the poisonous and deadly effect of being enfolded in the coils of these establishments. They tend to destroy the vitality of the religion of Christ, turning the whole into outward forms, and a round of carnal duties. This dragon was red denoting the bloody or persecuting nature of such religious establishments. It was said to be great in reference to the extensiveness of that empire. The doleful, whining noise of these serpents, signified by their Hebrew name, thanim, may well represent the mournful warning cant resorted to by many of those formulas which abound in such establishments, to set off their religion. Crocodiles have been said to decoy victims within their reach by imitating the crying of a child, soul the affected sanctity, austerity, and crying of those who conduct a religion of these establishments, deceive many into the belief of the genuineness of their religion.

Of the 7 heads and 10 horns of this dragon I will omit to speak until I come to notice that beast described (revelation 13) the heads and horns of both being the same.

The tail of the dragon by which he drew a third part of the stars of heaven and cast them to the earth, I am requested to notice. As the term dragon is denoted a serpent, his tail is not like the tales of beasts, but is merely the extremity or hinder part of the body, and by that which he is much assisted in his movements, and in taking his prey. Isaiah informs us, that "the prophet that teaches lies, he is detailed." Isaiah 9.15. The clergy or priests of the establishments have in all ages been the great promoters of the persecutions of the true ministers of Christ and the saints of God. As serpents used their tails and held their prey by unfolding them therewith, so these teachers of lies employ themselves to discover and hand over to the civil authority for persecution the faithful ministers of Jesus, Or in this country to point them out as objects of contempt and reproach.

By the stars of heaven in this case, I understand the pastors of true gospel churches, revelation 1.20; 12.7-11. A third part of these the ministers of the establishment, such as preached for hire, and of course preached that which would command the highest wages, were to draw off, from their station, as pastors of gospel churches, and cast them to the ground; either by driving them from their stations by persecution, or by alluring them into the establishment, either of which would be casting them to the earth. It is probable that the Dragons of our day, (for the breed still exists both in direct establishments such as the Church of England, or in other devices for amalgamating the church and the world, as in the mission and like establishments) have thus by their tails drawn many stars of heaven from their stations, and cast them to the earth, or link them in with those institutions which are arrayed against the spiritual establishment; gospel churches, which are heavenly and divine in their origin and order.

The woman spoken of in this connection clothed with the sun, I understand represents the true gospel church, or in other words, the churches which from their subjection to Christ in their head, separate themselves from the established church. Several churches and divisions of churches thus separated themselves, from the general, professed church shortly after Constantines' dragon was bred, and we're therefore denominated heretics, such as the Donatists and Novations. The woman with child denoted that these separating churches would bring forth a posterity after their kind, that is that they would be a succession of churches and ministers, who, with masculine fortitude and perseverance, would meet the persecutions of the establishment, and afterward of the beast, maintaining their adherence to the truth and order of the gospel steadfastly. The bold declaration of the gospel, as a witness against all corruptions introduced, by the faithful ministers of Christ, and the firm adherence to gospel truth and order by his churches, was at that., and is to this day, as a rod of iron to the nations, or national churches and religionists. This declaration of the gospel and adherence to it, the advocates of national religion hate, and they would destroy such as wield this rod of iron; yet such as the Lord has called to his work, stand their ground, and the gospel rod rules and nationalists and keeps them in check; prevents them from running into all that extravagance and enormity they would otherwise go into. A little reflection on what has been published, and the events that have transpired within a few years past, will I think to convince every unbiased mind, that the nationalists or missionists, if you please, would have run to much greater excess in their plans, and in their impositions on the people, than they have, had it not been for the decided stand taken against them in favor of gospel doctrine and order. And popery assumes quite an inoffensive appearance in this country, compared with what it shows itself to be in some other countries. And thus the gospel ministry and light in all ages has held a check upon the beasts and their devices.

Thus much for the dragon and his posterity. My views of the beasts, I will, if permitted, give in another communication.

Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax Co. Va., April 8, 1839

A BRIEF VIEW OF THE SEVERAL ANTICHRISTIAN BEASTS SPOKEN OF IN REVELATION 12-13,17

CONCLUDED

The beast with John saw "rising up out of the sea, having seven heads and 10 horns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy," (revelations 13.1) is the next, in order, to be noticed.

This beast was evidently designed to point out popery, in its establishment and reign the beast rising out of the sea, pointed out the fact, that the state of things consequent upon the fall of the Roman Empire, in which the nations composing that empire were thrown into commotion and confusion, comparable to attend tempestuous seed, would be the occasion for the rise and establishment of popery, revelations 17.15. The Dragons giving, or yielding, to him his power, his seat and great authority, denoted in addition to the above that the beast would not be established at Rome, the ancient seed of the empire, but would also assume temporal and jurisdiction, over that city and the nations around, that he would acquire great authority over all the kingdoms into which the roman empire would be divided. Hearing is a marked difference between the dragon and the beast; the dragon took the oversight and control of religion into connection with the government of the empire; The beast assumed temporal jurisdiction on the ground of its previously assumed spiritual powers. Hence while both occupied the same seat, power, etc, are in substance the same in relation to the Church of Christ, had the same origin, the bottomless pit; the same heads and horns marking the identity of both semicolons yet one is the successor of the other, and manifestly distinct from it. Hence the expressive language of scripture on this point, as in revelation 17.8, "the beast that you saw was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit;" again, "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." He was, in substance, in the dragon, is not, in that form, and yet is, in popery in its full power to oppose the truth, and Church of God.

This beast's being likened to a leopard, having the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion, evidently denoted his complex and savage nature.

But as it is of the heads and horns which brother Compton more particularly requests an explanation, I will pass to a consideration of them. By referring to (revelation 17.9,) we find that the seven heads represent 7 mountains, on which the woman sits. The city of Rome was built on seven hills, or as they are termed mountains.

Hence the city and Church of Rome are clearly identified as being here intended. In verse 10, we find that seven kings we're also represented by the seven heads of the beasts, and that the beast was an eighth of the seven. Five of these had fallen when John wrote, one then was, and the seventh was yet to come, and to continue for a short time when the beast would come into power as the 8th and yet be of the seven.

That is, by the seven kings, we are to understand seven different forms of supreme government, which had, and should exist over the city of Rome before the beast as such existed, and he would be an eighth, in that the form of government under the popes would be different from the other seven, and yet be of them, as like them he would exercise temporal jurisdiction. If therefore we could know with certainty when the popes began to exercise temporal jurisdiction over the city of Rome, we should, I apprehend be able to determine the periods of the commencement and termination of the reign of the beast.

The 10 horns are described, (Revelation 17.12) as being "10 kings which have received no kingdoms as yet," [that is when John wrote,] "but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." The 10 horns of Daniels 4th beast, (Daniel 7.7, 8-19; 20-21) no doubt denote 10 kingdoms into which the Roman Empire should be divided, and that before the beast should commence his reign denoted by the little horn springing up after the 10, thus corresponding with the inspired exposition given up the four horns of Daniel's goat, Daniel 8.21-22. It has been usual soda consider the 10 horns of this beast as being and meaning the same; so I have header 4 considered them. But now I doubt whether the expressions "receive power as kings one hour with the beast," does not rather intimate that corresponding with the original division of the Roman Empire into 10 kingdoms, there will be found near the conclusion of the beast's reign, 10 kings or governments which shall with "one mind give their power and strength to the beast," that is for one hour as is said revelations 17.13. This will give the beast full power to kill the witnesses.

In the description given of the Dragons there is mentioned made of seven crowns upon his heads; But none of them upon his horns (Revelation 13.3,) thus denoting that during the reign of the dragon, the succession of power in the seven heads, would exist; but the 10 horns would not then be in power. On the other hand, in the description of the beast there are no crowns spoken of as belonging to the head; But mention is made of 10 crowns on his horns, (Revelation 13.1,) thus showing that the power of the seven heads would have ceased over Rome when the beast came into power; and that during the reign of the beast these 10 horns shall kingdoms shall be in power.

John saw "one of the heads of this beast as if it were wounded to death and the deadly wound was healed" revelation 13.3. This of course must have been the head or form of government existing in connection with the reign of the beast, which is the 8th head, or temporal power of the popes. I can see no consistency, in referring it to either of the other heads. Indeed several of the other heads were wounded to death by the sword; but instead of being healed, other of the heads came in the power in their place. But this 8th head was wounded as it were to death by Bonaparte, and has been by no other. Bonaparte broke the Pope's dominion over the kings of Europe. This deadly wound has since been healing popery is not only beginning its power over the continental government of Europe; but is gaining an influence or even before it's receiving the wound from Bonaparte it had none, as in England and in this country.

"And all the world wondered after the beast." The original reads, "and all the earth's wondered after or admired at the beast." As the term earth is repeatedly used to distinguish the romish church an interest from the gospel church which is called heaven, this passage no doubt is designed to point out the steadfast zeal for popery, and adherence to it, by all those connected with that interest; notwithstanding Bonaparte's having broken its professedly divine power of the kings of the earth; And perhaps this denotes an increase of influence and admiration. And surely this we see. Some of my readers were recollected. When the Catholic interest was quite obscure in this country, and when instead of a display of it, those who were Catholics who were in most places apparently willing not to be known as such. But how is it now? Let the splendid cathedrals, the applause extended to branches of that interest through the public papers, their celebrated and patronized schools nunneries, tell.

I will now notice the two horned beasts described in revelation 13.11. This beast John held coming up out of the earth. The term earth as I have just had occasion to remark is used to designate the romish church. Hence this denotes this beasts coming out of that church. The reformed churches as such had that origin; They went out of the Catholic Church with Luther and Calvin as two horns at their head. The general name by which they designate themselves, reformed churches, is indicative of their reform from popery. Luther and Calvin the two eminent leaders in bringing about the Reformation, may well be considered as two horns; And the doctrine they taught, and the information they advocated, truly gave them a lamb like appearance.

But still these noted leaders have spoken like a dragon, or rather like the dragon, in connecting their churches with the civil governments, and calling in the civil magistrates to enforce their systems of religion. I am aware that this position will appear sacrilegious in the eyes of many; But still the complete correspondence between the two horned beast and the Reformation confirms me in the truth of my position. With the Christianity of Luther or Calvin or with the fact that many Christians have been connected with reformed churches, I have nothing to do. It is divisible, organized form of these churches, as distinct from the visible churches of Christ, which I understand the Holy Spirit to have pointed out by the figure of this beast. That the reformed churches have retained the beastly nature of their origin, the Church of Rome, in its two most prominent features, infant baptism, and an established religion, cannot be denied.

Infant membership or the bringing in the fleshly seed of professors into the professed spiritual body of Christ, is retained in full, by all the reformed churches, and all their branches. But all the branches into which the reformed churches have divided, have not been as successful, as have some of them, in attaining to the worldly honor of being established by law as the religion of the state; there is little doubt however of their readiness to accept such honor if they could obtain it. The religions both of Luther and Calvin were established by law, and a civil powers were employed to enforce them and punish dissenters; and some of the branches of the reformed churches have been incorporated with the state government in other countries. They have not only spoken like the dragon, in advocating national establishments, and in enforcing their religions and the support of them by law; but they have in several instances persecuted through the civil authorities, even unto death, those who dissented from them.

As we have at present more to do, in this country, with the image of the beast that had a wound with a sword, and did live, then with that beast itself revelation 13.11. I will see if we can find the resemblance, in the image as it is manifested before us, of the heads and horns of that beast. The being an image of the seven headed beast it must correspond with it. As the beast grew out of the corruptions which had crept into what had been the visible churches of Christ, the image must be looked for as springing from the same source. And that's a dragon brought about the rise of the beast, gave to it, its heads and horns, and the one grew from a connection with the other; So the two horned beast is represented as directing the making of the image; and this will be found to have derived its representations of the heads and horns from the two horned beast, and to have been formed by a connection of professed visible gospel churches with it or its branches. This image I believe will be found in that combination of power which is forming or formed in what are called the benevolent societies.

The seven heads of the beast, as has been shown were seven mountains on which the woman sits, and also represent 7 forms of government. Mountains are repeatedly, in scripture, made to represent religious establishments, that is, whether legal or otherwise. The leading society schemes are seated on, or supported by, 7 religious denominations or distinct establishments; these having as many diversified forms of church government. Thus we find engaged in the support of the American Bible society, a Tract society, and a Sunday School union, the presbyterians, congregationalists, Episcopalians, Dutch reformed, Methodist, Scotch presbyterians and Lutherans. The Baptists we find connected with these other denominations in the above name societies, and following in their trail, and all the other, pretended benevolent schemes being thus of the seven in these things, borrowing from them, the plan of combining the church and the world together, in things religious and being an eighth head or distinct form of church government. Herein we have full correspondences to the heads of the beast, that which had been part of the visible Church of Christ, becoming an imitator of, and characterized with the reformed churches which composed A2 horned beast, as that which had been the Church of Christ at Rome, undertook to imitate the dragon, and became classed with it as a distinct form of government.

The 10 horns are divisions of the Roman Empire into distinct kingdoms, are next to be noticed, and their correspondence in the image. These will be found in the distinct branches of what they call benevolent enterprise. As the inhabitants of the vast territory, which constituted the ancient Roman Empire, have been kept more completely subjugated to oppression, by that empire's having been divided into distinct governments, and these governments into branches, than they could have been, had the government remained concentrated in one hand; So the power or horns of this image are multiplied and branched out, so as to bring the greatest possible number to receive the mark of the beast. The 10 leading divisions are powers which with their branches, auxiliaries, make up the image are these: Bible societies, tract societies, Sunday schools, mission societies, education, in reference to the ministry, theological schools, monthly concerts, revival making, and temperance and abolition societies. Perhaps it may surprise some that I should bring in abolitionism as one of the branches of the religious benevolence of the day; but facts will be found fully to justify me in this classification, of it. For although, it more properly stands connected with political discussions, and hence has with propriety been excluded from the Signs, yet the testimony which i shall bring will, i think, prove the correctness of my position in disrespect, and therefore justify me in introducing the subject here. That it has been immediately connected with religion, is evident from the one fact, that abolitionism is made a test of fellowship or communion by very many of the churches of different denominations at the north. And the following circumstances will, I think, proved that abolitionism has been brought into connection with the self styled benevolent schemes as they are sustained by the new school Baptists.

1st Baptist churches have made it a test of fellowship, excluding from their communion and their pulpits slaveholders.

2nd the board of Baptist ministers of England sent an address to the American Baptist, a few years since urging these to undertake to procure the abolition of slavery in this country, which address was published and again reinserted in the new England's spectator, a religious paper printed in Boston. At the request of a number of the baptists of that city. See the spectator of March 25th, 1835.

3rd the English, mission Baptist sent delegates to the American Baptist triennial convention which met at Richmond VA, two or three years since. The specific object of this delegation as stated in the Baptist repository, or American Baptist, previous to the arrival of those delegates, was to consult with the convention and American Baptists on the subject of the abolition of slavery. These delegates were received by the convention, were caressed, and delegates in return were appointed by the convention, to attend some of the Baptist anniversaries in England. What other countenance the convention gave to their special mission I know not.

4th most of the Baptist papers in the north and northwest, our like engaged in promoting missionism and abolitionism.

5th the Baptist state convention of Vermont published and sent to the Baptists of the South connected with the American Baptist union, and address warmly urging upon them to withdraw all fellowship from slaveholders. This convention is one of those state bodies formed for mission and education purposes, and is recognized as an auxiliary to the American Baptist missionary society. Consequently its influence as well as that of other of the northern auxiliaries will go for sending none but abolitionists out as missionaries by the society.

Temperance, and abolition societies though the last are not the least powerful horns of the image. They constitute links by which missionism it's completely connected with political transactions. Legislative enactments have passed in some states in support of the temperance cause. Notice the recent arbitrary and I should think, unconstitutional law of this legislature of Massachusetts on that subject. Abolitionism is forming a powerful political party in this country which is striving for the ascendancy in the national government. New schoolism has found in the north and northwest, is of course exerting its influence to promote the ascendancy of that party; and should the party succeed to the administration of public affairs, they may feel bound and returned to sustain new schoolism, even by legal enactments.

Again, the denomination called Quakers or friends, although having, in common with all the seven new school heads of the image, for their foundation Pelagianism in whole or in part, yet have kept themselves entirely aloof from the new school systems of benevolence until the temperance and abolition schemes were brought in; but by their attachment to those this numerous sect, with all their wealth and influence, have been hitched on upon the new school religious and political party of our country.

I have thus given briefly my views of this subject in answer to brother Compton's request. Those who have read the letters on the image of the beast, will probably discover that my views are somewhat changed relative to what was intended by the dragon and in some minor points; but in general they will be found to correspond the one, with the other. Such as I have, I have given. And I think it will be found to be no fiction about the image having horns and that life will yet be given to it, to persecute and put down those who will not bow to it.

Samuel Trott Centerville, Fairfax County, Virginia, April 12, 1839

THE SEALING OF THE SPIRIT.

BROTHER BEEBE: - As our brother Mitchell has requested, through the MESSENGER, my views on the sealing of the Spirit, mentioned in Ephesians 1:13, I will endeavor to comply with his wishes. The text reads thus, "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise."

The idea of a seal, or of sealing, is that of confirming, ratifying, or making safe. So I understand the expression to be used here, and in other corresponding texts. Hence in the 14th verse it is represented as an earnest of our inheritance. The apostle has, I have no doubt, in this text, infallibly laid down the particular steps or order by which a person is led in experience, into the liberty and privilege of a son of God. 1st. There is faith, or a hearing of the word of truth, the gospel of their salvation. For the hearing here spoken of is only by faith; it is no mere outward hearing that produces trust or hope in Christ. Hence in the next sentence the apostle calls it believing. 2nd. A trusting in Christ; or a hoping in him, as the marginal reading of many Bibles is; and as is a correct rendering of the original word; as is also trust. I notice this change of the word from trust to hope, not because it makes any difference in the sense, but because hope is the term more generally used to express this exercise; and because many would confess that they hoped in Christ, when they would fear to say that they trusted in him. 3rd. A being sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, as an earnest or pledge of our inheritance. But as important a point as this is, in a believer's experience, being designed to confine his hope in Christ of eternal salvation, we very seldom hear it noticed by persons in a relation of their experience, or by preachers in preaching experience. It is true that faith or believing is the more material point at which a person passes from death experimentally to life, he then hears the voice of the Son of God and lives. And belief, hope or trust in Christ immediately springs up in the breast. Hence believing is spoken of in the Scriptures as the distinguishing characteristic of a saved one. This sealing is, or once was, not essential to salvation, for none of the Old Testament saints enjoined this privilege, but were all their lifetime subject to bondage; as I shall have occasion again to notice. But still this sealing is too important a point in a believer's exercise to be passed unnoticed in our preaching, or in our examination of ourselves whether we be in the faith; because where this seal is, it confirms the genuineness of our faith, and the certainty of our being the children of God.

The first head of enquiry, in meeting brother Mitchell's request, is, In what does this sealing consist? I have been led to believe that this sealing consists in the shedding abroad in the heart of the believer the spirit of adoption whereby we cry Abba Father. I am confirmed in this belief by comparing this text, Eph.1:13 & II Cor.1:22, with Gal.4:6 & Rom.

8:15,16. When this spirit is imparted, we view God as a father, and approach him with our wants as a child does its parents, and not as a servant would his master. We can then see how God could provide for us that fulness which is in Christ, notwithstanding our utter unworthiness, that is as a father provides for his children; and whilst we feel humbled under a sense of our vileness, we can look up to God as a loving and gracious Father, and feel a confidence in rejoicing in the consolation and provisions of the gospel. In the experience of some I know that this sealing follows in quick succession after their hoping in Christ, so that it is, as it were, all one exercise; and yet the parts of it are distinguishable on a careful review. We shall see that Christ crucified as the way of salvation, was the first presented to our view by faith, afterwards a sense of God's fatherly love. But with others, I should judge from a relation of their experience, a considerable time elapses, with some longer, and others shorter, between their being brought to view Christ crucified as the way of salvation, with their having a hope of being saved by him; and their receiving the spirit of adoption. They see Christ as the way of salvation, as a full and suitable way, and in spite of all difficulties there is a hope of being saved by him; but it cannot be for me, says the trembling soul, I can do nothing to merit such favor. Of this nature will be their exercises until they are sealed. We can know ourselves, only as the creatures of God, subject to him as a legal sovereign, and dependent on him as such, until we receive the adoption of children. If, then, we perform our services because it is our Father's will, without any idea of merit or of earning wages or reward thereby; and if we approach God with our wants, without regard to worthiness, or unworthiness in ourselves, but simply to unburden to him our wants and distresses freely, and as depending wholly on him for help, under a sense of his loving kindness as a Father, and knowing as we of course do, if we have faith, that he can consistently with the holiness of his character, bless us through Christ; there is the witness of having received the adoption of children. Consequently, there is the seal; for, "if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Rom.8:16.

The second point of inquiry, is, What are we to understand by that Holy Spirit of promise with which we are sealed? As the sealing, as showed before, follows believing, the holy spirit here spoken of must be distinct from the spirit of life communicated in regeneration, although it must be in the spirit; that is, that of which we are born in the new birth, that we are sealed, as "the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit;" they are spiritually discerned. Hence Paul speaking as I understand it, of this sealing, says, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom.8:16. Hence also the Old Testament saints could be born of the Spirit, could have faith, without being sealed with the spirit of adoption. That the saints were not thus sealed, but were shut up under the law, until the fullness of time had come, when God sent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law, I think is clearly showed by the apostle's argument on the subject, in Galatians from chapter 3:19, to chapter 4:6. From what I can understand from the Scriptures, I judge that this Holy Spirit of promise is the Holy Ghost in the sense in which it was said he was not yet given, because "Jesus was not yet glorified;" (John 7:39,) and in which Christ said to his disciples, "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." (John 16:7.) And as He says again, "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not," &c. John 14:16,17. See I John 3:1, in connection with the above text. I say in the sense in which he is thus spoken of, as being given and sent; for these things cannot refer to his essential being, or his sovereign acting as God. As God, he always was, he moved upon the face of the waters, Gen.1:2, moved the prophets to speak and write what it was his pleasure to reveal. II Pet.1:21. It must therefore be that these things are said of him in reference to some special relation to, or manifestation concerning the plan of salvation. If this be so, it shows that it is not his special province in the economy of salvation to regenerate, for persons had been in all ages regenerated previous to its being said; "for the Holy Ghost was not yet given," or was not yet; the given being a supply.

It is said of Jesus Christ, that he was "declared to be the Son of God, with power according to the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." Rom.1:4. Peter in giving an explanation of the baptism of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, said, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." Again, he said, "Therefore let the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." Acts 2:32,33 & 36.

Thus it was by the baptism of the Holy Ghost that the exaltation of Jesus as both Lord and Christ, or Messiah, was declared or confirmed, and consequently he was thus declared to be the Son of God with power. So by this same Holy Spirit in being communicated to the believers, it does not make them sons, but seals or confirms them as sons.

Hence it is said, Gal.4:6, "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your heart, crying Abba, Father." It is here called the Spirit of his Son, not because it is that life which Christ is to his people, and which is communicated in regeneration, but because it is the spirit of sonship, being that by which Christ was declared to be the Son of God, and that by which they are sealed as sons. Thus showing that their sonship is in his Sonship, or that they are sons in union with the Son of God, and therefore are joint heirs with him.

I have thus brother Mitchell, given you my views fully on the points you requested. I know they are not altogether according to the standards which men have set up. If you find them sustained by the Scriptures, you will no doubt appreciate them as such. If you discover that in whole, or in part, they are not in accordance with the Scripture testimony, I hope you will point out the error. With desires for your health, and for your enjoying the consolations of the gospel.

I subscribe myself your brother in tribulation, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., August 21, 1854.

VIEWS ON THE SEED OF THE SERPENT.

Brother Littell: - I will now in answer to your other inquiry, attempt to give my views relative to the seed of the Serpent. I shall simply state my views and my reasons for them. I understand then the seed of the Serpent not to have reference to men as men, nor as sinners simply considered, but altogether to men as religionists.

My reasons for this view of the subjects are as follows: 1. I understand Christ, in saying to some "Ye are of your father the devil," as speaking in reference to their great pretensions to religion, and as a contrast to their claiming to be of God.

And in the same connection He gives us a sketch by which to draw the line of distinction between the seed of Christ and the seed of the Serpent. Satan is represented as a murderer or liar, and the father of lies, John 8:44. Christ is the truth and the life, John 14:6. As is through the belief of the truth, II Thes. 2:13. Satan's by being given up to believe a lie, same chap., verse 11. Christ's seed are known by being gentle and inoffensive like sheep; Satan's by possessing a persecuting spirit like wolves, however much they may wrap themselves in sheep's clothing.

2. He whom Paul calls a child of the Devil, Acts 13:10, was manifested as such, not by not attending to the right ways of the Lord, but by perverting them. So at this day the children of the Devil are known by perverting the truth and order of the Gospel.

Thus Satan's ministers are manifested in the transforming themselves into the Apostles of Christ, as though they had authority to set things in order in the churches. II Cor. 11:13. An account of one of Satan's ministers and of his doctrine we have in the case of the damsel who annoyed Paul & Silas, at Philippi, Acts 16:16-18. It is true this was s female, but Satan sometimes employs such even at this day. The doctrine is worthy of particular notice: "These men are the servants of the Most High God, which shew unto us the way of salvation." Strange how many disciples this witch has, at this day, even among the Baptists; who, like their leader, are preaching that the ministers are the mighty ones who can shew unto the people the way of salvation. Whoever may preach this doctrine, we can have no hesitancy, with this waymark before us, in pronouncing it to be from the spirit of witchcraft. Paul preached Christ unto the people, but he never pretended to show them the way, that is, make them see the way of salvation, that he knew none less than the Holy Ghost could do. He was therefore grieved that any should say it of him.

3. Another reason for my views relative to the seed of the Serpent is drawn from the parable of the wheat and the tares, as explained by the Master Himself in Mt. 13:24-30 & 36-43. In this parable we have the seed of the Serpent as the children of the wicked one contrasted with the seed of Christ as the children of the Kingdom. Two things relative to this parable are worthy of notice. First, it is not the creation of the world that is likened to the incidents of the parable, but the kingdom of Heaven, therefore it has reference to events connected with the Gospel dispensation. Hence this parable affords no support to our Brother Parker's two-seed system. Second, the field is the world – not the church. The doctrine therefore, "Let them both grow together" has no reference to the exercise of church discipline, but has reference to the Spirit of the Gospel as not countenancing persecution.

In this parable as in the other instances I have noticed the seed of the Serpent is contrasted with the good seed of the Son of man. It is an illustration of the fact that wherever Christ sows His seed, that is, sends His gospel, plants His churches, and calls out His people, there Satan will have his mock-gospels, mock-churches, and mock-professors.

4. Another reason for my views, as laid down at the commencement of this letter, I find in what is said concerning the two seeds, Gen. 3:15, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." I understand from this declaration that there would be a continued, fixed enmity between these two interests in the world. But there certainly has never been any such enmity manifested between the elect and non-elect, as such; not between the gospel and the church of Christ, and sinners as such. Hence this does not support the two seed system of the West. I know well that there is a law enmity against the sinner, that is, the law condemns him, and that the carnal mind, both in the elect and non-elect is enmity against God, not subject to the Law, &c. But the text under consideration has reference to Christ; not to the law. The song of the angels, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men," I consider as expressive in the clearest and fullest sense of the design of the coming of Christ into the world and of the tendency of the Gospel. And the Gospel tends not to communicate to its true ministers nor to any who receive it, anything like enmity towards sinners or carnal men as such, but on the contrary, it produces more tenderness towards them, and a greater desire for their real happiness. Neither do carnal persons while inattentive to religion, manifest any enmity to the Gospel or to Christians. They have no relish for the Gospel. Like Gallio, they care for none of those things, therefore, like him, they will have no hand in persecuting the followers of Jesus for their religion.

But let one of these Gallios' become converted into any of the systems of men and he is at once enlisted into the ranks of Satan, and will soon begin to manifest his enmity against that gospel which proclaims Glory to God in the Highest, and against those who preach it. We have an illustration of my views upon this subject, in the case of Cain and Abel. These brothers lived peaceably together, so far as we know, till Cain became a religionist of his own contriving, then because Abel brought an offering, not of human contrivance, but in faith, and was therefore accepted, the enmity of Cain's heart burst forth against him and against God. Indeed, we see numerous illustrations around us, in the cases of the modern converts of the mourners bench and of the altars &c. It is by means of conversions to the various religious schemes which Satan has set afloat through the instrumentality of his ministers, that he has from age to age kept up his army for waging war against the church of Christ. And he is now mustering all the forces that the election of grace will allow of his collecting, for the purpose of making one more desperate attempt to bury the walls and city of Zion by assault. He will succeed in killing the watchmen on the walls, the true witnesses. But Zion's foundation is sufficiently strong to withstand the assault, and the result will be that his army will be overwhelmed and become the subjects of their own destruction.

On the other hand, although there is no malice on the side of the gospel, yet it inculcates upon its followers a firm and manly stand in opposition to the assaults and intrigues of the enemy and his forces. Christ says concerning the tares, He shall send forth His angels and shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity and shall cast them into a furnace of fire, &c. We hear the Angel proclaiming that "If any man worship the Beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture, &c." Rev. 14:9, 11. Paul says, "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. 1:8. John also says, "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." II John, verse 10 &

11. Again, the Apostle to the Gentiles exhorts his Ephesian brethren in these words, "Finally my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. Put on the whole armour of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil &c." Eph. 6:10-11.

Indeed, I cannot conceive how a person can be brought experimentally to know and love the truth as it is in Jesus, and not so feel his heart bound to that truth, that the setting up of anything in opposition to that truth would be like rending his own soul. There is in this truth as it is known and felt by the believers everything to enlist all the better feelings of the soul. The glory of the three-one God is involved in it.

The sovereignty, glory, wisdom, love and mercy of the Father; the love, faithfulness and power of the Son, and the efficacy and completion of His work, and sovereignty, faithfulness and divine energies of the Holy Ghost are all so contained therein, and connected with the truth of the gospel, that there has never been a system of doctrine contrived by men but what has struck directly at one or more of these divine attributes. Again, the believer knows that the whole Godhead as is known as Father, Word and Holy Ghost, is necessary to secure the salvation of a sinner; hence as any of the divine attributes are left out or thrown into a background by any system introduced, he must feel that the foundation of his hope and comfort is struck at; and at the same time he knows that as such system is received into a confidence in that which will leave them to perish at last; and knowing all this; can the christian refrain from manifesting his abhorrence of such a system, and his opposition to it?

That christian must be under the influence of a most dastardly spirit, who can turn from such divine glory and excellency as in the truth as it is in Jesus, or who can approbate or even wink at any attempts to deface it, and that from the mean desire of thereby securing a little worldly ease, and worldly applause. Yet there are those, known to some of us, especially in some of our larger cities, who are very Davids in the pulpit, wielding the sword of the Spirit manfully, in cutting down error and in defending the truth of the gospel that salvation is of the Lord, but who, when out of the pulpit, are lending their names and influence to sanction and help on this, and the other scheme of human contrivance, for saving those whom, as they represent it, the Lord would otherwise leave to perish.

Thus we see, there is a constituted separation between truth and error in religion, and between the lovers of truth and lovers of error. On the above and like reasons, I rest my views relative to the Seed of the Serpent.

Now, my brethren, you who have received the love of the truth, let me address a few remarks to you upon this subject. God, we see, has put enmity between the woman's seed and the seed of the Serpent. Where God has put enmity have we any right to make peace? And when God has called us to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ; and to take the whole armour of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day; and having done all to stand, what right have we to sneak cowardly away, and leave the enemy to pursue unmolested their devastation of the divine system of truth and to plant their systems in its place? There are many excuses made for such a course; but will they stand? Look at Israel. God put enmity between them and the nations around them, but they were repeatedly making peace, forming alliances and intermixing with those nations. The consequence of every such departure from the direction of God was the introduction of idolatrous principles and worship into the land. So spiritual Israel has ever been found to form alliances with the seed of the Serpent; and thereby worldly professors, worldly principles and practices have been introduced into the church of Christ. It has now got to that pitch of intermixture of the two seeds, that we need an Ezra chapters 9 & 10; Neh. 13:1-9 & 23-30. Brethren, let us take the New Testament for our Ezra, and by its directions, arise and make the required division, separating ourselves from every system, scheme and divice of Ashdod and Moab. Let us erect the standard of truth over our camp, that we may be distinctly know that great exertions are being put forth to drown all confessions of faith by those who are afraid to have their principles see the light.

I am surprised that any Lover of the word should join them in the attempt. Let them succeed and we shall see Unitarians, and Trinitarians, Universalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, &c. &c., all united in one mingled mass in battle array against the truth. Let us separate ourselves from the whole mixed multitude. Declarations of faith, I know, have been abused, such abuses we would do well to put down. For instances, the name, "Philadelphia Confession of Faith," the principles being overlooked has been used as a password, or rather as a flag of truce under which the seed of the Serpent have been coming into the very camp of Zion, till in many instances they have the entire command of the gateways, admitting and excluding whom they please, and even of the batteries, so as to point the artillery against Zion herself. This name therefore I would willingly drop; but let us make an unequivocal declaration of what we believe to be the faith and practice taught in the word of God, as we have learned it in the school of Christ - the Old Baptist School, and instead of dropping this declaration, let us nail it, as the sailors say, nail it to the mast, and rally round it in one solid body.

Brethren, let me entreat you to reflect on these things, and earnestly to enquire at the word of the Lord, after the course which belongs to you, as the Israel of God, to pursue. But amidst all our reflections, let us ever remember that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty, - not through human might, human wisdom, human stratagem, nor anything human – but through God to the pulling down of strongholds &c. And let us ever keep in mind what is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay saith the Lord, and therefore not give way to any emotions of revenge. I subscribe myself yours, &c.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, June 25th, 1833 S. Trott

SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 1 (1833)

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST

Dear Brother Beebe: - I see by some of the recent numbers of the Signs of the Times, that being asked, you have given your views on the "Sin against the Holy Ghost," and that your friend Mott, objecting to your views has also given his. From your mutual criticisms, each of the others views I am inclined to think that the readers of the Signs will think the subject is left about as much in the dark as before. For my own part, I think each of your criticisms just.

According to your friend Mott's view of this sin, I am confident that many of the subjects of grace in their first exercises, as you showed, have committed it. I did, and Satan charged me with it on the spot, which threw me into a distress of mind, as nigh to absolute despair as I think a person could be in this world, which lasted me perhaps fifteen minutes, when I was relieved by a suggestion being applied to my mind with as much force as Satan had made the charge.

The suggestion was this, that if my exercises were from the teachings of the Holy Ghost, God had begun a good work in me, and, therefore, I could not be left to commit the unpardonable sin; and if it was not God's work, then I was correct in saying that my exercises were from the devil.

Besides, I can see no reason from the Scriptures to suppose that a sin against the Holy Ghost, in His distinct relation, can be any more heinous than against the Father or the Word.

God is holy, either as Father, as Word, or as Holy Ghost. As to your views, I have two objections to them.

First: God has certainly revealed Himself distinctly as Father, as Word, and as Holy Ghost; although I am not able to define these distinctions any farther than the Scriptures make them, yet they are there marked, though not as distinct persons.

This marked distinction our Lord clearly makes in mentioning the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost as distinct from other blasphemy. This distinction you destroy by blending this sin as common with sin and blasphemy in general.

Second: According to your exposition of this text, you make, if I understand you, the ground of condemnation, rather, the final perishing of the wicked, different from what you and other Old School Baptists would make it on other occasions. I do not think we need to go beyond the law, and the transgression of it, as the ground of the sinners final condemnation. Where any have not the written law, they are a law unto themselves, Romans 2:6-16. But I think that persons will infer from your argument, whether you meant so or not, that the ground of the unpardonableness of the sins of the non-elect was that they were not born and expiated by Christ, and hence they will infer that these perish, not because of their transgressions of the law, but because they were not redeemed by Christ. But, my brother, I cannot see any special meaning or propriety to our Lord's words in this case, unless He meant to point out a special sin, a sin that is an exception to the all manner of sin and blasphemy spoken of in the connection. In giving my views on this sin, I may probably lay myself as liable to criticisms as you and your friend Mott have, yet as I have had for years fixed views on this subject, which I have not hesitated to declare, I will present them for your consideration and review.

First: I will say I have no objection to the idea which you ascribe to the learned, as involving in the committing of this peculiar sin, light in the head (not heart), and malice in the heart, when properly defined. But I do not believe that any but Jews, nor any but Jews of that generation, ever did or could commit this sin, that is, that no others were ever placed in circumstances to commit it. Christ, when. He came in the flesh, came peculiarly and exclusively to His own, to the Jews, as His national people. Hence, His disciples, in proclaiming His coming were not to go into the way of the Gentiles. In thus coming in the flesh, He came as pointed out by Moses, and the Jews, therefore, were subject to that injunction given by Him when He said: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee" &c.

Deut. 18:15-19. Hence, because of their not hearing, God would require it of them. He came also in accordance with prophecies going before as spoken by inspiration of the Holy Ghost. And when He came, He performed by the Holy Ghost those miracles which incontestibly bore witness of Him that He was that prophet whom Moses spoke of, and that Messiah who was prophesied of. Hence, the people were constrained to say, "Is not this the Christ?" Hence, Stephen charges upon them, "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost, as your fathers did, so do ye." See Acts 7:51-53. Hence, their rejecting Him was peculiarly a sin against the Holy Ghost. That this sin, in persuading the people to reject Jesus by representing that those miracles which He performed by the Holy Ghost He did by Beelzebub, was against light, is, I think, evident from the following Scriptures. Jesus testified, "The works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father has sent me." See John 5:31-36. Again He says, "If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father" John 15:24. In a preceding verse He says, "But now they have no cloak for their sins." Consequently, they must have known that the works He did proved Him to be the Messiah. So Nicodemus said, not I know, but, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him" John 3:2. So that it was against the clear light of the testimony of the Holy Ghost that they rejected Jesus. It must, therefore, have been because they hated Him when they saw Him, that is,

from malice in their hearts. That this sin was confined to those who were eye-witnesses of the miracles of Christ is evident, not only from those texts above quoted, but also from the case of Paul. He speaks of himself as a blasphemer and a persecutor, &c., and then says, "I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly in unbelief." I have never been able to reconcile this declaration of the Apostle with his doctrine that God will have mercy on whom He will have mercy, only as understanding him as speaking in reference to the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. That is, instead of understanding him, as assigning his doing it ignorantly in unbelief as the cause of his obtaining mercy, he assigns it as a reason why notwithstanding his blasphemy and rage against Christ, he could consistently, with the declaration of our Lord concerning the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, obtain mercy. Paul was a native of Tarsus of Silicia, a province of Asia Minor, and although brought up in Jerusalem, at the feet of Gamaliel, that is, educated in his school, yet it is not likely that he saw any of the miracles of Christ, for he was a young man at Stephen's death, and not many of our Lord's miracles were done in Jerusalem. And being prejudiced by the Pharisees against Christ, he did not believe the reports concerning His miracles. So that he did it ignorantly in unbelief.

Besides, the only account we have of Paul's persecuting spirit was after Christ's kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, and, therefore, after He had finished His ministry under the law, and to the Jews as a nation. Persons are apt to lose sight of the peculiar relation in which Christ stood to the Jews as a nation, whilst He was a minister of the circumcision, and hence they try to find an application under the gospel, not only for our Lord's declaration concerning this sin against the Holy Ghost, but also for other declarations which were made with a peculiar reference to the Jews and to His disciples while they remained under the law previous to His death. But in reference to this sin against the Holy Ghost, or any other unpardonable sin, rest assured that from the gospel revelation we have no authority for believing that under the gospel there can be any such sin in itself considered. For we are assured that "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." And the declaration is that, "Through this man (that is through Christ) is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by Him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." These views I leave at your disposal. Yours in love, Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia Nov.19, 1857. S. Trott. SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 25 (1857)

THE SIN UNTO DEATH.

Dear Brother Beebe: - As the sin undo death mentioned in I John 5:16,17, has been referred to in the late discussion in the "Signs" on the "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost," and as I have had some reflections and views recently on the text, I will give them to you for what they are worth.

It has been a prevalent idea that the sin unto death here spoken of was some extra-ordinary sin, and hence the notion has been general that it is the peculiar sin spoken of by our Lord, Matt.12:31,32. But really, as I now look at the passage in John, the most remarkable part of it seems to be his saying, "There is a sin not unto death," seeing he has told us in this epistle, 3:4, that "Sin is the transgression of the law," and that the law saith, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them;" and again, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and so that death passeth upon all men, for that all have sinned. Sin, therefore, must reign unto death in all that are under the law. How is it, then, that there is a sin unto death? Paul told the saints at Rome, Rom.6:14, "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace." This text has, no doubt, puzzled many of the children of God, sin having such a control in them and over them, they have concluded that they could not be subjects of grace, or its power over them would have been killed. What is dominion, but the power of sin? And what is the reign of sin, but unto death? (See Rom.5:21.) Break then, the dominion of sin, and its power of reigning unto death is destroyed. How is this dominion destroyed? By a redemption from under the law; for the strength of sin is the law I Cor.

15:56. The word here rendered strength signifies power and dominion as well as strength. As Christ came to redeem His people from under the law, He was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, I John 3:8.

If we were to understand the devil here, and also in Heb. 2:14, as personating sin in its reign or dominion, I think we should be sustained by the connection of those texts. In redeeming His people from under the law, Christ also brought them under the reign of grace, which is unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord, and which secures that God will forgive their iniquities and remember their sins no more, Jer.31:34.

Those, therefore, who are born again, born into the kingdom or under the reign of grace, cannot commit sin unto death, or sin as a transgression of the law, for his seed, that is, the seed of his new birth, remaineth in him, and he cannot become unborn, or sink back under the law, or the dominion of sin. Therefore, though sin dwells in him and sows itself in outward acts, it is not unto death, for its dominion is destroyed. Whilst those who are not born again, existing personally only as the seed of Adam, remain under the law of sin and death, and their depravity and actual transgressions are unto death, and must be so while they remain under the law. Here, brother Beebe, permit me to remark that the views you expressed on the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost are fully applicable to the sin unto death, which John here speaks of; but that blasphemy, as before expressed, I consider a different thing.

But it may be asked, how can the children of God, seeing that sin is a transgression of the law, and they being not under the law, but under grace, commit sin? I will give as an answer this: 1st. John informs us in the text, that "All unrighteousness is sin." 2nd. That the law, whilst it comes with its penal demands only against the posterity of Adam as such, is the eternal standard of righteousness in the spirit of its precepts. All unrighteousness is, therefore, sin in that it is a departure from the law as the standard of righteousness. Hence, by the law is the knowledge of sin.

We will not come to the apostle's remarks concerning praying, &c. "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." John, in the two preceding verses, had spoken of the prayer of faith. He said, "And this is the confidence that we have in Him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, He heareth us," &c. Nothing short of faith could give us to feel this confidence, and nothing short of faith could assure us that we were asking in accordance with His, God's will. The children of God, in seeing a brother sin in whom he has confidence as a believer in Christ, knows that it is not unto death; for says Christ concerning His sheep, I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish. And he has the assurance that his sin shall be forgiven, for God has promised in covenant that He will forgive their iniquity and remember their sins no more. Here, therefore, is full room for his praying in faith his brother's sin may be forgiven, and he be restored to the enjoyment of spiritual life. In thus praying for his brother, he manifests his brotherly love and sympathy for him, as well as his regard for the honor of Christ's cause. If we would more observe the apostle's injunction, in this case, and pray for our brethren when we see them sin, instead of reporting their failings abroad, it would be much more for the peace of the churches and for our own comfort.

The other case, "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it." In the first place, it is to noted here that John gives no intimation that a brother may commit this sin. Secondly, That he does not say the child of grace shall not, in any sense, pray for it. That would be to set aside the example of Christ, when He prayed, concerning those who put Him to death, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do;" as also, contrary to the injuction of Christ, that we "should pray for them which do despitefully use us and persecute us." It is proper that we should pray for such as an expression of a forgiving spirit toward them; and to pray for our fellow men, for kings and for all that are in authority, thereby expressing our love and good will toward them. But these are not prayers of faith, and in truth cannot be, for there is in the Scriptures no promises to the unregenerate, no assurance that God will forgive their sins, and faith must have the word or promise of God to rest upon. But John, as we have showed, was speaking of the prayer of faith; and he, in speaking of sin unto death, and saying, I do not say he shall pray for it, that is, with the prayer of faith - must have had in view the practice which would spring up in the professed church, that of inviting or encouraging persons to come to the church, or to the preacher, to be prayed for, under the idea that thereby they will obtain forgiveness and salvation, thus holding forth that they can pray the prayer of faith in their case. But John gives no encouragement for such praying. It is, in fact, an awful presumption for men to encourage poor ignorant sinners to look to their prayers for that salvation which can come only through the atonement and intercession of Jesus Christ.

This view of this passage of Scripture may be new to many, and it may not be correct in all points, though it seems so to me. You and other brethren can examine it, an dif you find it not consistent with the word of truth, please to point out the error. Yours, I hope in love,

S. Trott.

P.S. - The sin unto death, which the apostle does not direct to pray for, may have reference to a sin you see committed by one who has a place in the church as a brother, but who you have strong reason to fear is not born again, but is either a hypocrite or a legalist. In this case, you cannot pray in faith for him, having, according to your views of him, no assurance from the word of God that his sin shall be forgiven. Therefore John does not say that you shall pray for it.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, Jan.19th, 1858.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 26 (1858)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 447 - 450

SOME GENERAL OBSERVATIONS FROM GAL. 3:3.

BROTHER JEWETT: - Your remarks in the March number of the ADVOCATE (1845) touching the propensity of many to bring in the aid of human philosophy in the investigation of religious subjects, reminded me of Paul's appeal to the churches in Galatia. "Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Gal. 3:3. The Apostle evidently had reference to their going back to the works and rites of the law for the perfecting of their salvation; but a little attention to what is implied in a beginning in the spirit, will show that it cuts off every consistent idea of being helped on in furtherance either of the knowledge or the experience of salvation, by the flesh in any sense. In the experience of the child of grace, the Spirit begins in him previous to his beginning in the Spirit. The Spirit must implant spiritual life, and consequently light before there can be spiritual action or discernment in any child of the earthly Adam. In some instances the effect of this light being shed abroad in the heart, is to lead the person at once so to view God's eternal power and Godhead, as to lead him to feel his entire guilt and condemnation, and view, as a sinner in having lived without God in the world; and therefore strips him of all creaturely hope; as were the multitude who were pricked in their hearts, on the day of Pentecost, on being convinced that that Jesus whom they had rejected and crucified was the Christ, the long expected Messiah. Others again are at first, only led to see their need of a better righteousness than they have, to expect acceptance with God. This leads them to fleshly exertions of mind and body to obtain a righteousness. They resort to reading and hearing of preaching, and to obtain a natural understanding of the way of acceptance with God; and to bodily labor, &c., to bring themselves more into conformity to what they think God requires of them. The final result is; that after their utmost exertions of mind and body to become good, they find that they can bring forth no act which the law does not condemn, and which is not turned to corruption and loathing in their sight; and what is more, they find themselves ignorant of God, and utterly unable to comprehend him, or any way of acceptance with him. All appears as a hopeless case with them. "So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast before thee." Psal.73:22. They are now as little children, as dependent to be taught and led, as to be pardoned. But when the Spirit is pleased to give them a view of Christ crucified, as the way of salvation, and that for lost sinners like themselves, then the gospel declarations appear plain to them, and they see the sovereign act of God in giving them an understanding of these things, as much as in laying help on Christ; for such worthless sinners. They adore God for what they now know, as well as for what they hope, of salvation. They are alike cut off from leaning to their own understanding, and from trusting to their own works. Their hope is in God; to him they look with childlike simplicity, to teach them what he would have them to do, to guide them into the truth; and to keep them from falling. These have now begun in the spirit; and is it possible that such, after the lessons they have learned of the deceitfulness of their own hearts, of the blindness of their minds, and the entire weakness of the flesh, should again lean to their own understanding, to find out revealed Truth, or to their own arm to get them the victory over sin? O the presumption, folly, and unbelief of poor human nature! How again, and again, will the child of grace try his own strength for relief in the times of temptations and difficulties, till bruised, and wounded by his falls; he is again glad to sink into his own weakness and dependency at the footstool of mercy. And how often does he undertake by the powers of his mind to clear what appears mysterious in the doctrine of the gospel and make it appear consistent with reason; and to bring to light what God has not revealed, to the bringing in of hurtful errors, and the causing of contentions and divisions in the churches! Happy would it be, if such wise ones, could become fools that they might be wise. By the term flesh in the text under consideration, it will be seen that I understand the whole natural man, in distinction from the spirit of Christ, in the believer. And so the term is abundantly used in the Scriptures. This is a day of philosophy, of human investigation, and of absurdities, wherein God has made foolish the wisdom of this world. Not only do we see it among the popular religionists, but also among those who, we would hope, are the children of God. Reason has undertaken to investigate the origin of sin, the nature of angels, and the existence of God as Father, Word and Holy Ghost, and alas; what confounding, and what dividing of God into parts they produce by their philosophy and the figures they employ to make a likeness of him. The doctrine of the resurrection also is reasoned away to be no resurrection, but only a disencumbering of a supposed spiritual bodily existence, from these bodies of dust or flesh in which they are thought to dwell, or according to others, it is a clothing of the soul with a new spiritual body. I see by the religious papers, that a new champion for a non-resurrection of the body has come forth, who by his elegance as a writer, and his philosophical acumen is delighting the polite world. From what sketches I have seen of his system, I think he differs not much from Drew on the resurrection. He, in the estimation of his admirers, demonstrates fully the folly of supposing that the identity of the person can in any measure consist in these external bodies with which we are clothed; the philosophical conclusion that the body at no two given periods is the same, owing to its constant changes through the passing off of the particles of matter of which it is composed, and their place being supplied from the food we take, &c., so that if the identity consisted to the body, the person who died in impenitency at fifty years old, could not be punished for the sins he committed in youth, because it would not be the same person. What astonishing discoveries philosophy makes in religion. I am confident there are persons who have not seen me for twenty years, who on seeing me now would instantly recognize me, and yet who make no pretensions to a gift, either for seeing or discerning spirits. Hence there must be some bodily identity by which I should be known. The birth of Isaac, I presume will be admitted to have been from the bodies of Abraham and Sarah; if so, according to this wonderful discovery in philosophy, the promise to Abraham recorded in Gen.15:4, "He that come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir;" was not verified, because those bodies of Abraham and Sarah of which this was spoken, were not the same they had fifteen or twenty years after, when Isaac was born. Besides the peculiar miracle of Isaac's birth is destroyed, by this calculation, for if Abraham and Sarah were old, their bodies were not, having become new, and young, not by miracle, but by natural principles. Another objection to the resurrection of the body, is that after its death and decomposition, the particles of dust may become scattered and incorporated in other bodies, &c.

If the particles of dust could get beyond the reach of God's control this would be a serious objection, but from the belief I have in both the universal and special government of God, over all things he has made, even to the chemical gasses, I cannot apprehend it to be impossible with God. The truth is, the birth of Isaac was presented to Abraham in the promise as an object of faith, and not as matter of philosophical research; and so is the resurrection of the body declared in the Scriptures. So much is this the case in reference to the resurrection, that the apostle fully identifies the faith of the gospel with a belief in the future resurrection of the body; hence he says of Hymeneus and Philetus, not that they had overthrown a part of the faith, or the faith on any particular point, but absolutely, that they overthrow the faith of some.

II. Tim.2:18. And this broad position he establishes in his epistle to the Corinthians by showing that the resurrection of Christ is involved in a denial of the resurrection of the body, and in this also is involved the efficacy of Christ's atonement. I Cor.15:12-18. And with propriety is the doctrine of the resurrection thus made a criterion of gospel faith, seeing that it has been a subject of scorn and mockery from the wise men of this world, from the learned Greeks of Athens, Acts 17:32, down to the present day. Those who by their philosophy would explain away the entire dependence of those things which are matter of revelation, upon the absolute and sovereign will of God, and to make them the results of certain general laws, as is more or less the case with most of the systems of men, are trying to give us a mere natural or fleshly religion for a revealed one. May we not then say to any of our brethren who may be advocating or receiving these systems; Are ye so foolish? Having begun in the Spirit, having once learned your own weakness and ignorance, and dependence on the teaching of God, are ye now made perfect by the flesh; by putting forth the force of reason and imagination? May we, as also our brethren, be more enabled to sit as humble learners at the feet of Jesus.

Yours in love, S.TROTT. April 25, 1845.

SOME OBJECTIONS ADDRESSED.

DEAR BROTHER WILLIAM: - Brother Mitchell's letter in the number of the MESSENGER for February 15, 1854, has put me in the notion of saying a few words to him through the MESSENGER; and whilst I am writing I will also offer a few remarks for the consideration of brother Pate.

In reference to brother Mitchell, I was truly sorry to hear from him of the grievous temptations, in addition to his other afflictions, under which he appeared to be laboring at the time he wrote that letter. I know he is in the hands of him who knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations; and that though he may have suffered Satan to have him, so far in his power for a season, that he may sift him as wheat, yet the Lord will take care that not the least grain shall fall upon the earth. I also know that, "No chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous, nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." But that which I wish particularly to remark upon, is the temptation brother Mitchell seems to be under, that because his own mind is in darkness with regard to the present comforts of religion, and because he cannot clear the clouds which hang over himself, he concludes that he can no longer be instrumental in edifying and comforting others, and therefore he will not try. If brother Mitchell's communications had drawn upon him as much opposition from brethren as mine have upon me, and caused them to say as many hard things of him as they have of me, there might be some ground for him to hesitate about writing for a periodical designed to be in part at least, supported by those who condemn his writings. But it is not so with brother Mitchell; the brethren I think have generally been well pleased with his writings. Or if when he attempts to write on any subject the Lord is pleased so to shut up his mind, so that the subject is dark to him, or that he cannot collect or arrange his thoughts, as I know he can do both, when we attempt to write or attempt to preach, whilst such is the case it may be well to be silent. But brother Mitchell when his health admitted of his preaching, because at one time his mind was shut up, or because he felt too unworthy to attempt to speak to the people, would not have felt justified in refusing to try to preach any more.

If he is afraid that the circumstance of brethren so frequently calling upon him for his views of texts of Scripture will tend to lift up with pride, this very trial he is now in shows how easy the Lord can lay him low in his own estimation, and keep him humble. So that I hope he will reconsider this matter, and as the Lord shall give him strength and opportunity he will still let the brethren hear from him, and will give them such views as the Lord gives him.

In reference to brother Pate, when he first wrote his objections to an opinion of mine which I had casually dropped, you were good enough to take up the subject and to say all that I thought was necessary in reply. And when he wrote the second time, it was not because I thought brother Pate's remarks not worth replying to, nor that his arguments were not as good as could be produced on that side of the question, that I have not sooner noticed it, but in part because I did not think the subject, in itself considered, of that importance, that I do not know that brother Pate would be made any more wise unto salvation, were we to convince him of the correctness of our position, or that we should be made any more thus wise, were he to convince us of the correctness of his. But still there is a principle or two involved in the matter that is of some importance. 1st. Under the gospel, Christ is revealed as the One Mediator between God and men, hence he is not only the Head of the church, as his body, but is the immediate Head of all communication between God and his people. The New Testament recognizes no intermediate heads, no semi-mediators, as between Christ and the people, however fashionable they are among the various religionists of our day. The apostles as I was showing when I made the remarks to which brother Pate objects were the immediate representation of the gospel church in its visible form, with its gifts, &c. Hence in order to bring a proper representation of the immediate dependence of the church upon Christ, they were called directly of Christ as are all subjects of grace, not through others being sent to them, and the twelve were directly ordained of him, as apostles. It is true, that one of those he ordained betrayed him and thus fell from his office, and as Peter showed from the Psalms another was to take his bishoprick. Now the enquiry is, as well as the point of difference between brother Pate and us, was this substitute to the office of Judas, to be appointed according to the Old Testament order, by lots and intermediate agents, or according to New Testament order, immediately by Christ as the Head? If the former be considered, as practiced by the eleven in the case of selecting Matthias, as being established gospel order in making an apostle, then I see not why it is not an example to be carried out, and why we may not resort to secondary means for filling the churches with professors, and for supplying the churches with preachers. If the New Testament order was to be observed in this case, then it would have been the place of the disciples to have waited till the Lord should call and ordain for himself an apostle in the place of Judas; and so according to this order it becomes us, instead of manufacturing christians and preachers, to wait on the Lord to bring in the subjects of his grace, and to send forth laborers of his own choosing into the harvest in his own time and way. So that the point is whether grace reigns sovereignly, or whether there is an interposition of secondary means. That is, as the subject appears to me; it may appear differently to brother Pate.

Another principle apparently involved, is whether the principle contended for by the Old School Baptists; namely, that a command of Christ is requisite to sanction our doing anything as a religious act; or whether we are at liberty to do whatever seems to us right in religion regardless of any direct command from Christ. Now we have direct evidence that Christ commanded the disciples to tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high; to wait for the promise of the Father, &c. But not one word of testimony that he directed them in the mean time to select one to fill the place of Judas. As Christ was seen of his disciples forty days out of the fifty, which intervened from his resurrection, or from the Passover to the day of Pentecost; and considering the importance of this matter that when he was speaking to them of the things concerning the kingdom of God, that he should not have given directions on this point, or himself to have selected the man, if the place was to be filled out of those who accompanied with them is to me singular. And to me it is evident that he gave no such command, else why did not Peter refer to the command of Christ, instead of preaching them a sermon from the Psalms, in order to induce them to engage in that enterprise? If such an important work as that might be undertaken without any command to them to do it, why may not other things which seem reasonable from prophecy, be undertaken without any direction in the New Testament for it, such as converting the heathen to Christ, &c.?

Brother Pate speaks approvingly of casting lots in this act pertaining to the gospel kingdom. It is true that lots were appointed in certain cases under the Old Testament as an appeal to God's decision, and were consistent with that shadowy dispensation, in which so much of their intercourse with God was through external forms. But even then there was nothing corresponding with this case in selecting an apostle. In the case of deciding which of the goats, which Aaron was to take from the children of Israel, should be for the Lord and which for the scape goat, the case was referred directly and fully to the Lord, and this showed that in the grand anti-typical atonement nothing is left to man's choice, but all is of God's appointment. But in this case of undertaking to appoint one of the Lord's apostles, they go to work themselves and select two, out of how many, I know not by the description. Peter speaks of, perhaps seventy, and then in effect tells the Lord that he may have one of the two for to supply the place of Judas; and they cast lots upon the two only that he may designate his choice. This does not look to me like submitting the matter entirely to the Lord's choice, but men appeared to have the greater share in making the selection. It looks very much like many transactions of our modern missionary gentry, in pretending by prayer to submit the choice of their missionaries to the Lord, and yet select them themselves, and send them out as the Lord's missionaries or sent ones, as Matthias was represented to be the Lord's apostle or sent one. In reference to Paul's saying that the Lord was seen of the twelve next after being seen of Cephas, it is perhaps more than we can do, to determine with precision, which of the appearings of our Lord to his disciples he has reference to, but I should judge he had reference to that special appearing which Matthew and Mark both mention. In which the eleven according to a previous appointment of Christ, went into Galilee to meet him. And as there is no account of any but the eleven going there to meet him, I think Paul's using the term twelve instead of eleven was from that same humility which led him to say that he was the last of the apostles, and that he was not meet to be called an apostle, &c., that is he would not assume to himself the province of denying that there were not twelve apostles without him. Yet at other times when his authority was disputed, he was bold to claim the authority of his office, he could say, Am I not an apostle? "Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?" Again, he could speak of himself as "called to be an apostle." An "apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God" and by the commandment of God, and as ordained to be a preacher and an apostle, and he affirms the truth of his ordination. The passage in Rev.

21:14, it appears to me requires a little more attention than brother Pate gives to it, for he would intimate that the distinction is to be kept up in the New Jerusalem between Jews and Gentiles, and therefore Paul is not one of the definite twelve apostles of the Lamb. Now, brother Pate, you must excuse me, but I cannot believe in a distinction of that kind in the church militant or triumphant. And I do believe that Paul, although the apostle of the Gentiles, is as much honored, as having as a wise master builder, laid the foundation as any of the apostles. Paul says himself, "For in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing."

Thus, brother Pate, I have gone more lengthy into this subject than I had intended, or than perhaps the subject required, were it not for the principles involved in it. It may be that on reviewing the subject you may see that in contending for the dignity of the disciples, you have in some measure, in this case, lost sight of that proper, that whole dignity which belongs to our Lord Jesus Christ.

However, I have given you my reasons for differing from you on this point. If they are satisfactory to you, I shall be pleased, if they are not I have no wish to be offended with you.

Yours with christian regards, S. TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., March 6, 1854.

SOME OBJECTIONS NOTICED.

DEAR BROTHER WILLIAM: - I find by the 13th & 14th number, present volume of the MESSENGER, that brother Purdy has some objections to certain ideas advanced by me in my communication in answer to brother Fisher. His objection seems to be mainly against an idea which I threw out rather as a suggestion, than as a fixed opinion. This suggestion is found in the sentence quoted by him from me. "Thus the manifestation of the justification of the Old Testament saints, and the justice of God in their justification was made perfect, (that is, by Christ's being delivered for their offences, and raised again for their justification as spoken of before,) as it was not to them while on earth, at least, even if it was to them in heaven, until the everlasting doors were opened, and the King of glory, or Christ triumphant first entered, then they no doubt entered in with him." That is, that the saints which died previous to the ascension of Christ did not enter into that heaven where the saints are with Christ and behold his glory, until he as the Leader and Head of his people first entered in, and was seated on the throne of his glory, then they entered in to be with him, &c. I threw out the idea rather as a suggestion, because it was an idea I had not previously particularly thought of; though when it was presented to my mind, certain texts which I also quoted were brought to my mind as supporting the idea. But the fact that brother Purdy has not been able to bring one text of Scripture in support of the view that the ancient saints enter at death, is sufficient to confirm me that his view is not right, even if I had not plain Scripture to support my idea. For since my mind has been led to the subject it must take something more than traditional assumptions to convince me that the Old Testament saints could at their death enter into the glory of Christ, whilst Jesus was not yet glorified. See John 7:39.

But brother Purdy seems also to object to the idea that the Old Testament saints had not the full manifestation of their justification, as they and the New Testament saints have, since Christ was raised for their justification. I will offer the few remarks I have to make on this point first.

1st. As this seems to involve the doctrine of eternal or antemundane justification, a subject which has been heretofore fully discussed. Besides the doctrine of the union of Christ and his bride or people, which has been more recently discussed, necessarily involves the idea that as Adam's posterity stood and fell in him by virtue of union, so Christ's bride remained under the demands of the law, whilst he, her husband, remained under it, and was justified when he received his clearance on her behalf by his resurrection.

So I am not disposed now to discuss these points. I wish only to notice a few texts of Scripture. First, Gal.4:3, which I quoted before. Who does Paul mean by the wein verse 3? We national Israel, or we spiritual Israel? Do not his various addresses to those to whom he wrote his Epistles show that he addressed them as brethren in Christ or spiritual Israelites? If so, can brother Purdy explain this passage so as to allow that the believers, the spiritual Israelites were not in bondage under the elements of the world, until the fulness of time was come when God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law? And could they receive the adoption of sons before they were thus redeemed by Christ's coming and death? Or what does Paul mean by what he says in the 4,5 & 7th verses? Again, Rom.3:24-26. What can Paul mean, after saying, "Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God," by repeating, To declare and uniting it by the expression at this time, if he would have it understood that in all past time God's righteousness in the remission of sins, was declared through types, as now through the actual death of Christ? Brother Purdy took no notice of these texts as quoted in my communication to which he replied. They certainly stand for something, and their meaning must be definite. If brother Purdy will carefully examine them, I think he will be convinced that the actual death of Christ was important, and vastly important in the redemption of his people from under the law, and as much so in reference to those who lived before his coming in the flesh, as for those who have lived since. Many other texts might be quoted to the same amount, but I will just name two others. Matt.5:17,18, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, until all be fulfilled." What can this mean, if the law and prophets were fulfilled by the types and shadows, or by faith, so that the saints were freed from the law and made perfect? See also Rom.10:4, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." How could Christ become the end of the law for righteousness, (if the law could not be destroyed, nor one jot or tittle pass from it,) without his actually fulfilling it? And if not, how could the Old Testament saints be delivered from it, so as to be no more servants, but sons? Will brother Purdy reflect on these things, and show us if he can that the faith of the ancient saints by looking at the shadow, could see as clearly the end of the law, and the justice of God, in justifying the ungodly, as does the faith of the New Testament saints in looking at the substance, Christ, with open face and not through a veil. See II Cor.3:13-18.

But brother Purdy seems to place great stress on the purpose of God going before. As there is so much of this purposed salvation afloat among us at this day, and represented to be of equal efficacy and equally complete with actual redemption and salvation, I may perhaps be indulged in noticing it a little. But I wish first to notice the vast difference between the infinitely omniscient God with whom there can be no future, no past, and finite creatures who are of yesterday. With God, his law was magnified and satisfied from the beginning. But could God impart to finite creatures, or has he ever done it, a faith, that equals his own omniscience? I think not. And I should think brother Purdy, when calmly reflecting on it, would admit that it is the prerogative of Jehovah alone to declare the end from the beginning. And yet what short of this, does he ascribe to the faith of the Old Testament saints? If I can understand some parts of his remarks, salvation must be an actual deliverance from the obligations or bondage of the law, as well as from sin, for the strength of sin is the law. I Cor.15:56. God as the sovereign law giver, could suspend the infliction of the curse incurred on his people, until the fulness of time by him set had come, then the Son coming forward in that nature which the law could take hold of, that curse fell on him, as having by his eternal relation to his people been placed between them and the law, they being in him. Hence God could spare them from going down to the pit, saying, "I have found a ransom," (Job 33:24,) and give them a type of that ransom in the sacrifices of beasts, &c., and give them faith to behold through these that provided ransom, and therefore give them hope of final deliverance. But how he could give them faith to believe, that they were already justified or cleared from the demands of the law, seeing that Christ had not then redeemed them by his death, and seeing that faith is a belief of the truth, I cannot see. Neither can brother Purdy point me to a single shadow, or a single declaration in the Old Testament that points backward to the redemption and deliverance from the law as already accomplished. Hence as faith, genuine faith, can embrace only what God has revealed, it could only believe that they should be delivered from the law and its bondage; not that they were then delivered. Brother Purdy speaks with surprise at the idea of the old Testament saints being born again and not being justified from the law and enjoying all the liberty of sons; but Paul speaks of those who preceded the fullness of time when God sent forth his Son, &c., as being children, and yet as being in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal.4:8, already referred to, so that brother Purdy must reconcile this matter with Paul, not with me.

Brother Purdy seems to suppose that to believe in God's having purposed to redeem will have just the same effect in giving liberty, as to believe that he has fulfilled that purpose in sending his Son to redeem. Why then did not the faith of the old saints look back to the purpose of God as the ground of their hope instead of looking forward to the coming of Christ to redeem them? But that such is not the case, brother Purdy's own experience I think is sufficient to convince him, if he will attend to it. Brother Purdy I presume believes that according to the revealed purpose of God, he being a child of promise, his body is yet to be changed like unto the glorified body of the Son of God when he will be freed from all corruption, earthliness and mortality; and being Christ's and therefore the seed of Abraham, he believes it with the same faith that Abraham had, and as strongly as Abraham could believe that in his seed should all nations be blessed. Does his faith in this purpose of God, in this case, enable him to realize the change as already taken place? Or does he like Paul and others still "groan, being burdened with a body of sin and death?" How then can he suppose that faith can bring that which is future and existing only in purpose, into present and actual existence? What is it then? Why brother Purdy believes that this glorious change will take place, therefore does he hope and quietly wait for it. So I have no doubt the Old Testament believers, hoped and patiently waited for their redemption and justification from the law. This purposed salvation carried to the extent which some do even denying that the Mediator existed only in purpose, until he was born of Mary, I cannot view as anything else than cloaked deism. For if for four thousand years men could approach God, and be accepted, without any existing Mediator through whom to approach and could enjoy perfect deliverance from the demands of the law without being actually redeemed from under it; I see not why others in after ages, might not so approach and be accepted of God without the existence of a Mediator. What is this but open deism or infidelity as it is called? But I have a hope that brother Purdy does not carry his purposed salvation so far.

But brother Purdy evidently misunderstood me in arguing as though I had represented that the Old Testament saints were not made equal with those living under the gospel, that is in heaven. I said no such thing, and thought no such thing. In the very sentence which he quoted from me I said when the "everlasting doors were lifted up and the king of glory or Christ entered, they no doubt entered with him." Of course fully partook of that justification for which he was raised, and of his spirit as son and of his glory, as much as any who have entered where he is since. So that the text, "They are all one in Christ Jesus," which he quoted has no bearing against my position, but supports it as showing that they were all alike and at the same time redeemed in Christ, and glorified in him. I now come to brother Purdy's objection to the idea that the Old Testament saints did not enter into that heaven or glory which followed Christ's death, into which the saints who died before, and those who have died since the ascension of Christ, have alike now entered.

1st. I will notice his remarks on the two texts to which I referred in advancing my idea. First, he notices my reference to Psa.24:7-10. Brother Purdy remarks upon this, "Brother Trott has a plurality of doors for the admittance of the old saints. We had cherished the belief that there was but the one way to heaven, &c." I had supposed there was but one way to the Father, and that Christ is that way. But I was speaking of Christ having triumphed over death, &c., entering into his glory, so I understand the Psalmist to have reference. As I only referred to the passage without quoting it, I used the term opened instead of lifted up, as synonymous. As the Holy Ghost by David spake of doors and gates in the plural, I still think I was correct in using the language of inspiration on the point. As Christ is the Head of the body, the church; the beginning, the first born from the dead, that in all he might have the preeminence, I then thought, and now think he would be the first to be received up into glory; that glory which I understand to be the heaven of the saints. Brother Purdy also notices my reference to the parable of Lazarus. I said, "Hence Lazarus, instead of being represented as being with Christ is said to have been in Abraham's bosom; that is, resting for the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham." Thus it will be seen that I understand the expression as figurative of resting on the promise made to Abraham, waiting its fulfillment in the manifestation of the seed, Christ, if I had not added this explanatory remark, but merely quoted the expression of Christ. I cannot but think the remark of brother Purdy was rather ill aimed, - "Ah! One saint resting in the bosom of another saint," because the language was the language of the Son of God, not mine. The idea of brother Purdy, that Abraham is here mentioned as figurative of the Father and Lazarus of the Son, is not only to me strange, but awful. A man, a figure of the absolute, sovereign, self-existing, and invisible Jehovah! Can there be any other likeness of God, but the Son, who is the express image of his person? Did brother Purdy ever consider the second command of the Decalogue of Moses' remarks, Deut. 4:12-16, or did he recollect that God is a spirit, or the text, John 1:18. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him?" Then to speak of the Son as being carried by angels to the bosom of the Father, as though he did not always dwell there, and as though he was raised up and transported by angels. As to Abraham, he is frequently mentioned in the New Testament, as well as in the Old, but never as a type or figure, but always of himself, in that peculiar relation in which God had placed him as being the Father of all them that believe, as well as of national Israel. That parable with its closing instruction shows that Abraham as the father of the Jews was there intended. But brother Purdy noticed my reference to those two texts, why not notice the quotation of Heb.9:8, in connection with 10:19,20. There is contained a positive declaration, that "the Holy Ghost thus signifying that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing."

Let us notice what this state of glory, or heaven, or the antitypical holiest of all, into which the saints enter since the coming of Christ, is described to be in the New Testament.

Paul speaks, Phil.1:23, of having a desire to depart and be with Christ. This then was the heaven he had in view. Christ in his prayer to his Father, John 17:24, says, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me." He had before said, verse 5, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me, with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was." And still before, he had said, verse 1, "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee." It appears from this that he had this glory with the Father, before the world was in that eternal purpose which God purposed in him. That is as he dwelt in the bosom of the Father, and was hid in God, but now the hour is come in which he was to be personally and manifestively glorified, as the Son or Mediator to the admiration of angels and saints. Again, Christ says in John 14:2,3. "In my Father's house are many mansions; if not, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there may ye be also." I do not understand this house as being confined in its mansions to the heavenly glory, but as the typical house or temple had its most holy place, shadowing forth heaven itself, into which Christ has entered, now to appear in the presence of God for us. Heb.9:21-26. The language of these texts clearly show, that those whom the Father had given, had not been with him in that heaven to which he has now entered; that he had not before entered, with his own blood, and had not prepared a place for his people, and had not as the Mediator been personally glorified. Whatever then may have been the heaven signified by the term Abraham's bosom, and by the term paradise, it is evident that the saints who died previous to the everlasting doors being lift up, and Christ's entering into this heavenly glory, could not have been with Christ to behold his glory, where, according to his prayer, they and other departed saints now are. The paradise, where Christ promised the thief, saying, "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise," whatever it imports, I think cannot have been designed to denote this state of heavenly glory, from the meaning of the word as signifying a fruit garden, and from its being first applied to Eden in the Scriptures; besides on the third day, after his crucifixion, Christ said to Mary, "I am not yet ascended to my Father." John 20:17. In conclusion, if brother Purdy will lay aside imagination and the traditions of men, and search the Scriptures on the subject, he will find that I was not so erroneous as he thought in my reply to brother Fisher. I have been more lengthy on the subject than I could have wished. Indeed the subject simply of the state of the departed saints previous to the resurrection is in itself rather unimportant, but involving as this question does, the glorification of Christ and the enquiry whether his people were glorified with him, and in him; or whether a part of them were glorified before he was, and therefore in themselves independently of his glorification, is a subject of no small importance. I hope you may consider this worthy of a place in the MESSENGER.

With christian regards, yours, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., Aug. 22, 1856.

SOME THOUGHTS ON HEB. 11:40.

BROTHER WILLIAM: - I see by number two of the MESSENGER that brother William Fisher of Florida wishes an explanation of the text, Heb. 11:40, "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." If I believed with brother Fisher that the prophets and saints of the Old Testament were not born again, not born of a spiritual birth, I should think that this text contained a mystery that never could be explained in accordance with New Testament testimony. For as brother Fisher admits, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" – "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Not being born again, could Abraham ever enter into heaven? If not they never could be made perfect.

The natural or first man is of the earth, earthy, not heavenly, and therefore never could enjoy anything higher than an earthly paradise. Brother Fisher says they were saved by faith as was Abraham. Abraham have faith? The faith of God's elect, and not have spiritual life, or be born again? For "that which is born of the flesh, is flesh." It is that which is born of the spirit, that is spirit. Paul does not include faith in the works of the flesh, but names it as a fruit of the spirit.

Gal.5:19-23. If I believed that faith was an act of the natural man, I should think our Arminian preachers were correct in telling their hearers that they can believe at any time, and they are bound by the law to believe, and therefore are condemned for not believing. Did not Abraham rejoice to see Christ's day? (John 8:56.) In seeing it, did he not see the kingdom of God? See that which is spiritual? How could he have seen that, if not born again? Did not Abraham and other Old Testament saints worship God in truth? But how could they do it if not spiritual or born again? "God is a Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." As the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned; and to receive or believe in Christ is to receive the things of the Spirit of God, I must believe that Abraham and Abel and others were born again, though brother Fisher thinks it absurd. Thus we are told, John 1:12,13, "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name, which were born, not of blood, but of God." Here are two or three things to be noted, 1st, from this text we are showed that to receiveChrist, is the same as to believe on his name. 2nd, that it does not say, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, by being born, not of blood, &c., but of God. But it simply affirms that he gave them power, and afterwards it affirms of them that they were born of God; that is that they had already been born of God. Hence the difference between them and others in their receiving him, or believing on his name, whilst the body of the Jews did not receive him. How he gave to these who were thus born of God, power to become the sons of God, will be showed in showing how the ancient subjects of faith were made perfect; that is, by being redeemed from under the law. Paul explains the whole matter of brother Fisher's inquiry, in chapter 4, of his letter to the Galatians. He commences with saying, "Now I say brethren, that the heir so long as he is a child differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the Father.

Even so we, when we were children were in bondage under the elements of the world," verses 1-3. In noticing the Apostle's position here, we must remember that, "the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith," it is added, "For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void," &c. Rom.4:13,14. Hence the Apostle does not mean to represent by the heir in his position, those which are of the law; that is, those who are only the natural seed, and therefore resting only upon the law, but those which are of faith. These he calls children. In a word he is speaking not of the Jews nationally, but of the church of believers as it existed previous to the redemption by Christ, when he says, "even so we brethren when we were children were in bondage under the elements of the world;" that is, under the Sinai covenant or law. Thus showing that although the saints under the Old Testament were believers and heirs, yet they were in bondage under the law, and therefore knew not the privilege of sons, had not the Spirit of adoption. Yet they were children, and of course I judge that they must have been born children, and of course born again. Paul goes on to show that in the fulness of time God sent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons, and adds, "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts crying, Abba, Father; wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son," &c., verses 6,7. Thus we see that though the children of God under the law, obtained a good report on the revealed promise of the Seed, the Christ, and rested on that promise for their righteousness, yet they did not receive the promise, or that which was promised, or in other words were not actually justified from the law, and could not be until Christ being delivered for their offences, was raised again for their justification. Until then the righteousness of God for the remission of sins that were past, was not declared, neither was it known how he could be just and the "justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Rom.

3:25,26. Hence the Apostle says, "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." That is, we are permitted to witness and to bear testimony to the resurrection of Christ for the justification of all them that have believed or shall believe in Christ. Thus the manifestation of the justification of the Old Testament saints and of the justice of God in their justification was made perfect, as it was not to them while on earth, at least, even if it was to them in heaven, until the everlasting doors were opened and the King of glory, or Christ triumphant, first entered, then they no doubt entered in with him. Hence, Lazarus instead of being represented as being with Christ, is said to have been in Abraham's bosom; that is, resting for the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham. Hence also says the Apostle, "The Holy Ghost thus signifying that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." Heb.9:8. But in chapter tenth, 19th & 20th verses, he speaks of entering into the holiest by a new and living way; that is, by the blood of Jesus.

I have very strong objections to brother Fisher's idea that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is the new birth. A baptism and a birth are very different things, a birth is a bringing into existence that which had not individually existed before, or a person being brought to exist in a life in which he had not before existed personally. Baptism is a representation of the burial and resurrection of the same person. That extraordinary communication which occurred on the day of Pentecost is uniformly in the Scriptures called a baptism, never a birth. Besides, it uniformly had an external effect upon those who were subjects of it. Cloven tongues as of fire were seen upon them, and they all spake with tongues, so that persons of different languages could hear their speech as in their own tongue. I know of no authority other than the Quakers for saying that a person has not been baptized of the Holy Ghost unless he has the miraculous power of speaking externally with tongues. Neither do I know of any authority in the Scriptures for saying that believers are born of the Holy Ghost. They are born as the seed of Christ and of the Spirit of Christ, and therefore have the Spirit of Christ, or Christ in them. But no more at present.

Affectionately yours, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., Jan.28, 1856.

SOME VIEWS REGARDING MANASSAH: KING OF JUDAH.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - Having received a letter from brother John S. McColl, of Albdorough, Elgin County, Canada West, dated the 27th November, and requesting my views on II Kings 24:3,4, in view of what is said of Manassah, in II Chron.33:11-18, I will by your permission, answer him through the SIGNS.

Dear Brother McColl: - After thanking you for the kindly expressions of fellowship, contained in your letter toward me and the writers in the SIGNS and MESSENGER, and assuring you that I feel thankful that there are brethren in Canada who agree with the remnant in the United States, in the belief of the doctrine of Christ being the life of his church and people, and therefore in a life-union of him with them from before the foundation of the world, I will proceed to give you such views as I have, of the text proposed. You will excuse me for answering you through the SIGNS, instead of doing it by private letter. My reason for this course may be thought by some to be indicative of vanity in me. The passage in its connection, no doubt, appears difficult to many besides yourself, and yet since you called my attention to it, it has appeared to be of easy solution, and I therefore thought that my explanation might be beneficial to others, as well as yourself. If I am deceived I hope the error will be corrected.

The passage, II Kings 24:3,4, reads: "Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manassah, according to all that he did; and also for the innocent blood that he shed,

(for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood;) which the Lord would not pardon." It will be seen from the connection, that the judgment which is here spoken of as coming upon Jerusalem and Judah, as a punishment for the abominations which Manassah committed, and which he caused Judah to commit, was inflicted many years after Manassah's death, and even after the good reign of Josiah; thus showing that the Lord did not, and would not, pardon this thing. On the other hand, I think, brother McColl, with you, that the account given in II Chron.33:11-18, of Manassah's penance, &c., shows clearly that his prayer was heard of God, and therefore that he prayed in faith, and was personally forgiven of God. The question then arises, how is this apparent contradiction to be reconciled? It is easily reconciled by considering the difference between the Sinai covenant and the gospel. If Manassah was forgiven and accepted of God, as we think he was, it was through Christ, and not by the provisions of the Sinai covenant. Though Christ in his flesh, lay in embryo in that nation and under that covenant, and was the Holy One of Israel, and thus preserved them from being destroyed as a nation, by all the judgments they brought upon themselves, until the fulness of time come for him to be personally manifested in the flesh; yet he averted none of those judgments from them. And though by his death he redeemed his people from under the law, and took the whole handwriting of ordinances out of the way, yet he averted not the consummation of the full curse of that covenant from falling upon them as a nation. The truth is, Christ's atonement was for individuals of the human family, and has no reference to nations as such. But the abominations which Manassah perpetrated, and led Judah to commit, he enacted as the king of Judah and therefore as the head and representative of the nation; hence it was a national act, and therefore drew down the judgment upon the nation long after his death. Indeed, God left him to act out the vileness of his nature, in leading the nation to do these abominations, and thus to fill up that measure of their iniquity which should bring upon them the Babylonish captivity, as a punishment for their rebellion against God from the day he brought them out of Egypt, according to II Kings 21:15. And as God said unto Moses, Exod.32:34. The same principle is carried out under the gospel; the believer has evidence of pardon and acceptance with God, yet in this life he is not relieved from those curses entailed on him by Adam's transgression, such as death, thistles and thorns, &c., nor from that depravity under which he groans. So of national judgments, such as wars, pesthences, &c., the believer has to share with others in their infliction. Not only this, but although all the sins and depravity of the believer are covered over by the atonement of Christ, and can never come in judgment against him, yet he will be made to feel, in this life, the consequences from his sins and errors, or the evils they produce. And as Moses said to Israel, (Num.

32:23,) "Be sure your sin will find you out;" so with the believer, as he will be made to feel the burden of his sins sooner or later upon his conscience.

You wish, further, that I would give my views concerning the innocent blood which Manassah shed. II Kings 21:16 & 24:4. By turning to Deut.19:10, we find that the killing the man-slayer, who slew his neighbor ignorantly, would be shedding innocent blood, and also the killing a man from hatred is shedding innocent blood. See verse 13. Instead, therefore, of supposing that the innocent blood which Manassah shed was the blood of infants, and that was innocent because of their purity from sin and depravity, as Arminians have said, we are authorized to consider that as innocent blood, which was shed without provocation. See also, as a further confirmation of this, I Sam.19:5 & I Kings 2:31. By Manassah's shedding innocent blood, we are therefore to understand his procuring the killing of many without just provocation, and perhaps because they would not go with him into his idolatry. Probably your enquiry embraced the idea of the antitype, whether there is anything there answering to the figure. The blood of Christ was truly innocent blood, and that has been shed in spiritual Israel. It had its effect upon the Jewish nation more direct than the blood which Manassah shed, both in filling up the measure of their iniquity, and in the judgment of God which it drew in on them. But this was only the consummation of the depravity of that people of which the reign of Manassah was only a prelude, and cannot therefore be viewed as the antitype. The depravity thus showed in the type was but a true figure of the depravity which every believer has to acknowledge belongs to, and hangs upon the spiritual seed in their old man; and such are made to feel that it was their sins which caused the Lord of glory to bleed and die. Does not the believer, at times, feel the force of the poet's words?

"Was it for crimes that I had done, He groaned upon the tree?"

It was Manassah, the king of Judah, that shed innocent blood. It was Christ, the King of Israel, that shed this in Zion. He says, "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself," &c. John 10:17,18. Still the sins and depravity of his people's were the occasion of his doing it, they being laid on him. The consequence of the shedding of this innocent blood has followed the church of Christ from that day to this, not calling for vengeance, but calling down mercy and pardon upon all the children of grace; thus illustrating the distinction between the two covenants; between law and grace. In a worldly point of view; that is, in relation to the outward man, and the outward appearance of the church, the shedding of Christ's blood has had an apparent different consequence upon the church. It has drawn down upon her persecutions, and more than Babylonish captivity, occasioning her to be considered as the offscouring of all things unto this day. Not as retributive justice, for Christ took all that out of the way, in expiating our sins, according to the peculiarities of this letter covenant, under which the church lives; but as a natural consequence of the doctrine of the Cross of Christ; such is the enmity of the human heart against God's way of saving sinners by grace. But the wisdom and grace of God are alike manifested in both cases. By permitting the house of Judah to draw upon themselves the Babylonish captivity, and other repeated judgments, it was manifested that the purpose and grace of God in Christ would override all their sins, and the consequence thereof, so as still to preserve the sceptre in Judah until Shiloh came. Thus God's dealings with that people stand as a confirming testimony to the experience of the saints, that this same purpose and grace of God can, and will, bring all the heirs of promise to the knowledge of the truth, and preserve the church as a faithful witness to the truth, notwithstanding all the opposition of their own corruptions, and the world, and the world's governments array against that truth, until all the ransomed ones are brought in, and all be saved to sin no more.

Thus, my brother, I have given you my views, perhaps not in as explicit language as I might, but I hope you will be able to understand them, and be edified by them, if they are in substance correct, as I think they are, or I would not have given them. If you please, let me hear from you again, publicly or privately, and if you have objections to these views, inform me of them.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Dec.9, 1855.

Sovereign Grace and Good Works.

Brother Beebe: - Brother Jewett, in the Number of the Doctrinal Advocate for May, 1845, proposed that I, or some brother, should treat on the connection which may exist between the doctrine of Sovereign Grace and Good Works.

When I first saw the proposition, I shrunk from it as a task less befitting me to undertake than others of our brethren, seeing that my practice or feelings seemed less corresponding with the gospel than was the case with others. But on further reflection, I thought that my experience in the case might have its use, and would be more consoling to some of the children of God than would a treatise from those who have been enabled more uniformly to keep under the awful corruptions of their nature; if indeed mine is the experience of a child of grace. I therefore commenced writing on the subject previous to brother Jewett's death; and I have since thought that perhaps what I had written might not be unacceptable to some of the readers of the Signs; I have therefore finished what I had to say on the subject, and changed the address to the Signs. I have no doubt that some positions which my experience will oblige me to occupy will astonish some brethren.

Brother Jewett rightly qualified this subject by defining it as a spiritual reception of the doctrine of Christ; for a mere theoretical reception of sound doctrine, or having only the natural judgment convinced of the truth of it, is but a dead faith, and of course brings forth no spiritual fruits. A connection between the doctrine of Sovereign Grace and Good Works was evidently understood by Paul, to exist; for after making a full representation of the sovereignty of God as manifested in the experience of salvation, (Titus 3:3-7,) he immediately adds, (verse 8,) "This is a faithful saying, and these things, I will, that thou affirm constantly, that they that have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." He thus teaches not only that this doctrine has a tendency to good works, but also that this is the proper theme to excite believers to them. How different this, from the notion that this doctrine tends to licentiousness! When the natural judgment alone is convinced that salvation is by grace, and there is a reliance on that only for escaping future punishment, there may probably be a tendency to licentiousness. And it is no wonder that the opposers of this doctrine, who know nothing but natural reason as their guide, should view the doctrine of grace in this light. But we may be assured that whoever can deliberately draw such a conclusion and act under its influence, gives decisive evidence that he is ignorant of that hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory, even that mystery, that it is God that worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure. I Cor.2:7 & Phil.2:13. Such know nothing of that implanted desire after holiness which belongs to the new man.

In coming more directly to the subject in view, I will first try to determine what good works are in a gospel sense. The old scholastic definition of good works, is, that they are such as are done from a right principle, by a right rule, and to a right end; but I would prefer a definition more simple. Indeed, good works do not require so much to be done by rule; they are not like positive institutions which require a strict observance of the letter of the command. Hence our Lord has resolved all rules upon this point into one, "Therefore all things that ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Mt.7:12. The term explains itself, for good works are such works as are kind and beneficial to others.

Hence the Apostle defines them by saying, "These things are good and profitable unto men." Titus 3:8. Many seem to suppose that good works principally consist in religious exercises. Hence the great stress they lay upon a round of what they call duties, or upon a certain kind of bodily exercises; and being attentive to these, they are not careful to avoid covetousness, dishonesty, hatred, &c. They suppose that they are to do good to God, and that for this goodness He will reward them; as though if they kept the Sabbath strictly, or gave their money for religious purposes, God was thereby benefited. Even Eliphaz, the Temanite, had a better view than this of these things; he says, "Can a man be profitable unto God as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?" So Elihu, "If thou sinnest, what doest thou against Him? or, if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto Him? If thou be righteous, what givest thou Him, or what receiveth He of thy hand? Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man." Job 22:2 & 35:6-8. The Psalmist in evidently personating Christ says, "O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord: my goodness extendeth not to thee; but to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight." Psalm 16:2-3. Religious exercises, such as waiting upon God, come more properly under the idea of privileges, than of works, though there is an obligation resting upon the believer to observe the institutions of the gospel, and to honor God in all his ways.

Good works are set forth in the scriptures as a carrying out the spirit of the second table of the Decalouge. Thus Paul in his exhortations to the Romans, sums all up by saying, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." He before said, "For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, &c., and if there be any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and adds, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Rom.13:9-10. By an examination of all that is said on this subject in the New Testament, we shall find they are presented to view as both positive and negative: that is, they consist in being beneficial to others, or in doing good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith, as we have opportunity, and also in a faithful discharge of the duties of every station and relation we may sustain in life, both civil and religious; as well as in refraining from whatever would be injurious to others. But then good works, in a gospel point of view, or as evidences of a gracious state, consist in something more than a mere performance of the act. Many acts which in themselves are beneficial to others, are performed in a spirit or from a motive that is not good, but evil. Such is the case manifestly with much of that display made of what they call charity, and self-denial, &c., by the religious multitude of this day. They are done either to be seen of men, or as a means of bringing those to whom they are done, in some way under their influence; or to make up a sum of righteousness on which to rest their hopes of salvation; or perhaps in a real infidel spirit, to show how good they can be and how much better human nature is, than those who believe the scriptures, describe it to be. There is a meekness, a kindness of feeling in doing good works, a fear of God and regard to the honor of His cause, in shunning to do wrong, which are more decisive evidences of a gracious spirit, than the mere doing or shunning the act. Yea, the humility and self-condemnation frequently manifested by the children of grace, for doing what they ought not to have done, and for not doing as they ought, gives more assurance to others of their true love to God, than would the not doing or doing the acts. The child of grace does nothing for mere ostentation and show, but from a sense of duty and a love to uprightness. Neither is a studied secretness, unless on some peculiar occasions, necessary. Some are so sly in what they do for the poor, and for the support of the gospel ministry, as almost to lead to the belief, that they are ashamed to have it known that their religious impressions disposed them to kindness to the one, or fellowship for the other.

But to come to the existing connection between a spiritual reception of the doctrine of Christ and good works; we will remark, First. That such reception of the doctrine of Christ, implies the being born again - not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible; consequently it implies that the law in its spirituality has been written in their hearts, or that the love of God has been implanted therein. In this change, is at once presented the principle of good works. Love to God leads to a desire to be like Him, and to a delight in His law after the inward man. This change also produces in equal proportion a loathing of sin and of ourselves on account of it, and consequently we desire not to be under its influence. But the inquiry looks to the idea, whether soundness of doctrine as received by faith tends to the maintaining of good works. Its direct tendency evidently is towards the maintaining of good works. The notions of conditional acceptance with God, by obscuring the holiness of God, in supposing that He can be pleased with impure or imperfect obedience, and by hiding the exceeding sinfulness of sin so as to make the creature satisfied with his imperfect and unholy performance of duties, tends to make him careless about motives, so long as he can keep up the appearance of religious devotion, and about the performance of good works or religious duties, any further that he expects to be rewarded for them, or than he supposes necessary to secure his acceptance.

But the doctrine of Christ gives such enlarged views of the holiness of God as to lead those who receive it so to feel the hidden abominations of their own hearts in contrast therewith as to destroy all confidence in any of their own acts, and to pant after more holiness in heart and life. In addition, sound doctrine gives such a view of the riches of the love and grace of God towards vile, unworthy sinners, that whenever faith gives a glimpse of it, every power of mind is captivated thereby, and they are made earnestly to desire to glorify God in their bodies and in their spirits which are His.

Again; a belief in this doctrine, by giving us a deep sense of the deceitfulness of our hearts, and the depravity of our natures, leads us to be guarded against trusting to our own hearts, or depending on our own resolutions and strength, and to seek frequent supplies of grace and strength to resist temptations, and to overcome the corruptions of our nature, and to do that which is right. And what was Paul's experience, is the experience of every believer, "When I am weak, then am I strong." II Cor.12:10. And again, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Phil.4:13. Whenever we go forward carelessly or with self-confidence, we are sure to come short or fall; but none is ever confounded whilst, sensible of his weakness, his heart truly trusteth in God. Once more, that faith which receiveth and resteth upon the doctrine of Christ, is that which overcometh the world: "This is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith." I John 5:4. Faith, taking hold of the immutability of God in His purpose and promises, leads us forward as disciples of Christ, to face the frowns and scoffs of the world; presenting to us the certainty and fullness of salvation in Christ Jesus, it shields us from the fiery darts of the adversary, and strengthens us to meet the sword and faggots of the persecutor; assuring us of the love and mercy of God to our poor souls, and the beauties of the Saviour, it drives away those death- chills which the world by its influence tends to throw over the graces of the Spirit and our soul's comforts; and presenting to our minds the declarations of God's word, it foils the tempter in his aims to ensnare us, as for instance, when Satan would persuade us that we might indulge in this gratification of the flesh, or that, without reproach to the cause of Christ, as it would not be known, &c., faith brings forward such antidotes as these, "Be sure your sin will find you out." Num.32:23. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore will I punish you for all your iniquities." Amos 3:2. Or as temptation is varied, so faith brings from the treasury that which meets it.

There are an abundance of inducements connected with the reception of sound doctrine, to maintain good works. 1st. As already noticed, the love and mercy of God towards us invites to gratitude, and a strong desire to show our love to Him by a denying of ourselves, and a walking in obedience to His ways. 2nd. From our love to the doctrine, the very reproach and opposition it meets with, tends to increase in us the desire to show forth its holy and beneficent nature in our lives and conversation, and to avoid occasioning reproach to it. 3rd. The promises of grace and strength, and of escape in the time of temptation, which this doctrine shows to be Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus, encourages us to pursue the path marked in the New Testament, regardless of the difficulties we may meet with. I will add, the fear of experiencing the frowns of our heavenly Father, and of being left to ourselves, and to mourn in darkness, is a strong inducement, to those who have known what it is to have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, to watchfulness and prayer against temptation. So that with these and the like inducements, the child born into gospel liberty needs not to go back to the letter and bondage of the law, to find in its demands and threats that which will excite him to good works.

I have thus sketched the direct tendency of sound doctrine to good works, and the consequent connection between them. But do we at this day see this connection fully manifest in ourselves and others generally, who, we hope, believe the doctrine of Christ? I think not; though in none is there as great a deficiency, perhaps, as in myself. How are we to account for the failure? I might briefly answer, from the weakness of our faith, and the prevalency of that sin which so easily besets us, namely: unbelief. But I wish to be indulged in some extended remarks on this point.

In the first place, we are to bear in mind, and we shall be often reminded of it to our sorrow, that whilst we are made partakers, if children of the kingdom, of a life that was created in Christ Jesus unto good works, and therefore in the new man delight in holiness, yet the old, the Adamic man is not changed, but is in itself as earthly, sensual, and devilish as ever. Hence the warfare in the believer, between the flesh and the spirit, between Christ and Adam. Here I wish, if I can, to present the subject of the warfare in its different bearings in a true light. For just here it is that the formalist who, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, bolsters himself up in his own self- importance, and trusting to his own self-taught belief of the doctrine of Christ, he walketh after the flesh without remorse of conscience. And here it is, that the child of grace finds an abundant source of doubts and fears.

The position I have above laid down, that there is no change in nature, is correct; but still the implanting in us of that life which is the light of men, has given us to know the hidden depravity of our hearts, has convinced our natural judgments, that the law is good, and that the commandment is holy, just and good, and that a departure from the principle of love to God and love to our neighbor, is evil and sinful. And we know, as men, that an indulgence in sin, and a neglect of our obligations as christians, brings darkness and sorrow, and convinced of the truth and consistency of the doctrine of Christ, and our minds and affections participate in the joys and sorrows of the new man. Yet after all this, our passions, appetites, self-love, &c., are left in their natural strength and depraved bias; and not only show themselves as such in the breast of the believer, but come forward with their demands for gratification. I am led to the conclusion, from the confidence which natural persons have in their power to keep themselves, and from the equanimity of mind and the strict morality that many such are able to maintain, contrasted with the bitter complaints the children of grace make of themselves, that the depravity in believers is frequently stirred up, and made in one shape or another, far more turbulent in their breasts, and impudent in its demands for gratification, than in others; so that if it were not for the opposition of the new man, and its leaning them in their straits to look to God for deliverance, they would be overwhelmed in their corruptions. Not only are their sins revived, stirred up at first by the demands of the law being set home, but God, as in the case of Israel in the wilderness, (Deut.8:2) will have His people from time to time know what is in their heart, and therefore suffers Satan to stir up their corruptions.

At one time a temptation will be presented for indulgence, under so much disguise, and with so much plausibility, and at another time it will come so suddenly and unexpectedly, that the poor believer is almost swept away by it, and would have been quite, had not the Lord made a way for his escape. At another time some temptation from without will unite with some inward corruption, and make and pursue its demand for indulgence in such an insinuating manner and with such perseverance, notwithstanding all the remonstrance of the judgment, and all the abhorrence of the spirit at the idea; and perhaps at times the spirit and judgment both appear to be asleep, and the affections seem to contemplate with pleasure the indulgence, so that when the mind is again aroused to a sense of the danger, the poor, ashamed, and confounded soul, concludes that he is gone, and carried away he must be by the temptation, and becomes discouraged, and almost arrives at the conclusion that it is no use any longer to contend against it. Perhaps in this state of the confusion of his mind Satan tempts him with the suggestion that the only way to escape being led into open sin, and from disgracing his profession, is to put an end to his existence.

Thus the believer is at times tossed in his little ark upon the billows of his corruptions, raised by the winds of temptation, and his Lord appearing to be asleep, or to care not for him, yet in the end, at the last extremity, he will be made to cry for help, and the Lord will appear to hush the storm and give peace. Hence I conclude that it is not grace, or the Spirit of life, in the believer, that will keep him from being overcome by his corruptions, and the temptations he meets with, but special grace is manifested in calling his faith into exercise, or otherwise encouraging and strengthening him to maintain the contest, or in some way providing for his escape. Hence the evidence of being a child of grace, though it is ground for hope that the Lord will keep him, is no just ground for the individual to conclude he can keep himself from falling; nor on the other hand, is his being tempted a just reason for him to conclude that he is not a child of grace. Watchfulness and prayer, and enduring hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, are important duties of believers - they are essential to his enjoying the consolations of the gospel, and to his glorifying God in his body and spirit. But still the believer's strength and security for living thus to God, is not in himself, but alone in God, and his having a spirit of prayer is as God is pleased to impart it.

I think I am sustained in my views above expressed, both by the experience of the believer and the language of scripture; thus, for instance: Rom.8:20 - "For the creature (the new creature) was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope." Also, John 15:5 - "For without me ye can do nothing."

In the second place, if the facts are so as we have endeavored to show from experience is the case, and this sustained by scripture, then the conclusion must be, that the present low and cold state of the churches, and the severe conflicts which many of the children of God are experiencing at this day, with the world, the flesh, and the devil, are God's appointment. Whether this be as a chastisement for their ingratitude in being kept from being swept away by the antichristian flood, and for too great a disposition to yield to the influence of the world, or whether it be for the purifying of the churches, by separating from them all who are not kept by the power of God, and for disciplining the saints to a sense of their weakness and of their dependence on God to keep and sustain them, preparatory to the great struggle with the man of sin, which may be shortly approaching, or both, I am not prepared to say.

In conclusion, I would say that I would like to see some of our brethren on this subject, and particularly on the struggle between the flesh and the spirit, and of the believer's being kept not by any power in the new man, but by the power of God through faith, &c. Brother Barton knows something of fightings without and fears within, so does brother Buck, and others, if they would write.

In my former draught, I referred also to brother West, but his pen is laid silently by; being, happily for him, exchanged for a harp of glory, having passed victoriously through the great tribulation, having washed his robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Though we may miss the wholesome productions of his pen through the columns of the Signs, and many a scattered sheep grieve the loss of his ministerial labors, yet for him we have no ground to mourn. But will such be the case with some of us who are yet in Bochim? Yours, &c.,

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.13 (1845) S. Trott.

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott. pgs. 302 - 310

MY THOUGHTS ON JUSTIFICATION

Brother Beebe: - In heading this communication as "My Thoughts," I have only reference to the fact known to many of the Old School brethren that I differ in my views from them on this important article of gospel doctrine, or at least in my manner of treating the subject. Whether these views are thoughts of my own hatching, or whether I have received them from Him whose office it is to guide the disciples into all truth I leave for my brethren to judge for themselves.

I have for some time intended, as soon as opportunity would serve, to communicate my views on this subject. My wish for doing so has arisen from the circumstance that in occasionally touching this subject in preaching, my brethren have discovered a difference, without perhaps being able to discover, wherefore and wherein, I thus chose to make myself singular in departing from the beaten trail of our Old School brethren on this point. And I freely admit that my brethren have on their side all the true advocates for the doctrine of Sovereign grace, who have published anything on this subject, perhaps for the last hundred years; that is, so far as I have been acquainted with their writings. On the other hand, I have met with no human author who has advanced my views on this doctrine. But though I thus stand alone on this point, if it should be that my views, weak as I am, are sustained by the Scriptures of truth, they will stand the test.

I am further induced to publish my views from the circumstance that the fact of a difference on this subject having existed has been brought to the notice of the readers of the Signs through your Baltimore correspondent, (Signs, Vol.5, #13, pg.103). I would here just reply to our esteemed

Baltimore friend that the correspondence between brother Hezekiah West and myself was not designed for publication, but merely for a free interchange between ourselves of the reasons of our different views on this point.

Lengthy as my apologies have already been touching this communication, I have still another one to offer, before I can enter upon the subject before me; that is, for coming out with this communication so soon after the publication of the recent Circular of the Licking Association lest any should suppose that I had the vanity to design this as an attack upon that ably written Letter. As I have already remarked, I have for some time had this communication in view; and I had intended writing it as soon as I had done with Mr. Giddings. Another inducement has pressed upon my mind for not delaying it, which I will not mention. Perhaps, however, it is quite as well on a general scale, though not so pleasant to me, that the two pieces should appear near together, as our brethren at large can thus conveniently compare the two, and see more clearly wherein the difference of our views consist and thus be able more clearly to judge of the correctness or incorrectness of my grounds for differing from my brethren on this point. I will now drop apologies and come to my subject.

My first objection to the term "Eternal Justification" as used by my brethren, or to the sentiment that the justification of the elect was an act of God passed in eternity, grows out of that prominent sentiment embraced in our Old School stand, namely: that a "Thus saith the Lord" is requisite to justify us in what we believe as well as in what we practice. I do not mean by this that the doctrine must always be expressed in the Scriptures in so many identical words. The doctrine of the "eternal union" of Christ and His people is not, that I know of, declared in just so many words in the Scriptures, yet I think this doctrine is therein clearly revealed. For instance compare Heb.2:11, "For both He that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified are all of one for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren," with Rom.8:29, "For whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son that He might be the first-born among many brethren," and they show that the oneness or the union is of as old a date as the predestinating decree of God; and that we know that from Eph.1:4 & 5, to have been from before the foundation of the world. Inference is thus plain, because according to Heb.2:11, Christ recognized His people as brethren on the ground of their oneness with Him; and according to Romans 8:29, the predestinating decree of God recognized them as the many brethren among whom Christ was first-born. This doctrine is also taught by the several figures by which the union is illustrated in the Scriptures. For instance, in the figure of the creation of Adam and Eve. As Eve was of Adam's body, of his flesh, and of his bones, so the church is of Christ. (See Eph.5:25-32) Eve was created in Adam in his original creation. Gen.5:1 & 2. That the figure as used by the Apostle may hold good, we must therefore admit that the church was brought forth and set up in Christ, her head, when He was brought forth from everlasting, when there were no depths, &c. Prov.8:23,24. The same is further confirmed by the general doctrine of the gospel such as that they were chosen in Him, &c. Eph.1:4. I would here remark that the doctrine contained in this text is not that they were chosen into Christ; but chosen in Him. Neither does it sustain Doctor Watts in the following couplet:

"Christ be my first-elect he said, Then choose our souls in Christ our head."

These lines found in that otherwise excellent hymn of Dr. Watts, 54th, 1st book, are in my estimation an entire departure from the Scripture doctrine; both in reference to the idea that our being chosen was an after act, and as to the notion of our souls being chosen in Christ. But to return to the subject, if there are any passages of Scripture having reference to justification, which thus represent it or bring it to view as an act passed in eternity, I have never discovered them, neither have the advocates of that sentiment, as far as I have seen, brought them forward. Besides there are texts which, so far as I understand them, plainly contradict that idea. As Rom.4:25, "Who was delivered for our offenses and was raised again for our justification." If the sentence of justification in behalf of the church of Christ was actually passed in eternity I cannot conceive how Christ only eighteen hundred years ago was raised for our justification. We needed not to be twice justified before God. "For by one offering He (Christ) hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." (Heb.10:14) Remember, it was by one offering He perfected. They could not be justified from all things without being perfected, and the one offering which perfected them was that making His soul an offering for sin; that offering of His body once for all, which He has accomplished on Calvary, as a time act. (Isa.53:10 & Heb.10:10).

Again, according to Rom.3:24, we are "justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." This justification must be the act of God, being "freely by His grace," and it is through the "redemption that is in Christ Jesus." If so, the act of justification cannot be considered as actually passed until the redemption was actually made.

Redemption is "through His blood." (Eph.1:7 & Col.1:14). Again, "In the fullness of time, God sent forth His Son made of a woman and made under the law to redeem them that were under the law." (Gal.4:4,5). Hence, as redemption is so manifestly a time act for those who before "were under the law," I cannot believe that the act of justification was passed until Christ was raised again. It is true Christ is said in Heb.

9:12, "To have obtained eternal redemption for us;" but a moment's reflection on the passage and its connection will, I think, convince any one that the redemption is here called eternal, not because it existed from eternity, but because it shall be, in its effects, of eternal or everlasting duration. The fact of Christ's obtaining it denies its having eternally been, as well as the connection.

I will not multiply testimonies upon this point seeing that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. I will just ask how it is, if justification was designed to be received as an eternal act of God that it is never thus declared in the Scriptures? The choice and predestination of God are revealed as being before the foundation of the world; also that the "purpose and grace of God" were given in Christ before the world began.

I pass to a second objection, namely: That the sentiment of eternal justification as contended for perverts the plain Scriptural use and design of the term "justification."

To justify and justification are terms which have special reference to legal proceedings as admitted by all writers on the subject, and signify the act of pronouncing a person clear from charges which may have been exhibited against him. In this sense these terms are evidently used in the Scriptures.

We find them connected with law, Acts 13:39, with offences, Rom.4:25, with redemption, which, of course, refers to law, Rom.3:24. It is true that as taught in the gospel, justification has a more extensive bearing as used in other cases. The decisions of human judges whether in relation to the Sinai or other laws cannot embrace futurity; but the justification which the gospel reveals embraces all futurity, as well as past transgressions; it is a clearance from all the demands of the law past, present and to come; it is a judicial pronouncing of those whom Christ hath redeemed from under the law, as legally perfect, and that forever, as Christ "by His own offering hath forever perfected them." Hence justification is in this sense, as is the redemption obtained by Christ, eternal; that is, eternal in its duration. If then the meaning of the term "justification" refers exclusively to legal proceedings, and if it is uniformly so used in the scriptures, what can it have to do with any period before the foundation of the world? Before creatures had an actual existence and before therefore the obligations of law had any place? "Where no law is, there is no transgression" so of course no charge? How then can a legal sentence of justification be passed in the absence of all charge, of all law? It will be asked, had not the children of God an existence before the foundation of the world? I answer "yes" as is evinced by that I have said of the union of Christ and His people? They existed in Christ, as His seed, His bride, His body; as Adam's bride and posterity existed in him in his original creation. But this existence was as distinct from their existence in Adam and his posterity as Christ is distinct from Adam. And the Covenant under which they were set up and existed in Christ was equally distinct from the law under which Adam was created. This Covenant was "ordered in all things and sure;" had no requisitions to make excepting of Christ as its surety. (Heb.7:22). This existence therefore opened no room for the requisition of a legal justification. A legal righteousness could just as soon be required of the Son in order to His enjoying the love of the Father, as it could be required of His seed and bride as they thus stood in Him, heirs with Him, to the same inheritance. Herein, I cannot help imagining that my brethren have confounded, or at least, have not kept clearly in view the distinction between the headship of Christ and Adam, and between the law and the everlasting covenant. Herein also I object to the system of my brethren upon this point as transposing the act of justification from its relation to the law, to a provision to meet a demand of the everlasting covenant.

Should any say that they do not view the sentence of justification as actually passed in eternity, but only existing in purpose to meet the predetermined event of the elect's being created in a fallible head, and being left to fall into sin, &c., I would remark that I believe in the pre-existence of such a purpose, as strongly as any of my brethren do; and not only that such purpose existed in the Divine mind, but also that God made sure and full provision in Christ as the surety of the better testament to meet all the demands of law and justice, that, should stand against the elect, as they were to be related in time to the earthly head, Adam. But why confound language by representing that which existed only in the predeterminate purpose of God as being actually past in eternity? The creation of man was as much predetermined and stood as present to the view of God as did the justification of the elect. But I have heard of none who pretended to say that man was created in eternity. Why then say that the elect were justified in eternity? By this confusion of language will you not lead men to think that when you say that the people of God were elected in eternity you mean only that God proposed to elect them in time?

I will now notice some of the arguments used to support the sentiment of eternal justification. 1st. The argument drawn from the everlasting love of God to His people. This argument is that God could not have loved them as sinners, and therefore that He must have previously justified them that He might love them. But really if these premises were correct I do not see how this provision of justification would help the difficulty any. For according to this argument God must have extended His electing love to a people who were not then fit objects of His love, and provided for them a redemption in His Son, the strongest possible expression of His love, in order to justify them, and this done, that He might love them.

The premises, however, on which this, to me, absurd conclusion rests is wrong. Christ and not Adam is the channel through which the love of God flows to His people. Viewed in Christ their Head, and in that life which they had in Him, I may confidently ask what sin was then in Him as their Head to bar the love of the Father from them? And what love was there to charge a failure upon Him? Christ speaks of the Father having "loved them (His people) as He had loved Him." John 17:23. The Father loved Him as His only begotten Son, and not as having a legal righteousness to justify Him. And if He loved them as He loved Him, He loved them in Christ as His children and joint heirs with Christ; and above what a legal righteousness could entitle them to. The truth is, Christ as the only begotten Son of God and Head of the church, had a glory with the Father before the world was, which no law servitude, no legal obedience could add to; and when about finishing His servitude under the law as the Redeemer of His people, He prays the Father to restore Him to that same glory. And what is more, He says to the Father, "the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them." (John 17:5 & 22). And surely, if Christ had given them, through their union with Him, that glory which He had with the Father, nothing which the law could impart could be necessary to make them lovely in the sight of God. Again, although it pleased the Father that the members of Christ's body should have an earthly existence, as such be under the law and fall under its curse; yet that law with all its divine rigor could no more destroy the love which God in eternity had placed upon them in His Son, than the Sinai law thundering its curses from Mount Ebal (Deut.27:13-26) against the posterity of Abraham, could disannul the promise which had been confirmed only four hundred and thirty years before, of God in Christ, that is, to Abraham. (Gal.3:16,17).

As another plea for the doctrine of eternal justification, it is asked, if we admit that the sentence of justification was passed eighteen hundred years ago in behalf of the whole church of Christ, why not admit that it was passed before the foundation of the world? I answer, for two of the best possible reasons. First, because eighteen hundred years ago, Christ completed the redemption of His church, by which they were cleared from all the demands of the law in Him, it was therefore fitting that the sentence of justification should then be declared in their favor, in and through Him their Head. But previous to Christ's being made of a woman and made under the law, the redemption of His church from under the law was not actually paid, and the sentence of justification could not therefore previously be passed in their favor, without clearing Him, as He stood as their Head through whom the sentence must pass, and as one with them, from His obligation to suffer the penalty of the law, and without making void the law. Second, the Scriptures declare that Christ, eighteen hundred years ago, was raised for our (the church's) justification, but they no where declare that she was justified antecedent to His redemption. Again it is argued from the doctrine of imputation that the church was justified in eternity. To carry this out it has been said that it was in consequence of the sins of the elect having been imputed to Christ, and His righteousness, which if it had remained His own, would have sustained Him under the load of their guilt, having been imputed to them, that He was subjected to fall under the curse of the law. But this is not the way I have read the Scriptures. If I have read them right, this position must fall. First, it calls for a double righteousness; for if Christ originally had such a righteousness as the sins of His people called for, to shelter them, He needed it not, only as He was one with them; and if therefore it sheltered them it must equally have sheltered Him as one with them, so that the curse could not have troubled either, the Head or the body. In the second place, the Scriptures teach me that Christ had not originally such a righteousness as was called for by the sins of His people to cover them. What righteousness was this? Remember that their sins were altogether sins under the law, the righteousness therefore which could counterbalance them could be nothing other than a perfect actual obedience to the law, a complete honoring it as a transgressed law. This righteousness, holy and pure as He was before, Christ had not actually, until He was made under the law, took upon Him the form of a servant, became obedient unto death, &c. Let us see how the Scriptures read upon this point. "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." (Heb.5:9).

Hence, there was a perfection, a completing, wanting in Christ as He stood connected with His people in their apostasy, and as their deliverer from sin, until He was "made perfect through suffering." Again, "He made Him to be sin for us," not because we had been made the righteousness of God out of Him - but, "that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." II Cor.5:21. More I need not repeat, but read for yourselves.

Another argument in support of eternal justification is drawn from the fact of the Old Testament Saints having been accounted righteous, or justified. The conclusion drawn is that if the sentence of justification was not passed until the resurrection of Christ, all that lived before His coming must have remained under the condemnation of the law. If there was nothing brought to light touching this point in the Scriptures, the above would appear a very plausible conclusion. Justification as presented to view in the Scriptures is in a two-fold relation.

The first is the public declaration from the throne of God of the justification of the whole body of Christ collectively, though having reference to every individual member thereof. This transaction was wholly with and through Christ as the Husband, and surety of His church. Her sins were laid on Him, law and justice looked to Him for satisfaction; He met the demand in that nature from which the law required it, and having in His death fully satisfied the demand, was raised again for the justification of His people. In the resurrection of Jesus by the power of God, in the same body in which He was delivered for the offenses of His people, not only was justice declared to be satisfied, and therefore their justification made manifest in Him; but also the righteousness of God was made manifest in justifying whosoever believeth in Jesus and also in the remission of sins that were past, or previous to the coming of Christ.

Rom.3:35,26 & Heb.9:15. Here, therefore in this public declaration of justification, there was a reference to the individual justification of the saints under the former dispensation, as though that had been done in anticipation of the great sacrifice to be offered by Christ.

The second relation is the experimental justification of individuals. This is at the bar of the believer's conscience, faith is the medium by which this act of justification is communicated. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." (Rom.5:1). This justification is necessary to our enjoying peace with God, and secures it. As it is by that faith which "is the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen;" and as Christ was set forth from the beginning as the object of faith; hence said to the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," (Rev.13:8) I see not why the Old Testament Saints might not realize something of this justification and peace which we experience. But that they did not experience it in the same perfection I shall have occasion shortly to show. By Christ's being the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," I presume no one will contend that He was then actually sacrificed, and by the expression, "from the foundation of the world," I do not understand the act of appointing Christ, by the Father to be the sacrifice of His people, intended for that was from before the foundation of the world, I consider the expression as having special reference to the fact of His being set forth from the first introduction of sin; in promises, types, &c., as the Lamb which God had provided for sacrifice, and as the object of faith. Thus Abel offered his lamb in faith, (Heb.

11:4) not faith in His sacrifice, but in the bloody sacrifice of the Lamb of God as showed forth by his. "For without the shedding of blood there is no remission," (Heb.9:22) consequently no justification. How does this stand with eternal justification?

My brethren, I think, ought to admit that if the act of justification in behalf of the saints was passed before the foundation of the world, the faith of all must look back to that act to find their justification in experience, seeing this is no other than a receiving and applying by faith the justification as found in Christ. According to the notion of eternal justification, Abel's faith must have had the same back and perfect view of justification as have ours. And we to find peace with God must not stop in our view by faith at Calvary. If then the Scriptures show that the faith of the Old Testament saints looked forward instead of backward for this justification, it is proof positive against the notion of their justification having been in eternity. Not to multiply proofs where one case in point is sufficient, I will just cite to Abraham's faith, the object of which "was accounted to him for righteousness;" and ask was that in a revelation which God made to him for something past? Or was it in the promise of something future? The apostle says, and that settles the point, "that God gave it to Abraham by promise." (Gal.3:18). See also Romans 4:20, 24, and notice the difference brought to view in this passage, in the manner in which the object of faith is presented to Abraham from what it is to us. Abraham believed that God "was able to perform that which He had promised." We believe He has performed it in that He "has raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." I will also notice one instance of prophetic faith, namely: Isa.45:25, "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory." This surely presents justification of something then future. Other passages will be found to correspond with the above, as this is the name whereby "He shall be called the Lord our Righteousness." (Not was called.) (Jer.23:6). Hence the Apostle's account of those worthies who went before (Heb.11:39,40), "And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." They received a good report - the report of good to come, but the manifestation of this promised good they received not. This text not only manifests that the faith of the ancients was in anticipation of good to come, but it also shows that there was an imperfection connected with their faith which nothing but the coming of the gospel day could do away. "That they without us should not be made perfect." Hence it is no wonder that the prophets enquired - "searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory which should follow." (I Peter 1:10,11). There is a glory connected with the full manifestation of justification, which they had not. For though as the redeeming Lamb, Christ was "foreordained before the foundation of the world," yet He was not manifested until these last times, for those that believe.

not manifested until these last times, for those that believe. (I Pet.1:19-21). If these texts consist with the idea that the justification of the elect was completed in eternity, I must confess my utter inability so to understand them.

From the remarks which I have interspersed with my objections to the doctrine of eternal justification, it will be discovered that my thoughts concerning justification are that as it is presented in the Scriptures, it is altogether a legal transaction; though a gospel or gracious provision that has to do with the people of God, only as they stood connected with Adam, and under the law; and with Christ, as He was involved by His union with them in the demand of the law.

That its use is to manifest their clearance by the redemption of Christ from under the law, and the righteousness of God in bestowing upon them, encompassed as they are with humanity and sin, the adoption of children. It is, I think, altogether a mistaken notion that justification is what entitles the saints to heaven. Equally erroneous is the notion that Christ by His death purchased heaven for His people. This union to Christ as His bride, His body, and being the children of God, is what entitles them to the heavenly glory. Justification could no more entitle them to heaven than the law could give life. (Gal.3:27). Hence, my view of justification is that it was a provision made for the people of God in Christ, and which they needed, wholly as they are creatures of time, and from the nature of it, that it is altogether a time act, though appointed and provided for in the counsel of eternity, as were all other time things.

In reference to the eternal standing of the elect before God, as they were set up in Christ, they forever possessed in Him a spiritual beauty, excellency, and glory which nothing arising from their connection with Adam and the law could ever add to, or diminish from, excepting on the one hand this connection was till they were delivered from it, an insuperable barrier to their inheriting the kingdom prepared for them, and indeed to their being manifested as the sons of God; and on the other hand the experimental knowledge which they thereby have of the evil and misery of sin, and of the grace, love and mercy of God, manifested in delivering them from their thralldom and sin, will enhance to them the excellency and enjoyment of their heavenly inheritance.

I have thus given a summary of my thoughts upon this subject. If they are wrong, it is because I have a wrong understanding of the Scriptures upon this point. If they are right, it is because God has graciously given me to understand the Scriptures concerning this doctrine, for I certainly never learned it from men. Were it not that the Scriptural account of this doctrine appears to me so clearly to support my views concerning justification being a law, and time transaction, the circumstance that so many more excellent, and more gifted brethren differ from me in their judgment concerning it, together with the reflection, what am I that I should be made thus to differ; would lead me much to doubt the correctness of my views. As it is, I must retain them, till I am led to see some direct Scriptural authority for the doctrine of eternal justification.

With love to the brethren, and a hope that I may be found to share with them in the perfection there is in Christ Jesus our Lord. I subscribe myself yours,

S. Trott.

P.S. I wish not my apologies, with which I commenced this communication, construed as a plea with my brethren not to answer my objections if they see fit. As I wish on this and all other religious subjects to see eye to eye with them, if any of them can give a more correct view of this subject founded upon direct Scriptural authority, I shall be glad to see it. I would further remark that perhaps some may think the view I have given of justification, and especially from my remarks being especially designed to illustrate those views in distinction from the sentiment of eternal justification, are calculated to diminish the importance of this gospel doctrine. I do not view it, as presented in the Scriptures, in a light any less important by its standing so immediately and intimately connected with the actual obedience of the Son of God unto death; an obedience yielded especially to bring about the accomplishment of this act, than though it was revealed as, like predestination, an absolute act of the Divine Mind, or as being passed in anticipation of the obedience of Christ. The fact is, the grace, love and mercy of God is far more displayed in the act of justification by viewing it as thus involving, as essential to it, the actual obedience unto death of the Son of God, than they could be, by separating the act in any measure from the obedience and sufferings of Christ. And it can be no less precious to the believer by viewing it as coming to him, a poor, guilty, law-condemned sinner of Adam's race, alone through the righteousness of Christ brought in by His actual substitution of his law place. And as they are made to view it, in their experience, whatever may be said of their having been eternally justified.

Fairfax C.H., Virginia, Nov. 22nd, 1837, S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol 5 (1837)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 102 - 114

THOUGHTS ON PREDESTINATION.

Addressed to P.A.L. Smith, Esq.

DEAR BROTHER: - Although you have not named me in your communication in the SIGNS, volume 10, number 9; yet as it is well known to several that you wrote in consequence of a dissent on your part to certain expressions used by me in preaching, and of a discussion we afterwards had on the subject; I feel called on to notice your communication.

As this notice is designed simply as a contrast of my views with yours, I will briefly state the occasion of your communication. It is no secret with Predestinarian Baptists that their peculiar doctrine is represented by others, as making God the author of sin, and as implying that he made the wicked for the express purpose of damning them, irrespective of their character. Such in substance had formerly been charged upon my views of absolute predestination, in the neighborhood where you live. I have taken frequent occasion in preaching to rebut this slander upon our doctrine. In preaching to the church of which you are a member, in February last, from Songs 2:3 & 4, I was remarking on the absoluteness of the expression, "His banner over me was love," endeavoring to show that in no point of view did the gospel involve anything but love; and in the course of these remarks I took occasion to meet the above named objection, as it had been made against one point of gospel doctrine; namely, election, and speaking in a way calculated to draw attention, I remarked that the final condemnation of the wicked was not on the ground of their not having been elected; perhaps I said the nonelection of the wicked was not the ground of their condemnation, but that they were condemned as transgressors of God's law.

This is what you took exceptions to, and what afterwards brought on a discussion between us, in which you advanced and advocated the ideas that God made sin, and made the devil, a devil. As I did then, so do I now, maintain that the wicked are not condemned for not being elected, but for being transgressors of God's law. And am I not sustained in this by the scriptures of truth, from the condemnation passed upon the serpent, "Because thou hast done this, &c.," upon the woman, (Gen.3,) upon Adam, (Gen.3,) upon Cain, (Gen.4,) upon the old world, (Gen.6,) and on, in every recorded case of condemnation to the end of Revelations? As I did then, so do I now, reject the idea, that sin came directly from God, the Fountain of all good and holiness, although its introduction was a consequence of God's creating goodness; that is, had intelligent creatures not been brought into existence, sin could never have had a being. And I did then, and do now, reject the idea that Satan, as the prince of darkness, came such from the creating hand of God, who is Light, and in whom is no darkness at all, and as the father of lies, from him who is the God of truth. To the contrary of this, I have uniformly maintained from the analogy of God's having created Adam in uprightness, and from his attributes, as declared in the scriptures, that Satan must have come from his hands an innocent or upright being. If bother Beebe as editor, and the patrons of the SIGNS generally, can suffer such sentiments as the following extracts from your communications, to pass uncontradicted, as Old School Baptists sentiments, so be it. These are the extracts: "Who was made the prince of darkness to infuse his deeds into the world, whereby causing sin, sorrow and death." Page 66, column 2. And this in the same column; "It was for this he made the serpent, the devil, that old dragon, and he made a people in him spiritually who should come into the world through Adam," &c.; and this on column 3, "Always a devil – such he was made, and such he will be."

As for myself, if I have had any experimental knowledge of God and of sin, it has taught me to view them as such complete opposites, that I think it not an unguarded expression, when I say, I can have no more fellowship for the idea of a devil-creating God, that I have for a god- making devil. The devil has introduced into the world many gods as objects of worship, for which I have no fellowship. Neither can I have any fellowship for the idea that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the fountain of all good, is at the same time the immediate fountain from whence has directly flowed that stream which has carried with it through the world - sin, sorrow and death, or that he is by direct creation the Father of the father of lies. Such idea confounds all moral distinction between sin and holiness, and destroys the notion of justice; for it represents God as making the devil, a devil to infuse his deeds into the world, and then punishing him for doing it. In conclusion I will express my sorrow to find you, a professed Old School Baptist, uniting with arminians in giving the same representation of the precious doctrine of predestination. They say that predestination makes God the author of sin; you say, to carry out predestination we must view God as creating sin. They design their remarks as a reproach; you do not design yours as such, but still as your view of predestination is the same in substance with theirs, if theirs is a reproach, so must yours be also. For you know that it is a problem in mathematics, that things which are equal with the same thing, must be equal with each other.

Yours, &c., S.TROTT. Centerville, Fairfax County, Va., June 15, 1842.

AN INQUIRY #1.

BROTHER BEEBE: - In the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE for June 1839, there is a letter from Elder James Osbourn to the Editor, containing some remarks which I wish to bring to the notice of our Western Old School Brethren. Elder Osbourn, after noticing his book, which professes to be an exposure of missionism in the great valley of the Mississippi, refers to errors of a most pernicious kind as existing in that country, and then says, "I shall venture to say that the great darkness and the odious errors now alluded to, are to be found and there too I found them, among men and churches professing orthodoxy, and the true christian faith. But forsooth orthodoxy and Old Schoolism are terms which stand but for little, &c. Hence a man may be a full grown Quaker under the unmeaning term, as it is now mostly used, of orthodoxy; or a gross heretic of the Sabellian kind under the abstruse and new fangled term of Old Schoolism. And in short, thus it is with the people now referred to in the far West. They indeed greatly pride themselves in what is called orthodoxy and Old Schoolism, and yet they literally hiss at and make common sport of a TRINITY OF PERSONS IN THE ETERNAL GODHEAD, and insultingly call the divine Father, PA, and the Holy Ghost a TOOL. And hence under this orthodoxy and Old Schoolism we clearly see heterodoxy and downright blasphemy, &c."

I think there must be some mistake in this matter. But mistake or not, the thing has gone out, through what is recognized as an Old School periodical, as an indiscriminate charge against our Western brethren, for the New School party to rejoice in. If the above charge is true, I do not blame Elder Osbourn for pronouncing it blasphemy. Not that I am disposed to consider it blasphemous to deny that the Three, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost are in any sense three Gods, or that they are three distinct persons, or that they blaspheme who dissent from the Nicene Creed, or from my creed concerning the divine Three, in which the One God has revealed himself, providing that either of the Three is not degraded. But when we consider that Father, is one of the names by which God has been pleased to declare himself, as expressive of a relation which, he, the Father sustains in the economy of salvation, as he is declared to be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and Christ says to his disciples, "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God;" I say when we consider these things, we must conclude that no person having a becoming reverence for God, whatever may be his views of the doctrine of the Trinity, can trifle with or make sport of this name and relation in which God has revealed himself. Neither can we conceive that any such person would either deridingly or considerately speak of him as a tool of whom Christ thus speaks, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of Truth, &c." John 14:16,17. And again, "But the Comforter which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, &c." I hope therefore that some of our Old School Brethren of the West will set this matter right; if it is a wrong charge which Elder Osbourn has made, that they will clear it up; or if any do hold in contempt the names and relations, Father & Holy Ghost, I say not, as declared in the Athanasian Creed, but as declared in the Scriptures; I desire that they may be made manifest; and be no longer recognized as of us. If this charge had come from our avowed enemies it might well be passed unnoticed; but coming from the quarter it has, I do think it calls for some attention.

May the Lord enable all who profess to be of the Old School stand, to believe, speak, and act, consistently therewith.

Yours, &c. S.TROTT. July 1, 1839.

AN INQUIRY #2.

God

BROTHER BEEBE: - At the same time I received the 15th number of the SIGNS, containing my call to our western Old School brethren, to vindicate themselves from the charge preferred against them by Elder Osbourn in the DOCTRINAL ADVOCATE for June, I received the number of the ADVOCATE for July (No.1, Vol.3,) containing another communication of Elder Osbourn, in which he enlarges upon the charge against the Old School Baptists of the West. This communication is addressed to a clergyman of the Dutch Reformed Denomination; and so (I find,) was the other; hence I mistook in saying that it was addressed to the editor of the ADVOCATE. In an extract of a letter from brother I.T. Saunders, which he gives in this latter communication, is manifested what I anticipated was the mistake in Elder Osbourn's former communication; that is, that instead of representing, through ridicule, the Father as PA, and the Holy Ghost as a TOOL, brother Saunders makes use of these expressions to illustrate what he understands to be Elder Osbourn's system of the Trinity. However, it was not a mistake in Elder Osbourn; for he evidently, as manifested in this latter communication, considers his system of Three Divine Persons in the Godhead, to be the only true doctrine of the Trinity; and a peremptory denial that there are three divine persons in the Godhead he considers as constituting infidelity. And the reason why any do not attach the same vast magnitude to his system of the Trinity as himself and others do, he says, "Is evidently owing to the serious darkness of theirs, interwoven with the whole system of salvation, and with the whole covenant of grace, and with the whole life of faith, and the triumphs of a christian." Elder Osbourn, I confess here hits me, and it may be correctly; for I certainly have a great deal of darkness to mourn over; but certain it is, that while I consider the doctrine that essentially exists as Three and One, of the highest importance, yet the system that will make the Three to be three distinct persons, and only to be expressed by the term persons, I do not consider in a light that would justify me in pronouncing as infidels all who do not admit the correctness of the Athanasian explanation of the modus of God's existing as Three by the special phrase of three distinct persons, the one person begetting, the second being begotten, and the third being breathed forth by the other two.

How Elder Osbourn may be right or wrong in his system of explaining the Trinity I will not here attempt to decide, nor what are the sentiments concerning the Trinity of brother Saunders and the hundreds of Old School Baptists in the West, whom Elder Osbourn pronounces Sabellians, I will not say.

My object in writing this is to show that Elder Osbourn has himself explained what I had wished explained; namely, in what sense it was that our Western brethren represented the Father as PA, and the Holy Ghost as a TOOL; that is, not as they are declared in the Scriptures, but as these brethren understood Elder Osbourn to represent them. Hence I recall my request for these brethren to give an explanation. However, brother Saunders, as he is personally pointed out can do as he pleases in speaking for himself.

S.TROTT.

Centerville, Fairfax Co., Va., July 5, 1839.

Union of Christ with the Church.

Brother Beebe: - Our brother Raymond was not mistaken in supposing that his ideas would not all be received, by the readers of the Signs. I think he labours under a mistake relative to that union which constitutes the oneness of Christ and His people, and probably relative to the idea intended to be conveyed when we speak of the substitution of Christ. I will propose for his consideration what appears to me to be the Scriptural doctrine of the union of Christ and His church.

Instead of that nominal union which many talk of, which is produced by the creature's believing - the Scriptures speak of a real oneness. "Both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one," is the Scripture testimony (Heb.

2:11) and so I believe. I cannot conceive how the spotless Lamb of God could be made to bleed, or bleeding, how His blood could, sanctify or cleanse from their sins any of the family of Adam unless such a union previously existed between Him and them as made their sins, of right, chargeable to Him; and His suffering of death and enduring of the curse, accounted as done by them. Instead of this union being founded in Christ's assumption of human nature; the Scriptures speak of His taking flesh and blood as a consequence of His relation to children who were partakers thereof. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; &c." What children? Those of whom Christ says, "Behold I and the children which God hath given me." See Heb.2:14,13.

Instead of this oneness being a union of feeling or views, the Scriptures speak of it as a oneness of life. Hear the Apostles; "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God, when Christ, who is your life shall appear &c." Col.3:3,4. This life which is one in the Head and in the body, was in the only begotten of the Father, from the beginning; for in Him was that life which is the light of men. John 1:4, compared with vs.14. Hence as it was said of Adam - Gen.5:1,2 - "In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him. Male and female created He them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created;" so it must have been with Christ, when He was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, and brought forth when there were no depths (Prov.8:23,24); He must have been brought forth a perfect Christ, head and body, He and His bride in Him. Hence His people were chosen in Him, (not into Him) before the foundation of the world; and they were created in Christ Jesus unto good works and as Christ - not as the essential Word, He is the Beginning of the creation of God (Eph.1:4; 2:10 & Rev.3:14). Christ was thus another or second Adam, not of the earth, earthy, but the Lord from heaven; not a living soul merely, but a quickening spirit. I Cor.15:45,48. Again as Eve when produced from the original creation in Adam, was bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh; so the church in her quickened members, being born again, born of the Spirit, they are manifested as members of Christ's body; and are of His flesh and of His bones, spiritually. See Gen.2:23 & Eph.5:30. Thus Adam both as a husband and a head was a figure of Him that was to come.

As is the distinction between the two Heads - the first man and the second man, so is the distinction between the two lives brought forth severally in the distinct heads; consequently, so is the distinction between the bonds of union by which each Head is united with its body and members. The one bond is earthly, the other is spiritual; the one commenced in time and is dissolved in time, the other commenced in eternity, and therefore unchanged by time, will be eternal.

The one head, Adam, being created under the law, and his posterity in him, they as servants are driven by the terrors of the Law. The other Head, Christ, as the Son of the Father, was set up and His posterity in Him, under the everlasting covenant, that is ordered in all things and sure, they are therefore as sons loved with an everlasting love, and with loving kindness are they drawn. Again, as the members of Adam's family, or of the creation in him, are made manifest as such by being born after the flesh; so the members of Christ's body can be manifested only by being born again of the Spirit. They are by this brought into personal existence as new creations and are now personified by their new life. Hence says Christ speaking of His disciples, "They are not of the world even as I am not of the world." John 17:16; and says Paul, "Now if I do that, I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Rom. 7:20. See also I John 3:9 & 5:18.

As the posterity of Adam came into existence under the curse of the law as having been in him when he fell; so the posterity of Christ in their new birth, are born into the blessings of the new Covenant, as well as those exceeding great and precious promises given them in Christ as that full provision for their deliverance from under the law; therefore they receive not the spirit of bondage again to fear, but they receive the spirit of adoption whereby they cry, Abba, Father. Thus much in relation to the union of Christ's people with Him.

I will now briefly notice this union with Adam, &c. Whilst they were thus set up in Christ, and as such loved with an everlasting love, it was the pleasure of the Father that they should be partakers of flesh and blood, and therefore as rational creatures they were created in a natural head, Adam, and under the law; were in common with all his posterity, left to fall in him, and became subject to the curse of the law.

While they were thus a part of the same fallen family of Adam involved in the same condemnation, they by the eternal purpose of God were distinguished from the rest of the human family - and were from the beginning chosen unto salvation; and predestinated unto the adoption of children, by Jesus Christ, and were given to Christ as His portion, as it is written: the Lord's portion is His people, Jacob is the lot of His inheritance. It was also necessary in order to their being brought into liberty as sons and receive the spirit of adoption, that they should be redeemed from under the law and also to be slain by it, that their union to it might be dissolved. For all this provision was made in the everlasting Covenant and the accomplishment thereof assigned to the Son and to the Holy Spirit in their respective offices. Their redemption could alone be accomplished by one who could fulfill the demands of the law and make it honorable in their behalf, and consequently alone by one who could be acknowledged by Divine Justice as standing in their law place. Christ being their Brother, their Head, their Husband in the everlasting Covenant, and in relation to the life therein set up, the right of redemption belonged to Him, and being not Himself under the law, He could take their law place and obey in their behalf, and be so accepted by Divine justice.

One leading idea more, relative to this subject I wish distinctly noticed, namely: that it was not as the children of Christ, but as the children of Adam that the elect were subject to the law, had sinned against it, &c. It was then as the children of Adam alone, that they needed deliverance from the curse of the law, justification from its demands and a dissolution of their relation to it.

If our Brother Raymond would duly reflect on the different relations the elect sustain to the distinct Heads, he would I think abandon the stand he took in his letter published in the 9th number of the Signs. He speaks of substitution as involving a separation between Christ and His people. Do not the Scriptures teach a manifest separation in this respect? Was Christ created with His people in Adam? If so He is but a creature and a branch of a fallen stock. Or was He as the Head of His people set up under the law? If so the inheritance coming through Him is but earthly and must fail. On the other hand, Christ being the elder Brother of His people in the everlasting Covenant, it was His province to interpose Himself as their Redeemer that the law might not remain a barrier to their being put in possession of the inheritance bequeathed in the better Testament. Hence it is said, He was made sin, or rather, a sin offering, for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him - and being made a curse for us. II Cor.5:21 & Gal.3:13. If I know anything of the use of words the doctrine of these texts is the doctrine of substitution; and the word for is used, in them, in the sense of instead of. He being made a curse for us; for what purpose? To deliver us from the curse of the law. Did He not then endure that curse which He would deliver His people from? And would they not have suffered the curse, if He had not borne it? What is this, but His bearing it in their stead? And what can that be, but substitution? Again, we are told that Christ laid down His life for the sheep. Now if He did not lay down His life in the place of the sheep, how will we find an atonement in the death of Christ? And how will we find a ransom in it? If He laid down His life for us in any other sense than as suffering that punishment which was due to our transgressions then there was no ransom price in the death of Christ; for a ransom is an equivalent rendered for the demand against those to be ransomed, and consequently involves substitution.

Brother Raymond challenges proof from the Scriptures, that God's children were ever appointed unto wrath. That God's children were as the children of Adam, under the curse of the law, and children of wrath, even as others, we are prepared to prove from the Scriptures of Truth. But there was no need of God's appointing any man, save the man Christ Jesus, unto wrath; for left to themselves the wrath of God would assuredly abide upon them. See John 3:36.

Brother R. seems throughout his letter, if I understand him, to suppose that the children of God were never viewed in any other relation, than in their relation to Christ. If this were true I would venture to say that God never viewed them as sinners; for they never sinned in Christ, nor with that life which they derived from Christ as a Head.

Once more; He remarks that it is a day full of substitutions, I grant it. But to me there is a very important difference between men's presuming to substitute human systems instead of God's revealed truth, human ceremonies, instead of God's ordinances, and human schemes instead of that order and plan which God has established in His word; I say there is a great difference between this substitution of men, and God's substituting His Son as a ransom for those who had been given Him. And those who are the fondest of these human substitutions, are the ones who by their substituted systems, do away the substitution of Christ in the law place of His people. Most of these new substitutions are the offspring of Fullerism and its twin sister Hopkinsianism, and both of these systems virtually, if not formally, deny the proper substitution of Christ.

Brother Raymond will of course act his own pleasure in writing again on this subject. But I hope if he does, he will be led to take a stand in support of the doctrine which is according to godliness. And I hesitate not to say that if he is what I hope he is, one taught of the Lord, he would never have found peace for his burdened soul had he not by faith discovered the Lord Jesus as having been as completely substituted in his law place as was the ram caught in the thicket, in the place of Isaac. He will then write in union with the doctrine which the Signs are pledged to support.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia, May 13, 1833.

S. Trott.

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol.1 (1833)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs. 39 - 43

UNITY OF THE BRETHREN.

Circular Letter: The Brethren assembled with the Mount Pleasant Church, Fairfax County, VA, August 9,10, 1849, in a Meeting for Correspondence: To the Churches, Associations and Corresponding Meetings, in correspondence with us, send this token of love.

Beloved Brethren: - Having received and read your communications to us, we would reciprocate the correspondence by addressing our epistle to you in return. The Psalmist says: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Ps.133:1. In order to unity, they who dwell together, must be brethren, children of the same family, having a common interest. Such is the case with the children of God, when not bewildered; the truth of God, the order of His house as established by the Head, the peace and prosperity of Zion, are with them a common interest, as well as the joys and sorrows of the individual members. But when strange children get in among the household of faith, her sons become stunted in growth - her daughters lose their polish - her oxen become weak to labor - her garners become impoverished, and there is a breaking in, and going out, thus breeding confusion.

These strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood, Ps.144:11, are children of the strange woman, Prov.7:5. How careful should we be to keep, and to be kept separate, from all religious intercourse with such, that our harmony and unity be not broken, and an interest averse to the interest of Zion be not set up in our midst. We have mentioned the truth of God, as one of the items connected with the interest of Zion, and which is of vast importance toward the brethren's dwelling together in unity. By the truth of God, we mean that which God has revealed as truth, and which is according to the standard of truth as He hath given it in the Scriptures. When we begin to bring in other standards, or the writings and opinions of men as standards, however eminent they were or may be, they are but the opinions of men, and we shall feel here to indulge in our partialities, as they did in the Church of Corinth, and one will say: I am of Paul, another, I am of Apollos, &c., and this will cause bickering and divisions and wrestings of the words of Scripture to make them conform to our standards. But, when brethren are agreed to let the thus saith the Lord, and as He has said it, decide all points, our unity in doctrine will then be preserved; as Watts says:

"This is the judge that ends the strife, Where wit and reason fail."

We have named, as another item in the interest of Zion, the order of His house as established by the Head, the one King of Zion. Where a number of heads are acknowledged, unless they form a unity among themselves by deciding by majorities, there will be conflicting orders, and clashings in practice. But where Christ alone is acknowledged as King, and His directions as the order, there will be no confusion, nor contention in the observance of the order of the house.

In thus acknowledging Him alone as King, we render to Him no more than is His just due, both in reference to His claims on us, and to His claims to qualifications to be Head. This order includes ordinances, discipline, the choosing of officers, and the manner of their officiating, the meeting of the Church, the worship, the business transactions, and the manner of publishing the Gospel abroad. As we value the good of dwelling together in unity, let us therefore, be careful to observe its commands, to confine ourselves to them, and to His directions through Apostolic example for observing them.

We named, as a third item, The peace and prosperity of Zion, as belonging to the common interest of the children of Zion.

In promoting the peace of Zion, and her prosperity, in the showing forth her salvation, in attracting those who love the Lord, within her borders, and in her being built up in purity and love, it is important that the several members should conduct themselves orderly, meekly and affectionately in the Church, and toward one another; that they see that the discipline of the Church be exercised faithfully and impartially, and that they submit when subject to it, quietly and patiently; that each be found occupying his proper gifts, station, or sphere in the Church; that in the support of the ministry, the relief of the poor, and in meeting other rightful demands for contributing of our temporal goods, none hold back through covetousness, but that each contribute freely as the Lord has prospered them; that the brethren show their love toward one another, by a manifest preference for each other's society, comfort and welfare, and that they be not estranged from these things by indulging in the love of the world, or by being entangled in alliances or pledges, with other societies, whether secret or otherwise; and further, that the brethren conduct themselves honestly, humbly, quietly and blamelessly toward them that are without, and who may differ with us; and in all their intercourse with men, aiming to be governed by the directions in the New Testament. Brethren, if these things were so, would not the people of the world be again constrained to say, "Behold how these christians love one another!" And, if we were found fearlessly and earnestly contending for and bearing testimony to the faith once delivered to the saints; bearing patiently and quietly, the scoffs, reproaches, indignities and persecutions if they come, incident thereunto, from those who oppose the truth, would not others be made to acknowledge that we are actuated by another spirit than that of the world? And would we not then experience; How good it is to dwell together in unity?

Brethren, although the children of God are now somewhat scattered by localities, and perhaps worse, by different standards set up, and consequently different views of doctrine and order entertained, yet, even in this day of darkness, and of the scattering of the flock, our Churches are generally permitted to dwell together in a good degree of unity, and from time to time many of the brethren, from distant parts are permitted to meet together, and sit together, in a good degree of unity. How long we shall be permitted to enjoy these privileges, without for a little season being deprived of them, is known only to Him, who orders all events. But come, when it may, whilst it will come in accordance with prophecy, it will come as a just chastisement upon the Church and people of God, for permitting their unity to be so much marred by clinging to the creeds and systems of men as their standards, instead of taking heed to the more sure word of prophecy; and in other cases for suffering the peace of Churches to be broken by winking at, and countenancing disorderly walk among the members. It will also come as a needful fire, to purge away all this dross from the Churches. The seven thunders mentioned in Revelation, chapter 10, which are a prelude to the killing of the two Witnesses, are apparently sounding.

Whether the seven thunders designate seven particularly astounding events, or whether they denote seven years duration of such events or rather, whether as is frequently the sense of the number seven in the Scriptures, it is here used to denote that full shaking of the governments of the world, necessary so to concentrate the powers and branches of antichrist, as to enable them to accomplish the killing of the Witnesses, we will not say. But, as before said, we think we hear the sound of the thunders, and hear the voice from Heaven, saying, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not, in that such dark obscurity hangs over every event which transpires, as that all the expectations and calculations made on the particular event, are disappointed. It is not improbable that some of these thunders, before they cease, may burst over the head of our government, and shake it to its foundation.

But, Brethren, let what will come, and come when it may; God grant that we may be found standing in our lots, being neither traitors nor cowards towards the cause of our Lord and His truth, but enduring hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. And may God, by His grace, so keep us from all corruption in doctrine, or in walk, that the enemy may have no evil thing to say of us justly.

Our meeting has been pleasant; your ministering brethren came to us bringing the precious gospel of the grace of God in its fulness; our congregations have been large and quite attentive.

The Bethlehem Church having invited our next Meeting to be held with them, we have appointed to meet with them, to commence on Thursday, before the 2nd Lord's day in August, 1850. We continue our cordial invitation to Churches, Corresponding Meetings and Associations, to meet with us by their Letters and Messengers, at that time and place.

S.TROTT. Moderator, 1849.

REMARKS ON THE PARABLE OF THE UNJUST STEWARD

Brother Beebe: In Signs No. 12, present Volume, Brother Mitchell has request for my views of Luke 16:9, "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations". This has been to me, and I believe to many others, a very difficult text to understand. One difficulty has arisen from its connection with the parable of the unjust steward and whether, like him, we are to make use of other people's property to make to ourselves friends, as the terms mammon of unrighteousness, that is, riches unjustly obtained or used, would seem to imply. Such an idea would be revolting to any one having the principle of grace.

Another very serious difficulty arises from the idea of any friends we could make thereby, being to receive us into everlasting habitations. Hence I have formerly thought that this text was spoken ironically by our Lord to show to His disciples the absurdity of coveting after or trusting in the riches of this world. This would very well correspond with the concluding declaration, verse 13, "No servant can serve two masters, etc". But by comparing this text with 1 Timothy 6:17-19, I conclude it is to be taken in a different sense. The passage in Timothy reads thus: "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life". Indeed on a little reflection, the comparison of a disciple in his relation to his Lord, to the case of the unjust as here presented, appears much more close than is discovered on a superficial view of the subject. The child of grace is brought so to feel his relation and accountability to God, as to know that all he possesses whether of an earthly or spiritual nature, he holds, not as his own, but as entrusted to him as a steward by his Lord. And we are taught by this text, and the one in 1 Timothy 6:17-19 and in other Scriptures, that whatever is thus entrusted to us is neither to be held as for our personal or family accommodations only, nor to be viewed as entrusted to us to be held close, as in trust, subject only to our Lord's personal calls, as is the case with that entrusted to worldly stewards, but is to be used to enable us to do good, and to distribute and communicate to our Lord's debtors, as occasion and opportunity calls. Thus, if gracious communications are made to us, we are not to lay them up to ourselves, but to seek to comfort others with the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God, and to administer the instruction which we receive; so of gifts, they are not to be kept laid up in a napkin, but to be employed for the edifying of the body of Christ. So of worldly riches, if we have them and rightly view their use, instead of supposing, as is too often the case, that they are given to us to hold fast, and to make us drudges to them, till they are taken from us or we by death are taken from them, and are thus put out of the stewardship, we should view them as committed to us, to make us more useful, according to the station assigned us, in doing good to others, and in serving our Lord, not in person, but in His members. "The Lord commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely." So our Lord, in His word, commends those stewards to whom He has committed riches, when they, according to worldly wisdom, waste them in distributing of them to the necessities of His debtors, especially those who are debtors to His grace, notwithstanding what human reason and self may say about the prudence, if not righteousness, of holding the riches fast in their own hands to transmit to the hands of their children. But why in our text are riches call the mammon of unrighteousness? Certainly not that our Lord requires His disciples to make use of any riches they may have acquired by unrighteous gain, for distributing to the poor or communicating to His saints or cause, instead of making restitution for the same. Such course only befits those who, instead of trusting Christ, are for purchasing heaven and worldly glory together, by their donations and bequests. But worldly riches are fitly so termed because most of the unrighteous acts among men are done with a reference to acquiring riches. Besides, they are the unrighteous mammon in the hands of Christ's disciples (and those are the persons He addresses), however honestly obtained, when hoarded up by them for their exclusive personal and family use instead of being so employed as to make themselves or their wealth useful to the cause and people of Christ; seeing that He has a just claim on them and all they have. Thus it is seen that what was unjust in the steward of the parable in giving away his Lord's goods is, in substance, the very use which our Lord requires His disciples to make of the goods He commits to them.

We now come to inquire concerning these friends, which we are to make to ourselves, and the everlasting habitation, etc. It is not said, "Make to yourselves friends with the mammon of unrighteousness". In that case it would be supposable that, like the unjust steward, we were to make friends of those on whom we bestowed our Lord's goods, and that should be the object in bestowing them. But the direction is: "Make to yourselves friends of the, etc.", that is, the friends are to be made of the mammon of unrighteousness and not of the persons to whom we make distribution. When we trust in riches and seek to hoard them up, to have and to hold for our special benefit, instead of being our friends, in reference to the heavenly mansions, they become our masters and grind us down to servitude under an earthly yoke. But when, instead of trusting in them, we trust in the living God and do good, being ready to distribute and willing to communicate, according to what we have, our riches that we may have then become our friends in the Christian life; they enable us to be more useful or rich in good works, which, of course, is what the Christian delights in. Riches thus used become instrumental in furnishing a decisive evidence of our love to Christ in our love manifested to His members; and consequently, of His love to us, and therefore of our interest in those mansions He has gone to prepare a place in. Hence when we fail, when heart and flesh fail under afflictions, persecutions, etc., riches, being thus made friends, instead of tying us down to earth, point our dejected spirits to those mansions in the house above, and thus in anticipation welcome or receive us into everlasting mansions; or as Paul has it, enables us to lay hold on eternal life. No wonder the covetous Pharisees who heard our Lord, derided Him. They thought more of providing earthly mansions for themselves and their children with their riches, than of securing in anticipation a reception into everlasting mansions. If this is a correct view of our Lord's instruction in the text, as I think in substance it is, how few comparatively of disciples in our day obey the instruction. Farewell.

August 19, 1846.

S. Trott

From: SIGNS of the TIMES: Vol. 14 (1846)

Select Works of Elder Samuel Trott pgs 339 - 342

VALID BAPTISM.

BROTHER WILLIAM L. BEEBE: - A brother in Georgia, (brother Matthews,) requests my views, through the MESSENGER, on the following queries:

1st. What qualifications are requisite to constitute a lawful administrator of the ordinance of baptism?

2nd. Can a person, after having been once so qualified, so act as to disqualify himself?

3rd. If so, is it right to hold a baptism administered by such persons valid?

4th. What course would you advise the Primitive Baptists to pursue in receiving members from the Missionary Baptists, with whom they have declared non-fellowship?

Brother Beebe, as my views are requested on these points, I trust that I shall be permitted to give them irrespective of what may be the views of others. I give them as the views I individually entertain, but claim no infallibility for them, any further than they are sustained by the testimony of the word of God. God's revealed word is infallible, what therefore that sustains as truth is infallible, and what does not sustain, however ancient may be the idea, is error.

In noticing the first query as to what qualifications are necessary to constitute a valid administrator, in order to obtain a Scriptural answer, we must enquire who were the persons and what were their qualifications to whom our Lord the only and Great Head of the church, gave the command to baptize. The testimony of the Scripture is that it was given directly to the Apostles, and there is no account of his having directly so commanded any others. Matt.28:20, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," appears to me clearly to imply that there was to be a succession to them in the application of the commands he had given them. The inquiry next arises, Where are we to look for the apostolic succession? The idea has been very prevalent from a very early period of the church, that this succession is to be found in the ministry. As this idea affords so good a plea for the ministry to assume the authority over the churches such as the apostles exercised by their Lord's appointment, it has been much insisted on by the clergy of all denominations. And a good many Baptist ministers, who would dissent from this full influence drawn from the above idea of succession, still claim the succession to themselves so far as relates to baptism, and perhaps to preaching. Hence they conclude that they have the independent right to baptize whom they please without the consent of the church; of course if they may act independently of the church in one case, they may in another. And therefore being once ordained to the ministry, they may claim to themselves that having been called of Christ as were the apostles, that is directly, and not through the judgment of the church, they may go on independently of the government of the church, preach what they please, baptize whom they please, &c., and require that the churches should fellowship their acts. But certainly no candid reader of the New Testament can find therein any sanction for ordinary ministers; that is, pastors and teachers, claiming to themselves any such independency of the churches; they are called to the work of the ministry through the judgment and fellowship of the church, are of right subject to the discipline of the church, are the servants of the church.

There is another class of Baptists, who, rejecting this notion of ministerial succession, claim that every disciple or baptized believer, is individually a successor of the apostles in all but their peculiar apostolic gifts; that is, this I judge to be their views from the ground they occupy. They claim for each disciple the individual right to baptize whom and when he pleases; and some consistently with that claim, also claim it as their right to preach the gospel merely on the ground of their being disciples. A church upon this principle instead of possessing the harmony of the human body, would be like a body in which every member claimed the right to occupy what station he pleased in the body, and to act from his own impulse, and not in subjection to the will of the whole. This, if I understand the apostle, is the very kind of disorder which he is reproving, and the opposite to that order which he declares to belong to the gospel church as the body of Christ, in I Cor., 12th chapter throughout.

The inquiry then returns as to wherein the apostolic succession is found. I answer that the apostles as they were found on the day of Pentecost, were the representation not of the gospel ministry only, but of the gospel church with all its gifts, with all its power, and with all its weakness; and were thus the visible embodiment of the gospel church, as were the twelve sons of Jacob, of the twelve tribes of Israel. Hence the repeated reference to the twelve tribes of Israel in connection with a reference to the apostles, as in Matt.

19:28; James 1:1; Rev.7:8-10, & 21:12-14. The eleven were commanded by their Lord after his resurrection to tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high.

In the mean time however they must show a little of that creaturely impatience which has been common to the church in all succeeding ages, without waiting for this power as directed, they undertook to manufacture for their company a twelfth apostle out of Matthias. But the Lord instead of being forestalled by them, in his purpose, in his own time and order called Paul to the apostleship. Still when the day of Pentecost was fully come, we find them all with one accord in one place. A company of as poor, helpless creatures, destitute of any kind of worldly influence to sustain or encourage them, as need to be. Such has been the case of the true church in all ages since. But the power of God was so manifested for encouraging them and strengthening their faith in the baptism of the Holy Ghost, that with boldness they preached the gospel of Christ. And as a further manifestation of Christ's presence with them, and of his power over all flesh, multitudes were brought to obey the gospel, and to rejoice in his salvation. Although this baptism of the Holy Ghost was an extraordinary manifestation, in visible form, in the cloven tongues as of fire which sat upon them, as an evidence of their being endued with power from on high to preach the gospel among all nations, yet this same manifestation, as were also the miracles wrought by the Apostles, was for the encouragement and confirmation of the saints in all after ages, in the faith that Christ with his all power in heaven and in earth would be with his church always, even to the end of the world, to sustain her, and to furnish her with gifts adequate for feeding the sheep and lambs of his flock, and for preaching the gospel wherever it is his pleasure to send it.

Again, the three thousand baptized at the time of the Pentecost are said to have been added, or as in our version added unto them. As the Apostles were not afterwards to remain together, in a visible body, as the churches were to be, but to be scattered in the fulfillment of their ministry, and a visible church now existing at Jerusalem as established in their doctrine, those who afterwards became disciples, were said to be added to the church. Not only this, but we soon find the apostles, directing the church to the exercise of a part at least of that authority, which they themselves had hitherto exercised, in reference to choosing from the church men to take charge of supplying the poor.

Acts, 6th chapter. And from then on we find the church participating with the apostles in the exercise of authority, see Acts 13:1-3, compared with 14:26,27, as showing that it was the church and not the prophets and teachers which sent Paul and Barnabas forth through the direction of the Holy Ghost. And in Acts, the 15th chapter, we find the church connected with the apostles and elders in deciding on the difficulty which had occurred in the church at Antioch. And in no instance except in the cases of Timothy and Titus, whom Paul had sent to certain churches, as his proxies to set things in order whither it was not convenient for himself to be, and who were therefore called evangelists, as were also certain ministers sent forth by the apostles earlier in the history of the church; I say with these exceptions, there is no instance in which the apostles acknowledged the succession of authority to exercise the government and discipline of the church to be vested in any other than the churches. Paul exhorted the Elders of the church at Ephesus, and Peter exhorted the Elders which were among the churches to whom he wrote, but they only directed them in reference to themselves and to feeding the church and flock of God. Acts 20:28, & I Pet.5:1,2. To sum up on this point, Paul tells the church at Corinth, "All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." I Cor.3:21-23. Thus making the churches to stand next to Christ. And so again he shows that all the gifts are given to the churches. Eph.4:11,12. Consequently as the apostolic gift was for the churches; when churches were planted and lesser gifts were given, they were in subordination to the churches, in government.

If then the commission to the apostles to "go and teach all nations, baptizing them," &c., is transmitted in succession to the churches, we see that all Missionary, Tract, Sunday School, and kindred societies are cut off from all claims to authority for spreading the gospel from this commission, and those who sanction them are rebels against the kingdom of Christ, and are assuming an authority which belongs of right only to the bride, the Lamb's wife.

But how is the church to preach the gospel and baptize? Evidently through the gifts of pastors and teachers given her for that purpose. Why are these gifts bestowed if the Lord designed every member to perform that for which they are specially given? And why are servants especially given if all the members of the family are alike to serve? These pastors or servants are given as before noticed to the churches, and are therefore to act in subordination to the churches, and not as some assume independent of their fellowship. Hence a man though he may afterward show himself to have been a wolf in sheep's clothing, having administered baptism under the sanction and fellowship of a gospel church, the baptism, notwithstanding his after defection, thus administered is valid. On the other hand, of course a baptism administered in form, without the authority and fellowship of a gospel church, cannot be gospel baptism. Certainly if our Lord has connected the ministration of the gospel and its ordinances with the church, we have no right to sanction or own anything as gospel order which is severed from the church.

Our brother's 1st query is above answered; that is, the qualification requisite to constitute a lawful administrator, are that he must have a standing in the fellowship of a gospel church, and officiate in such administration as the authorized servant or minister of a gospel church.

The 2nd query; namely; "Can a person after having been once so qualified, so act as to disqualify himself?" According to the view I have taken of apostolic succession, he can. And does become disqualified for administering Christ's ordinance of baptism, whenever by his own withdrawal, or by the exclusion or suspension of the church he ceases to stand in the fellowship and to minister under the authority of a gospel church.

Consequently in answer to the 3rd query, whenever a person becomes disqualified according to the answer to the 2nd query, or has never had the qualifications noticed in answer to the 1st query, it certainly cannot be right to acknowledge any performance of such person, as gospel baptism, of gospel order.

The 4th query, "What course would you advise the Primitive Baptists to pursue in receiving members from the Missionary Baptists, with whom they have declared non-fellowship?" My advice is, and let it stand for what it is worth, that you should either fellowship the Mission Baptists as standing in gospel order as churches of Christ, or not fellowship them as such.

And if you fellowship them, to fellowship the Paedobaptists also; for if we sanction a departure from the New Testament as our Rule in one instance, why not in another? When you get beyond the New Testament you are out in open sea without a compass; who then is to say which course is right? If on the other hand you are disposed to maintain the stand of acknowledging nothing as belonging to the gospel kingdom, but what is in accordance with the "pattern showed in the mount," then I would advise you to hold Mission Baptists and other will-worshipers just as the Apostles held all such classes of religionists in their day. If a person who has been among the Mission Baptists applies to be received among you, and if he was baptized by one who at the time of administering the ordinance to him, stood in fellowship with you as a gospel minister, then receive him as you would any other excluded person, upon the evidence of his repentance. If the applicant for membership was baptized by one who at the time stood excluded from your fellowship, or which is the same thing, from whom you had separated, thereby declaring nonfellowship for him, and you were to receive this applicant as a baptized member, would you not by such reception disannul your declaration of non-fellowship, and in acknowledging the dipping as gospel baptism thereby acknowledge the administrator as a gospel minister, and the bodies with which he is connected as gospel churches? Hence I would advise the treating of the applicant just as though he had never professed religion; if by the relation of his experience he gives you evidence of being a believer, and shows a willingness to honor Christ as the King of Zion, by being baptized according to his own appointed order as delivered in the New Testament, then receive him to baptism and membership, and not without. A form of baptism can be of no avail wherein Christ is not honored; and certainly no one can show that Christ ever authorized any to administer baptism in his name who were disconnected with his visible church. I should think that when a person once found himself connected with a society with which he could no longer for conscience sake walk with as a church of Christ, he would not wish to countenance any of their acts as gospel ordinances.

Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and he sanctions no compromising with the world or with the world's religion by the subjects of his kingdom. He tells us that he "came to send fire on the earth." Again he says, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay, but rather division." He further shows that the members of the same natural family are to be divided one from the other, even the tender tie of the mother and daughter must have no binding influence on that which relates to his kingdom, they must be at variance where one is the subject of grace and the other not. The daughter in order to show herself a disciple of Christ, must disregard the opinions, prejudices, or wishes of her unregenerated mother on this subject, and hear only Christ; even natural sympathy for her feelings must be laid aside. And a mother must make no compromises of either doctrine or order in order to bring her unregenerated daughter with her into the church. See Luke 12:49-53; Matt. 10:34-36. But how many Baptists there are who are unwilling that the doctrine and order of the gospel should be fully insisted for fear of offending their unregenerated children and friends. And some are afraid of rejecting New School baptism, for fear of giving offense. These fleshly feelings should have no place in the church of Christ.

Excuse my having written so lengthily. I feel that the subject is an important one.

With christian regards yours, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., April 22, 1853.

VIEWS ON ELDER PARKER'S TWO-SEED SYSTEM

Brother Beebe: - Having been requested by a brother in Missouri to give him my views on the TWO SEED System, as also on a part of the ninth chapter of Romans, I have concluded to send my answer through the Signs of the Times, if you will publish them.

Dear Brother: You say that some believe that when God created Adam and blessed him, &c., there were none but the elect stood and died in him, and that after the transgression, God multiplied the woman's conception, and this brought forth the people of God's curse. Now can any rational man believe that, with the exception of Mary in the case of the birth of Jesus, any woman from Eve down ever conceived and brought forth children without the immediate agency of man as the cause of such conception? If there was any increase of posterity intended, the multiplication must have been in the man, as all are the seed of the man. Thus, in the case of Cain, who was accursed of God, it is expressly said: "And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Cain, and said, I have gotten a man from the Lord." Cain and all the non-elect must be creatures of God, for God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth. For we are also His offspring, Acts 17:26-29.

But God rested on the seventh day from all He had created and made, the heavens and the earth being finished and all the host of them Gen.2: 1, 2. The non-elect, therefore, in common with all that proceeded from Adam, must have been created in Him in the six days creation, and have stood in Him, when "God saw everything that He had made, and behold it was very good." And thus Paul ascribes the origin of the sin and death of all men to the same source, namely: "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin" Rom.

5:12. Thus the origin of sin in the world, not in the elect, is ascribed alone to Adam, leaving the woman out of the question. Consequently, if all were involved in Adam's transgression, all must have been represented by him, and therefore, have been created in him. Let us take a faith's view of this subject.

You, I presume, will admit that faith in receiving and resting upon the teachings of God leads the mind to the knowledge of truth. If so, I will ask you, my brother, to point to a single instance of one who gives evidence of being a subject of grace, ascribing his salvation to his possessing any better or distinct nature from his neighbor who is without faith; that is, that he was originally created in Adam, and pronounced good, and therefore, is a subject of grace, whilst his neighbor was the production of God's curse? On the contrary, does not each subject of grace believe and feel that his nature is as vile, as depraved and as justly under the curse of God's law, as that of any around him, and that it is nothing but God's sovereign and distinguishing grace that has made him to differ from others in having hope of salvation? And that this grace reigned not through Adam, but through Christ? That it is because God will have mercy on whom He will have mercy independent of all distinctions in nature that he has hope. If then God's teachings does not lead our faith into error, our experience establishes the fact that we are not saved because we are any better in nature than others, or of a different production from them, and that all boasting in the creature is excluded. The above could not be the experience of God's teachings, if we are made to differ from others in being subjects of mercy because we were created in Adam and they were not.

Let us now come to a faith's view of the Scriptures, and a faith's view is necessary in order to know the Scriptures. That there are two distinct seeds brought to view in the Scriptures, both in the type of the Old Testament and in the substance of the New, is manifest to all who spiritually know them. Elder Parker's idea, if I understand him, was that the one seed was that which was created in Adam, and is the elect; the other seed is the multiplied conception of the woman, and is the seed of the devil. You express the idea differently, but to the same amount. God, according to this idea, instead of choosing some of Adam's posterity or seed and leaving the rest, appointed the whole of His creation in Adam to salvation, and the rest of mankind are an after production for the display of God's wrath. This certainly does not correspond with the scriptural idea of election. There is no choice in it. Christ said to His disciples: "I have chosen you out of the world" John 15:19. Again, it is said: "Thou was slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation" Rev.5:9. The people created in Adam must be, and ever remain, one kindred according to Elder Parker's view, however much they may be mingled with others, and the distinct seed produced by multiplying the woman's conception must be another kindred. If then those around the throne were redeemed out of every kindred, they must have been redeemed then out of both of these kindreds. This will not accord with the idea that the whole of one was appointed to salvation, and the whole of the other to the curse of God. Whatever is implied in the declaration, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception," it is evident that if it meant that God would produce a distinct seed from those created in Adam, these must be as directly God's production as the other; for God says expressly, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." So the devil could have no more claim to this class than to those created in Adam. God, therefore, according to this system, must have determined to produce this class from the woman expressly for the devil, or for making them the subjects of His curse. But certainly this idea cannot agree with that revelation which God has made of Himself as a God of justice and of love, and is one which I cannot receive without direct proof from the Scriptures. I think I am willing to go as far as others in acknowledging the absolute sovereignty of God as consisting with His holy, self- existing and independent Being; but when this sovereignty is extended to God's denying Himself or any of His holy attributes, which would be the case by making Him the author of sin or the direct cause of any of His creatures being accursed, I cannot admit of its correctness. God's predestinating sin to come into the world, or the human family being made sinners by Adam's voluntary transgression, and His predestinating to leave part of Adam's posterity to go on in sin, and thereby entail upon themselves the curse of the law, whilst He predestinated others to salvation by Christ Jesus, are very different from the idea that sin directly emanated from God, that pure fountain of love, or that He produced a class of beings for the express purpose of showing upon them the power of His wrath.

The woman has a seed brought to view in the Scriptures distinct from Adam's seed; but this seed which should bruise the serpent's head, is very different from the seed of the serpent; for this seed was no other than Christ Jesus. The woman has no other seed spoken of in the Scriptures distinct from Adam's, and Adam was created with his seed in him, like everything else. It is true the devil has a seed spoken of. Christ said to the Jews: "Ye are of your father, the devil." And Cain is said by John to be of that wicked one. But the Scriptures nowhere represent the devil and his seed as contrasted with Adam and His seed. The devil and his seed are uniformly contrasted with Christ and His people. Thus the devil or Satan and his interest is called anti-christ. So Paul draws the contrast between Christ and His ministers and Satan and his ministers. See II Cor. 11:13-15. Thus also John in his First Epistle, 3:8-12, contrasts the children of God with the children of the devil. So in the parable of the wheat and tares, as explained by our Lord, it is not God that sowed the good seed, but the Son of man; the good seed is not the creation of God in Adam as such, but the children of the kingdom, and the tares are the children of the wicked one, not God's multiplication of the woman's conception; the field is the world. Consider the wheat and the tares as the two religious interests set up in the world, the kingdom of heaven or of Christ, and the kingdom of anti-christ or of the devil, and all harmonizes in the parable, and in the history of the world.

Thus it is as religionists, and not in their natural existence, that the one class are of the kingdom of heaven, and the other belong to the anti-christian interest. Hence, in reference to the kingdom of heaven, it is not as the seed of Adam that they can enter it, but they must be born again or they cannot see it. So of Cain and Abel, it was not because of Abel's natural birth that his offering was accepted, but because he offered in faith, thus showing that he had been born again, see Heb. 11:4; and Cain's anger against Abel was wholly because Abel's offering was accepted and his own rejected. So that it was altogether as a religionist that Cain was of that wicked one, and manifested his spirit in slaying his brother. This, I think, taking the whole verse in connection, John 8:44, is the sense in which the devil is said to be a murderer from the beginning; the beginning of his religion being a murderous one. I think, my brother, if you will carefully examine these several portions of Scripture on which Elder Parker so much relied to support his two-seed theory, you will find that they afford no direct testimony to support the idea of two natural seeds. It seems strange that Baptists, like Protestants, whilst they profess to take the Scriptures as the rule of their faith, should reject and in so many ways attempt to hide from view the revealed truth of Christ's headship of a spiritual seed, as Adam was the head of a natural seed. Many, indeed, instead of receiving the Scriptures as God has given them as the rule of their faith, attempt to make their belief rule the Scriptures, and therefore wrest them to suit their notions. The plan of making Adam by creation, the head only of the elect, and the making the devil by tempting Eve, the head of the existence of the non-elect, is only one among the many devices to set aside the actual headship of Christ to the elect as a spiritual people. Another device which formerly prevailed extensively, and which is being revived by certain professed Old School Baptists, is that of Adam's being created a spiritual person, and dying a spiritual death, &c. This, in effect, makes him a double head. The head of spiritual life, in that what the Scriptures calls regeneration, is only a restoring to men the life they lost in Adam, and hence regeneration is only a quickening. And the head of the natural life of the human family, by transgression is the source of their depravity. But by examining Rom.5: 12-21, we shall see the two headships of Christ and Adam distinctly marked, Adam as the natural head of the whole human family, through whom flowed to them sin and death, and Christ as the head of the spiritual family, through whom flowed to them life and righteousness. Take, for instance, the 18th verse, "Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." By the offense of one one what? Certainly one man, Adam. Even so by the righteousness of one - one what? Correspondingly one man, Christ Jesus. See verse 15. It is manifest that if the non-elect are men, condemnation came on them through Adam's offense, and not through the woman or the serpent; because by the offense of one, judgment came upon all men unto condemnation. Hence, all men must have been in Adam, and thereby become partakers in his transgression and condemnation.

So on the other hand, the elect must be considered as men in their relation to Christ, distinct from their manhood derived from Adam, and in the sense in which Christ is distinctly the second man, that is, a spiritual man, or universal justification unto life must be considered as passed upon all the human family; for if there be but one class of men, or men only as they flow from Adam, the all men in the latter clause of the text must correspond with the all men in the former part, for in both parts the declaration is full and absolute without any reserve. But do the Scriptures in other portions sustain the idea of this distinct manhood of Christ other than in His being made flesh, and of the elect in Him?

They evidently do. First. In reference to Christ, it is said, I Cor. 15:47, "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." The declarations in the following verses show that each of these men or heads has his distinct seed bearing his distinct image, the one an earthy, the other a heavenly seed. "As is the earthy, such are they also, that are earthy; as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." It is also evident from the Scriptures that the believer has been the subject of a second birth, as distinct from the first as spirit is distinct from flesh. Being the subject of two births, he, of course, has two existences, he is two men; the old man hich is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness Eph.4:22-24.

If we turn to Rom.9, to which you referred me, we find the two seeds of Abraham brought to view. Paul says, "Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called; that is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed" Terse 7,8. Thus the one seed is they which are born after the flesh, the other seed is supernatural; it was God's promise that produced the birth. For this is the word of promise, at this time will I come and Sarah shall have a son" Verse 9. The birth of Ishmael was the natural result of Abraham's fleshly intercourse with the bond woman, but the natural fleshly powers of both Abraham and Sarah were dead at the time the promise was made concerning Isaac, see Rom.4: 19,20, so that it was not by nature but y faith that Abraham had power to communicate seed, as it was through faith Sarah received strength to conceive. See Heb. 11:11. Paul expressly declares that these two births were an allegory of the two covenants, or the mothers were an allegory of the two covenants under which the earthly and heavenly Jerusalems exist; consequently, the two births were figurative of the children of the two covenants, under which the national and spiritual Israel exist. Now, my brother, these figurative persons were both Abraham's sons, so the two Israels are both called his seed. The one is Christ, and they that are Christ's, see Gal.3: 10-29, not the creation in Adam. The other was his natural seed, for Isaac was his son born of his body, though it was through faith he received strength to beget him, and as the natural seed of Abraham, through Isaac and Jacob they inherited the land of Canaan, and were subject to the covenant of circumcision. It was the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, not as the seed of their wives, that national Israel inherited the land of Canaan. Now, if you receive the idea of an extra production as a people of God's curse, distinct from His creation in Adam, how will you account for any of this seed of the devil being blended in the persons of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? seeing they were persons of God's special choice and blessing, especially in Isaac who was altogether a child of faith. And if, as natural men, they existed only as the creation of God in Adam, how could they possibly transmit any other than the seed of Adam to their posterity? I think you must see that Elder Parker's system of two seeds cannot be carried out in this case, and that although the Jews were peculiarly a people of God's curse, yet that being the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, they must have been a part of God's creation in Adam. But when we view the one seed of Abraham natural, and the other being Christ and Christ's people, as spiritual, we find the whole New Testament supporting the idea of two such seeds. Those who have faith find in the idea of this spiritual seed existing in connection with the creation of God in Adam, a harmony with the declaration, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" and of Adam's being the figure of Him that was to come, and that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head.

If we pass to the case of Esau and Jacob, verses 10-13, and inquire into the reason why the elder should serve the younger, we find nothing said of their being originally of two distinct productions as of one's being God's creation in Adam, and the other of an extra production; but on the contrary, we find it asserted expressly that it was, that God's purpose according to election might stand. We have already noticed that there could be no election where God created one class of people expressly for salvation, and produced the other expressly for His curse. But every connecting expression goes to point out the sovereignty of God in personal, individual election in this case. 1. It ascribes the choice as being between the children. 2. That it was not from any personal distinction, they being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil. So that there was no respect of persons with God in this case, but simply that God will have mercy on whom He will have mercy. And this is the doctrine of election, as held by Old School Baptists, and as we believe fully taught in the Scriptures, namely, that God is not influenced in His choice of persons to salvation by any consideration whatever arising from a difference in the subjects of this choice from others, or from anything else, save His own sovereign purpose.

I now come to that portion of Romans, chapter 9th, to which you more particularly refer, namely: verse 21-24. Paul asks, in reply to those who would cavil at the sovereignty of God in election as he had set it forth, "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump, to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" No doubt some have inferred, because man was originally made of the dust of the earth, that Paul meant by this figure to convey the idea that God created some part of the human family for happiness, and some for misery. But the apostle is not treating in the connection of the original creation of man; this figure, therefore, which he uses in defending his position, was not designed to apply to creation. Paul was treating of God's dealings with men as they exist, in having mercy on whom He would, and whom He would He hardened. To this the figure applies. The potter does not make the clay, he finds it ready made, and after softening and preparing it for his use, puts it on his wheel and shapes it into whatever vessel he chooses. Open to the view of God from the beginning were all His works, and all events on to the end. He saw man as the production of His hands, and saw him fallen by transgression; and thus fallen, dead in trespasses and sins, He saw him as fit material from which to form a vessel of mercy or a vessel of wrath. As vessels of wrath, God need but to leave, as far as He sees fit, men to act out their depravity, and to choose their own course of open sin, or of depending on their own works and ways for acceptance with God, and they are fitted for destruction. This you know by experience, if you are what I hope you are, a subject of grace. Men, also, by transgression, became fit material for vessels of mercy or of honor. For, without being sinners, men would not be objects of mercy; and without being just such ruined, helpless sinners, as they are in themselves, fitted to destruction, they would not be objects on which God could display the riches of His grace and mercy.

Here then was present in eternity, to the view of God, the whole lump of clay out of which to make both the vessels to honor and to dishonor. And if a potter has power over clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another to dishonor, has not God the right and power, when all had alike sinned and come short of the glory of God, and therefore justly deserving His wrath, to choose within Himself whom He would make the objects of His mercy, and to decide whom He would leave to their own destruction? Verse 22 reads thus: "What if God willing to show His wrath, and to make His power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." What if God willing, that is, designing and determining to show His wrath, His opposition to sin in finally punishing the transgressors, and make His power known, that is, to vindicate His law, and to bring the transgressors to judgment in His own time; endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction. In the vessels of wrath is evidently meant those left out of the election of grace, and therefore left to meet the demands of the law in their own persons. If the question is still farther asked, how are these vessels fitted to destruction? In addition to what I have said already on this subject, I will refer to the testimony of Scripture on the point. We are told, in Rom. 5:19, that "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners;" and in verse 18, that, "By the offence of one, judgment came upon all men unto condemnation." In Eccl.7:29, we read, "That God hath made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions." In Rom. 1:28-32, it is written, "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind," &c. In Rom.2:5, Paul speaks of man thus: "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." Now from these testimonies we learn that God made man upright; man universally, of course; and that by one man's disobedience many were made sinners. Now there is no room left here to bring in an extra production from the woman in order to find a people fitted to destruction, nor for a supposition such as some have entertained, that the election of God was that which made the rest of mankind vessels of wrath. It was "by one man that sin entered into the world, and death by sin" Rom. 5:12.

Verse 23: "And that He might make known the riches of His glory on the vessels of mercy which He had afore prepared unto glory." We are told, Prov.25:2, "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing." Surely God's purpose of mercy was concealed from the view of Israel and the nations of the earth, whilst He permitted the Gentiles to go on in their ignorance, folly and vile idolatry, whilst He was long suffering toward them and did not suddenly cut them off. But behold the riches of His grace in all this, in that, through His long suffering, He in His own good time has brought forth from them a seed to serve Him, an innumerable multitude of vessels of mercy. From the Gentile nations being so universally left, and that for ages, to their ignorance and idolatry, we must suppose that if any people came into existence as the seed of the devil, they were universally that people, seeing that from age to age they were left to worship devils or idols; yet from one of the expressly accursed nations of God, the Canaanites the harlot Rahab was taken; and out of Moab, another cursed nation, Ruth was taken, to be mothers through whom the Messiah was to proceed from Judah. Thus, blending in the man Jesus the blood of both of these accursed nations. In view of God's overruling the unbelief both of the Gentiles and the Jews to the making manifest the vessels of His mercy, well might Paul exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God; how unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out" Rom.11:33.

Not only is the riches of God's glory thus displayed in making those nations and individuals who were the objects of God's wrath, the progenitors of a people who should be the objects of His mercy, but also in the riches of His mercy on those vessels of mercy, in that His mercy toward them was made to override, not only their individual sins, but also the provoking sins of all their ancestry, so that that ancestry was so spared as to secure their descent from Adam and Noah down to their own birth, and after their birth in sparing them until they were called by God's grace. How divinely glorious is that mercy which can and does cover over all our sins without having found either in us or in our ancestry one redeeming quality to induce the exercise of that mercy towards us. I understand this to be the apostle's meaning, that whilst He was willing, or purposed to show His wrath and make His power known on the vessels of wrath, endured them with much long suffering, that He might make known the riches of His glory on the vessels of mercy.

I will proceed to notice the import of the declaration, "Which He had afore prepared unto glory." Paul does not say afore prepared to mercy; for, as before showed, transgression alone fitted them to be objects of mercy. It is true the preparation was afore made for their being recipients of mercy, consistently with justice, by having life given them in Christ, being created in Him, and therefore chosen in Him before the foundation of the world, whereby Christ was one with them as they were one with Adam; and therefore as the law could inflict its penalty on them in consequence of Adam's transgression, so the law could take hold of Him when He came within its power, by being made of a woman and made under the law; and did demand of Him the suffering of the penalty due for their sins. His Godhead gave that divine value to the offering of Himself as the spotless Lamb of God; that by that one offering He forever perfected them that are sanctified, and became their redemption from under the law. Persons having eyes to see must, on looking at the subject, see the necessity of just such a Mediator as the Scriptures reveal and we contend for. If there had not been a life oneness of Christ and His people, so that their transgressions could be accounted His, as Adam's transgression was accounted ours by virtue of such oneness, the law could never in justice have inflicted its penalty on Him for those sins. If He had not been made flesh, or made under the law, the law could not have inflicted the penalty on Him; and if He had not, in His same one person, been God Almighty, He could not have borne that penalty so as to have exhausted it, and triumphed over death and the whole curse. Let others ridicule this idea of a Mediator, as they can bring no real argument against it, but we rejoice in such a Mediator as could bring honor to the law, and perfect redemption to His people.

But this preparation for the elect's being recipients of mercy did not of itself prepare them for glory; for neither in any higher sphere than he originally occupied before he transgressed or was charged with transgression. And Adam and his family were originally created of the earth earthy, and therefore could occupy no higher sphere than that for which they were created; that is, as the subjects of that creation. Hence the redemption by Christ only cleared away those legal barriers which stood in the way of the elect being made manifest as sons of God and heirs of glory. Hence the force of the truth, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." It is as absolutely necessary that we should be partakers of the spiritual or heavenly nature, or life, of the second or heavenly man or head, in order to our enjoying the heavenly inheritance, as it was that we should be partakers of the rational and earthly life of the natural man in order to our occupying the station of men on the earth. No separate creation in Adam could, therefore, have prepared any for glory, for that which is born of the flesh is flesh.

The term afore shows that this preparation was before the manifestation either of the vessels of wrath or of mercy, and therefore before Adam's dust was fashioned into man. And it must have been in Christ, the spiritual man as head. It must have been by their being created and chosen in Him before the foundation of the world, and being predestinated to the adoption as children by Him. As Christ, in being set up as the Head and life of His people, was brought forth as the Son of God, they were in that life brought forth as sons in Him, and therefore afore prepared unto glory, or as heirs of glory.

Wherefore it is written, "If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ." Being thus afore prepared, they are in time made manifest as heirs of glory, or personally prepared unto glory, by a second birth, being born of the Spirit, or as the seed of Christ, the spiritual man I Cor.

15:45-47.

Thus, my brother, I think I have showed clearly that the two seeds spoken of in the Scriptures, are the seeds of the two men or heads, Adam and Christ, and that like their two heads, the one is fleshly, the other spiritual; the one earthy, the other heavenly. I think every (I do not mean professor, nor every professed Old School Baptist) child of grace has the evidence of the existence of those two distinct seeds in himself. He is conscious of a living principle in him, that is heavenly in all its aspirations and desires, that finds its delight in communion with God, and would cast the world behind its back; and when its influence is felt in the exercise of faith, the reproaches, wants and afflictions of the world sink into insignificance in comparison with the enjoyment of the presence of God and the glory had in view. At other times, and that more frequently, his whole mind seems absorbed in the world and its concerns; not only his fleshly feelings, but his reason and judgment tell him it is right and proper to attend to the world and its concerns and are as earnestly engaged in arranging his worldly business, with discretion, as they were while in a state of nature; so that he has the evidence of its being the same rational soul it ever was, and therefore that in its nature it is not changed. But when faith, as before noticed, is in exercising and presenting spiritual things to view, the soul with all its faculties enters into the love of the truth, and into the enjoyment of the hopes and consolations of the gospel. Here, then, is decisive evidence that the soul, though unchanged in its nature, is prepared under the enlightening and quickening influence of the new or spiritual man to enter into the enjoyment of heaven whenever it shall be released from its relation to this world, by laying aside this fleshly tabernacle.

I will here leave the subject with you, hoping you may search the Scriptures for yourself, and be established in the truth as you find it there revealed, without being influenced by the teachings of men for or against it.

Yours, affectionately; S. Trott

VIEWS ON GEN. 3:22.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - I some months since received a letter from brother Duggan, of Louisiana, requesting my views on Gen. 3:22, former part: "The man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." I would hereby inform brother Duggan that the reason of my so long neglecting his request, is that I have been so much from home that I have the past fall had but little opportunity for writing.

He requested me to answer his request either through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES or SOUTHERN BAPTIST MESSENGER. I had intended giving my views through the MESSENGER, until recently having seen some numbers of a periodical, called the EARTHEN VESSEL, an English Baptist publication, in which your name, brother Beebe, and mine are mentioned by a New York correspondent, in connection with some gross perversions of our views and some unwarranted assertions, as also in reference to brother Goble, of New York, who is also mentioned. I have no disposition to enter into a discussion with this New York correspondent on the points referred to, nor to occupy your pages with a refutation of his slanders. But as an expression of brother Duggan's text will lead to an expression of our views on the points referred to, I have concluded, with your permission, to give the exposition through the SIGNS, as being more likely to meet the eyes of some of the readers of the EARTHEN VESSEL, than if published in the MESSENGER.

I will just mention, in connection with the above, that I saw in that paper, the EARTHEN VESSEL, a communication from another, and probably an English writer, in which he attempts to explain the doctrine of the Trinity, and to refute the notion of the pre-existence of the soul of Christ Jesus. Whether it was designed as a refutation of this American heresy or not, I cannot say. As to the absurd idea concerning the pre-existence of the soul of Christ, we have no affinity with it. This writer, in explaining the Trinity, asserts that the Three: The Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost – are three distinct persons, or subsistencies, and that these three compose the one God or Jehovah, thus representing the God of the Scriptures as a compound of three distinct subsistencies, or real beings. God has nowhere thus declared himself; saying, We are the Lord, or We are God, as it should read, if such doctrines were true. But he declares, I, even I, am the LORD. Again, Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am

God – not we are God. Isaiah 43:11,12. Hence men who say such things as above cannot be God's witnesses, on that point.

But I will pass to a consideration of our text. In the expression, "The man is become as one of us," there is, manifestly, a reference to distinct persons. It is true, Unitarians, as they style themselves, say, that in expressions like this, God conforms himself to the custom of kings, who, to express their dignity, use the plural number in speaking of themselves, as modern editors, and some correspondents, who would assume the dignity of editors, do. But there is in this text a distinction in the persons, in the expression one of us, that refutes all that reasoning, showing that when God says us he means us in the plural. On the other hand, the Trinitarians, as they call themselves, contend that when God uses the plural pronoun, saying, Let us make man, &c., he refers to the several persons in the Godhead, and that it expresses a consultation among these distinct persons concerning the making of man. But when we come to consider the expressions of our text, I think we shall find their position as lame as that of the Unitarians. Although the correspondent of the EARTHEN VESSEL, before referred to, seems to make the persons composing the one God but component parts of God; yet Trinitarians generally, I believe, hold that each of the persons is God. If they do not, the Scriptures clearly declare that the Father is God, the Word is God and that the Holy Ghost is God. If, then, there is but one God, as the Scriptures fully declare, each of these persons must, if each is God, be that one God. How, then, could it be said, as one of us? It should be as us; for if, upon that position, man became as one, he became as each one, or as the three, for each is alike God. Again, although God absolutely, of his own infinite understanding, knows good and evil, yet man in this way never has, nor can know good and evil as God knows it. Man knows good and evil only by experience, and that in contrast; in this sense, it cannot be supposed that God knows it; he cannot experience evil, nor depend on contrast for his knowledge of good and evil. Hence it must be manifest that the one of us must be a person distinct from the Godhead. Such person is found in the Mediator, the Son of God; for, in order to be a proper Mediator between God and his people, he must be a person distinct from each. As such, he is clearly revealed in the Scriptures. His being revealed as the Son of God, reveals his distinct personality from God. The idea of son is that of a person whose existence is derived from another. In Heb.

1:1,2, we read, "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets; hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." There are in this text several ideas that call for particular notice in treating on this subject. First: That this person by whom God hath spoken unto us, &c., must be a person distinct from God, who spake by him. Second: That this person cannot be a distinct person in the Godhead, and therefore God equally with the Father. For I am certain that no one of those who contend for distinct personality in the Godhead, would, on a moment's reflection, if the idea could be separated from their notion of personality, admit that God, as such, could be an heir, much less would be appointed heir. Is not God the sovereign Creator of all things? As such, has he not the absolute right to them and the sovereign control of them? How then, can he be said to inherit them? And from whom could he inherit them? Hence then, his being appointed heir, and therefore his sonship and personality must be distinct from his being God. Third: The expression, By whom he made the worlds, shows that this Son and Person, who is thus distinct from God, was concerned in the creation of the worlds, and hence he evidently was the person whom God addressed when he said, Let us make man, &c., and of whom he spake in saying, The man is become as one of us. I will endeavor to show wherein this personality, and therefore the sonship consists. First: It is manifest that the sonship and therefore personality of Christ does not consist in his manhood or being made flesh, for in his manhood he was made of a woman – made of Mary – and therefore could not in that manhood have been present at the making of the worlds. But as Son, he was present, as God made the worlds by him.

By turning to John chapter 1, we will find clearly revealed a person distinct from God and yet with God in the creation; for he was in God in the beginning. "For in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." And in verse 4, we are told, that, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." It does not say that he, the Word, was the light, &c.; but distinctively the life was the light of men. And verse 5, "The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not." As the life is the light, whatever is said of the light belongeth to the life. In verses 9 & 10, it is said of this light, "That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." It is, therefore, clear from these quotations, that this life or light by whom the world was made is a person, and as such is distinct from God, from the Word, in whom he the life or light, was. Christ is identified both with, this light as such and as the life. In John 8:12, Jesus saith, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life;" thus showing that the light which he is, is the light of life. Again, in John 12:46, he saith, "I am come a light into the world that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." He thus connects faith with being enlightened by him. In Eph.

5:8, the children of God are characterized as children of light. It reads, "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light." Does this not show that being light is one with being born again? Again, in Col.3:3 & 4, the brethren are told, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear," &c. Christ is here directly declared to be the life of his people; not only so, but the life which he is, evidently is identified with the life that was in the Word; for it is hid in God. Once more, the Son is identified with this life; for in John 5:11 & 12, we read, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. Now, it appears to me, that any person who is willing to take the plain declarations of Scripture for his guide, independently of creeds, confessions of faith, and traditions, will be satisfied from these quotations, that the life which was in the Word, existed in God from the beginning, was personally distinct from God, for it is the light of men, was in the world, is that eternal life which God hath given to his people, and is their life; that it is one with Christ or the Son of God; and that he, this life, was with God in making the worlds, that he made the worlds by him. Here, therefore, I might with propriety rest the conclusion on this part of my text; that the one of us, is no other than Christ the Son of God, as he existed in the beginning, in God as the life of his people. But I am aware that if I leave it here, the same old cry of a created Mediator will be reiterated against us. For if this life, which is the Christ, the Son of the living

God, is a person distinct from God, in whom he was, he cannot, as such, be self-existent; for there is but one Jehovah, one self existent God. The very idea of sonship clearly implies a derivative existence from another as his Father. There are in the Scriptures an abundance of expressions conveying a similar idea. In Prov.8:22-25, we read, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his ways, before his works of old." Here, under the idea of wisdom, he is presented to view as distinct in being and person from the Jehovah who possessed him. In verse 23 he says, "I was set up from everlasting." In verse 24, "When there were no depths I was brought forth." In verse 25, he adds, "Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth." He is declared to be "the only begotten of the Father." In Colossians, chapter 1, he, the Son, is declared to be the "image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." And in Rev.3:14, he styles himself, "the beginning of the creation of God." If there is any definite meaning in words, these and other declarations of Scripture which might be quoted, clearly show that the Son, as such, has a derivative and subordinate existence. We contend that these characteristics of the Mediator belong only to his sonship as such, and not to his Godhead, that as God he is Jehovah, absolutely self-existent, as one with the Father. The Trinitarian party charge us with representing him only as a creature. Yet they themselves admit that his manhood is a created existence, and do not suppose that this admission in any way destroys his essential Godhead. And if his creatureship as man does not destroy the essential Godhead of his person as Mediator, neither can his derivative existence as the Son and the life of his people make him any less God, as he is one with the Father. Thus, the Scriptures support our views of a trinity of persons in the Mediator. In the first chapter of John, after declaring that the Word was God, and that the life that was in him was the light of men, and that this light, as before showed, was presented to view as a person, the Evangelist goes on to say, not that the light was made flesh, but that the Word, and therefore God with the life in him was made flesh, and "we beheld his glory as the glory of the only begotten of the Father." Thus, whilst he was man and Son, he was the brightness of God's glory and express image of his (God's) person. The Godhead shone forth in him.

The truth is, we do and have contended that Christ is a perfect Mediator between God and his people. In order to be such, it is not enough that he should be entirely impartial between them, but he must be equally identified with each, so as fully to appreciate each case, and be equally interested in each. None could sustain that independent stand to enable him to act with impartiality but he who is the self existent God. And none could truly appreciate what is due to the justice, the honor and glory of God, but he who is absolutely God. And how could he as truly feel for the welfare and happiness of his people, and impartially advocate their cause, unless he was as completely one with them as he is one with the Father? Now, Christ's being made flesh, would not constitute such oneness with his people, as he has with the Father; for he was only made in the likeness of sinful flesh.

Rom.8:3. This manhood was not in itself considered one with theirs. They did not derive their manhood from him, as their natural head, neither did his flesh, like theirs, descend from Adam. It is true, his being made flesh was necessary to his representing his people under the law, and to perfect him as their High Priest through suffering, and to make him a compassionate High Priest, by having been himself tempted. See Heb.5:8,9 & 4:15. And this could only have been in consequence of his previous union with his people.

But in Christ, being the life of his people, we see in this life a oneness – he the Head, and they the Body – he as the antitype of Adam, the Husband, and they his Bride. This life is one in the Head, and in all the members of his Body, as in the Vine and its Branches. The Branch was in the Vine, and one with it from its first existence; though it was not manifest as a Branch, until it shot forth. Its manifestation as a branch, neither constitutes nor destroys its oneness with the vine. It remains the same one vine, with all its branches, that it was before the branches shot forth. So the whole believing Church is but one Christ, the Life that is hid in God; the Life that was in the Word in the beginning. Thus says 1st Corinthians 14:12, "For as the body is one and hath many members, and the members of that one body being many, are one body; so also is Christ." See also verse 27. It is Christ in every member the hope of glory, that manifests a child of God, a distinct branch of the one vine.

Some persons seem to suppose that by this union of Christ and his people, we mean that the natural man was from the beginning in union with Christ. The natural man was one with the earthly Adam, and remains in union with him under the law, until he is killed by the law; then, when born again, born of the Spirit, or Life, he is born into life and all the blessings of Christ's redemption; and stands manifest as a child of God and one with Christ in that life which is in him, and by which he is quickened.

But to return. We have in Christ, thus a perfect mediator, as being God and being the life of his people, both being actually united in him, and therefore represented by him, as he says in John 17:21, "That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Again, "I in them and they in me, that they may be made perfect in one." As this oneness was from the beginning so he was in the beginning as Mediator, as it is said of him, Isaiah 63:9, "In all their affliction, he was afflicted and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them and he bare them and carried them all the days of old." I will now notice the other part of the text. "To know good and evil." The idea has been entertained that man knew good and evil, in knowing a state of innocency, and then knowing a state of guilt and transgression. Man's goodness in innocency, was like that of Ephraim and Judah as the morning cloud and early dew; there was no real goodness in it, because it was not substantial. The text does not read, "knowing good and evil," as though it was something he had then learned, but "to know," that is, he is now by transgression placed in circumstances to know good and evil. This man is to know, as one of us - that is, as the Mediator, was to know it. Now the Mediator was made to know by experience what it was to bear sin, and all the consequences of it, such as condemnation and death. And he knew the good of redeeming his people, of conquering death in their behalf, and of entering into his glory as their forerunner. So his people are made to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and condemnation and death by the law, and by faith are made to know the superior value and goodness of the righteousness of God, which is by the faith of Jesus Christ, and which Christ is to his people, and the good of that inheritance which is spiritual and heavenly, over that earthly inheritance which Adam lost by transgression, &c.

This will give an idea to brother Duggan, of what I understand by the good and evil which man knows, as the one of us knows them, or which he knows in common with Christ. We have fellowship with Christ's sufferings under the curse of the law, and participate in the redemption; and are to be with Christ and behold his glory, and are joint heirs with him, &c. The good in the text is placed before the evil, and it is true we must be somewhat enlightened in the knowledge of God and of his goodness, before we can know the evil of sin.

I have also, in the views above given, supposed that the man here represented the elect of God, not that I do not understand that all the human family were created in Adam;

but I understand that Adam or the man was a figure of Christ in his creation, and thus represents Christ and his church and people; and, in fact, that this was the grand end of his creation. The Lord's portion is his people, &c.

These are the views I have of this subject, and as such I give them, leaving to others to give us better views if they have them, and subscribe myself yours in love,

S. TROTT. Dec. 26, 1859.

VIEWS OF HEBREWS 8:11.

BROTHER BEEBE: - A brother in Ohio, some three or four months since, requested by letter that I should give through the SIGNS, my views of Heb.8:11, latter part, "For all shall know me from the least to the greatest."

This declaration is embraced in that new covenant which God said by the prophet Jeremiah, (Jer.31:31-34,) he would make, in the days which shall come, with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; and which the Apostle quotes in the connection as the better covenant, which was established upon better promises, and of which the man Christ Jesus, the Son, is Mediator. See Eph.7:28, and 8:3, 6-8, and I Tim.2:5. Hence from the Apostle's representing this covenant, as that of which Christ is Mediator, it is evident that the days which should come, are the days of the Messiah, or the gospel day, and therefore that the house of Israel and of Judah with which it should be made are the spiritual Israel and Judah.

Christ with his people in him, being in national Israel and Judah as their substance and their Holy One, the affirmation that it should be made with them, terminates in him and in his people, as brought out from that type. The making this covenant with them spoken of, is the making it manifest as the distinct covenant or dispensation under which they stand, and through the provisions of which they approach unto God. It is a new covenant, in that it is new to them, when manifested, and is manifested only to the new man, or to them as born again. It is new, in that it is a new dispensation which was to be set up in the world. Not new as established with Christ, nor as the purpose and grace or the substance of it were given to his people in him before the world began.

Among the provisions of this covenant, is this, "And they shall not teach every man his neighbor and every man his brother saying; Know the Lord, for all shall know me from the least to the greatest." Hence the knowledge of the Lord as possessed by spiritual Israel as such, shall not be that rational knowledge such as national Israel learned of their parents and teachers; but it shall be a knowledge not received of men, nor obtained by any natural or fleshly powers of the mind; for, "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." I Cor.2:14. How then, say you, Do they know the Lord and the things of the Lord or of the Spirit of God? The answer is provided, "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." I Cor.2:10. Or as our Lord referring unto the promise made unto Zion or the gospel church, Isa.54:13, says, "They shall be all taught of God." John 6:45. From what we have said, it is manifest that the allwho shall know the Lord, are the all of spiritual Israel and Judah, and that all of them shall know him, without exception, from the least to the greatest, and that by God's teaching or revelation. Hence he who knows the Lord only as he has learned of men or by the force of his natural reason, has never been manifested as one of the Israel of God. Hence also, surprising as may be the remark, all that the child of grace knows of the Lord and of the things of the Lord, only as he has obtained it from men or by study, is of no spiritual benefit to him.

The enquiry arises whether this revelation is made to the natural reason or mind of man. Not so; for whatever we can comprehend by our natural reason, we can communicate to others of like rational faculties. Hence we could and should teach every man his neighbor and every man his brother, saying know the Lord, in contradiction to the express declaration of this new covenant. So the Apostle shows that as no man "knoweth the things of a man (things peculiar to man,) save the spirit of man which is in him; even so the things of God knoweth no man but the spirit of God." And adds, "Now we (we believers) have received, not the spirit of the world (in our regeneration) but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." And these are things which "God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit." See I Cor.2:11 & 12, compared with 9 & 10. Thus we see that in order to know the things of God, it is not only necessary that God should reveal them unto us by his Spirit; but that we should also first receive the Spirit which is of God, of God as its Father, and of God as he who alone communicates it in regeneration. Thus God has purposed and provided that the spiritual Israel and Judah shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest of them. If we understand by the least and greatest here, those who are so naturally; the least shall know the Lord; for as human reason has no part either in the communication or reception of this knowledge, neither infancy, idiocy, nor derangement of mind can prevent them from being made to know the Lord. On the other hand, the greatest intellect with the most intensive knowledge of science, and the selfpride consequent thereto cannot prevent any of the elect Israel from being brought to know the Lord; for he will convert them to become as little children, as babes, and to enter the kingdom of God as such, and to account all their wisdom and learning as foolishness in this case. If by the least and greatest we are to understand such in a spiritual sense; the apostles who were the greatest among the saints and therefore most eminently their minister according to Mat.20:26, evidently knew and preached the doctrine of the Lord; whilst the least lamb in the flock could receive and judge of that doctrine, not by the written creeds, systems or expositions of men, but by the inward teachings of the Spirit of God. "He that is spiritual judgeth all things." I Cor.2:15.

Is it true that God hath said of his spiritual Israel, They shall all know the Lord, from the least to the greatest? And is his shall, absolute, almighty, and irreversible? How presumptuous then is it, to set up Articles of Faith and other uninspired writings as standards of faith or truth, which christians must come up to in their belief, as though the Holy Ghost would not be faithful to teach the truth to all the elect, or teach all the truth necessary for them; or as though we would bring the teachings of the Lord to our notions of systematic divinity. It may be said that these Articles of Faith, and other standard books are such as we believe were written by persons who had been taught of the Lord; and that they seem necessary to test the pretensions of those who profess to be believers. The latter of these excuses for such standards would appear plausible, if God had not given us the Scriptures written by inspiration as a standard, and to his people the spirit of judgment in their own experience. As it is, the excuse is vain. The other, that they were written by men who had been taught of the Lord, is very fallacious. If we admit that in truth these writers were all subjects of grace, who does not know, or from reflection might not know how universally prone we are to speculate on, and to bring every thing to the test of reason, which is presented to our minds even as religion, and to mix our own reflections and preconceived ideas with what has been revealed in us? How seldom do we ever hear a person relate his experience who does not mix some of his own thoughts or traditional notions with what the Lord has taught him, and which in themselves are of no avail in giving us an evidence that he is a subject of grace? How difficult it is truly and fully to become fools that we may be wise? What constitutes the difference between the writings of the Bible and the writings of uninspired men, as to infallibility, other than this: That the inspired writers wrote only as they were guided by the Holy Ghost to write, and therefore wrote only what he revealed to them or assured them was the truth; though they (uninspired writers) may write what the Lord has taught them and which therefore in itself is equally true with the Scriptures and supported by them, yet in writing mix more or less of their own thoughts, and conclusions from reason, and perhaps wild speculations with what they write? It is true that the writings of christians may often be useful in counteracting the errors one of another and of others, and may be for edification and comfort as they show the dealings of God with his people, and as the Holy Ghost may thereby lead persons to an understanding of the Scriptures; but when he does this, he gives them a witness of its truth from the Scriptures and their own experience. But whenever we do not read human writings as the Bereans heard Paul preach, "searching the Scriptures whether those things are so;" whenever we read uninspired writings as true because they are so held by persons in whom we have confidence, or when we receive indiscriminately as true the opinions of any man or set of men, because they appear rational, and not because we have the witness from the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures or in our experience of their truth; if we get any truth we are sure to get error mixed with it, and our views become either contradictory, or erroneous in the whole. Hence the dissensions and divisions, I do not say among professors, but among the saints and which we cannot expect to see healed, until they learn more fully not to put confidence in man as to any part of their salvation, as well as to what they believe, as to what they are to feel and do.

What the Lord teaches is true, and it is the same truth in all who are taught of him, and when the saints become satisfied to receive as truth only what he teaches them, then, and not till then, shall we have the satisfaction of seeing again the multitude of them that believe of one heart and one soul.

S.TROTT.

Centreville, Fairfax County, Va., June 23, 1848.

P.S. BROTHER BEEBE: - As Paul did not think the enquiry of the Athenians, "May we know what this new doctrine whereof thou speakest, is," unworthy of a reply, I presume we may take the same liberty in reference to certain strange things brought to our ears, or eyes, in the SIGNS. I will therefore venture to pronounce some queries on two or three points for the consideration and reply of yourself or of some one of your correspondents.

- 1.In reference to the believer's mind. Paul says, Rom.8:7, "The carnal (or fleshly) mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." I ask, Was that mind which "cannot be subject to the law of God," the same which he had reference to, when he said, (chap. 7:25,) "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God"? If so, is nature changed in regeneration, is the mind which by nature is earthly and fleshly changed to that which is heavenly and spiritual? If so, I ask, Can that which is heavenly and spiritual be involved in the cares of earth; and could the believer with only a heavenly mind engage himself in the business of the world? If the carnal mind is not changed, what becomes of it when the new birth is experienced, unless it remains as ever in its relation with the old man?
- 2.In reference to believers, sinning and being wretched. Was not David, though not living under the gospel dispensation, a child of God, a believer? Did he not in the case of Bathsheba and Uriah sin against the Lord, as he said he did, II Sam. 12:13? Was there no mind in exercise, no reasoning upon the subject in his desires first to deceive Uriah and then to kill him? So in the case of numbering Israel, was there no sin, no mind or reasoning powers involved in it? Did David feel no wretchedness or distress, when convicted through Nathan of his sin concerning Uriah, or when concerning numbering Israel he cried out, "Lo, I have sinned and I have done wickedly; but these sheep what have they done," &c.? In the case of Peter, was there no sin in his denying Christ, and in his cursing and swearing, no mind in it, no wretchedness when he went out and wept bitterly? Are not believers subjects of repentance? Does not that repentance produced by godly sorrow imply a sense of having sinned? Does not godly sorrow such as produced in the saints at Corinth, (II Cor.7:9-11,) indignation, fear, vehement desire, zeal, revenge, &c., involve wretchedness or distress of mind?

- 3. Concerning believers, complaining of the depravity and wickedness of their hearts. Is not the spirit of God's Son in the believer a spirit of holiness, and therefore of opposition to sin? Is it not therefore consistent with a believer that he loathe sin, as much in himself as in others? Does not a sense from time to time of God's love and goodness to him make his own sinfulness and depravity appear more loathsome to him? Can he when he speaks of himself, speak of anything but of his poverty, wretchedness, and guilt? May he not with propriety so speak of himself as an illustration of the riches and freeness of that grace which brings pardon to his guilty soul, as well as for the encouragement of others who know the plague of their own hearts? I will in addition propose one or two queries in reference to the 7th chapter of Romans. 1. Is it consistent to suppose that Paul in personating a person as under the law would speak of himself, as distinct from sin dwelling in him, as though he had been delivered from his sense of accountability to the law; and of the inward man in distinction from the flesh as though he had been born again?
- 2. Is it supposable that Paul would declare his own experience under the law and his being slain by it, as in the past tense, as he does from verse 7 to 13 and then turn round and in the following verses represent himself in the present tense still as under the law? I hope the forthcoming exposition may clear up the point embraced in these two latter queries.

S.TROTT

VIEWS ON ISAIAH 2:4.

DEAR BRETHREN: - I see in the Messenger for December 1, 1859, a request from sister Jane Luce, for my views on Isaiah 2:4. With your permission I will give such views as I have through your paper. The text reads thus, "And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

In verse 1, we are told that this is the word that Isaiah saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. Verse 2, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains," &c.

The expression last days is used in the Scriptures repeatedly to denote the last or gospel dispensation, that is the coming and reign of the Messiah. See Acts 2:17, and context; and Heb.1:2. Hence as that whole dispensation is the establishing of a spiritual worship and the reign of Christ, is a spiritual reign, so this, that was to come to pass is spiritual. The Lord's house is the spiritual house, the gospel church; and the top of the mountains in which it shall be established, is no other than the Rock on which the church is built, Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God. Hence it is not said to be the tops of the mountains, nor the top of the mountain, but the top of the mountains, and above the hills. Christ is above all the mountains and hills of political and ecclesiastical governments, and the top of them all, having the entire control of them; for, "All power is given to him in heaven and in earth." As Christ's kingdom which is here spoken of, is not of this world, but is spiritual, and comes not with observation, but is within you; that is, internal in its influences and reign. See Luke 17:20,21. So we are not to understand in this 4th verse, that his reign, or religion, was to interfere with nations or civil governments. Christ, on a certain occasion, asks, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" Luke 12:14. One of the early corruptions that crept into the church was that of conforming the church and religion of Jesus Christ, to the national religion of the Jews, and hence the attempts to bring the natural seed of believers into the pales of the church, as also to connect the church with civil governments. Hence also the popular idea among national religionists, and all who receive their ideas, is that such texts as this 4th verse related to the nations of the earth as nations. And because they have not yet seen the event in that way accomplished among those nations and governments which profess to be christian, they have adopted the idea of a worldly Millennium, when these events will be fulfilled. Hence also the attempts to hurry in the Millennium, by peace societies for abolishing war, &c. Not only are the Protestants filled with such notions, but also the Friends or Quakers, who profess a religion that is altogether spiritual, to the exclusion even of the ordinances of the gospel, have run into the same error. The truth is, the spirit of their religion is too much of a fleshly spirit. Hence their making their Society or church a fleshly or national church by holding their children under the control of their Society, as much as do the Protestants. Hence their opposition to anything like war, and to oaths, &c., in cases relating to worldly governments.

But the New Testament does not authorize a belief that war will cease among the kingdoms of this world while they continue. Christ said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews;" thus showing that the order of the kingdoms of this world in relation to wars was not changed by his coming.

John 18:36. Again he said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." Matt.10:34. The prophecies in the book of Revelations, in their fulfillment thus far, show clearly that by the sword in that declaration, our Lord meant wars and fightings.

Sister Luce will enquire, What is then intended by the prophecy under consideration? I answer, that in the first place it shows that the Judah and Jerusalem intended; that is, the kingdom of David's Son, Christ, was to be extended and established among the Gentiles. Hence the declaration in verse 2, "And all nations shall flow unto it;" and in verse 4, "And he shall judge among the nations." In the second place, it teaches, that this kingdom of the Messiah is not to be established and extended on the principle on which the national kingdom of David was established; that is, not by the sword and spear, but it is established and extended in the spirit of peace and good will toward men. The Lord compares the extending of his kingdom among the nations thus, "And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim," &c. Isaiah 25:11. That is, as the swimmer takes the advantage of the weight of the water, by spreading out his hands, to press himself forward, yet as he passes leaves the water to return to its wonted level and smoothness, so our Lord is establishing his churches in the midst of the nations, whilst he takes of the citizens of those nations to form the subjects of his kingdom, or the members of his church, he does not overturn, nor interfere with the government or laws of those nations, nor take from them their citizens, but leaves the subjects of his grace as much subject and obedient to the governments under which they live as though they had not been brought into his kingdom. Hence if the government is at war, they are ready to bear their proper share of its burden. Whilst in spreading the gospel or extending the church of Christ, they will use no force of law, nor weapons of war, but simply the peaceful implements of the plough share and pruning hook, or the preaching of the gospel and bearing witness to its truth.

Again, the Lord compares his defending of Jerusalem or the church to birds flying. See Isaiah 31:5. Birds flying are different from beasts rushing upon their prey. The latter tread down and crush everything in their way. But birds destroy not the equilibrium of the air, leaving no wake behind them. So the Lord will appear for the defense of his church, his people, and his cause. He will defend them so that no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper, no evil shall come upon them. Yet the Lord will not destroy their foes, nor crush the government that may persecute them, until his time comes to take vengeance on them, but he will overrule and so control all their machinations and rage as to cause the wrath of man to praise him, and to cause all things, which he determines to work together for good to them that love him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. This is carrying out the absolute predestination of God as we hold it. Hence as the Lord is thus a sure defense to his people, and cause, hiding them under the shadow of his wings, they have no occasion to seek protection from laws against those who oppose, nor to take up weapons of war against those who persecute; but if they "smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee on the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also," that is, for righteousness sake, or for thy faith in Christ. But if, as a citizen, we are injured in person or property, we have the same right to seek protection and redress from the laws of our country, as have other citizens, or even to defend ourselves, our family, or property. So in reference to oaths, or the direction swear not at all, if in our church relations, we have not sufficient love to, and confidence in one another, to let each other's yea, be yea, without its being confirmed by an oath, it is time such church relations were dissolved. But in dealing with people of the world in worldly transactions, we are dealing with those, who at least, do not want to show any more confidence in us, on account of our religion, than we have in them; and we are dealing with them on the principle of human laws, which ought not to make any distinction between the disciples of Christ, and other citizens. Hence if in such cases an oath is necessary for confirmation, let us take it unhesitatingly.

I have thus attempted to illustrate what I believe to be the spirit of the text under consideration, without coming directly to the words of it. I will now briefly notice the words, in their order. 1st. "And he shall judge among all nations."

The he here must refer, for its antecedent, to the God of Jacob, named in the preceding verse. As the whole connection of our text shows that Christ is the personage brought to view, it is evident, that Christ is the God who declared himself to Jacob at Bethel, as the LORD GOD of Abraham, &c. See Gen.28:12-15. And he shall judge the nations – No; for he came not, in the view given of him in our text, to condemn the world, but for salvation. Hence it reads, "He shall judge among the nations." That is, he shall judge his people that are among the nations, and he shall convict them of sin and just condemnation, and yet shall justify them by his blood. "And shall rebuke many people."

There are many, very many people who find a good deal of condemnation in their religion. Their religion is Adam or the natural man reformed. Hence when they can find any reformation in their lives, any religious excitement or zeal in their passions and feelings, they think it is commendable, and expect that God will commend them for it. But there are, and have been, many people who find nothing but rebukes to themselves in their religion. Whilst under the law, they found nothing but rebukes for their want of conformity to its holy and spiritual requisitions, until they became disheartened from all attempts to be accepted upon the ground of their obedience, and fell helpless and condemned at the feet of mercy. They hoped when faith was given them, to behold Christ as the way that they should so live, so walk in obedience, as to feel approved before God and their own consciences. But they have found nothing but rebukes against themselves from that day to this. They have been daily rebuked. They have been rebuked for the coldness of their love and zeal, for giving way to their appetites and passions, for the workings of corruptions within, and their proneness to yield to temptations, for their worldly mindedness, and for the mingling of the flesh or self in all their religious exercises and doings. Why is it so? Because Christ, who is in them, or the new man is holy as God is holy, whilst the old man is corrupt, and so of course are all its acts; hence the spirit or new man rebukes and abhors all its doings. No wonder that the people who are thus rebuked should be humbled and abased in their own eyes; and therefore esteem others better than themselves. Hence that instead of wishing to compel others to be conformed to themselves in religion, their great desire and effort should be to be in themselves more conformed to the image of Christ, and more anxious to show forth his salvation. Hence, that they should exchange the implements of destruction, for the implements of production and peace; the implements of war, for the implements of husbandry, which are implements for producing that which is good, to man.

"Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." The kingdom or church of Christ is composed of persons who are of different nations and owe allegiance to different governments; yet as subjects of Christ's kingdom, they are a peculiar people, and a distinct and holy nation. Although the nations and religions of the world have repeatedly lifted up the sword against this nation, yet it has never lifted up the sword against them. And the subjects of this kingdom have no prejudices against one another because they are of different nations of the earth;

but let them meet together, from different nations, and different parts of the earth, and as soon as they have seen in each other, that they are of the spiritual circumcision, they will embrace each other in their affections as brethren, and of the same family. And when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, as I think they will at the close of the Philadelphian church state, or after the destruction of the man of sin; then whilst under the influence of the spirit of the gospel, they will no more lift up the sword, nation against nation. But no human effort can bring this about, for the prophecies concerning the Beasts, and their destruction, must first be accomplished.

"Neither shall they learn war any more." Under David, Judah learned war, but under Christ, the spiritual Judah, instead of learning war, learn to love one another, and to act from the principle of love, having the love of God shed abroad in their hearts.

Such are my views of this subject, and as such I give them. Yours, I hope in love, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., Jan, 2, 1860.

VIEWS ON I JOHN 3:15.

DEAR BROTHER: - I see by the MESSENGER for February 1, 1856, that our brother Wm. M. Mitchell, requests my views on I John 3:15. The views I have I readily give. The text reads thus: "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

This has been a difficult text to me, as well as to others. The difficulty has arisen, I apprehend, from the idea we have attached to the term murderer as used in the text; that is, applying it as the word is commonly used among us as denoting one who had literally killed or caused the death of another. According to this sense of the word, every son and daughter of Adam must have been literal murderers; for the testimony which Paul bears concerning himself and others, (Titus 3:3,) that in times past they were hateful and hating one another, applies to all. Hence according to our text, if we give this sense to the word all must be shedders of human blood directly or indirectly. On the other hand, giving this sense to the word, and not only must we decide according to the text, that every person, without exception who commits self-murder was destitute of eternal life, but also that David had not eternal life abiding in him as he in this sense was evidently a murderer in the case of Uriah.

But I now understand John as drawing throughout this epistle a close and discriminating line of distinction between those who are the sons of God and those who are not, or who are as he calls them, the children of the devil. Hence his words are to be understood not as in the letter merely, but as in the spirit; that is, he is not speaking merely of outward acts, but of the whole character of the two classes, the natural man and the spiritual man, of the children of the devil, and the children of God. The natural man or the unregenerated having nothing but a carnal mind is as stated in Titus 3:3; hateful and hating, is enmity against God, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Rom.8:7. Hence he is guilty of the whole law, and is therefore a murderer in view of the law as spiritual. But the "new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," is in its essence the very spirit of the law; it is love to God and to its neighbor. And "love is the fulfilling of the law;" hence, "Whosoever is born of God, doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." But what is it that he who is born of God, loves after the new man? Is it sin or depravity? No. Is it the flesh with its lusts? No. It is love to God, and therefore love to Christ, and to the image of Christ wherever it is seen; it is love to the new man or to the spirit and its fruits. Hence the declaration of our Lord to his disciples, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." The law required that we should love our neighbor; but this is a new command, it referred to the new man and his affinities, not to the natural man. The children of God will love one another. No one that is born again can see the fruits of the Spirit, or the evidence of the new birth in another without feeling his love drawn out to them and to him in whom he sees them, as a subject of grace. Hence if anyone who professes to belong to the brotherhood of Christ, can see the evidences of faith in another, and hate him for it, hate him as a brother, as Cain did Abel, he is a murderer, he has not eternal life abiding in him, and is therefore still under the law and held by it as a murderer or guilty of the whole law. And no one that is held under the condemnation of the law, or as a murderer, has eternal life abiding in him.

John in the context refers to Cain evidently as illustrating what he was expounding. He says (verse 11,) "For this is the message that ye have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." Referring evidently to the new command of the Lord. He then adds, "Not as Cain who was of that wicked one and slew his brother; and wherefore slew he him?" Was it for any mere fleshly or worldly advantage or lust? No, but, "because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." Because his brother offered in faith and was accepted, and he did not, and therefore was rejected. Here then we have an illustration of the murderer in our text – verse 15. And here we have a true illustration of the spirit of persecution in all after ages. And no one who can engage in persecution for righteousness sake, "hath eternal life abiding in him." He is a murderer.

Thus we see that David was not a murderer in John's sense of the word, neither typically nor antitypically. Not typically, because Uriah was not an Israelite, but a Hittite, one of those nations whom God commanded Israel to destroy. And we have no reason to believe that it was for Uriah's faith that he was killed. Yet David's sin in the whole matter was great, yet repentance was given him and his sin forgiven before the Lord, notwithstanding according to the Sinai law he was made to suffer external retaliatory punishment. See II Sam. 12:1-14.

I will here remark for the consideration of brethren who may be exercised on the subject, that from the view we have taken of the love which characterizes one who has passed from death unto life, it is not consistent with this love, that we should love every member of the church alike. It is a love of the Spirit of Christ, hence if we are influenced by this love in proportion as we discover this spirit in any member, we shall love him, and where we see a worldly spirit, or that which looks like pretence, or self-exaltation in religion we shall dislike it.

Although I have been already more lengthy than would have been necessary simply to give brother Mitchell my views of the text, yet there is one point more in it that I wish to notice. It is the expression, "Hath eternal life abiding in him."

The idea which appears to be entertained by many of our brethren concerning the eternal life which a believer hath, is that the soul is merely raised from a state of death to the privilege of living eternally. Hence the new birth is frequently spoken of as a resurrection, and as a quickening, &c., that is, by men. But John represents eternal life as something which abides in the new born person. If so, must it not be a real existence that dwells in the believer, distinct from anything that dwells in others, and therefore distinct from the human soul. This corresponds with the idea of a birth, which is a bringing into individual existence, that which had not before existed except seminally in its head or progenitor. This principle of eternal life as an incorruptible seed being thus implanted in the soul, it quickens the soul to a sense of its accountability to God and dependence on him, &c. But I will not now enlarge upon it.

I have thus given such views as are given to me of this text. If brother Mitchell thinks them not scriptural, I need not tell him to throw them by, for he will certainly do it. But in that case I think I have a right to insist on his giving his views of the passage.

With christian regards, S.TROTT. Fairfax C.H., Va., Feb.13, 1856.

VIEWS ON JUSTIFICATION DEFENDED

Brother Beebe: – I much regret that my thoughts on Justification have been so much misunderstood, as they evidently have been, by several worthy brethren.

I cannot account for this so great misapprehension of what I advanced on this subject, but upon the ground that these brethren have in their early experience, as I did, drank in from the writings of men or the preaching they heard, the notion of eternal justification, along with the doctrine of salvation by grace, and had both thus blended together in their connection of the plan of salvation; the one their experience told them was true, and they therefore did not doubt the truth of the other. Hence when they found me objecting to the notion of the eternity of the act of justification, although I admitted all that many of them contend for – its existence in purpose – they felt as though I was striking a blow at the whole system of salvation by grace, and they therefore had not patience to examine candidly what I did write. As however brother Pitcher has proposed certain queries involving some of his objections to my views, and others have also communicated their objections, I feel it my duty to meet those objections, as I desire that mine should be met, that is, by a fair examination of them, so far as I am capable, and the removing of them so far as the scriptures appear to warrant it. But previous to coming to brother Pitcher's queries, I wish to notice certain ideas which seem included in the observation, which in substance has been made by several, namely: of regret or surprise that Brother Beebe should have admitted my "thoughts concerning justification" into the SIGNS. This remark might have originated either from the idea that my communication was a departure from Old School principles, or that it tended to do hurt by producing divisions among the brethren, or that it was calculated to weaken our cause, and occasion our opposers to rejoice. Feeling confident as I do, that my views are supported both by the scriptures, and by experience, I think there is not so much danger of their injuring the lambs, as there is of setting the old sheep to butting.

First: The idea of a departure from Old School principles. Brother Beebe certainly stands pledged that the SIGNS should be devoted exclusively to the Old School Baptist cause, and I am confident he has no disposition to forfeits that pledge. But this term as defined by Brother Beebe in the SIGNS, and by the brethren meeting at Black Rock, when it was adopted to designate our views and stand, has a meaning different from that in which it has been sometimes used; as when those who adhered to Dr. Gill's system, have been called old school in distinction from those who embraced Fuller's gospel. The sense in which it was adopted at Black Rock, and in which we use it, passing by all human schools, points out the fact that we profess to belong only to the school of Christ, and to submit alone to what He has taught in the scripture, in matters of religion. It indeed has a bearing towards the ancient Baptists, in reference to the prominent trait in their character that in accordance with their professing to receive the scriptures as the only rule of their faith and practice, they required a "Thus saith the Lord," for what they believed and practiced as religion. Were it not thus, were our Old School brethren, in the stand we took at Black Rock, pledged to any particular system taught by men, I would be willing to be cast out as evil among you, the New School would then have good ground for calling it Black Rockism, for it would be but one among the many isms into which the religious world is divided.

In my first attempt to preach, I was admonished by a female friend, to be cautious, never to have to say "Alas Master! for it was borrowed;" and before this, on a particular occasion, the expression of Paul had been applied to me with some weight, namely: "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." Gal. 1:16. The impressions arising from these two circumstances, have in some measure, followed me thus far through life, and I wish them not effaced, for I feel more and more their importance. If I were to give myself up to depend on, and be led by men, in religion, I might as well take Fuller for my master, as Gill; and Arminius or Socinus, as Calvin; for as a system that is only learned of men, will be of little use in reference to salvation; it would therefore be good policy to choose that which is most popular. If however, we speak of the merit of systems, in reference to their comparative consistency with the scriptures, I should prefer Calvin's to that of Arminius or Socinus and Gill's, by far, to that of Fuller. I was much pleased with an anecdote which I read somewhere not long since, of a boy and a priest; the priest was exhorting the boy to come to confession, offering to admit him for a small sum. The boy enquired, Do you confess? 0 yes, said the priest. To whom? To the bishop. Do you have to pay? Yes, a large sum. Does the bishop confess? Yes, to the Pope. Does he pay? Yes, roundly. Does the Pope confess? Yes, to whom? To Jesus Christ. And does he have to pay? 0 no, Christ pardons freely. Then (says the boy) I believe I will in future make confession only to Christ, that being the safest as well as the cheapest. So I think, if we must first try the systems of men by the scriptures, before we decide which we will take as our guide, we had better, as the safest way, take the scriptures only as our guide. I have seen so much evil resulting from those who preach from books, etc., who are in a habit of borrowing their ideas and illustrations of scripture from men, that I wish not to fall into the practice myself, nor to have my brethren do it. To notice but one of the evils to which I refer, we have all felt the disappointment of certain persons falling away, whom we once esteemed sound brethren. Who were they? As to preachers, they were Gillites, or some other ites; they preached Gill, not Christ, any farther than they preached Him through Gill's view of Him. Show me the man who preaches sound doctrine as he has been taught by the Holy Ghost from the scriptures, and I will show you the one who will stand the test of the world's persecution or its flatteries.

But I do not wish it to be understand from these remarks, that I am opposed to the reading of human authors. I only wish them read as the productions of fallible men, and that we should be guarded against receiving or retailing their ideas as truth, because they advanced them. If the Holy Spirit is pleased to give me an idea, or understanding of a passage of scripture, through the instrumentality of any man, it is just as valuable as though given directly through the scriptures, it equally becomes my own. My brethren, know the difference between receiving an idea merely because it appears plausible, or because it is the opinion of one in whom we have confidence; and its being given us by the Holy Ghost. In the latter case it is spoken to us, as Isaiah says, "with a strong hand," (Isa. 8:11), the scriptures are brought to our mind as supporting it, and we feel the internal witness of its truth.

To conclude my protracted remarks on this point. Had my "Thoughts on Justification," been a manifest departure from the scriptural account of that subject, Brother Beebe should not have published it; but if it was sustained by the scriptures, it was not a departure from Old School principles; and before my brethren decide on its being a departure, I hope they will examine it fully, comparing it, not with Gill, but the scripture.

Secondly. The idea that it may do hurt by producing divisions among the brethren. I did hope, and I still hope, that our brethren had counted the cost, and were conscientious in taking the Old School stand upon the platform of the scriptures, as our only rule of faith and practice. If, in accordance with this stand, we come to the enquiry raised upon any point of doctrine, desirous of unlearning all that we have learned not from the scriptures, and willing to abide by the plain declaration and construction of scripture, by comparing scripture with scripture: I, for myself, think that such enquiries, instead of creating divisions, will produce a greater oneness of views among us. But, my brethren, we ought to have our hearts more deeply impressed than they are with the fact that the blessed Holy Spirit hath revealed in the scriptures everything which Infinite Wisdom saw proper we should believe and practice in religion, and that agreeable to the prediction going before, (Isa. 35:8 & Heb. I:2,) it being so plain, that he may run that readeth. Excuse my digression, while I say, not that he may read while he runneth, but that reading it, it will be to him so plain, and give him so much confidence, that he will immediately run forward in the command, and not linger along as we do when in uncertainty.

Elder Samuel Trott

VIEWS ON MARK 8:22-26.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - I see by the second number of the SIGNS, volume 24, that sister Culver desires my views concerning the blind man's being restored to sight – Mark 8:22-26. I gladly accept the invitation, not that I have any special or very clear views to give on this miracle, but because being so much detained at home, and from my meetings, during this very inclement winter so far, I am glad of anything to draw my mind to the Scriptures and exercise it thereon.

The many instances recorded of our Lord's opening the eyes of the blind and of healing other diseases, were designed as external, visible proofs of his being the long promised Messiah. And these afforded an evidence which the Jews could not wholly overlook. Thence said Nicodemus, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him;" thus speaking not only for himself, but for others also. The different instances in which he opened the eyes of the blind, show the sovereignty of his power in doing it, with or without instrumentalities. In the case of blind Bartimeus, he simply said to him, "Go thy way; they faith hath made thee whole;" and "immediately he received his sight." He touched the eyes of others, and they received sight, Mark 10:46-52 & Matt. 20:30-34. In the case of the man blind from his birth, John, chapter 9, Jesus spat upon the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, and sent him to the pool of Siloam to wash; and when he had washed he came seeing. In the case under consideration, Mark 8, he spit upon the eyes of the blind man and put his hand upon him, and told him to look up, &c. These different methods of restoring sight to the blind, showed, perhaps, more conclusively, that it was by his own divine power that he performed these miracles, than the performing of them all by one method would have done, as it showed that he could open the eyes of the blind in what way he pleased. But as the various maladies, and particularly blindness, which our Lord healed, are referred to in Scripture to show the miserable state of the sinner in regard to spiritual things, so the performance of these external miracles were evidently designed to bring him to view, as the great physician who can heal all the inward maladies of sinners, and as doing it as readily, as freely and as sovereignly to all who look to him for it, as he did to the infirm in body. It is in reference to the opening of the eyes spiritually, as presented to view in the case of this blind man naturally, that I presume sister Culver wishes my views. To that I will now attend.

Verse 22, "And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him." It is not said whether this man was born blind or not. It is not material in this case. It is true that all men are born blind spiritually; but none in a state of nature know that they are thus blind. Until that life which is imparted in regeneration, we, like the Jews, say we see, or, at least, think so; and whilst this is the case, our sin remaineth. John 9:41. This man was sensibly blind – so are all those, spiritually, who apply to Christ to give them sight.

Verse 23, "And he took the blind man by the hand and led him out of town." As Bethsaida was one of the places on which our Lord had pronounced a woe, (Matt.11:21,) it may be, therefore, that Christ thus led him out of the town because he would not perform the miracle in the presence of those he had thus given up to their own destruction. At any rate, in the spiritual miracle, he does not open the eyes of the blind in the sight of those he has left to their own delusions; and not often, if ever, in their assemblies. Often, persons whom we hope are subjects of grace, in giving a relation of their experience, mention having been led in their exercises to go up to a front bench or some way in public to be prayed for, thinking thus to have their eyes opened to behold the Savior; but they and their leaders are disappointed; instead of opening their eyes then, he leads them out in their blindness from these public resorts and from confidence in them and their measures, and in private gives them the touch that opens their eyes; but not till he has spit upon them. Note, some of the children of God have had their eyes opened in the assemblies of the saints, and under the regular preaching of the gospel, and during the prayers and conversation of the people of God, but not in those assemblies under whatever name, got together for the purpose of converting sinners. When the eyes of the blind are opened to behold Christ as the way, it is always so done that the doing of it is by the individual ascribed to God only, independent of all human helpers. "And when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought." We know that in performing the literal miracle, this spitting on his eyes was not necessary to our Lord's opening them; there must, therefore, have been some other design in doing it; and I know not that the design is found anywhere but in the antitype. To spit upon a person is to cast great contempt upon him. Thus God said concerning Miriam, "If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days?" Num.12:14. And thus the widow, in case her husband's brother refused to take her and raise up seed unto his brother, was commanded to loose his shoe, and spit in his face. Deut.25:9. So, did any ever have their eyes opened until the Lord had first spit on them; or, in other words, had so treated with contempt all their prayers, tears, and other efforts to recommend themselves to his favor, that they were utterly ashamed and abased, and made sensible that they were so ruined by sin, that there was no power in themselves, or in any human being to take this widowed soul, and raise up seed unto his brother, that the Lord must save, or this inheritance is gone forever. "And put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought?" We lay our hands upon a person when we are going to speak to him, to engage his attention. So the Lord is sure to fix the whole attention of a person when he is about to speak peace to him, or to open his eyes; sometimes he does it by his being made to see a light, or hear a voice apparently, as is frequently the case in the experience of colored persons.

Verse 24, "And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees walking." I understand by this expression, simply the idea of an indistinct vision, as though he could see something moving or walking, as we see the motion of a thing before we discern particularly its parts, but could not distinguish its appearance from that of a tree. Many persons, when Christ touches them, immediately receive sight, to see how God is just in justifying the ungodly, through Christ's atonement; but others again, like this man, have at first only an indistinct view of salvation. Some text is applied to them which they take as a promise of salvation, or their burden is removed and they feel great peace of mind; and in these things they see God moving toward them in salvation, or conclude that he is going to save them, and they feel happy for the time, but at the same time have no distinct view of Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, or as suffering in the sinner's stead. As, "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus," without faith in Christ as the way, they have no solid ground for their hope to rest upon. They may be led, while in this comfortable frame, to unite with the church, and get along for a time satisfied with their experience; but when temptations and trials come, as come they will, their good frame is gone, and they are tossed about without knowing about resting by faith in Christ. It is true the Lord, in the meantime, may have touched them again, to behold, through the reading or the preaching of the word, or by an application in some way of the word, Christ is the way, the truth, and the life. And though they believe now in Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, and speak of him as the Lord our righteousness, still, in those times of trial and darkness they will go back to that experience which they told the church; and in that they never can find that which satisfies themselves, or which they think ought to satisfy others, that they have faith in Christ, and therefore go on dissatisfied with their own experience through life unless, as in some cases, they are led to look to their after teachings as that in which they were enabled to believe in Christ. It is true that when the Lord has begun a good work, he will carry it on to the day of Jesus Christ; but my opinion is that where persons have had their eyes only partially opened, it is much better for their future comfort for them to wait, without being hurried into the church, until the Lord is pleased to lay his hands on them again, and give them a clear sight of Christ.

Others, on receiving this partial deliverance, are in some way prevented from speaking of it, and are soon left to darkness again; and they now think their case worse than ever, their burdens are gone, and no view of Christ. In their distress they are led to cry unto the Lord. "After that he put his hands again upon his eyes and made him look up; and he was restored, and saw everything clearly." That is, some portion of Scripture suiting his case is so applied to him that he feels it is of God, and through Christ as the way of salvation, and the salvation is clearly revealed to him, and he rejoices in him as the Lord his righteousness, as the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely.

Verse 26. "And he sent him away to his house saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town." Our Lord frequently charged those whom he healed not to tell of it, thus fulfilling the prophecy, "He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street;" thus illustrating the spirit of the gospel. The religion of Christ does not consist in external parade and show, but is retiring from the pomp and display of the world. There is nothing like boasting, like,

Come and see my religion, my zeal for the Lord. When the Lord opens the eyes of any one to see clearly, instead of leading them to go among the popular religionists, or those who make a boast and show of religion, he leads them to look for his despised and afflicted people, and makes them feel that among them is their home.

Such are the views I have to present for the considerations of sister Culver on the portion of Scripture she designated. I leave it for her and others to judge of their correctness.

With brotherly love, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Feb.6, 1856.

VIEWS ON MATTHEW 12:43-45.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - A friend and reader of the SIGNS, from Catskill, has, by letter, requested my views on Matt. 12:43-45, I therefore send such as I have to you for publication in the SIGNS, if you see fit.

The passage is that declaration of Christ to the Jews, that "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man," &c. There are, no doubt, many young believers, and some old ones too, who, with the friend making this request, have thought the remarks contained in this passage was a description of their own cases. The time was when they had thought their vile affections and corruptions were subdued, and Satan did not worry them; but when for humbling them, or for the trial of their faith, the Lord leaves them to feel the power of their corruptions, and the assaults of the adversary, they have been led to think their case could not be worse, if they had seven devils in them, for they feel the force of their corruptions to be seven fold, and hence they are ready to conclude that they are not what they had hoped they were - subjects of God - but that their latter state is worse than the first. But such may rest assured that this text has no reference to their case, no relation to the trials and experience of the children of God; that the whole was designed to show the peculiar state of that generation of the Jews, as the context with the concluding remark in the text shows. Our Lord, in his remarks, refers, as an illustration of the state of that generation, to what appears to have been a generally conceived idea among that people, concerning the operations of evil spirits upon individuals, and from the positive declaration which he made concerning it, I must conclude that this opinion concerning unclean spirits and their influence over individuals, was a correct one. I admit there are difficulties in the way of our comprehending how distinct existing spirits should have and exercise such influence and power over men. We have been accustomed to ascribe similar influences and effects, when witnessed among us, to disease, to depravity, or some derangement of the faculties or the mind. Human science would reject, as fictitious, such statements, though found in the Scriptures, as are incomprehensible to us. But however much the power of Satan or devils, in this respect, over men, may have been abridged since the resurrection of Christ – when I consider that the statements found in the Scriptures were written by inspiration of God, and written, not as fiction, but as a revelation of truth - I at present feel constrained to believe, from those recorded statements, that there did exist as distinct intelligent beings, such unclean spirits, or devils, as are spoken of, and that they were permitted of God to take possession of individuals, and exercise such power over them as is described. Witness the case of the man among the tombs, Mark 5:1-13; see also, Mark 3:11-12 & 1:23-26; also, Acts 19:12-17. How far the devils may have similar power given them over individuals under the Gospel, or whether any, I pretend not to say; but from the accounts given, I am inclined to believe the devil has power given him to exercise through human beings - witchcraft in our country the same as in the case of the witch of Endor - though the spirits raised at this day, do not, and cannot, speak the truth through their mediums, as did the spirit of Samuel through the witch of Endor.

Having premised this much concerning unclean spirits, let us notice the words of Christ: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man." This is not a case of the devils being cast out by the finger of God, and forbid any more to enter the man; but of his voluntarily going out of his own accord. Very different this, from a work of grace upon the heart. "He walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none." The expressions used in the following verse, such as, "he taketh to himself seven other spirits," show that it is the unclean spirit here spoken of, as acting individually or personally, and not the man. "Seeking rest and findeth none." That is, he roamed at large, without being permitted of God to enter in and possess any other person; for he was as much dependent on God's absolute sovereignty to enter any one, as was the legion, to enter the swine.

"Then he saith, I will return unto my house, from whence I came out." That is, I will return unto the man I had before possessed. "And when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept and garnished." Being empty, shows that the grace or spirit of God had not been communicated to this man, neither had any other evil spirit possessed him. And being freed from the influence of this unclean spirit, the man had reformed his life, from those unclean or corrupt courses to which he had been led, and of course had garnished himself with decent and moral, if not benevolent conduct.

"Then goeth he and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first." That is, being now possessed by seven more spirits, and these more wicked than the first, his conduct was worse, as also was his condition.

"Even so shall it be, also, to this wicked generation." That is, like unto the man thus represented, the Jews had been addicted, previous to their captivity, to idolatry, and to a disregard of the law; but after their return from Babylon, and the building of the sacred temple, every vestige of their former idolatry was swept away, they were obedient to the law in its letter; and were garnished with a zealous regard to the worship of the true God. But the generation then on the stage, when our Lord was on earth, adhered more to the traditions of the fathers than to the law of God, and were, therefore, in truth, idolaters; though they shunned the form, they were hypocritical in their worship, were self-righteous, and with it were proud, bigoted, oppressive, persecuting, blasphemous, &c., so that they were filling up the measure of the iniquities of their fathers sevenfold, and about, thereby, to draw upon themselves, in the rejection of Christ, a judgment sevenfold worse than the Babylonish captivity, so that their last state was worse than the first, like the possessed man. I will remark, in addition, that there is much in our day resembling the state of that generation and of that possessed man. Many persons speak favorably of revival efforts who do not profess to approve of their systems of religion; they say these conversions tend to moralize the people. But according to Christ's view concerning that generation of the Jews, the state of these persons is likely to become sevenfold worse. These men made converts, or excitement converts, may leave off drunkenness if they have been addicted to it, and profanity, gaming and the like. But, on the other hand, it makes them hypocrites in leading them to profess a religion which they do not possess, their religion being legal. This religion being a selfish one, it makes them more selfish in their intercourse with men, however liberal they may be in giving to religious purposes, it leads them to have self-righteous opinions of themselves; and self-righteousness always embitters the heart of its possessor against the truth and those who hold it, and enlists them in opposition thereto; so that they become revilers of the truth and of true believers, and are prepared instruments for persecuting the saints, in any form and to any extent, in which persecution may be permitted of God. More might be said on this point, and yet not appear over-drawn to any candid observer of the popular religion of our day. This is so from the nature of things; for where the heart is not changed, and the love of God not imputed, the enmity of the heart toward God and the depravity of nature, remain in their full force, and in the conversion from a man of the world to a religious professor, the individual will act under the influence of his enmity, selfishness, &c., more freely in his religious course than formerly he did in his worldly course, because conscience has more or less restraint upon men of the world to keep them within bounds, but now this man thinks he is doing God service in reviling and seeking to put down the truth, and will satisfy himself in opposing those he gets under his power, and in overreaching and taking the advantage of his neighbor in his dealings, because the more he can gain in this way, the more he can give to religious purposes. Now, my friend, from your enquiry, I presume this is not your case.

S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., June 23, 1856.

VIEWS ON I PETER 4:17,18.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE: - In the 16th number (present volume) of the SIGNS, there is a request from brother C. Jackson, of Virginia, for my views of I Pet. 4:17 & 18:

"For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

Peter in verse 12, says, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you." In the verses intervening between this and verse 17, he exhorts them in reference to the fiery trial, and in his remarks, he shows that by it he refers to some special persecution about coming upon them, and then in verse 17, informs them that the occasion of this fiery trial, is, that the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God.

As Peter substitutes the word us for the house of God, in the second clause of the verse, and also from the connection, it is evident that from the expression, he meant the church of the saints, or Gospel church. And as Peter was an Apostle of the circumcision, his epistles were originally addressed to the believers among the Jews. Hence by the expression, "Them that obey not the Gospel," he undoubtedly means the unbelieving Jews.

The time is come. This expression evidently refers to some anticipated period. Our Lord had foretold his disciples of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the Jewish nation in their nationality, Matthew, chapter 24, and had limited the time to that generation. This judgment came upon that people and city in A.D. 70. Christ had also told his disciples that before these things, "They should lay their hands on them, and they should be brought before kings," &c. Luke 21:12. The Jews had, from the commencement, persecuted the Christians, so far as they had the power, and had in some instances instigated the Roman governors to persecute them. But in

A.D. 64, Nero, the Roman Emperor and tyrant, issued his edict against the Christians, authorizing them everywhere to be put to death. Thus commenced the first general persecution against the Christians, which lasted until Nero's death, A.D. 68. In this persecution, multitudes of Christians were put to death by every species of cruelty. According to Chronologists, Peter wrote this epistle, A.D. 65; therefore, at the very time this severe persecution was about commencing, and this, no doubt, was the judgment he directly referred to.

Judgment must begin at the house of God. Why begin there? Because whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth, Heb.12:6. And as he said of the type, so also of the antitype, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." Amos 3:2. Hence, "the slaying must begin at God's sanctuary." Ezek.19:6.

But brother Jackson may be ready to enquire whether God inflicts judgment upon his people? I answer, Yes! "The Lord shall judge the people." Again, "God judgeth the righteous." Psal.7:8,11. "With righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." Psal.98:9. God had, previous to Peter's writing this, judged the church according to the strictness of his righteous law, and had inflicted the entire penalty due for her transgressions, upon her head and husband, Christ, who for this purpose, was made under the law. Again, her husband having, by enduring the curse, satisfied the demand of the law; she, by his resurrection from the dead, was judged clear from the law, or justified.

Rom.4:25. But Peter says, "the time is come that judgment must begin." This, therefore, refers to another judgment, and as the church had already been redeemed and justified from the demands of the law, this judgment could not be upon legal principles, but upon Gospel principles, or in love, as a father judgeth and chasteneth his son for his good.

The church and people of God, have in no age kept up the Gospel standard. They have come short in faith, in the order and discipline of the church, and in practice. In times of outward peace, the churches are apt to become careless in reference to these things; the living members will become lukewarm and too much disposed to conform to the world, and persons destitute of grace are suffered to get in and remain with the church. Hence the importance of the churches being first purged before God inflicts his judgments upon their enemies. In the times of persecution and some other judgments, these judgments will do for the churches what they had failed to do for themselves by a faithful and correct exercise of discipline; the dead members will fall away and go to their proper associates, and thus be in a place to meet the judgments awaiting the enemies of the truth. As in that judgment to which Peter particularly referred, many Jews no doubt had professed Christianity, without a living faith; these, when the Romans persecuted the Christians, would go back to Judaism, and thus become involved in the destruction which awaited that people. And although many christians, by this persecution, were taken from the church, and from their relations to the world; yet, there was no wrath in it to the church, nor to them, for still the Lord preserved a remnant sufficient to proclaim the Gospel, and to bear testimony to the truth. And as to those who suffered death, they were placed in their sufferings, in circumstances to bear a much more efficient testimony to the truth of the Gospel, and to the power of divine grace to sustain them, than they could have borne while living in peace; and besides, they were the sooner released from the world and its troubles, and from the corruptions of nature, and taken to rest.

Besides, these judgments tend to manifest the faith of the children of God. Hence, Peter speaks of these manifold temptations as being for the trial of their faith, chapter 1:6,7. Whilst living in comparative ease many of the children of God hardly know whether they have faith or not; indeed often much doubt having any, and cannot so clearly prove their faith to others; but when the judgments of God are upon them and the church, they are led to look to Christ as their wisdom, their strength, and their salvation. They now feel that without him they are lost, they can do nothing, they have neither wisdom, nor strength to meet their trials; he is, therefore, their only hope, and they know that he is able to save and keep them. What but faith would lead them thus to cling to Christ, under afflictions, divisions, reproaches, &c., as their last hope and trust? And in remaining steadfast in the doctrine and order of the Gospel, whilst the church is enduring these judgments, whether they be persecutions unto death, or reproaches and defaming, or divisions and a thinning of the members of the church, &c., they give evidence to their brethren of their faith. Again, these judgments often lead the children of God to see and feel the evil of errors, neglect of discipline, and sins which they had before overlooked or paid little attention to.

I now come to the part which brother Jackson wished me particularly to notice: "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" In reference to the salvation of the righteous here spoken of, I will remark that there are two kinds of salvation spoken of in relation to them. There is the salvation from the law and its curse, from sin, death, and the grave, to a state of justification here, and of glorification hereafter. This is wholly through the redemption which Christ accomplished by his death, resurrection, and ascension. Christ is this salvation, it is found wholly in him. There can, therefore, be no scarcity in this salvation, for he is God all sufficient. The Scriptures represent the redemption of Christ of his people, as a complete triumph over the last enemy, death. Hence it is said in reference to his ascension as the Redeemer, Head, and Forerunner of his people, "God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet." Psa.47:5. Again, "Thou hast ascended on high; thou hast led captivity captive." Psa. 68:18. Again, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up ye everlasting doors, and the king of glory shall come in.

Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty; the Lord mighty in battle." Psa.24:7,8. Surely when we consider that Christ's people were quickened together with him, and raised up together, and made to sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Eph.2:5,6; and that Christ has so signally triumphed over all he had to encounter in accomplishing their redemption, has led captivity itself captive, has subdued everything that could bring into or hold his people in captivity, has entered in and taken possession of eternal glory, and been honored as king of glory, as the forerunner and in behalf of his people; we must be convinced that there can be no deficiency in this salvation, that the word scarcely cannot be made to apply to it.

Again, the term righteous will not apply to the elect as objects of the salvation by Christ's blood. They are made righteous by this salvation; but it is as sinners that they are saved. Christ came into the world to save sinners and only sinners; so that I think brother Jackson will be satisfied this is not the salvation intended in his text.

The other salvation spoken of, is a salvation in providence and grace, a being preserved in existence and from evils, and a being kept from the corruptions that are in the world from errors, from temptations, &c. Understanding this to be the salvation intended by the Apostle in relation to this judgment, it will readily be seen that the righteous were scarcely saved during such a severe and lengthy persecution. But a mere remnant at most, of those who belonged to the church at the commencement of the persecution were saved from its ravages; others were added to the church, and many of those met death at the very onset of their profession. John was, perhaps, the only apostle that survived it. So in the persecution of the Donatists in the sixth century, and of the Waldenses in the seventeenth century, in both cases these people were scarcely saved, mere remnants escaped and they scattered. In the repeated judgments of God upon his church since, in suffering errors from time to time, to get in and gain such an ascendancy as to cause divisions, and to compel the lovers of truth to separate from the multitude, mere remnants have been found to have escaped the prevailing corruptions or errors; so that the declaration of Scripture, "A remnant shall be saved," applies not only to national Israel, but also to the visible church down to the present hour. I think, also, if the children of God will reflect on their own individual experience of the judgments of God upon them, in leaving them to encounter sore temptations, and in leaving them to feel something of the power of their own corruptions, they then have been brought to feel how weak was all their resistance, and it has not been till all hope was gone that they should be saved or escape, that the Lord appeared for their deliverance, and like Paul and his companions, when they escaped from the dreaded shipwreck of their profession, it was only on planks or broken pieces of the ship. So that they have known there was no safety in the ship, nor in themselves, nor in any resolutions, nor plans of theirs to weather the storm; and that nothing but the interposing mercy of God saved them. Hence all boasting in their strength, in their resolutions, in their love to holiness, &c., was excluded, and shame and self-abasement followed. Again, bodily and family afflictions, want, embarrassment in business, have been visited upon others as judgments, and when this has been the case they have been left for a season to darkness and unbelief; and under the influence of these, they have concluded that these adverse providences were evidences against their being children of God, and that they were but the beginning of God's wrath against them for their hypocrisy in professing religion. Even unbelief had evidently got the better of Paul, when he said, "All hope that we should be saved was then taken away." For before he left Jerusalem the Lord had stood by him and said, "Be of good cheer Paul, for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome." Acts 23:11. But this was forgotten of Paul, when "neither sun, nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on them." How many of the children of God have experienced such seasons spiritually, and if Paul could be left thus to unbelief, no wonder their unbelief of nature should prevail, when thus tried, until God is pleased to send some angelic message to them to revive their faith, as he did in Paul's case. Acts 27:23. In fact, this shipwreck of Paul's throughout, is a striking illustration of Peter's declaration in our text, "If the righteous scarcely be saved," &c. But when it is applied to the eternal salvation of the saints, as Arminian preachers frequently apply it, there is a gross degradation of Christ and of the efficacy of his blood, for it would represent Christ, the glorious ark of safety, could be broken in pieces. Amidst all these hair-breath escapes which the children of God meet in this world, and all that despondency of soul which they are left to, so that all hope is taken away that they shall be saved, the angel of the Lord stands by them, and as the angel said unto Paul, "Lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee," so Christ, the angel of the covenant says, in his word unto his disciples, "Not an hair of your head shall perish. In your patience possess ye your souls." Luke 21:18,19.

If the righteous thus scarcely be saved, when God visits them with his judgments for their wanderings, and their worldly mindedness, "where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear," when God, laying judgment to the line and righteousness to the plumet, shall visit them for the enmity and rage they have manifested to his people and cause? This question, brother Jackson, I presume, does not wish me to answer. It is enough for us to know that God will deal righteously with them, and will vindicate his own and his people's cause, that where they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, he will give them blood to drink.

Yours in love, S.TROTT. Fairfax County, Va., Oct.9, 1856.

WHAT ARE THE CONDITIONS OF SALVATION?

Brother Beebe: - The next subject on which my views are requested is embraced in this inquiry: What are the Conditions of Salvation?

If the term condition were at all admissible in reference to that which is the sovereign act of Jehovah, I would give these as the conditions of salvation, namely: 1. That there are guilty, justly condemned sinners to be saved; and 2. That a way was provided in which God is just in saving sinners or in justifying the ungodly. These are certainly inseparable from the idea of salvation though not conditions in the common sense of the term. If we were not sinners ruined in ourselves, and already condemned by the just and unchangeable law of God, we had not been proper subjects of salvation; but on the contrary would still be probationers; that is would be in such circumstances that our future destiny whether of happiness or misery would depend on our acts or the course we take. Could we get to heaven under such circumstances, it would be as much the consequent result of our own acts, as would be our going to hell in pursuing a different course; hence there could no more be salvation in the one case, than there would be unjust oppression in the other. So also in reference to the other circumstance or condition, justice must be satisfied; the law of God must be canceled in its demands or it would forever bar the flowing of grace to the sinner: God cannot deny Himself. Hence the grand leading subjects of revelation are that these circumstances actually exist, or that these conditions are fully met in reference to all who are chosen to salvation. Thus the use of the law on the one hand, to show our guilt and condemnation; "That sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful." See Rom.7:7-13 & 3:19, 20. So on the other hand, the gospel is a declaration of Christ Jesus having magnified the law and made it honorable, and being the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth; and hence, of redemption and salvation in Him. Of Him it is said, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare I say at this time His righteousness, that He might be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Rom.3:25 & 26. Hence the justice of God is manifested in fully acquitting and justifying all them that believe in Jesus though in themselves they have sinned and come short of the glory of God, and are justly condemned by the law. So in christian experience, none can receive the hope of salvation in truth until they know themselves sinners, ruined and justly condemned by the law; and by faith know that God is just in pardoning and saving sinners alone through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. On the other hand he that knows and feels his just condemnation as a guilty transgressor of the law, and the deep pollution of his nature and acts so as to have lost all hopes of escaping the curse by any thing of his, is the very character, whom, as declared in the Scriptures, Christ came to save. He came to seek and to save that which was lost. And he that by faith knows and receives Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, his hope for salvation resting upon a foundation that can never fail, is according to the Scriptural decision, a saved one.

But I presume the inquirer had in view conditions according to the common notion of the term; something found in us or done by us, which at least gives us the ground to hope for acceptance with God; such as our repenting, believing, sincerely seeking and loving God, &c. The natural mind becomes so completely imbued with this notion of conditions, by hearing and reading of them so much, as set forth by men, that even believers frequently, notwithstanding what they have been taught of themselves, and of Christ's full work, will be looking for some of these conditions as an encouragement to hope, instead of looking to Christ. Hence the propriety of discussing this subject. In contradiction to all notions of conditions performed by creatures interposing in the work of salvation; 1st. We are taught that "Salvation is of the Lord," that "He that is our God is the God of salvation." The consideration that He claims salvation to be of Himself and that He is self-existent and absolutely independent, that everything else exists of and from Him, and therefore that He cannot be influenced to act from anything out of Himself, shows that salvation being of Him, it must be exclusively of Him. Were He induced to save by the creature's performing certain conditions, He would be controlled in the act by the will of the creature, and could no longer justly claim the sovereignty He does, when He says, "I even I am the Lord

(Jehovah) and besides me there is no saviour. I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God, &c. Isa. 43:11-12. 2nd. The fact that those who are saved were, from the beginning chosen to salvation, and therefore before they actually existed or had done any good or evil, effectually excludes all conditions or works done by the creature. See II Thes.2:13, Rom.9:11. 3rdly. Salvation as wrought out is embraced in redemption; it is redemption from the curse of the law, and from under the law. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Gal. 3:13. And receiving the adoption of sons was the result of this redemption, GaI.4:4 & 5. And mark, it was God that sent forth His Son, &c., to redeem, and hence it was not that He was moved to it by any act of the creature. Even in His very birth as a Saviour, all fleshly power was excluded, He was made of a woman; not born by any act of man. And lest men might claim that God's thus sending His Son was the result of conditions performed by Abraham or his posterity, it is declared that, in the very relation in which Christ was born as a Savior, His goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting. Micah 5:1 & 2, and Matt.2:5 & 6. Thus effectually debarring all creaturely influence or conditions from having any control over His coming. 4th. The experience of salvation, or being brought to have communion with God as a Father, is so represented in the Scriptures as effectually to deny its dependence on conditions. God is a Spirit, this communion of course must be spiritual, and of which the flesh can have no part. Therefore to enjoy it we must become spiritual. This can only be by our being born of the Spirit; that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. The fleshly birth is the result of being begotten of the flesh. The spiritual birth of course must be the result of being begotten of the Spirit. So says our Lord, It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing. Of course the flesh has no part in the quickening or begetting. No room then for conditions here.

See John 3:6, and 6:63. And of this birth as sons of God or as spiritual, it is said 'Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:13. Here all natural or blood descent is excluded, and of course all conditions performed by parents. No fleshly volition wills it, nor any will of man, even though he may be regenerated, produces it; but it is of God's sovereign volition. If we perform a condition as such do we not will the result?

In excluding then the will of the creature, is not the condition excluded? - But 5. Not to be extremely tedious in multiplying proofs establishing the same fact, I will confine myself to this one more point of illustration. Paul in confirmation of the view above given of salvation as wrought out, says, Eph.2:4

- 6, "But God, who is rich in mercy, for His great love wherewith He loved us, Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Here he shows that the saints were delivered from it; and were raised up together and made to sit together in heavenly places not placed back again in Adam's original state of innocency and like him left subject to conditions or the requisitions of the law; but embraced in the provisions of the heavenly or everlasting covenant, having no ifs in it, no conditions to render it uncertain, but ordered in all things and sure. Well therefore might Paul interrupt the thread of his discourse to exclaim, "By grace ye are saved," every line, and word, shows God as going forth in the sovereignty and independence of His love and mercy, toward guilty sinners; a love that even their being dead in sins, could not check, and one therefore which creaturely works could never have drawn forth. But Paul goes on in verse 7 to show an object God had in raising them up and making them sit together in heavenly places; namely, "That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." In the ages to come, that is, in the experimental deliverance, in all succeeding ages, of those He had made to sit together in heavenly places, He might show the exceeding riches of His grace, &c. One might have supposed that if Paul had mentioned only the riches of God's grace as that which He intended to show, no one would ever think of its being found so scanty as to be limited and confined within the bounds of such conditions as puny man could comply with.

But the Holy Spirit knowing the proneness of man to bring every thing, even God's rich grace, down to the standard of earthly things and places, which all have limitations, directed the use of the still broader expression, the exceeding riches of His grace. That which is exceeding, must go beyond, over-top everything in competition; but if the grace of God in salvation, were suspended upon any conditions whatever, those conditions uncomplied with must bar that grace and therefore exceed it. And hence where sin abounded in the noncompliance grace could not abound. Not so, such is the riches of God's grace that it must exceed every impediment. So is the testimony, "That where sin abounded, grace did much more abound: That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom.5:20 & 21. It certainly can not be possible that a conditional salvation can consist with the exceeding riches and sovereignty of God's grace. Salvation must flow as sovereignly free from Him as did creation, for He is alike the God of both.

But again, many persons, generally sound, hold the idea of a conditional covenant contracted between the Father and Son, the salvation of the elect being suspended on Christ's fulfilling the conditions thereof. The inquirer may have had reference to this idea. But there is no declaration made in the Scriptures of any such contracting between the Father and Son, nor anything to justify the idea of such a conditional covenant. That there is an everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure established with the elect in Christ as their Head I think the Scriptures clearly teach. Of this covenant (or testament as the original word is in some cases rendered, though more generally rendered covenant) Christ is revealed as the Surety, Heb.7:22, the Mediator, Heb.9:15, and the Messenger, Mal.3: 1, each of these terms conveys an idea very different from that of a contracting party, as will be manifest on a moment's calm reflection. The great mistake in reference to this covenant arises from man being disposed to think of God as such a one as themselves, and therefore when God's covenant is spoken of, they conclude it must be like the covenants existing between men; and to carry out the idea they split up the Godhead into contracting parties having distinct, and therefore clashing interests in the concern. But no such idea is conveyed in the language of any covenant revealed in the Scriptures. As the Psalmist says of the everlasting covenant, Ps.111:9, "He sent redemption unto His people: He hath commanded His covenant forever &c.", so it will be found in every covenant recorded, and in every reference to the everlasting or new covenant made in the Scriptures, that God appears as the sovereign Jehovah establishing every part by His absolute wills and shalls. Look at the covenant God established with Noah, &c., Gen.9:8-17; the one established with Abraham, Gen.15:7-18, and the one, Gen.17 - then to the covenant mentioned by David, II Sam.23:5 & Ps.89:19-37 and see the wording; and David's views of it, as confirmed to him as the type of Christ, II Sam. 7, and then pass to Isa.59:21, and to the new covenant - Jer. 31:31-34, and see if in any instance God appears in relation to those covenants in any other light than as the sovereign God commanding and promising in His own absolute independency? And then look through the Scriptures and see if you can find a single promise made to Christ as the Head or to His people in Him, depending on an if or contingency. If you cannot satisfy yourself hear Paul's testimony: "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us." II Cor.1:20. I said above, this covenant was made with the elect in Christ their Head; thus all the other covenants mentioned in the Scriptures were made with certain persons as heads and their seed in them; the head being subject to the provisions of the covenant in common with the posterity. So in this in an infinitely fuller extent; He being their Head, their Life, their all, every provision centers in Him, whilst its blessings terminate in His seed. Thus the purpose and grace which secures their salvation, are given in Him, II Tim.1:9; all the promises of God are in Him, II Cor. 1:20; and indeed He is the covenant; was given for a covenant of the people, Isa.42:6 and 49:8. And notice in all this, that Christ instead of being represented as stipulating and coming forward as a contracting party, is represented as the servant, God directing and promising that He shall do it and succeed. So Christ Himself represents the matter. He says not, that I came down from heaven to fulfill my part of the contract; but that, "I came down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of Him that sent me," &c. John 6:38-39. Thus, in accordance with the above, when the sword of justice was commanded to awake, it was to awake against Him who was the Lord's Shepherd, against the Man that was His fellow. Zech 13:7. Thus, it was not by contract, but as the Lord's appointed Shepherd that He was accountable for the safety of the sheep. See also John 10:11-16. It was not to the God that was fellow to the Lord of hosts, but to the Man that was His fellow. It has been said that fellow means an equal. Not so, its proper meaning is an associate, and it here particularly designates, that Man who is the one Mediator, and who is associated in personal union with the Godhead. I think if the Scriptures are carefully examined on this head by anyone disposed to receive Scriptural truth, he will be convinced that the covenant securing salvation as sovereignly free and absolute as the purpose and grace thereby revealed: that God appears as God commanding it; and that Christ and His people are one in all its provisions.

To the inquirer then, in conclusion, I would say trouble not yourself about conditions of salvation. If you have been taught by the law to know that you are altogether sinful in yourself and

Centreville, Fairfax County, Virginia,

Dec.14, 1847.

S. Trott.